This happened at two meetings, after which Stokes determined never again to help out spirit communications in that way, in spite of the fear she felt at losing contact. After that, she openly admitted it to the audience if she lost contact with the spirit voices and simply tried to reestablish the link. She warned other developing mediums to be brave enough to admit it if no messages were being received. In 1948 her credentials as a bona fide clairaudient were endorsed by the Spiritualists National Union in England.

In more than thirty years of mediumship, Stokes attracted large and enthusiastic audiences and also appeared on popular radio and television shows in Australia, New Zealand, and the United States. She often dumbfounded skeptical reporters and presenters by the accuracy of her spirit messages. Her reputation as a Spiritualist superstar was phenomenal. On her Australian tour, she packed the massive Sydney Opera House three nights in a row, and a private plane was chartered to take her from city to city. A television soap opera was postponed to make room for her.

Yet this international fame came only in later life. Prior to the mid-1970s, she had lived in modest circumstances in Lancaster, working as a nurse, or giving her mediumistic services to Spiritualist churches for no more than modest traveling expenses, sometimes giving private consultations for £1 (two or three dollars).

Stokes moved to London and became well known as a clairaudient medium, but she never ceased to be amazed by her growing fame. She made no showbiz concessions but appeared on stage in a simple frock, sitting in an armchair, and speaking to her audience in colloquial language.

Her fame attracted derisive and often hostile criticism from skeptics, but she met controversy head on and would not be bullied. In 1980 she appeared on a British television show with professional magician James Randi, who denounced her (without evidence) as a liar and a fake. When Doris challenged Randi to appear with her and prove her a fake, he declined.

In addition to Voices in My Ear Doris Stokes wrote several other popular books of reminiscences: More Voices in My Ear (1981), Innocent Voices in My Ear (1983), A Host of Voices (1984), Whispering Voices (1985), Voices of Love (1986), and Joyful Voices (1987). Their combined sales exceeded two million copies. Unfortunately, in her last years, she was quite ill and had to go through several operations. She died May 8, 1987, two weeks after surgery for removal of a brain tumor.

Stokes, Henry Newlin (1859–1942)

Theosophist and editor, born in 1859 at Moorestown, New Jersey. Stokes attended Haverford College (B.S.) and Johns Hopkins University (Ph.D., 1884). He later did postgraduate work in Germany and Switzerland. He returned to the United States in 1889 and became a chemist for the U.S. Geological Survey. He wrote articles for scientific journals and served a term as president of the Chemical Society of Washington, D.C. He moved to the Bureau of Standards in 1903.

Early in the new century the agnostic Stokes began a search in esoteric philosophy that led him to Theosophy and the writings of Annie Besant. He joined the Theosophical Society in 1903 and the following year also became a member of a small, independent theosophical organization, the Oriental Esoteric (OE) Head Center. The OE had been headquartered in Paris but had a small group in Washington. In 1905 Stokes helped establish the Oriental Esoteric Library as a focal point of occult information in the District. In 1909 he retired from the Bureau of Standards. During this time his former wife spread rumors alleging that he was involved with Anna Marsland, the head of the OE.

Over the next three years he devoted his increased free time to the OE, especially to developing the library, into which he poured much of his own finances. In 1910 he and Marsland broke with the Paris headquarters and established the Oriental Esoteric Society as a separate entity. Then, in 1912, he and Marsland split, and he sued the OE Society for the library, claiming that he had largely built it with his own money. The court agreed and gave him the books. He then aligned the library as an independent but associated organization of the American section of the Theosophical Society.

By 1911 Stokes had begun a periodical, the O. E. Library Critic, which became his means of livelihood for the rest of his life. After his break with Marsland he conceived the Critic as an independent theosophical periodical serving the larger cause of Theosophy. All was fine for a few years, but in the wake of the founding of the theosophically based Liberal Catholic Church in 1916, he turned on the church and especially bishops Charles W. Leadbeater and James I. Wedgwood. Stokes attacked Leadbeater for the new teachings he was introducing into the society and condemned the homosexual preferences of Wedgwood. He went on to attack theosophical offshoots such as the Aquarian Foundation, the Arcane School, and the I AM Movement.

Stokes couched his criticism of the new trends in the theosophical movement under the slogan Back to Blavatsky, a phrase he first used in the November 14, 1917 issue of the Critic. He lauded the groups and independent lodges that still adhered to the writings of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, the cofounder of the Theosophical Society. He did not leave the international Theosophical Society and is credited with reintroducing Blavatsky's writings to the general membership.

Stokes continued to edit the Critic until his death on September 20, 1942.

Sources:

Santucci, James. "H. N. Stokes and the O. E. Library Critic." Theosophical History 1, 6 (April 1986): 129–39.

———. "H. N. Stokes' Early Contact with the Theosophical Society." Theosophical History 2, 1 (January 1987): 4–22.

Stolisomancy

Divination from the manner in which a person dresses. In ancient Rome the emperor Augustus believed that a military revolt was predicted on the morning of its occurrence when his attendant buckled his right sandal to his left foot.

Stomach, Seeing with the

A phenomenon occasionally observed by the followers of Franz Anton Mesmer in their somnambules (hypnotic subjects). In a cataleptic state closely resembling death, the subject would sometimes show no signs of intelligence when questions were directed to the ears, but if the questions were addressed to the pit of the stomach, or sometimes to the fingertips or toes, an answer would be given immediately. Several such cases were recorded by one Dr. Pététin, of Lyons, France, who in 1808 published Electricité Animale, and by other mesmerists. Not only hearing, but seeing, tasting, and smelling were apparently performed by the stomach, independent of the sensory organs.

Pététin attributed the phenomenon to "animal electricity" and stated that objects placed on the patient's stomach were not seen when they were wrapped in wax or silk, that is, nonconductors. It was believed that the best way to communicate with a subject in the cataleptic state was for the operator to place his hand on the subject's stomach and address questions to the fingertips of his own free hand.

This trance phenomenon, as well as others similar to it, might now be considered to be the result of suggestion or hyperesthesia. (See also Eyeless Sight; Transposition of the Senses)

Stonehenge

Ancient prehistoric monument of standing stones located in Wiltshire, England. The name derives from the Old English hengen ("hung up"), referring to the horizontal lintel stones. Over the centuries, legend ascribed Stonehenge to Druidic, Roman, and Danish construction, but it is now generally accepted that it dates from Neolithic times and stands as the culmination of the period of megalith construction, remnants of which can be found across the British Isles. It was probably last in use about 1400 B.C.E. Megalithic (large stone) monuments exist in many locations in Europe.

A major step in understanding the use and significance of Stonehenge occurred in the 1960s when it was discovered that the alignment of the stones seems to facilitate the prediction of a variety of astronomical events, such as the summer solstice, and were thus probably related to late Neolithic worship ceremonies.

The Stonehenge site is composed of three distinct elements—an outer circle of local sarsen stones and two inner circles of blue stones from the Prescelly Mountains of Wales, 200 kilometers (125 miles) away. The first and third circles are capped with stone lintels, and the whole construction is encircled by a ditch, inside the bank of which are 56 pits known as the "Aubrey Holes" and a cemetery associated with them.

Isolated outside the stone circles is the Heel stone, over which the sun rises on Midsummer Day (June 24). It is clear that Stonehenge had special astronomical significance, since, in addition to the marking of the summer solstice by the Heel stone, the center of the great circle indicated the orbits of sun and moon, and holes were positioned for posts to mark these orbits. The whole construction indicates remarkable astronomical and mathematical knowledge on the part of the ancient builders. Like the pyramids of ancient Egypt, Stonehenge and similar monuments also involved considerable engineering skill in mining and transporting the huge stones.

Prior to modern archaeological investigations, Stonehenge was surrounded by confusing legends of origin and use. Radiocarbon dating has now established a date of around 2000 B.C.E. for the first monument, the second a few centuries later, and the third about the middle of the second millennium B.C.E. It is possible that the Druids inherited an oral tradition of the significance of Stonehenge and used it for sacred rituals involving sun worship.

Folklore credits such sites with magical power, and they have been associated with witchcraft rites. In France young girls would slide down such ancient stones with bare buttocks in the belief that it would make them fertile.

Early Christian missionaries attempted to absorb or neutralize such occult traditions by building churches inside prehistoric mounds. In medieval times, at the great stone monument at Avebury in southern Britain, there was a ceremony in which a single stone was dislodged and ritually attacked to symbolize the victory of the Christian Church over the Devil. Most sites, including Stonehenge, have also suffered vandalism over the centuries.

Modern Stonehenge

In the 1980s Stonehenge became the center of another strange ritual every midsummer. Thousands of hippies, living a nomadic life in battered automobiles (often unlicensed), reminiscent of the American dust bowl days, descended on the fields surrounding Stonehenge and set up makeshift camps, intending to gain access to Stonehenge to celebrate the summer solstice. But the site has been fenced off with barbed wire and the solstice ceremony restricted to a modern revival Druid organization and no more than six hundred ticket-holding visitors. To prevent the hippies from overrunning the site, farmers annually barricaded paths and byways with trailers and machinery, while hundreds of police stood by in riot gear.

For many years there was a ritual battle between hippies and police. Rocks, bottles, and other objects were thrown, while police with helmets and batons forced back the intruders and arrested many of them. After the summer solstice, the hippies were obliged to retreat to their battered vehicles.

Stonehenge remains one of England's most visited tourist sites in spite of the fence, which prevents visitors from walking among the stones.

Sources:

Burl, Aubrey. The Stone Circles of the British Isles. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1976.

Chippendale, Christopher. Stonehenge Complete. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1983.

Hawkins, Gerald. Stonehenge Decoded. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1965. Reprint, London: Souvenir Press, 1966.

Hitching, Francis. Earth Magic. London: Cassell, 1976.

Mitchell, J. Astro-Archaeology. London: Thames & Hudson, 1977.

Newham, C. A. The Astronomical Significance of Stonehenge. UK: John Blackburn, 1972.

Thom, Alexander. Megalithic Sites in Britain. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1967.

Stowe, John R. (1956–)

John R. Stowe, a spiritual teacher, cofounder of Gay Spirit Visions, and founder of EarthFriends, was born in 1956. He lived a closeted gay existence until 1979, when he began a quest to discover what it meant to live as an aware, spiritually-engaged gay man. As with many gay men, much of that struggle meant dealing with negative self images acquired from growing up in a world that does not accept homosexuality as a legitimate option amid the myriad options from which people can choose.

After coming out, he found employment as a bodyworker/masseur and pursued his spiritual and self-understanding quest through a spectrum of alternative spiritual options from the gay-informed Christianity of Episcopal priest Malcolm

Boyd to channeller Andrew Ramer. He eventually decided that people have the right to their own spiritual path and that personal spirituality begins in listening to the inner self. He found bodywork as one tool that assisted the exploration of the inner self, but also found help in Jungian reflections on archetypes. He soon emerged as a spiritual teacher serving the gay community primarily in the Atlanta, Georgia, area.

In 1990, Stowe joined with a small group of friends who had pursued similar spiritual journeys, including Ramer, to found Gay Spirit Visions. The primary program of Gay Spirit Visions is an annual conference where gay men gather to explore alternative spiritual options. The work of the group, which Stowe has described as mutual mentoring, provided the atmosphere for him to develop his focus on the archetypes that led to his book, Gay Spirit Warrior (1999). Gay Spirit Warrior was written to assist men begin an inner journey and start to experience the reality of the self, both positive and negative. Stowe views archetypes as universal characters that reside in the human consciousness. Each person carries the archetypes developed to a greater or lesser strength. By looking at each archetype successively, and assessing how each manifests in its particularity, one can come to new levels of self-understanding.

In 1984, Stowe had discovered flower essences, substances distilled from flowers and other plants by a particular method first discovered by Edward Bach, a British physician. Since Bach's death in the 1930s, the number of flowers processed in the manner he discovered has greatly expanded, especially after the formation of the Flower Essence Society in 1979. Stowe began to make his own flower essences from flowers found in the Southeastern United States and use them in his bodywork sessions. In the mid-1980s he founded EarthFriends to manufacture and sell the essences he had developed. One line of products, Exploring Gayspirit Oils, is marketed primarily to gay men.

Sources:

Nichols, Jack. "Interview with John R. Stowe." Gay Today (October 1999).

Stowe, John R. Gay Spirit Warrior. Findhorn Press, 1999.

Strange Magazine

Quarterly magazine featuring "all aspects of the inexplicable as it appears in science, art, literature, philosophy, technology, magic, religion and everything else we call reality." It gives special attention to Fortean phenomena (i.e., scientifically anomalous phenomena of the kind originally cataloged by Charles H. Fort) and includes book reviews and news. Address: P.O. Box 2246, Rockville, MD 20847. The magazine is now accessible on the Internet at http://www.strangemag.com/.

Sources:

Strange Magazine Online. http://www.strangemag.com/. March 8, 2000.

Stratton, F(rederick) J(ohn) M(arrian) (1881–1960)

Professor of astrophysics and a notable member of the Society for Psychical Research (SPR), London. He was born on October 16, 1881, in Birmingham, England. He studied at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge University (B.A., 1904; M.A., 1908). In 1928 he began his long tenure as professor of astrophysics and director of the Solar Physics Observatory, Cambridge (1928–47), with time out during World War II to serve with the Royal Corps of Signals. After the war he became president of Gonville and Caius College (1946–48).

An outstanding scientist of his day, Stratton took a great interest in spontaneous phenomena concerning psi and hauntings, and his reports appear in the Journal of the SPR. He was a member of the SPR for some 60 years and served as president (1953–55) and vice president (1955–60). He was also a charter member of the Parapsychological Association. He died September 2, 1960.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Stratton, F. J. M. "Four Modern Ghosts." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 39 (1938).

———. "Psychical Research—A Lifelong Interest." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1953).

Strauch, Inge H(enriette) (1932–)

German parapsychologist and research associate in psychology. She was born on April 4, 1932, in Dresden, Germany, and studied at Freiburg University (M.A. psychology, 1956; Ph.D., 1958). While completing her doctorate she was a research associate at the Institut für Grenzgebiete der Psychologie and Psychohygiene, Freiburg (1956–58), and after graduation she became a research associate for the Department for Border Areas of Psychology at Freiburg University, where she stayed for many years. She served as managing editor of the Zeitschrift für Parapsychologie und Grenzgebiete der Psychologie and was an associate member of the Parapsychological Association.

Her special interest in dream research resulted in her 1960 paper "Investigations into Various Stages of Dream Recall," which became Report 22 at the 1960 Congress of Deutsche Gesellschaft für Psychologie. During 1961–62 she undertook a study tour in the United States and conducted electroencephalographical research on dreams at New York's Mount Sinai Hospital and electroencephalographical studies of the neurological basis of psychic phenomena at the Parapsychology Foundation, New York. She also conducted quantitative research at the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke University.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Strauch, Inge H. "Dreams and Psi in the Laboratory." In Psi Favorable States of Consciousness, edited by R. Cavenna. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1970.

———. "Medical Aspects of 'Mental' Healing." International Journal of Parapsychology 5 (1963).

Strieber, Whitley (1945–)

Best-selling author of fantasy and horror stories, several of which, including Wolfen and The Hunger, have been adapted as successful movies. In 1987 he completed a nonfiction book, Communion, in which he relates his personal experiences in encounters with what he believes to be extraterrestrials. The encounters included an abduction and examination by strange creatures in a flying craft. The response led to two follow-up books on the same theme: Transformation: The Breakthrough (1988) and a novel, Majestic (1989). All three made the best-seller lists.

Strieber was born on June 13, 1945, in San Antonio, Texas. He was educated at the University of Texas (B.A., 1968) and the London School of Economics and Political Science (certificate, 1968). From 1970 through 1977 he wrote novels while working at an advertising company, becoming account supervisor and vice president.

The idea for his novel The Wolfen (1978), later made into a successful movie, is said to have arisen from the experience of encountering a pack of feral dogs while walking through Central Park in New York. His other publications include Black Magic (1982), The Night Church (1983), Wolf of Shadows (1986) (with James W. Kunetka), and The Consequences of the Twentieth Century (1986). His novel The Hunger (1981), notable for the very different twist it gave to the vampire myth, was made into a movie in 1983. Strieber has also designed games based on various periods of history, including a game about the late Middle Ages entitled "1480: Age of Exploration" and one covering computer games. He has participated in archaeological projects in Central America and has been involved with a scientific group attempting to authenticate the Turin shroud.

Soon after the publication of Communion, Strieber received more than five hundred letters, many claiming similar experiences of contact by extraterrestrials or other creatures. His experience was further publicized in an article in the International UFO Reporter (January/February 1987), in which Strieber characterizes such reports as "visitor experiences."

Strieber eventually came to the conclusion that, in spite of the intrusive nature of the initial abduction experience, the extraterrestrials were a benevolent group. In 1989 he founded the Communion Foundation to assist in establishing a productive relationship with the space beings. Professional psychologists working for the foundation began to catalog similar reports in a database and follow-up studies involving mental and physical tests with selected volunteers were planned.

Strieber immediately ran into conflict with the ufological community, which draws a sharp distinction between the more negative abduction reports and the more positive claims of encounters with flying saucers, which are classified as contactee accounts. Strieber's account began to sound more and more like a contactee story of the type that had been written off as either fraudulent or religious hyperbole. In 1991 he closed the Communion Foundation and returned to fiction writing. He reportedly is still interested in the field, however, and has continued having encounters with extraterrestrials.

Sources:

Clark, Jerome. UFOs in the 1980s. Vol. 1 of The UFO Encyclopedia. Detroit: Apogee Books, 1990.

Conroy, Ed. Report on "Communion:" An Independent Investigation of and Commentary on Whitley Strieber's "Communion." New York: William Morrow, 1989.

Strieber, Whitley. Communion: A True Story. New York: William Morrow, 1987.

———. Majestic. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1989.

———. Transformation: The Breakthrough. New York: William Morrow, 1988.

Striges

In Greek folklore, vampire women with the power to transform themselves into birds of prey or other sinister animals. The striges derived from the Roman strix, a night demon, named for the screech owl. It was believed to attack infants and drain their blood. The strix appears across southern Europe, where it is known variously as strega (Italy), striges (Greece), and strigoi (Romania). The striges differed from other vampire creatures in that they were thought of as living members of the community rather than the returning dead.

Sources:

Melton, J. Gordon. The Vampire Book: The Encyclopedia of the Undead. Detroit: Visible Ink Press, 1994.

Strioporta

Frankish name for a witch. (See also France)

Stroboscopes

Devices that create light pulsations at intervals varying from one flash every few seconds to several flashes per second. They have become a familiar part of the atmosphere of excitement at some dance halls and discotheques, but in different situations they have proved of some assistance in inducing hallucinatory experiences, especially when seen with half-open or even closed eyes.

Pierre Janet did pioneering work with stroboscopes. He flashed lights at mental patients and saw some immediate breakthroughs in their health. The strobes work by a process called entrainment, in which the brain tends to align itself with the frequency of the flashing light. A beam flashed at the right frequency can induce a more relaxed state and cause the brain to change its frequency.

Sources:

Hooper, Judith, and Dick Teresi. Would the Buddha Wear a Walkman? New York: Simon and Schuster, 1990.

Stroking Stones and Images

Cotton Mather (1662–1728) wrote that an Irish American witch produced pain and disease in others by merely wetting her finger with saliva and stroking small images, or sometimes a long, slender stone.

Stromberg, Gustaf (Benjamin) (1882–1962)

Astronomer, lecturer, and author of books on parapsychological subjects. He was born on December 16, 1882, at Gothenburg, Sweden, and studied at the University of Lund, Sweden (Ph.D., 1916). After assisting at the Stockholm Observatory during his school years (1906–13) as World War I began, he moved to the United States to become an astronomer at Mount Wilson Observatory in California, where he remained for the next three decades (1917–46). Above and beyond his astronomical work, he turned his scientific training toward explanations for psychic phenomena. In this endeavor he wrote a number of books and articles. He died January 30, 1962.

Sources:

Stromberg, Gustaf. Det Eviga Sökandet (The Eternal Quest). N.p., 1948.

———. God's Place in Modern Science. N.p., 1958.

———. Psychic Phenomena and Modern Science. N.p., 1957.

———. The Searchers. N.p., 1948.

———. The Soul of the Universe. N.p., 1940.

Strutt, Arthur Charles (1878–1973)

Vice-admiral of the British navy and for a quarter of a century (1933–58) the treasurer of the Society for Psychical Research, London. He was born on October 2, 1878, at Chelmsford, England. He entered the navy in 1892 and was named master of fleet during World War I. He later served as the director of navigation for the Royal Navy (1923–25) and as the naval officer in charge of Dartmouth College. He died in February 1973.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Strutt, John William (3rd Baron Rayleigh) (1842–1919)

Physicist who was president of the Society for Psychical Research (SPR), London, 1919. He was born on November 12, 1842, at Witham, Essex, England, and was educated at Trinity College of Cambridge University (fellow, 1866). At the height of his outstanding career he was named Cavendish Professor of Experimental Physics at Cambridge (1879–84) and then professor of natural philosophy at the Royal Institution (1887–1905). He was also the secretary to the Royal Society for a decade (1887–96). In 1904 he received the Nobel Prize in physics for his isolation of argon. In 1908 he was named chancellor of Cambridge.

Lord Rayleigh became interested in psychical research after reading about the investigations of his colleague Sir William Crookes. He was present at sittings with Kate Fox and Eusapia Palladino. He died on June 30, 1919, a short time after delivering his presidential address to the SPR.

Sources:

Strutt, John William. "Presidential Address." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 30, no. 77 (1918–19).

Strutt, Robert John (4th Baron Rayleigh) (1875–1947)

Physicist and president of the Society for Psychical Research of London from 1937 to 1938. Strutt was born on August 28, 1875, at Witham, Essex, England, the son of John William Strutt. He was educated at Eton College and Trinity College, Cambridge, England (B.A. 1897, M.A. 1901), and like his notable father majored in physics. He was variously a fellow of Trinity College (1900–1906), professor of physics at the Imperial College of Science and Technology, Kensington (1908–19), and president of the Royal Institution of Great Britain (1945–47). Financially independent, he was able to create a private laboratory at which he conducted research for much of his life. He published one of the first volumes on radioactivity. Also like his father, Strutt had an intense interest in psychic research, which gave the subject some standing with fellow scientists.

He died December 13, 1947.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Strutt, Robert John. "A Method of Silhouette Photography by Infra-Red Rays for Use in Mediumistic Investigation." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 41, 128 (1932).

———. "The Problem of Physical Phenomena in Connection with Psychical Research." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 44, 152 (1938).

———. "The Question of Lights Supposed to Have Been Observed near the Poles of a Magnet." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 44, 153 (1938–39).

———. "Some Recollections of Henry Sidgwick." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 44, 156 (1936–39).

Stuart, C(harles) E. (1907–1947)

Parapsychologist. He was born on December 5, 1907, in Pennsylvania and later attended Duke University (B.A., 1932; Ph.D., 1941). He became interested in the work of J. B. Rhine as an undergraduate at Duke and conducted ESP tests on himself and friends. He went on to become a research associate in the Parapsychology Laboratory in 1934, and his doctoral thesis dealt with experimental research in ESP. He was on the laboratory staff at Duke for the rest of his life except for two years at Stanford University (1942–44) as a fellow in psychic research. He took a special interest in psychological conditions and personality factors in relation to ESP, concerning which he wrote several papers. During his many years at the Parapsychology Laboratory he was frequently called upon to answer objections to the methodology of the early ESP experiments. He died March 23, 1947.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Stuart, C. E. "A Classroom ESP Experiment with the Free Response Method." Journal of Parapsychology 9 (1945).

———. "The Effect of Rate of Movement in Card Matching Tests of Extrasensory Perception." Journal of Parapsychology 2 (1938).

———. "GESP Experiment with the Free Response Method." Journal of Parapsychology 10 (1946).

———. "An Interest Inventory Relation to ESP Scores." Journal of Parapsychology 10 (1945).

———. "A Review of Recent Criticisms of ESP Research." Journal of Parapsychology 2, no. 3 (1939).

Stuart, C. E., and J. G. Pratt. A Handbook for Testing Extrasensory Perception. New York: Farrar and Rinehart, 1937.

Stuart, C. E., J. G. Pratt, J. B. Rhine, B. M. Smith, and J. A. Greenwood. Extrasensory Perception After Sixty Years. New York: Henry Holt, 1940. Rev. ed. Boston: Bruce Humphries, 1966.

Student's International Meditation Society (SIMS)

Organization founded in 1965 to promote the transcendental meditation technique as taught by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi. In the early years of the movement in the United States, SIMS and the Spiritual Regeneration Movement were the two major vehicles for spreading the maharishi's teachings, which were mainly focused on college and university campuses.

In 1972 the maharishi announced the World Plan, an overall strategy for sharing his teachings with the world and making them effective in the reformation of society. From that proposal, the World Plan Executive Council was formed to coordinate the different aspects of the plan. SIMS was continued as one of the five divisions of the executive council. The council had headquarters in Europe as well as the United States. Last known address: P.O. Box 390, Lake Shandelee Rd., Livingston Manor, NY 12758.

Studievereniging voor Psychical Research

The Studievereniging voor Psychical Research (Dutch Society for Psychical Research), the oldest of the Dutch parapsychological research facilities, was founded in 1920 by Gerardus Heymans and I. Zeehandelaar. The organization was soon joined by a young psychology student at the University of Utrecht, W. H. C. Tenhaeff. In 1928 Tenhaeff and Paul A. Deitz founded the society's journal, Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie.

The early work of the society focused upon the study of the phenomena generated by the spreading Spiritualist movement in the Netherlands, but over the years laboratory parapsychology found its place in the society's work. Among the impressive research reported by the society was the 1950 study of telepathy in schoolchildren conducted by J. G. Busschbach. Through the remainder of the decade parapsychology gained status in the country, as signaled by the holding of the First International Conference of Parapsychological Studies at Utrecht in 1953 and the establishment of a chair of parapsychology and a Parapsychology Institute at the University of Utrecht that same year.

Tenhaeff was named to the chair in parapsychology and given the directorship of the institute at Utrecht. From that time forward he came to dominate the society and resentment grew over his authoritarian leadership. The tension between Tenhaeff and some of the other leading members culminated in 1960 with the withdrawal of a group led by George A. M.

Zorab, who founded the Nederlandse Vereniging voor Parapsychologie.

During the 1960s Tenhaeff became famous both in the Netherlands and throughout the West because of his studies of and extraordinary claims for the psychic abilities of Gerard Croiset, the psychic who became well known for his work in assisting police to solve crimes, especially cases involving missing persons. Tenhaeff authored many articles and books that initially brought him some acclaim, but as people began to give his work close scrutiny, it was discovered that he had falsified data in a number of cases. During the late 1970s his exaggerations, misrepresentations, and alterations of findings became a major scandal in European parapsychology. Tenhaeff tried to withstand the massive attack by calling the religious to his support and suggesting that Communists were behind the attacks upon him. However, by the time of his death in 1981, he had been rejected by his colleagues.

The Studievereniging voor Psychical Research survived the Tenhaeff scandal and was led by Henri van Praag from 1978–1986. Under his management the Parapsychology Institute was transformed into a private organization that existed independently from the university. In 1986, Douwe Bosga became the institute's director and he was succeeded by Dick Bierman who was appointed in 1991. The institute continues a program of lectures for the public and the publication of its journal, Tijdschrift voor Parapsychology. Address: Springweg 7, 3511 VH Utrecht, The Netherlands.

Stukeley, William (1687–1765)

William Stukeley, an antiquarian famous for his research on Stonehenge and related megalithic monuments in Western England, was born in Holbeach, Lincolnshire, England, on November 7, 1687, the son of a lawyer. As a youth, he collected and studied plants, and studied astrology. He entered Bennet College, Cambridge, in 1703 and received his degree in 1708. During his school days he made some notable contributions to the cataloguing of plant life.

After college he studied medicine and opened a medical practice in Lincolnshire in 1710. He moved to London in 1717, and soon became a member of the Royal Society. Meanwhile he continued formal studies in medicine and in 1719 received his medical degree from Cambridge. The following year he was admitted as a fellow to the College of Physicians.

While making his living as a physician, Stukeley also developed a spiritual quest centered upon a recovery of the mysteries from the ancients. He joined a speculative Freemasonry lodge in 1720, hoping to find there the answer to his questions. He also made a number of trips exploring ancient ruins in England, the first result being a book, Intinerarium Curiosum, published in 1724. His book on Stonehenge appeared in 1740.

Through the 1730s he had accepted the idea first broached by John Aubrey in the previous century tying Stonehenge and related stone monuments to ancient Druidism. He had read and made notes from Aubrey's unpublished Monumenta Britannica, and in 1719 began to make annual visits to study the stone remains in Wiltshire. In 1717 a new Druidic order had emerged in England, and John Toland was named its first chief. Stukeley became the second chief following Toland's death in 1722. He took the name Chyndonax and became known to his friends as the Archdruid. His 1740 book on Stonehenge argued that it was of Druid origin, and a later volume made a similar argument for the nearby formation at Avebury. While Aubrey had first broached the idea, it was Stukeley who popularized it and gave it substance with his publications.

In 1726 Stukeley moved back to Lincolnshire, where he laid out a temple to the Druids centered on an apple tree covered with mistletoe. His understanding of Druidism was consistent with his understanding of Christianity, and in 1730, he became a priest in the Church of England. In 1734 he published a book, Paleographia Sacra, in which he argued that Pagan mythology was derived from the biblical tradition.

He spent the rest of his life as a clergyman, though known for some unorthodox quirks. He is remembered for delaying a church service to allow his congregation to experience an eclipse of the sun and of preaching a sermon after receiving a new set of spectacles from a text in Paul's letter to the Corinthians, "Now we see through a glass darkly." He died on February 25, 1765, in Queen Square, Kent, where he had retired. Among the artifacts he left behind that were sold at auction in 1766 was a wooden model of Stonehenge he had carved.

Sources:

Carr-Gomm, Philip. The Elements of the Druid Tradition. Shaftesbury, Dorset, UK: Element, 1991.

Sturdevant, William D(esmond) (1922–)

Professor of art who was active in the field of parapsychology. He was born July 3, 1922, in Des Moines, Iowa. He attended Drake University, Des Moines (B.S. education, 1945; M.S. education, 1947) and following graduation became an art instructor at New Mexico Western College, Silver City (1947–48). He afterward taught at Minnesota State College at Mankato (1948–55); was an art supervisor for the Joliet public schools, Joliet, Illinois (1955–59); and was assistant professor of art at California Western University, San Diego (1959–61). A practitioner as well as a teacher, Sturdevant has works in the permanent collection of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts and has exhibited widely. He made experimental studies concerning extrasensory color perception and from his findings published two monographs. He was a charter associate of the Parapsychological Association.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Sturdevant, William D. Extrasensory Color Perception. N.p., 1958.

———. Fluorescent Color Perception and Graphic Response in the Perceptually Impaired Child. N.p., 1957.

St. Winifred's Well

St. Winifred's Well, a holy healing well in northern Wales (United Kingdom), is a site related to ancient Celtic Christianity that has come back into prominence as a result of the contemporary Celtic revival. The legend of the well goes back to the fifth century C.E. and the movement of Christian hermits into the region. Among those who studied Christianity with the hermits was Winifred, the daughter of a Welsh chieftain. One day she was attacked by another chieftain and refused his advances. In his anger, he cut off her head. Where the severed head fell, a healing spring well gushed forth. Where her blood splattered the moss turned red and began to emit an odor like violets. The head rolled into a nearby chapel where Bueno, one of the hermits, retrieved it, carried it to the body, and prayed over Winifred. She returned to life. At a later date, Bueno blessed the well and promised that all who came to the well would receive an answer to their prayer.

While the story of Winifred and Bueno is set in the fifth century, it can be dated as a legend only to the twelfth century. Since that time the well has been in use as a healing spring and relics believed to belong to Winifred were placed in the church at Shrewsbury. During the Middle Ages, pilgrims would go to Shrewsbury and then to the well. Along the route they passed stones said to have been covered with her blood. The wife of Henry VII built a large building over the well in 1500. However, not long afterwards, the cult of Winifred was disrupted when King Henry VIII, who at one time had visited the well, moved against the monasteries and pilgrimage sites across his land. The stones along the pilgrimage site were scattered and the relics lost. Only a single finger believed to be Winifred's survived and was hidden away in Rome until 1852, when it was sent back to England and divided between Shrewsbury and the well.

When the Church of England replaced the Roman Catholic Church as the official state religion, Winifred's Well remained a focus of Catholicism in England. Pilgrims continued to come to the site and reported healing through the years that Catholicism was officially outlawed in England. When the church was again given legal status in the middle of the nineteenth century, the well immediately became the scene of official pilgrimages. Today, both Anglicans and Catholics utilize the well shrine. The Church of England sponsors an annual pilgrimage for the handicapped. The Catholic priest in the church adjacent to the shrine blesses pilgrims with Winifred's finger relic. Though it is not as famous as Lourdes, many healings have been reported from the shrine.

Sources:

Charles-Edwards, T. Saint Winifrede and Her Well. London: Catholic Truth Society, 1971.

David, Christopher. Saint Winifrede's Well. Slough, UK: Kennion Press, 1969.

Jones, Francis. The Holy Wells of Wales. Cardiff: University of Wales, 1992.

Subconscious

A term used by some to describe a segment of the mind below the threshold of consciousness and by others as a collective name for mental phenomena dissociated from those directly or introspectively cognized. F. W. H. Myers, an early and prominent psychical researcher, ascribed various supernormal faculties to it. During the early twentieth century, theories involving such faculties eliminated for many any need to appeal to spirit agencies. Others, however, pointed to the subconscious as a means to reconcile mental activity with spirit agencies. The subconscious may be—as J. H. Hyslop pointed out—the very instrument for receiving and transmitting foreign transcendental stimuli, to which, on favorable occasions, it becomes sensitive.

Subjective Phenomena

"Subjective," as distinguished from "objective," is a classification for mental phenomena that are not capable of objective validation, as in the case of physical phenomena.

Subliminal

A term first used by A. H. Pierce of Harvard University for sensations beneath the threshold of consciousness, too vague to be individually recognized. F. W. H. Myers extended the meaning to cover all that takes place beneath the consciousness threshold—sensations, thoughts, and emotions that seldom emerge but form a consciousness quite as complex and coherent as the supraliminal one, since they demonstrate processes of mentation and exhibit a continuous chain of memory.

Nevertheless, Myers did not consider the subliminal consciousness a separate self but, together with the supraliminal (normal consciousness) one, a fragment of the larger self revealed through an organism that cannot afford it full manifestation. In this concept he came close to the Hindu Vedanta concepts of jiva (individual soul) as part of atman (collective soul).

Myers attributed most supernormal psychical phenomena to the subliminal self, but not as a complete explanation or exclusion of the spirit hypothesis. On the contrary, his inference was that if our incarnate selves may act in telepathy in at least apparent independence of the fleshly body, the presumption is strong that other spirits may exist independently of the body and may affect us in a similar manner.

Myers divided the influence of the subliminal on the supraliminal into three main areas: (1) When the subliminal mentation cooperates with and supplements the supraliminal, without changing the apparent phase of personality, we have genius. (2) When subliminal operations change the apparent phase of personality from the state of waking toward the direction of trance, we have hypnotism. (3) When the subliminal mentation forces itself up through the supraliminal, without amalgamation, as in crystal vision, automatic writing, and so forth, we have sensory or motor automatism.

Subliminal Self

A term formerly used in psychical research to denote that part of the personality is normally beneath the "threshold" (limen) separating consciousness from unconsciousness. The phrase owed its popularity largely to pioneer researcher F. W. H. Myers, who made use of it to explain the psychic phenomena he had observed. The view of Myers was that only a fraction of the human personality, or soul, finds adequate expression through the ordinary cerebral processes, because the brain and physical organism have not yet reached a very advanced stage of evolution. The soul, in short, is like an iceberg, with a fraction of its bulk above water but with a much greater part submerged.

The subliminal self, according to Myers, is in touch with a reservoir of psychical energy, from which it draws forces that influence the physical organism. Thus the inspiration of genius, the exaltation of the perceptive and intellectual faculties in hypnosis, and such exercises as automatic writing and talking and table turning are caused by great influxes of these psychical forces rather than by any spirit influences.

These hypotheses have been advanced to explain telepathy and communication between the living and the dead, as well as hallucination, automatism, and all the phenomena of hypnotism. But the two former, even if they could be demonstrated, would have to be explained on other grounds, while the others, whose existence is undisputed, are more generally regarded as resulting from cerebral dissociation (i.e., the temporary dislocation of the connecting links between the various neural systems). (See also Subconscious)

Subterranean Cities

A persistent myth of modern occultism concerns the existence of societies residing underground. The myth takes many forms, including stories of underground caverns inhabited by malevolent deros (dwarfs) and subterranean cities inhabited by the survivors of Atlantis or Lemuria, or flying saucer pilots.

Much of this new mythology stems from the publications of the enterprising Raymond A. Palmer in Amazing Stories, Flying Saucers, and Search magazines. In 1945 Palmer introduced the readers of Amazing Stories to the fantasies of Richard S. Shaver, with whom Palmer collaborated in producing what were stoutly claimed to be factual "racial memories" of survivors from Atlantis and Lemuria, originally giants but now degenerated into malevolent dwarfs, influencing mankind by secret rays.

Palmer, who helped focus the first excitement about flying saucers in his magazine Fate in the spring 1948 issue, later went on to publish articles suggesting that saucers came from an underground world entered through the polar ice caps.

Other sources for subterranean mythology include the writings of Robert Ernest Dickhoff and Milinko S. Stevic. In Dickhoff's book Agharta, he describes a vast network of underground tunnels radiating from Antarctica with openings in the United States, Brazil, Tibet, and Pacific islands. These underground strongholds are inhabited by descendants of Martians, who colonized the Earth in prehistory.

Stevic, a Yugoslav-born engineer, lectures about the extensive subterranean cities beneath New York, Tokyo, Leningrad, São Paulo, and large areas of the Atlantic Ocean. Survivors of Atlantis reside in this subterranean world, where they have built huge domes of fiberglass. There are millions of inhabitants, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the Ancient Three, descendants of Martians who exercise a favorable influence on world affairs, in contrast to Shaver's malevolent deros. These powerful mystics of Rainbow City won World War II for the Allies by stopping Rommel in Egypt and halting the Japanese in the Pacific.

Early in this century, Frederick Spencer Oliver (writing as the channel for "Phylos the Tibetan") began to speak of people living inside a hollow Mt. Shasta, in northern California. His initial revelations were later strengthened by the revelations of Guy W. Ballard, founder of the I Am Movement. In 1934, writing as Godfré Ray King, Ballard published Unveiled Mysteries, in which he detailed his encounters with a godlike figure named Master Saint-Germain.

Although based somewhat on traditional fairy lore, notions of demonic realms beneath the Earth, and Asian folklore, accounts of underground worlds have emerged as an integral part of modern occult lore. (See also Subterranean Crypts and Temples)

Sources:

Chaney, Earlyne. Revelations of Things to Come. Upland, Calif.: Astara, 1982.

Dickhoff, Robert Ernest. Agharta. Boston: Bruce Humphries, 1951.

Hefferlin, W. C., and Gladys Hefferlin. A Description of the Rainbow City from the Hefferlin Manuscript. Vista, Calif.: Borderland Sciences Research Foundation, n.d.

Ramana Maharshi. Talks with Sri Ramana Maharshi. Vol. 1. Tiruvannamalai, India: Sri Ramanasramam, 1957.

Subterranean Crypts and Temples

Subterranean resorts, crypts, and places of worship have always fascinated the human mind. The mysteries of the Egyptians and other peoples were held in underground crypts, possibly to render these ceremonies still more mysterious to ordinary people, perhaps because it was essential to the privacy they required, or possibly to symbolize the exploration of the hidden parts of the self. The caves of Elephanta, the Roman catacombs, and similar subterranean edifices are also well-known examples. There are also several lesser but perhaps more interesting underground meeting places and temples in various parts of the world.

An Underworld City in Central America

The Jesuit priests of the early eighteenth century left descriptions of the palace of Mitla in Central America that leave no doubt that in their time it contained many subterranean chambers, and one especially appears to have surpassed all others in the dreadful uses to which it was put.

Father Torquemada gave the following description of the place:

"When some monks of my order, the Franciscan, passed, preaching and shriving through the province of Zapoteca, whose capital city is Tehuantepec, they came to a village which was called Mictlan, that is, underworld (hell). Besides mentioning the large number of people in the village they told of buildings which were prouder and more magnificent than any which they had hitherto seen in New Spain. Among them was the temple of the evil spirit and living rooms for his demoniacal servants, and among other fine things there was a hall with ornamented panels, which were constructed of stone in a variety of arabesques and other very remarkable designs. There were doorways there, each one of which was built of but three stones, two upright at the sides and one across them, in such a manner that, although these doorways were very high and broad, the stone sufficed for their entire construction. They were so thick and broad that we were assured there were few like them. There was another hall in these buildings, or rectangular temples, which was erected entirely on round stone pillars very high and very thick that two grown men could scarcely encircle them with their arms, nor could one of them reach the fingertips of the other. These pillars were all in one piece and, it was said, the whole shaft of the pillar measured 5 ells [about 18 feet or 6 meters] from top to bottom, and they were very much like those of the church of Santa Maria Maggiore in Rome, very skillfully made and polished."

Father Burgoa was more explicit with regard to these subterranean chambers:

"There were four chambers above ground and four below. The latter were arranged according to their purpose in such a way that one front chamber served as chapel and sanctuary for the idols, which were placed on a great stone which served as an altar. And for the most important feasts[,] which they celebrated with sacrifices, or at the burial of a king or great lord, the high priest instructed the lesser priests or the subordinate temple officials who served him to prepare the chapel and his vestments and a large quantity of the incense used by them.

"And then he descended with a great retinue, when none of the common people saw him or dared to look in his face, convinced that if they did so they would fall dead to the earth as a punishment for their boldness. And when he entered the chapel they put on him a long white cotton garment made like an alb, and over that a garment shaped like a dalmatic, which was embroidered with pictures of wild beasts and birds; and they put a cap on his head, and on his feet a kind of shoe woven of many-colored feathers.

"And when he had put on these garments he walked with solemn mien and measured step to the altar, bowed low before the idols, renewed the incense, and then in quite unintelligible murmurs he began to converse with these images, these depositories of infernal spirits, and continued in this sort of prayer with hideous grimaces and writhings, uttering inarticulate sounds, which filled all present with fear and terror, till he came out of that diabolical trance and told those standing around the lies and fabrications which the spirit had imparted to him or which he had invented himself.

"When human beings were sacrificed the ceremonies were multiplied, and the assistants of the high priest stretched the victim out upon a large stone, bareing his breast, which they tore open with a great stone knife, while the body writhed in fearful convulsions and they laid the heart bare, ripping it out, and with it the soul, which the devil took, while they carried the heart to the high priest that he might offer it to the idols by holding it to their mouths, among other ceremonies; and the body was thrown into the burial-place of their 'blessed,' as they called them. And if after the sacrifice he felt inclined to detain those who begged any favor he sent them word by the subordinate priests not to leave their houses till their gods were appeased, and he commanded them to do penance meanwhile, to fast and to speak with no woman, so that, until this father of sin had interceded for the absolution of the penitents and had declared the gods appeased they did not dare to cross their threshold.

"The second [underground] chamber was the burial place of these high priests, and third that of the kings of Theozapotlan, whom they brought thither richly dressed in their best attire, feathers, jewels, golden necklaces, and precious stones, placing a shield in their left hand and a javelin in the right, just as they used them in war. And at their burial rites great mourning prevailed; the instruments which were played made mournful sounds; and with loud wailing and continuous sobbing they chanted the life and exploits of their lord until they laid him on the structure which they had prepared for this purpose.

"The last [underground] chamber had a second door at the rear, which led to a dark and gruesome room. This was closed with a stone slab, which occupied the whole entrance. Through this door they threw the bodies of the victims and of the great lords and chieftains who had fallen in battle, and they brought them from the spot where they fell, even when it was very far off, to this burial place; and so great was the barbarous infatuation of these Indians that, in the belief of the happy life which awaited them, many who were oppressed by diseases or hardships begged this infamous priest to accept them as living sacrifices and allow them to enter through that portal and roam about in the dark interior of the mountains, to seek the great feasting places of their forefather. And when anyone obtained this favour the servants of the high priest led him thither with special ceremonies, and after they had allowed him to enter through the small door they rolled the stone before it again and took leave of him, and the unhappy man, wandering in that abyss of darkness, died of hunger and thirst, beginning already in life the pain of his damnation; and on account of this horrible abyss they called this village Liyobaa, The Cavern of Death.

"When later there fell upon these people the light of the Gospel, its servants took much trouble to instruct them to find out whether this error, common to all these nations, still prevailed, and they learned from the stories which had been handed down that all were convinced that this damp cavern extended more than 30 leagues underground, and that its roof was supported by pillars. And there were people, zealous prelates anxious for knowledge, who, in order to convince these ignorant people of their terror, went into this cave accompanied by a large number of people bearing lighted torches and firebrands, and descended several large steps. And they soon came upon many buttresses which formed a kind of street. They had prudently brought a quantity of rope with them to use as a guiding line, that they might not lose themselves in this confusing labyrinth. And the putrefaction and the bad odour and the dampness of the earth were very great and there was also a cold wind which blew out their torches. And after they had gone a short distance, fearing to be overpowered by the stench or to step on poisonous reptiles, of which some had been seen, they resolved to go out again and to completely wall up this back door of hell. The four buildings above ground were the only ones which still remained open, and they had a court and chambers like those underground; and the ruins of these have lasted even to the present day."

The Temple Hill at Jerusalem

The vast subterranean vaults under the temple hill at Jerusalem were probably used as a secret meeting place by the Templars during their occupation of the Holy City, and it was perhaps there that the strange Eastern rites of Baphomet that they later affected were first celebrated.

In his book Recent Discoveries on the Temple Hill (1884), Rev. James King gives the following account:

"On the occasion of a visit to the Noble Sanctuary, the author had an opportunity of examining the ancient masonry inside the wall at the south-east corner, as well as the vast subterranean vaults popularly known as Solomon's stables. A small doorway, under a little dome at the south-east corner, admits by a flight of steps to a small chamber known as the Mosque of the Cradle of our Lord, from the existence of a hollowed stone which somewhat resembles a cradle, and a tradition that the Virgin Mary remained in this chamber for some time after her purification in the Temple. Passing through the chamber, the spacious vaults, which extend over an acre of ground, are reached. These subterranean substructures consist of one hundred square piers arranged in fifteen rows, each pier being five feet wide and composed of large marginal drafted stones, placed singly over each other. The rows are connected by semicircular arches, the intercolumniations of which range from ten to twenty-three feet. The floor of these vaults is about forty-feet below the Haram Area, and more than a hundred feet above the great foundation corner-stone. They are called Solomon's Stables by the Franks. But the Moslems call the place, Al Masjed al Kadim, that is, The Old Mosque. These vaults were used as stables by the Frank kings and the Knights Templar, and holes in which rings were fastened can still be traced on some of the piers.

"Since the floor of Solomon's Stables is upwards of a hundred feet above the foundation stone, it seems highly probable that there exists another system of vaults below, for the vast space from the rock upwards is not likely to be filled with solid earth.

"Some allusion seems to be made to these vaults in the writings of Procopius, a Greek historian of the sixth century. He was born at Caesarea, in Palestine, about 500 A.D., and as a young man went to Constantinople, where his eminent talents brought him under the notice of the Emperor Justinian. In 529 A.D. Justinian built a splendid church on the Temple Hill, in honour of the Virgin Mary, and in the writings of Procopius there is a full and detailed account of the edifice. The historian relates that the fourth part of the ground required for the building was wanting towards the south-east; the builders therefore laid their foundations on the sloping ground, and constructed a series of arched vaults, in order to raise the ground to the level of the other parts of the enclosure. This account is eminently descriptive of the subterranean vaults at the south-east portion of the Haram, and, according to [an authority], the stone-work of these vaults certainly belongs to the age of Justinian." (See also Subterranean Cities)

Subud

A spiritual movement that has grown up around the Indonesian mystic Muhammad Subuh, known as "Bapak" (spiritual father). Beginning in Java, it spread to Europe and elsewhere, after winning support from the Gurdjieff disciples at Coombe Springs, England, led by J. G. Bennett. Gurdjieff himself had predicted that there would be an Indonesian teacher to bring emotional warmth to his system. Subud gained public recognition in 1959 when the movement held an international congress in England. Soon afterward, the Hungarian actress Eva Bartok was initiated and claimed to be healed from childbirth complications.

The basis of the Subud movement is the latihan, an initiation ceremony for newcomers and a spiritual exercise for those already initiated. A "helper" prepares the initiate for "opening" or receptivity to the descent of spiritual energy. This often causes pronounced convulsions, similar to the "shakes" or "jerks" elicited by nineteenth century evangelists at camp meetings, or the onset of kundalini energy in traditional Hindu mysticism.

This energy is seen as having a purifying function and reportedly brings intense feelings of peace when there is submission to divine will. Subud has no creed, dogma, rules, or regulations but makes available the experience of the latihan to initiates. Subud groups meet regularly in members' homes or in rented halls. The movement does not advertise or proselytize.

More than 70 North American cities have Subud centers, and there are many in the United Kingdom. Address in North America: Subud USA, 13701 Bel-Red Rd., Ste. B, Bellevue, WA 98005. Address in Great Britain: Subud, 342 Cricklewood Ln., London, NW2 2QH.

Sources:

Barter, J. P. Towards Subud. London, 1967.
Bennett, John G. Concerning Subud. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1959.
Rofe, Husein. The Path of Subud. London: Rider, 1959.
Van Hien, G. What is Subud? London: Rider, 1963.

Subuh, Muhammad (1901–1987)

Indonesian mystic whose spiritual mission led to the formation of the movement known as Subud. Following some years of searching for spiritual guidance in Sufi and other movements, Subuh had an initiatory experience in 1925 on his twenty-fourth birthday when a sphere of light appeared in the night and seemed to enter his head, filling him with vibrating energy and light. Three years later this strange energy source stopped abruptly, and Subuh continued his everyday life as a government official and married man, while passing through the equivalent stage of the Western mystical "dark night of the soul." On his thirty-second birthday he had an enlightenment revealing his spiritual mission, and he devoted himself to his work.

The name Subud derives from an abbreviation of three words: susila (morality in line with divine will), budhi (enlightenment in man), and dharma (attitude of submission and sincerity toward God). Subuh's own name actually means "sunrise," but he is known to his followers as "Bapak," an affectionate Javanese term meaning "father" often applied to a spiritual teacher.

Prior to 1956 Subud was little known outside Indonesia, but after that it attracted European interest. When Subuh visited the Gurdjieff headquarters of Coombe Springs in Britain, its director, J. G. Bennett, and followers were won over by his emotional and spiritual vibrancy. During his lifetime, Gurdjieff had made mysterious allusions to a forthcoming Indonesian teacher, and Bennett led many Gurdjieffian students in accepting Subuh as that teacher.

By 1960 interest in the group died out and Subuh returned to Indonesia where he died in 1987.

Sources:

Bennett, John G. Concerning Subud. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1959.
Muhammad-Subuh Sumohadiwidjojo. Susila Budhi Dharma. Subud Publications International, 1975.

Succubus

A demon who takes the shape of a woman, stealing the vitality of men during sleep. Old rabbinical writings relate the legend of how Adam was visited over a period of 130 years by female demons and had intercourse with demons, spirits, specters, lemurs, and phantoms.

Another legend relates how under the reign of Roger, king of Sicily, a young man was bathing by moonlight and thought he saw someone drowning and hastened to the rescue. Having drawn from the water a beautiful woman, he became enamored of her, married her, and they had a child. Afterward she disappeared mysteriously with her child, which made everyone believe she was a succubus.

In the fifteenth century, the succubus and the male demon, the counterpart incubus (which takes the form of a man, to seduce women), were associated with witchcraft, and witches were assumed to have intercourse with demons. The historian Hector Boece (1465–1536), in his history of Scotland, related that a very handsome young man was pursued by a female demon, who would pass through his closed door and offer to marry him. He complained to his bishop, who enjoined him to fast, pray, and confess, and as a result the infernal visitor ceased to trouble him.

The witchcraft judge Pierre de Lancre (1553–1631) stated that in Egypt an honest blacksmith was occupied in forging during the night when a demon in the shape of a beautiful woman appeared to him. He threw a hot iron in the face of the demon, which at once took flight.

The succubus was generally believed to appear most frequently during sleep, especially in nightmares. Roman Catholic theologian Thomas Aquinas argued for the objective existence of the incubus/succubus and believed that such intercourse could lead to the pregnancy of a woman. Twentieth-century psychology tends to see such creatures as dream symbols of repressed sexual feelings.

Sources:

Jones, Ernest. On the Nightmare. New York: Liveright, 1951.
Melton, J. Gordon. The Vampire Book: The Encyclopedia of the Undead. 2nd edition. Detroit: Visible Ink Press, 1999.
Robbins, Rossell Hope. The Encyclopedia of Witchcraft and Demonology. New York: Crown Publishers, 1959.

Sudre, René (1880– ?)

Scientific writer and parapsychologist. Sudre was born April 19, 1880, at Angoulême, France. He received degrees from Poitiers Academy and the University of Paris.

As a writer and teacher he held a variety of positions between the world wars. He was a scientific commentator for Radiodiffusion Française (1926–40), a writer on psychic research for Mercure de France (1925–28), a professor at École des Hautes Etudes Sociales, Paris (1931–40), and a scientific writer for the Journal des Débats (1935–40). After the war he worked for the French Ministry of Information, the Foreign Ministry (1945–56), and for the Revue des Deux Mondes beginning in 1949. He won a number of awards for his writing.

Sudre experimented in many fields of parapsychology and spent many years attempting to show that psi phenomena were a matter for science. He argued for a coherent theoretical approach to psi and believed that the universe was permeated with a creative power that accounted for all psychic phenomena. He believed that the assumptions of Spiritualism were erroneous and that all living creatures possessed some extrasensory faculty. He was a corresponding member of the National Laboratory of Psychical Research, London University; secretary of French committees for international conferences on psychical research in Copenhagen (1922) and Warsaw (1923); and a member of the Society for Psychical Research, London. Besides his own books, he translated into French various books on parapsychology by William James, Sir William Barrett, J. B. Rhine, and T. K. Oesterreich and contributed numerous articles to such journals as Psychic Research (1926–31) and Revue Métapsychique (1922–26).

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.
Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.
Sudre, René. Le Huitième art—Mission de la radio (The Eighth Art—Mission of Radio). N.p., 1946.
———. Introduction à la métapsychique humaine (Introduction to Human Metapsychics). N.p., 1929.
———. "Is the Soul Material?" Psychic Research 24 (1930).
———. La Lutte pour la métapsychique (The Fight for Parapsychology). N.p., 1928.
———. Les Nouvelles énigmes de l'univers (New Enigmas of the Universe). N.p., 1943.

———. Personnages d'au-delà (People from the Beyond). N.p., 1945.

———. Traité de parapsychologie. 1956. Translated as Treatise on Parapsychology: Essay on the Scientific Interpretation of the Human Phenomenon Known as the Supernatural. New York: Citadel Press, 1960.

Sufism

A mystical movement of Islam. The name derives from the woollen clothing (suf), worn by Sufis as a token of penitence, similar to the Christian penitent tradition of wearing hair shirts.

In medieval times Sufism was characterized by a complex system of striving for spiritual attainment and divine grace. The spiritual stages involved include conversion, abstinence, renunciation, poverty, patience, trust in God, and contentment; with spiritual states of meditation, nearness to God, love, fear, hope, longing, intimacy, tranquility, contemplation, and certainty. Much of this is analogous to the yama and niyama of Hindu yoga.

There were four orders of Sufis: the Qadiriyya, an orthodox wing emphasizing devotional exercises leading to spiritual experience; the Suhrawardiyya, less orthodox and with a suggestion of pantheism; the Shadhiliyya (widespread in Egypt and North Africa) with intense devotion and utter dependence on God; and the Mevlevi order, founded by the poet Rumi, which developed the special mystical dance of the dervishes.

Sufism has influenced religious movements in India, Java, and elsewhere and played a part in the development of such unorthodox prophets as Baha'u'llah of the Baha'i faith and the mystic Meher Baba. The major emphasis in Sufism is intense love for God, expressed in the perfection of the soul.

A Western Sufi organization is the Sufi Order (headed by Pir Vilayat Inayat Khan), whose traditions are said to predate Islam and to have become incorporated in it. In 1910 the Sufi Order was established in Europe and the United States through the lectures of Hazrat Pir-o-Murshid Inayat Khan. The order stresses that God is one and that there are no barriers between religions. Address: Sufi Order Secretariat, Box 574, Lebanon Springs, NY 12114. British branch: Barton Farm, Pound Lake, Bradford-on-Avon, Wiltshire, England.

A separate group of the Sufi movement is the Sufi Islamia Ruhaniat Society. Address: The Mentorgarten, 10 Precita Ave., San Francisco, CA 94110.

Another Sufi group is the Sufi Cultural Center in London, established in 1971. It places great emphasis on the mysticism of music, and encourages the teaching of classical Indian music with the more modern adjunct of health foods and alternative healing. (See also Idries Shah)

Sources:

Khan, Pir V. The Message in Our Time: The Life and Teachings of the Sufi Master, Hazrat Inayat Khan. New York: Harper & Row, 1979.

Shah, Idries. The Sufis. London: W. H. Allen, 1964.

———. The Way of the Sufi. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1970.

Subhan, John. Sufism: Its Saints and Shrines. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1973.

Williams, L. F. R., ed. Sufi Studies: East and West. London: Octagon Press, 1974.

Suggestion

Sensitivity of an entranced subject to suggestion is the characteristic and invariable accompaniment of the hypnotic state and is also a distinctive feature of hysteria. Indeed, many scientists gave to hypnotism the name "suggestion." An abnormal suggestibility implies some measure of cerebral dissociation. In this state every suggestion advanced by the operator, whether conveyed by word, gesture, or even unconscious glance, operates with abnormal force in the brain of the subject, which becomes relieved from the counterexcitement of other ideas and stimuli.

In the view of psychologist Pierre Janet, all suggestibility implies a departure from perfect sanity, but this, although perhaps true in the strictest sense, is somewhat misleading, since all individuals are more or less amenable to suggestion. In hypnotism and hysteria, however, the normal suggestibility is greatly exaggerated, and the suggestion, meeting with no opposition from the recipient's critical or judicial faculties (because there are no other ideas with which to compare it), becomes, for the time, the subject's dominant idea. The suggestion thus accepted has a powerful effect on both mind and body; hence the value of suggestion in certain complaints is incalculable.

The miracles of healing claimed by Christian Science, New Thought, and other groups, the efficacy of a pilgrimage to Lourdes, the feats of healing mediums—all testify to its powerful effect.

Posthypnotic suggestion is the term applied to a suggestion made while the subject is entranced but which is to be carried out after awakening. Sometimes an interval of months may elapse between the utterance of a command and its fulfillment, but almost invariably at the stated time or stipulated stimulus the suggestion is obeyed, the recipient usually being unaware of the source of the impulse.

Autosuggestion does not proceed from any extraneous source, but arises in one's own mind, either spontaneously or from a misconception of existing circumstances, as in the case of a person who is persuaded to drink colored water under the impression that it is poison and exhibits every symptom of poisoning. Autosuggestion may arise spontaneously in dreams, the automatic obedience to such suggestion often giving rise to stories of "veridical" dreams.

The outbreaks of religious frenzy or ecstasy that swept Europe in the Middle Ages were examples of the results of mass suggestion (i.e., suggestion made by a crowd, and much more potent than that made by an individual). Cases of so-called collective hallucination may have the same cause.

Psychical researchers have been interested in suggestion because it involves abnormal conditions of mind and body. It may be an aspect of healing by faith, for suggestion can cause and cure diseases and bad habits, remove inhibitions, mitigate deficiencies of character, stimulate the imagination, vivify the senses, and heighten intellectual powers.

William James described suggestion as "another name for the power of ideas, so far as they prove efficacious over belief and conduct." According to F. W. H. Myers, the power is exercised by the subliminal self. He defined suggestion as "successful appeal to the subliminal self." It is well known that dreams may be influenced by external stimuli applied to the sleeper, such as whispering in the ear or moving the limbs. Suggestion is also a powerful factor in advertising, particularly in the use of persuasive repetition and "subliminal suggestions" in television commercials.

Sukias

Central American witches.

Sullivan, Erin (1947–)

Erin Sullivan, a notable contemporary Canadian astrologer, was born in Vancouver, British Columbia, on November 9, 1947. She took up the study of astrology in her late teens and soon developed a thriving practice. She married and became the mother of two daughters. She also became a popular author, contributing articles to a variety of astrological periodicals. She was among the founders of the Association for Astrological Networking and the Cross Canada Council for the Fraternity of Canadian Astrologers. During the 1980s she had a radio show that originated in Victoria, British Columbia.

In 1989, Sullivan moved from Canada to the United Kingdom. She established a private practice and associated with the Centre for Psychological Astrology, for whom she taught classes in London and Zürich, Switzerland. She also travels to Australia annually to teach. Shortly after moving to London, she succeeded Howard Sasportas as editor of the Arkana Astrology series published by Viking-Penguin, and she contributed two of her own works to the series, Saturn in Transet: Boundaries of the Mind, Body and Soul (1990) and a second volume offering a psychological reevaluation of the phenomenon of retrograde planets, Retrograde Planets: Traversing the Inner Landscape (1992). Retrograde planets were a major problem for pre-modern astrologers, who assumed an earth-centered astronomy. While they moved steadily through the sky on their course, at times they appeared to come to a complete stop and begin to move backward. This unusual action came to be seen as an ill omen. Moving to a post-Copernican astronomy explained retrograde planets as an illusion created by the relative movements of the earth and other planets around the sun. Psychologically considered, retrograde became symbolic of challenges presented to the inner self.

Sources:

Sullivan, Erin. Retrograde Planets: Traversing the Inner Landscape. New York: Arkana, 1992.

———. Saturn in Transet: Boundaries of the Mind, Body and Soul. New York: Arkana, 1990.

Summerland

The land of bliss of spirits, so named by Andrew Jackson Davis, similar to the "Plane of Illusion" described by the claimed spirit of F. W. H. Myers in the book The Road to Immortality by Geraldine Cummins (1932). Summerland is the Spiritualist equivalent to the Christian heaven.

Summers, Montague (1880–1948)

Author who wrote about occult history and folklore. Alphonsus Joseph-Mary Augustus Montague Summers was born on April 10, 1880, near Bristol, England. He attended a private academy that prepared him to enter Clifton College. In 1899 he entered Trinity College, Oxford, and then went on to Lichfield Theological College to prepare for the Anglican priesthood. He received his B.A. in 1905 and an M.A. the following year. After a brief stay in Italy, in 1908 he was ordained a deacon and assigned to a Church of England congregation in Bath. He later served in Bitton, a suburb of Bristol. Soon after his assignment there, he and another clergyman were accused of homosexual activity. Although acquitted, he left the church and became a Roman Catholic. At some point, he seems to have been ordained as a priest.

Summers served in a parish for a brief period but in 1911 became a teacher. Over the next decades he pursued the life of an independent scholar, which led him to become a respected authority on the literature and drama of the Restoration era and on Gothic literature. His expertise emerged fully in the 1930s with a series of texts—The Restoration Theatre (1934), A Bibliography of Restoration Drama (1935), The Gothic Quest: A History of the Gothic Novel (1938), and A Gothic Bibliography (1940).

Summers reached a more popular audience with his interest in the occult and some of the more esoteric areas of folklore. Once he retired from his teaching post in 1925, he devoted his full time to research and writing. His first important book, and possibly still his best known, A History of Witchcraft and Demonology, appeared in 1926. It was followed by Geography of Witchcraft (1927). He moved on to complete his massive surveys of vampirism: The Vampire: His Kith and Kin (1928) and The Vampire in Europe (1929). He also edited English editions of Malleus Maleficarum (The Witches' Hammer, 1928), Compendium Maleficarum (1929), Demonolatry (1930), and Reginald Scot's The Discoverie of Witchcraft (1930). His occult interests continued with his study of The Werewolf (1933) and Witchcraft and Black Magic (1946).

Summers wrote as a conservative Catholic who retained pre-Enlightenment views concerning the reality of evil supernaturalism. Such views distracted from his otherwise scholarly perspectives on witchcraft and vampires, both of which he believed existed.

Summers died August 10, 1948, in England. He wrote an autobiographical study, which was published in 1980 as The Galanty Show.

Sources:

Frank, Frederick S. Montague Summers: A Bibliographical Portrait. Methuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1988.

Jerome, Joseph. Montague Summers: A Memoir. London: Cecil and Amerila Woolf, 1965.

Morrow, Feliz. "The Quest for Montague Summers." In The Vampire: His Kith and Kin, by Montague Summer. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1960.

Smith, Timothy d'Arch. A Bibliography of the Works of Montague Summers. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1964.

Summers, Montague. The Galanty Show. London: Cecil Woolf, 1980.

———. Geography of Witchcraft. London, 1927.

———. The Gothic Quest: A History of the Gothic Novel. 1938. Reprint, London: Fortune Press, 1950.

———. A History of Demonology and Witchcraft. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1926.

———. The Vampire: His Kith and Kin. London: Routledge, Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, 1928.

———. The Werewolf. London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, 1933.

Summit Lighthouse See Church Universal and Triumphant

Summons by the Dying

It was once maintained by theologians that if anyone who was unjustly accused or persecuted should, with his dying breath, summon his oppressor to appear before the supreme tribunal, the person thus summoned would die on the day fixed by his innocent victim. Thus the grand master of the Templars cited the pope and the king of France to appear before God on a certain date, and as the story goes, both died at the appointed time.

François I, duke of Brittany, hired assassins to murder his brother in 1450. The dying prince summoned his murderer before the highest of all courts, and François shortly expired. Yet another instance is that of Ferdinand IV of Spain, who was summoned by two nobles whom he had condemned unjustly; he died at the end of 30 days.

Many more examples could be quoted to show how firmly rooted was this belief in the power of the dying to avenge their death by supernatural means. Fear, and possibly remorse, acting on the imagination of the guilty person might well cause him to expire at the stated time, and authenticated accounts of death caused by these agents are not unknown. This conclusion is further borne out by the fact that if the condemned man was guilty—that is, if the judge's conscience was clear—the summons had no effect.

An old story tells of Gonzalo of Cordova (1453–1515), who sentenced a soldier to death for sorcery. The soldier exclaimed that he was innocent and summoned Gonzalo to appear before God. "Go, then," said the judge, "and hasten the proceedings.

My brother who is in heaven, will appear for me." Gonzalo did not die at that time, as he believed he had acted justly and had no fear of the consequences of the summons.

Sundari, T(irunelveli) A(vudaippan) (1934–)

School psychologist who has also taken an active interest in parapsychology. She was born on December 25, 1934, at Dindigul, Madras State, India. She studied at Presidency College, Madras (B.A. psychology, 1956) and Madras University (M.A., 1959). After her graduation she went to work as a psychologist for the Government Girls' Approved School and the Vigilance Home, Madras. Her master's thesis was titled "Experimental Studies in Time Perception," and she has attempted to train subjects in precognition. She has also collected data relating to clairvoyance and telepathy.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Sunderland, La Roy (1804–1885)

Methodist minister, abolitionist, and magnetist. Sunderland was born May 18, 1804, in Exeter, Rhode Island. He was apprenticed to a shoemaker. He became converted to Methodism and became a revivalist preacher at the age of 18. He had a reputation as an orator of great power and was prominent in the temperance and antislavery movement, presiding at the meeting in New York in October 1834 when the first Methodist antislavery society was organized. He was a delegate to the first antislavery convention at Cincinnati in 1841 and the World Convention in London in 1843.

In 1833 he withdrew from the ministry and two years later became one of the founders of Zion's Watchman, the antislavery periodical for the Methodist abolitionists in New England. He edited the tabloid for the next seven years. In 1842 he joined with a number of his socially active colleagues in withdrawing from the Methodist Episcopal Church and founding the Wesleyan Methodist Church. However, at the same time, he was undergoing a crisis of faith. A noted evangelist, he had come to feel that his abilities were a result of hypnotic powers. He had concluded that conversion was a natural, not a supernatural, action. His line of reasoning led him to the conclusion that religion was a fraud.

In 1842 he founded and also edited the Magnet in which he expounded his beliefs in mesmeric power and suggestion. He made a special study of animal magnetism and mesmerism, and in 1843 published Pathetism; With Practical Instructions: Demonstrating the Falsity of the Hitherto Prevalent Assumptions in Regard to What Has Been Called "Mesmerism" and "Neurology," and Illustrating Those Laws Which Induce Somnambulism, Second Sight, Sleep, Dreaming, Trance, and Clairvoyance, with Numerous Facts Tending to Show the Pathology of Monomania, Insanity, Witchcraft, and Various Other Mental or Nervous Phenomena.

He moved on to support Grahamism, an early school of natural diet, and Spiritualism. In 1851, he founded The Spiritual Philosopher, the first Spiritualist periodical in America. A year later, the title changed to The Spirit World. Although in the first issue he criticized the spirit theory and the evidence adduced on its behalf, he quickly became a believer when his own daughter, Margarette Cooper, became a medium. His enthusiasm cooled somewhat in the following year as a result of a hoax played upon him, and he warned his readers against believing that all the phenomena ascribed to spirit intervention had necessarily an extra-mundane cause, as many might be due to unconscious action on the part of the medium.

Sunderland was also an exponent of phrenology. Of special interest is the fact that he sometimes exhibited painless tooth extraction with entranced subjects, and on two occasions even the dentist was hypnotized. Sunderland's ideas were mentioned by James Braid, whose term "hypnotism" eventually won general consent.

In 1868, Sunderland's doubts about spirit phenomena returned, and in his book The Trance and Correlative Phenomena he states that neither mediums nor spirits have ever been able to show where human actions end and the real spiritual begins in phenomena.

In the last years of his life he became an infidel and advocated atheism. He died in Quincy, Massachusetts, on May 15, 1885, reportedly having a happy end in spite of his disbelief in any afterlife.

Sources:

Sunderland, La Roy. "An Appeal on the Subject of Slavery." Zion's Watchman (December 5, 1834).

———. The Book of Human Nature. New York: Stearns, 1853.

———. "Confessions of a Magnitizer" Exposed. Boston: Redding, 1845.

———. Ideology. Boston: J. P. Mendum, 1885–87.

———. Pathetism; With Practical Instructions: Demonstrating the Falsity of the Hitherto Prevalent Assumptions in Regard to What Has Been Called "Mesmerism" and "Neurology," and Illustrating Those Laws Which Induce Somnambulism, Second Sight, Sleep, Dreaming, Trance, and Clairvoyance, with Numerous Facts Tending to Show the Pathology of Monomania, Insanity, Witchcraft, and Various Other Mental or Nervous Phenomena. Boston: White and Potter, 1847.

———. Testimony of God Against Slavery. Boston: D. K. Hitchcock, 1836.

———. The Trance. Chicago: J. Walker, 1868.

Suns Ahman Ishrael—I:A:O: (Organization)

A religious/magic organization drawing upon Mormon traditions. It was founded in 1981 by presiding Patriarch David Asia Israel and four other former members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. The group believes that angels continue to visit and deliver messages to humans, and David Israel claims to receive regular revelations in the form of morning and evening oracles.

Besides the Bible and the Book of Mormon, the Suns Ahman Ishrael (SAI) accepts a wide variety of materials as scripture, including ancient apocryphal writings (Gospel of Thomas, Gospel of Philip, Book of Enoch, writings from Nag Hammadi) and modern Mormon revelations (Oracles of Mohonri, The Order of the Sons of Zadok). The group believes in a secret oral tradition passed from Moses to the Essenes, to the Gnostics, and eventually to Joseph Smith Jr. That tradition is believed to be preserved in mystical books such as the Pistis Sophia and Sepher Yetzira.

A 22-item statement of SAI beliefs posits a heavenly hierarchy consisting of the Heavenly Father and Mother; their son, Jesus Christ; the Holy Spirit; angels and archangels; and ministers of the flame (righteous humans made perfect). Human beings are the literal offspring of the heavenly parents and have come into earthly existence to experience the mystery of mortality. Redemption for humans comes only through surrendering their life to Yeshu-Maria the Christ and subsequently developing a relationship with the heavenly hierarchy in the holy temple ordinances and ritualistic ceremonies. The SAI also follows the Old Testament feasts and holy days.

The SAI is headed by a presiding patriarch and matriarch under whom function (when the organization is at full strength) a first presidency, twelve apostles, seven "arch seventies," and twelve "stake princes." Each stake is headed by twelve high counselmen, a "quorum of seventy," and twelve bishops. The church endorses the practice of polygamy, but also believes in perfect equality of the sexes. Women are accepted into the priesthood on an equal basis with men.

SAI publishes a monthly periodical, Stone Magazine. During the 1980s the group developed an international following in England, Norway, Japan, and the Netherlands. Address: Chevrah B'Qor Community, HC 65, Box 535, Canebeds, AZ 86022.

Superet Light Doctrine Church

The Superet Light Doctrine Church is an international religious movement that developed from the spiritual teachings of its founder, Dr. Josephine De Croix Trust (d. 1957), called Mother Trust within the movement. She is described as a Light Scientist who rediscovered Jesus' religion because of a special gift she had to see the light, vibrations, and aura of Jesus' words. According to Mother Trust, she was able to see auras, or the light emanations that psychics claim to see around all objects, from the age of four. As a teenager she developed tuberculosis, at that time an incurable disease, but she claimed she was healed by Jesus, who appeared to her in a vision. When she was a young woman living in New York City, she gained a reputation as a miracle healer. Important for her future teaching work, she discovered while reading the Bible that Jesus' words, and only Jesus' words, shone with a light.

In a later revelation she was given the secret of the Holy Spirit as the Mother God, a doctrine not previously revealed because males looked upon females as little more than breeders. In addition, the Holy Spirit told her, "This is the new name, Superet, which is the everlasting Fire in God's sacred purple Heart."

The Superet Science taught by Mother Trust is the manifestation of God's light through our light atom aura. All substances that possess magnetism, especially all life, have an aura. As an aura scientist, Mother Trust was able to see both the inner (light of the soul) and outer aura. We produce the light atom aura, which is capable of receiving God's light, by developing our inner soul aura. We can then use that light for healing and to become successful in life.

The Superet Light doctrine is presented in the more than 25 books written by Mother Trust and in several sets of lessons. Mother Trust also founded the Prince of Peace Movement, an interreligious peace movement, on Christmas Day 1938 in Bethlehem, the site of the Nativity.

The church has congregations in the United States, Canada, Mexico, Panama, and Nigeria. It issues the biennial Newsletter of the Superet Brotherhood and Sisterhood. There are Prince of Peace clubs in the United States, Nigeria, Panama, Mexico, Trinidad, and the Bahamas. It is headquartered at 2516 W. Third St., Los Angeles, CA 90057.

Sources:

Miracle Woman's Secrets. Los Angeles: Superet Press, 1949.

Superet Light Doctrine Ministry. Los Angeles: Superet Press, 1947.

Trust, Josephine C. Bible Mystery by Superet Light Science. Los Angeles: Superet Press, 1950.

———. Superet Light. Los Angeles: Superet Light Center, 1953.

———. Superet Light Doctrine. Los Angeles: Superet Press, 1949.

Super-Extrasensory Perception

Term used by parapsychologists for the hypothesis that some individuals may have unlimited powers of acquiring information from living persons or objects, thus making the conventional Spiritualist explanation of discarnate entities unnecessary.

Supernatural

An occurrence in violation of the known laws of nature. This was a concept that developed as the idea of a law-abiding nature was developed in the Middle Ages. The supernatural realm included both the heavenly world of God and the angels and the world of Satan and demons.

Many leaders of the Enlightenment of the eighteenth century were exponents of Deism, a view that drew a sharp line between the natural and supernatural realms and denied that the two interact. Spiritualism reacted to such a view: it suggested that phenomena that had previously been viewed as supernatural actually happened, and it also suggested that they occurred in accordance with natural laws, laws as yet unknown or undefined by science.

Now, the term "paranormal" is more generally used to describe such extraordinary phenomena.

Supernormal

A term substituted in psychical research for "supernatural." It was coined by F. W. H. Myers and is applied to phenomena that are beyond what usually happens—beyond, that is, in the sense of suggesting unknown physical laws. While supernormal phenomena point to new powers, abnormal phenomena indicate the degeneration of powers already acquired. The term "paranormal" is now preferred.

Supersensonics

Term devised by New Age teacher Christopher Hills to indicate a science of subtle energy therapeutics, involving radiesthesia, radionics, homeopathy, Bach flower remedies, and related fields.

Supreme Council of the Independent Associated Spiritualists

Founded in 1925 as a federation of churches and groups of churches concerned with Spiritualism. It participated in research on psychic phenomena, psychic photography, and spiritual healing. It was affiliated with Duke Research Foundation. Last known address: 7230 Fourth St. North, #2304, St. Petersburg, FL 33702.

Survival

The continued possession of personality after the change called death. It is a fundamental doctrine of Spiritualism that Spiritualist phenomena demonstrate survival, and the investigation of that phenomena has been a major aspect of psychical research. The emergence of parapsychology represented, in part, a distinct reorientation of priorities away from survival research.

The basis of survival is the contention that mind can exist independently of the brain, that thought is not the result of changes in the brain, but that these changes (as William James suggested in his book Human Immortality, 1903) merely coincide with the flow of thought through it. The brain fulfills the role of an instrument of transmission. Thought transference and experiments in telepathy furnished the first scientific support of this contention.

The trance communications received through the mediumship of Leonora Piper convinced many famous skeptical investigators that the communicators had survived the change of death. Even Eleanor Sidgwick admitted in her brilliant but extremely skeptical study of Piper's phenomena: "Veridical communications are received, some of which, there is good reason to believe, come from the dead, and therefore imply a genuine communicator in the background." (Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, vol. 28, December 1915, p. 204.)

The arguments for and against survival are mainly centered around the evidential value of such communications. The first and most powerful point of attack is made on the subconscious front. The communicating personality is said to be artificial, a masquerading secondary self, and that supernormal information lies occasionally within the bounds of acquisition of the subconscious mind.

It is also pointed out that many of the communications are erroneous, of a lying nature, uncharacteristic of the dead, and easily obtainable by fraudulent means.

Those who argue for survival deny the sufficiency of subconscious powers as an explanation for communications, pointing to the distinct personalities of the communicators, their greatly differing abilities to communicate, their recognition of old friends, their behavior, temper, memories, and ability to give information outside the mind of everybody present and perhaps of everybody living.

They also point out the inconsistency of the telepathic theory in that it gradually leads to the supposition of a cosmic mind that is tapped by the telepathist, forming thereby a more far-reaching and less justified theory than individual survival. As evidence against telepathy, the results of some cross-correspondences and book (and newspaper) tests are quoted.

Philosophic speculation has often supported the concept of survival. P. G. Tait and Balfour Stewart posit in their book, The Unseen Universe (1875), that the main realities of the universe are not in matter at all, but in the ether of space. Although the concept of the ether has since been refuted, the enigma of the relationship between matter and consciousness remains, and it is feasible that consciousness continues to survive the death and disintegrating changes of the physical body. This implies that consciousness is a superior system to matter.

According to Sir Oliver Lodge, "the marvel is that we are associated with matter at all . . . I used to say that death was an adventure to which we might look forward. So it is; but I believe that really and truly it is earth-life that is the adventure. It is this earth-life that has been the strange and exceptional thing. The wonder is that we ever succeeded in entering a matter body at all. Many fail." (Phantom Walls, 1929). In the same book he also considers the possibility of grades of survival, stating:

"Now survival only applies to things that really exist. If there is no individuality, then there is nothing to persist. Whether all human beings have sufficient personality to make their individual persistence likely is a question that may be argued. Whether some of the higher animals have acquired a kind of individuality, a character and wealth of affection which seem worthy of continued existence, may also be argued. There may be many grades of personality, and accordingly there may be many grades of survival."

The subjective experience of out-of-the-body travel or astral projection is often cited as presumptive evidence that the personality can exist independently of the body.

Sources:

Baird, Alexander T. One Hundred Cases for Survival After Death. New York: Bernard Ackerman, 1944.

Beard, Paul. Survival of Death: For and Against. London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1966.

Broad, C. D. Personal Identity and Survival. London: Society for Psychical Research, 1968.

Crookall, Robert. Case-Book of Astral Projection, 545–746. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1972.

Ducasse, C. J. A Critical Examination of the Belief in a Life After Death. Springfield, Ill.: Charles C. Thomas, 1961.

Garrett, Eileen J., ed. Does Man Survive Death?: A Symposium. New York: Helix Press, 1957.

Hart, Hornell. The Enigma of Survival: The Case For and Against an After Life. Springfield, Ill.: Charles C. Thomas, 1959.

Jacobson, Nils Olof. Life Without Death?: On Parapsychology, Mysticism and the Question of Survival. New York: Delacorte Press, 1973. Reprint, London: Turnstone Books, 1974.

Myers, F. H. Human Personality and its Survival of Bodily Death. 2 vols. London: Longmans, Green, 1903. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1975.

Rogo, D. Scott. Welcoming Silence: A Study of Psychical Phenomena and Survival of Death. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1973.

Salter, W. H. Zoar; or, The Evidence of Psychical Research Concerning Survival. London: Sidgwick & Jackson, 1961.

Saltmarsh, H. F. Evidence of Personal Survival From Cross Correspondences. London: G. Bell, 1939.

Smith, Susy. Life is Forever: Evidence for Survival After Death. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1974.

Survival Joint Research Committee Trust

British organization founded in 1963, "exclusively concerned with survival of human personality after bodily death." In November 1987, the trust held a one-day E. J. Dingwall Memorial Conference on "Science and Survival." The trust meets regularly to discuss experimental design and conduct experiments, and may be contacted at 47 Mayfield Rd., Hornsey, London, N8 9LL, England.

The Survival League

British organization founded in London by Mrs. C. A. Dawson Scott in October 1929 to affirm the unity of all religions and spread the knowledge of the scientific demonstrability of survival after death. The first chairman was Spiritualist author H. Dennis Bradley. The Survival League of America was an affiliated organization. The league published Survival Magazine. The organization did not survive World War II.

Survival Research Foundation

Incorporated in 1971 by author and psychical researcher Susy Smith and attorney Frank C. Tribbe, a long-time leader in the Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship. The foundation engaged in scientific research into anomalous phenomena that lie outside the traditional disciplines of science.

The foundation works in the field of end of life care and support as well as develops protocols designed to communicate with comatose patients to determine their wishes with respect to the withdrawal or withholding of life support. The foundation also promotes a cipher test devised by Arthur S. Berger to help lessen grief during the bereavement process.

The foundation may be reached c/o the current president, Arthur Burger, P.O. Box 63-0026, Miami, Florida 33163-0026.

Swaffer, Hannen (1879–1962)

Journalist, drama critic, author, and publicist for Spiritualism. He was born on November 1, 1879, in Lindfield, Sussex, England, and was educated at Stroud Green Grammar School. The family moved to London, where young Swaffer discovered that his neighbor was a journalist; he immediately decided that this would be his profession. Many years later, that neighbor worked for Swaffer on the Weekly Dispatch.

Swaffer joined the Daily Mail in 1902 and spent a number of years working under Lord Northcliffe, becoming, in succession, news editor, art editor, night editor, and assistant editor of the Daily Mirror. He originated a gossip column in the Daily Sketch that was soon extensively copied by other newspapers. He also worked on the Daily Herald and was drama critic for the Daily Express. He was editor of the Weekly Dispatch, and later he was editor of The People. For many years, "Swaff" was a familiar and eccentric figure in London's Fleet Street, center of the national newspaper offices. He affected somewhat Bohemian dress, as befitted a drama critic, and was popularly known as "The Poet."

He became convinced of survival in 1924, through attending direct voice sittings with the medium Gladys Osborne Leonard in the circle of H. Dennis Bradley. These sittings were strongly evidential of the survival of Swaffer's old chief Lord Northcliffe, who had died in 1922. Swaffer published accounts of the séances in The People and created a sensation with his book Northcliffe's Return (1924).

He became an indefatigable propagandist for Spiritualism, and argued that Spiritualism and socialism were two halves of one great whole. He succeeded Sir Arthur Conan Doyle as honorary president of the Spiritualists' National Union and the Spiritualist Community, and he was connected with other Spiritualist organizations.

In 1932, Swaffer was one of the three cofounders of the well-known British newspaper Psychic News—the other two were his accountant Jack Rubens and his friend Maurice Barbanell (who was editor for many years). He died January 16, 1962.

Sources:

Driburg, Tom. "Swaff": The Life and Times of Hannen Swaffer. London: Macdonald, 1974.

Swaffer, Hannen. Adventures with Inspiration. N.p., 1929.

———. Behind the Scenes. N.p., 1928.

———. Hannen Swaffer's Who's Who. London: Hutchinson, 1929.

———. Norcliffe's Return. London: Hutchinson, 1925.

———. Studies in Psychology. N.p., 1933.

Swain, Marcia M. (1819–1900)

Voice medium of a rescue circle in Buffalo from 1875 to 1900 under the direction of Leander Fisher, a music teacher and medium. Daniel E. Bailey, a wealthy man, took interest in the work and at his death made provision for the support of Swain for the rest of her life. She was never a public medium and did not give séances for money. The activity of the rescue circle was largely devoted to making the dead realize their true condition.

Sources:

Bailey, D. E. Thoughts from the Inner Life. Boston, 1886.

Swaminarayan, Shree (1781–1830)

Famous saint of nineteenth-century India, born as Nilakantha at Capaiya, near Ayodhya. He developed a revised form of the traditional Vishishadvaita Vedanta of Shree Ramanujan and traveled all over India for 30 years with his disciples, initiating a religious revival that had an impact upon the masses in Gujarat, Saurashtra, and Kutch. The movement eradicated violence, drunkenness, and lawlessness among those who responded to it and attracted favorable notice from both the Christian bishop Heber and the British rulers.

Shree Swaminarayan performed miracles and was accepted by his followers as an incarnation of the Divine, the first of a succession of such incarnations, of which His Holiness Shree Pramukh Swami is the current living representative. Modern followers of Shree Swaminarayan number hundreds of thousands, and prior to the expulsion of Asians from Uganda, this faith was widespread among Indian people throughout East Africa. The Swaminarayan faith has a popular following in Great Britain and North America among Asian immigrants.

Sources:

Dave, H. T. Life and Philosophy of Shree Swaminarayan, 1781–1830. London: Allen & Unwin, 1974.

Swann, Ingo (1933–   )

Prominent American psychic research subject, parapsychologist, and author. Born September 14, 1933, at Telluride, Colorado, he studied at Westminster College, Salt Lake City, Utah, receiving a double bachelor's degree in biology and art. He enlisted in the U.S. Army and served three years in Korea, after which he worked for twelve years at the United Nations Secretariat while pursuing an independent art career.

Swann's active participation in parapsychology research began in 1969 when he was 36 years old. During the next twenty years he worked only in controlled laboratory settings with scientific researchers. Although he lectured widely on the importance of psychic faculties and potentials, he has never publicly demonstrated his abilities. Because of his participation in hundreds of thousands of experimental trials, author Martin Ebon wrote of him as "parapsychology's most tested guinea pig," and Psychic News and other media often refer to him as "the scientific psychic."

During the 1950s and 1960s, because of psychic potentials partly evident in childhood, he became actively interested in occult and parapsychological literature and in a variety of novel mind-development programs which took positive approaches to the enhancement of ESP potentials.

Swann early distinguished between psychic phenomenon and psychic mind-dynamic processes. He especially noticed that while parapsychology researched the existence of paranormal phenomena (such as ESP, telepathy, and psychokinesis), there was little interest in the mental processes involved in producing evidence of them. From this distinction he slowly developed unique theoretical approaches to process enhancement of psi perceptions, which was in keeping with ancient descriptions of Siddhis as found in various Eastern Yoga literature and Abraham Maslow's developmental abilitism theories.

In 1970–71 Swann experimented with Cleve Backster in attempting to influence plants by mental activity. In 1971–72 psychokinetic experiments involved successfully influencing temperature recorded in a controlled setting devised by parapsychologists Gertrude Schmeidler and Larry Lewis at City College, New York. This involved PK effects upon target thermistors (temperature measuring devices) in insulated thermos bottles at a distance of 25 feet from Swann. (For a report, see G. R. Schmeidler, "PK Effects Upon Continuously Recorded Temperature," Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research, no. 4, Oct. 1973).

Swann was also the subject of experiments in out-of-the-body travel, or psychic perception at a distance. These took place during 1971–73 at the American Society for Psychical Research. They involved Swann sitting in a chair and attempting to project his consciousness into sealed boxes on a small platform several feet above his head, in which there was a target symbol completely shielded from view. Swann was monitored by electrodes that would have recorded any movement from the chair.

Under these difficult laboratory conditions, Swann nevertheless scored significant successes in describing the targets. In one test he was actually able to state correctly that a light that should have illuminated the target was inoperative. There was no normal way of ascertaining this fact without opening the box.

In 1972–73, at the American Society for Psychical Research, Swann began suggesting experimental protocols to test for the existence of mind-dynamic processes that would enhance ESP perceptions. Together with Dr. Karlis Osis, Dr. Janet Mitchell, and Dr. Gertrude Schmeidler, he coined the term "remote viewing" to describe the experiments in which subjects attempted to view targets at a far distance. His original remote-viewing protocols were later utilized and expanded upon in collaboration with the researchers Dr. Harold E. Puthoff and Russell Targ. Other laboratories ultimately repeated various kinds of remote-viewing experiments.

Swann's successes on the East Coast attracted the attention of the quantum physicist, H. E. Puthoff, at the Stanford Research Institute, in Menlo Park, California (later renamed SRI International). From late 1973 until 1989 Swann worked principally at SRI's "psychoenergetics project" established by Puthoff to examine important psi faculties (rather than psychic phenomena per se).

One of the first most remarkable experiments involved a successful attempt to influence the stable magnetic field of a super-cooled Josephson junction inside a quark detector (a complex apparatus designed to detect subatomic particles). The apparatus was completely inaccessible, being encased in aluminum and copper containers and buried in five feet of concrete. When Swann mentally visualized the hidden target, significant variations were recorded in sine waves. This PK effect was reported at a conference on quantum physics and parapsychology.

On April 27, 1973, in another extraordinary experiment, Swann "visited" the planet Jupiter in a joint "psychic probe" shared by fellow psychic Harold Sherman. Swann's drawings made during the experiment showed a 'ring' of tiny asteroids around the planet which scientists at the time said did not exist. The existence of the ring was later scientifically confirmed in 1979.

From the first experiments, Swann was increasingly considered a very unique test subject because, at the command of the experimenters, he could reproduce and sustain the desired effects over time at a significant rate of success. Throughout the history of parapsychology, other test subjects had been temporarily or spontaneously successful. But these subjects typically suffered from the well-known "decline effect" or "psi-missing effect" which statistically erased the successes, and thus permitted skeptics to believe that the successes were due to some outside factor other than claimed human psi abilities.

Most books and articles written after 1973 about parapsychology and psychic matters refer to Swann's work in some way. Many analysts of science and parapsychology generally concede that his work and the high levels of official sponsorship it obtained gradually influenced positive reevaluations of the validity of psi in human experiencing.

After nineteen years on the cutting edge of psi developments, the "longest run" of any subject on record, Swann retired from full-time research to undertake independent research into the problems and states of consciousness. In final interviews regarding the dimensions of his past work, he stated that the long-term stresses of laboratory work and the constant need to defend the validity of psi faculties and exceptional experiencing had taken their toll. He occasionally accepts invitations to lecture but refuses to talk with the media. In a paper read at the United Nations in March 1994 (entitled "Scientists find the basis for seventeen-plus human senses and perceptions"), he stated that psi faculties and exceptional experiencing are not purely scientific issues. Their discovery and development involve larger social, philosophical, political, and religious problems not amenable to objective research and rational appreciation.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Puthoff, H. E., and Russell Targ. "Physics, Entrophy, and Psychokinesis." In Proceedings of the Conference on Quantum Physics and Parapsychology, Geneva, August 26–27, 1974. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1975.

Schmeidler, Gertrude R. "PK Effects Upon Continuously Recorded Temperature." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 4 (October 1973).

Swann, Ingo. Cosmic Art. New York: Hawthorn Books, 1975.

———. Natural ESP: A Layman's Guide to Unlocking the Extra Sensory Power of Your Mind. New York: Bantam, 1987.

———. To Kiss Earth Goody-bye. New York: Hawthorn Books, 1974. Reprint, New York: Laurel/Dell, 1975.

———. Star Fire. New York: Dell, 1978.

———. Your Nostradamus Factor: Accessing Your Innate Ability to See into the Future. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1993.

Swann, William F(rancis) G(ray) (1884–1962)

Physicist and educator who wrote on parapsychology. He was born on August 29, 1884, at Ironbridge, Shropshire, England. He studied at the Royal College of Science, London; University College; King's College; the University of London; and City and Guilds of London Institute. Swann was an authority on cosmic radiation and atomic structure and was head of the Bartol Research Foundation of Franklin Institute at Swarthmore for 32 years. He had previously taught at the Royal College of Science, London and at the University of Sheffield.

Early in his career he was successively employed as the head of the physical division of the Department of Terrestrial Magnetism at the Carnegie Institute, Washington, D.C.; the University of Minnesota (1918–23); the University of Chicago (1923–24); and Yale University (1924–27). His interest in parapsychology was by way of physics and philosophy. He died January 29, 1962, in Swarthmore, Pennsylvania.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Swann, William F. G. "Is the Universe Planned?" Journal of the Franklin Institute (May 1953).

———. "The Known and the Unknown." Journal of the Franklin Institute (May 1955).

———. "Nature and the Mind of Man." Journal of the Franklin Institute (June 1956).

———. "Reality, Imagery and Fantasy." Journal of the Franklin Institute (May 1957).

———. "The Science of Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow." Journal of the Franklin Institute (March 1960).

Swastika

One of the most important and widespread symbols in ancient religion, mysticism, and magic is the swastika or tetraskelion. Essentially, it is a Greek cross with arms of equal length, each with four arms at right angles, either right-handed (regarded as a male symbol implying good fortune) or left-handed (female symbol). The right-handed form is sometimes known as gammadion, i.e., formed from joining four gamma letters.

The swastika is generally regarded as a symbol of the power of the sun, and it may have been derived from a circle divided into four by crossed lines. A variation of the swastika is the Triskele ("three-legged") form, often found on Sicilian coins and used as the emblem of the Isle of Man off the coast of Britain.

The swastika dates back to the Neolithic Age, when it was engraved on stone implements, but it has also been found in many cultures—in ancient Britain, Ireland, Mycenae, and Gascony, as well as among the Etruscans, Celts, Hindus, Germanic peoples, Central Asians, and pre-Columbian Americans. The Buddhists regarded it as a chakra or wheel of the law; the Tibetans called it Yun-drun or path of life. The swastika has traveled from the ancient Greek cities of Troy and Mycenae down to the 9th century in Ireland, as well as to Persia, China, North Africa, and Scandinavia.

Some authorities have interpreted the swastika as a symbol of the deity during the Iron Age, and others have associated it with agriculture, compass points, and the origin of the universe. No doubt this universally diffused symbol has acquired many secondary associations in addition to its main association with the sun wheel.

The name "swastika" derives from a long-established use in India, where the expression Su-asti means "Be well," implying auspiciousness and good fortune. Hindu parents mark the symbol on the breast and forehead of a baby, and a swastika formed of ears of wheat is made in the birth chamber. Hindu writers often place a red swastika at the beginning and end of manuscripts; the sign is also marked on floors and paths at weddings. There is a hatha yoga sitting position known as "Swatikasana" or the auspicious posture, in which the legs are crossed and the feet rest on opposite thighs.

The use of the swastika as a Nazi symbol may have derived from German scholarship in the field of Hindu folklore and religion, distorted by such pseudo-mystical occultists as Guido von List, who originated theories of Germanic and Nordic folklore as early as the 1870s. According to List, the swastika was the symbol of a secret band of initiates called the Armanen or "children of the sun," who flourished in ancient times.

It may also have been reputable scholarly discussions of the Indo-European migrations of ancient peoples and cultures that were perverted to the antisemitic doctrine of an Aryan masterrace. Before World War I, the use of the swastika symbol was popular among romantic youth folklore movements like the Wandervögel. It was continued by political revolutionaries who had been Wandervögel members and by Hitler's National Socialist German Workers' Party in the post-war period.

The Nazi swastika was designed by Friedrich Krohn, formerly a member of the Germanen Order, a secret order founded by followers of Guido von List. Krohn's design was adopted around 1920. Ever since, this ancient Hindu sacred symbol of auspiciousness has become inextricably associated with the perverse doctrines of the German Nazis.

Swawm

Burmese vampires. (See also Myanmar)

SWEDEN

Witchcraft

In 1649, Queen Christina banned witch trials, stating that witchcraft confessions of women were due to illusions or disorders of health. However, there was an extraordinary outbreak of witchcraft hysteria between 1669 and 1670 at Mora, in Dalecarlia, resulting in the burning of 85 individuals accused of transporting no fewer than 300 children by magical flights to a witches' sabbat on the island of Blockula.

On July 5, 1668, the pastor of Elfdale in Dalecarlia stated that Gertrude Svensen, aged 18, had been accused by Eric Ericsen, aged 15, of stealing children for the devil. There followed similar charges. Then in May 1669, King Charles XI appointed a commission to look into the matter and attempt to redeem the accused by prayers rather than punishment or torture. However, the prayers resulted in mass hysteria among the 3,000 people who had assembled. The commissioners claimed to have discovered 70 adult witches, who were all burned, together with 15 children. Lesser sentences were given to 56 other children who were punished by having to run a gauntlet or be lashed with rods.

The witches were said to have carried the children on goats, sticks, and the backs of sleeping men, even flying through windows. One writer recorded that "being asked how they could go with their Bodies through Chimneys and broken panes of Glass, they said, that the Devil did first remove all that might hinder them in their flight, and so they had room enough to go." They assembled for their sabbat in a large meadow, where they feasted, danced, and performed diabolical rituals.

Commenting on the affair, Bishop Francis Hutchinson states in his book An Historical Essay Concerning Witchcraft (1718):

"Is it not plain that the people had frightened their children with so many tales, that they could not sleep without dreaming of the devil, and then made the poor women of the town confess what the children said of them."

Other witchcraft persecutions followed, and between 1674 and 1675, individuals were burned or beheaded in three parishes. There was also a witchcraft mania in Stockholm in following years, but when it was discovered that accusations were due to the malice or greed of young informers, Charles XI once again prohibited witchcraft prosecutions.

Spiritualism and Psychical Research

Spiritualism entered Sweden at the end of the nineteenth century and progressed slowly. In the decades following World War I, there was a general apathy, and in some areas a marked hostility to Spiritualism, fortune-telling, and psychic matters.

On March 14, 1931, a bill was presented to the Swedish Parliament with the intention both of regularizing mediumship and legitimizing psychical research. It did not succeed and Spiritualism was still actively discouraged. However, there was a revival of interest after World War II.

In spite of the hostility to psychical research, the Sällskapet för Parapsykologisk Forskning was established in Stockholm after World War II. It has carried out valuable experimental work. Gosta Rodhe, the president, has now been succeeded by Rolf Evjegärd. The former secretary, Eva Hellström, well known as a clairvoyant, was succeeded by Eric Uggla. The society maintains a good research library, has organized lectures and meetings, and has carried out research in psychometry and precognition. Another important experimenter was Haakon Forwald (1897–1978) of Ludvika, who in the 1950s began research in psychokinesis. More recently, a branch of the Churches' Fellowship for Psychic and Spiritualist Studies was organized, and may be reached c/o Mrs. Eva Lejam, St. Sodergatan 17, Lund.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Robbins, Rossell Hope. The Encyclopedia of Witchcraft and Demonology. New York: Crown Publishers, 1959.

Swedenborg, Emanuel (1688–1772)

Swedish seer. He was trained as a scientist and became the country's leading expert in mining and metallurgy. He was also a military engineer, learned astronomer, reputed physicist, zoologist, anatomist, financier, political economist, and biblical student.

He was born January 29, 1688, at Stockholm, son of a professor of theology at Upsala, afterward bishop of Scara. Swedenborg graduated from Upsala University in 1710 and then traveled in England, Holland, France, and Germany, studying natural philosophy. He studied and was influenced by the work of the most famous mathematicians and physicians—Sir Isaac Newton, Flamsteed, Halley, and De Lahire. He made sketches of inventions as varied as a flying machine, a submarine, a rapid-fire gun, an air pump, and a fire engine. He wrote many poems in Latin, and when after five years of study he returned to Sweden, he was appointed assessor of the Royal College of Mines.

Originally known as Swedberg, nobility was bestowed upon him by Queen Ulrica, and he changed his name to Swedenborg. He sat in the House of Nobles, his political utterances having great weight, but his tendencies were distinctly democratic. He busied himself privately in scientific gropings for the explanation of the universe. He published at least two works dealing with cosmology remembered primarily as foreshadowing many scientific facts and ventures of the future. His theories regarding light, cosmic atoms, geology, and physics were distinctly ahead of their time.

In 1734 he published Prodomus Philosophie Ratiocinantrio de Infinite, about the relation of the finite to the infinite and of the soul to the body. In this work he sought to establish a definite connection between the two as a means of overcoming the difficulty of their relationship. The spiritual and the divine appeared to him as the supreme study of man. He searched the countries of Europe for the most eminent teachers and the best books dealing with anatomy, for he considered that science the locus of the germ of the knowledge of soul and spirit. Through his anatomical studies he anticipated certain modern views dealing with the functions of the brain.

At the height of his scientific career he resigned his office to devote the rest of his life to spreading spiritual enlightenment, for which he believed himself to have been specially selected by God. He showed signs of psychic power as a child. Even at an early age he could cease breathing for a considerable period and freely enter an altered state of consciousness, possibly trance. In his book Dreams of a Spirit Seer philosopher Immanuel Kant narrates several paranormal experiences from Swedenborg's early life. He had gifts of clairvoyance. Kant also investigated and reported as authentic the story that in Gothenburg Swedenborg observed and reported a fire that was raging in Stockholm, 300 miles away.

Swedenborg's real illumination and intercourse with the spiritual world in visions and dreams began in April 1744. He claimed that in a waking state his consciousness wandered in the spirit world and conversed with its inhabitants as freely as with living men.

In later experiences he heard wonderful conversations and sensed the eyes of his spirit were so opened that he could see heavens and hells and converse with angels and spirits. He claimed that God revealed himself to him and told him that he had chosen him to unveil the spiritual sense of the whole Scriptures to man. From that moment, according to Swedenborg, he eschewed worldly knowledge and worked for spiritual ends alone. Through the next three decades, he lived in Sweden, Holland, and London.

After initially reviewing his knowledge of the Hebrew language, Swedenborg began his great works on the interpretation of the Scriptures, which were to dominate the rest of his life. A man of few wants, his life was simplicity itself, his food consisting for the most part of bread, milk, and coffee. He was in the habit of lying in a trance for days, and day and night seemed to have no distinction for him. He regularly conversed with angels in broad daylight, he said. At other times, his wrestlings with evil spirits so terrified his servants that they would seek refuge in the most distant part of the house.

Swedenborg speaks of the nature of his visions and communications with the angels and spirits in his book Heaven and Hell:

"Angels speak from the spiritual world, according to inward thought; from wisdom, their speech flows in a tranquil stream, gently and uninterruptedly—they speak only in vowels, the heavenly angels in A and O, the spiritual ones in E and I, for the vowels give tone to the speech, and by the tone the emotion is expressed; the interruptions, on the other hand, correspond with creations of the mind; therefore we prefer, if the subject is lofty, for instance of heaven or God, even in human speech, the vowels U and O, etc. Man, however, is united with heaven by means of the word, and forms thus the link between heaven and earth, between the divine and the natural.

"But when angels speak spiritually with me from heaven, they speak just as intelligently as the man by my side. But if they turn away from man, he hears nothing more whatever, even if they speak close to his ear. It is also remarkable that several angels can speak to a man; they send down a spirit inclined to man, and he thus hears them united."

From his ongoing conversations with the angelic beings, he wrote a number of books. These may be divided into expository books, notably The Apocalypse Revealed, The Apocalypse Explained, and Arcana Celestia; books of spiritual philosophy, such as Intercourse between the Soul and the Body, Divine Providence and Divine Love and Wisdom; books dealing with the hierarchy of supernatural spheres, such as Heaven and Hell and The Last Judgment; and books outlining the teachings of the new church, such as The New Jerusalem, The True Christian Religion, and Canons of the New Church.

Of these works, his Divine Love and Wisdom most succinctly presents his entire religious system. God he regarded as the divine man. Spiritually God consists of infinite love, and corporeally of infinite wisdom. From the divine love, all things draw nourishment. The sun, as we know it, is merely a microcosm of a spiritual sun emanating from the creator. This spiritual sun is the source of nature; but whereas the first is alive, the second is inanimate. There is no connection between the two worlds of nature and spirit unless in similarity of construction. The causes of all things exist in the spiritual sphere and their effects in the natural sphere, and the purpose of all creation is that man may become the image of his creator, and of the cosmos as a whole.

Swedenborg believed that man possesses two vessels or receptacles for the containment of God—the will for divine love, and the understanding for divine wisdom. Before the Fall, the flow of these virtues into the human spirit was perfect, but through the intervention of the forces of evil, and the sins of man himself, it was interrupted. Seeking to restore the connection between himself and man, God came into the world as Man, for if he had ventured on Earth in his unveiled splendor, he would have destroyed the hells through which it was necessary for him to proceed to redeem man, and this he did not wish to do, merely to conquer them.

The unity of God is an essential of Swedenborgian theology, and Swedenborg thoroughly believed that God did not return to his own place without leaving behind him a visible representative of himself in the word of Scripture, which is an eternal tripartite incarnation—natural, spiritual, and celestial. Of this Swedenborg was the apostle. Nothing seemed hidden from him; he claimed to be aware of the appearance and conditions of other worlds, good and evil, heaven and hell, and of the planets. "The life of religion," he stated, "is to accomplish good. . . . The kingdom of heaven is a kingdom of uses."

Central to understanding his system is the doctrine of correspondences. There are two realms of created existence, the spiritual, which is real and substantial, and the physical, a mere reflection of the spiritual, according to this doctrine. Everything visible, Swedenborg argued, is the shadow of an appropriate spiritual reality. Between the two realms is an exact correspondence.

The work of explaining the correspondences, said Swedenborg, begins with the Scriptures; hence the prodigious amount of time he devoted to his voluminous Scripture commentaries.

Swedenborg died in London on March 29, 1772, at Prince's Square, in the parish of St. George's in East London, on the very day he had earlier predicted in a letter to Methodist leader John Wesley, who had sought an audience with him. In April 1908 his bones were removed, at the request of the Swedish government, for reburial in Stockholm.

Swedenborg wrote at a time when heretical ideas were taken seriously by state and church officials. To avoid any sanctions for his increasingly divergent ideas he initially published his works without his name. It was not until 1760, with the publication of the Treatise on Four Doctrines, that his authorship was acknowledged on the title page. Also, he wrote in Latin and argued that he was writing for the intelligentsia and church leadership and had no intention that his new approach would have a following until judged by his colleagues. Nevertheless, in his later years he found it convenient to reside outside his native land.

In England Swedenborg's ideas found some popular support, and beginning in the 1770s his major works were translated. The Church of the New Jerusalem was founded there in 1774, moving to the United States in 1792 soon after the Revolution.

Sources:

Sigstedt, C. O. The Swedenborg Epic: The Life and Works of Emanuel Swedenborg. New York: Bookman Associates, 1952. Reprint, London: Swedenborg Society, 1981.

Swedenborg, Emanuel. Arcana Coelestia. 12 vols. New York: Swedenborg Foundation, 1905–1910.

———. Heaven and Hell. New York: Swedenborg Foundation, 1979.

———. The New Jerusalem and Its Heavenly Doctrine. London: Swedenborg Society, 1938.

———. On the Divine Love and on the Divine Wisdom. London: Swedenborg Society, 1963.

———. The True Christian Religion. London: Swedenborg Society, 1950.

Woofenden, William Ross. Swedenborg Researcher's Manual. Bryn Athyn, Pa.: Swedenborg Scientific Association, 1988.

Swedenborg Foundation Newsletter See Logos

Swedenborg Society

Founded in London, England, in 1810 to translate, print, and publish the works of Emanuel Swedenborg (1688–1772). The society organizes meetings and conferences and assists the needs of the New Church, which has grown up around Swedenborg's teachings, by keeping Swedenborg's writings in print. The society maintains a reference and lending library, with a reading room, at the London headquarters, 20 Bloomsbury Way, London, WC1A 2TH. Website: http://www.swedenborg.org.uk.

SWITZERLAND

[For material on ancient Switzerland, see the entry on the Teutons.]

Witchcraft and Demonology

Switzerland was by no means free from the witchcraft manias of Europe. About the year 1400, there were secular trials of people accused of sorcery, malevolent magic, in the Alps region now constituting southern and western Switzerland. During the same period, the Inquisition was pursuing heretics in neighboring valleys. One of the most active secular judges was Peter of Berne (Peter von Freyerz) in Simmenthal. Jeannette Charles was arrested as a sorceress in Geneva in 1401, and after torture she admitted evoking the devil. In Basel, in 1407, various women from well-to-do families were prosecuted for alleged sorcery in love affairs. In 1423, at Nieder-Hauenstein, near Basel, an alleged witch was condemned after a peasant testified that she had ridden on a wolf.

In the Valais area in 1428, the Bishop of Sion headed early systematic persecutions involving torture by secular authorities. Some 200 alleged witches were burned. There were many more tortures and burnings throughout the fifteenth century.

The records of the judge Peter of Berne tell of a witch named Staedelin in Boltingen (Lausanne) who confessed after torture to killing seven unborn babies in one house and preventing births in cattle. Also in Lausanne, certain witches were said to have cooked and eaten their own children, and 13 children were said to have been devoured by witches in Berne. Witches confessed to killing unbaptized children and afterwards digging up the remains and boiling them, making a transmutation ointment from the flesh.

Jakob Sprenger (1436–1495), co-author with Heinrich Kramer of the infamous Malleus Maleficarum, published in the 1480s, was born in Basel (part of German-speaking Switzerland), where he grew up in a Dominican house. While his main work was in Germany, after he was established at the University of Cologne, and his writings became the handbook of the great European witchcraft persecutions, some of which occurred in Switzerland.

The Protestant movement begun in Zürich by Ulrich Zwingli (1484–1531) did not slow the prosecution of witchcraft in Switzerland, indeed, some of the Zwinglians were active propagators of the cause. Typical of such attitudes was the book Magiologia by Bartholomäus Anhorn (Basel, 1674) which endorsed the demonology of M. A. Del Rio and others. The last legally executed witch in Switzerland appears to have been Anna Göldi, who was hanged in the Protestant canton of Glarus in 1782.

Demonic Possession

A remnant of the witchcraft persecutions appeared in the nineteenth century in the form of an extraordinary outbreak of paranoia over possible demonic possession. This took place in the parish of Morzine, a beautiful valley of the Savoy near Lake Geneva, during 1860. [The following account is drawn from reports in the Cornhill Magazine, London daily journals, the Revue Spirite and an article by William Howitt titled 'The Devils of Morzine.'] Morzine was quite remote, and was seldom visited by tourists before 1860. Being shut in by high mountains, and inhabited by a simple, industrious, and pious peasantry, Morzine might have appeared to a casual visitor the very center of health, peace, and good order.

The first appearance of an abnormal visitation was the conduct of a young girl, who, once quiet, modest, and well-conducted, suddenly began to exhibit what her distressed family and friends supposed to be the symptoms of insanity. She ran about in the most singular and aimless way, climbed high trees, scaled walls, and was found perched on roofs and cornices that it seemed impossible for any creature but a squirrel to reach. She soon became wholly intractable, was given to fits of hysteria, violent laughter, passionate weeping, and general aberration from her customary modest behavior.

While her parents were anxiously seeking advice in this dilemma, another and still another of the young girl's ordinary companions were seized with the same malady. In the course of ten days, more than 50 females ranging from seven to fifty years of age were reported as having been seized in this way, and were exhibiting symptoms of the most bewildering mental aberration. The crawling, climbing, leaping, wild singing, furious swearing, and frantic behavior of these women soon found crowds of imitators. Before the tidings of this frightful affliction had passed beyond the district in which it originated, several hundred women and children, and scores of young men, were writhing under the contagion. The seizures were sudden, like the attacks. They seldom lasted long, yet they never seemed to yield to any form of treatment, whether harsh, kind, medical, religious, or persuasive.

The first symptoms of this malady do not seem to have been noted with sufficient attention to justify giving details that could be considered accurate. It was only when the number of the possessed exceeded 2,000 persons and the case attracted multitudes of curious inquirers from all parts of the Continent, that the medical men, priests, and journalists of the time began to keep and publish constant records of the progress of the situation.

One of the strangest features of the case, and the one that most constantly baffled the faculty, was the appearance of rugged health and freedom from all physical disease that distinguished this malady. As a general rule, the victims spoke in hoarse, rough tones unlike their own, used profane language, such as few of them could ever have heard, and imitated the actions of crawling, leaping, climbing animals with ghastly fidelity. Sometimes they would roll their bodies up into balls and distort their limbs beyond the power of the attendant physicians to account for or disentangle.

Many among them reportedly experienced levitation in the air, and in a few instances, the women spoke in strange tongues, manifested high conditions of exaltation, described glorious visions, prophesied, gave clairvoyant descriptions of absent persons and distant places, sang hymns, and preached in strains of sublime inspiration. It must be added that these instances were very rare and were only noticeable in the earlier stages of the series of events.

It is almost needless to say that the tidings of what was happening in Morzine attracted multitudes of witnesses, as well as the attention of the learned and philosophic. When the attempts of the medical faculty, the church, and the law had been tried again and again, and all had utterly failed to modify the ever-increasing horrors of this malady, Louis Napoleon, the French emperor, under whose protectorate Morzine was then governed, yielding to the representations of his advisers, actually sent out three military companies to Morzine, charged with strict orders to quell the disturbances "on the authority of the Emperor, or by force if necessary." The result of this high-handed policy was to increase tenfold the violence of the disease and to augment the number of the afflicted, including some of the soldiers themselves, who sank under the contagion they were expected to quench.

The next move of the baffled government was a spiritual one. An army of priests, headed by a venerable bishop, much beloved in his diocese, was dispatched in the company of exorcists at the suggestion of the Archbishop of Paris. This second experiment worked no better than the first. Respectable-looking groups of well-dressed men, women, and children, would pass into the churches in reverent silence and with all the appearance of health and piety, but no sooner was heard the sound of the priest's voice or the notes of the organ, than shrieks, sobbings, and frenzied cries resounded from different parts of the assembly. Anxious fathers and husbands were busy in carrying their distracted relatives into the open air, and whether in the church or the home, every attempt of a sacerdotal character seemed to arouse the mania to heights of fury before unknown.

The time came at length when the old bishop thought of a way to achieve a general victory over the diabolical adversary. He commanded that as many as possible of the afflicted should be gathered together to hear high mass, when he trusted that the solemnity of the occasion would be sufficient to defeat what he evidently believed to be the combined forces of Satan. According to William Howitt, the assemblage in question, which included at least 2,000 of the possessed and a number of spectators, recalled Milton's description of Pandemonium. Children and women were leaping over the seats and benches, clambering up the pillars, and shrieking defiance from pinnacles that scarcely admitted of a foothold for a bird.

The bishop's letter contained one remark that seems to offer a clue to these scenes of horror and madness. He stated, "When in my distress and confusion I accidentally laid my hand on the heads of these unfortunates, I found that the paroxysm instantly subsided, and that however wild and clamorous they may have been before, the parties so touched generally sunk down as it were into a swoon, or deep sleep, and woke up most commonly restored to sanity, and a sense of propriety."

The failure of episcopal influence threw the government back on the help of medical science. One Dr. Constans had published a report in which he held out hopes of a cure if his advice was strictly followed. He was commissioned to do what he could for Morzine. Armed with the powers of a dictator he returned there, and, backed by a fresh detachment of sixty soldiers, a brigade of gendarmes, and a fresh cure, he issued despotic decrees and threatened lunatic asylums and deportation for the convulsed.

He fined any person who accused others of magic, or in any way encouraged the prevalent idea of supernatural evil. He desired the curé to preach sermons against the possibility of demonica possession, but this order could not be carried out by even the most obedient priest. The persons affected with fits were dispersed in every direction. Some were sent to asylums and hospitals, and many were simply exiled from Chablais. They were not allowed to revisit except by very special favor. Howitt notes,

"We need not point to the salient facts of our narrative, or discuss the various theories that have been invented to account for them. . . . It is impossible not to see the resemblance of the Morzine epidemic with the demonopathy of the sixteenth century, and the history of the Jansenist and Cevennes convulsionnaires. . . . Some of the facts we have related were often observed in the state of hypnotism, or nervous sleep, with which physicians are familiar. The hallucinations of which we have given instances are too common to astonish us. But the likeness of this epidemic to others that have been observed does not account for its symptoms."

Psychical Research and Parapsychology

As early as the mid-nineteenth century, interest in what would later be called psychical research emerged in Switzerland, one of the earliest pioneers of research into the paranormal being Maximilian Perty, who published studies on occult phenomena and Spiritualism from 1856 on. Although originally skeptical of survival of personality after death, he later became sympathetic to the concept.

Possibly the most famous Swiss psychical researcher is Theodore Flournoy (1854–1920), a psychologist at the University of Geneva who took part in the investigations of the mediumship of Eusapia Palladino. However, his enduring fame derived from his important investigation of the famous case of the medium Hélène Smith, as recorded in his book From India to the Planet Mars; A Study of a Case of Somnambulism with Glossolalia (1900).

While Flournoy operated from French-speaking Geneva, most interest in psychical research came from the German-speaking sections of the country. Other important Swiss investigators include Marc Thury (1822–1905); Eugene Bleuler of Zürich; Georg Sulzer (d. 1929); Karl E. Muller (1893–1969); Fanny Hoppe-Moser, who published Okkultismus, Täuschungen und Tatsachen (1935), and Spuk (1950); Guido Huber (died 1953), who published studies on survival; Gebhard Frei (1905–1967), who published a useful bibliography on the psychology of the subconscious; Peter Ringger, who founded the first parapsychological society in Switzerland and published works on parapsychology; and Friedrich A. Volman, who specialized in the literature of hauntings.

The great psychologist Carl Jung also occupies a special position for his interest in reconciling occult studies with the psychology of the subconscious. Between 1899 and 1900, he experimented with a young medium and submitted a doctoral thesis On the Psychology and Pathology of the So-Called Occult. He later cooperated in experiments in psychokinesis and materialization phenomena with famous mediums. There were a number of paranormal events in his own experience.

There are two major parapsychological societies. The Schweitzer Parapsychologische Gesellschaft Zürich was founded in 1952, with Peter Ringger as president. Six years later, his place was taken by Dr. Hans Naegeli-Osjord. The SPG organizes lecture programs in Zürich, maintains a library, and issues the periodical Parapress. It may be contacted c/o Frau N. von Muralt, Weihaldenstrasse 3, CH-8700 Kusnacht. Switzerland.

The Schweizerische Vereinigung für Parapsychologie was founded in Zürich in 1966 and organizes public lectures, discussions, and high school courses in psychical subjects. Under the presidency of Theo Locher, it has conducted investigations into a variety of parapsychological subjects, results of which are published in the biannual Bulletin für Parapsychologie. The society many be contacted at Industriestrasse 5, 2555 Brug, Zürich.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Sword of Dyrnwyn

Periodical issued sporadically since 1977 by the Association of Cymmry Wicca and the Church of Y Tylwyth Teg, devoted to Welsh pagan traditions; includes articles on ley lines, astrology, megaliths, magick, ecology, and other occult subjects. It is issued by Camelot Press at PO Box 674884, Marietta, GA 30006-0006. Website: http://www.tylwythteg.com.

Sycomancy

Divination by the leaves of the fig tree. Questions or propositions were written on fig leaves. If the leaf dried quickly after the appeal, it was an evil omen, but it was a good sign if the leaf dried slowly.

Symbolism (Metapsychical)

A term used by psychical researcher Ernesto Bozzano in relation to:

". . . cases in which, by subconscious or mediumistic methods, an idea is expressed by means of hallucinatory perceptions, or ideographic representations, or forms of language differing from the ideas to be transmitted, but capable of suggesting them indirectly or conventionally. In other words, there is metapsychical symbolism every time an idea is transmitted by means of representations which are not reproductions."

F. W. H. Myers included one instance of such symbolic communication in his book, Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death (1903): A botanical student passing inattentively in front of the glass door of a restaurant thought he saw "Verbascum Thapsus" printed on it. The real word was "Bouillon," and that happens to be the trivial name in French for the plant Verbascum Thapsus. The actual optical perception was thus subliminally transformed.

Symbolism often occurs in occultism, particularly in prophetic dreams, which are sometimes represented in visual or etymological puns. Sigmund Freud drew attention to such symbolic imagery in his psychoanalytical theory of dreams. Many psychics find their visions of future events occur in symbolic form. Traditional astrological predictions used to be presented in symbolic pictures called hieroglyphs.

Symmes, John Cleves (1780–1829)

Born November 5, 1780, Symmes was a captain in the U.S. Army in the war of 1812–14, nephew of the jurist of the same name. He served with distinction at the battle of Niagara and in the sortie from Fort Erie. He later devoted himself to philosophical pursuits. In 1818, he promulgated his theory that the Earth is a hollow sphere, habitable within, open at the poles to admit light, and containing within it six or seven concentric hollow spheres also open at the poles.

In May 1818, he mailed prominent people in various countries a manifesto of his theories, asking for an expedition to be equipped for exploration at the poles. He lectured widely and his convert James McBride was responsible for the anonymously published Symmes' Theory of Concentric Spheres; Demonstrating that the Earth is Hollow, Habitable Within, and Widely Open About the Poles, by A Citizen of the United States (1826). It was not favorably received, but later influenced other hollow Earth theorists.

In 1820, a pseudonymous book by "Captain Seaborn" titled Symzonia described a steamship voyage to the south polar opening. The ship goes over the rim and enters the continent of "Symzonia," where the inhabitants live in a socialist utopia. This concept may have influenced Edgar Allan Poe's story "Narrative of Arthur Gordon Pym."

Symmes died May 28, 1829, at the early age of 49, but his theories were revived by his son Americus Vespucius, who published The Symmes' Theory of Concentric Spheres (1878).

Sources:

A Citizen of the United States [James McBride]. Symmes' Theory of Concentric Spheres; Demonstrating that the Earth is Hollow, Habitable Within, and Widely Open About the Poles. Cincinnati, Ohio: Morgan, Lodge, and Fisher, 1826.

Symmes, Americus, ed. The Symmes' Theory of Concentric Spheres: Demonstrating that the Earth is Hollow, Habitable Within, and Widely Open about the Poles. Louisville, Ky.: Bradley and Gilbert, 1878.

Symonds, John (1914–)

British novelist, writer of children's books, and author of important works on occultism. He met Aleister Crowley in 1945 and tried to assist publication of his writings in the last two years of Crowley's life. He became Crowley's literary executor, and he is the author of the standard biography of Crowley: The Great Beast (1951). He went on to write several books about Crowley—the most recent appeared in 1989—and with Kenneth Grant he edited The Confessions of Aleister Crowley and Crowley's own book Magick (1973). Symonds was a member of the editorial board of Man, Myth, and Magic (1970) and wrote other books on occult topics, the most notable being his biography of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky: Madame Blavatsky: Medium and Magician (1960).

Sources:

Symonds, John. The Great Beast. London: MacDonald, 1951. Reprint, St. Albans, England: Mayflower, 1973.

———. The King of the Shadow Realm. London: Duckworth, 1989.

———. Light Over Water. London: J. Baker for the Unicorn Press, 1963.

———. The Magic of Aleister Crowley. London: Frederick Muller, 1958.

———. Thomas Brown and the Angels. London: Hutchinson, 1961.

Sympathy

A mutual attraction or identity of feeling between individuals and also animals, the opposite of the reaction of antipathy. The term "sympathy" has a special significance in mesmerism or animal magnetism, where it is used to indicate the rapport between operator and subject, by means of which the operator could influence and control the perceptions of the subject. It has also been suggested that a condition of sympathy might exist between agent and percipient in telepathy, particularly in the transmission of emotions.

Synchronicity

A connecting principle, expressing the linkage of events without a cause-and-effect relationship in time. In addition to the normal cause-and-effect connections observed in nature, there appears to be another principle expressed in the simultaneous arrangement or connection of events. A theory of synchronicity was developed by psychotherapist Carl G. Jung and related to certain ESP phenomena. In recent decades the concept has been widely borrowed by occultists in support of their worldview.

As an illustration of this principle, some, such as astrologer Dan Rudhyar, suggest a relationship between astrological positions and events in the life of individual human beings. The human events are not necessarily caused by the position of heavenly bodies, only linked in a causal relationship.

Sources:

Jung, Carl G., and W. Pauli. The Interpretation of Nature and the Psyche. London, 1955.

Synchronicity Foundation

Synchronicity Foundation, known for its support of an innovative high-tech form of meditation, was founded in 1983 by Master Charles, a mystic and former leading disciple of Swami Paramahansa Muktananda (1908–1982), one of the most popular spiritual teachers from India to build a following in the West in the 1970s. He taught a form of kundalini yoga. Master Charles was born on March 14, 1945, in Syracuse, New York, and raised in a Roman Catholic family. As a child he began to have mystic and visionary experiences and developed a special devotion to the Virgin Mary. He attended a Roman Catholic high school and at one point considered entering a Roman Catholic order, but became disenchanted with the church as an institution.

As he moved into adulthood, he began to explore the alternative spiritualities, especially Eastern forms, that were flowing into the country at the time. Then in 1970, some friends who had been to India showed him a photo of Swami Muktananda. He had an immediate reaction to the picture. He discovered a copy of Guru, Muktananda's autobiographical book, and laid plans to go to India himself. His meeting with Muktananda confirmed the awakening of divine energy he already experienced. He became a disciple and was given the name Arjuna. He eventually became Muktananda's private secretary.

Shortly before his passing in 1982, Muktananda instructed Arjuna to return to the West and create a form of the teachings not bound in an Indian cultural format. Thus, in 1982, Arjuna changed his name to Brother Charles and settled in rural Virginia. He began to attract a few disciples, and as his following grew he founded the Synchronicity Foundation. The name of the foundation grew out of his understanding that meditation is an experience that synchronizes the activity of the two halves of the brain. When the brain is unsynchronized, one experiences the duality of the world. When they are synchronized, one experiences the underlying unity of the Source of all.

Brother Charles (now known as Master Charles) has also considered the scientific advances in the West and the understanding of the role sound played in enhancing the meditation experience. He discovered that certain patterns of sound aid synchronization and developed recordings that could be fed to meditators in headphones. This became the basis of a growing technological approach to spirituality and mysticism.

The Synchronicity Foundation is headquartered at P.O. Box 694, Nellyford, VA 22923. It offers a program of retreats and workshops, and a network of Synchronicity centers have emerged around the world. The foundation has an Internet site at http://www.synchronicity.org/.

Sources:

Charles, Master. The Bliss of Freedom: A Contemporary Mystic's Enlightening Journey. Malibu, Calif.: Acacia Publishing, 1997.

Synchronicity Foundation Homepage. http://www.synchronicity.org/. June 28, 2000.

Synchronicity Research Unit See SRU

Szekely, Edmond Bordeaux (?–1980)

Edmond Bordeaux Szekely, the proponent of a modern spiritual pathway he ascribed to the ancient Essenes, was born in Hungary early in the twentieth century. He was the grandson of the poet Alexander Szekely. His father was the Unitarian bishop of Clug, Transylvania (now in Romania), and his mother was a French Roman Catholic. His primary education was at a parochial school, and as a young man he was sent to study in Rome. There around 1923, in the Vatican Archives, he reportedly discovered the lost gospel written in Aramaic, the language Jesus actually spoke. He also reportedly discovered a Hebrew fragment of the text in Monte Cassino. (Szekely left little information about the manuscripts and no one else has been able to locate them.) Szekely also claimed to have found a copy of the manuscript written in Old Slavonic in Vienna, but again few details have been left concerning the find or its present location.

Szekely published a section of the manuscript in 1937 as the Gospel of Peace by the Apostle John. It was later republished as the Essene Gospel of Peace, the name by which it is currently best known. Given the vague information on its discovery and the failure in locating the original manuscripts, critics have suggested that the ancient texts never existed and that the Essene Gospel is an entirely modern product of Szekely's imagination. In spite of these criticisms, many have found the book of great inspirational value.

Shortly after the publication of the Gospel, Szekely founded several communes in France which attempted to embody its teachings. However, as Hitler rose to power, Szekely left for the Americas. He settled in Tecate, Mexico, south of San Diego, and eventually became a Mexican citizen. He purchased a rural estate and opened the Essene School, built upon the idea that Jesus and the first Christians were Essenes. Here he began to systematically teach his principles for healthy living, which he termed biogenics. Keys to the system were vegetarianism and the use of whole fresh foods. His estate, Rancho la Puerta, became famous as a health spa, attracting many wealthy and famous people.

In 1958 Szekely opened the Golden Door, a health spa in Escondido, California, that became one of the most famous of the era. It was especially favored by Hollywood stars. From his base in the Essene School he founded the International Biogenic Society to perpetuate his health perspective and authored numerous books. He also founded the Academy of Creative Living, which published many of his books, including the second and third installments of the Essene Gospel of Peace (1974). He spent the last years of his life in Cartago, Costa Rica, where he died in 1980.

Following his death, his wife continued as head of the International Biogenic Society. It may now be contacted at P.O. Box 849, Nelson, BC, Canada VIL 6A5. A spiritual community emphasizing the Essene teachings was created in 1982 by his colleague Garry White in San Diego, California, as the First Christians' Essene Church (now the Essene Foundation), headquartered at 2536 Collier Ave., San Diego, CA 92116. More recently, the Essene New Life Church founded by Rev. Dr. Charles A. Thomas in 1993 is headquartered at 110 Smith St., Ste. A, Mount Shasta, CA 96067-2636. It, and its associated Awareness Institute, is the only group to have a website, to be found at http://www.awarinst.com.

Sources:

Berskov, Per. Strange Tales About Jesus. Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1983.

Szekely, Edmond Bordeaux. The Gospel of Peace by the Apostle John. London: C. H. Daniels, 1937. Reprinted as The Essene Gospel of Peace. San Diego: Academy of Creative Living, 1971.

———. The Essene Way, Biogenic Living. Cartago, Costa Rica: International Biogenic Society, 1978.

———. Talks. San Diego: Academy of Creative Living, 1972.

T

Table-turning (or Table-tipping)

A form of psychic phenomena in which a table rotates, tilts, or rises completely off the ground by the mere contact of the fingertips of an individual or group of individuals. In exceptional cases tables have been known to move or even levitate without direct contact. The familiar form of séance in table-turning is that in which the sitters place their fingertips on the table; then the table moves without conscious exercise of muscular force. By relating the raps or tilts of the table to the alphabet it becomes possible to receive intelligent messages. (See movement)

Historical Background

Table-turning is the simplest and oldest form of communication with extraneous intelligences or the subconscious self. In ancient times tables were used for purposes of divination as "mensa divinatoriae." In fourth-century Rome, Ammianus Marcellinus described a table with a slab, engraved with the letters of the alphabet, above which a ring was held, suspended by a thread; by swinging to certain letters, messages were spelled out. Tertullian (ca. 155–ca. 222) appears to have been one of the first who knew of table communications with the unseen world.

Table-turning in modern Spiritualism dates from the mid-nineteenth century and seems to have originated in America soon after the Rochester rappings of 1848. At that time, there was considerable interest in animal magnetism or "electro-biology," stemming from the mesmerism of Europe.

Mesmerism established the convention of groups of individuals arranged in a circle with a variously named magnetic fluid linking them. After the phenomena of rappings in the presence of the Fox sisters became widely known, groups gathered around other individuals who possessed the same ability to generate raps.

Table-turning and rapping spread like an epidemic throughout America and was brought to England by such professional mediums as Maria B. Hayden, who came to London with a lecturer on electro-biology in 1852. An advantage of table-turning was that it did not require a paid professional medium. Amateur groups could sit round a table and obtain the intelligent rappings which had first been manifest only to specially talented individuals, i.e., mediums.

In 1852 afternoon social invitations to tea and table-turning were common. Table-turning was even more successful in France, with its tradition of mesmerism and animal magnetism. One widespread jest was that people no longer asked after each other's health, but asked instead how the table was. "Thank you, mine turns beautifully, and how goes yours?"

Mesmerists welcomed table-turning as a demonstration of animal magnetism or odic force, while Fundamentalist ecclesiastics denounced it as due to Satanic agency. Scientists and doctors thought that the new craze would be a danger to mental health and a committee was formed to find a non-Spiritualist explanation for the phenomenon. They reported in the Medical Times and Gazette on June 11, 1853, that the motion of the table was due to unconscious muscular action.

A few weeks later the great chemist and physicist Michael Faraday reported experiments with a simple apparatus to demonstrate that the movements of the table were due to unconscious muscular action of the part of the sitters, who were by implication the automatic authors of the messages claiming to come from the spirit world. Faraday's apparatus consisted of two thin wooden boards with little glass rollers between them. The contraption was whole bound together with rubber bands and so contrived that the slightest lateral pressure on the upper board would cause it to slip a little way over the other. A haystalk or a scrap of paper served to indicate any motion of the upper board over the lower.

The conclusion drawn from these experiments was that when the sitters believed themselves to be pressing downward, they were really pressing obliquely in the direction they expected the table to rotate. Other investigators also held the expectation that the operators had much to do with the motions of the table. James Braid pointed out in the appendix to his book Hypnotic Therapeutics (1853) that someone generally announced beforehand the direction they expected the table to rotate.

Among the earliest investigators of the phenomenon of table-turning were Count Agenor De Gasparin and Prof. Marc Thury of Geneva, who held séances and were satisfied that the movements resulted from a force radiating from the operators, to which they gave the name of ectenic force.

The public, on the whole, ignored the conclusions of Faraday and others, preferring the more popular Spiritualist explanation or the pseudo-scientific theories of "electro-biology." Other explanations offered included od or odic force, galvanism, animal magnetism, and the rotation of the Earth. Revs. G. Sandby and C. H. Townshend claimed to have experienced a feeling of fatigue after a table-turning séance as though they had been hypnotizing someone. They reported a tingling sensation in their fingertips, while Townshend claimed somewhat vaguely that spirit rappings might be caused by a "disengagement of Zoogen (an unidentified force in nature) from the System."

Meanwhile various Evangelical clergymen insisted that table-turning was Satanic. Revs. N. S. Godfrey, E. Gillson, and others held séances in which the "spirit" confessed themselves to be either spirits of worthless persons of evil inclination or devils. Both of the "spirits' " confessions caused the reverent gentlemen to denounce the whole practice of table-turning. One of them purposely mentioned the Faraday experiments, stating that the phenomena "appear to be whatever the investigator supposes them to be"—a saying which aptly characterized his own attitude.

The psychical researcher Camille Flammarion, whose exhaustive experiments and scientific attainments gave considerable weight to his opinion, offered an explanation of the various phases of table-turning phenomena. Simple rotation of the table he ascribed to an unconscious impulse given by the operators; other movements of the table while the fingers of the sitters rested upon it were ascribed to similar causes. The tilting of the table on the side furthest away from the operator was explained by muscular action. The vibrations in the wood of the table, its levitation under the fingers, or extent, its rotation without contact of the operator's hands, he attributed to a force emanating from the body. In the latter case, the operator was capable of acting at a distance by means of ether-waves. This force, the result of a cerebral disturbance, was greater than that of the muscles, as is seen by the levitation of tables so weighty that the combined muscular strength of the operators would not suffice to lift them.

To the dictating of messages and other intelligent manifestations he gave an origin in this psychic force, which is perhaps identical with Thury's "ectenic force," or "psychode," and which is obedient to the will and desires, or even, in some cases, the subconscious will of the operator. Flammarion did not consider the spirit hypothesis necessary.

It is possible that some fraud may have crept into the séances investigated by Flammarion, as it has done in so many other cases. There are, of course, those among the most qualified of psychical researcher, who find the hypothesis of unconscious muscular action or deliberate fraud a satisfactory explanation of the phenomena.

The Mechanics of Table-Turning

One common procedure followed by those engaged in table tipping began with those in attendance forming a circle around the table. They placed hands lightly, with fingertips touching, on the leaf, and with lowered lights or in complete darkness, waited for the manifestations. According to reports, if someone with psychic powers was present the table might show signs of animation. The first such sign was often a quivering motion under the sitters' hands; it increased until the table pulsated with a mysterious energy. The wooden surface appeared to some to act as a reservoir of externalized nervous force.

The psychical researcher Hereward Carrington said that in his séances with Eusapia Palladino the table appeared to be somehow alive like the back of a dog. In one of his stories a similar phenomenon that occurred during the mediumship of medium D. D. Home induced Alexander Dumas to fantasize the table as an intelligence itself. The conception of a spirit entering furniture became a favorite idea with French authors afterward.

After the vibratory stage the table might jerk, tilt, stumble about, and eventually become entirely levitated. Apparently, there was believed to be an intelligence behind these movements. If the letters of the alphabet were called over in the dark, the table, by tilting, knocking on the floor, or tapping, indicated certain letters that connectedly spelled out a message, often claiming to come from someone deceased. The intelligence that manifested had personal characteristics. In repeated sittings it was soon noticed by observers that the skill with which the table was manipulated or the eccentricities of its behavior were indications of the presence of the same entity. The strange, stolid, or clumsy behavior of the table immediately denoted that a new visitant was tampering with the contact.

But the table might disclose much more than that. Its motions could express humor, emotion, and personality. It might climb up into the sitter's lap as a mark of affection; it might chase others all over the room in a hostile manner. As an additional means of expression, the table could convey queer impressions by creaking. P. P. Alexander noted in his book Spiritualism: A Narrative with a Discussion (1871):

"At a particular stage of the proceedings the table began to make strange undulatory movements, and gave out, as these proceeded, a curious accompaniment of creaking sounds. Mr. Home seemed surprised. 'This is very curious,' he said, 'it is a phenomenon of which I have no experience hitherto.' Presently my friend remarked that movement and sound together—it reminded him of nothing he could think of except a ship in distress, with its timbers straining in a heavy sea. . . . This conclusion being come to . . . the table proceeded to rap out: 'It is David.' Instantly a lady burst into tears, and cried wildly: 'Oh, that must be my poor, dear brother, David, who was lost at sea some time since.' "

When the table moves under contact there is an obvious possibility for the subconscious mind or a secondary personality to convey ideas by unconscious muscular pressure of either a medium or the sitters. According to F. W. H. Myers,

"The subliminal self, like the telegraphist begins its effort with full knowledge of the alphabet, but with only weak and rude command over our muscular adjustments. It is therefore a priori likely that its easiest mode of communication will be through a repetition of simple movements, so arranged as to correspond to letters of the alphabet."

But Myers was inclined to attribute to the subconscious mind the movement of the table without contact as well. "If a table moves when no one is touching it, this is not obviously more likely to have been effected by my deceased grandfather than by myself. We cannot tell how I could move it; but then we cannot tell how he could move it either."

Certainly, there are experiences which bear out this possibility and show how singularly deceptive the interpretation of phenomena may be. George S. Long, an acquaintance of Richard Hodgson, narrated in the Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 9, p. 65) a strange experience with a chair. Through a young lady he received what was said to be the most convincing test of spirit return:

"First the chair spelt out my name and showed a disposition to get into my lap; then it spelt out 'George, you ought to know me as I am Jim.' But I didn't, and said so. Then without my looking at the board, it spelt out 'Long Island, Jim Rowe' and 'Don't you remember I used to cary you when you were a little fellow,' or words to that effect. I had to acknowledge the truth of it and also to say that as he was an ignorant man he possibly intended 'Cary' for carry. I must own I was puzzled for the moment. To make sure of his power I asked that he count the pickets in the fence. Somehow he could not agree to this, and even the medium objected. As a last resort I asked how long he had been in the spirit land and the answer came, between thirteen and fourteen years. Now to the sequel. First it occurred to me a day or two later, that while all the incidents given were correct the name should have been given as Roe instead of Rowe. Second I was upon Long Island this summer, and the matter coming to my mind I inquired how long Jim Roe had been dead, and was informed he died last Winter; so when I received this test so convincing to the believers the man was not dead."

The material from which the chair or table was made seemed to make no difference once the available power was sufficient to manifest. The reason why a table was used for spirit communication was primarily convenience; it was piece of generally available furniture which allowed contact around it for a large number of people. Some Spiritualists also thought its surface acted as a receptacle for the generated force and compared the space underneath the table to a medium's cabinet, especially if it was surrounded by a deep hanging table cloth. In the early days of Spiritualism, they often used a table with a hole in the middle through which "materialized hands" could be thrust.

Eusapia Palladino insisted on a séance table built entirely of wood. She considered soft pinewood the best to absorb vital magnetism. She allowed no metal in the construction of the table.

The color of the table made no difference. Joseph Maxwell found an advantage in covering it with some white material of light texture. He also insisted that the table should, if possible, be fastened with wooden pegs instead of nails since mediums, supposedly, are sometimes extremely sensitive to metals.

It was reported that with a powerful medium the movement of the table could occur at any time and disclose a tremendous force in operation. Thus Gambier Bolton, writing in Psychic Force (1904) observed,

"During any meal with Mrs. Elgie Corner [i.e., Florence Cook] in one's own house, and whilst she herself is engaged in eating and drinking—both of her hands being visible all the time—the heavy dining table will commence first to quiver, setting all the glasses shaking, and plates, knives, forks and spoons in motion, and then to rock and sway from side to side, occasionally going so far as to tilt up at one end or at one side; and all the time raps and tappings will be heard in the table and in many different parts of the room. Taking a meal with her in a public restaurant is a somewhat serious matter."

In experiments conducted by psychical researcher Harry Price with the psychic Stella C. in 1923, powerful and rhythmical vibrations of tables were obtained, and on one occasion, after violent movements of a table, it suddenly snapped, the top breaking into two pieces, and the legs breaking off.

Table-Turning and Dowsing

The various theories about the rationale of table-turning parallel those advanced for the phenomena of dowsing and radiesthesia, where there is meaningful movement of a water-witching rod or a pendulum or similar indicator. The actual force moving the indicator is still a matter of controversy.

It is generally assumed that unconscious muscular action or nervous energy plays a significant part, but it is still far from clear how information on underground water, minerals, or buried objects is conveyed to the mind, or from the mind to the indicator.

One of the earliest investigators to link the action of table-turning with divining rods or pendulums was the French chemist Michel Eugène Chevreul, in his book De la baguette divinatoire, du pendule dit ex plorateur et des tables tournantes, au point de vue de l'histoire, de la critique et de la méthode expérimentale (1854).

In modern times, table-turning is a laborious method of establishing contact with unseen intelligence. Planchette and ouija board are more satisfactory and faster. Also, while a number of prominent mediums such as Betty White began their career with a ouija board, they quickly moved beyond. Messages obtained by such methods are often misleading or false. Again, the communications received at circles in general tend to reflect the general interest level of the sitters.

Sources:

Barrett, William, and Theodore Besterman. The Divining-Rod: An Experimental & Psychological Investigation. London: Methuen, 1926. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1968.

Burr, Chauncey. Knocks for the Knockings. New York: Burr Brothers, 1851.

Capron, E. W. Modern Spiritualism: Its Facts and Fanaticisms, Its Consistencies and Contradictions. Boston: B. Marsh, 1855. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1976.

Capron, E. W., and H. D. Barron. Singular Revelations: Explanation and History of the Mysterious Communion with Spirits. Auburn, N.Y., 1850.

Chevreul, M. E. De la baguette divinatoire, du puendule dit explorateur et des tables tournantes, au point de vue du l'histoire, de la critique et de la méthode expérimentale. Paris, 1854.

Close, F. The Tester Tested; or Table Moving, Turning, Talking, Not Diabolical: A Review of the Publications of the Rev. Messrs. Godfrey, Gillson, Vincent, and Dibdin. London and Cheltenham, 1853.

Cowan, Charles. Thoughts on Satanic Influence, or Modern Spiritualism Considered. London, 1854.

De Gasparin, Comte Agenor. Des table tournantes, de surnaturel en général, et des esprits. Paris, 1854.

De Mirville, Marquis J. E. Pneumatologie: Des Esprits et de leurs manifestations fluidique devant la science modern. Paris, 1853.

De Szapary, Comte F. G. Les tables tournantes. Paris, 1854.

Dewey, D. M. History of the Strange Sounds or Rappings Heard in Rochester and Western New York. Rochester, 1850.

Du Potet de Sennevoy, Baron. Traité complet de magnétisme animal. Paris, 1856.

Elliott, Charles W. Mysteries, or Glimpses of the Supernatural. New York: Harper, 1852.

Godfrey, Nathaniel S. Table Turning the Devil's Modern Masterpiece; Being the Result of a Course of Experiments. U.K.: Thames Ditton, 1853.

Guldenstubbe, Baron L. de. Pneumatologie positive et expérimentale; La réalité des Espirits et le phenom ene merveilleux de leur écriture directe demontrées. Paris, 1857.

Hartmann, E. von. Der Spiritismus. 1855. English ed. as Spiritism. London, n.d.

Hornung, D. Neue Geheimnisse des Tages durch Geistes Magnetismus. Leipzig, 1857.

Kerner, Justinus. Die Somnambülen Tische: Zur Geschichte und Erklärungen dieser Erscheinungen. Stuttgart, 1853.

Lang, Andrew. Cock Lane and Common-Sense. London: Longmans, Green, 1894. Reprint, New York: AMS Press, 1970.

Mahan, Asa. Modern Mysteries Explained and Exposed. Boston, 1855.

Mattison, Hiram. Spirit Rapping Unveiled! Derby, N.Y., 1853.

Maxwell, Joseph. Metaphysical Phenomena: Methods and Observations. London: Duckworth, 1905.

Morgan, R. C. An Inquiry Into Table Miracles. Bath and London, 1853.

Page, Charles G. Psychomancy; Spirit Rappings and Tippings Exposed. New York, 1853.

Perty, Maximilien. Die Mystischen Erscheinungen der menschlichen Natur. 2nd ed., Leipzig and Heidelberg, 1872.

Price, Harry. Stella C.: An Account of Some Original Experiments in Psychical Research. Edited by James Turner. London: Souvenir Press, 1973.

Prichard, John. A Few Sober Words of Table-talk about the Spirits. Leamington, UK, 1853.

Spicer, Henry. Facts and Fantasies: A Sequel to "Sights and Sounds." London, 1853.

Table Turning and Table Talking Considered in Connection with the Dictates of Reason and Common Sense. Bath, UK: S. Gibbs, 1853.

Table Turning by Animal Magnetism Demonstrated. London, 1853.

Tiffany, Joel. Spiritualism Explained. New York: Graham & Ellinwood, 1856.

Townsend, C. H. Mesmerism Proved True. London, 1854.

Taboo (or Tabu or Tapu)

A Polynesian word meaning "prohibited" and signifying a prohibition enforced by religious or magical power, which has come to be applied to similar usages among primitive peoples all over the world. It also has parallels in the religious codes of sophisticated societies, as in the early Hebrew term Kherem ("set apart" or prohibited), and in the highly developed social etiquette of modern society.

Taboo, or prohibition, was enforced in the cases of sacred things and unclean things. In the first instance, the taboo was placed on the object because of the possession by it of inherent mysterious power. But taboo might be imposed by a chief or priest. It would be used for the protection of important individuals, the safeguarding of the weak, women, children, and slaves from the magical influence of more highly-placed individuals, against danger incurred by handling or coming in contact with corpses, or eating certain foods, and the securing of human beings against the power of supernatural agencies, or the depredations of thieves.

Taboo could be sanctioned by social use or instinct. The violation of a taboo made the offender taboo; taboos, like various kinds of social uncleanliness, were transmissible, but the taboo could be thrown off by magical or purificatory ceremonies. It might last for a short period, or be imposed for eternity.

It may be said that the practice of taboo was instituted through human instinct for human convenience. This applies of course merely to the most simple type of taboo. It was, for example, forbidden to reap or steal the patch of corn dedicated to an agricultural deity, for the simple reason that his wrath would be incurred by so doing. Similarly it was taboo to devour the flesh of the totem animal of the tribe, except in special circumstances with the object of achieving communion with him. It was taboo to interfere in any manner with the affairs of the shamans or medicine men, also a type of the imposed taboo for the convenience of a certain caste. It was prohibited to marry a woman of the same totem as oneself, because all the members of a totemic band are supposed to be consanguineous; such a union might incur the wrath of the patron deity. A very strict taboo was put upon the witnessing of certain ritual instruments belonging to some primitive tribes, but this only applied to women and uninitiated men. It was considered a degradation for women to behold sacred implements.

If taboo does not spring directly from the system known as totemism, it was strongly influenced by it—that is, many intricate taboos arose from the totemic system. There was also the taboo of the sorcerer; it in effect was merely a spell placed upon a certain object, which makes it become useless to others. Taboo, or its remains, can still be found even in modernized communities. From its use the feeling of reverence for ancient institutions and those who represent them is undoubtedly derived.

Sources:

Frazer, James G. The Golden Bough. Vol. 3 of Taboo and the Perils of the Soul. New York: Macmillan, 1935.

Ganzfried, Rabbi Solomon. Code of Jewish Law (Kitzur Schulchan Aruch). New York: Hebrew Publishing, 1927.

Mead, Margaret. Inquiry Into the Question of Cultural Stability in Polynesia. New York: Columbia University, 1928. Reprint, New York: AMS Press, 1981.

Webster, Hutton. Taboo: A Sociological Study. Palo Alto, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1942. Reprint, London: Octagon, 1981.

Tabori, Paul (1908–1974)

Hungarian-born British novelist, journalist, political writer, scriptwriter, and psychical researcher. Some of his books were published under the pseudonyms "Christopher Stevens" and "Paul Tabor." Tabori was born on August 5, 1908, in Budapest, Hungary. He was educated at Kaiser Friedrich Wilhelm University (Ph.D., 1930) and Pazmany Peter University (Doctor of Economics and Political Science). He worked in various journalistic positions in Hungary (1926–1937) and London (1937–1960s). Beginning in the 1920s, Tabori wrote a number of books on various political and other subjects. He lived in the United States for several years as a 1966 visiting professor at Fairleigh Dickinson University (1966) and the City College of New York (1967). He also translated a number of books and authored 32 feature films and over a hundred television films and plays.

On the death of psychical researcher Harry Price (1881–1948), Tabori was literary executor for Price and a trustee of the Harry Price Library at London University, England. Subsequently he published a biography, Harry Price: The Biography of a Ghost Hunter (1950), the first of several books on psychic topics. He died November 9, 1974.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Tabori, Paul. Beyond the Senses: A Report on Psychical Research in the Sixties. N.p., 1971.

———. Companions of the Unseen. London: H. A. Humphrey, 1968.

———. Harry Price: The Biography of a Ghost Hunter. London: Athenaeum Press, 1950.

Tabori, Paul, and Cornelius Tabori. My Occult Diary. 1951. Reprint, New York: Living Books, 1966.

Tabori, Paul, and P. Raphael. Crime and the Occult. N.p., 1974.

Tabori, Paul, and Peter Underwood. The Borley Ghosts. N.p., 1973.

Tadebtsois

Spirits believed in by the Samoyeds. (See also Siberia)

Tadibe

The name for a Samoyed magician. (See also Siberia)

Taetzsch, Robert Leonard (1931–)

Statistician, management engineer, and parapsychologist. He was born on July 6, 1931, at Irvington, New Jersey, and studied at the Newark College of Engineering, New Jersey, where he received both a B.S. (mechanical engineering, 1952) and a M.S. degree (engineering, cum laude, 1959). For many years after his graduation he was employed at Union Carbide Plastics.

Out of his interest in parapsychology, as an engineer he worked on developing statistical techniques in order to control psi phenomena, and the development of systems for transmitting messages by psi processes. Utilizing an IBM 1620 digital computer, he developed a psi communication system based on binary targets and sequential sampling. He was a member of both the Parapsychologcal Association and the American Society for Psychical Research.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

T'ai Chi Ch'uan

A system of ancient Chinese physical movements, designed to build up subtle energy in the body, resulting in spiritual development. For centuries it was a secret taught only to males in certain families, but by the middle of the nineteenth century it was openly taught in Peking.

The roots of T'ai Chi Ch'uan are said to go back to the breathing exercises of Taoist monks in the 2nd century B.C.E. The purported founder of the actual Tai Chi Chuan system was a fifteenth century monk named Chang San-feng.

The yielding, supple philosophy behind T'ai Chi Ch'uan is summarized in the Tao Te Ching:

"A man is born gentle and weak, at his death hard and stiff. Green plants are tender and filled with sap, at their death they are withered and dry. Therefore the stiff and unbending is the disciple of death. The gentle and yielding is the disciple of life. Thus an army without flexibility never wins a battle. A tree that is unbending is easily broken. The hard and strong will fall. The soft and weak will overcome."

In addition to the philosophy there are 37 basic exercises and postures that are repeated with variations, culminating in some 65 or 108 exercises fusing energetic with relaxed movement. During practice, it is important to be concerned with centering the body with meditation and relaxation. T'ai Chi Ch'uan is often linked with the study of the I Ching to enhance the philosophical aspects of the system.

Although T'ai Chi Ch'uan has been facetiously referred to as "shadow boxing," it often resembles a slow-motion ballet, and has been described as "yoga in movement." Like the asanas of hatha yoga, T'ai Chi Ch'uan takes the names of its forms from animals or events occurring in nature: "White Crane Spreads Its Wings," "Meteor Runs After Moon," or "Brush Dust Against the Wind." Both hatha yoga and T'ai Chi exercises encompass focused concentration and special breathing patterns. But while the graceful, flowing movements of T'ai Chi seem to superficially contrast with the asanas, developing forms of yoga movement bring the two regimens closer together.

T'ai Chi has become popular in the United States, as Americans realize the great health benefits of the practice. Most often the elderly do these exercises to regain strength and balance, greatly decreasing their chances of injuries from falls. The slow movements of T'ai Chi make it easy for everyone to practice and still gain health benefits.

Sources:

Cheng, Man-ching. Tai-Chi. Berkeley, Calif.: North Atlantic, 1981.

Crompton, Paul. The T'ai Chi Workbook. Boston: Shambala Publishing, Inc., 1987.

Da Liu. T'ai Chi Ch'uan and I Ching. New York: Harper & Row, 1972.

———. T'ai Chi Ch'uan and Meditation. New York: Schocken Books, 1986.

Feng, Gia-Fu and Jane English. Lao Tsu: Tao Te Ching. New York: Vintage Books, 1972.

Perfetti, Ron. T'ai Chi Chuan Overview. http://www.maui.net/~taichi4u/overview.html. April 14, 2000.

Smith, Robert W. Chinese Boxing. New York: Kodansha, 1981.

T'ai Chi Magazine. http://www.tai-chi.com/. April 17, 2000.

"Tao & Tai Chi." http://www.chebucto.ns.ca/Philosophy/Taichi/tao-chi.html. April 4, 2000.

"The Heaven and Earth Academy of T'ai Chi." http://www.taichinews.com/. April 6, 2000.

Taigheirm

A magical sacrifice of cats to the infernal spirits, formerly practiced in the Highlands and islands of Scotland. It is believed to have been originally a ceremony of sacrifice from the more northern lands to the subterranean gods, which became in Christian times an invocation of infernal spirits. The word taigheirm signifies either an armory, or the cry of a cat, according to the sense in which it is used.

An early description of the ceremony, which must be performed with black cats, is given in George C. Horst's Deuteroscopie (1830):

"After the cats were dedicated to all the devils, and put into a magico-sympathetic condition by the shameful things done to them, and the agony occasioned them, one of them was at once put upon the spit, and, amid terrific howlings, roasted before a slow fire. The moment that the howls of one tortured cat ceased in death, another was put upon the spit, for a minute of interval must not take place if they would control hell; and this continued for the four entire days and nights. If the exorcist could hold it out still longer, and even till his physical powers were absolutely exhausted, he must do so."

When the horrible rites had been continued for a time, the demons began to appear in the shape of black cats, who mingled their dismal cries with those of the unfortunate sacrifices. At length a cat appeared of larger size and more frightful aspect than the others, and the time had come for the exorcist to make known his demands. Usually he asked for the gift of second sight, but other rewards might be asked for and received.

The last Taigheirm was said to have been held in Mull about the middle of the seventeenth century. The exorcists were Allan Maclean and his assistant Lachlain Maclean, both of whom received the psychic gift of second sight.

Of this particular ceremony Horst stated:

"The infernal spirits appeared, some in the early progress of the sacrifices in the shape of black cats. The first who appeared during the sacrifice, after they had cast a furious glance at the sacrifices, said—Lachlain Oer, that is, 'Injurer of Cats.' Allan, the chief operator, warned Lachlain, whatever he might see or hear, not to waver, but to keep the spit incessantly turning. At length the cat of monstrous size appeared; and after it had set up a horrible howl, said to Lachlain Oer, that if he did not cease before their largest brother came he would never see the face of God.

"Lachlain answered that he would not cease till he had finished his work if all the devils in hell came. At the end of the fourth day, there sat on the end of the beam in the roof of the barn a black cat with fire—flaming eyes, and there was heard a terrific howl quite across the straits of Mull into Mowen."

By this time, the elder of the two men was quite exhausted and sank down in a swoon, but the younger was sufficiently self-possessed to ask for wealth and prosperity, which both received throughout their lifetime.

Shortly before this, Cameron of Lochiel received at a taigheirm a small silver shoe which, put on the foot of a newborn son of his family, would give courage and fortitude to the child. One boy, however, had at his birth a foot too large for the shoe, a defect inherited from his mother, who was not a Cameron. His lack of the magically bestowed courage was apparent at the battle of Sheriffmuir, where he fled before the enemy.

Takata, Hawayo (1900–1980)

Hawayo Takata, the teacher who brought Reiki healing to the West, was born on December 23, 1900, to a Japanese family in Hawaii. At the age of 16, she married Saichi Takata. She gave birth to two daughters and she settled into the quiet life as a housewife in the growing Hawaiian Japanese-American community. Following her husband's death in 1930, she sought employment at a nearby plantation. She worked her way up to became the owner's housekeeper and then bookkeeper within a few years.

However, during the early 1930s Takata's health deteriorated. When in 1935 her sister died and it became her duty to travel to Japan to take the news of the death to her parents personally, she used the occasion to seek out some Japanese doctors. She located a surgeon, but just before she was to submit to an operation, she decided against it. Instead, she asked for a referral to an alternative doctor who did not do surgery. As it happened, the sister of the surgeon was a Reiki healer. The doctor referred Takata to Chujiro Hayashi (1878–1941), a former naval officer who had opened a clinic based on Reiki. After four months she was healed.

Takata asked Hayashi to train her as a healer. At first he refused, as she was considered an American. However, her persistence was rewarded, and in the spring of 1936, he included her and several others in a class for basic Reiki training. The following spring she was able to take Reiki Master training, from which she emerged as the 13th and last Reiki Master he initiated.

Shortly after becoming a Master, Takata returned home and opened a small clinic similar to Hayashi's in Kapaa, Hawaii. Hayashi visited at the beginning of 1938, and while in Hawaii named Takata as his successor. A few months later, she took the opportunity to come to the mainland as the translator for a group of Buddhist ministers making a tour of the West Coast. She stayed behind to attend the National College of Drugless Physicians, a naturopathic school in Chicago, Illinois.

Hayashi died in 1941. Meanwhile, in Hawaii, Takata operated quietly through the World War II (1939–45) and postwar years, during which time the Hawaiian Japanese received much of the anger for the bombing of Pearl Harbor.

Takata continued as a Reiki healer in Hawaii for several decades. It was only with her aging without a successor that Takata decided to start teaching others as Reiki healers. More importantly, she opened those teachings to those outside of the Japanese American community. In the fall of 1973 she traveled to Puget Sound to offer a first class on Reiki for mainland students. This class launched her brief public career and introduced the public to the Reiki system. Two years later she took the additional step and for the first time trained a new Reiki Master.

The decision to train Masters became one of her more controversial actions. She concluded that the Master status was a thing of value and that the best way to communicate its worth to Westerners was to charge for it. She asked a fee of $10,000.00 U.S. During the remaining five years of her life, she initiated 22 Masters.

In 1979, the year before she died, she named two of the Masters as Grand Masters, her daughter Phyliss Furumoto and Barbara Ray a healer from Atlanta, Georgia. Takata died on December 11, 1980.

Sources:

Haberly, Helen L. Reiki: Hawayo Takata's Story. Olney, Md.: Archedigm Publications, 1997.

Stein, Diane. Essential Reiki: A Complete Guide to an Ancient Healing Art. Freedom, Calif.: Crossing Press, 1995.

"Tales of Terror"

Title of an anonymous collection of Gothic style ballads, usually ascribed wrongly to Matthew Gregory Lewis. There are actually two books with this title. The first, published in 1799, included three of Lewis's ballads, together with others by Sir Walter Scott and Robert Southey, but does not appear to be compiled by Lewis. The three ballads later appeared in his book Tales of Wonder (1801).

A second Tales of Terror (1801) is a coarse and grotesque collection that contains parodies of the work of Lewis and others, and does not therefore seem to be compiled by Lewis either. (See also English occult fiction.)

Talisman

An inanimate object which is supposed to possess a supernatural capacity of conferring benefits or powers, in contradistinction to the amulet, the purpose of which is to ward off evil. Talismans were common in ancient Egypt and Babylon, and have been popular in magical communities to the present. Originally, talismans were usually a disc of metal or stone engraved with astrological or magical figures. In recent centuries, among practitioners of ceremonial magic, talismans inscribed in parchment have been favored.

Traditionally, three varieties of talisman have been recognized: 1. The astronomical, having the characters of the heavenly signs or constellations; 2. the magical, with extraordinary figures, occult words, or the names of angels; and 3. the mixed, engraved with celestial signs and barbarous words. To this list Thomas D. Fosbrook, in his Encyclopedia of Antiquities (1825), added two others: 4. The sigilla planetarum, composed of Hebrew numeral letters, used by astrologers and fortune-tellers and 5. one with Hebrew names and characters.

As an example of the most powerful of the latter may be the sacred name of Jehovah. The famous tephillin or phylacteries, used in Jewish devotion, which were bound on the head, the arm, and the hand, may be regarded as talismans. They were the subject of many traditional ceremonies. There is also the mezazoth or schedules for doorposts; another article of this description mentioned in the following quotation from the Talmud: "Whoever had the tephillin bound to his head and arm, and the tsitsith thrown over his garments, and the mezuza fixed on his door-post, is protected from sin."

On astrological talismans the figure of Mercury, engraved upon silver, which is the corresponding metal, and according to the prescribed rites, gave success in merchandise; that of Mars gave victory to the soldier; that of Venus, beauty, and so of the rest. All such talismans were seen as more powerful during the hour of their planet's ascendency.

Writing of talismans in his book The Occult Sciences (1891), A. E. Waite stated:

"1. The Talisman of the Sun must be composed of a pure and fine gold, fashioned into a circular plate, and well polished on either side. A serpentine circle, enclosed by a pentagram must be engraved on the obverse side with a diamond-pointed graving tool. The reverse must bear a human head in the centre of the six-pointed star of Solomon, which shall itself be surrounded with the name of the solar intelligence Pi-Rhé, written in the characters of the Magi. This talisman is supposed to insure to its bearer the goodwill of influential persons. It is a preservative against death by heart disease, syncope, aneurism, and epidemic complaints. It must be composed on a Sunday during the passage of the moon through the first ten degrees of Leo, and when that luminary is in a favourable aspect with Saturn and the Sun. The consecration consists in the exposure of the talisman to the smoke of a perfume composed of cinnamon, incense, saffron, and red sandal, burnt with laurel-wood, and twigs of desiccated heliotrope, in a new chafing-dish, which must be ground into powder and buried in an isolated spot, after the operation is finished. The talisman must be afterwards encased in a satchel of bright yellow silk, which must be fastened on the breast by an interlaced ribbon of the same material, tied in the form of a cross. In all cases the ceremony should be preceded by the conjuration of the Four, to which the reader has already been referred. The form of consecration, accompanied by sprinkling with holy water, may be rendered in the following manner:—

"In the name of Elohim, and by the spirit of the living waters, be thou unto me as a sign of light and a seal of will.

"Presenting it to the smoke of the perfumes:—By the brazen serpent before which fell the serpents of fire, be thou unto me as a sign of light and a seal of will.

"Breathing seven times upon the talisman:—By the firmament and the spirit of the voice, be thou unto me as a sign of light and a seal of will.

"Lastly, when placing some grains of purified earth or salt upon the pentacle:—In the name of the salt of the earth and by virtue of the life eternal, be thou unto me as a sign of light and a seal of will.

"2. The Talisman of the Moon should be composed of a circular and well-polished plate of the purest silver, being of the dimensions of an ordinary medal. The image of a crescent, enclosed in a pentagram, should be graven on the obverse side. On the reverse side, a chalice must be encircled by the duadic seal of Solomon, encompassed by the letters of the lunar genius Pi-Job. This talisman is considered a protection to travellers, and to sojourners in strange lands. It preserves from death by drowning, by epilepsy, by dropsy, by apoplexy, and madness. The danger of a violent end which is predicted by Saturnian aspects in horoscopes of nativity, may be removed by its means. It should be composed on a Monday, when the moon is passing through the first ten degrees of Capricornus or Virgo, and is also well aspected with Saturn. Its consecration consists in exposure to a perfume composed of white sandal, camphor, aloes, amber, and pulverized seed of cucumber, burnt with desiccated stalks of mugwort, moonwort, and ranunculus, in a new earthen chafing-dish, which must be reduced, after the operation, into powder, and buried in a deserted spot. The talisman must be sewn up in a satchel of white silk, and fixed on the breast by a ribbon of the same colour, interlaced and tied in the form of a cross.

"3. The Talisman of Mars must be composed of a well-polished circular plate of the finest iron, and of the dimensions of an ordinary medal. The symbol of a sword in the centre of a pentagram must be engraved on the obverse side. A lion's head surrounded by a six-pointed star must appear on the reverse face, with the letters of the name Erotosi, the planetary genius of Mars, above the outer angles. This talisman passes as a preservative against all combinations of enemies. It averts the chance of death in brawls and battles, in epidemics and fevers, and by corroding ulcers. It also neutralizes the peril of a violent end as a punishment for crime when it is foretold in the horoscope of the nativity.

"This talisman must be composed on a Tuesday, during the passage of the moon through the ten first degrees of Aries or Sagittarius, and when, moreover, it is favourably aspected with Saturn and Mars. The consecration consists in its exposure to the smoke of a perfume composed of dried absinth and rue, burnt in an earthen vessel which has never been previously used, and which must be broken into powder, and buried in a secluded place, when the operation is completed. Finally, the talisman must be sewn up in a satchel of red silk, and fastened on the breast with ribbons of the same material folded and knotted in the form of a cross.

"4. The Talisman of Mercury must be formed of a circular plate of fixed quicksilver, or according to another account of an amalgam of silver, mercury, and pewter, of the dimensions of an ordinary medal, well-polished on both sides. A winged caduceus, having two serpents twining about it, must be engraved in the centre of a pentagram on the obverse side. The other must bear a dog's head within the star of Solomon, the latter being surrounded with the name of the planetary genius, Pi-Hermes, written in the alphabet of the Magi. This talisman must be composed on a Wednesday, when the moon is passing through the ten first degrees of Gemini or Scorpio, and is well aspected with Saturn and Mercury. The consecration consists in its exposure to the smoke of a perfume composed of benzoin, macis, and storax, burnt with the dried stalks of the lily, the narcissus, fumitory, and marjolane, placed in a clay chafing-dish which has never been devoted to any other purpose, and which must, after the completion of the task, be reduced to powder and buried in an undisturbed place. The Talisman of Mercury is judged to be a defence in all species of commerce and business industry. Buried under the ground in a house of commerce, it will draw customers and prosperity. It preserves all who wear it from epilepsy and madness. It averts death by murder and poison; it is a safeguard against the schemes of treason; and it procures prophetic dreams when it is worn on the head during sleep. It is fastened on the breast by a ribbon of purple silk folded and tied in the form of a cross, and the talisman is itself enclosed in a satchel of the same material.

"5. The Talisman of Jupiter must be formed of a circular plate of the purest English pewter, having the dimensions of an ordinary medal, and being highly polished on either side. The image of a four-pointed crown in the centre of a pentagram must be engraved on the obverse side. On the other must be the head of an eagle in the centre of the six-pointed star of Solomon, which must be surrounded by the name of the planetary genius Pi-Zéous, written in the arcane alphabet.

"This talisman must be composed on a Thursday, during the passage of the moon through the first ten degrees of Libra, and when it is also in a favourable aspect with Saturn and Jupiter. The consecration consists in its exposure to the smoke of a perfume composed of incense, ambergris, balm, grain of Paradise, saffron, and macis, which is the second coat of the nutmeg. These must be burnt with wood of the oak, poplar, fig tree, and pomegranate, and placed in a new earthen dish, which must be ground into powder, and buried in a quiet spot, at the end of the ceremony. The talisman must be wrapped in a satchel of sky-blue silk, suspended on the breast by a ribbon of the same material, folded and fastened in the form of a cross.

"The Talisman of Jupiter is held to attract to the wearer the benevolence and sympathy of everyone. It averts anxieties, favours honourable enterprises, and augments well-being in proportion to social condition. It is a protection against unforeseen accidents, and the perils of a violent death when it is threatened by Saturn in the horoscope of nativity. It also preserves from death by affections of the liver, by inflammation of the lungs, and by that cruel affection of the spinal marrow, which is termed tabes dorsalis in medicine.

"6. The Talisman of Venus must be formed of a circular plate of purified and well-polished copper. It must be of the ordinary dimensions of a medal, perfectly polished on both its sides. It must bear on the obverse face the letter G inscribed in the alphabet of the Magi, and enclosed in a pentagram. A dove must be engraved on the reverse, in the centre of the six-pointed star, which must be surrounded by the letters which compose the name of the planetary Genius Suroth. This talisman must be composed on a Friday, during the passage of the moon through the first ten degrees of Taurus or Virgo, and when that luminary is well aspected with Saturn and Venus. Its consecration consists in its exposure to the smoke of a perfume composed of violets and roses, burnt with olive wood in a new earthen chafing-dish, which must be ground into powder at the end of the operation and buried in a solitary spot. The talisman must, finally, be sewn up in a satchel of green or rose-coloured silk, which must be fastened on the breast by a band of the same material, folded and tied in the form of a cross.

"The Talisman of Venus is accredited with extraordinary power in cementing the bonds of love and harmony between husbands and wives. It averts from those who wear it the spite and machinations of hatred. It preserves women from the terrible and fatal diseases which are known as cancer. It averts from both men and women all danger of death, to which they may be accidentally or purposely exposed. It counterbalances the unfortunate presages which may appear in the horoscope of the nativity. Its last and most singular quality is its power to change the animosity of an enemy into a love and devotion which will be proof against every temptation, and it rests on the sole condition that such a person should be persuaded to partake of a liquid in which the talisman has been dipped.

"7. The Talisman of Saturn must be composed of a circular plate of refined and purified lead, being of the dimensions of an ordinary medal, elaborately polished. On the obverse side must be engraved with the diamond-pointed tool which is requisite in all these talismanic operations, the image of a sickle enclosed in a pentagram. The reverse side must bear a bull's head, enclosed in the star of Solomon, and surrounded by the mysterious letters which compose, in the alphabet of the Magi, the name of the planetary Genius Tempha. The person who is intended to wear this talisman must engrave it himself, without witnesses, and without taking any one into his confidence.

"This talisman must be composed on a Saturday when the moon is passing through the first ten degrees of Taurus or Capricorn, and is favourably aspected with Saturn. It must be consecrated by exposure to the smoke of a perfume composed of alum, assa-foetida, cammonée, and sulphur, which must be burnt with cypress, the wood of the ash tree, and sprays of black hellebore, in a new earthen chafing-dish, which must be reduced into powder at the end of the performance, and buried in a deserted place. The talisman must, finally, be sewn up in a satchel of black silk and fastened on the breast with a ribbon of the same material, folded and tied in the form of a cross. The Talisman of Saturn was affirmed to be a safeguard against death by apoplexy and cancer, decay in the bones, consumption, dropsy, paralysis, and decline; it was also a preservative against the possibility of being entombed in a trance, against the danger of violent death by secret crime, poison, or ambush. If the head of the army in war-time were to bury the Talisman of Saturn in a place which it was feared might fall into the hands of the enemy, the limit assigned by the presence of the talisman could not be overstepped by the opposing host, which would speedily withdraw in discouragement, or in the face of a determined assault."

Sources:

Beard, Charles R. Lucks and Talismans: A Chapter of Popular Superstition. London: Sampson, Low, 1934. Reprint, New York: Blom, 1972.

Budge, E. A. W. Amulets and Superstitions. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1930. Reprinted as Amulets and Talismans. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1961.

Fosbrook, Thomas D. Encyclopedia of Antiquities. 2 vols. N.p., 1825, 1840.

Lamb, Geoffrey. Discovering Magic Charms and Talismans. UK: Shire Publications, 1974.

Lippman, Deborah, and Paul Colin. Amulets, Charms and Talismans: What They Mean and How to Use Them. New York: M. Evans, 1974.

Lockhart, J. G. Curses, Lucks and Talismans. London: Geoffrey Bles, 1938. Reprint, Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1971.

Pavitt, W. T., and Kate Pavitt. The Book of Talismans, Amulets, and Zodiacal Gems. London: Rider, 1914. Reprint, Detroit: Tower Books, 1971. Reprint, North Hollywood, Calif.: Wilshire Publishing, 1972.

Regardie, Israel. How to Make and Use Talismans. London: Aquarian Press; New York: Samuel Weiser, 1972.

Sepharial [W. G. Old]. The Book of Charms and Talismans. London: W. Foulsham, 1923. Reprint, New York: Arco, 1971.

Waite, A. E. The Occult Science. London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., 1891.

Talking Mongoose

A celebrated paranormal phenomenon from Cashen's Gap on the Isle of Man, United Kingdom. It was investigated by psychical researchers Harry Price and R. S. Lambert in the 1930s. Named "Gef," the mongoose manifested to the Irving family, and there is some doubt whether it was a real creature or a poltergeist phenomenon.

Sources:

Price, Harry, and R. S. Lambert. The Haunting of Cashen's Gap. London, 1936.

Tallmadge, Nathaniel Pitcher (1795–1864)

United States senator from 1833–34, governor of Wisconsin from 1844–46, and one of the early converts to Spiritualism. His experiences with the Fox sisters, recounted in a letter to a friend under the date April 12, 1853, were published in most of the newspapers of the time. He stated that he had received messages in direct writing from the spirit of John Calhoun and also witnessed very strong physical manifestations, notably the levitation of a table with himself on top of it. He also reported experiences in his own household. His thirteen-year-old daughter, who never touched the piano, began to play classical works and popular airs in trance.

In April 1854, a memorial was presented in Congress by James Shields, asking for an inquiry into the truth of Spiritualism. Tallmadge's name topped the list of the 13,000 signatures that were attached. Tallmadge contributed an introduction to The Healing of the Nations by automatic writing medium Charles Linton, published in 1855 by The Society for the Diffusion of Spiritual Knowledge. He died November 2, 1864.

Sources:

Brown, Slater. The Heyday of Spiritualism. New York: Hawthorn Books, 1970.

Jackson, Herbert G., Jr. The Spirit Rappers. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1972.

Pond, Mariam Buckner. Time Is Kind; The Story of the Unfortunate Fox Family. New York: Centennial Press, 1947. Reprinted as The Unwilling Martyrs. London: Psychic Book Club, 1947.

The Talmud

From the Hebrew lamad, to learn, the Talmud is the name of the great code of Jewish civil and canonical law. It is divided into two portions—the Mishna and the Gemara; the former constitutes the text and the latter is a commentary and supplement. But besides being the basis of a legal code, it is also a collection of Jewish poetry and legend.

The Mishna is a development of the laws contained in the Pentateuch. It is divided into six sedarim or orders, each containing a number of tractates, which are again divided into peraqim or chapters. The sedarim are:

(1) Zeraim, which deals with agriculture;
(2) Moed, with festivals and sacrifices;
(3) Nashim, with the law regarding women;
(4) Nezaqin, with civil law;
(5) Qodashim, with the sacrificial law; and
(6) Tohoroth or Tah, with purifications.

The Mishna is said to have been handed down by Ezra and to be in part the work of Joshua, David, or Solomon, and originally communicated orally by the Deity in the time of Moses.

There are two recensions—the Talmud of Jerusalem and the Talmud of Babylon. The latter, besides the sedarim already mentioned, contains seven additional treatises that are regarded as extra-canonical. The first is supposed to have been finally edited toward the close of the fourth century, and the second by Rabbi Ashi, president of the Academy of Syro in Babylon, sometime in the fourth century. Although revised from time to time before then, both versions have been greatly affected through the interpolation of traditions, and reinterpretations in the light of rabbinical discussions. The rabbinical decisions in the Mishna are entitled helacoth and the traditional narratives haggadah.

The cosmogony of the Talmud assumes that the universe has been developed by means of a series of cataclysms—world after world was destroyed until the Creator made the present earth. E. Deutsch, commenting on the Talmuc in the Quarterly Review, (1867) noted:

"The how of the creation was not mere matter of speculation. The co-operation of angels, whose existence was warranted by Scripture, and a whole hierarchy of whom had been built up under Persian influences, was distinctly denied. In a discussion about the day of their creation, it is agreed on all hands that there were no angels at first, lest men might say, 'Michael spanned out the firmament on the south, and Gabriel to the north.' There is a distinct foreshadowing of the Gnostic Demiurgos—that antique link between the Divine Spirit and the world of matter—to be found in the Talmud. What with Plato were the Ideas, with Philo the Logos, with the Kabalists the 'World of Aziluth,' what the Gnostics called more emphatically the wisdom (sophi), or power (dunamis), and Plotinus the nous, that the Talmudical authors call Metation.

"There is a good deal, in the post-captivity Talmud, about the Angels, borrowed from the Persian. The Archangels or Angelic princes are seven in number, and their Hebrew names and functions correspond almost exactly to those of their Persian prototypes. There are also hosts of ministering angels, the Persian Yazatas, whose functions, besides that of being messengers, were two-fold—to praise God and to be guardians of man. In their first capacity they are daily created by God's breath out of a stream of fire that rolls its waves under the supernal throne. In their second, two of them accompany every man, and for every new good deed man acquires a new guardian angel, who always watches over his steps. When a righteous man dies, three hosts of angels descend from the celestial battlements to meet him. One says (in the words of Scripture), 'He shall go in peace;' the second takes up the strain and says, 'Who has walked in righteousness;' and the third concludes, 'Let him come in peace and rest upon his bed.' In like manner, when the wicked man passes away, three hosts of wicked angels are ready to escort him, but their address is not couched in any spirit of consolation or encouragement."

The Talmud is the supreme repository of Jewish moral and spiritual law; it also enshrines a wealth of historical, geographical, philosophical, and poetical traditions. It is one of the great documents of human history and the central focus of Jewish law.

It has been considered by some authorities that a great many of the traditional tales in the Talmud have a magical basis, and that magical secrets are contained in them, but this depends entirely upon the interpretation put upon them, and the subject is one which necessitates close study. An English translation of the Jerusalem Talmud was published in 1871, and of the Babylonian Talmud (35 vols.), 1935–52.

Tamlin, Sarah (ca. 1848)

One of the very early American rapping mediums, soon after the famous Rochester rappings of the Fox sisters. E. W. Capron visited Tamlin and attended one of her séances at which raps were heard. A table moved in various directions and "was held down to the floor so that it required the whole strength of a man to move it from its position." At that time, the phenomenon of raps spread like a contagion. Harriet Bebee, a girl of sixteen, visited Tamlin and on returning to her own home twenty miles away, the raps broke out again in her presence. And, according to Capron's account, about fifty mediums were soon operating in private circles.

Sources:

Capron, E. W. Modern Spiritualism: Its Facts and Fanaticisms. N.p., 1855.

Tanagras, Angelos (1875–ca. 1970)

An admiral in the Greek Navy who took an active interest in parapsychology. He was born on May 20, 1875, in Athens, Greece. Through his life he authored a number of books on Greek history and legends.

As a young man he became a corresponding member of the Society for Psychical Research, London, as well as various European psychical research societies. He founded and served as the first president (1923 on) of the Hellenic Society for Psychical Research; he edited and contributed to the society's journal, Psychic Research. Tanagras organized the Fourth International Congress of Psychic Research in Athens during 1930, when he worked closely with Hans Driesch and Sir Oliver Lodge.

Tanagras took part in experiments in long distance telepathy, collaborating with Rene Warcollier in France and Gardner Murphy in the United States, as well as experimenters in Italian and British psychic research societies. He studied psychometry in Greece, and contributed various articles on parapsychological subjects to different psychical research journals and one book.

Sources:

Tanagras, Angelos. Destiny and Chance. N.p., 1934.

Tannhäuser

A medieval German legend about how a minstrel and knight of that name, who passed by the Hörselberg (Hill of Venus) and entered therein in answer to a call. He remained there with an enchantress and lived an unholy life. After a time he grew weary of sin, and longing to return to normal living, forswore the worship of Venus and left her.

He then made a pilgrimage to Rome to ask pardon of the Pope, but when he was told by Urban IV himself that the papal staff would as soon blossom as such a sinner as Tannhäuser be forgiven, he returned to Venus. Three days later, the Pope's staff did actually blossom, and the Pope sent messengers into every country to find the despairing minstrel, but to no purpose. Tannhäuser had disappeared.

The story has a mythological basis that has been overlaid by medieval Christian thought, and the original hero of which has been displaced by a more modern personage, just as the Venus of the existing legend is the mythological Venus only in name. She is really a German earth-goddess, Lady Holda.

Tannhäuser was a minnesinger (love-minstrel of the middle of the thirteenth century). He was very popular among the minnesingers of that time. The restless and intemperate life he led probably marked him out as the hero of such a legend as has been recounted.

He was the author of many ballads of considerable excellence, which were published in the second part of the Minnesinger of Friedrich H. von der Hagen (Leipzig, 1838) and in the sixth volume of Moriz Haupt's Zeitschrift für deutsches Althertum (1841). The most authentic version of this legend is given in J. L. Uhland's Alte hoch und niederdeutsche Volkslieder (Stuttgart, 1844–45).

Tantra

A science or sadhana (spiritual practice) based on a vast collection of religious and occult Hindu scriptures that emphasize the shakti (energy of the deity), usually called kundalini, which comes from the goddess. The scriptures are generally in the form of a dialogue between the god Shiva and his wife Parvati. In treatises where Shiva answers the questions, they are called agama; where Parvati answers it is a nigama.

The tantra scriptures represent a cumulation of knowledge dating to ancient times. The majority of texts are written in Sanskrit, but are also found in Pali, Prakit, Tibetan, Hindi, and Bengali. They are considered encyclopedias of esoteric wisdom, covering topics such as creation and destruction of the universe, worship of the gods, spiritual disciplines, rituals, occult powers, and meditations. The tantras also discuss the subtle anatomy of the body including the chakras (spiritual centers) and the connection paths between them through which the kundalini energy travels. The tantras are also supposed to be specially relevant to Kali Yuga (the present age of devolution).

As vast and varied as the scriptures appear, however, they all have one characteristic in common: "an integrative approach to sadhana, with the objective of making the best use of all available resources within and without." Tantra can be considered the holistic approach to spiritual practice.

In opposition to traditional Judeo-Christian and aesthetic Eastern practices, Tantra does not seek to sublimate the flesh to the spirit, the physical to the metaphysical. Instead, tantra seeks to reintegrate all aspects of life, to "dissolve boundaries we've created, the separateness, the diconnectedness and become more connected with all of life."

Since the tantra's purpose is to integrate all aspects of life, it is a practice where numerous varieties of sciences can blend: hatha yoga, pranayama, medras, rituals, kundalini yoga, nada yoga, mantra, yantra, mandala, visualization of deities, alchemy, Aryurveda, and astrology can all comfortably fit within the realm of tantra. But because so many intricate sciences and techniques can be employed, it is usually advised that the tantra is studied under a competent master, who can lead the student through the complex weave of ideas and procedures.

In the West, tantra is often identified with sexuality and sexual practices. Tantric ideas are often used to help individuals and couples transform love making into a more satisfying experience, on the physical, emotional, and spiritual realm. By integrating the male and female aspect of the individual and the couple, tantra is used to raise the sexual union to a reflection of the mystical union between the shiva and shakti aspects of the divine.

A popular knowledge of tantric anatomy came to the West through Theosophy. Western scholar Sir John Woodroffe (1865–1936) wrote several pioneering books on tantra and translated tantric scriptures under a pseudonym, Arthur Avalon. The various systems of tantric yoga based on the tantras have spread in the West through the twentieth century.

Sources:

Avalon, Arthur. The Serpent Power. London: Luzac & Co., 1919.

———. Shakti and Shakta. 3d ed. Madras, India: Ganesh, 1929.

———. Tantra of the Great Liberation (Mahanirvana Tantra). London: Luzac, 1913. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1972.

Chakravarti, Chintaharan. Tantras: Studies on Their Religion and Literature. Calcutta, India: Punthi Pustak, 1963.

Feuerstein, Georg. The Shambala Guide to Yoga. Boston & London: Shambala, 1996.

Greenwell, Bonnie, Ph.D. Energies of Transformation. Valencia, Calif.: Shakti River Press, 1990.

Mookerjee, Ajit. Tantra Art. New York: Random House, 1971.

Mookerjee, Ajit, and M. Khanna. The Tantric Way: Art, Science, Ritual. New York: Graphic, 1977.

Rawson, Philip. Tantra: The Indian Cult of Ecstasy. London: Thames & Hudson, 1974.

Tigunait, Pandit Rajmani "The Living Science of Tantra," Yoga International (May 1998): 22-29.

Williams, Stephen. "Tantra: An Introductory Dialogue with Raymont Powers C.T.T." Gentleman's Quarterly, August 1997, http://home.earthlink.net/-raypows/INTERVIEW.HTM.

Tantric Yoga

A system of Hindu yoga which emphasizes the shakti (sexual energy) associated with the female principle and usually characterized as kundalini.

There are essentially two concentrations of tantric yoga, which can be called the pragmatic and the aesthetic.

The pragmatic level focuses primarily on the sexual act and promotes a sacred style of sexuality which promotes communication, breath, and energy. In concert with the Tantra philosophy, this concentration seeks to enhance the sexual experience through integration of the male and female (shiva/shakti) aspects of each individual, and of the couple together. Hatha yoga (postures), raja yoga (meditation), pranayama (breathing techniques), and other techniques such as coitus reservatus (ejaculation control) and amrita (female ejaculation) are employed to enrich the sexual act. Participants are taught to expand their focus from the second (sexual or svadhisthana) chakra to all seven chakras throughout the body. This cultivates sensitivity and kundalini throughout the body, vastly enriching the sexual experience.

The second concentration focuses on raising the kundalini energy to encompass several areas of life, including the sexual. It follows the philosophy of tantra (meaning to weave, to expand, to spread) by integrating all aspects of life. In this concentration there is no separation of the physical from the metaphysical, the female to the male, of the animate to the inanimate, of the spiritual to the corporeal. The corporeal is not seen as a barrier to spiritual growth, as in many Judeo-Christian traditions, but instead as another source of divine energy. "Whatever is in the body is also in the universe."

In addition to these concentrations of tantric yoga there exists a specifically left-hand or occult pathway of tantric yoga, known as tantrism, that involves a taboo-breaking ceremony with a female assistant. This form of tantrism tends to oppose ascetic forms of yoga that align spiritual development with the denial of the things of the world. Instead of avoiding those things normally eschewed by a sanyassin (a person living the renounced life), the tantric uses those things and converts them into a tool of tantric development. The generally avoided items, called the five "M's" consist of: Madya (wine), Mansa (flesh), Matsya (fish), Mudra (a term implying both parched grain and mystic gesture), and Maithuna (sexual intercourse). From Hinduism, tantric beliefs and practices passed into Buddhism and became a notable part of Tibetan Buddhism.

Knowledge of tantric yoga began to appear in the West in the early twentieth century within the writings of Sir John Woodroffe (who wrote under the pseudonym Arthur Avalon). However, it was not until the 1970s, with the volume of Omar Garrison, that details of the rituals of the left-hand path were written down and published in the West. Subsequently, a number of texts have appeared. A measurable number of modern tantric teachers first became familiar with tantric yoga through Bhagwan Rajneesh (later known as Osho).

Through the twentieth century, a form of sexual occultism usually associated with magician Aleister Crowley arose out of Western ceremonial magic. Because of the common use of sexual intercourse as a means of spiritual attainment in both tantra and Western sex magic, many have assumed that the two are related. As knowledge of the rituals and teaching of each system was made public through the 1980s, however, scholars are now aware that the two practices are quite different in operation and purpose and have very different historical roots.

Although there is acknowledgment between the differences between Western sex magic and tantric yoga, there must exist an understanding that the philosophy of Tantra is missing in most Western tantric yoga. Most often tantric yoga is used as a sort of sexual or marital therapy, which is ultimately missing the goal of enlightenment. News of sexual enhancement advantages has even lured such celebrities as Sting to explore the benefits of tantric yoga.

Besides Western exploitation of tantra there is also controversy surrounding teachers who allegedly take sexual advantage of students. Swami Rama of the Himalayas, for example, faced several allegations of sexual misconduct with his students, prior to his death in 1997. There have been numerous other accounts of sexual improprieties between tantric yoga teachers and their students. These stories act as a reminder of the delicate and often vulnerable relationship that can exist between the spiritual master and the student.

Sources:

Feuerstein, Georg. The Shambala Guide to Yoga. Boston & London: Shambala, 1996

Garrison, Omar. Tantra—The Yoga of Sex. Causeway, 1973. Reprint, London: Academy Editions, 1974.

Grenager, Suzanne Selby, "One Woman's Case for Gurus," Yoga Journal (August 1996): 20-23.

Greenwall, Bonnie, Energies of Transformation, Valencia, Calif.: Shakti River press, 1990

Marques-Riviere, J. Tantrik Yoga. London: Rider & Co., 1940.

Mookerjee, Ajit, and M. Khanna. The Tantric Way: Art, Science, Ritual. New York: Graphic, 1977.

Mumford, John. [Swami Anandakapila]. Sexual Occultism. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1975.

O'Neill, Timothy, "A Fire in the Shadows," Gnosis, (Fall 1990): 26-31.

Rajneesh, Bhagwan Shree. Tantra, Spirituality & Sex. San Francisco, Calif.: Rainbow Bridge, 1977.

Selby, John. Kundalini Awakening. New York: Bantam Books, 1992

Tantra: The Science of Ecstacy. http://www.tantra.com. March 10, 2000.

Vatasyayana. "The Love Teachings of Kama Sutra," The Church of Tantra. http://www.tantra.org/. March 10, 2000.

Williams, Stephen. Tantra: An Introductory Dialogue with Raymond Powers, C.T.T. http://www.home.earthlink.net/-raypows/INTERVIEW.HTM. March 10, 2000.

Yoga Journal Online. http://yogajournal.com/. April 14, 2000.

Tao

Term used in ancient Chinese religious philosophy, signifying "the Way" or pathway of life. The Tao is understood as a unity underlying the opposites and diversity of the phenomenal world. Ching Shen Li (cosmic energy) is manifest in the duality of yin and yang (negative and positive), female and male principles in nature. Yin and yang are also energies in the individual human body and the balancing of these energies is one of the tasks of life. The correct harmony between yin and yang may be achieved through diet, meditation, and a life of truth, simplicity, and tranquillity, identifying with the Tao of nature.

Taoism teaches union with the law of the universe through wisdom and detached action. Special techniques of Taoist yoga normalize and enhance the flow of vital energy in the human body. This yoga is variously named K'ai Men (open door), Ho Ping (unity), and Ho Hsieh (harmony). K'ai Men implies opening the path to the channels of mind, spirit, and body so that they reflect the balance of yin and yang and a harmony with the energy of the cosmos.

Taoist yoga is very similar to the kundalini yoga systems of India, and it is not clear whether such a parallel system originated by direct influence of traveling mystics or by spontaneous rediscovery of basic truths. Both Indian and Chinese yogas are concerned with the control of vital energy, seen as the force behind sexual activity, but which may be diverted into different channels in the body for blissful expansion of consciousness. For centuries the techniques of Chinese yoga were little known in the West; teaching manuals were closely guarded and not translated into Western languages. Teachings were usually transmitted orally from teacher to pupil.

During the twentieth century, and especially since the Chinese Revolution, teachers of Taoism and Chinese yoga have established schools in the United States and published translations of basic Chinese yoga texts. Modern teachers of Chinese yoga include Charles Luk (Lu K'uan Yü) of Hong Kong, who has translated various Chinese Buddhist and yoga texts, and Mantak Chia from Thailand, who studied with Taoist and Buddhist masters and has created a synthesis of their spiritual techniques, in conjunction with classical techniques of T'ai Chi Ch'uan. Together with his wife Maneewan Chia, Mantak Chia has been instrumental in establishing Healing Tao Centers in the United States and Europe that offer a basic self-development course of what is termed Taoist Esoteric Yoga.

In distinction to the philosophical esoteric concept of the Tao, but growing out of it, Taoism as a religious system complete with temples and popular worship, became one of the three major religious systems of China, together with Confucianism and Buddhism.

Sources:

Chang, Chung-Yuan. Tao; A New Way of Thinking. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

Chia, Mantak. Awaken Healing Energy through the Tao. New York: Aurora Press, 1983.

Chia, Mantak, and Michael Winn. Taoist Secrets of Love: Cultivating Male Sexual Energy. New York: Aurora Press, 1984.

Ch'u Ta-Kao, trans. Tao Te Ching. London: Allen & Unwin; New York: Samuel Weiser, 1937.

Lu K'uan Yü. Taoist Yoga: Alchemy and Immortality. London: Rider & Co., 1970.

Soo, Chee. The Chinese Art of K'ai Men. London: Gordon & Cremonesi, 1977.

Suzuki, D. T., and Paul Carus, trans. The Canon of Reason and Virtue. La Salle, Ill.: Open Court, 1913.

Taoism

One of the three major religious systems of ancient China, together with Confucianism and Buddhism. Early Taoism derives from the Tao ("the road" or "the way") teachings of Lao Tzu. The origins and background of Lao Tzu is uncertain; in fact, most details of his life are legendary. Some sources claim Lao Tzu was said born of poor parents in Tau (Honan) under the Emperor Ting of the Kau dynasty (ca. 605 B.C.E.). Others believe he was a philosopher who became disgusted with the world and became a pessimist, later resigning his position in the Record Department and retiring to a monastery. He also allegedly met and was taught by Gautama Buddha, and held discussions with Confucius. The name, Lao Tzu (meaning "Old Master"), may not be an actual persons name but a pseudonym for the philosophers and teachers who developed Taoism as it is known today.

Lao Tzu's book Tao-te-Ching was regarded as a sacred work in North and Central China, but was burned with other writings in 220 B.C.E. It reappeared under the Han dynasty and was reinforced by the teachings of Chuang Tzu, another Taoist classic. It is believed to have been the work of a philosopher of the same name. Lao Tzu was the first to formalize Taoism while Chuang-Tzu developed a more philosophical system, metaphysics, and epistemology. Chuang Tzu's teachings of the Tao is considered to be transcendental, while Lao-Tzu's is considered to be a natural form.

Taoism was originally an esoteric philosophy, concerned with the unity underlying the opposites and diversity of the phenomenal world. Taoism taught union with the law of the universe through wisdom and detached action. The union of cosmic and individual energies is reminiscent of the Vedanta teachings of India.

As central to the Taoist tradition as the concepts of yin and yang are the ideas of Tao and Te ("the power"). Like yin, Tao is often identified with the passive (or wu wei); because the way is often given preeminence over the power. It is said a real seeker of wisdom knows the power (Te) but seeks the way (Tao). One should not strive for wealth or prestige and that aggression is to be avoided.

As part of the Taoists' practice, followers have incorporated lifestyle rituals, such as vegetarianism, herbal and tactile medicinal approaches, good moral conduct, and the use of appropriate incantations, amulets, and charms. T'ai Chi Ch'uan, with its fusion of energetic and relaxed exercise, has provided a means of increasing and enhancing ch'i (or Qi), the vital force of life. The overall goal of Taoists' life is to attain harmony with the Tao. This means one must desire nothing, live simply, and act by not acting. It is a practice where solitude and individualism is cherished and where the "upper classes" of social standing are rejected.

Taoism has also developed its own yoga techniques, which parallel the ancient Hindu system of kundalini yoga. These involved control of ch'i, the force believed to stand behind sexual activity, but which could also be diverted into different channels in the body for blissful expansion of consciousness. The circulation of this generative force in the body, aided by breathing techniques, corresponds with Indian yoga techniques involving pranayama breathing, and the ascent of kundalini energy through the chakras or vital centers of the body. This individual alchemy was variously known as k'ai men (open door), ho ping (unity), or ho hsieh (harmony).

The extraordinary parallels between ancient Indian and Chinese Taoism in its various forms and Hinduism (Vedanta and yoga) do not appear to have been documented by historians. The yoga teachings of China descended from teacher to pupil; it is only in recent times that basic texts have been translated into English. There are now teachers of Chinese yoga in Western countries and centers for instruction. There are also many translations with commentaries of the earlier Tao teachings in the Tao-te-Ching.

Sources:

Bishop, Peter and Darton, Michael. The Encyclopedia of World Faiths: An Illustrated Survey of the World's Living Religions. London: MacDonald and Co., Inc., 1987.

Bynner, Witter, trans. The Way of Life According to Lao Tzu. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1944.

Chang, Chung-Yuan. Tao: A New Way of Thinking. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

Feng, Gia-Fu and English, Jane. Lao Tsu: Tao Te Ching. New York: Vintage Books, 1972.

Hendricks, Robert G. Lao-Tzu: Te-Tao Ching. New York: The Modern Library, 1993.

Hughes, E. R., ed. and trans. Chinese Philosophy in Classical Times. London: J. M. Dent; New York: E. P. Dutton, 1942.

Lu Kuan Yü. Taoist Yoga: Alchemy and Immortality. London: Rider & Co., 1970.

Soo, Chee. The Chinese Art of K'ai Men. London: Gordon & Cremonesi, 1977.

Taoism Information Page. http://www.clas.ufl.cdu/users/gthursby/taoism/. April 4, 2000.

Watson, Burton, trans. Chuang Tzu, Basic Writings. New York: Columbia University Press, 1964.

Weaverville Joss House Temple. http://cal-parks-ca.gov/DISTRICTS/nobuttes/wjhsp/wjhshp127.htm. March 31, 2000.

Targ, Russell (1934–)

Physicist with parapsychological interests. He was born on April 11, 1934, in Chicago, Illinois. He studied at Queens College, New York (B.S., physics, 1954) and completed his graduate study in physics at Columbia University. He worked through the 1960s as a senior physicist (plasma and microwaves) at Technical Research Group, Syosset, Long Island, New York.

In 1972 he entered Stanford Research Institute as a senior research physicist, where he collaborated with Harold E. Puthoff on parapsychological research. Their work on remote viewing (a form of clairvoyance) became well known in 1977 when they published Mind Reach; in this publication they argued for the reality of psychical phenomena. Even earlier on, their work had become controversial because of their experiments with metal-bending attempted by psychic Uri Geller. He and Targ left SRI in 1982 to become partners in Delphi Associates, which attempted to use psychic phenomena for commercial purposes, including predictions of changes in silver prices. He has become president of Bay Research Institute and a staff scientist at Lockheed Research and Development.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Puthoff, Harold E., and Russell Targ. Mind-Reach: Scientists Look at Psychic Ability. New York: Delacorte Press, 1977.

Targ, Russell. The Mind Race: Understanding and Using Psychic Abilities. New York: Villard Books, 1984.

Targ, Russel, and Harold E. Puthoff. "ESP Experiments with Uri Geller." In Research in Parapsychology 1973. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1974.

———. "Information Transmission under Conditions of Sensory Shielding." Nature (October 1974).

———. "PK Experiments with Uri Geller and Ingo Swann." In Research in Parapsychology 1973. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1974.

Targ, Russel, Harold E. Puttoff, and Charles T. Tart. Mind at Large. New York: Praeger, 1979.

Target

Term used by parapsychologists to indicate the object (mental or physical) to which a subject attempts to respond paranormally. A mental target would relate to extrasensory perception, a physical target to psychokinesis.

Tarnas, Richard Theodore (1950–)

Richard Theodore Tarnas, a psychologist and intellectual historian best known for his work with the Esalen Institute, was born on February 21, 1950, in Geneva, Switzerland. His parents were Americans and he grew up in Michigan. His father, a professor of law, encouraged his intellectual pursuits and he completed his high school work at the University of Detroit Preparatory School, operated by the Jesuits. He entered Harvard in 1968 and graduated with an A.B. (cum laude) in 1972. He then entered the doctoral program at Saybrook Institute, the graduate school of psychology in San Francisco, California, and completed his Ph.D. in 1976.

Tarnas was able to travel for several years before settling at Esalen, where he was able to interact with some of the leading minds of the human potentials movement including Stanislav Grof, James Hillman, and Rupert Sheldrake. In 1979 he became Esalen's director of programs and education. While at Esalen he became known for his work on psychedelic therapy. In 1982 he married Heather Malcolm, a Canadian, and the following year left Esalen to enter private practice and to write. The major product of this period was The Passion of the Western Mind (1991), a narrative history of the Western worldview from the ancient Greek to the postmodern.

More recently Tarnas has joined the faculty of the California Institute for Integral Studies in San Francisco, where he became the founding director of the Philosophy, Cosmology, and Consciousness program. The program is indicative of his broad eclectic interests which include the evolution of consciousness, depth psychology, psychedelic research, astrology, and gnosticism. He has, for example, contributed essays furthering the psychological interpretation of astrology and arguing for the importance of astrology in understanding the evolution of the Western mind.

Sources:

Tarnas, Richard T. The Passion of the Western Mind. New York: Harmony Books/Random House, 1991.

———. "The Western Mind at the Threshold." The Astrotherapy Newsletter 3, no.4 (November 1990).

Tarot (or Tarots)

French term for a special pack of playing cards popularly used for the purpose of divination. These cards enjoyed a boost in popularity as a self-discovery tool of the New Age and a development tool among Wiccans and ritual magicians. The derivation of the word tarot is still debated. Some suggest that these cards were named because of the tarotes on the back, that is, the plain or dotted lines crossing diagonally. Some confirmation of this theory is indicated by the German form of the word, a tarock-karte being a card checkered on the back.

Tarot cards form part of an ordinary pack in countries of southern Europe and the name tarocchi is given to an Italian game. In its familiar form, the tarot pack consists of a pack of 78 cards, comprising four suits of 14 cards each (the extra court card in each suit being the Cavalier, Knight, or Horseman) and 22 symbolical picture-cards as atouts or trumps. The four suits, related to the modern hearts, clubs, diamonds, and spades, are swords, cups, coins, and batons (earlier represented as swords, cups, rings, and wands).

The 22 symbolic cards generally picture the Juggler or Magician, High Priestess or Female Pope, Empress, Emperor, Hierophant or Pope, Lovers, Chariot, Justice, Hermit, Wheel of Fortune, Strength or Fortitude, Hanged Man, Death, Temperance, Devil, Lightning-struck Tower, Star, Moon, Sun, Last Judgment, Fool, and Universe. These symbolic designs, which vary slightly from pack to pack according to different traditions, are popularly interpreted as follows: Willpower, Science or Knowledge, Action, Realization, Mercy and Beneficence, Trial, Triumph, Justice, Prudence, Fortune, Strength, Sacrifice, Transformation, Combination, Fate, Disruption, Hope, Deception or Error, Earthly Happiness, Renewal, Folly, and Expiation. These interpretations also vary according to different authorities. In addition, the other cards in the pack are considered to have symbolic significance.

There are many different ways of consulting the cards for divination, but they mostly involve laying out the cards after shuffling and interpreting the indications of the major symbolic cards in their relationship to each other.

Origins

Much speculation surrounds the whole question of the origins of the tarot and its relationship to the present-day set of 52 playing cards. It is not difficult to see symbolic interpretations of the 52 pack in its division into four suits, corresponding to the seasons of the year, 52 weeks, and the symbolic rulers of the court cards. Some writers have connected the pack with the ancient Eastern origins of the game of chess, with its comparable king, queen, and knight. However, within the occult community, many have looked to an origin in ancient Egypt. According to such popular lore, the priests of ancient Egypt invented the tarot cards to represent their secret doctrines and teachings. They escaped the destruction of the Christian era because the book burners did not know what they were. Later, some Egyptians brought them to Rome, and they survived in the courts of the popes and passed to France during the period when the papacy was headquartered in Avignon.

This story of the Egyptian lineage first appeared in the French occult community of the eighteenth century, having been invented by a Protestant minister, Antoine Court de Gébelin (1719–1784). De Gébelin, an occultist and Martinist, had become an early supporter of Franz A. Mesmer's ideas of animal magnetism and an amateur Egyptologist. In 1781, well before the Egyptian hieroglyphics had been deciphered, he published an eight-volume tome Le monde primitif (1781) with his speculative notions. Tarot cards had existed for several centuries in Europe with no speculation about any mysterious foreign or occult connection. But De Gébelin argued, with little evidence, that the word "tarot" actually meant royal road, a derivation he made from the Egyptian words "ta" or "way" and "tosh" or "royal." It should be noted that no such words have been found in the Egyptian language. Along with his essay on the deck, De Gébelin also published another essay by an anonymous friend, the first to label the cards the "Book of Thoth," Thoth being one name for the Egyptian god Horus.

As a result of widespread reading of Le monde primitif, the tarot cards began to be used as divination devices in Paris, though the spread of the practice was slow. It was significant that Francis Barrett did not include any mention of the deck in his 1801 catalog of magical practice, The Magus.

The next important step in the establishment of the occult tarot occurred in the mid-nineteenth century when Éliphas Lévi encountered a deck during his massive reworking of the magical tradition in light of Mesmerist thought. He identified their magical power with animal magnetism, a theory still popular to the present.

In 1853 Lévi published Dogma de la haute magie, in which he first laid out his ideas tying the tarot to the ancient Egyptian teacher Hermes Trismegistus, the legendary author of the Hermetic magical writings. He then tied the cards to the Hebrew magical/mystical Kabala (which he spelled "Qabalah"). He identified the numbered cards with the ten sephiroth. The court cards represented the stages of human life, and the suits symbolized the tetragarmmaton, the four letters that made up the Hebrew name of God. The 22 trump cards were tied to the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet, and all of the Kabbalistic content earlier ascribed to each letter was plowed into the tarot cards.

Lévi used the Marseilles tarot deck, but grew increasingly dissatisfied with it. His early efforts to produce a new deck did not come to fruition, but Lévi did promote his project with an English Mason, Kenneth Mackenzie (1833–1886). Mackenzie, as a leader in the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia, taught tarot to the group of men who were to found the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn (OGD), the organization most responsible for the modern magical revival.

S. L. MacGregor Mathers and his wife, Moina, collaborated on the OGD deck to go along with the order's rituals, most of which he also wrote. He produced one original, which was given to each member as they reached the grade of Adapts Minor, who in turn made their own personal copy. It is this deck that was described by Aleister Crowley in his journal, The Equinox. It was finally published in 1978.

Possibly the most important deck to date to come out of the OGD was that produced by Arthur Edward Waite in collaboration with Pamela Coleman-Smith. It was released in 1910 to accompany Waite's The Key to the Tarot (later reissued as The Pictorial Key to the Tarot) and went on to become the most popular deck for divinatory purposes in the twentieth century. Paul Foster Case (1884–1954), an OGD member who later founded the Builders of the Adytum, developed a deck, based in large part upon the Waite-Smith cards, in collaboration with Jessie Burns Parks. The deck was published in 1931.

Finally, in 1938, Aleister Crowley (1875–1947), who left the OGD and published many of its secrets, began a collaboration with Freda Harris to embody the thelemic magick of the Ordo Templi Orientis. They used both the OGD and Waite-Smith deck, but both the art and concepts went far beyond either. While the original art work was displayed at an art gallery during World War II, and a limited edition of 200 decks appeared in 1944, the Crowley-Harris tarot did not reach the public until it was finally published in 1969 by Samuel Weiser. This deck is the only one to challenge the Waite-Smith deck's popularity.

Gypsy Origins

One hypothesis, which parallelled the idea of Egyptian origins and has likewise been largely disproved, concerned the mysterious Gypsies. The idea that the tarot was introduced into Europe by the Gypsies of the Middle Ages was first suggested by an anonymous friend of de Gébelin's in the eighteenth century. It was championed in the next century by J. F. Vaillant, who had lived for many years among the Gypsies and who had been instructed by them in their traditional lore. He tied the word "tarot" to the Hungarian Gypsy tar (pack of cards), and claimed that ancient esoteric symbolism found its way throughout Europe through Gypsy migrations. Vaillant incorporated what he had been told in his books Les Rômes, histoire vraie des vrais Bohémiens (1857), La Bible des Bohémiens (1860), and La Clef Magique de la Fiction et du Fait (1863). Vaillant's theory was endorsed by the French writer "Papus" (penname of Gérald Encausse) in his book Le Tarot des Bohémiens: Le plus ancien livre du Monde, (1899) (English edition as The Tarot of the Bohemians, 1919) in which he claimed that the tarot was the absolute key to occult science. Papus notes, "the Gypsy pack of cards is a wonderful book according to Court de Gébelin and Vaillant. This pack, under the names of Tarot, Thora, and Rota, has formed the basis of the synthetic teaching of all the ancient nations successively.

The British legal authority De l'Hoste Ranking, writing in 1908, adds:

"I would submit that from internal evidence we may deduce that the tarots were introduced by a race speaking an Indian dialect; that the form of the Pope shows they had been long in a country where the orthodox Eastern Church predominated; and the form of head-dress of the king, together with the shape of the eagle on the shield, shows that this was governed by Russian Grand Dukes, who had not yet assumed the Imperial insignia. This seems to me confirmatory of the widespread belief that it is to the Gypsies we are indebted for our knowledge of playing-cards."

In 1865, E. S. Taylor added his support to the same hypothesis in his book The History of Playing Cards. However, W. H. Willshire, in his book A Descriptive Catalogue of Playing and Other Cards in the British Museum (1876), questioned Taylor's conclusion, on the ground that "whether the Zingari [Gypsies] be of Egyptian or Indian origin, they did not appear in Europe before 1417, when cards had been known for some time." But this objection is nullified by the fact that the presence of Gypsies in Europe is now placed at a date considerably before 1417. There was, for example, a well-established feudum acinganorum, or Gypsy barony, in the island of Corfu in the fourteenth century. It is also believed that the Gypsies themselves were originally the ancient chandala caste of India.

Coincidental with the occult revival referred to as the New Age movement, the tarot has enjoyed an unprecedented period of popularity. New Agers have seen the tarot as an important additional tool for personal transformation and have interpreted the symbolism as a new map of the subconscious. The New Age approach has spurred the production of a variety of decks that explore different symbolic worlds, offer variant interpretations from the psychological to the Wiccan, and present a broad scope of artistic styles. Traditional tarot cards have gone high-tech, with digital decks for sale on the Internet for those who are curious and willing to spend a few dollars. Some of these digital decks have replaced the customary card suits and symbols (i.e. cups, wands, pentacles, swords, priestesses, magicians) with characters representing modern themes. For example, a "king" in a traditional tarot deck is replaced with a "businessman" in a contemporary deck. These modern versions may attract a broader audience to tarot, however, many will take the practice less seriously than with the more traditional decks.

Sources:

Banzhaf, Hajo. The Tarot Handbook. Stamford, Conn.: U.S. Games Systems, Inc., 1993.

Butler, Bill. Dictionary of the Tarot. New York: Schocken Books, 1975.

Decker, Ronald. A Wicked Pack of Cards: The Origins of the Occult Tarot. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1996.

Douglas, Alfred. The Tarot: The Origins, Meaning and Uses of the Cards. New York: Taplinger; London: Gollancz, 1972. Reprint, London: Penguin, 1974.

Falconnier, R. Les lames hermétiques du tarot divinatoire. Paris, 1896.

Gettings, Fred. The Book of Tarot. London: Paul Hamlyn, 1973.

Huson, Paul. The Devil's Picture Book: The Compleat Guide to Tarot Cards; Their Origins and Their Usage. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1971. Reprint, London: Abacus, 1972.

Hutton, Alice. The Cards Can't Lie: Prophetic, Educational and Playing-Cards. London: Jupiter Books, 1979.

Lévi, Éliphas. La clef des grands mystéres. Paris, 1861.

MacGregor Mathers, S. L. The Tarot: Its Occult Signification, Use in Fortune-Telling and Method of Play. London: George Redway, 1888. Reprint, New York: Gordon Press, 1973.

Ozaniec, Naomi. The Illustrated Guide to Tarot. New York: Sterling Publications, 1999.

Papus. The Tarot of the Bohemians: The Most Ancient Book in the World; The Use of Initiates. 2nd rev. ed. London: William Rider, 1919.

Thierens, A. E. The General Book of the Tarot. London: Rider; Philadelphia: David McKay, 1928. Reprint, Hollywood, Calif.: Newcastle Publishing, 1975.

Waite, A. E. Pictorial Key to the Tarot. London: William Rider, 1911. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1959. Reprint, Blauvelt, N.Y.: Rudolf Steiner, 1971. Reprint, New York: Causeway Books, 1973.

Tarot Network News

A journal serving the community of tarot card readers, Tarot Network News was founded in 1983 by Gary Ross. Ross had anticipated the new burst of enthusiasm for tarot cards largely because of the New Age movement and the neopagan Wicca movement. Throughout the twentieth century the tarot deck designed by Pamela Coleman Smith and Arthur Edward Waite and published by Rider & Co. in London (1910) has been the most popular deck. Some alternative decks were based on the Rider-Waite deck, but new designs were increasingly based on different psychologies and worldviews. Several decks adopted Egyptian motifs (including one by Oscar Ichazo, the founder of Arica), and others operated from such widely divergent realms as tantrism, the 1960s counterculture, and surrealism.

Whereas Wiccans adopted tarot decks as simply part of their magic worldview, New Agers began to see the tarot as an important tool for personal transformation. Both movements created an environment in which creation of new tarot decks was seen as an important personal exploratory activity, and readers were encouraged to find a deck that suited their individual personality and concept of truth.

Tarot Network News, 12 issues of which had appeared by 1994, reviews new decks as they appear, discusses the meaning of the cards of the major arcana, and celebrates the expansion of the world of tarot cards. The News also sponsors the Bay Area Tarot Symposium twice annually. Gary Ross continues as editor of the News, which is published by Jack and Rae Hurley. Address: c/o TAROCO, P.O. Box 104, Sausalito, CA 94966.

Sources:

Jensen, K. Frank. "A Decade with Tarot!" Tarot Network News 12 (spring 1994): 24–32.

Tart, Charles T(heodore) (1937–)

Psychophysiologist and parapsychologist. He was born on April 29, 1937, in Morrisville, Pennsylvania. He studied for two years at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) before moving to the University of North Carolina (B.A., 1960; M.A., 1962; Ph.D., 1963). During his student years he also was a research assistant at the Psychophysiology Laboratory, Department of Psychiatry, Duke University Hospital (1958–60). Following his graduation he became a lecturer at Stanford University (1964–65) and at the University of Virginia, School of Medicine (1965–66). This was prior to joining the faculty at the University of California, Davis in 1966. He is currently a professor of psychology at Davis, and the publisher of a quarterly The Open Mind.

Tart's interest in parapsychology manifested while a student in North Carolina when he became a frequent visitor at the Parapsychology Laboratory at nearby Duke University. He became a member of the American Society for Psychical Research and in the 1970s associated with Russell Targ and Harold E. Puthoff in their research at the Stanford Research Institute. He was elected president of the Parapsychology Association in 1977.

Tart's research has ranged across the field of parapsychological concerns and been the subject of numerous papers, but he is possibly most respected for his studies of states of consciousness and transpersonal psychology. This research resulted in two classic volumes Altered States of Consciousness (1969) and Transpersonal Psychologies (1975). Less known, Tart proposed an instrument for automatic testing of ESP, which was constructed at the University of Virginia and named the "ESPATEACHER." It was set up in the Research Laboratory of the American Society for Psychical Research.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Tart, Charles T., ed. Altered States of Consciousness: A Book of Readings. New York: John Wiley & Sons, 1969.

———. The Application of Learning Theory to Extrasensory Perception. 1975.

———. Learning to Use Extrasensory Perception. 1976.

———. On Being Stoned: A Psychological Study of Marijuana Intoxication. Palo Alto, Calif.: Science & Behavior Books, 1971.

———. Psi, Scientific Studies of the Psychic Realm. N.p., 1977.

———. States of Consciousness. N.p., 1975.

———. Transpersonal Psychologies. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

———. Waking Up: Overcoming the Obstacles to Human Potential. N.p., 1986.

Tart, Charles T., and Harold E. Puttoff. Mind at Large. New York: Praeger, 1979.

Tarthang Tulku

One of several Tibetan lamas known as a Tulku (incarnated being) who brought traditional Tibetan Buddhist teachings to the West in the wake of the Chinese takeover of the country. He came to the United States and settled in the San Francisco Bay area early in 1969, bringing with him his wife and a collection of rare Tibetan sacred texts.

With the help of a small group of students, he soon established the Tibetan Nyingmapa Meditation Center in Berkeley. Nyingmapa is one of four Tibetan Buddhism sects with an ancient tradition. It was founded in the eighth century C.E. by Guru Padmasambhava and Shantirakshita. The literature of Nyingmapa is classified as Kama (oral tradition from master to disciple) and Terma (secret books originally concealed by Padmasambhava, such as The Tibetan Book of the Dead.)

Known generally as Rinpoche (precious master), Tarthang Tulku teaches the advanced system of Buddhist doctrine known as Vajrayana. It embodies some teachings of tantra, but is essentially directed at enhancing degrees of understanding and awareness.

Tasseography

A formal term for the branch of fortune-telling of divination by tea leaves.

Tattvic Yoga

Term for the ancient Hindu science of breath, as expounded in one of the earliest texts presenting Hinduism to the West, The Science of Breath and the Philosophy of the Tattvas (1897) by Pandit Rama Prasad. The "breath" referred to is the life-giving breath of Brahman and in it are contained, according to Prasad, the five elementary principles of nature, corresponding to the five senses of man. These principles are known as tattvas, and from them the body and the physical world is composed.

The knowledge of the tattvas is believed to confer wonderful power and to this end all undertakings must be commenced at times that are known to be propitious for the movements of the tattvas or vital currents in the body.

Tavibo

Tavibo, a Native American of the Paiute people, emerged among them around 1869 as a prophet and visionary. He resided in Mason Valley, north of Virginia City, Nevada, in mountainous territory. It was common for the men to go to the mountains to seek vision and revelations from various spirit entities. Whites began to move into the area in the 1860s and the various chiefs and religious leaders among the Paiute were confronted, as had Native people before them, with the problem of losing their land to the new settlers.

Accounts of Tavibo vary, but all agree that he received a new revelation in a set of spiritual visions that offered hope to his contemporaries that the Earth would rise up and consume the whites and the land would be returned to its original state before their arrival. These visions most likely occurred in 1869 or 1870. In possibly the best account, left by a Captain J. M. Lee, an infantry officer on duty in the area in the 1870s, Tavibo had gone into the mountains and had an initial vision in which he was told that the Paiute's situation would be relieved by an earthquake. The Earth would open up and consume the white people. He enlarged upon this prediction in a second vision that suggested that all the humans in the area would be taken into the ground by the quake but that after a short while the Native people would be resurrected.

In a final third revelation, Tavibo said that only those who believed in the prophecy would be resurrected. Unbelievers would join the whites in eternal damnation. Each new revelation brought him some additional followers; however, before he was able to firmly establish his teachings, he died. His movement appeared to die with him and little was heard of it for some two decades. However, in the 1890s, his son Wokova emerged as a new prophet, teaching a variation of his father's message and what became popularly known as the Ghost Dance.

Sources:

Mooney, James. "The Ghost-Dance Religion and the Sioux Outbreak of 1890." In the Fourteenth Annual Report of the Bureau of Ethnology. Compiled by J. W. Powell. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1896.

Taxil, Leo

Pseudonym of Gabriel Jogand-Pagès, a French journalist of the nineteenth century, who sustained a prolonged occult hoax alleging devil-worship amongst French Freemasons.

Taylor, Gordon Rattray (1911–1981)

A British author and broadcaster who served as a member of the Society for Psychical Research, London (1976–81). He was born in Eastbourne on January 11, 1911, and educated at Radley College, Trinity College, and Cambridge University. He worked as a journalist beginning in 1933 and in 1958 joined the British Broadcasting Company where he wrote and devised science television programs. In 1966 he became a full-time author. He had authored a number of books over his lifetime. Taylor died December, 7, 1981.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Taylor, John (Gerald) (1931–)

Professor of applied mathematics at King's College, London, England, who was the first British scientist to investigate the phenomena of Uri Geller. Taylor was born on August 18, 1931, in Hayes, Kent. He won his way into Christ's College, Cambridge at age 16; at 18 he enrolled at Mid-Essex Technical College, where he took his B.Sc. in general science. He completed a three-year mathematics degree course in two years at Cambridge and passed with first class honors. His academic career has included visiting professorships in the United States as well as being Professor of Theoretical Physics at the University of Southampton and a post at King's College, London.

When Uri Geller visited Britain in 1974, Taylor conducted scientific tests of Geller's feats of metal bending and interference with a Geiger counter. Taylor also experimented with some of the children and adults who manifested paranormal abilities after seeing Uri Geller's appearances on British television programs. Taylor's interest in such phenomena was not only in its scientific validation, but also in investigation of the way in which such phenomena take place and the nature of the forces involved. He suggested the phenomena may be some low-frequency electromagnetic effect generated by human beings.

Through the 1970s Taylor was regarded as fully endorsing the paranormal metal bending of Uri Geller, but gradually has made more guarded statements; then in 1980 he largely retracted his support for Geller's paranormal talents. In 1974 he noted, "The Geller effect—of metal-bending—is clearly not brought about by fraud. It is so exceptional it presents a crucial challenge to modern science and could even destroy the latter if no explanation became available." Taylor then spent three years of careful investigation of such phenomena as psychokinesis, metal bending, and dowsing, but could not discover any reasonable scientific explanation or validation that satisfied him. He was particularly concerned to establish whether there is an electromagnetic basis for such phenomena. After failing to find this he did not believe that there was any other explanation that would suffice. Most of his experiments under laboratory conditions were negative; this left him in a skeptical position regarding the validity of claimed phenomena.

In contrast to the endorsement in his first book on psi, Superminds, he published a paper expressing his doubts in a paper in Nature (November 2, 1978) titled "Can Electromagnetism Account for Extra-sensory Phenomena?" He followed this with his book Science and the Supernatural (1980) in which he expressed complete skepticism about every aspect of the paranormal. In his final chapter he stated: "We have searched for the supernatural and not found it. In the main, only poor experimentation [including his own], shoddy theory, and human gullibility have been encountered."

Taylor's new position seems to stem from his failure to find an electromagnetic explanation for paranormal phenomena. In his new book he stated: "We therefore have to accept that when science faces up to the supernatural, it is a case of 'electromagnetism or bust.' " In contrast, John Hasted, another British scientist who has tested Uri Geller, continues to support the reality of the Geller effect and also believes that there is evidence of an electromagnetic field in the phenomenon.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Taylor, John The Horizons of Knowledge. N.p., 1982.

———. Science and the Supernatural. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1980.

———. The Shape of Minds to Come. N.p., 1971.

———. Superminds. London: Macmillan, 1975.

Tea Leaves, Divination by

One of the most popular forms of fortune-telling, depending largely upon psychic intuition. After a cup of tea has been poured, without using a tea strainer, the tea is drunk or poured away. The cup should then be shaken well and any remaining liquid drained off in the saucer. The diviner now looks at the pattern of tea leaves in the cup and allows the imagination to play around the shapes suggested by them. They might look like a letter, a heart shape, or a ring. These shapes are then interpreted intuitively or by means of a fairly standard system of symbolism, such as: snake (enmity or falsehood), spade (good fortune through industry), mountain (journey or hindrance), or house (changes, success).

With the popularity of tea bags, divination by tea leaves has declined somewhat, but the bags can be opened and placed in a tea-pot and brewed in the old-fashioned way. The system can also be used for coffee grounds. This long established popular form of fortune-telling has been given the formal name of tasseography.

Sources:

Fontana, Marjorie A. Cup of Fortune: A Guide to Tea Leaf Reading. Wis.: Fantastic, 1979.

Sheridan, Jo. Teacup Fortune-telling. London: Mayflower, 1978.

Tears Painted on Shutters

It was mentioned in Thomas Pennant's book A Tour in Scotland (1769) that in some parts of Scotland it was the custom, on the death of any person of distinction, to paint on the doors and window-shutters white tadpole-like shapes on a black ground. These were intended to represent tears, and were a sign of general mourning.

Techter, David (1932–)

Museum worker who has written widely on parapsychology. Born October 5, 1932, at Morristown, New Jersey, he studied at Yale University (B.S. geology, 1954). He was an assistant in fossil vertebrates at the Chicago Natural History Museum from 1955 on. He was a member of the American Society for Psychical Research, an associate member of the Parapsychological Association, and an organizer and executive secretary of the Illinois Society for Psychic Research.

He has conducted tests for extrasensory ability with schoolchildren and written many reviews of books on parapsychological subjects.

Sources:

Techter, David. A Bibliography and Index of Psychic Research and Related Topics for the Year 1962. Illinois Society for Psychic Research, 1963.

Teesing, H(ubert) P(aul) H(ans) (1907–1973)

Dutch professor of German literature and former president of the Studievereniging voor Psychical Research (Dutch Society for Psychical Research). He was born on March 6, 1907, in Amsterdam, the Netherlands. He spent his college career at the University of Groningen (B.A., 1932; M.A., German philology and literature, 1935; Ph.D., 1948). After graduation he became a grammar school teacher of German (1935–52) before assuming a position as a professor of German literature and literary theory at the University of Utrecht in 1952. He died August 19, 1973.

Sources:

Teesing, H. P. H. "Mystiek en Literatuur" (Mysticism and Literature). Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie (1959).

Telekinesis

A term denoting the claimed faculty of moving material objects without contact, presumably by psychic force. The movement of objects, without contact or with only limited contact was frequently observed in the séance room. Phenomena included rappings, table-turning, levitations, the conveyance of apports, and other material phenomena. Spiritualists believed these were caused by the intervention of discarnate spirits. Magnetists believed in the existence of some kind of fluidic or energetic emanation as the cause of such movements. Others, discounting those phenomena that were the result of fraud, suggested some form of telekinetic theory, which held that all these varied feats are accomplished by the thoughts of mediums and sitters, independent of muscular energy, whether direct or indirect.

The term has more recently been supplanted by psychokinesis or PK.

Telepathy

Term coined by British psychical researcher F. W. H. Myers in 1882, as a result of his joint investigation with Edmund Gurney, Henry Sidgwick, and William F. Barrett into the possibilities of thought-transference. It was applied to the researchers' concept of "a coincidence between two persons' thoughts which requires a causal explanation," and it was defined as "transmission of thought independently of the recognized channels of sense."

Though the researchers never implied such a connotation, the public assumed that telepathy was an agency of communication between mind and mind, that it was a mysterious link between conscious and subconscious minds, and that it could be used to select intelligence by which incidents from the memories of persons present and familiar or distant and unknown.

The public concept of telepathy became a rival of the spirit hypothesis. This misconception spread so widely that many people considered telepathy to be distinct from thought transference, advancing the following argument:

"In telepathy the transmitter is often unaware that he acts as an agent and the receiver does not consciously prepare himself for the reception. Telepathy cannot be made a subject of experiments, while thought-transference can. Thought-transference is a rudimentary faculty. Telepathy is a well-developed mode of supernormal perception and is usually brought into play by the influence of very strong emotions."

The need for differentiation was acknowledged by the old school of telepathists, too, when they spoke of spontaneous telepathy as distinct from experimental telepathy. Frank Podmore—a hardened skeptic—in his The Newer Spiritualism (1910) suggests that: "Whilst the attempt to correlate the two kinds of phenomena is perhaps legitimate, we can hardly be justified in making the spontaneous phenomena the basis of a theory of telepathy."

Myers argued that telepathy as a faculty must certainly exist in the universe if the universe contains any disembodied intelligences at all. Prayer could be telepathic communion with higher beings, and the basis of sympathy and antipathy may be telepathy. Monitions of approach appear to be telepathic messages. The knowledge of victory or disaster in war that so inexplicably occurred among ancient Greeks may have been telepathically acquired.

Origins of Modern Telepathic Theories

The theory of thought transference is not a new one. Like the theory of gravitation, it is a daughter of astrology, but while gravitation is universally accepted by science, telepathy remains a questionable hypothesis for many. However, it is clear how both sprang from astrology, and one may trace the connection between them.

The wise men of ancient times taught that the stars radiated an invisible influence that held them together in their course and that affected men and events on our planet, receiving in turn some subtle emanation from the earth and its inhabitants. From this idea it was but a step to assume that a radiant influence, whether magnetic or otherwise, passed from one human being to another. The doctrine of astral influence was shared by Paracelsus and his alchemistic successors until the epoch of Sir Isaac Newton, whose discovery of the law of gravitation brought the age of simplistic astrology to a close.

The possible analogy between the mysterious force binding worlds together and the subtle influence joining mind with mind is obvious. The two are vastly different, however, in that while gravitation may be readily demonstrated and never fails to give definite results, experiments in telepathy cannot be depended upon to succeed uniformly even under the most favorable conditions. Nevertheless, the experiments that have been conducted from time to time have more than justified the public interest in telepathy.

In 1882 the Society for Psychical Research (SPR), London, came into being, numbering among its members some of the most distinguished men of the era. Its goal was to elucidate the so-called supernatural phenomena that were exciting so much popular interest and curiosity. Foremost among these was the phenomenon of thought transference.

Viewing their subjects in a purely scientific light, trained in handling of evidence, and resolved to pursue truth with open and unbiased minds, members of the SPR did much to bring a purer and more dignified atmosphere to the study of psychic phenomena. They recognized the untrustworthiness of human nature in general, and the prevalence of fraud, even where nothing was to be gained but the gratification of a perverted vanity. Their experiments were conducted under the most rigid conditions, with every precaution taken against conscious or unconscious deception.

Among the most valuable evidence obtained from experimental thought transference was that gleaned by Professor Henry Sidgwick and his wife Eleanor Sidgwick from their experiments at Brighton in 1889 to 1891. In this series the percipients—clerks and shop assistants—were hypnotized. Sometimes they were asked to visualize, on a blank card, an image or picture chosen by the agent. At other times, the agent would choose one of a bundle of cards numbered from 10 to 90, and the percipient was required to state the number on the chosen card, which was done correctly in a surprising number of cases.

Curiously enough, the results varied in proportion as the agent and percipient were near or far apart, and were affected by the intervention of a door or even a curtain between the two. This was ascribed to a lack of confidence on the part of the percipient, however, or to such physical causes as fatigue or boredom, rather than to the limited scope of the telepathic principle. On the whole it seems probable that chance alone did not account for the number of correct replies given by the hypnotized subject.

Toward the end of the nineteenth century, criticism was leveled at these experiments by F. C. C. Hansen and A. Lehmann, of Copenhagen, who believed that the phenomenon known as "involuntary whispering," combined with hyperesthesia on the part of the percipient, would suffice to produce the results obtained by the Sidgwicks (see Journal of the Society for Psychical Research, vol. 9, p. 113).

This suggested explanation has some merit. If hypnotism causes such a refinement of the senses, may not some elements of hyperesthesia linger in the subconscious of the normal individual? If dreams contain such unusual examples of deduction, may not the mind in waking moments follow a process of reasoning imperceptible to the higher consciousness?

It seems that the "other self," which is never quite as much in the background as we imagine, sees and hears a thousand things of which we are unconscious and that come to the surface in dreams. There is no reason to suppose that it might not see and hear things too slight to be perceived in a grosser sphere of consciousness, and thus account for some cases of thought transference. On the other hand, there is evidence of telepathy acting at a distance where subconscious whispering and hyperesthesia are obviously out of the question.

Unusual Kinds of Telepathy

An example of audibly received telepathy is recorded in an early issue of the Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 1, p. 6): "On September 9, 1848, at the siege of Mooltan, Major-General R______, C. B., then adjutant of his regiment, was severely wounded, and thought himself to be dying, and requested that his ring be taken off and sent to his wife. At the same time she was in Ferozepore (150 miles distant), lying on her bed between sleeping and waking, and distinctly saw her husband being carried off the field, and heard his voice saying 'Take this ring off my finger and send it to my wife.' " The facts of the case were verified and all the names were obtained by the SPR.

The journalist and pioneer Spiritualist William T. Stead often received automatic writing from the living. Thinking of a lady with whom he was in such communication more than once, his hand wrote:

"I am very sorry to tell you that I have had a very painful experience of which I am almost ashamed to speak. I left Haslemere at 2:27 P.M. in a second-class carriage, in which there were two ladies and one gentleman. When the train stopped at Godalming, the ladies got out, and I was left alone with the man. After the train started he left his seat and came close to me. I was alarmed, and repelled him. He refused to go away and tried to kiss me. I was furious. We had a struggle. I seized his umbrella and struck him, but it broke, and I was beginning to fear that he would master me, when the train began to slow up before arriving at Guildford Station. He got frightened, let go of me, and before the train reached the platform he jumped out and ran away. I was very much upset. But I have the umbrella."

Stead sent his secretary to the lady with a note that he was very sorry to hear what had happened and added, "Be sure and bring the man's umbrella on Wednesday." She wrote in reply: "I am very sorry you know anything about it. I had made up my mind to tell nobody. I will bring the broken umbrella, but it was my umbrella, not his." The lady's decision not to tell of the painful evidence suggests that a telepathic message may not only be unconscious, but may directly counteract the desire of the conscious mind.

In many instances of cross-correspondence, where two or more people receive part of a message that only becomes clear when the parts are placed together, telepathy between the receivers would furnish an alternative to the spirit hypothesis.

The working of telepathy is apparently demonstrated in certain cases of suggestion. Hypnotization has been claimed to be effected at a distance. Myers called it telepathic hypnotism.

The Wave Theory

In his presidential address to the British Association for the Advancement of Science in September 1898, Sir William Crookes said:

"If telepathy takes place we have two physical facts—the physical change in the brain of A, the suggester, and the analogous change in the brain of B, the recipient of the suggestion. Between these two physical events there must exist a train of physical causes. . . . [and] with every fresh advance in knowledge it is shown that ether vibrations have powers and attributes abundantly equal to any demand— even to the transmission of thought."

He believed that these ether waves were of small amplitude and greater frequency than x-rays and continually passed between human brains, arousing an image in the second brain that is similar to the image in the first.

Damaging to this theory is the fact that the intensity of waves—any waves—diminishes with distance and that the telepathic image may not only be very vivid despite the remoteness of the agent, but that the picture is often modified or symbolical. A dying man may appear to the percipient in a normal state of health. As Myers noted: "Mr. L. dies of heart disease when in the act of lying down undressed in bed. At or about the same time Mr. N. J. S. sees Mr. L. standing beside him with a cheerful air, dressed for walking and with a cane in his hand. One does not see how a system of undulations could have transmuted the physical facts in this way."

In cases of collective reception, an added difficulty is presented. Why should only a few people in a room be sensitive to the waves and other strangers outside the room not at all receptive? Why should a crystal gazer get a telepathic message at the time of his own choosing, when he happens to look into the crystal? How can the pictures in the crystal sometimes be seen by others if they are only produced in his brain through telepathy?

In his book The Survival of Man (1909), Sir Oliver Lodge asserts that the experimental evidence was not sufficient to substantiate the nonphysical nature of thought transference. He had no doubt of its reality, and as early as 1903 he stated in an interview to the Pall Mall Magazine: "What we can take before the Royal Society, and what we can challenge the judgment of the world upon, is Telepathy."

Hereward Carrington suggested that telepathic manifestations may take place through a superconscious mind, that there may be a "mentiferous ether," as some writers have suggested, that carries telepathic waves, and that there is a species of spiritual gravitation uniting life throughout the universe, as physical gravity binds together all matter.

In the 1920s the Italian researcher Prof. F. Cazzamali of the University of Milan conducted experiments that appeared to show that the human brain emits short waves of high frequency under the stress of emotion. In an insulated all-metal room, he carried out a number of experiments inducing, by means of suggestion, an emotional crisis in his subjects. Delicate receivers placed in the room registered cerebral radiation in the form of waves, which were also recorded on photographic plates. The reports were published in the Revue Métapsychique, but were severely criticized. The wave theory of telepathy remains unproven, and psychical researchers have now largely discarded it, although a few modern Soviet investigators suggested an electromagnetic theory of telepathy.

Animals and Telepathy

There is some evidence indicating that telepathy is not restricted to humans. Among the better cases of telepathy from animal to man is one furnished by the novelist H. Rider Haggard in the Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (October 1904). Mrs. Haggard heard her husband groaning and emitting inarticulate sounds like the moaning of a wounded animal during the night of July 7, 1904. She woke him and her husband told her his dream. It consisted of two distinct parts:

In the first, the novelist only remembered having experienced a sense of grievous oppression, as though he were in danger of suffocation. Between the moment when he heard his wife's voice and that in which he regained full consciousness, the dream became much more vivid. He states: "I saw good old Bob [his dog] lying on his side among brushwood by water. My own personality seemed to me to be arising in some mysterious manner from the body of the dog, who lifted up his head at an unnatural angle against my face. Bob was trying to speak to me, and not being able to make himself understood by sounds, transmitted to my mind in an undefined fashion the knowledge that he was dying."

Bob was found dead four days later, floating in the river, his skull crushed in, and his legs broken. He had been struck by a train on a bridge and thrown into the water. His bloodstained collar was found on the bridge the morning after the dream.

William J. Long, in his book How Animals Talk (1922), produces many examples of a telepathic faculty in animals. He notes that if a mother wolf cannot head off a runaway cub because there is too much distance between them, she simply stops quiet, lifts her head high, and looks steadily at the running cub. He will suddenly waver, halt, whirl, and speed back to the pack. The famous case of the Elberfeld horses also suggests that telepathy may operate between animals and humans, and Edmund Selous, in his book Thought Transference—or What?—in Birds (1931), records many observations on the subject from bird life.

Telepathy vs. Survival

Obviously the role of telepathy is of some importance to any understanding of the paranormal, but those who tried to find in it an all-inclusive solution to paranormal manifestations faced great difficulties. If a telepathic message is followed by motor movements—for instance, the announcement of a death in automatic writing—the question is, Who executes the movements—the subconscious self or the agent who sends the message? Similar uncertainty applies if the reception of a telepathic message is accompanied by telekinetic movements.

Frank Podmore, the author of Apparitions and Thought Transference (1894)—which deals with the accumulated evidence for telepathy—became the great exponent of the theory that all apparitions could be explained as "telepathic hallucinations." F. W. H. Myers, on the other hand, was among the first to argue that telepathy was an insufficient explanation for apparitions. Being forced to concede that collective perception of phantasmal appearances called for something objective, he worked out a theory of "psychical invasion"—the creation of a "phantasmogenetic" center in the percipients' surroundings.

The theory was midway between telepathic and spirit explanations, and it accounted for many freakish phantasmal manifestations for which no satisfactory solution had yet been offered.

Early in the twentieth century, the problem of whether to admit telepathy could occur in both the living and the dead plagued researchers. Apparitions of the dying border between telepathy with the living and telepathy from the dead. A similar phenomenon that lacks all the conditions for evidence of telepathy is visions of the dead appearing to the dying.

The strain on the telepathic theory grew with instances that made the acquisition of certain knowledge by telepathic process wildly improbable but were easily understood on the basis of the survival theory. The question was not only how certain information could have been acquired, but also why it was associated with definite personalities or disclosed in a personified form.

In the Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 35, 1926), S. G. Soal tells how, in a séance with Blanche Cooper, a voice came through, claiming to be his deceased brother. As proof of identity the voice told him that a year before in a playhut at home he had buried a lead disk which he would probably find if he dug there. Soal was satisfied that none of his brother's surviving acquaintances knew of the incident, and dug and found the disk.

Nevertheless, he argued that this might have been a case of telepathic transmission in his brother's earthly life, the knowledge having remained latent in his own subconscious mind. If yet another person had figured in the telepathic chain it would have been an example of the so-called three-way telepathy first advanced by Andrew Lang in his discussion of the case of the medium Leonora Piper (Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, vol. 15, pp. 48–51).

Hugh J. Browne's book The Holy Truth (1876) contains the story of his two sons, who drowned. One, in a communication through the medium George Spriggs, told the detailed story of their fatal pleasure cruise and added that his brother's arm had been torn off by a great shark. This information could not have been telepathically conveyed by anyone living, except by the shark, yet it was found to be true. The shark was caught two days later, and a man testified to Sir Arthur Conan Doyle that he cut the shark open and found an arm, part of a waistcoat, and a watch, which were identified as belonging to the dead youth. The watch had stopped at the exact hour at which the brothers were engulfed by the sea.

There are many cases on record in which missing wills and other lost property were found through alleged spirit intervention. F. Bligh Bond's in The Gate of Remembrance (1920) records an incident in which an entire chapel was found. The Glastonbury Abbey was in ruins; every trace of the Edgar Chapel was lost, and very little was known about its location and precise dimensions. Nevertheless, in automatic writing a series of communications came through, giving detailed information. When excavations were undertaken in 1908, a year after the communications were received, the chapel was found. (For a critical view of this case see G. W. Lambert's "The Quest of Glastonbury" in the Journal of the Society for Psychical Research, June 1966).

The personal element puts insurmountable obstacles in the way of telepathic explanation in the following case recorded by the psychical researcher Ernesto Bozzano in notes on the July 14, 1928, sitting at Millesimo Castle, Italy. An unknown voice, in Genoese dialect, addressed sitter Gino Gibelli, saying, "I am Stefano's father. You must tell my son that I insist on his giving the message to Maria with which I entrusted him. He has not carried out my request in the slightest degree." Signor Gibelli explained that he had been in Genoa a month before. In a séance there the father had communicated with the son and charged him with a message to his mother. Very probably the young man had not dared to carry out this request. Gibelli stated that he had completely forgotten the incident, that it had nothing to do with him personally and did not interest him in the slightest degree. He was not thinking of Stefano's father, whom he did not know in life, and was unaware that the request that the father had made to his son had not been carried out.

Some aspects of spirit communication strongly suggest that telepathy was not the means by which the medium gained knowledge. Telepathy makes no allowance for false or confused information, and it does not explain the communicator's loss of the concept of time, nor the individual style of the different spirit controls (i.e., the biblical manner of "Imperator," or "George Pelham's" impatience as he spoke through Leonora Piper). In spirit communications, names are often spelled inaccurately, giving, for instance, "Margaret" instead of "Maggie." Telepathy cannot reveal coming events, and it cannot explain how the spirits of children, if recently dead, ask for their toys and act childishly, yet behave years later as adults although no such memory of them is retained in any living mind.

If a medium operated by means of telepathy, he would have to be omniscient. There is no need for the supposition of omniscience if a telepathic message may originate as well from the dead as from the living. Once this admission is made one can well understand the futility of the "brain wave" theory. A discarnate spirit has no physical brain. The message must come from the spirit and not from the percipient. If it may come from the spirit as an agent, it may be received by the medium's spirit and transmitted to his brain.

The insufficiency of the telepathic explanation has also been demonstrated by hundreds of strange cross correspondences and newspaper and book tests.

Many post-mortem letters have been preserved by the Society for Psychical Research and will not be opened until after a communication revealing their contents comes through a medium after the writer's death. It is unlikely that this evidence will ever be conclusive, since in one instance the content of the letter was revealed, apparently through telepathy, by the medium while the writer was still living. The telepathist may always argue that the contents of the letter were subconsciously transferred into another brain while the writer was preparing it.

As proof of survival, cross correspondences are far more conclusive, since the partial messages coming through several mediums are by themselves nonsensical and can only be explained away by the supposition of a conspiracy between several subconscious minds.

The Arguments of James H. Hyslop

Telepathy became a rival of the spirit theory because, according to James H. Hyslop, early twentieth-century head of the American Society for Psychical Research, of the word transmission in the original definition of telepathy. He preferred to define telepathy as "a coincidence excluding normal perception, between the thoughts of two minds." It was the word transmission, Hyslop said, that gave telepathy the implication that "it is a process exclusively between living people and not permitting the intervention of the dead, if the discarnate exist and can act on the living."

Hyslop's definition permits the employment of the term to describe the action of discarnate as well as incarnate minds. Hyslop further concluded, "We are not entitled to assume the larger meaning of telepathy to be a fact because we are not sure of its limitations. Here is where we have been negligent of the maxims of scientific methods and the legitimate formation of convictions."

"Mediumistic phenomena," he writes in his book Contact with the Other World (1919), "too often suggest the action of spirits, to be cited as direct evidence for telepathy. The possibility of spirits and the fact that an incident is appropriate to illustrate the personal identity of a deceased person forbids using it as positive evidence for telepathy. One can only insist that one theory is as good as the other to account for the facts."

About selective telepathy, he argues:

"No evidence has been adduced. . . . and I do not see how it would be possible to adduce such evidence. Every extension of the term beyond coincidences between the mental states of two persons is wholly without warrant. The introduction of the assumption that this coincidence is due to a direct transmission from one living mind to another has never been justified, and as there is no known process whatever associated with the coincidences we are permitted to use the term only in a descriptive, not in an explanatory sense.

"There is no scientific evidence for any of the following conceptions of it: (1) Telepathy as a process of selecting from the contents of the subconscious of any person in the presence of the percipient; (2) Telepathy as a process of selecting from the contents of the mind of some distant person by the percipient and constructing these acquired facts into a complete simulation of a given personality; (3) Telepathy as a process of selecting memories from any living people to impersonate the dead; (4) Telepathy as implying the transmission of the thoughts of all living people to all others individually, with the selection of the necessary facts for impersonation from the present sitter; (5) Telepathy as involving a direct process between agent and percipient; (6) Telepathy as explanatory in any sense whatever, implying any known cause.

"The failures in experiments to read the present active states of the agent and the inability to verify any thoughts outside those states, in the opinion of science is so finite that its very existence is doubted, while the extended hypothesis requires us to believe in its infinity without evidence.

"As a name for facts, with suspended judgment regarding explanation, it is tolerable, but there can be no doubt that spirits explain certain facts, while telepathy explains nothing. At least as a hypothesis, therefore, the spiritistic theory has the priority and the burden of proof rests upon the telepathic theory."

Dr. Richard Hodgson similarly concluded in his second report on the Piper phenomena: "Having tried the hypothesis of telepathy from the living for several years, and the spirit hypothesis also for several years, I have no hesitation in affirming with the most absolute assurance that the spirit hypothesis is justified by its fruits, and the other hypothesis is not."

Telepathy—The Result of Spirit Agency?

Hyslop was not averse to the possibility that spirits might furnish the explanation of telepathy between the living. He stated that Myers saw this implication at the very outset of his investigations into telepathy. Hyslop said that only part of the story was told in the report on the experiments of Miss Miles and Miss Ramsden in long-distance telepathy (Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, vol. 21, pp. 60–93). Miles was an all-round psychic, and in her correspondence with Hyslop she disclosed that she could always tell when her telepathy was successful by the raps that she heard. She said she concentrated on the object Ramsden was to perceive until she heard raps. Raps are not telepathic phenomena, however, and carry an entirely different connotation.

Further, Hyslop stated that in communications through the medium Mrs. Willis M. Cleveland (also known as Mrs. Smead), the deceased Frank Podmore purported to say that telepathy was actually messages carried by spirits and that they could perform it instantly. Had Smead known Podmore, such a misstatement could not have occurred—Podmore always pressed the theory of telepathy between the living to the exclusion of spirits.

The purported spirit of F. W. H. Myers also made a strange allusion through the medium Minnie Meserve Soule ("Mrs. Chenoweth"), saying telepathy "all depended on the carrier." When Hyslop asked for an explanation, the answer was: "Telepathy was always a message carried by the spirits."

A more interesting and elaborate statement reportedly came from the spirit of Margaret Verrall:

"I said yesterday that I would write more about the telepathic theory as I now understand it. I am not sure of the passage of thought through space as I was once, and I had begun to question the method by which thought was transferred to brains before I came here, but you will recall that I had some striking instances of what seemed telepathy tapping a reservoir of thought direct, and the necessity for an intervening spirit was uncalled for; but there were other instances when the message was transposed or translated and the interposition of another mind was unquestionably true. I tried many experiments and I think you must know about them. I will say that I found more people involved in my work than I had known and there seemed more reason to believe that I was operated upon than that I operated, in other words, the automatic writing was less mine than I had supposed."

The dividing line between clairvoyance and telepathy is vague. The telepathic message may take the form of visual or auditory sensation. If the content indicates future events, clairvoyance should be suspected. Past events may be both telepathic communications and the result of a reading by psychometry.

A constructive and evidential resumé of experiments in telepathy is given by Walter Franklin Prince in an appendix to the sixteenth Bulletin of the Boston Society for Psychical Research, published under the title "The Sinclair Experiments Demonstrating Telepathy" (1932).

Parapsychology and Telepathy

From the 1920s on, psychical researchers in both Great Britain and the United States investigated telepathy through intensive laboratory experiments. Card guessing was a favored testing tool, but it was not until the 1930s, after J. B. Rhine popularized the Zener Cards, a pack of five simple symbols (star, cross, circle, rectangle, and wavy lines), that statistical evaluation of experiments was simplified.

Using the Zener cards, experimenters attempted to obtain significant quantitative tests under laboratory conditions. In the experiments by C. W. Olliver with playing cards over some twenty thousand trials, a distinction was made between telepathy (between agent and percipient) and clairvoyance (perception without an agent).

In the modern period of parapsychological research, many aspects of telepathy have been investigated, including such questions as expectation, emotional incentives, and dream telepathy, in addition to the completion of many quantitative and qualitative experiments. So far researchers have not summarized their findings in a way that will definitely establish telepathy as a scientific fact, repeatable on demand. There is reasonable evidence that some telepathy has occurred under laboratory conditions, however.

Certain basic problems remain, such as the disparity in telepathic faculty between different percipients, and the problem of assessing spontaneous telepathy. In the former Soviet Union there was considerable interest in telepathy because of its possible practical applications, and experimenters gave special attention to methods of intensifying visualization on the part of the agent sending impressions to a percipient. In the United States researchers like Andrija Puharich have experimented with high-speed strobe lights on the closed eyes of subjects in order to heighten telepathic impressions.

Sources:

Braddon, Russell. The Piddingtons. London: Werner Laurie, 1950.

Carington, Whately. Telepathy: An Outline of Its Facts, Theory and Implications. London: Methuen, 1945. Reprint, New York: Gordon Press, 1972.

Ehrenwald, Jan. New Dimensions of Deep Analysis; A Study of Telepathy in Interpersonal Relationships. New York: Grune & Stratton, 1954. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1975.

Gurney, Edmund, F. W. H. Myers, and Frank Podmore. Phantasms of the Living 2 vols. London: Trubner, 1886. Reprint, Gainesville, Fla.: Scholars' Facsimiles, 1970. Abr. ed., New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1962.

Hardy, Aleister, R. Harvie, and Arthur Koestler. The Challenge of Chance: Experiments and Speculations. London: Hutchinson, 1973. Reprint, New York: Random House, 1974. Reprint, New York: Vintage Books, 1975.

Hyslop, James H. Contact With the Other World. New York: Century, 1919.

Lambert, G. W. "The Quest of Glastonbury." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 43, 728 (June 1966).

Lang, Andrew. The Making of Religion. London: Longmans, 1898.

Myers, F. W. H. Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death. 2 vols. London: Longmans, Green, 1903. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1975. Abr. ed., New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1961.

Ostrander, Sheila, and Lynn Schroeder. Psychic Discoveries Behind the Iron Curtain. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1970. Reprint, New York: Bantam, 1971. Reprint as Psi: Psychic Discoveries Behind the Iron Curtain. London: Abacus 1973.

Parish, Edmund. Hallucinations and Illusions: A Study of the Fallacies of Perception. London: Walter Scott Publishing, 1897.

Podmore, Frank. Apparitions and Thought Transference. London: Scott; New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1895.

———. The Naturalisation of the Supernatural. New York: George Putnam's Sons, 1908.

———. Telepathic Hallucinations: The New View of Ghosts. London: Milner; New York: Stokes, 1909.

Puharich, Andrija. Beyond Telepathy. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1952. Reprint, Garden City, N.Y.: Anchor Press, 1973. Reprint, London: Souvenir Press, 1974. Reprint, London: Pan Books, 1975.

Rhine, J. B. Extrasensory Perception. Boston: Boston Society for Psychical Research, 1934. Reprint, Boston: Branden, 1964.

Schmeidler, Gertrude R., ed. Extrasensory Perception. New York: Atherton, 1969.

Schwarz, Berthold Eric. Parent-Child Telepathy? Five Hundred and Five Possible Episodes in a Family: A Study of the Telepathy of Everyday Life. New York: Garrett Publications, 1971.

Sinclair, Upton. Mental Radio. The Author, 1930. Rev. ed., Springfield, Ill.: C. C. Thomas, 1962.

Targ, Russell, and Harold Puthoff. Mind-Reach: Scientists Look at Psychic Ability. New York: Delacorte, 1977.

Tenhaeff, W. H. C. Telepathy and Clairvoyance. Springfield, Ill.: C. C. Thomas, 1972.

Thomas, N. W. Thought Transference: A Critical & Historical Review of the Evidence for Telepathy. London: De La More Press, 1905.

Tischner, Rudolf. Telepathy and Clairvoyance. New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1925.

Tyrrell, G. N. M. Science and Psychical Phenomena. New York: Harper, 1938. Reissued with Tyrrell's book Apparitions. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1961.

Ullman, Montague, and Stanley Krippner. Dream Studies and Telepathy: An Experimental Approach. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1970.

Ullman, Montague, Stanley Krippner, and Alan Vaughan. Dream Telepathy. New York: Macmillan; London: Turnstone Books, 1973. Reprint, London: Penguin, 1974.

Vasiliev, L. L. Experiments in Mental Suggestion. London: Institute for the Study of Mental Images, 1963.

———. Studies in Mental Telepathy. CCM Information Corporation, 1971.

Warcollier, René. Experimental Telepathy. Boston: Boston Society for Psychical Research, 1938. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1975.

———. Mind to Mind. Creative Age Press, 1948. Reprint, New York: Macmillan, 1963.

Wilkins, Sir Hubert, and Harold M. Sherman. Thoughts through Space: A Remarkable Adventure in the Realm of the Mind. Hollywood, Calif.: House-Warren, 1951. Reprint, London: Frederick Muller, 1971. Reprint, Greenwich, Conn.: Fawcett, 1973.

Telephone Calls (Paranormal)

The extraordinary claimed phenomenon of telephone calls from the dead, one of a variety of new forms of contact with the dead using modern technology, was raised by parapsychologists D. Scott Rogo and Raymond Bayless in their 1979 book Phone Calls From the Dead. Their research had been stimulated by a report in the September 1976 Fate Magazine from Don B. Owens of Toledo, Ohio, concerning his close friend Lee Epps. They had lived in the same neighborhood for years before Lee moved away and their contact became limited to occasional meetings or telephone calls.

On October 26, 1968 at 10:30 P.M., Don's wife Ethel answered a telephone call and immediately recognized the voice as that of Lee. He said: "Sis, tell Don I'm feeling real bad. Never felt this way before. Tell him to get in touch with me the minute he comes in. It's important, Sis." Ethel tried to ring him back but got no answer; neither did Don when he came in. That evening Don learned that Lee was in a coma in hospital, six blocks from their home and died at 10:30 P.M. It would have been impossible for Lee to have made the call himself in his condition, yet Ethel had immediately recognized his voice.

Although this case was purely anecdotal, without firm supporting evidence, Rogo and Bayless were sufficiently intrigued to follow up the phenomenon of "phone calls from the dead." After collecting a few cases, they wrote an article in the October 1977 issue of Fate Magazine titled "Phone Calls from the Dead?" More cases came to hand and led to a two-year investigation of the claimed phenomenon. It proved peculiarly difficult to establish in a manner acceptable to the present standards of psychical research, since the accounts dealt with spontaneous events, usually without the opportunity of rigid factual verification. Moreover, it was difficult to rule out coincidental hoaxes. Rogo and Bayless concluded, however, that such paranormal phone calls actually did occur and might even be more common than supposed.

A satisfactory theory to explain such cases presents difficulties. On the face of things, if one grants that mediumistic communication is possible through a trumpet at Spiritualist séances, or even by direct voice, the use of a telephone earpiece is hardly more far-fetched, but the prior ringing of the telephone announcing a call is another matter. Is there an actual PK manipulation of the telephone apparatus, or are the ringing tone and the voices actually in the subject's mind? Many individuals have experienced the hallucination of "phantom bells" when they think they hear a door bell or a telephone ringing but find no one there.

In some of the cases examined by Rogo and Bayless, it seemed that the call was placed in a normal way through an exchange that caused the phone to ring. In other cases the phone calls appeared to be placed through long-distance operators. Some subjects reported hearing the familiar "click" at the end of the call as the communicator apparently hung up. Rogo and Bayless suggested PK-mediated electromagnetic effects and discussed the possible relevance to the related phenomenon of Raudive voices or electronic voice phenomenon.

Sources:

Rogo, D. Scott, and Raymond Bayless. Phone Calls From the Dead. Englewood Cliff, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1979.

Teleplasm

An alternative term for ectoplasm.

Teleportation

The paranormal transportation of human bodies through closed doors and over a distance is a comparatively rare but still a thoroughly documented occurrence. It is a composite phenomenon fitting between levitation (frequently reported) and apports (objects which were frequently reported in séances in generations past but which were almost totally fraudulently produced). According to the testimony of the Bible, teleportation is by no means new in human experience. We find in Ezek. 11:1, "Moreover the spirit lifted me up, and brought me unto the East gate of the Lord's house which looketh eastward." Elijah, walking with Elisha, was carried away by a whirlwind. Habakkuk was carried from Judea to Babylon to bring food to Daniel in the lion's den, then carried back to Judea through the air.

In the Acts of the Apostles 5:23, the warders of St. Peter's prison testify: "The prison house we found shut in all safety, and the keepers standing before the doors; but when we opened we found no man within." When St. Philip baptized the Ethiopian, the author of the Acts of the Apostles notes (8:39–40), "And when they were come up out of the water, the spirit of the Lord caught away Philip that the eunuch saw him no more. . . . But Philip was found at Azotus." The distance between Gaza, the scene of the baptism, and Azotus was 30 miles.

Reports of this phenomenon reappeared very early in modern Spiritualism. J. B. Ferguson said from his observation of the Davenport brothers:

"From as good testimony as I have of any fact that I can accept without personal knowledge, I believe that these young men have been raised into the air to the ceilings of rooms, and have been transported a distance of miles by the same force and intelligence, or intelligent force, that has for 11 years worked in their presence so many marvels."

In England, accounts of transportation were published in the Spiritualist press between 1871 and 1874 of Agnes Guppy-Volckman, Charles Williams, and Frank Herne (Spiritual Magazine, July 1871); of Lottie Fowler (The Spiritualist, March 15, 1872); and of F. W. Monck (Spiritual Magazine, 1875), the latter reportedly making an aerial journey from Bristol to Swindon.

Thomas Blyton writes in his reminiscences in Light (April 11, 1931):

"I was present on one occasion at a private home séance at Hackney in London, when without warning or preparation, in total darkness, Mr. Frank Herne was suddenly placed in the midst of the sitters; and after recovering from our surprise and resuming the séance, Mr. Herne's overcoat, hat and umbrella were dropped on the table. John King, speaking in the direct voice, explained that his band of spirit people had found an unexpected opportunity to transport Mr. Herne from where he had been with friends, witnessing a theatrical play that evening; on his appearance at Hackney he was in a semi-conscious condition."

Grave suspicion surrounds the mediumship of Herne and Williams, however, the latter being exposed in fraud on two occasions. In 1876 Monck was imprisoned after his fake materializations were discovered.

Very little evidential value can be attached to the episode in Catherine Berry's Experiences in Spiritualism (1876), according to which, at the studio of Frederick A. Hudson, the spirit photographer, between the hours of 2 and 5 P.M., in the presence of Frank Herne and herself:

"Mr. Williams was seen to descend from the roof of the studio; he fell on the ground very gently. I do not think he was hurt, but sadly frightened. The spirit 'John King' was rather vexed with him for not obeying a summons to come into the studio, and told Mr. Williams that this putting him through the roof bodily was done as a punishment, and he hoped it would teach him not to disobey in the future. We all went immediately to see if there was an opening in the roof, but there was none, and the boards had all the appearance of not having been disturbed."

Guppy-Volckman's transportation must also be called into question. It occurred on June 3, 1871. There were ten witnesses, including the two fraudulent mediums, Williams and Herne, and eight sitters. It was a sequel to Herne's previous questionable transportation to Guppy-Volckman's house. In answer to a witty expressed wish of a sitter, in a moment of time Guppy-Volckman was apparently carried bodily from her home in Highbury (North London) to the house of Williams on Lamb's Conduit Street (West Central London), a distance of over three miles.

The case was the occasion of much facetious comment in the daily press. The Echo printed the only serious report. The story was summed up on the basis of the sitters' written testimony by Abraham Wallace in Light (1918, p. 259) as follows:

"Neither door nor window could have been opened without the admission of light. After various phenomena usual in dark séances had taken place someone asked Katie King, one of the controls, to bring something. Another member of the circle observed, in a joking sort of way, 'I wish you would bring Mrs. Guppy.' Upon which a third remarked: 'Good gracious, I hope not, she is one of the biggest women in London.' Katie's voice at once said 'I will, I will, I will.' Then John's voice was heard to exclaim, 'Keep still, can't you?' In an instant somebody called out: 'Good God, there is something on my head' simultaneously with a heavy bump on the table and one or two screams. A match was struck, and there was Mrs. Guppy on the table with the whole of the sitters seated round it closely packed together as they sat at the commencement. Mrs. Guppy appeared to be in a trance, and was perfectly motionless. Great fears were entertained that the shock would be injurious to her. She had one arm over her eyes, and was arrayed in a loose morning gown with a pair of bedroom slippers on, and in a more or less décolleté condition. When telling me the story, Mrs. Volckman very naturally said how much she disliked having been brought in such a state into the presence of strangers. There was a pen in one hand, which was down by her side. From the first mention of bringing her to the time she was on the table three minutes did not elapse. It seems that Mrs. Guppy had a pen in one hand and an account book in the other. She had been making up her weekly accounts and had just written the word 'onions,' the ink still being wet on the page."

After Guppy-Volckman had shaken off the effect of the shock, the séance was continued with her presence. During this part of the séance, her boots, hat, and clothes arrived from her home, as well as lots of flowers. Both Herne and Williams were levitated and disappeared in turns.

After the séance one Mr. Harrison, editor of The Spiritualist, together with three of the sitters, offered to escort Guppy-Volckman to her home. Then their inquiries convinced them that Guppy-Volckman was really sitting in the room with Miss Neyland, writing her accounts at the time that one of the séance sitters wished her to be brought. Her husband also bore testimony to the fact that his wife, shortly before her disappearance, had been up to the billiard room where he was playing with a friend. This visitor corroborated his statement.

Regarding this visit of inquiry, Frank Podmore states in his book Modern Spiritualism (1902):

"They there learnt from Miss Neyland, a friend of Mrs. Guppy's, who had come out as a medium under her auspices, that an hour or two previously she had been sitting with Mrs. Guppy near the fire making up accounts when suddenly looking up she found that her companion had disappeared, leaving a slight haze near the ceiling."

The report of this marvelous phenomenon gave rise to repetitions.

In another case, the authenticity of which is difficult to establish, the subject of transportation was a sitter in Guppy-Volckman's house. His name was Henderson. Ten sitters held the séance on November 2, 1873. Suddenly it was discovered that Henderson broke the séance chain and disappeared. The doors and windows of the room were locked. About the same moment of his disappearance, he was discovered at a distance of a mile and a half in the backyard of the house of his friend, Mr. Stoke. Nine people noticed his sudden arrival. The night was wet. His boots and clothes were "almost" dry.

There is one transportation case associated with William Eglinton (also cited as a fraudulent medium). It occurred on March 16, 1878, at Mrs. Makdougall Gregory's house. Two other mediums, Arthur Colman and J. W. Fletcher, were present with five sitters. One of the sitters suggested that Colman should be taken through the ceiling. Almost immediately Eglinton disappeared. The noise of a violent bump was heard and Eglinton was found in the room above on the floor in a trance.

Several cases were put on record in the first years of the present century. The story of one is recounted in the Annals of Psychic Science (vol. 9). The place was San Jose, Costa Rica, the date between 1907 and 1909 and the persons concerned were the children of Buenaventura Corralès. The oldest child, Ophelia Corralès, was 18 years old. There were two younger sisters and a brother. Separately and together the children frequently vanished from the séance room, found themselves in the garden and returned, to their great delight, in the same mysterious manner. To quote from the account of Alberto Brenes, a professor at the Law Academy:

"A few minutes passed in absolute silence. Suddenly we heard knocks coming from the pavilion; we turned up the gas and found the children were no longer there. The doors were examined and found to be completely closed. Two persons were deputed to look for the children. When the door of the room was opened they were found standing in a row, talking and laughing at what had taken place.

"They said that they had been brought there, one by one; first little Flora, then Berta, and finally Miguel—their respective ages being seven, twelve and ten years.

"We then asked them how they had been carried and they replied that they had felt a pressure under the arms, then they were lifted up in the air and placed where they were found, but they could not tell us anything more.

"The two investigators then asked the spirits to repeat the translation in the reverse direction; they recommended the children to remain silent where they were, and locking the door, returned to the séance room to give an account of what had happened.

"We resumed the séance after taking the necessary precautions of locking the doors. Then 'Ruiz' came and after recommending all to keep up their spirits, said in a clear and energetic voice: 'Let the children come.' Immediately one of them called out: 'We are here.' The light was turned up and the three children appeared in a line in the same order in which they had been previously found. On this occasion all three had been transported at the same time."

Again, we must add, considerable suspicion surrounds the mediumship of Ophelia Corralès.

Joseph Lapponi, medical officer to Popes Leo XVII and Pius X, recorded in his Hypnotism and Spiritism (1906) the case of the Pansini brothers, Paul and Alfred, eight and ten years old respectively. They experienced mysterious transportation in a half hour from Ruvo to Molfetta. Another time, at 12:30 P.M., they disappeared from Ruvo and at one o'clock found themselves on a boat at sea near Barletta, making towards Trinitapoli. Once they disappeared from the square of Ruvo and found themselves, ten minutes later, before the house of their uncle Jerome Maggiore in Trani. Several other mysterious flights took place to Gios, Biseglie, Mariotta, and Terlizzi. Once they disappeared in Bishop Berardi's presence while he was discussing these phenomena with their mother. The windows and doors were closed. In another volume, Spedizione e Spiriti, the same author told of the flying brothers of Bari who could transfer themselves over a distance of 45 kilometers in 15 minutes.

Henry Llewellyn had a series of sittings with the medium F. G. F. Craddock at Burslem, Staffs. The medium sat in a corner of the room from which a door led into a cellar beneath. The cellar door was completely covered with a curtain tacked around the opening, so that any disturbance there would have been at once detected. The curtains were drawn over the medium.

Some time later, the medium was discovered in a cataleptic state suspended horizontally across the top of the curtained corner of the room, with his feet and head lodged on each end of about two inches of boarding. The curtain was opened so that all present could see the sight for themselves, and then closed in the hope that the medium would be put safely on the floor again. Hearing no movement for some time the curtain was opened again, when to the bewilderment of the experimenters it was found that Craddock was gone. The cellar door and its curtain were undisturbed. Shortly afterward they heard someone moving about in the next room; when the door of that room was unlocked, the medium walked out of it with his hands still tied behind him. On another occasion Craddock was found to be missing and was discovered in the bedroom directly over the place in which they were sitting. This case must also be treated with reserve, since Craddock was also exposed in fraud on several occasions.

A report of Willi Reichel's experiences with C. V. Miller, the California materialization medium, as given in Psychische Studien (January–February 1906) states:

" 'Betsy,' the principal control of Mr. Miller, called Herr Reichel first into the cabinet in order that he might assure himself of the presence of the medium asleep. He examined all again and considers it impossible that the medium could have quitted the cabinet in a normal way; in front of the curtains were seated the 27 persons who formed the circle on that evening, and the windows looked out on a much frequented street. The weather, moreover, was very windy and wet, and it would have been impossible, he says, to open a window without causing a current of air to be felt at once. After about four minutes 'Betsy' told him to go with three other persons to the first floor and Mr. Miller's housekeeper gave them the keys. They found the medium breathing heavily on a chair; they brought him back into the séance room, where he awoke, remembering nothing."

Franz Hartmann, the well-known Theosophist and writer on occultism, employed the term "magical metathesis." In Occult Review (July 1906), he quoted the case of a Dr. Z., of Florence, a friend of his, who was reportedly transported from Livorns to Florence (100 kilometers) in 15 minutes and deposited in a closed room.

Stepping into the realm of occult magic, the book of Harry de Windt, From Paris to New York by Land (1904), may be cited for an ancient transportation case in which a medicine man, while he was closely watched, disappeared from a tent and was found in an unconscious condition in a tent half a mile away.

The medium Ada Besinnet was said to have been several times the subject of transportation, but there is no evidential record of the feat. Reporting on the Polish medium Franek Kluski in Psychic Science (October 1925, p. 214), one Professor Pawlovski writes:

"The most extraordinary case related to me by the members of the circle is that of Mr. Kluski having been fetched by the apparitions, or disappearing from the sealed and locked séance room. The astonished sitters found him in a rather distant room of the apartment quietly sleeping on a couch. I report the case upon the responsibility of my friends, whom I have no reason to distrust."

Harald Nielsson states in Light (November 1, 1919), in an account of his experiences with Indridi Indridason, the Icelandic medium:

"We have had on several occasions the experience of matter being brought through matter, and one evening the medium herself was taken through the wall into a room which was locked and in darkness. This sounds incredible, but many things occur in the presence of physical mediums which must seem absurd to men who have not themselves investigated them. But they are nevertheless true."

In Psychic Research (March 1930), an account was published by Harry Price and H. Kohn of the poltergeist persecution of an Indian boy, Damodar Ketkar, of Poona, India. According to Kohn, who was a lecturer in languages at the governmental Deccan College (Bombay University), Poona, the following transportation case occurred in April 1928 during the most violent period of the manifestations:

"At 9:45 A.M. on April 23, my sister says in a letter, the elder boy (his brother, Ramkrishna Bapat) suddenly materialised in front of [her]. . . . He looked bright but amazed, and said 'I have just come from Karjat.' He didn't come through any door. My sister describes the posture of the boy as having been most remarkable. When she looked up from her letter-writing she saw him bending forward; both his arms were hanging away from his sides, and the hands hanging limp—his feet were not touching the floor, as she saw a distinct space between his feet and the threshold. It was precisely the posture of a person who has been gripped round the waist and carried, and therefore makes no effort but is gently dropped at his destination."

This account is unique, as in no other case was the actual arrival of the transported individual seen.

Two accounts of transportation are to be found in the amazing case of Carlos Mirabelli, the South American medium. On the basis of the original Portuguese documents, psychical researcher E. J. Dingwall, in Psychic Research (July 1930), recounts:

". . . the transportation of the medium from the railway station at Luz [São Paolo] to the town of S. Vincente, a distance of some 90 kilometers. The report states that at the time the medium was at the station at Luz in company with a number of people and was intending to travel to Santos. Shortly before the train started he suddenly disappeared to the astonishment of everybody, his presence in S. Vincente being ascertained 15 minutes later by telephone, it being proved that he was met in the town exactly two minutes after his disappearance. . . . On one occasion when the medium had been secured in his armchair by means of various ligatures he vanished utterly from his position, the doors and windows remaining both locked and firmly secured. Five sitters remained in the séance room whilst the rest went in search of the missing man. He was soon discovered in a side room lying in an easy chair and singing to himself."

A well-documented case was the transportation of Marquis Carlo Centurione Scotto, at Millesimo Castle, on July 29, 1928. Psychical researcher Ernesto Bozzano reported on his investigation of the case in Luce e Ombra (September–October 1928). It can be summarized as follows:

During the course of the sitting, the medium Marquis Centurione Scotto exclaimed in a frightened voice: "I can no longer feel my legs!" The gramophone was stopped. An interval of death-like silence followed. The medium was addressed, without answer, then felt for. His place was empty. The sitters turned on the red light. The doors were still securely locked with the key on the inside but the medium had disappeared.

All the rooms of the castle were searched without result. Two and a half hours passed when it occurred to the sitters to ask Gwendolyn Kelley Hack to try and get into communication, through automatic writing, with her spirit guide "Imperator." After several attempts in which the sitters were only told, "Do not be anxious, we are watching and guarding" and that the "medium is asleep," the correct information came through: "Go to the right, then outside. Wall and Gate. He is lying—hay—hay—on soft place." The communication was signed by the cross of "Imperator."

The place indicated a granary in the stable yard. The great entrance door was locked, and the key was not in the lock. They ran back to fetch it and, entering, found a small door that had been previously overlooked. This door was also locked, but the key was in the keyhole on the outside. They opened it with the greatest caution. On a heap of hay and oats, the medium was comfortably lying, immersed in profound sleep. When he first regained consciousness and found himself lying in the stable he feared that he had gone out of his mind and burst into tears.

The authenticity of the phenomenon was unexpectedly confirmed by a message from New York from the spirit guide "Bert Everitt," who, manifesting in a sitting with the medium George Valiantine, referred to the Millesimo experiments and stated "that he had helped Cristo d'Angelo [the spirit guide] to carry out the phenomenon of the transport of the medium into the granary." This was received a whole month before a report of the case had been published in Italy or elsewhere.

The marquis himself described his impressions as follows:

"At this instant I could not feel my legs any more, having the impression of going into trance. I asked Fabienne for her hand, which I took willingly to reassure myself. After having taken the hand I felt something descending over my brain and my face—and I felt myself light . . . light . . . light . . . but of such lightness . . . I felt myself as if fainting and I . . . Then I recall nothing more. Nothing, nothing."

Many cases have been reported in the hagiogaphic literature of the transportation of saints, and sometimes their bilocation (simultaneous appearance in different places over a great distance) is noted. (See Gambier Bolton; Psychic Force)

Sources:

Begg, Paul. Into Thin Air: People Who Disappear. London: David & Charles, 1979.

Fodor, Nandor. Mind Over Space. New York: Citadel Press, 1962.

Fort, Charles. The Books of Charles Fort. New York: Henry Holt, 1941.

Harrison, Michael. Vanishings. London: New English Library, 1981.

Telergy

Term used by psychical researcher F. W. H. Myers to denote the force that is manifest in telepathy and perhaps in other supernormal operations.

Telesomatic

Term used by psychical researcher Alexander N. Aksakof for materialization.

Telesthesia

Perception from a distance through psychic rapport with the place or environment. It is less than clairvoyance since it is restricted to the perception of material things or conditions. The word was coined by psychical researcher F. W. H. Myers in 1882 to express sensation at a distance after it was found that the communication between distant persons is not a transference of thought alone, but also of emotion, of motor impulses, and of many impressions not easy to define.

Frequent instances were described during World War I. The experience of a Mrs. Fussey of Wimbledon on November 4, 1914, was typical. At home she suddenly felt in her arm the sharp sting of a wound. She jumped up and cried. There was no trace of an injury. Fussey continued to suffer pain and exclaimed: "Tab [her soldier son] is wounded in the arm. I know it." On the following Monday, confirmation arrived.

Telluric

M. Benedict's term for the rhabdic force that presumably moves the divining rod.

Tellurism

A name applied by Dietrich G. Kieser (1779–1862) to animal magnetism. He was one of the early scientific investigators who supported the reality of the phenomenon and drew attention to its legal aspects. "Téméraire," Charles (or Charles the Bold) (1433–1477)

Duke of Burgundy (1467–1477) in the fifteenth century. During his reign the state enjoyed its height of political, economic, and cultural power. According to legend, he disappeared after the battle of Morat on June 22, 1477, when he was defeated. It was said by his chroniclers that he was carried off by the devil; others maintained that he had withdrawn to a remote spot and become a hermit.

More sober accounts state, however, that he perished in the battle and that his mutilated body was discovered several days later. Charles was introduced into two novels by Sir Walter Scott—Quentin Durward and Anne of Geirstein. The latter novel contains an account of the battle of Nancy, before the fatal encounter at Morat.

Temperature Changes

Marked changes of temperature sometimes occur in the séance room, usually a sudden lowering. (See also Winds)

Templars

The Knights Templars of the Temple of Solomon were a military order founded by Hugues de Payns of Burgundy and Godeffroi de St. Omer for the purpose of protecting pilgrims journeying to the Holy Land. They were soon joined by other knights; a religious chivalry speedily gathered around this nucleus. Baldwin I, king of Jerusalem, gave them as headquarters a portion of his palace, contiguous to a mosque that tradition asserted was part of the Temple of Solomon, and from this building they took their name.

One of the purposes of the society was to convert and render useful knights of evil living. So many of these entered the order as to bring it under the suspicion of the church, but there is every reason to believe that its founders were instigated by pious motives. The fact that they lived in a condition near poverty, notwithstanding the numerous rich gifts that were showered upon them, is the best evidence of their motivations.

They had properly constituted officials, a grand master, knights, chaplains, sergeants, craftsmen, sensechals, marshals, and commanders. The order had its own clergy, who like other clergy in orders were exempt from the jurisdiction of diocesan rule, and its chapters were held as a rule in secret. The dress of the brotherhood was a white cloak with a red cross for unmarried knights, and a black or brown cloak with a red cross for the others. The discipline was very strict and the food and clothing rough and not abundant.

By the middle of the twelfth century, the new order had firm footing in nearly all the Latin kingdoms of Christendom. Its power grew, and its organization became widespread. It formed a nucleus of the Christian effort against the paganism of the east. Its history may be said to be that of the Crusades. Moreover it became a great trading corporation, the greatest commercial agency between the east and west, and as such amassed immense wealth.

On the fall of the Latin kingdom in Palestine, the Templars were forced to withdraw from that country. Although they continued to harass the Saracen power, they made little headway against it, and in reality appeared to have undertaken commercial pursuits in preference to those of a more warlike character.

The Attack Upon the Templars

When the Temple was at the high point of its power, its success aroused the envy and avarice of Philip IV of France (1285–1314), who commenced a series of attacks upon it. Pope Clement V, who was devoted to Philip's interests, denounced the order for heresy and immorality and gave Philip his chance.

For several generations before this time, rumors had been circulating concerning the secret rites of the Templars, which were assisted by the very strict privacy of their meetings. They were usually held at daybreak with closely-guarded doors. It was alleged that the most horrible blasphemies and indecencies took place at these meetings, that the cross was trampled underfoot and spat upon, that an idol named Baphomet (Baphemetios, baptism of wisdom) was adored, or even that the devil in the shape of a black cat appeared. Other tales told of the roasting of children, and the smearing of the idol with their burning fat. And even wilder rumors spread through the uneducated populous.

A certain Esquian de Horian pretended to betray the "secret" of the Templars to Philip, and they were denounced to the Inquisition. Jacques de Molay, the grand master, who had been called from Cyprus to France, was arrested with 140 of his brethren in Paris and thrown into prison. A universal arrest of the Templars throughout France followed. The wretched knights were tortured en masse, as was usually the case, and confessed to the most grotesque crimes. The most damning confession of all was that of the grand master himself, who said that he had been guilty of denying Christ and spitting upon the cross, but repudiated all charges of immorality in indignant terms.

The process dragged on slowly for more than three years, in consequence of the jealousies that arose among those interested in its prosecution. The pope wished to bring it entirely under the jurisdiction of the church, and to have it decided at Rome. The king, on the other hand, mistrusting the pope, resolved on the destruction of the order so that none but himself should reap advantage from it. He decided it should be judged at Paris under his own personal influence.

The prosecution was directed by his ministers, Nogaret and Enguerrand de Marigny. The Templars asserted their innocence and demanded a fair trial, but they found few advocates who would undertake their defense. They were subjected to hardships and tortures, which forced many of them into confessions dictated to them by their persecutors.

During this interval, the pope's orders were carried into other countries, authorizing the arrest of the Templars and the seizure of their goods. Everywhere the same charges were brought against them. The same means of imprisonment and torture were used to procure their condemnation, although they were not subjected to the same severity as in France.

The Destruction of the Order in France

At length, in the spring of 1316, the grand process was opened in Paris. An immense number of Templars, brought from all parts of the kingdom, underwent a public examination. A long act of accusation was read: they denied Christ (and sometimes they denied expressly all the saints) declaring that he was not God truly but a false prophet and that they had no hope of salvation through him; they always, at their initiation into the order, spat upon the cross, and trod it under foot (they did this especially on Good Friday); they worshiped a certain cat, which sometimes appeared to them in their congregation; they did not believe in any of the sacraments of the church; they took secret oaths which they were bound not to reveal; the brother who officiated at the reception of a new brother kissed the naked body of the latter, often in a very unbecoming manner; each different province of the order had its idol, which was a head, having sometimes three faces, and at others only one, or sometimes a human skull; they worshiped these idols in their chapters and congregations, believing that they had great power; they girt themselves with cords, with which these idols had been superstitiously touched; those who betrayed the secrets of their order, or were disobedient, were thrown into prison and often put to death; they held their chapters secretly and by night, and placed a watch to prevent them from any danger of interruption or discovery; and they believed the grand master alone had the power of absolving them from their sins.

The publication of these charges, and the agitation that had been deliberately fomented, created such horror throughout France that the Templars who died during the process were treated as condemned heretics. Burial in consecrated ground was refused to their remains.

A great number of knights agreed to the general points of the formula of initiation. It seems possible that they denied Christ and spat and trod upon the cross. The alleged words of the denial were "Je reney Deu" or "Je reney Jhesu," repeated thrice. Most of those who confessed having gone through this ceremony declared that they did it with repugnance and spat beside the cross, not on it. The reception took place in a secret room with closed doors; the candidate was compelled to take off part or (in rare instances) all of his garments, and then he was kissed on various parts of the body.

One of the knights examined, Guischard de Marzici, said he remembered the reception of Hugh de Marhaud, of the diocese of Lyons. He saw him being taken into a small room, which was closed up so that no one could see or hear what took place within. After some time, he was let out; he was very pale and looked as though he were troubled and amazed. In conjunction with these strange ceremonies, however, there were others that showed a reverence for the Christian church and its ordinances, a profound faith in Christ, and the consciousness that the partaker of them was entering into a holy vow.

The historian Jules Michelet (1798–1874), who carefully investigated the materials relating to the trial of the Templars, suggested an ingenious explanation for these anomalies. He imagined that the form of reception was borrowed from the figurative mysteries and rites of the early church. The candidate for admission into the order, according to this notion, was first presented as a sinner and renegade; in the example of St. Peter, he denied Christ. This denial was a sort of pantomime, in which the novice expressed his reprobate state by spitting on the cross. The candidate was then stripped of his profane clothing, received through the kiss of the order into a higher state of faith, and re-dressed with the garb of its holiness. Forms like these would be easily misunderstood in the Middle Ages and their original meaning soon forgotten.

Another charge in the accusation of the Templars seems to have been proved by the depositions of witnesses, namely the idol or head which they were said to have worshiped; the real character or meaning of which it was difficult to explain. Many Templars confessed to having seen this idol, but as they described it differently, it must be supposed that it was not in all cases represented under the same form. Some said it was a frightful head, with long beard and sparkling eyes; others said it was a man's skull; some described it as having three faces; some said it was of wood, and others of metal; one witness described it as a painting (tabula picta) representing the image of a man (imago hominis), and said that when it was shown to him, he was ordered to "adore Christ his creator."

According to some it was a gilt figure, either of wood or metal, while others described it as painted black and white. According to another deposition, the idol had four feet. The one belonging to the order at Paris was said to be a silver head with two faces and a beard. The novices of the order were told to regard this idol as their savior. Deodatus Jaffet, a knight from the south of France, deposed that the person who performed the ceremonies of reception showed him a head or idol. It appeared to have three faces. The person from the ceremonies said, "You must adore this as your savior, and the savior of the order of the Temple," and then Jaffet was made to worship the idol, saying, "Blessed be he who shall save my soul." Cettus Ragonis, a knight received at Rome in a chamber of the palace of the Lateran, gave a somewhat similar account.

Many other witnesses spoke of having seen these heads, which, however, were perhaps not shown to everybody. The greatest number of those who spoke on this subject said they had heard others speak of the head, but that they had never seen it themselves. Many of them declared their disbelief in its existence. A friar minor deposed in England that an English Templar had assured him the order had four principal idols: one at London in the sacristy of the Temple, another at Bristelham, a third at Brueria (Bruern in Lincolnshire), and a fourth beyond the Humber.

Baron von Hammer-Purgstall indicated that Gnosticism was the secret doctrine of the Temple. His important essay Mysterium Baphometis Revelatum (The Mystery of Baphomet Revealed) was published in vol. 6 of Fundgraben des Orients (Vienna, 1811). The suggestion of Baphomet being related to the rituals of Ophite and Gnostic heresies has some plausibility.

The confessions with regard to the mysterious cat were much rarer and more vague. Some Italian knights confessed that they had been present at a secret meeting of 12 knights held at Brindisi. There a grey cat suddenly appeared among them and they worshiped it. At Nismes, some Templars declared they had been present at a chapter at Montpellier at which the demon appeared to them in the form of a cat and promised them worldly prosperity. They added that they saw devils in the shape of women. An English knight, who was examined at London, deposed that in England they did not adore the cat or the idol to his knowledge, but he had heard it positively stated that they worshiped the cat and the idol in parts beyond the sea. English witnesses deposed to other acts of "idolatry."

Such accounts suggest the witchcraft accounts of the appearance of the devil at what were basically pagan rituals. Agnes Lovecote stated she had heard that at a chapter held in Dineslee (Dynnesley, in Hertfordshire), the devil appeared to the Templars in a monstrous form. It had precious stones for eyes, which shone so bright that they illuminated the whole chapter; the brethren, in succession, kissed him on the posteriors and marked there the form of the cross. She was told that one young man, who refused to go through this ceremony, was thrown into a well, and a great stone was cast upon him.

Another witness, Robert de Folde, said he had heard that 20 years ago, in the same place, the devil came to the chapter once a year. He flew away with one of the knights, whom he took as a sort of tribute. Two others stated that certain Templars confessed to them that at a grand annual assembly in the county of York, the Templars worshiped a calf. All this is mere hearsay, but it shows the popular opinion of the conduct of the order.

A Templar examined in Paris, named Jacques de Treces, said he had been informed that at secret chapters held at midnight, a head appeared to the assembled brethren, and "had a private demon, by whose council he was wise and rich."

The wretched aim of King Philippe was successful. He seized the whole treasure of the temple in France and became rich. Those who ventured to speak in defense of the order were browbeaten and received little attention. Torture was employed to force confessions. Fifty-four Templars who refused to confess were carried to the windmill of St. Antoine, in the suburbs of Paris, and there burned. Many others, among whom was the grand master himself, were subsequently brought to the stake. After having lasted two or three years, the process ended in the condemnation and suppression of the order; its estates were given in some countries to the knights of St. John.

It was in France that the persecution was most cruel. In England, the order was suppressed, but no executions took place. Even in Italy, the severity of the judges was not everywhere the same. In Lombardy and Tuscany the Templars were condemned, while they were acquitted at Ravenna and Bologna. They were also pronounced innocent in Castile; in Arragon they were reduced by force only because they had attempted to resist by force of arms. In Spain and Portugal they only gave up their own order to be admitted into others. The pope was offended at the leniency shown towards Templars in England, Spain, and Germany. The Order of the Temple was finally dissolved and abolished, and its memory branded with disgrace.

Some of the knights were said to have remained together and formed secret societies. The result, however, was much the same everywhere. Convicted of heresy, sorcery, and many other abominations, many of the wretched Templars were punished with death by fire, imprisonment, and their goods reverted to the various crowned heads of Europe. Nearly all of these nobles followed the greedy example of Philip of France.

Jacques de Molay, the grand master, was brought out onto a scaffold erected in front of Notre Dame in Paris and asked to repeat his confession and receive a sentence of perpetual imprisonment. He flared into sudden anger and recanted all he had said, protesting his innocence; he was sentenced to burn. De Molay summoned the pope and the king with his dying breath; he waited to meet them before the bar of Heaven. Both of these dignitaries shortly afterwards died and it remained in the public mind that the outcome of the grand master's summons seemed to have proved his innocence.

There is every reason to believe there was some foundation for the charges of heresy made against the Templars. Their intimate connection with the East and the long establishment of the order had in all probability rendered their Christianity not quite so pure as that of Western Europe. Numerous treatises have been written for the purpose of proving or disproving the Temple heresy, to show that it followed the doctrines and rites of the Gnostic Ophites of Islam, that "Baphomet" was merely a corruption of "Mahomet," and it has been collated with various other eastern systems.

Hans Prutz furthered the view of the rejection of Christianity in his book Geheimlehre und Geheimstatutendes Tempelherren-Ordens (1879) in favor of a religion based on Gnostic dualism, and at once raised up a host of critics.

But many defenders of the order followed, and it was proved in numerous instances that the confessions wrung from the Templars were the result of extreme torture. In a number of cases they were acquitted in Castile, Aragon, Portugal, and in many German and Italian centers. It has also been shown that the answers of a number of the knights under torture were practically dictated to them. In England, out of 80 Templars examined, only four confessed to the charge of heresy, and of these, two were apostates.

The Templars were also the victims of their own arrogance and commercial success, which excited the avarice their enemies and the superstitious ignorance and hatred of their contemporaries. There has been a steady stream of writings on the Templars, especially in the last two centuries. Contemporary writers on the order have agreed that charges of witchcraft and homosexuality directed against the order were basically lies spread to hide Philip's motives.

Modern Templarism

It has been asserted that on the death of Jacques de Molay, a conspiracy was formed by the surviving Templars. The conspiracy had for its ends the destruction of papacy and the various kingdoms of Europe. This tradition was supposedly handed on through generations of initiates through such societies as the Illuminati and the Freemasons, who in the end brought about the French Revolution and the downfall of the French throne.

After the French Revolution, people claimed the Templar tradition and founded several neo-Templar organizations that spread through the French-speaking world. In 1805 a Frenchman, Bernard-Raymond Fabré-Palpret, founded a reconstituted Templar order with himself as the head. He also created a gnostic church to compete with Roman Catholicism and consecrated Ferdinand-Francois Chatel as the first bishop. After the death of Fabré-Palpret in 1838, the order split. It developed even more factions in every generation. At present more than 30 operate in France, Switzerland, Belgium, and Quebec. One of these neo-Templar groups, the Solar Temple, became the subject of interest when nearly 50 of its members were murdered in Switzerland in 1994. Apparently they were killed by their leaders, who then killed themselves.

A second neo-Templar tradition began in Germany in the 1890s with the founding of the OTO, the Ordo Templi Orientis (or Order of the Eastern Temple), which spread from Germany to German-speaking Switzerland and through Aleister Crowley to Great Britain and the United States.

Sources:

Campbell, G. The Knights Templars, Their Rise and Fall. London: Duckworth; New York: McBride, 1937.

Charpentier, John. L'Ordre des Templiers. Paris: La Colombe, 1945.

Lea, Henry Charles. A History of the Inquisition of the Middle Ages. 3 vols. London: Sampson, Low; New York: Harper & Bros., 1888. Reprint, New York: Citadel, 1954.

Lees, B. A. Records of the Templars in England in the Twelfth Century: The Inquest of 1185 with Illustrative Charters and Documents. Vol. 9 of British Academy Records of the Social and Economic History of England and Wales. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1935.

Legman, G. The Guilt of the Templars. New York: Basic Books, 1966.

Martin, Edward J. The Trail of the Templars. London: Allen & Unwin, 1928.

Michelet, Jules. Le Procès des Templiers. 2 vols. N.p., 1841–51.

Parker, Thomas W. The Knights Templars in England. Tucson: University of Arizona Press, 1963.

Temple Beautiful

Temple Beautiful is a channeling group currently headquartered in South Africa. It was founded in the United States by Ilona Linda Day who began to channel St. Germain and other of the ascended masters associated with the Theosophical Society and the "I Am" Religious Activity. Day passed the leadership of the group to a woman named Phaeryn. In the 1980s, tapes of Day's and Phaeryn's channeled messages were received in South Africa by Mienke Riemens, a resident of Rondebosch, a suburb of Cape Town. Riemens held meetings in her home where she played the tapes for those assembled.

At one point in the early 1990s, Phaeryn visited South Africa and gave a channeled reading to Chris Erasmus, a young man who had joined the group around 1990. During the reading, St. Germain asked Erasmus to be his channel in South Africa. He began channeling in 1994 and has established special contact with St. Germain and Serapis Bey. Prior to joining the group, he had been on a spiritual search that had led him to transcendental meditation. Shortly after Erasmus began channeling, the group outgrew the space in the Riemens' home and moved to Erasmus' home. The growth of the work in the late 1990s has led the group to build a separate temple facility.

The Temple Beautiful is organized as a mystery school. It is designed to assist people in making a connection to their higher self and places initiates in a position to receive direct guidance.

Temple Beautiful is located in suburban Cape Town.

Sources:

Erasmus, Chris. "A Mystery School in the Suburbs." Odyssey 23, no.4 (August 1999): 10–14.

Temple Church (London)

The Church of the Knights Templars in London, consisting of two parts, the Round Church and the Choir. The Round Church (transition Norman) was built in 1185. The Choir (early English style) was finished in 1240.

Hargrave Jennings, in his book The Rosicrucians, their Rites and Mysteries (1870), states that the Temple Church in London presents many mythic Rosicrucian figures. One figure signifies the Virgin Mary, and displays the cross as rising like the pole or mast of a ship (argha) out of the midst of a crescent moon (navis biprora), curved at both ends.

The staff of the grand master of the Templars displayed a curved cross of four splays, or blades, red upon white. The eight-pointed red Buddhist cross was also one of the Templar ensigns.

The church's arches abound with stars with wavy or crooked flames. The altar at the east end of the Temple Church has a cross on a field of wavy stars; to the right is the Decalogue, surmounted by the initials A.O. (alpha and omega); on the left are the monograms of the Saviour, I.C., X.C.; beneath is the Lord's Prayer. The winged horse, or Pegasus, is the badge of the Templars.

The tombs of the Templars, disposed around the circular church in London, are of that early Norman shape called dos d'ane; their tops are triangular; the molding passes through the temples and issues out of the mouth and horned skull of a mask. The head at the top is shown in the cover of the tomb. There is much hidden meaning in every curve of these Templar tombs.

Temple of Set

The Temple of Set emerged during the period of internal discord that almost destroyed the Church of Satan in the early 1970s. In 1972, Michael Aquino, an officer in the U.S. Army and a priest in the church, critiqued the authoritarian leadership of church founder Anton LaVey as well as his understanding of Satanism. Claiming LaVey to be an atheist who did not believe in the literal existence of Satan, Aquino left the church. Three years later, in response to Aquino's invocation, Satan appeared under the guise of Set, the ancient Egyptian deity. Set gave Aquino a mandate in the form of a book, The Book of Coming Forth by Night, which authorized Aquino to found the Temple of Set as the Church of Satan's successor. The temple is dedicated to Set, the corrupted legends of whom became the basis of the Christian devil.

The temple teaches that the universe is a nonconscious environment possessed of mechanical consequences. However, the deity Set can on occasion violate the laws. Over the millennia, Set has altered the genetic makeup of human beings in order to produce an enhanced nonnatural intelligence. The temple works to identify and develop this enhanced ability in selected individuals. It is governed by a Council of Nine, which appoints the high priest of Set. Members are organized into six initiatory degrees: Setian, Adept, Priest(ess) of Set, Master of the Temple, Magus, and Ipsissimis.

The Temple of Set may be contacted at P.O. Box 470307, San Francisco, CA 94147. It publishes the newsletter Scroll of Set. While the work occurs primarily on the individual level, the temple provides a variety of resources for the individual to develop as a Setian.

Sources:

Aquino, Michael A. The Crystal Tablet of Set. San Francisco: Temple of Set, 1985.

———. Temple of Set Reading List XIX. San Francisco: Temple of Set, 1984.

Scott, Gini Graham. The Magicians. New York: Irvington Publishers, 1983.

Temple of the Holy Grail (THG)

The Temple of the Holy Grail (THG) is a small initiatory mystery school based upon the belief that what are now known as the "Grail" mysteries (and hence associated with the cup used by Christ at the Last Supper) existed in Western Europe long before the first century and the advent of Christianity. They were a as a graded path of initiation comparable to the Lam Rim of Tibetan Buddhism. Through the centuries, the mysteries evolved into an esoteric Christian school, the primary work being attributed to the legendary Graalmeister Treverezent in the ninth century C.E. It was later associated with chivalric orders, and the alchemical and Gnostic schools.

The Temple of the Holy Grail began its history at the end of the nineteenth century with a secret English Templar order that possessed an ancient Jewish terra-cotta cup believed to be the true Eucharistic vessel of the Last Supper. The cup was encased in gold, with two ancient silver auxiliary "grails," prepared in 1888 to do the sacred Grail Rites as had been done once each century by the order and its predecessors in the 88th year (88 being a mystical number in the Christian Kabbalah). The rite (a theurgical Eucharist) was performed with the understanding that it would reempower a channel for Divine Blessing upon the planet for the coming century and protect humanity from being overwhelmed by dark forces. However, in 1888, the elderly abbot of the order had some concern that the chalices would be stolen by people who wished to use them for less altruistic magical purposes.

The chalices were secretly transported to London, where the centennial ceremony was to be performed. However, in spite of all precautions, the three chalices were stolen and used for black magical purposes. When the primary chalice was eventually recovered, the gold was melted down, and the pottery cup smashed into the earth. (Later, one of the auxiliary chalices turned up at an antiquities auction in Antioch where it was purchased by the Metropolitan Museum in New York; it is now exhibited as the "Chalice of Antioch" with legends of it having been the Holy Grail. The third chalice was never found.)

The actual founding of the Temple of the Holy Grail as it presently exists began in the 1960s with the magical preparation undertaken by a solitary magician. He was not aware of the prior history of the destruction of the Grail and not formally connected with any traditional Grail order. However, through interior guidance, he was led over several years to construct a new chalice using white magical and theurgical preparations. Following that same guidance, in August of 1988 he traveled over 1,000 miles to a sacred site in Canada, where he used the new chalice for a theurgical Eucharist to bless the planet and humanity. Only after this event, which he performed quite unaware of its full implications, did he while returning home hear an interior voice naming him the "Grailmaster." He was unfamiliar with the term. Subsequently, he received teachings telepathically in lucid dreams from a Tibetan Lama that eventually became the First Empowerment of the First Order of THG. Shortly after this, he discovered a written account of the events of 1888. He then began to understand the impulse that led him to prepare the new vessel and conduct the 1988 centennial rite.

Soon after these events, Bishop George Boyer of the Sanctuary of the Gnosis in London contacted the new Grailmaster and transmitted to him all of the documents and information necessary to reestablish and preserve the esoteric European lineages deriving from the Grail tradition. The new Grailmaster subsequently brought forth new initiatory materials (by the process commonly called channeling) and led Bishop Boyer in undergoing them.

The new Grailmaster has also received the authority provided by both the traditional apostolic lineages passed through the Christian bishops over the centuries and newer lineages begun by bishops claiming ordination from occult realms. Various independent bishops have consecrated the new Grailmaster in 18 historical Apostolic and 22 European esoteric lineages. Additionally, the Grailmaster and Temple are Keepers of the True Grail, which is the Divine Royal Blood (San Greal in Christian esoteric tradition, and not to be confused with the Grail Chalice itself). For believers, the Grail is the normally invisible and intangible Divine sacrificial energy that nurtures evolutionary unfoldment in the physical universe and among beings developing in the physical level of existence. The Grail power sanctifies matter, and is identified with the Philosopher's Stone that transforms the lower into the Higher, expands contracted Heart-consciousness, and mediates inspiration, guidance, selfless service, and Divine Love.

The THG exists solely for a small number of individuals wishing to undertake private advanced esoteric training in order to anonymously serve human and planetary evolution. A relationship to the order is offered by invitation to people already ordained or otherwise advanced in recognized groups, or to individuals who, having prepared themselves apart from organizations, manifest a devotion to the spiritual unfoldment of humanity and of the planet. Members of the order proceed through the mysteries it perpetuates, the content of which is not disclosed to nonmembers, in an ordered sequence.

The Temple of the Holy Grail may be contacted through the Grailmaster at P.O. Box 3816, Santa Cruz, CA 95063-3816 or through Bishop George Boyer, Bishop Templar, 53 College Rd., Colliers Wood, London, UK SW19 2BP. Information on the temple may be found at its website: http://www.hometemple.org/.

Sources:

Temple of the Holy Grail. http://www.hometemple.org/. April 4, 2000.

Temple of the People

The Temple of the People formed out of the American Theosophical Society in Syracuse, New York, in 1898. The American Theosophists had broken with the international theosophical movement under William Q. Judge, who died just a few years later. Judge was succeeded by Katherine Tingley, who enjoyed strong but less than universal support. Members of the Syracuse lodge were among those who broke with Tingley and established the independent temple.

The Temple of the People was led by Dr. William H. Dower (1866–1937), known by members as "Red Star," and Francis A. LaDue (1849–1922), known as "Blue Star." The pair channeled the masters of the Great White Brotherhood, that group of advanced souls believed by Theosophists to guide the destiny of humankind. They had a special relationship to "Hilarion," the master of the fifth, or red, ray. The channeled sessions were published in the massive book Theogenesis, which came to be regarded as the third volume of Madame Blavatsky's magnum opus, The Secret Doctrine, Volume 1: Anthropogenesis, and Volume 2: Cosmogenesis.

Dower outlived LaDue as the leader of the temple and was succeeded by Pearl F. Dower and Harold Forgostein. When Forgostein died in 1990, he was succeeded by Eleanor Shumway, the present guardian-in-chief. The temple may be contacted at Box 7100, Halcyon, CA 93421. It has some 200 members worldwide.

Sources:

Kagan, Paul. New World Utopias. Baltimore, Md.: Penguin Books, 1975.

Teachings of the Temple. 3 vols. Halcyon, Calif.: Temple of the People, 1947–85.

Theogenesis. Halcyon, Calif.: Temple of the People, 1981.

Temple of Universal Law

The Temple of Universal Law is a Spiritualist church founded in 1936 by the Rev. Charlotte Bright. Bright was a medium whose spirit guide "Master Nicidemus" was considered to be a member of the Great White Brotherhood, that group of evolved disembodied entities who are believed to guide the destiny of the human race. Under the brotherhood's direction, Bright erected a church on Chicago's North Side in 1956. She pastored the church until her death in 1989, when she was succeeded by her son, Rev. Robert E. Martin. Before her death she oversaw the establishment of a second congregation in Wisconsin.

The temple affirms the beliefs of metaphysical Christianity, including a belief in a God who expresses himself as a Trinity; God the Father as the universal law of life that creates, sustains, and progresses to eternal life; Christ as the perfect demonstration of divine mind; the Holy Spirit as the action of divine mind within; the variety of forms of worship; the discovery of spiritual truth in the Bible and all spiritual truths; and the immortality of humans. The church teaches that it is the essential duty of people to look within and begin to awaken the Christ Spirit. As one comes to understand universal law, oneness with God can be attained.

Address: 5030 N. Drake, Chicago, IL 60625.

Tempon-teloris (Ship of the Dead)

Among the Dayaks of Borneo, the ship of the dead, the vessel that carried the souls of the departed in search of the hereafter, was generally represented in the shape of a bird, the hornbill (rhinoplax vigil). Accompanying the souls on their journey through the fire-sea were all the stores that had been laid out at the feast of the dead (trivah), and all the slaves who had been killed for that purpose. After some chain of events in the fiery sea, the ship of the dead, with Tempon-telon at the helm, reached the golden shores of the blessed.

Some of these beliefs echo the ancient burial rites of Egypt as portrayed in the Book of the Dead.

Tenaille, Jean (1882–1962)

Engineer who was active in the field of parapsychology. He was born on April 16, 1882, in Paris, France. He followed various occupations through his life: ranching in Canada, importing and managing a department store in Paris, and managing several industrial plants near Amiens, France (1931–39). After World War II he operated as an acoustical engineer. Toward the end of his life he wrote one important book, Civilisation occidentale (Western civilization, 1957), awarded the Académie Francaise prize for history in 1958. He contributed several articles to the French parapsychological journal Revue Métapsychique, including "A propos des sourciers" (Concerning dowsers, 1932). He died December 31, 1962.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Tenhaeff, W(ilhelm) H(einrich) C(arl) (1894–1981)

Dutch parapsychologist, for some years director of the Parapsychology Institute of the State University of Utrecht, Netherlands (which he founded), now known as Parapsychological Division of the Psychological Laboratory. Tenhaeff was born on January 18, 1894, in Rotterdam, the Netherlands. He studied at the University of Utrecht (Ph.D. psychology, 1933). His doctoral thesis Paragnosie en infuhlen was the first on parapsychology in the Netherlands.

Tenhaeff had a long career as a respected parapsychologist. He was a lecturer on psychology (1932–53), lecturer on parapsychology (1933–53), professor of parapsychology, and director of the Parapsychology Institute, University of Utrecht (1953 on). He was founder (1928) and for many years editor (1928 on) of Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie, the journal of the Studievereniging voor Psychical Research (the Dutch Society for Psychical Research). He served as secretary (1929–38) of the Dutch Society for Psychical Research prior to World War II and as an advisor afterward. In 1960 a number of leading parapsychologists withdrew from the society due to his autocratic disposition and established the rival Netherlandse Vereniging voor Parapsychologie.

Tenhaeff showed an interest in parapsychology from an early age, and conducted investigations and reported on psychometry, clairvoyance, precognition, unorthodox healing, the divining rod, and the structure of personality in sensitives. Through his career he lectured in many countries on parapsychological subjects, published numerous articles in Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie and other journals, and wrote a number of books. In 1945 he commenced a long and detailed investigation of the clairvoyant Gerard Croiset. In the years after the 1960 break in the society, people began to look into his extraordinary claims for the psychic abilities of Croiset and discovered that he had been systematically doctoring data in his research. The fraud called his whole career into question. Because of his own popularity with the media and public, he was able to hold off the critics for some years, but eventually all of his colleagues acknowledged his fall. Tenhaeff died July 9, 1981, in the Netherlands; no major parapsychological journal carried an obituary.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Hoebens, P. H. "Gerard Croiset and Professor Tenhaeff." In Science Confronts the Paranormal. Edited by Kenneth Frazier. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1986.

———. "Investigation of the Mozart of 'Psychic Sleuths.' " In Science Confronts the Paranormal, edited by Kenneth Frazier. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1986.

Tenhaeff, W. H. C. Beknopte Handleiding der "Psychical Research" (Short Textbook of Parapsychology). 3 vols. N.p., 1926.

———. Beschouwingen over Het Gebruik van Paranognosten (The Use of Sensitives for Police and Other Purposes). Utrecht: Erven J. Bijleveld, 1957.

———. Telepathie en Helderziendheid. English edition as Telepathy and Clairvoyance. C. Bertelsmann, 1962.

Tenskwatawa (1775–1836)

Tenskwatawa, a Native American prophet of the Shawnee people, was the brother of the famous war chief Tecumseh. He grew up in the shadow of his more famous brother, and was a somewhat alienated soul who did not take part in traditional male activities such as hunting and fishing. At some point he also lost the use of his right eye. He compensated for this physical defect by wearing jewelry from his pierced ears and nose. He did have some oratorical abilities.

He arose out of obscurity in the first decade of the nineteenth century as American settlers moved into traditional Shawnee territory in the Midwest. He had become a medicine man in his brother's tribe and claimed additional status as a prophet after being visited by the Great Spirit in a dream. The new settlers labeled him "The Prophet." People took him seriously after he successfully predicted a solar eclipse in 1806. Especially younger Shawnee were drawn to this new leader and his new religion. He told them to reject white culture and adhere to their traditional ways. He also urged them to follow his example and give up the use of alcohol.

The white settlers, however, were more interested in his broad message that North America was a land that was held in common by all the tribes. Hence, no particular Indian group had the right to sign away its territory to the U. S. Government. It was not theirs to give. Tecumseh accepted the idea and used it to build a confederation of tribes. Meanwhile, Tenskwatawa gathered his most dedicated followers and created a new village called Tippecanoe, at the point where the Wabash and Tippecanoe Rivers met. The settlers called it Prophet's Town. As the movement focused in Tenskwatawa grew, anxiety over Indian resistance to further settlement was focused on Prophet's Town.

In the fall of 1811, Tecumseh headed south to gather the support of additional tribes for his confederacy to resist further white encroachments. Indiana governor William Henry Harrison decided to seize the opportunity and remove the heart of the movement. He sent soldiers to Prophet's Town and in what came to be known as the Battle of Tippecanoe, destroyed the village. Though not a great battle, it was later used by Harrison in his quest for the American presidency. It also led to the downfall of Tenskwatawa. Former residents of Tippecanoe almost killed him, and his influence as a man of magical power and prophetic ability waned from that moment. However, the idea of the confederation of tribes was still very much alive the next year and was used by the British to enroll Indians as allies in the War of 1812.

After the war, Tenskwatawa lived in Canada on a British pension. He returned to the United States in 1926 and attempted to reassert his authority among a group of Shawnee who were being moved from Ohio and eventually settled in Kansas. He died there in 1836.

Sources:

Drake, Benjamin. The Life of Tecumseh and of His Brother the Prophet. 1841. Reprint, N.p., 1969.

Tephillin

In Hebrew, tephillin means "attachments." They were originally prayer thongs worn by Jews at morning prayer—one on the left arm and another on the head. They came to be regarded as talismans and were used in many traditional ceremonies. The Talmud states: "Whoever has the tephillin bound to his head and arm . . . is protected from sin."

Tephramancy

A mode of divination in which sacrificed victims from a fire are used.

Teraphim

These appear to have been ancient images of household gods. They were relatively small in size and easily carried. The teraphim were taken away from Jacob by his daughter Rachel (Gen. 31). They were probably seen as bringers of good luck. They are mentioned throughout the earlier record of Hebrew society, but beginning with the prophet Samuel (I Sam. 15:23) were condemned by association with sorcery and idolatry.

When Josiah conducted his reforms (II Kings. 23:24), the destruction of the teraphim was included among his actions. They were still being used, however, after the period of the Babylonian exile (Zech. 10:2).

Tesla, Nikola (1856–1943)

Eccentric scientific genius whose inventions in the field of electrical apparatus stemmed from inspirations received in extraordinary visions of a paranormal character. Unlike most innovators in the fields of engineering and electricity, his inventions did not require patient experiment and trial-and-error testing of models. The ideas flashed into his mind as working units, complete to the final details of component design and size. For example, as a young student of electrical engineering and physics, at a time when the concept of alternating current was considered a fallacy of the perpetual motion type, he knew that he could solve this problem. After only a few years of consideration of the problem, the complete detailed vision of an alternating current motor using a rotating magnetic field came to him while he gazed at a sunset.

He was born in July 10, 1856, in the village of Similjan in the Austro-Hungarian border area of Lika (now in Slovenia). Even as a boy, he was inventive; at the age of nine he constructed a 16-bug power motor by harnessing June bugs to a thin wooden wheel. He was educated at an elementary school, then had four years at Lower Realschule, Gospic, Lika, which was followed by three years at the Higher Realschule, Carlstadt, Croatia. He graduated in 1873. Tesla was a student for four years at the Polytechnic School, Gratz, Austria, studying mathematics, physics, and mechanics. Afterward he enrolled in philosophy studies for two years at the University of Prague, Bohemia (now the capital of the Czech Republic).

He commenced his career as an inventor in Budapest, Hungary, in 1881. There he constructed a telephone repeater and engaged in various branches of engineering and manufacture. In 1884 he immigrated to the United States, later becoming a naturalized citizen. For nearly a year he worked for inventor Thomas A. Edison, who was impressed by his skill and hard work, but the two men were diametrically opposed in temperament and method. Tesla was a visionary who solved problems in a flash of insight, whereas Edison relied on patient trial-and-error in practical experiments. Tesla insisted on the superiority of alternating current and its applications, whereas Edison believed it a dead end and championed direct current. Tesla parted company with Edison after being promised $50,000 for improving the design and efficiency of dynamos. When Tesla solved the problem and asked for the money, Edison said he was only joking. Tesla immediately resigned.

His salary at the Edison Company had been modest. For the next two years he had a difficult time, but in 1887 he was backed to form the Tesla Electric Company in New York. He was now able to construct the alternating current machines he had visualized earlier.

The Tesla system made it possible to supply electricity economically over distances of hundreds of miles, instead of the short distances of the Edison direct current powerhouses. Tesla's demonstrations made a great impression on another inventor, George Westinghouse of the Westinghouse Electric Company of Pittsburgh. Westinghouse paid Tesla $1 million for rights on his alternating current system, comprising some 40 patents, with a contract additionally stipulating a royalty of a dollar per horsepower.

In attempting to span the continent with an alternating current system, Westinghouse ran into financial difficulties; his own backers insisted that he renounce his royalty contract to Tesla, otherwise they would withdraw support. When Westinghouse explained his difficulty to Tesla, Tesla recalled how Westinghouse had believed in him. In a magnanimous gesture Tesla tore up his contract, thereby sacrificing some $12 million in unpaid royalties.

Tesla went on to invent new apparatus involving original principles. He was responsible for many important innovations: the system of electricity conversion and distribution by oscillatory dischargers, generators of high frequency current; the Tesla coil or transformer, a system of wireless transmission of intelligence; mechanical oscillators and generators of electrical oscillation; research and discoveries in radiation, material streams, and emanations; and high-potential magnifying transmitting. One of his most spectacular achievements was harnessing the water power of Niagara Falls. In 1895 the Westinghouse Electric Company installed a gigantic hydroelectric project, using the Tesla polyphase system of alternating current.

Tesla opened up many important avenues of scientific development and has rarely been properly acknowledged by later historians. His experiments with electromagnetic waves formed the basis of the development of radio. He stated that cosmic rays were responsible for the radioactivity of radium, thorium, and uranium and predicted that other substances would be made radioactive by bombardment. He thus anticipated the basic principles of X-ray apparatus and the electron microscope. In his work with wireless controlled automata he anticipated radio-controlled rocket missiles.

Not surprisingly, he had one or two blind spots. He did not accept for many years that atomic fission would produce energy. He misunderstood the mechanism of vision; he believed that visual images perceived by the brain were returned to the retina of the eye, and might be amplified or projected. However, there was no mistaking his own extraordinary visionary faculty and the discoveries associated with it. In an article titled "Making Your Imagination Work For You," he wrote:

"During my boyhood I had suffered from a peculiar affliction due to the appearance of images, which were often accompanied by strong flashes of light. . . . Then I began to take mental excursions beyond the small world of my actual knowledge. Day and night, in imagination, I went on journeys—saw new places, cities, countries, and all the time I tried hard to make these imaginary things very sharp and clear in my mind.

"This I did constantly until I was 17, when my thoughts turned seriously to invention. Then, to my delight, I found I could visualize with the greatest facility. I needed no models, drawings, or experiments. I could picture them all in my head.

"Here, in brief, is my own method: After experiencing a desire to invent a particular thing, I may go on for months or years with the idea in the back of my head. Whenever I feel like it, I roam around in my imagination and think about the problem without any deliberate concentration. This is a period of incubation.

"There follows a period of direct effort. I choose carefully the possible solutions of the problem I am considering, and gradually center my mind on a narrowed field of investigation. Now, when I am deliberately thinking of the problem in its specific features, I may begin to feel that I am going to get the solution. And the wonderful thing is, that if I do feel this way, then I know I have really solved the problem and shall get what I am after.

"The feeling is as convincing to me as though I already had solved it. I have come to the conclusion that at this stage the actual solution is in my mind subconsciously, though it may be a long time before I am aware of it consciously.

"Before I put a sketch on paper, the whole idea is worked out mentally. In my mind I change the construction, make improvements, and even operate the device. Without ever having drawn a sketch I can give the measurements of all parts to workmen, and when completed all these parts will fit, just as certainly as though I had made the actual drawings. It is immaterial to me whether I run my machine in my mind or test it in my shop.

"The inventions I have conceived in this way have always worked. In 30 years there has not been a single exception. My first electric motor, the vacuum tube wireless light, my turbine engine and many other devices have all been developed in exactly this way."

Tesla's friend and biographer John J. O'Neill stated that Tesla "was unquestionably an abnormal individual, and of a type that does have what are known as 'psychic experiences.' He was emphatic in his denial that he ever had experiences of that sort; yet he has related incidents that clearly belong in the psychic category." According to O'Neill, Tesla was fearful that admitting to having psychic experiences might cause him to be misunderstood as supporting Spiritualism or theories that something operates in life other than matter and energy.

In his later years, Tesla suffered financial difficulties and was unable to construct some of his most ambitious inventions. He claimed he had discovered an inexhaustible source of energy that could be transmitted anywhere in the world without wires or loss of power. He correctly foresaw that at some future time "it will be possible for nations to fight without armies, ships, or guns by weapons far more terrible, to the destructive action and range of which there is virtually no limit." Tesla is credited with having discovered a protective radiation principle of the kind popularly termed "death ray."

In 1912 he refused the Nobel Prize because it was to be awarded jointly to himself and Thomas A. Edison; instead the award went to the Swedish scientist Gustav Dalen.

In an unpublished article entitled "Man's Greatest Achievement" (cited in O'Neill's biographical Prodigal Genius, 1968), Telsa writes:

"Long ago he [the human being] recognized that all perceptible matter comes from a primary substance, or tenuity beyond conception, filling all space, the Akasa or luminiferous ether, which is acted upon by the life-giving Prana or creative force, calling into existence, in never ending cycles, all things and phenomena. . ."

This is the language of Theosophy or Hindu metaphysics. Tesla's states of higher consciousness, achieved by intense concentration and a celibate life, resemble Hindu concepts of cosmic energy in the universe, aroused in the human body under the name of kundalini through yoga disciplines and meditation, resulting in expanded consciousness and access to an infinity of cosmic intelligence.

Tesla died in poverty in New York on January 7, 1943. Soon afterward, FBI operatives opened the safe in his room and took away papers reputedly containing details of a secret invention of possible value in warfare.

Sources:

O'Neill, John J. Prodigal Genius: The Life of Nikola Tesla. London: Neville Spearman, 1968. Reprint, London: Granada, 1980.

Peat, David. In Search of Nikola Tesla. Bath, England: Ashgrove Press, 1983.

Tesla, Nikola. "Making Your Imagination Work For You." American Magazine (April 1921).

Wilson, Colin, ed. Men of Mystery. London: W. H. Allen, 1977.

Tetford, William N. (1923–1988)

William N. Tetford, a psychologist and transcriber of the channeled work A Course in Miracles, was born in Chicago, Illinois, into a Christian Science family. In 1931, following his older sister's death, the family disassociated themselves from Christian Science and Tetford was raised from that time in a largely secular environment. Several years later he became ill with scarlet fever, and though he survived, he was bedridden for two years with the complications. Tutored during his recovery, once back in school he soon caught up with his classmates and graduated from high school with honors.

He attended DePauw University in Indiana, where he majored in psychology. He graduated in 1944, at the height of World War II (1939–45). Deferred from military action because of his medical record, he took a position at the University of Chicago supervising the buildings at which the atom bomb research was being conducted. The week after the detonation of the first bomb in Japan, understanding the full nature of the project, he resigned.

He returned to psychology by taking a course with Carl Rogers, then on his way to psychological fame with what was termed client-centered therapy, a new form of psychotherapy that allowed the analysis to arise from the patient's growing self-understanding rather than from the more common analysis offered by Freudian systems. He went on to complete his Ph.D. at the University of Chicago in 1949. He held several positions through the 1950s before becoming the director of the Psychology Department at Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center in New York City in 1958. Within a few weeks, another person with whom he was to be intimately related also joined the staff, Helen Schucman, who had just graduated from New York University.

Tetford and Schucman were very different personalities, and their relationship was sporadically filled with anger and hostility. However, in 1965, Tetford suggested that they work on their relationship and attempt to change it. He had been reading metaphysical literature from which he offered the discipline of meditation as a tool to assist them. They began meditating and Schucman began to receive a series of vivid images. Tetford encouraged her to keep a record of whatever she received. However, on October 21, 1965, she heard a voice say to her, "This is a course in miracles. Please take notes." Tetford encouraged her to continue to record what she heard. Schucman recorded what she heard in shorthand. She read it to Tetford, who turned it into typescript.

The result of their collaboration over the next seven years was A Course in Miracles (ACIM). During this period, Schucman frequently expressed trepidation over her channeling work, but Tetford continually calmed her fears and doubts. It was published in 1975. Tetford, a quiet, somewhat passive man, was uncomfortable being in the public eye and allowed others to operate out front on the dissemination of the books and their teachings. In 1978 he moved to Tiburon, California, where the Foundation for Inner Peace, the corporation assigned the task of publishing the Course, had relocated. There he lived a quiet existence using much of his time trying to make the teachings on self-forgiveness real in his life. In 1986, he moved to LaJolla, California, and resided there for the last two years of his life. In the years since his death, his essential role in bringing forth A Course in Miracles has been widely recognized.

Sources:

A Course in Miracles. 3 vols. New York: Foundation for Inner Peace, 1975.

Miller, D. Patrick. The Complete Story of the Course: The History, The People and the Controversies Behind A Course in Miracles. Berkeley, Calif.: Fearless Books, 1997.

Skutch, Judith. "A Course in Miracles, the Untold Story." Parts 1 & 2. New Realities 4, no. 1, 2 (August, September/ October 1984): 17–27; 8–15, 78.

Wapnick, Kenneth. Absence of Felicity: The Story of Helen Schucman and Her Scribing of A Course in Miracles. Roscoe, N.Y.: Foundation for "A Course in Miracles," 1991.

Teutons

Little can be gleaned from the writings of classical authors on the subject, but manuscripts of the Middle Ages by such writers as Snorri Sturluson and Saemund Sigfússon (The Eddas) and Saxo Grammaticus, and such epics or pseudohistories as The Nibelungenlied, shed some light on Teutonic magic practice and beliefs.

From these writers one can arrive at several basic conclusions: (1) that magic with the Teutons was nonhierophantic, and was not the province of the priesthood, as with the Celtic Druids, for example; (2) that women were its chief conservators; and (3) that it principally resided in the study and elucidation of the runic script. In the same manner as in early Egypt it was part and parcel of the ability to decipher the hieroglyphic characters.

It seems that all kinds of people dabbled in the practice of magic, and, to a great extent, sorcery was principally the province of women. Perhaps only those who could read the runes—that is, those who could read at all—were able to undertake the study of the occult, and therefore the unlettered warrior too restless to study was barred from all participation in the subject.

Women in all ranks of life seem to have been addicted to the practice of sorcery, from the queen on the throne to the wise-woman or witch dwelling apart from the community. Thus the mother-in-law of Siegfried bewitches him by a draught, and scores of similar stories could be imagined.

Generally ancient Teutonic magic was not very high; it was greatly hampered by human considerations and much at the mercy of the human element on which it acted and the very human desires that called it forth. In many cases it was rendered useless merely by the cunning of the object upon which it was wreaked. It does not seem to have risen very much above the type of sorcery in vogue among primitive peoples in modern times. It is surprising, with all these weaknesses, how powerful a hold sorcery had upon the popular imagination, which was literally drenched with belief in the supernatural.

Runes

In its various forms—German rune, Anglo-Saxon run, Icelandic run—the word is derived from an old Low German word raunen (to cut or to carve), since the runes in ancient times were invariably carved instead of written. It later came to designate the characters themselves.

Comparatively few people were able to decipher the runes, and the elucidation was left to the curious, the ambitious among the females, and the leisured few in general, perhaps including priests and lawmen. Consequently the power to decipher runes was a mysterious gift venerated among ordinary people who believed that the ability to elucidate them meant the reader possessed magic powers. The possessors of this ability maximized it so the belief in their prowess would flourish. A certain amount of patience and natural ability were necessary for mastery of such an intricate script, and the tradition that they were connected with sorcery lingered long in some parts of Iceland.

In later times the word runes came to be applied to all the alphabetical systems employed by the Teutonic peoples before the introduction of Christianity. Their origin is obscure; some authorities deny that it is Teutonic and assert that the runes are merely a transformation or adaptation of Greek characters, others that they have a Phoenician or even cuneiform origin.

That they are of non-Teutonic origin is inferred from their strong resemblance to other scripts. It has also been argued that it was unlikely that they could have been invented by the Teutonic race given their state of organization and learning at the time the runes first came into general use.

Runes have been divided into three systems—English, German, and Scandinavian—but the difference between these is merely local. They were not employed in early times for literary purposes, but for inscriptions only. Runes were usually found on stone monuments, weapons, implements, and personal ornaments and furniture. In England, runic inscriptions are found in the north only, where Scandinavian influence was strongest.

The first symbols of the runic alphabet are for the letters f, ú, th, ó, r, and c. For this reason the order of the runic letters is not called an alphabet but a futhorc. The system is symbolic. Thus the first letter pictures the head and horns of an ox, and is called feoh after that animal; the second is called ur, the word for bull; the third, thoru (tree), then os (door); rad (saddle); and caen (torch). The runes were probably derived or evolved from a purely pictorial system in which the figures of the animals or objects stood for the letters of the alphabet.

Since runes were carved, some connection may be possible between the Anglo-Saxon secgan (to say), and the Latin word secare (to cut), especially since secret signatures were made by merely cutting a chip from a bark manuscript. The old meaning of the word spell was "thin chip or shaving." The Roman historian Tacitus mentioned that in Teutonic divination, a rod cut from a fruit-bearing tree was cut into slips, and the slips, having marks on them, were thrown onto a white garment to be taken up with prayer to the gods and interpreted as they were taken. A special use of light cuttings for such fateful cross-readings, or "Virgilian lots," may have given the word spells its particular association with the words of the magician.

Belief in Nature Spirits

Among the lesser figures of mythology who were believed to have direct contact with ancient Teutonic peoples and assist them, or were connected with them in the practice of magic, were the duergar, or dwarfs, trolls, undines, nixies, and other spirits. Belief in them was distinctly animistic. The people believed that dwarfs and trolls inhabited the recesses of the mountains, caves, and the underworld. Nixies and undines were said to dwell in the lakes, rivers, pools, and inlets of the sea. In general these were friendly to humans, but objected to more than occasional intercourse with them.

Although not of the class of supernatural beings who obeyed humans in answer to magical summonses, these, especially the dwarfs, often acted as instructors in the arts of magic. Many instances of this are found in tales and romances of early Teutonic origin.

The dwarfs were usually assisted by adventitious aids in their practice of magic, such as belts that endowed the wearer with strength (like that worn by the dwarf "Laurin"), shoes for swiftness (analogous to the seven-league boots of folk tale), caps of invisibility, and so forth.

Witchcraft

Witchcraft was much more in favor among the northern Teutons than it was in Germany, and this circumstance has been attributed to their proximity to the Finns, a race notorious for its propensities toward magic. In Norway, Orkney, and Shetland, the practice of sorcery seems to have been almost exclusively in the hands of Finnish women. There is little doubt that the Finns exercised upon the Teutons of Scandinavia the mythic influence of a conquered race; that is, they took full advantage of the terror inspired in their conquerors by an alien and unfamiliar religion and ritual in which magic was an integral element.

The principal activities of Teutonic witchcraft were the raising of storms, the selling of pieces of knotted rope (each knot representing a wind), divination and prophecy, and acquiring invisibility. Since the sea was the element of the people, it became the chief element of the witch of the northern Teutons. Thus in the saga of Frithjof, the two sea witches Heyde and Ham ride the storm and are sent by Helgi to raise the tempest that will drown Frithjof. They take the shapes of a bear and a storm-eagle. In the saga of Grettir the Strong, a witch-wife, Thurid, sends adrift a magic log that comes to Grettir's island. The log leads to his downfall.

In the north of Scotland, the Teutonic and Celtic systems of magic may be said to have met and fused, but not to have clashed, since their many points of resemblance outweighed their differences.

Animal transformation also played a considerable part in Teutonic magic and witchcraft. In early Germany the witch (hexe) seems to have also acquired the characteristics of a vampire.

Second Sight

The Teutons seem to have excelled in prophecy and divination; the practice was more widespread among the northern Teutons than the southern. Prophetic utterance was usually induced by ecstasy, but it was not the professional diviner alone who was capable of supernatural vision. Anyone under stress of excitement, and particularly if near death, might become fey (prophetic), and great attention was invariably paid to utterances made while the person was in this condition. (See also Holland and Germany)

Sources:

Berger, H. A. Nordische Mythologie. Zittau & Leipzig, Germany, 1834.

Bugge, E. S. The Home of the Eddic Poems. London: David Nutt, 1899.

Elliott, Ralph W. Runes: An Introduction. New York: Barnes & Noble, 1971. Reprint, Greenwood Press, 1981.

Golther, W. Religion und Mythus der Germanen. Leipzig, 1909.

Grimm, Jacob. Teutonic Mythology. 4 vols. London: G. Bell, 1880–1919.

Kauffmann, D. F. Northern Mythology. London: Dent, 1903.

Meyer, E. H. Germanische Mythologie. Berlin, 1891.

Stephens, George. The Old-Northern Runic Monuments of Scandinavia and England. 2 vols. London, 1866–68.

———. Prof. S. Bugge's "Studies on Northern Mythology" Shortly Examined. London: Williams & Norgate, 1883.

Wilken, Ernst. Die Prosaische Edda. Paderhorn, Germany, 1878.

Texas Monthly UFO Report

A former periodical concerned with the technical aspect of UFO investigation for individuals with some scientific background. It also included reports on parapsychological research. It was published at the Texas Scientific Research Center for UFO Studies in Waco.

Thackeray, William Makepeace (1811–1863)

This noted novelist was introduced to the phenomena of Spiritualism during a lecture tour in the United States, when he attended a séance with the famous medium D. D. Home. He also observed the rapping phenomena of Ann (Leah) Underhill, one of the Fox sisters. His sympathetic reaction was described in Underhill's book The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism (1885). This experience and subsequent observations with Home led Thackeray to endorse the sincerity of the anonymous account (written by Robert Bell) "Stranger Than Fiction." It was published in the Cornhill Magazine and edited by Thackeray. He was severely criticized for this apparent endorsement of Spiritualism.

However, it seems that, in fact, his attitude was somewhat ambiguous. In a letter to his friends Mrs. Thomas F. Elliot and Kate Perry, he states:

"Yes I have seen the Rappers, and the table moving, and heard the Spirits. The moving of tables is undoubted, the noises and knocks (continual raps following the person who has the gift of eliciting them) some natural unexplained phenomenon but the Spirits is of course dire humbug and imposture. They try to guess at something and hit or miss as may be. 1000 misses for one hit—It is a most dreary and foolish superstition. . . . But the physical manifestations are undoubted—Tables moving lifted up and men even lifted off the ground to the ceiling so some are ready to swear—but though I do not believe in this until I see it; I wouldn't have believed in a table turning 3 weeks ago—and that I have seen and swear to. . . ."

Both Thackeray and his friend Charles Dickens had the highest regard for John Elliotson, a pioneer of mesmerism who was later converted to Spiritualism after initial skepticism. Thackeray based his character "Dr. Goodenough" in Pendennis and The Newcomes on Elliotson, and dedicated the former novel to him.

Sources:

Goldfarb, Russell M., and Clare R. Goldfarb. Spiritualism and Nineteenth-Century Letters. New Brunswick, N.J.: Associated University Presses, 1978.

Underhill, A. Leah. The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism. New York: Thomas R. Knox, 1885. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1976.

Thanatology

The formal study of the nature of death and dying. Prior to the demarkation of thanatology as a new area of specialization, the study of various aspects of death had been included in psychology and parapsychology. Parapsychological research has concentrated on three human experiences that seem to be part of the death experience: 1) the sensation of floating out of the body; 2) feelings of peace or wholeness; and 3) meetings with someone who has died previously. Studies of what today is called the near-death experience have been made by psychical researchers since the nineteenth century, often under the label death-bed experiences.

Significant in defining the new field of thanatology has been the work of physician Elisabeth Kübler-Ross, author of the book On Death and Dying (1970), whose work began with a concern for the grief process she frequently encountered in counseling with dying patients. Her continued interest led her to questions of survival of death, traditionally an area of psychical studies. She is the founder of Shanti Nilaya, a healing and growth center in Virginia. Among the leading centers focused on research in thanatology are the International Institute for the Study of Death in Florida and the International Association for Near-Death Studies.

Sources:

Kastenbaum, Robert, ed. Between Life and Death. New York: Springer Publishing, 1979.

Kübler-Ross, Elisabeth. On Death and Dying. New York: Macmillan Co., 1969.

———. To Live Until We Say Goodbye. Englewood Cilffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1978.

Osis, Karlis, and Erlendur Haraldsson. At the Hour of Death. New York: Avon Books, 1977.

Ring, Kenneth. Heading Toward Omega—In Search of the Meaning of the Near-Death Experience. New York: William Morrow, 1984.

Thau Weza

Burmese wizards, literally "wire-man who works in wire." (See also Myanmar)

Thayer, M(ary) B(aker) (ca. 1887)

Well-known professional apport and slate-writing medium of Boston, who chiefly produced flowers and fruits, sometimes live birds. In the Banner of Light (1875) there is an account of a canary apport in answer to a mental request. In the report of the Seybert Commission, a slate-writing séance attended by one Professor Fullerton was considered a failure. There was a description of another séance, at which 30 people were present. The Seybert Commission was represented by Drs. Koenig and Leidy.

According to the Leidy's account:

". . . sounds were heard of objects dropping on the table, and from time to time matches were lit and exposed, strewn before the company, cut plants and flowers. These were all of the kind sold at this season by the florists, consisting of a pine bough, fronds of ferns, roses, pinks, tulips, lilies, callas and smilax. At one time there fell on the table a heavy body, which proved to be a living terrapin, at another time there appeared a pigeon which flew about the room. . . . The proprietor of the house declared that the flowers and the other objects brought to view in the séance were not previously in the room, and their appearance could not be explained unless through spiritual agency.''

In a footnote to his translation of Adolphe d'Assier's book Posthumous Humanity (1887) Henry S. Olcott writes:

''While she [Mrs. Thayer] was enclosed in a large bag, sealed closely at her neck, and all possibility of trickery guarded against, I have seen a long table, quite covered with vines, plants and flowers, dropped out of space. I marked a certain leaf of a rare plant in the garden without her knowledge, and the same evening, in response to my mental request, it dropped upon the back of my hand, with which I was at the moment holding the medium's two hands. The above occurred in the dark; but once a tree branch was brought me in full daylight, through her mediumship, in the house of a gentleman whose guest I was.''

Due to the nature of her work with apports and slate writing and the fact that her only support came from people such as Olcott, who was never known for his critical approach to such phenomena, Thayer is considered likely to be one of the fraudulent mediums of the era.

Thee Satanic Church

Thee Satanic Church was a small Satanic organization in Chicago during the 1970s. It was formed in 1974 as a breakaway group of Thee Satanic Church of the Nethilum Rite. Evelyn Paglini, one of the original founders of the Nethilum Rite group, established Thee Satanic Church, opened an occult book store in Chicago, and began the periodical Psychic Standard. The group gradually dropped their Satanic elements, the Psychic Standard ceased publication in 1980, and shortly afterwards the church was dissolved.

Thee Satanic Church of the Nethilum Rite

Thee Satanic Church of the Nethilum Rite was founded around 1970 in Chicago by High Priest Terry Taylor and Evelyn Paglini and went public in 1971. The church opposed the Satanisn of Anton S. LaVey and the Church of Satan, founded in 1966, contending that LaVey did not believe in the actual existence of Satan. In contrast, the Nethilum Rite church taught that Satan was the epitome of God's creation who possessed all of the power and knowledge of the universe. Members of the church sought to acquire as much of Satan's knowledge and power as possible. Magical rituals and psychic development were the primary tools for accessing Satan.

By 1973 the church claimed 538 members. It split in 1974 when Paglini led a group out of the church and founded a rival organization, Thee Satanic Church. The Nethilum Rite church ceased to exist in the mid-1970s.

Thee Temple ov Psychick Youth (TOPY)

Thee Temple ov Psychick Youth (TOPY) grew out of the magical philosophical thought of rock musician Genesis P. Orridge, formerly with the band Throbbing Gristle. He wished to explore the possibilities of human potential and saw performance art as a fruitful means for his work. In 1981 he started a new band, Psychic TV, and TOPY. He soon reached the conclusion that humans possessed an infinite potential and were limited only by the restraints imposed upon it. That idea brought him close to one of the major tenets espoused in The Book of the Law, the Thelemic magical text that had been received by Aleister Crowley in 1904, ''The word of sin is restriction.'' Orridge also began to identify what he was doing with magic.

Orridge identified the human problem as the narrowing of choice by society and the movement of most people into a sleep-like state in which they lose awareness of their vast potential. He believes that religion and politics are vast systems that operate to put people to sleep. Temple members are those who have begun to awaken to their potential and are attempting to explore it even as they become more aware. A first step is coming to grips with one's mortality. Members also seek to discover their True Will (a basic concept of Thelemic Magic) and generally accept the basic Thelemic notion, ''Do What thou Will shall be the whole of the Law.'' TOPY has generally prescribed an intuitive approach to life rather than the following of rules, laws, and regulations.

Integral to living intuitively is sexual expression, which should follow one's wants and desires rather than social mores, according to TOPY. Correlatively, sexual magic is the single best tool for raising the energy need for liberation. TOPY has matured into a ritual magic group that espouses all of the traditional teachings of magic, though in a most modern fashion. Unlike traditional magical orders, there is no initiatory grading system, hierarchical organization, or secret rituals. TOPY is organized as a fellowship of equals with various complementary talents and abilities.

Its egalitarian stance and the constant striving of members to expand their individual potential has contributed to TOPY's instability as an organization. On several occasions it has been reported defunct. However, at least in a minimal way, it has survived. The TOPY North American headquarters is at P.O. Box 1212521, Tacoma, WA 98411-1521. It has a website at http://www.uncarved.demon.co.uk/topy/htm.

Sources:

Burton, Tina. ''Intuitive Magick?'': A Study of the Temple ov Psychick Youth, 1981–1989. Unpublished paper in the American Religions Collection, Davidson Library, University of California—Santa Barbara, 1989.

An Introduction to Thee Temple ov Psychick Youth. Brighton, Sussex, UK: Temple Press Limited, 1989.

Theobald, Morell (1828–1908)

British Spiritualist and author of Spiritualism at Home (1884) and Spirit Workers in the Home Circle (1887), the latter describing a series of curious psychic manifestations in his home that lasted for many years.

Some of Theobald's family members reportedly possessed psychic gifts—his grandfather and father saw spirits. His own friendship with the author William Howitt and family initiated him into writing and mediumship in 1855. The psychic ties were further strengthened by intimacy with Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Everitt, and the two families held séances together for many years. Not surprisingly, the loss of three children increased the receptivity of the Theobald family. A sitting following their death led to rapping phenomena, which, in the presence of three living children, developed into movements of a heavy dining table and, eventually, intelligent communications.

The book by Theobald's sister titled Heaven Opened; or, Messages for the Bereaved from Their Little Ones in Glory (1870) contains records of these experiences. The contact with the beyond was, at this period, threefold—the elder boy fell into trance and was controlled by the deceased children and others; Theobald and his wife wrote automatically; and Mrs. Everitt produced direct voice manifestations for the family.

The strange phenomena of later years were first heralded during a joint excursion with the Everitt family to Cornwall in 1871. To quote from Spirit Workers in the Home Circle:

''As we sat on woodland slopes we had the curious sensations of rapping beneath the solid earth on which we sat. If we took a basket of sandwiches, that was moved about by our sportive invisible friends. At an inn where we stayed with our hamper of provisions we expected the waiter would be scared, for raps resounded on the window, walls and wainscoted panelling, while our hamper was bodily taken off by invisible hands into one corner of the room and there opened and partly unpacked for us."

In 1882 Mary, a new cook, was discovered to have clairvoyant powers. When Tom, the youngest son, complained that his hair was being pulled by invisible beings, Mary saw and described the phantom visitors. Because of her gifts Mary was soon advanced to the standing of a trusted friend of the family. After the maid left, Nellie Theobald and Mary occupied the same bedroom and looked jointly after the household duties.

Morell Theobald employed many tests to verify strange occurrences in the house; he often got up in the middle of the night in an attempt to catch the perpetrators in the act, but he was unsuccessful.

For some time, Theobald resisted every request of competent psychic investigators to take Mary to their own rooms for investigation. In this resolve he was strangely strengthened by spirit advice in direct writing. The limited investigation of Frank Podmore and Frank S. Hughes of the Society for Psychical Research (SPR) was finally allowed to continue in the Theobald home in 1884, and cast considerable doubt on many of the marvelous occurrences, especially on the spirit writings, which appeared in every conceivable place—on the ceiling, on the walls, on locked drawers and receptacles, on marked papers, and came in many languages: old French, Latin, Hebrew, Greek, and Raratongan, among others.

The SPR investigators were never able to witness the actual performance of the various phenomena and found many circumstances that suggested human origin in the spirit writings. The letters were regularly formed and of normal size when they appeared in places accessible to persons of ordinary stature but became straggling and irregular on higher places as if they had been written with a broomstick with a pencil attached. The locked secretaire in which writing was produced was not fraud-proof. A piece of paper could easily be slipped in through a crack.

The investigators also contended that the small characters in certain pieces of spirit writing could have been written by anybody with a sharp pencil and patient practice. They found many crude mistakes in the Latin and Greek scripts and discovered finally the facts contained in the communications coming from "Saadi" had been published in an article, "Persian Poetry in the Past" in Part 6 of Chamber's Repository of Instructive and Amusing Tracts. It also appeared that "Wamik," who claimed to have been "Saadi's" friend and contemporary poet, was a fictitious entity, the imaginary hero of the poem to which he subscribed his name. In the end it appeared that Mary was the mundane source of much if not all of the phenomena.

The findings of the two investigators were strongly criticized in Light (January, February, and March 1885). The editor concluded that the investigation was incomplete and hasty and that fraud could not explain the extraordinarily varied phenomena of the Theobald house.

Morell Theobald admitted that "many of the writings . . . are comparatively feeble compositions" and that he had found the source of the most puzzling pieces of direct writing (i.e., the Lord's Prayer as used in the twelfth century and the Rarantongan Script) in a volume he had given Mary as a Christmas present. He refused to seek a normal explanation to the diversified styles of handwriting, even when the scripts were handed out by Mary herself from the cabinet in which she sat to develop materializations.

There was no better evidence for deep-rooted unshakable faith than Theobald's account of the test undertaken on behalf of the SPR in 1886. He was handed two sealed envelopes by E. T. Bennett, assistant secretary of the SPR, in order to have the hidden contents deciphered by spirit agency. After some weeks, writing was obtained on the outside of the envelopes that proved to be a fairly good counterpart of the inside. Theobald was then handed a third envelope, which was in his careful keeping for some months, according to him "no one in the house besides myself and my wife knowing of its existence."

Again the contents were revealed, but instead of triumph, a very painful accusation was made against the Theobald family: the SPR claimed that all the envelopes had been opened and gummed up again. To make matters worse, the handwriting on all three was identical in character with the well-known scripts.

Theobald believed mischievous and fraudulent spirits had spoiled the tests. He said that the family had broken the essential condition of trust and thereby had opened the door to such evil influences. This conviction of Theobald's was apparently borne out by psychometric readings of the envelopes through a clairvoyant and by many mediumistic communications. One of the readings was obtained through the mediumship of William Eglinton, who was on more than one occasion caught in mediumistic fraud. It is a very legitimate inference that the atmosphere of blind faith that pervaded the Theobald family had allowed serious deception.

Sources:

"Alleged 'Physical Phenomena' in the Family of Morell Theobald." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 2 (1886).

Podmore, Frank. Modern Spiritualism. London: Methuen, 1902. Reprinted as Mediums of the Nineteenth Century. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1963.

"Theologus"

One of the spirit controls of William Stainton Moses, "Theologus" was said to be St. John the Divine.

Theomancy

The aspect of the study of the Kabala that deals with the mysteries of divine majesty and seeks the sacred names. He (and only males over 40 could engage in this study) who possessed this knowledge knew the future, commanded nature, had full power over angels and demons, and could perform miracles.

The Hasidic masters (zaddik) claimed that it was by this means that Moses performed so many marvels; that Joshua was able to stop the sun; that Elias caused fire to fall from heaven and raised the dead; that Daniel closed the mouths of the lions; and that the three youths were not consumed in the furnace. Even today, the leaders of some Hasidic groups are reputed to have mastered at least part of this material and are known for their miracle-working abilities.

Sources:

Dresner, Samuel H. The Zaddik. New York: Schrocken Books, 1974.

Rabinowitz, H. A Guide to Hassidism. New York: Thomas Yoseloff, 1960.

Theon, M(ax) (1850–1927)

Max Theon, the enigmatic occultist whose work initiated the Hermetic Brotherhood of Luxor in the mid-1880s, was born Louis Maximilian Bimstein into a Jewish family in Poland. He appears to have first received knowledge of the occult world in the thriving Hassidic communities of his homeland. As a young man he began to travel the world, but in 1873 settled in England at Saint John's Wood, in the northern section of London. He made his living as a psychic healer and advertised himself in the Spiritual periodicals as able to cure cholera.

In 1882 he began to work with a young Scotsman named Thomas Dalton (1855–1895), later known under his pseudonym, Thomas H. Burgoyne. In their three years' association, he awakened Burgoyne's spiritual vision and put him in touch with some preternatural entities, the adepts who were acknowledged as the Interior Circle, the real founders of the Hermetic Brotherhood of Luxor. The brotherhood's existence was announced in 1884 in a small advertisement placed in the back of an English translation of the Divine Pymander of Hermes Mercurus Trismegistus. It invited contact with Bimstein under his magical name, Theon. Theon was named Grand Master of the Exterior Circle, the human agents who carried out the instructions of the Interior Circle.

Within a short time Theon retired from any active involvement with the brotherhood, which he left to the care of Burgoyne and the Rev. William Alexander Ayton. He married a medium, Mary Christine Woodroffe Ware. Ware was the founder of the Universal Philosophical Society in London, at which she offered Spiritualist lectures. In 1886 Theon, along with his wife and secretary, Augusta Rolfe, moved to Paris and then in 1888 to Algiers.

His activities in the 1890s are largely unknown, though he probably continued to support himself as a healer and worked with his new wife in perfecting her mediumship. In 1899 he surfaced to write for the Journal du Magnétism st de la Psychologie against the philosophy of the French Spiritists led by Allan Kardec.

Around the turn of the century Theon reappeared in Tlemcen, Algeria, and in 1901 began to issue a magazine, Cosmic Philosophy, whose content seems to have been derived from material channeled by Madame Theon. It ceased publication shortly after her death in 1908. In Algeria he also took students, among whom was Mira Alfassa (1878–1973), who as Mira Richard became the student and companion of Sri Aurobindo Ghose (1872–1950), the famed Indian spiritual teacher. Known as "The Mother," she ran the Aurobindo Ashram for many years.

Theon passed away in March of 1927 in Algiers.

Sources:

Godwin, Joscelyn. The Theosophical Enlightenment. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1994.

———, Christian Chanel, and John P. Deveney. The Hermetic Brotherhood of Luxor: Initiatic and Historical Documents of an Order of Practical Occultism. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1995.

Theon, Max. La Tradition Cosmique. 6 vols. Paris: Bibliothèque Chacornac/Publicationes Cosmiques, 1903–20.

"Theophilus"

One of the spirit controls of William Stainton Moses, "Theophilus" was said to be St. John the Apostle.

Theosophical History (Journal)

A quarterly journal founded by Leslie Price in January 1985 that reports on the historical study of the expansive theosophical movement, including individuals and impulses associated with but not a part of the Theosophical Society. The journal has an independent stance and is neutral to various expressions of Theosophy. It seeks to promote the common historical enterprise by Theosophists and non-Theosophists interested in the history of the occult.

The journal seeks to aid historical assessment of such pioneers of Theosophy as Alice Bailey, Annie Besant, William Quan Judge, J. Krishnamurti, C. W. Leadbeater, and G. R. S. Mead. By arrangement with the Society for Psychical Research, London, early issues of the journal carried items from its files on theosophical phenomena.

In 1989 funding became a problem after the death of its prime donor and subsequent difficulties with the Theosophical Publishing House, there was a brief lapse of publication in 1989 until James Santucci, a professor at California State University in Fullerton, California, commenced publication with the January 1990 issue. Santucci built a new editorial board (which includes Price) and continued publication with the same independent stance and high standards as Price originally envisioned.

Theosophical History may be ordered from Dr. James Santucci, Department of Comparitive Religion, P.O. Box 6868, California State University, Fullerton, CA 92834-6868. Website: http://idt.net/~pdeveney/.

Theosophical Society

The major modern organization advocating gnostic-esoteric teachings. The Theosophical Society was founded in New York in 1875 by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, Henry Steel Olcott, William Quan Judge, and others. It grew out of interest in the occult generated previously by the magnetist movement and especially Spiritualism, in which both Blavatsky and Olcott had participated. The society proposed a different direction, including attention to a distinct philosophical stance drawn from Eastern teachings.

Both Blavatsky and Olcott were closely concerned with Spiritualist investigations, and they met at the house of the Eddy brothers in Vermont. They were also concerned in the claimed phenomena of the mediums Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Holmes of Philadelphia, who were accused of cheating. The Holmes partnership involved the alleged manifestation of the spirits "Katie King" and "John King," associated with the British medium Florence Cook. Blavatsky eventually disowned the Holmes phenomena, but endorsed the reality of the spirit "John King."

In May 1875 Blavatsky and Olcott formed the Miracle Club, which offered an alternative to prevailing scientific materialism, but the organization languished. Soon Olcott began to receive messages through Blavatsky from a mysterious "Brotherhood of Luxor," prototypes of the famous Mahatma letters of later years. These messages claimed the support of hidden masters of wisdom in the spreading of truth.

In November 1875 the Theosophical Society was founded with Olcott as president, Blavatsky as corresponding secretary, and Judge (a lawyer) as counsel. There were approximately 20 original members. The term "theosophy" was proposed by Charles Sotheran, a well-known bibliophile and editor of the American Bibliopolist. The preamble to the society's bylaws states:

"The Title of the Theosophical Society explains the objects and desires of its founder: they 'seek to obtain knowledge of the nature and attributes of the Supreme Power, and of the higher spirits by the aid of physical processes.' In other words, they hope, that by going deeper than modern science has hitherto done, into the esoteric philosophies of ancient times, they may be enabled to obtain, for themselves and other investigators, proof of the existence of an 'Unseen Universe,' the nature of its inhabitants if such there be, and the laws which govern them and their relations with mankind. Whatever may be the private opinions of its members, the society has no dogmas to enforce, no creed to disseminate. It is formed neither as a Spiritualist schism, nor to serve as the foe or friend of any sectarian or philosophic body. Its only axiom is the omnipotence of truth, its only creed a profession of unqualified devotion to its discovery and propaganda. In considering the qualifications of applicants for membership, it knows neither race, sex, color, country nor creed."

The stated objects of the society were "to collect and diffuse a knowledge of the laws which govern the universe." To the society, these laws involved phenomena of a miraculous kind as claimed in the history of occultism, Rosicrucians, and other secret orders.

This preoccupation with the miraculous, which has also been the popular focal point in the establishment of great world religions, proved to be the strength as well as the weakness of the society. Over the next two years, there was a shortage of unusual phenomena and the society seemed doomed to failure, many members dropping out.

Meanwhile, Blavatsky was preparing her book Isis Unveiled, a compilation and survey of esoteric religious and occult traditions through the ages. This book, together with the amalgamation of the Theosophical Society with the Arya Samaj of Swami Dayananda Saraswati in 1878, stimulated new interest in the society.

In 1879 Blavatsky and Olcott toured India, establishing new contacts and developing an aura of the mystic East. India was traditionally associated with the supernormal feats of yogis and the esoteric wisdom of the Vedas and Upanishads. Although Swami Dayananda proved to be something of a disappointment, due to being a social reformer rather than a repository of the prized miraculous feats of yoga, extraordinary events surrounded Blavatsky over the next few years in India and reports on them attracted widespread support for the Theosophical Society.

Olcott's tour of Ceylon and acceptance of Buddhism helped to solidify the society's image as a unifying principle for all religions, though it also succeeded in exciting opposition from Christian missionaries who did not believe that religions could or should be unified.

During 1880–82 there were many letters purportedly from the mysterious Mahatmas, or Masters of Wisdom, governing the development of the society, which established headquarters at Adyar, Madras. Although the marvels associated with Blavatsky brought new and important supporters for the society, they also excited opposition and accusations of fraud, even from Swami Dayananda, who publicly repudiated Blavatsky and the society in April 1882.

Through the years the Theosophical Society suffered from various dissensions and schisms. Most notable was the controversy over the so-called Mahatma letters, which Blavatsky claimed were supernormally produced messages from Masters or adepts. Accusations from Christian missionaries in India that these letters were fraudulent began in 1884; in the same year Richard Hodgson of the Society for Psychical Research, Britain, went to the headquarters of the Theosophical Society at Adyar, Madras, to conduct an on-the-spot investigation.

He reported the discovery of a shrine with a false back, used with the connivance of Madame Coulomb, an employee of the society, as a fake mailbox for the letters. The confession of fraud by Coulomb was dismissed by loyal members of the society as part of a Christian plot to discredit Blavatsky and the society. Coulomb's disclosure of the different methods by which the "miracles" were produced and Hodgson's own discovery of various fraudulent events proved more conclusive to most.

Blavatsky left India and settled in England, leaving the society in Olcott's hands. There she drew a group of students, and an internal controversy arose in the society over the establishment of an esoteric section for the study of arcane doctrines and practices. Meanwhile, Blavatsky worked on her massive presentation of theosophical teachings, which finally appeared as The Secret Doctrine.

Meanwhile, following the transfer of international headquarters to India, Judge had organized and was leading the American section. After Blavatsky's death in 1891, disputes arose over the production of further Mahatma letters by Judge. These letters supported his claim to take charge of the esoteric section, which Blavatsky had bequeathed to newcomer Annie Besant.

While there was a temporary agreement for Besant and Judge to share leadership, tension between Judge and the society leadership outside of the United States continued; in 1895–96 he led the great majority of the American lodges in the establishment of the Theosophical Society in America as a separate entity. Judge died a short time later and E. T. Hargrove was elected president of the Theosophical Society in America. But like Blavatsky, Judge had found a talented protege, and Katherine Tingley's abilities were recognized by the membership and she became president of the American society—a post she would hold for the rest of her life. She led in the establishment of a Theosophical community at Point Loma, San Diego, California.

Meanwhile, Annie Besant succeeded Olcott (d. 1907) as president of the international Theosophical Society. A capable orator and administrator, she helped the society and built it into a worldwide organization. While the society was hindered by the scandals attached to Blavatsky, Besant attempted to put that history in the past. However, one of her colleagues, Charles Webster Leadbeater who impressed Besant as one possessed of occult abilities, was involved in several scandals that involved some young boys. Eventually he was exiled from India to Australia, though not before he and Besant had produced some of the standard theosophical texts. Leadbeater cost the society the considerable support of the scholar G. R. S. Mead and some 700 other members in England who left in 1908 and established a rival organization.

Besant adopted, with the aid of Leadbeater, a young Brahmin boy named Jiddu Krishnamurti, who they claimed would be the vehicle through whom the future "World Teacher" would manifest. After World War I, as Krishnamurti matured, Besant promoted him and took him on speaking tours around the world. The society's membership peaked in response to his presence and both Besant and the members were devastated in 1929 when he resigned and renounced the role she had assigned him. Krishnamurti went on to become an independent teacher in his own right with a considerable following.

Theosophy's teachings had been given to Blavatsky by a group of exalted masters. Following her death, various people, such as Leadbeater, also claimed to be in spiritual contact. One who made such claims was Alice A. Bailey, a member living in southern California. She claimed that she was serving as the amanuensis of Djual Khul, usually called the Tibetan. Her claims eventually led to her separation from the society and the establishment in the 1920s of another offshoot of Theosophy—the Arcane School.

In spite of its controversial background, the Theosophical Society itself has had a considerable influence on the spiritual and intellectual life of many individuals in India, Europe, and the United States. Much of the power of the Irish literary renaissance of William Butler Yeats and AE (George Russell) stems from their association with Theosophy, which also exercised a powerful influence on European occultism.

Perhaps its greatest contribution came during the presidency of Besant, when Theosophy provided the people of India with a feeling of pride in their own cultural and spiritual heritage and participated in the growing wave of nationalism that eventually resulted in the independence of India. Under the auspices of the Theosophical Society, many important Hindu scriptures were translated and published and the library at Adyar contains many rare manuscripts preserved by the society.

The Theosophical Society, with its international headquarters in Adyar, Madras, India, is today a worldwide body perpetuating the basic perspective and teachings of ancient Gnosticism, as promoted by Blavatsky in the 1880s and 1890s. While the society is a significant body in its own right, its influence has been extended through the hundreds of organizations that have taken the basic theosophical worldview and built variations upon it. Theosophy led directly to the founding of the Liberal Catholic Church, the Anthroposophical Society, the Alice Bailey movement, and the I Am Movement. Almost a hundred different organizations, some of which rival the parent Theosophical Society in size, have emerged from these offshoots. Less directly attached to Theosophy, but owing much to its initial impulse, is the modern magical revival whose initial major organizational expression was the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, but which has found contemporary expression in the OTO and the popular neo-pagan witchcraft movement. The single most popular expression of Theosophy has been the

New Age movement of the 1980s, which brought literally millions of people into esoteric studies.

The main theosophical bodies, i.e., those that have a specifically theosophical heritage, are the Theosophical Society (with international lodges and headquarters at Adyar, Madras, India); the Theosophical Society, American Branch (with international headquarters at Altadena, California); and the United Lodge of Theosophists (headquarters in Los Angeles, California). The American affiliate of the international society headquartered in Adyar is the Theosophical Society in America, with headquarters in Wheaton, Illinois on an estate called Olcott; the British affiliate is the Theosophical Society at 50 Gloucester Pl., London, W1H 3HJ, England.

Sources:

Besant, Annie. The Theosophical Society and H. P. Blavatsky. London, 1891.

Campbell, Bruce F. A History of the Theosophical Movement. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1980.

Christian Literature Society. Theosophy Exposed; or, Mrs. Besant and Her Guru: Appeal to Educated Hindus. Madras, India: SPCK Press, 1893.

Coulomb, Madame E. Some Account of My Intercourse with Madame Blavatsky from 1872 to 1884. London: Elliot Stock, 1885.

Ellwood, Robert. Theosophy. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1986.

Gomes, Michael. Theosophy in the Nineteenth Century: An Annotated Bibliography. New York: Garland Publishing, 1994.

Hare, H. E., and W. L. Hare. Who Wrote the Mahatma Letters? London: Williams & Norgate, 1936.

Harrison, Vernon. H. P. Blavatsky and the SPR. Pasadena, Calif.: Theosophical University Press, 1997.

Hodgson, Richard. "Personal Investigations, in India, of Theosophical Phenomena." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 3 (1885); Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 1–2 (1884–1886).

Johnson, Paul. In Search of the Masters: Behind the Occult Myth. South Boston: The Author, 1990.

Kingsland, William. The Real H. P. Blavatsky. London: John M. Watkins, 1928.

Olcott, H. S. Old Diary Leaves. 6 vols. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1895–1910.

Ransom, Josephine. A Short History of the Theosophical Society. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1938.

Ryan, Charles J. H. P. Blavatsky and the Theosophical Movement. Pasadena, Calif.: Theosophical University Press, 1975.

Solovyoff, V. S. A Modern Priestess of Isis. London: Longmans, Green, 1895.

Symonds, John. Madame Blavatsky, Medium and Magician. London: Odhams Press, 1958.

Waterman, Adlai E. [Walter A. Carrithers]. Obituary: The "Hodgson Report" on Madame Blavatsky, 1895–1960; Reexamination Discredits the Major Charges Against H. P. Blavatsky. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1963.

Williams, Gertrude Marvin. Priestess of the Occult: Madame Blavatsky. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1946.

Theosophical Society in America

The American affiliate society of the international Theosophical Society, which is headquartered in Adyar, Madras, India. It continues the tradition of Theosophy established in 1875 in New York. The American branch was organized in 1886 but became separate from the international movement in 1895–96. The few American lodges still loyal to the international headquarters in Adyar reorganized and eventually became the dominant segment of the society in the United States.

The society is headquartered in Wheaton, Illinois, where it maintains a library of more that 20,000 volumes and publishes books through the Theosophical Publishing House. It issues a magazine, Quest. Headquarters are located at 1926 N. Main St., Wheaton, IL 60187. The American branch of the Esoteric Section is headquartered in a small theosophical community in Ojai, California. The complex also houses a large library as well an educational facility known as the Krotona Institute. Theosophical literature is distributed through Quest bookstores, outlets being located in several cities, including Wheaton and Ojai.

Theosophical Society of Agrippa

The famous occultist and alchemist Agrippa (1486–1535) established in Paris and other centers a secret theosophical society, the rites of admission to which were of a peculiar character.

Agrippa visited London in 1510, and there he established a branch of the order in that city.

Theosophy

Term derived from the Greek theos (rod) and sophia (wisdom), denoting a philosophical-religious system that claims absolute knowledge of the existence and nature of the deity, and is not to be confused with the later system evolved by the founders of the Theosophical Society.

This knowledge, or theosophy, it is claimed, may be obtained by special individual revelation, or through the operation of some higher faculty. It is the transcendent character of the godhead of theosophical systems that differentiates them from the philosophical systems of the speculative or absolute type, which usually proceed deductively from the idea of God. God is conceived in theosophical systems as the transcendent source of being, from whom human beings in their natural state are far removed.

Theosophy is practically another name for speculative mysticism. Thus Kabalistic and Neoplatonic conceptions of divine emanations are in reality theosophical, as are the mystical systems of Jakob Boehme and Baader.

Theosophy has also come to signify the tenets and teachings of the founders of the Theosophical Society. This society was founded in the United States in 1875 by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, Col. H. S. Olcott, and others. Its objectives were to establish a nucleus of the Universal Brotherhood of Humanity, to promote the study of comparative religion and philosophy, and to investigate the mystic powers of life and matter.

The conception of the Universal Brotherhood was based upon the oriental idea of one life—that ultimate oneness underlies all diversity, whether inward or outward. The study of comparative religion had materialized into a definite system of belief, the bounds of which were dogmatically fixed. It was set forth in the theosophical system that all the great religions of the world originated from one supreme source and that they are merely expressions of a central "Wisdom Religion" vouchsafed to various races of the earth in such a manner as is best suited to time and geographical circumstances.

Underlying these was a secret doctrine or esoteric teaching, which, it was stated, had been the possession for ages of certain Mahatmas, or adepts, in mysticism and occultism. With these Blavatsky claimed to be in direct communication, and she herself manifested occult phenomena, producing the ringing of astral bells, and so forth.

On several occasions these effects were unmasked as fraudulent, but many people believed that Blavatsky was one of those rare personalities who possess great natural psychic powers, which at times failing her, she augmented by fraudulent methods.

The evidence for the existence of the Great White Brotherhood of Mahatmas, the existence of which she asserted, was unfortunately somewhat inconclusive. It rested, for the most part, on the statements of Blavatsky, Olcott, A. P. Sinnett, Charles W. Leadbeater, and other committed Theosophists, who claimed to have seen or communicated with them.

With every desire to do justice to these upholders of the theosophical argument, it is necessary to point out that in occult, or pseudo-occult experiences, the question of hallucination enters very largely, and the ecstatic condition may be responsible for subjective appearances that seem real enough to the visionary.

Again, the written communications of the Mahatmas—the Mahatma letters—give rise to much doubt. One Mahatma employed the American system of spelling, and this was accounted for by the circumstance that his English had been sophisticated by reading American books. A study of these letters leaves little doubt that their style, script, and purpose were nearer to Blavatsky than to Tibetan or Himalayan hermitages.

The revelations of Blavatsky in her books Isis Unveiled (2 vols., 1877) and The Secret Doctrine (2 vols., 1888–97) are an extraordinary mixture of Buddhistic, Brahministic, and Kabalistic matter with a basic theme of religious unity and the persistence of occult and miraculous phenomena throughout history.

The Theosophical Society has numbered among its members many persons of high ability, whose statement and exegesis of their faith has placed it upon a much higher level and more definite foundation.

The system was constructed in a manner akin to genius, and evolved on highly intricate lines. It was, to a great extent, pieced together after the death of the original founder of the society, on which event a schism occurred in the Brotherhood through the claims to leadership of William Q. Judge, of New York, who died in 1896, and who was followed by Katherine Tingley, the founder of the great Theosophical community at Point Loma, California.

Olcott became the leader of the remaining part of the original Theosophical Society in America and India, being assisted in his work by Annie Besant, but a more or less independent organization was founded in England.

A brief outline of the tenets of Theosophy may be stated as follows. It posits a rational belief in its views rather than blind faith, and allows for individual differences of opinion. It professes to be a religious philosophy that holds the germs of all others. It has also its aspect as a science—a science of life and of the soul.

The basic teaching is that there are three absolute truths that cannot be lost, but yet may remain silent for lack of speech. (1) The soul of humanity is immortal and its future is the future of the thing, whose growth and splendor has no limit. (2) The principle that gives life dwells in us and without us, is undying and eternally beneficent, is not heard, or seen, or smelt, but is perceived by the man who desires perception. (3) Each individual is his or her own absolute law-giver, the dispenser of glory or gloom to oneself, decreer of one's life, one's reward, one's punishment.

Although Theosophy posits the existence of an absolute, it does not pretend to knowledge of its attributes. In the absolute are innumerable universes and in each universe countless solar systems. Each solar system is the expression of a being called the Logos, the Word of God, or the Solar Deity, who permeates it and exists above it and outside it.

Below this Solar Deity are his seven ministers, called Planetary Spirits, whose relation to him is like that of the nerve centers to the brain, so that all his voluntary acts come through him to them. Under them are vast hosts or orders of spiritual beings called devas, or angels, who assist in many ways. This world is ruled by a great official who represents the Solar Deity, who is in absolute control of all the evolution that takes place upon this planet. When a new religion is to be founded, this being either comes or sends pupils to institute it.

In the earlier stages of the development of humanity the great officials of the hierarchy are provided from more highly evolved parts of the system, but whenever human beings can be trained to the necessary level of power and wisdom these offices are held by them. They can only be filled by adepts, who in goodness, power, and wisdom are immeasurably greater than ordinary individuals, and have attained the summit of human evolution. These advance until they themselves become of the nature of deities.

There are many degrees and many lines of activity among these, but some of them always remain within touch of the Earth and assist in the spiritual evolution of humanity. This body is called the "Great White Brotherhood." Its members do not dwell together, but live separately apart from the world and are in constant telepathic communication with one another.

Their knowledge of higher forces is so great that they have no necessity for meeting in the physical world, but each dwells in his own country, and their power remains unsuspected among those who live near them. These adepts are willing to take as apprentices those who have resolved to devote themselves utterly to the service of humankind. Blavatsky was presumed to be such an apprentice. One of these masters said: "In order to succeed the pupil must leave his own world and come into ours."

The Theosophical conception of the constitution of the human being is that he or she is in essence a spark of the divine fire belonging to the monadic world. For the purposes of human evolution, this monad manifests itself in lower worlds. Entering the spiritual world it manifests itself there as the triple spirit; one of its three aspects always remains in the spiritual sphere.

The second aspect manifests itself in the intuitional world, and the third in the higher mental world, and these two are collated with intuition and intelligence. These three aspects combined make up the ego, which is individual personality during the human stage of evolution. The way or path towards enlightenment and emancipation is known as karma.

The human personality is composed of a complex organization consisting of seven principles, which are united and interdependent, yet divided into certain groups, each capable of maintaining a kind of personality. Each of these principles is composed of its own form of matter and possesses its own laws of time, space, and motion.

The most gross of those, the physical body, is known as rupa, which becomes more and more refined until we reach the universal self, atma, but the circumstance that determines the individual's powers, tests, and advantages, or in short his or her character, is the karma, which is the sum of bodily, mental, and spiritual growth and is spread over many lives past and future. If in one existence the individual is handicapped by any defect, mental or physical, it may be regarded as the outcome of past delinquencies. This doctrine is common to both Buddhism and Brahminism, from which Theosophy derives.

Returning to concepts of the constitution of the human being, the ego existing in the higher mental world cannot enter the physical world until it has drawn around itself a veil composed of the matter of these spheres, nor can it think in any but an abstract manner without them—its concrete ideas being due to them. Having assumed the astral and physical bodies, it is born as a human being, and having lived out its Earth-life sojourns for a time in the astral world, until it can succeed in throwing off the shackles of the astral body.

When that is achieved the individual finds himself or herself living in the mental body. The stay in this sphere is usually a long one—the strength of the mental constitution depending upon the nature of the thoughts to which one has habituated oneself. But he or she is not yet sufficiently developed to proceed to higher planes, and once more descends into the denser physical sphere to again go through the same round. It is only through that descent that a full recognition of the higher worlds is developed in the individual.

In the higher mental world, the permanent vehicle is a causal body, which consists of matter of the first, second, and third sub-divisions of that world. As the ego unfolds one's latent possibilities in the course of one's evolution, this matter is greatly brought into action, but it is only in the perfect individual or adept that it is developed to its fullest extent. In the causal body, none of the possibilities of the grosser bodies can manifest themselves.

The mental body is built up of matter of the four lower subdivisions of the mental world, and expresses the individual's concrete thoughts. Its size and shape are determined by those of the causal vehicle.

While on Earth the personality wears the physical, mental, and astral bodies all at once. It is the astral that connects one with the astral plane during sleep or trance. It is easy to see how the doctrine of reincarnation arose from this idea. The ego must travel from existence to existence, physical, astral, mental, until it can transcend the mental world and enter the higher spheres

The Theosophical path to the goal of Nirvana is derived from Buddhistic teaching, but there are also other elements in it—Kabalistic and Greek. The path is the great work whereby the inner nature of the individual is consciously transformed and developed. A radical alternation must be made in the aims and motives of the ordinary mortal. The path is long and difficult, and as has been said extends over many existences. Morality alone is insufficient to the full awakening of the spiritual faculty, without which progress in the path is impossible. Something incomparably higher is necessary.

The physical and spiritual exercises recommended by Theosophy are those formulated in the Hindu philosophical system known as raja yoga. The most strenuous efforts alone can impel the individual along the path, and thus to mount by the practice of vidya, that higher wisdom that awakens the latent faculties and concentrates effort in the direction of union with the absolute.

The way is described as long and difficult, but as the disciple advances he or she becomes more convinced of ultimate success, by the possession of transcendental faculties that greatly assist in overcoming difficulties. But these must not be sought for their own sake, as to gain knowledge of them for evil purposes is tantamount to the practice of black magic. (See also Kabala)

Theta (Journal)

Scholarly journal of parapsychology published quarterly by the Psychical Research Foundation. Its title derives from the initial letter of the Greek word, Thanatos (death) and its concern is mainly with research on the problem of survival of bodily death. It was edited for many years by William G. Roll. Theta has been published since 1963. The publication can be reached c/o Dr. Andrew Nichols, P.O. Box 142193, Gainesville, FL 32614-2193.

THG See Temple of the Holy Grail

Thian-ti-hwii

The Heaven and Earth League, an ancient esoteric society in China, said to have still been in existence in 1674. The society professed to continue a system of brotherhood derived from ancient customs.

Sources:

Chesneaux, Jean. Secret Societies in China in the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries. Ann Arbor, Mich.: University of Michigan Press, 1971.

Third Eye

The mystical center behind the forehead between the eyes, which is a focus for Oriental mystical meditation. It is known in yoga philosophy as the ajna chakra (center of command) and its activation or opening through meditation is often the preliminary to activation of other chakras. The initial experience of the third eye, the seeming presence of a screen inside the head at the front of the brain, can be had by anyone who simply shuts his eyes and attempts to reach a focus.

The idea of "opening" the third eye is a common one in psychic and metaphysical circles. An interesting variation of the idea is found in the popular book The Third Eye (1956) by T. Lopsang Rampa (pseudonym of Cyril Hoskins). It states that this chakra may be opened by a physical operation. Rampa's story was a hoax and the operation complete fiction. No such operation is featured in Hindu or Tibetan mysticism (or any other system of occult thought) and it must be regarded as an imaginative fantasy.

Thomas, C(harles) Drayton (1867–1953)

British clergyman who was an active member of the Society for Psychical Research, London, for many years. He was a Council member from 1934–53 and one of the first regular sitters with the medium Gladys Osborne Leonard. He reported on her phenomena in the society's Journal and Proceedings.

He worked with W. Whateley Carington in the quantitative study of trance personalities. His many articles and several books indicate an interest in psychical research as a means of supporting his belief in life after death.

His books include: Some Evidence for Human Survival (1922), Life Beyond Death with Evidence (1928), The Mental Phenomena of Spiritualism (1930), An Amazing Experiment, Beyond Life's Sunset (1931), From Life to Life (1946), In the Dawn Beyond Death, and Precognition and Human Survival (1948).

Thomas died July 14, 1953.

Sources:

Allison, L. W. "Obituary: The Reverend C. Drayton Thomas." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 48 (1953).

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Thomas, C. Drayton. "The Volume of Byron: A Significant Book Test." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 48, 175 (1946–49).

———. "The Word Association Test with Mrs. Osborne Leonard." Proceedings of the Society for Psycical Research 43, 141 (1935).

Thomas, John F(rederick) (1874–1940)

Psychologist and educator who studied parapsychology. He was born on July 22, 1874, in Parker City, Pennsylvania. He attended the University of Michigan (LL.B., 1898; M.A., 1915) and after a break of two decades, he went to Duke University to pursue a doctoral program (Ph.D., 1935). Thomas was a member of the Michigan Education Association (president in 1940), the National Education Association, Boston Society for Psychic Research, and Society for Psychical Research, London.

During much of his career Thomas worked for the Detroit public school system. However, he had been interested in psychical research for many years, but did not become actively involved until the 1920s when he sat with the Boston medium Minnie M. Soule (also known as "Mrs. Chenoweth"); she produced what he perceived as strong evidence of survival. He went on to sit with Gladys Osborne Leonard and Eileen J. Garrett. Sittings in 1932 formed the subject of his Ph.D. thesis at Duke: An Evaluative Study of the Mental Content of Certain Trance Phenomena. This was also the first doctoral thesis dealing with parapsychology and the first of several books and articles he contributed to the field. Thomas died November 21, 1940.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Gibson, Edmond P. "The Ethel Thomas Case." Tomorrow (summer 1954).

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Thomas, John F. Beyond Normal Cognition. Boston: Boston Society for Psychic Research, 1937. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1975.

———. Case Studies Bearing Upon Survival. N.p., 1929.

Thomas Aquinas (ca. 1225–1274)

One of the most profound scholars and subtlest logicians of his day. Aquinas was born around 1225 in Roccasecca, Italy. He was educated under the Benedictine Monks of Monte Cassino and in the University of Naples, and entered the Society of Preaching Friars, or Dominicans, at 17 years of age. His mother, indignant that he should take the vow of poverty and thus remove himself from the world for life, employed every means in her power to induce him to change his mind. In order to remove Aquinas from her influence, the friars relocated him from Naples to Terracina, from Terracina to Anagnia, and from Anagnia to Rome.

His mother followed him in all these changes of residence but was not permitted to see him. At length she induced his two elder brothers to seize him by force. They kidnapped him while he was traveling to Paris, where he had been sent to complete his course of instruction, and they carried him off to the castle of Aquino, where he had been born. Here Aquinas was confined for two years, but he found a way to correspond with the superiors of his order, and he finally escaped from a window in the castle.

Aquinas exceeded most men in the severity and strictness of his metaphysical disquisitions and thus acquired the name of "Seraphic Doctor." He was canonized by Pope John XXII in 1323.

Because of his association with Albertus Magnus, he shared many legends of magical powers. For example, it was said that because his study was placed in a great thoroughfare where the grooms exercised their horses, Aquinas found it necessary to apply a magical remedy to this nuisance. He made by the laws of magic a small brass horse, which he buried two or three feet underground in the middle of this highway so that horses would no longer pass along the road. The grooms were compelled to choose another place for their daily exercises.

Another legend claimed that Aquinas was offended by the perpetual chattering of an artificial man made of brass, constructed by his tutor Albertus Magnus, and he dashed the automaton to pieces. Aquinas was also supposed to have written some tracts on alchemy.

However, his credulity regarding demonology and witchcraft had an unfortunate influence on witchhunters, and he was later cited as an authority by such writers as Heinrich Kramer and Jakob Sprenger, authors of the infamous Malleus Maleficarum. Although Aquinas did not accept the concept of a pact with the Devil, he endorsed the belief of diabolical association, and the incubus and succubus. He echoed Albertus Magnus in claiming that when Satan tempted Christ on the mountaintop, he carried Christ on his shoulders, and this belief was used by later witchhunters to endorse the theory of transvection, or magical transport of witches through the air. Aquinas also believed in the power of the evil eye used by old women who had an association with the Devil. His argument that heretics should be burned was later used to justify the burning of witches.

It should be stressed that Aquinas's credulity was characteristic of his time, and his theses concerning the Devil reflected the conclusions of theological dogmas of his day. Nevertheless, his discussions were used by later and lesser individuals to justify the witchcraft delusion.

The major works of Aquinas include the Summa Theologica and the Summa contra Gentiles. His great intellectual and theological achievements have somewhat overshadowed the mystical side of his character, and it should be remembered that he ended his life as a contemplative mystic.

He died March 7, 1274, in Fossanova, Italy.

Sources:

St. Thomas Aquinas and His Legacy. Washington, D.C.: Catholic University of America, 1994.

Stockhammer, Thomas. Thomas Aquinas Dictionary. New York: Philosophical Library, 1965.

Thomas the Rhymer (fl. 1220)

Scottish soothsayer (prophet) of the thirteenth century. It is impossible to name the exact birth date of Thomas the Rhymer, who is well known for figuring in a ballad included in Sir Walter Scott's Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.

Thomas is commonly supposed to have lived at the beginning of the thirteenth century, that period being assigned because the name "Thomas Rimor de Ercildun" is appended as witness to a deed, whereby one "Petrus de Haga de Bemersyde" agreed to pay half a stone of wax annually to the Abbot of Melrose, and this "Petrus" has been identified with a person of that name known to have been living about 1220.

Erceldoune or Ercildun is simply the old way of spelling Earlston, a village in the extreme west of Berwickshire, near the line demarking that county from Roxburgh.

It would seem that Thomas held estates in this region, for he is mentioned as a land owner by several early writers, most of whom add that he did not hold his lands from the Crown, but from the Earls of Dunbar. Be that as it may, Thomas probably spent the greater part of his life in and around Earlston, and a ruined tower there, singularly rich in ivy, is still pointed out as having been his home, and bears his name, while in a wall of the village church there is a lichened stone with the inscription:

"Auld Rhymour's Race Lies in this Place."

According to local tradition, this stone was removed to its present resting place from one in a much older church, long since demolished.

Nor are these things the only relics of the soothsayer, a lovely valley some miles to the west of Earlston being still known as "Rhymer's Glen." It is interesting to recall that the artist J. M. W. Turner painted a watercolor of this place, and no less interesting to remember that Sir Walter Scott, when buying the lands that eventually constituted his estate of Abbotsford, sought eagerly and at last successfully to acquire the glen in question. Naturally he loved it on account of its associations with the shadowy past, and his biographer J. C. Lockhart stated that many of the novelist's happiest times were spent in this romantic place. Lockhart related that the novelist Maria Edgeworth visited it in 1823, and that thenceforth Scott used always to speak of a certain boulder in the glen as the "Edgeworth stone," the writer whom he admired so keenly having rested there. It seems probable, however, that the glen was named "Rhymer's Glen" by Scott himself.

It is thought that Thomas died in 1297, and it is clear that he had achieved a wide fame as a prophet, many references to his skill being found in writers who lived comparatively soon after him. A Harleian manuscript in the British Museum known to have been written before 1320 disclosed the significant phrase, "La Comtesse de Donbar demanda a Thomas de Essedoune quant la guere descoce prendreit fyn," but the lady in question was not a contemporary of the prophet. In Barbour's

Bruce, composed early in the fourteenth century, we find the poet saying:

"Sekerly
I hop Thomas Prophecy
Off Hersildoune sall weryfyd be."

The historian Andrew of Wyntoun in the Originale Cronykil of Scotland, also mentions Thomas as a redoubtable prophet, while Walter Bower, the continuator of Fordun's Scoticronicon, recounts how once Rhymer was asked by the Earl of Dunbar what another day would bring forth, whereupon he foretold the death of the king, Alexander III, and the very next morning news of his majesty's decease was heard.

Blind Harry's poem Wallace, written midway through the fifteenth century, likewise contains an allusion to Thomas's prophesying capacities.

Coming to later times, Sir Thomas Cray, constable of Norham, in his Norman-French Scalacronica, compiled during his captivity at Edinburgh Castle in 1555, spoke of the predictions of Merlin, which like those of "Banaster ou de Thomas de Ercildoune . . . furount ditz en figure."

A number of predictions attributed to Thomas the Rhymer are still current, for instance that weird verse Sir Walter Scott made the motto of his novel The Bride of Lammermuir and also a saying concerning a family with which, as we have seen, the soothsayer was at one time associated:

"Betide, betide, whate'er betide There'll aye be Haigs at Bemersyde."

It will be observed that these lines are in poetic meter, yet there is really no sure proof that the soothsayer was a poet. It is usually supposed that he acquired the nickname "Rhymer" because he was a popular minstrel in his day, but the fact remains that "Rymour" had long been a comparatively common surname in Berwickshire, and, while it may have originated with Thomas, the assumption has but slight foundation.

Again, the prophet of Earlston has been credited with a poem on the story of Sir Tristram belonging to the Arthurian cycle of romance, and the Advocate's Library contains a manuscript copy of this probably written as early as 1300. However, while Sir Walter Scott and other authorities believed in this ascription, it is quite likely that the poem is only a paraphrase from some French troubadour.

For generations, however, the Scottish peasantry continued to be influenced by the sayings attributed to "True Thomas," as they named him, as evidenced by the continuing publication of books and chapbook pamphlets containing his prophecies until well into the nineteenth century. For a detailed study, see The Romance and Prophecies of Thomas Erceldoune, edited by J. A. H. Murray for the English Text Society, London, 1875.

A beautiful legend credits Thomas with obtaining his prophetic powers after visiting fairyland. The ballad of "Thomas Ryner and the Queen of Elfland" in its various forms is classified as no. 37 of the collection of English and Scottish Popular Ballads, edited by Francis James Child, published in five vols., 1882–98.

Thompson, Rosina (1868– ?)

British trance medium, whose abilities developed at Frederic W. Thurstan's Delphic Circle at Hertford Lodge, Battersea, London. In her early sittings in 1897 and 1898, the records of which in Light refer to her as Mrs. T., she exhibited startling physical phenomena, raps, movements of objects, luminous phenomena, elongation of the human body, direct voice, apports, scents, and materializations.

Her physical manifestations were discouraged by F. W. H. Myers and she was persuaded to give her services to the Society for Psychical Research as a trance medium from 1898 onward. Her chief control was her deceased daughter, Nelly, who had died in infancy. Another communicator of importance was a Mrs. Cartwright, the teacher of the school where Thompson was educated. Her trances were much lighter than those of Leonora Piper and occasionally they were scarcely distinguishable from the state of normal wakefulness. Many instances of her paranormal perceptions were recorded in the waking state.

Richard Hodgson, after six sittings, formed an unfavorable opinion of her powers; it was the skeptical Frank Podmore who hurried to Thompson's defense. He considered Hodgson's conclusion that Thompson was untrustworthy to go beyond the warrant of the facts. Podmore expressed his opinion in plain words: "I should perhaps add that the supernormal source of much of the information given at Mrs. Thompson's séances seems to me to be almost beyond dispute."

The reports of Frederik van Eeden contained many curious accounts. The results of Frederik van Eeden were very convincing. He came from Holland with an article of clothing that belonged to a young man who first cut his throat and then shot himself. He obtained dramatic communications, and Thompson spoke in Dutch (a language she did not know) with the young man.

Margaret Verrall had 22 sittings with Thompson. She made statistical calculations and found that out of 238 definite statements referring to things past and present, 33 were false, 64 were unidentified, and 141 (approximately 59 percent) were true. Of these 141 true statements, 51 could not have been ascertained from normal sources. Verrall's general opinion of the controlling personalities was that although their characteristics were not very marked, all bore strong resemblance to the waking Thompson, the voice was hardly to be distinguished from hers, and the words and phrases were such as she herself used in the normal state. She nevertheless, admitted that many personalities bore, for the sitters, the marks of independent individuality.

Myers's belief in survival was chiefly founded on experiments with Thompson following the death of his great love, Annie Marshall. He and his friends had 217 sittings, about two thirds of which he personally attended. After Myers's death on January 17, 1901, Thompson, who had previously suspended sittings altogether, gave two sittings to Sir Oliver Lodge. In both of them, communications characteristic of Myers were forthcoming. She also took part in the cross-correspondence sittings.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Myers, F. W. H. "On the Trance Phenomena of Mrs. Thompson." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 17 (1902).

Van Eeden, Frederik. "Account of Sittings with Mrs. Thompson." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 17 (1904).

Thompson, William Irwin (1938–)

Author of books analyzing society in the light of contemporary New Age movements and founder of Lindisfarne Association, a commune based on a "new planetary culture." Thompson was born on July 16, 1938, in Chicago, Illinois. He was educated at Pomona College (B.A., 1962) and Cornell University (M.A., 1964, Ph.D., 1966). He became an assistant professor of humanities at Massachusetts Institute of Technology for several years (1965–68). Afterward, he joined the faculty at York University, Toronto, in 1968 and remained there for many years.

In the 1970s, Thompson began to explore the possibility of a new culture emerging in the light of occult, spiritual, and new consciousness movements. In Passages About Earth (1974), he analyzed the alternative cultures of Paolo Soleri, H. G. Wells, Werner Heisenberg, Aurelio Peccei and his Club of Rome, the Integral Yoga of Sri Aurobindo, the Institute for World Order and W. Warren Wagar, C. F. von Weizäcker of the Max Planck Institute, and the Kundalini yogi Pandit Gopi Krishna. The book contains observation into the nature and impact of various New Age movements and lifestyles of the established technological nation-states.

Thompson was most favorably impressed by the alternative culture of Findhorn Foundation, the pioneering Scottish New Age community established by Peter and Eileen Caddy in 1962 as "a training center for the embodiment of universal consciousness in those who recognize their path is one of world service." He also visited the ruins of Lindisfarne, a monastery on Holy Island off the coast of Northumberland, England; it was founded by St. Aidan in 635 C.E. Later, Thompson founded the Lindisfarne Association in Southampton, New York, as an educational community for cultural transformation in a new synthesis.

In Thompson's view, the original Lindisfarne typified a historic clash between esoteric Christianity and ecclesiastical Christianity—between religious experience and religious authority. As with Eileen Caddy's experiments at Findhorn, Thompson's Lindisfarne has great significance as an attempt to extend intellectual theories by practical community work. In such a setting, occultism and higher consciousness movements are integrated into a truly New Age "planetary culture" rather than a counterculture.

Sources:

Thompson, William Irwin. At the Edge of History. New York: Harper, 1971.

———. Coming Into Being: Artifacts and Texts in the Evolution of Consciousness. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1996.

———. Evil and World Order. New York: Harper & Row, 1976.

———. Gaia 2: Emergence: The New Science of Becoming. Hudson, N. Y.: Lindisfarne Press, 1991.

———. Islands Out of Times. Garden City, N.Y.: Dial Press, 1985.

———. Passages About Earth: An Exploration of the New Planetary Culture. New York: Harper & Row, 1973.

Thorogood, Brackett K(irkwood) (1881–1965)

Engineer and educator who wrote on parapsychological subjects. He was born on December 21, 1881, at Cambridge, Massachusetts and educated at the Chauncy Hall School, the Lowell Institute, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. In 1922 he became a technical and technological consultant and then beginning in 1938 to 1957 was the director of the Franklin Technical Institute.

Thorogood had more than a passing interest in mediumship and became involved in the latter stages of the controversy over the mediumship of Mina Crandon (i.e. "Margery"). He also served as a consultant to American Society for Psychical Research during the turbulent years of the 1930s. He died November 1965.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Thorogood, Brackett K. "The Margery Mediumship." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 22 (1933).

Thoughtforms

The existence of thoughtforms has been claimed by occultists, especially theosophists. The idea of thought-forms has supplied a realm for some interesting and curious speculations by psychical researchers as they investigated the substance of their designated study. The suggestion of psychical researcher Sir William F. Barrett that the operator may so stimulate the mind of the subject that he is able to see the thought-shape in the former's mind is similar to what theosophist A. P. Sinnett claimed in his book The Occult World (1882): "An adept is able to project into and materialize in the visible world the forms that his imagination has constructed out of inert cosmic matter in the visible world. He does not create anything new, but only utilises and manipulates materials which Nature has in store around him."

And there are other similarities. James H. Hyslop, in his book Psychical Research and The Resurrection (1908), quoted a curious communication from a private source. The communicator, while commenting on the peculiarities of his spiritual life, stated that he "sometimes saw, for instance, a man reading a book, but when he approached to talk with him he found it was only a thought." Hyslop, however, did not agree with the thought-form theory and suggested that the instance was a case of veridical, or subjective hallucination in the spiritual life.

James T. Fields in a lecture on "Fiction and its Eminent Authors," said: "Dickens was at one time so taken possession of by the characters of whom he was writing that they followed him everywhere and would never let him be alone for a moment. He told me that when he was writing The Old Curiosity Shop the creatures of his imagination haunted him so that they would neither let him sleep or eat in peace."

Vincent Turvey wrote in his book The Beginnings of Seership (1911; 1969) about a discussion that took place between him and a man from Christian Evidence Society on psychic matters. The man insisted that Turvey's psychic gifts were from the devil and prayed that the devils should leave him.

"On lying down in the afternoon in order to rest and meditate, I suddenly saw three or four 'devils' in the room—typical orthodox fiends. Men with goats' legs, cloven hoofs, little horns just over their ears, curly hair, . . . tails and clawlike hands. In colour they were entirely brown, like ordinary brown paper. I candidly profess that I was 'a bit shaken' . . . I pulled myself together and rose into the 'higher state of consciousness.' In this 'state' I was able to see not only their fronts, but also their backs. To my utter astonishment they were all hollow at the back, like embossed leather, or the ordinary papier maché mask. Then my guardians caused me to make a sign, say a word, or think a sentence—what I do not know; but directly it was done or said, these forms disintegrated or dissolved and vanished."

Thoughtforms are often perceived in the hypnotic state. Dr. Lindsay Johnson, the celebrated British ophthalmic surgeon, described in the May 21, 1921, issue of the Spiritualist journal Light an experiment of Professor Koenig of Berlin, in a Paris hospital at which he assisted. A peasant woman was hypnotized. It was suggested that she saw an imaginary picture on a plain sheet of paper. Twenty identical sheets of paper were produced and a picture was suggested for each; a record was kept of the picture and tiny identification marks added on the back of each sheet. Johnson added five more sheets, shuffled them, and handed them back one after the other to the subject. She described the suggested picture in every case, but saw nothing on Johnson's sheets.

A Russian investigator, Dr. Naum Kotik, made similar experiments in Wiesbaden with a fourteen-year-old girl Sophie and drew the following inference: "Thought is a radiant energy. This energy has physical and psychic properties. It may be called psycho-physical. Originating in the brain, it passes to the extremities of the body. It is transmitted through air with some difficulty, more easily through a metallic conductor and can be fixed on paper."

Koenig's and Kotik's experiments echo the experience of the engineer and psychical researcher René Warcollier. One evening, partially waking, he saw a large quadrangular corded package in a yellow packing paper on a chair. He inquired about the package. There was no package on the chair but it had been there some time before as described. If the image of a package can impress a chair it is no more improbable that thoughts may similarly impress a sheet of paper.

Hyppolite Baraduc informed the Academie de Médecine in May 1896 that he had succeeded in photographing thought. He experimented with many people. The subjects placed their hands on a photographic plate in the dark room and were asked to think intently of the object they wished to impress upon the plate. Many curious markings were obtained, some of them representing the features of persons and the outline of objects.

Baraduc also contended that thought photography was possible from a distance. He quoted the case of a Dr. Istrati who promised a friend of his that he would appear on a photographic plate at Bucarest on August 4, 1893, while he slept in Campana. The distance was 300 kilometers. Before closing his eyes, Istrati willed that his image should impress the plate with which his friend went to bed. The result was achieved. The plate showed a luminous spot, in the midst of which the profile of a man could be traced.

Commandant Darget, of Tours, France, obtained several good thought photographs in 1896. His procedure was to gaze attentively at a simple object for a few moments in order to engrave it firmly on the mind, then go into the dark room and (1) place a photographic plate with the glass side against the forehead for a quarter of an hour, mentally picturing the object decided upon and strongly desiring to make an impression on the plate, (2) Place the hand on a plate (or hold the plate in the hand) for a quarter of an hour, operating as before, (3) Put the plate into a developing bath, placing the fingers of one hand on the edge of the plate for ten minutes. There should always be the desire to imprint on the plate the picture of the object which is very strongly thought of.

An interesting case was quoted by James Coates from the November 1895 issue of the Amateur Photographer. W. Inglis Rogers, the experimenter, gazed for a minute at a postage stamp and then went into the dark room and gazed at a sensitive plate for twenty minutes. When the plate was developed two images of postage stamps were plainly visible.

Tomobichi Fukurai, a professor of Kohyassan University, carried out important experiments with Ikuko Nagao. If she concentrated on Japanese alphabetical symbols they were found printed on photographic plates.

Walter Franklin Prince reported in the Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (April 1925) the case of the Japanese artist Mikaye. Microscopic symbols were projected by some capillary action from the tip of his brush filled with fluid pigment. The artist simply held the brush downwards and he made a mental image of the intended symbol to a large scale.

In his researches with Stanislawa Tomczyk, Julien Ochorowicz was deeply puzzled to find that in several of his radiographs the medium's ring appeared on the finger of her "etheric" hand. This seemed to indicate to him: (1) That there is a kind of link between the organism and the object it wears, (2) That the occult notion that material objects have an astral body is not limited to living bodies. The ring, however, did not always appear on the radiographs. Ochorowicz tried to find out whether objects frequently worn by the sensitive were more easily produced on the plate than others. He chose a thimble that she rarely used. The medium suggested that he should himself retain the thimble on the finger of his left hand, holding her with his right hand. "Perhaps," she added, "the thimble will pass from your body on to my finger."

The experiment appeared absurd, but he was willing to try it. He took a plate from his box, marked it, and laid it on the medium's knees. She was seated on his right; with his right hand he held up her left hand about sixteen inches above the plate, the thimble being on the middle finger of his left hand, which he kept behind his left knee. After a minute had elapsed, the medium said that she felt a sort of tingling in the direction of her forearm, where their hands met. She exclaimed: "Oh, how strange. Something is being placed on the tip of my finger . . . I do not know if it is the thimble; I feel something keeps pressing the end of my finger."

When the plate was developed, it showed the hand of the medium, and on the middle finger was what he called, jokingly, "the soul of her thimble." Ochorowicz asked in some bewilderment if the image was a double of the thimble, or was it a photograph of the idea of the thimble. A close examination of the photograph and comparison with the thimble showed that the two corresponded exactly, the one "was a true copy of the other, precise in details and in dimension."

This exactness supported the idea of a direct impression from some object rather than merely a thought-image. The finger supporting the thimble was the palest of all the fingers, probably, as Ochorowicz suggests, because the light by which the radiograph was taken, proceeded from it. He inclined to the conclusion that an etheric hand wearing an etheric thimble produced the image, and that mental desire gave the direction to the light that was necessary in order to make the details of the thimble visible on the plate.

When he proceeded to test his conclusion, however, a strange thing happened. Unknown to the medium, he held in his left hand an Austrian five-crown piece. Presently she exclaimed: "I see behind you a white round object . . . it is the moon." "At the same instant," wrote Ochorowicz, "I saw a faint but distinct light pass near my left hand, which held the coin; it was not round, nor a flash, it was like a little meteor, like a thin ray, lighting up the space round my hand on the side away from the medium." When the plate was developed it showed an image of a full moon.

He considered it evident that this time a photograph of thought obtained the existence of a quasi-physical intermediary, since the image represented the medium's conception of something that existed outside her mind.

The image of the moon was once obtained previous to the experiment. On the night of September 7, 1911, the medium was much impressed by the superb sight of the starry heavens, and particularly by the full moon, which she looked at for some time with admiration. On the following day, instead of the little hand, which was desired, a full moon appeared on the plate against a background of white cloud. The cinematograph representations of the eclipse of the moon on April 17, 1912, showed the image of the moon slightly flattened in the direction of the axis of rotation. This characteristic appeared in the radiograph of September 7. The impression was double and it looked as if the cloud had not been duplicated.

Some have suggested that the psychic extras obtained by spirit photographers may be the thoughts of the sitters (though most now agree that they were more likely the product of fraud). Hereward Carrington offered some curious evidence out of his experiences with Mrs. A. E. Deane as did Frederick Bligh Bond, who experimented with the same medium. Bond prepared a diagram of four by three squares and made, in one of the twelve squares, a cross of two diagonal lines and drew a small circle over the crossed lines. After he deposited this diagram with the principal of the British College of Psychic Science, he went to meet Deane. She drew upon a blackboard a similar diagram and asked for a perfect circle over the center of the two intersecting lines.

The camera was loaded by Carrington and he did the development himself; Deane simply placing her hand during the exposures on the camera top. The first plate showed the diagram alone; the second had a sort of localized fog over the square in question; the third, possessed a circular spot of intense blackness, exactly over the intersection.

In a second trial, Bond hung a small picture frame upon the wall of the studio and asked that an image, the exact character of which he did not specify, might be recorded on the space within the frame. The idea was to preclude any successful pre-exposure of a plate for the purpose of fraud. He obtained a cloud of small size that on the first two plates was not quite rightly centered, but was well within the center of the third plate.

A Mr. Warrick, a manufacturing chemist, repeated the experiments but used no camera, only sheets of paper that he had specially sensitized. By impressing upon Deane the exact nature of the image he wanted, and placing the paper beneath Deane's hands or feet, he obtained circles, squares, triangles, or more complex images. Bond believed that his part in the success was dependent upon a power of mental visualization that he had special opportunities to cultivate.

Sources:

Besant, Annie, and Charles W. Leadbeater. Thought-Forms: A Record of Clairvoyant Investigations. Adyar, Madras, India: London Theosophical Publishing House, 1901.

Darget, Commandant. Exposé des différentes methodes pour l'obtention des photographies fluido-magnétiques et spirites. Paris, 1909.

Eisenbud, Jule. The World of Ted Serios: "Thoughtographic Studies of an Extraordinary Mind." New York: William Morrow, 1967.

Fukurai, Tomobichi. Clairvoyance and Thoughtography. London: Rider, 1931. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1975.

Joire, Paul. Psychical and Supernormal Phenomena. New York: F. A. Stokes, 1916.

Kotie, Naum. Die Emanation der psycho-physichen Energie. Wiesbaden, 1908.

Ochorowicz, Julien. De la suggestion mentale. N.p., 1887. English edition as Mental Suggestion. N.p., 1891.

Schatzman, Morton. The Story of Ruth. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1980.

Thoughtography

Term devised by a Japanese experimenter Tomobichi Fukurai for thought photography, the impressing of mental images on photographic plates. His researches were embodied in his book Clairvoyance and Thoughtography (1911, English translation 1930). Modern Japanese experimenters now use the term "Nengraphy."

Sources:

Fukurai, Tomobichi. Clairvoyance and Thoughtography. London: Rider, 1930. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1975.

Thought-Reading

Thought-transference from the reverse aspect. The agent attempts to picture the contents of the subject's mind, i.e., to "read it," instead of impressing it with his own transmitted ideas.

In more modern society, where outbursts of ecstatic frenzy are and were ascribed to "demonic" possession, ecstatics are often credited with the power to read thoughts. Various psychic functionaries were supposed to possess the same faculty. In the religious revivals of the sixteenth century among the so-called Tremblers of the Cevennes, for example, thought-reading was one of the minor but very practical miracles that occurred. It was used for the detection of spies who frequently attended the meetings of the proscribed devotees.

In the fifteen century, Paracelsus had observed the phenomenon of thought-reading, and it was also reported by early experimenters in animal magnetism. More recently, Robert Baxter, a member of the Irvingite congregation, seized with Pentecostal fervor in 1831 and recorded that when he was possessed by tongues he could often read the unspoken thoughts of his hearers. Sydney and Lesley Piddington and Julius and Mrs. Zancig were two couples who also became well-known for their thought-reading abilities.

Thought-reading may occur through rapport with or the positive perception of the ideas existing in another mind. Musical strings furnish an analogy to the first mode. A note struck on one string will be taken up and echoed by another. In cases of mass panic, the sense of fear is communicated to surrounding people who may be ignorant of the original cause of the terror. It is often difficult, however, to differentiate between psychic contagion and the transmission of emotions or ideas by subconsciously perceived signs such as facial expressions and postures.

The advent of Spiritualism gave thought-reading a new driving force. It was now the spirits who read the thoughts of the sitters and replied to them with raps and table-turning messages. Sergeant E. W. Cox, an early investigator of the phenomena of Spiritualism, speculated:

"If the Darwinian theory be true, there must have been a time when man had no articulate speech. For intercommunication with his kind he must have then possessed some other faculty than language. Most probably that was what the intercourse of animals is, and the abnormal cases of thought reading that occur among ourselves may be possibly the survival of a faculty which has now almost vanished, because it has gradually fallen into disuse."

The term "thought-reading" is also popularly used for demonstrations by stage performers who actually use subtle codes for apparent telepathic communication, a practice described in a number of books such as Stuart Cumberland's 1888 text, Thought-Reader's Thoughts. It is possible that some tricks of stage performers may be similar to methods employed subconsciously by ordinary individuals who appear to manifest thought-reading or telepathic faculty. Some performers can do muscle reading, perceiving the subtle muscular movements when holding the hand of a subject or even pick up subconscious whispering. (See Rev. Edward Irving)

Sources:

Braddon, Russell. The Piddingtons. London: Werner Laurie, 1950.

Cumberland, Stuart [Charles Garner]. Thought-Reader's Thoughts: Being the Impressions and Confessions of Stuart Cumberland. London: S. Low, Marston, Searle & Rivington, 1888. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1975.

Thought-Transference

This claimed faculty was baptized telepathy in 1882 by the Society for Psychical Research, London. In the fifteenth century, for example, Paracelsus observed, "By the magic power of the will, a person on this side of the ocean may make a person on the other side hear what is said on this side . . . the ethereal body of a man may know what another man thinks at a distance of 100 miles or more."

The Swedish seer Emanuel Swedenborg (1688–1772) clearly stated that spiritual or sympathetic states of consciousness conquer time and space. The state of rapport discovered by the mesmerists of the nineteenth century demonstrated transference of thoughts and emotions. They sought the mechanism in a "magnetic fluid." Somnambulic (hypnotic trance) induced from a distance seemed to indicate direct action between mind and mind. The possibility that this condition might have been brought about by conscious or subconscious suggestion was not immediately apparent.

Many experiments in thought transference were recorded in Germany in the beginning of the nineteenth century. A valuable series was published by Dr. Van Ghert, Secretary of the Royal Mineralogical Society at Jena in the Archive für den tierischen Magnetismus and by H. M. Weserman, the Government Assessor and Chief Inspector of Roads in Düsseldorf with his Der Magnetismus und die allgemeine Weltsprache (1822).

William F. Barrett read a paper on the subject before the British Association in 1876. Psychical researchers Barrett, Ed- mund Gurney, and F. W. H. Myers concluded in 1881 in their first report on thought-transference: "The possibility must not be overlooked that further advances along the lines indicated may, and we believe, will, necessitate a modification of that general view of the relation of mind to matter to which modern science has long been gravitating."

It must be admitted, however, that these experiments were severely criticized for not excluding fraud.

In an 1883–84, extensive series of experiments in Liverpool, England, conducted by Malcolm Guthrie and James Birchall with a Miss Ralph and a Miss Edwards, concluded that impressions of objects and sensations of taste and pain were successfully transmitted. Sir Oliver Lodge participated in some of these experiments and initiated some original ones at a later period.

The experiments of Eleanor Sidgwick and her more famous husband Henry Sidgwick in 1889–90 were classic. In thousands of experiments, a high percentage of success was registered in transferring simple images. The increase of distance, however, apparently had a marked effect on the results. According to Frank Podmore, only Dr. Gilbert's and Professor Janet's experiments with "Leonie" at Havre in 1885 and 1886 could compare in competence, care, and precision to the results with these. In the latter case, the effect aimed at was the induction of hypnotic sleep.

Clarissa Miles and Hermione Ramsden experimented through an intervening distance of 20-300 miles in transferring complex images and obtaining cross-correspondence of thought-transference. The results were carefully noted down; in many cases, an agreement was found between the impressions of the two parties (see the Journal of the Society for Psychical Research vol. 12 and 13, and the Proceedings vol. 25).

The psychical researcher Cesare Lombroso found 12 neuropaths in 20 subjects who registered success in thought-transference experiments. In some cases, transmission was facilitated by alcoholic drinks or coffee stimulating the nerve centers. He assigned great importance to the "hysterical" state and expressed the opinion that the disequilibrium of sensibility in hysterical persons was an essential condition for the production of the phenomena. This is because these individuals imply a greater accumulation of nervous energy in certain points of the cortex of the brain, and a diminution in others. He did not, however, exclude the possible influence of other causes and held, in alluding to transmission of thought in the dying, that the greater accumulation of energy in the cortex during the period just before death may be due to ptomaines that become lodged in it.

In reviewing this theory, Dr. Guiseppe Venzano speculated (Annals of Psychic Science, January 1906) that the causes of the accumulation of greater energy in the centers of intelligence must be manifold and diverse and that disequilibrium of sensibility does not constitute more than one among these many causes. He concluded that: (1) Mediumship favored the development of the phenomenon of transmission of thought, (2) In mediumistic séances, the thought formulated by the agent may be carried out even by material actions absolutely independent both of the medium and of the experimenters, (3) Under special circumstances, thought may be transmitted to the medium in a séance—even at a considerable distance—from a person outside the séance (telepathy), (4) The unconscious transmission of thought was possible.

In Proceedings, of the Society Psychical Research (1918), Margaret Verrall reviewed 504 previous experiments in thought-transference. The Proceedings (1924) also contained Eleanor Sidgwick's report on the experiments of Gilbert Murray, which she considered "perhaps the most important ever brought to the notice of the society both on account of their frequently brilliant success and on account of the eminence of the experimenter." The percipient of these experiments was Murray himself.

On February 16, 1927, V. J. Woolley, research officer of the Society for Psychical Research, arranged interesting experiments through radio. He and the agents were in the society's office, with no means of communication with anyone outside it. Sir Oliver Lodge sat in the broadcasting office at the microphone and directed the radio listeners to record any impressions they were able to form of the objects willed. They were shown three minutes each with an interval of two minutes. The only information given to the listeners was that the first and fourth objects were playing cards of unusual design; second was a Japanese print of a skull with a bird on top; the third was a bunch of three sprays of white lilac; the fifth was of Woolley himself wearing a bowler hat and a grotesque mask. The agents remained in the society's premises through the night without access to a telephone.

The morning mail brought in 24,659 answers. According to Woolley's summary in Proceedings, vol. 38 (part 105), the card test gave no evidence of telepathic transmission but the answers disclosed the peculiarity of a strong tendency to choose an ace, especially the ace of spades and that there was a marked preference for odd-numbered cards as against even-numbered ones. Of the third object, five listeners gave a skull as the description of the picture, one adding the interesting detail that it represented a skull in a garden, and a sixth noted a human head. Of these six records, no less than three gave flowers as the third object. Of the last object of the test, five answers gave the impression of Mr. Woolley, 146 of someone present, 236 of someone dressed up or masquerading, 73 of masks or faces, 202 of hats, and 499 of feeling of amusement.

Woolley, however, believed that these numbers in themselves were of little importance as there was no definite chance of expectation with which to compare them. The number of double successes was very small. "There does seem to be an indication of a supernormal faculty," stated Woolley, "on the part of a few of those who took part, though their successes are swamped by the very large mass of failures on the part of others."

The first attempt to link thought-transference with radio was staged in Chicago some years previous to the Society for Psychical Research experiment by Gardner Murphy while at Harvard. At a later date he conducted a second similar experiment with the assistance of J. Malcolm Bird in Newark. Murphy did not publish a complete record though the Newark tests were reported in the Scientific American (June 1924).

Interesting results in thought-transference have been obtained in cross-correspondence experiments. The principle is that two people at a stated time think of something, write it down and post it to find out whether their thoughts corresponded.

Charles Richet outlined the steps for successful experiments in transferring drawings or cards: (1) The agent must be absolutely motionless and have his back turned to the percipient, (2) The choice of the number, the card, or the drawing must be made by pure chance, (3) No result, whether success or failure, should be told to the percipient before the end of the sitting, (4) Not more than twenty trials should be made on any one day, (5) All results, whatever they may be, should be stated in full, (6) The percipient must be unable to see anything, directly or indirectly; it is best that his eyes should be bandaged and his back turned.

It had been found that the success of thought-transmission depended upon the moods and health of the experimenters. This required concentration on the part of the transmitter and passivity of mind on the part of the recipient. It proved helpful if the agent tried to visualize the picture that he or she wished to convey and was best to keep an object before the eye and think of it while trying to transmit its image.

Lodge observed that the transference of drawings was much more distinct when tactual contact was maintained between the agent and the percipient. He discovered as early as 1883 that when two agents are acting, each contributes to the effect; the result is due to both combined. He put down between two agents a double opaque sheet of thick paper with a square drawn on one side and a St. Andrew's cross on the other. Each agent looked on one side without any notion what was on the other. One percipient declared that "the thing won't keep still . . . I seem to see things moving about. . . . First I see a thing up there and then one down there." Finally the percipient drew a square and drew a cross inside from corner to corner saying afterward "I don't know what made me put it inside."

He also attempted to find out what is really transmitted—the idea, or name of the object or the visual impressions. He observed the transmission of irregular drawings was very difficult and that in some cases the idea or name, and not the visual impression at all, was the thing transferred.

Engineer and psychical researcher René Warcollier made an interesting table of the comparative facility in transmission. He found the percentage of color transmission 70 percent; of attitudes, 55 percent; drawings, 45 percent; objects, 38 percent; ideas 37 percent; mental images, 10 percent; words and figures 10 percent. Russian experimenter Dr. N. Kotik found that the percentage of successes increased when the agent and percipient were linked by a wire.

Objections to the reality of thought-transference is primarily two-fold: chance and natural parallelism of kindred minds. Stage demonstrations of thought-transference are known to be explained by a secret code. Sometimes, however, more subtle sensitivity may be present. The stage performer Mrs. Zancig, for instance, was found by James Hewat McKenzie in experiments at the British College of Psychic Science to possess a marked gift of clairvoyance to the degree of reading passages in closed books.

Sources:

Braddon, Russell. The Piddingtons. London: Werner Laurie, 1950.

Gurney, Edmund, F. W. H. Myers, and Frank Podmore. Phantasms of the Living. 2 vols. London: Trubner, 1886. Reprint, Gainesville, Fla.: Scholars' Facsimiles, 1970. Abridged edition, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1962.

Myers, F. W. H. Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death. 2 vols. London: Longmans, Green, 1903. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1975. Abridged Edition, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1961.

Ostrander, Sheila, and Lynn Schroeder. Psychic Discoveries Behind the Iron Curtain. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1970. Reprint, New York: Bantam, 1971. Reprinted as Psi: Psychic Discoveries Behind the Iron Curtain. London: Abacus 1973.

Podmore, Frank. Apparitions and Thought Transference. London: Scott; New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1895.

Rhine, J. B. Extrasensory Perception. Boston: Boston Society for Psychical Research, 1934. Reprint, Boston: Branden, 1964.

Schmeidler, Gertrude R., ed. Extrasensory Perception. New York: Atherton, 1969.

Schwarz, Berthold Eric. Parent-Child Telepathy: Five Hundred and Five Possible Episodes in a Family; A Study of the Telepathy of Everyday Life. New York: Garrett Publications, 1971.

Sinclair, Upton. Mental Radio. Pasadena, Calif.: The Author, 1930. Revised edition, Springfield, Ill.: C. C. Thomas, 1962.

Thomas, N. W. Thought Transference: A Critical and Historical Review of the Evidence for Telepathy. London: De La More Press, 1905.

Warcollier, René. Experimental Telepathy. Boston: Boston Society for Psychical Research, 1938. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1975.

———. Mind to Mind. Creative Age Press, 1948. Reprint, New York: Macmillan, 1963.

Thouless, Robert Henry (1894–1984)

Psychologist, parapsychologist, and president of the Society for Psychical Research, London, from 1942–45. He was born July 15, 1894, in Norwich, England. He studied at Cambridge University, England (B.A. hons., 1914; M.A., 1919; Ph.D., 1922). After serving in World War I, he was a lecturer of psychology at Manchester University in 1921 and moved on to Glasgow University in 1926, and the Department of Education, Cambridge University in 1938.

His initial interest in parapsychology began about 1934 and was stimulated by contact with the experimental work of J. B. Rhine. After that, parapsychology became a prominent theme for half a century of his life. He published nearly ninety articles and book reviews in the Journal and Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research.

Through the years, Thouless conducted many experiments in card-calling, psychokinesis, and other areas of parapsychology. He created many of the current terms used in parapsychology out of the realization that some of the original terms, such as "extrasensory perception," carried with them a suggestion of their operation—in this case "perception." He coined the less-committal term "psi." He and his colleague B. P. Weiser also coined the terms "psi Gamma" and "psi Kappa" to replace ESP and PK.

In distinction to parapsychologists who disparaged the study of spontaneous phenomena, Thouless maintained that it had value in structuring experimental methods:

"The special function of the study of spontaneous cases is to serve as a guide to the problems to be investigated by experimental methods. . . . [The] choice is not between statistics and experiment on the one hand and observation of spontaneous cases on the other. Let us have much more of both. . . . New problems for experimental investigation may be suggested by new observations of spontaneously occurring phenomena."

On the question of survival, he proposed a cautious optimism, and about 1948 devised a cipher test of survival which he believed was his most significant contribution to parapsychology. The test used a standard method of encipherment with a secret key passage. It consisted of two coded sequences: INXPH CJKGM JIRPR FBCVY WYWES NOECN SCVHE GYRJQ TEBJM TGXAT TWPNH CNYBC FNXPF LFXRV QWQL and BTYRR OOFLH KCDXK FWPCZ KTADR GFHKA HTYXO ALZUP PYPVF AYMMF SDLR UVUB. The key to the first sequence was a passage of poetry or prose indicated by reference to its title, and the key to the second sequence consisted of two words. The key passage necessary to cipher the test might have been transmitted posthumously as a proof of survival of consciousness. This method obviated the objection that a claimed posthumous communication might be read by clairvoyance if left in a sealed envelope. The Thouless test did not involve any sealed message and only the correct key would solve the enciphered message. In the event of a claimed posthumous message, percipients were asked to contact the Society for Psychical Research so that it might be keyed into the society's computer program to see if it yielded a correct message.

Thouless was an active member of the Society for Psychical Research and served on its council. He was elected president in 1942. In the end he was willing to consider the religious implications of psi and argued that parapsychology pointed to a more interesting world in which God and what has been termed the supernatural play their part. Thouless died at the age of 90 on September 25, 1984.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Thouless, Robert Henry. Authority and Freedom. London: Hodder and Stroughton, 1954.

———. Experimental Psychical Research. Baltimore, Md.: Penguin, 1963.

———. From Anecdote to Experiment in Psychical Research. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1972.

———. "The Present Position of Experimental Research into Telepathy and Related Phenomena." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 47 (1943).

———. "Problems of Design in Parapsychological Experiments." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (1955).

———. "Psychical Research Past and Present." [Myers Memorial Lecture] Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (1952).

———. Straight and Crooked Thinking. N.p., 1930. Reprinted as How to Think Straight. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1939.

3a Visao

3a Visao (3rd Vision) is one of two newsstand periodicals serving the psychic and esoteric community of Portugal. Launched in 1997, it is designed to cover issues in the areas of mysticism, parapsychology, spiritualism, astrology, nonconventional science, and natural medicine. Each issue includes a set of feature articles that cover psychic experiences, esoteric sciences (astrology, numerology, etc.), health, and the personal appropriation of esoteric truth (an inner vision). The esoteric community in Portugal, while having a long history, remains relatively small, though it has been bolstered by the influx of immigrants from Asia and the Middle East during the last decades of the twentieth century. The older theosophical and Spiritualist organizations have been joined by groups promoting new religions, Asian healing techniques, and channeling. As the great majority of the Portuguese public is unfamiliar with the occult world, many of the articles are presented at an introductory level. While a range of literature available in Portuguese is advertised, the magazine does not include a book review column.

3a Visao is a full-color magazine published by 3a Visao Editores and edited by a man who goes by the single name of Papalus. He is assisted by a staff of writers drawn from the Portuguese-speaking communities in Brazil and India. 3a Visao also cosponsors events in Portugal aimed at promoting its general area of interest. 3a Visao may be contacted at its editorial offices at Rua Almirante Cesar Augusto Campos Rodrigues, n.16–13 Esq., 2795 Carnaxide, Portugal.

Sources:

3a Visao. Carnaxide, Portugal, n.d.

3D Nibiruan Council

The 3D Nibiruan Council is one of several channeling organizations that, like the Ashtar Command, claim contact with a set of extraterrestrial beings. Its earthly presence dates from 1992 and a traumatic experience in the life of a trainer and entrepreneur named Jocelyn. While in the hospital for an abortion, she lost consciousness, and a second personality who called herself Jelaila emerged in her place. The new personality described herself as a walk-in. Jelaila assumed the role of mother to Jocelyn's daughter Daniele.

Jelaila describes her pre-embodied life as that of a 9th-dimensional being. When she walked in, she was unaware of her mission but in May 1993 made contact with Devin, the head of the 9D Nibiruan Council. He began training her and awakening her to her role as a channel and voice of the Nibiruan Council on earth.

The Greater Nibiruan Council is seen as the largest council of the Galactic Federation (the interplanetary authority mentioned and described in flying saucer contactee literature beginning since the 1950s). It serves as the primary governing arm of the Federation. Among its many duties are supporting Federation emissaries to various planets, developing communications between various planetary beings, and initiating training for potential new members of the Federation (such as Earth).

The Greater Nibiruan Council consists of a set of what are described as dimensional councils, among them beiing the 9D (or ninth dimension) Nibiruan Council. This oldest Council in the Greater Council has the task of coordinating efforts with other councils and with various Spiritual Hierarchies for the evolution of all souls. In particular it has charge of the Earth Grand Experiment. The 9D Nibiruan Council is said to be composed of two royal families, Aln and Avyon, from the Lyra constellation.

The 3D Nibiruan Council has the responsibility of representing the higher councils on Earth and of supplying the 9D tools of Integration to Earthlings. It carries out this function through the publication of books and other materials and the sponsoring of seminars and workshops. the 3D Council was formally organized in 1996 in Kansas City, Missouri, and moved to Los Angeles in 1998. That same year, Jelaila married John Starr. In December 1998, John Starr experienced a walk-in an was replaced by an entity personality named Jehowah, a 9D Council member and brother of Divan who had trained Jelaila.

The Nibiruan Council is one of a spectrum of groups that see the human race preparing for ascension to a higher dimension in the near future and who see a key to that ascension being the recodings of the individual's DNA. It offers training in what is termed the Accelerated DNA Recoding Process. This training among its many benefits, releases painful memories of the past. The Council also offers training in the realization and manifestation on compassion.

A more complete description of the larger Nibiruan Council and a presentation of its program are found on its website at http://www.nibiruancouncil.com/.

Sources:

3D Nibiruan Council. http://www.nibiruancouncil.com/. February 28, 2000.

3HO Foundation

Educational branch of the Sikh Dharma, a Sikh religious group founded by Shri Singh Bhai Sahib Harbhajan Singh Khalsa Yogiji, popularly known as Yogi Bhajan in Los Angeles in the late 1960s. "3HO" means "Healthy, Happy, Holy Organization," and is based on the idea that it is everyone's birthright to obtain these three characteristics. The foundation provides teacher training courses, lectures, and demonstrations in all types of yoga, with special emphasis on kundalini yoga.

The group is also focused on "the uplift of the dignity and respect of womanhood." Programs such as the Khalsa Women's Training Camp and Young Women's Camp are specialized to unleash the inner potential of women. Publications include a journal Prosperity Paths Address: P.O. Box 2337, Espanola, NM 87532. Website: http://www.3ho.org/.

Sources:

Kundalini Yoga/Sadhana Guidelines. Pomona, Calif.: KRI Publications, 1978.

Healthy Happy Holy Organization. http://www.3ho.org/. March 8, 2000.

Thule Society

German occult society founded in Munich in 1918 by Adam Glauer (1875–1945) who styled himself Rudolf, Freiherr von Sebottendorf. This was an anti-Semitic society that had links with Adolf Hitler through the German Workers' Party (later National Socialist German Workers Party). The activities of the Thule Group were as much political as occult, and their sphere of influence included judges, police chiefs, professors, and industrialists.

Dietrich Eckart, a central figure in the Thule Group, also played a prominent part in the committee of the German Workers' Party and became one of the seven founder members of the Nazi Party. When he died in December 1923, he is reported to have said: "Follow Hitler! He will dance, but it is I who have called the tune! I have initiated him into the 'Secret Doctrine,' opened his centers in vision and given him the means to communicate with the Powers. Do not mourn for me: I shall have influenced history more than any other German."

Sources:

Howe, Ellic. Urania's Children: The Strange World of the Astrologers. London, 1967. Reprinted as Astrology: A Recent History Including the Untold Story of its Role in World War II. Walker, 1968.

King, Francis. Satan and Swastika: The Occult and the Nazi Party. London: Mayflower, 1976.

Ravenscroft, Trevor. The Spear of Destiny. London, 1973.

Webb, James. The Occult Establishment. LaSalle, Ill.: Open Court Publishing, 1976.

Thurston, Herbert Henry Charles (S. J.) (1856–1939)

Roman Catholic priest, historian, and writer on parapsychological subjects. He was born on November 15, 1856, in London. He was educated at Séminaire St. Malo, France; Mount St. Mary's, Derbyshire, England; Stonyhurst, Lancashire, England; Manresa House, Roehampton; and the University of London. He became a novice in the Society of Jesus in 1874. During his lengthy career he authored over 700 articles, essays, pamphlets, and translations.

In 1919 he joined the Society for Psychical Research, London, and was active in its deliberation for the rest of his life. He became one of its most widely read members, which compensated for the fact that as a practicing Roman Catholic he could not attend séances, even as an observer. He was particularly interested in poltergeist phenomena and Spiritualism, and also made a study of miraculous and paranormal events associated with holy people and saints in Roman Catholicism. While his opinions in general represented a minority opinion in parapsychological circles, he was a well-respected scholar.

His books include: Beauraing and Other Apparitions (1934), The Church and Spiritualism (1933), Ghosts and Poltergeists (1953), The Memory of Our Dead (1915), Physical Phenomena of Mysticism (1955), Superstition (1933), and Surprising Mystics (1955).

He died November 3, 1939.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Crehan, J. Father Thurston. London: Sheed and Ward, 1952.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Thurston, Herbert. "The Phenomena of Stigmatization." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 32, no. 83 (1922).

Thury, Marc (1822–1905)

Swiss psychical researcher, professor of physics and natural history at the University of Geneva, and a pioneer of investigations into telekinesis phenomena. In a small pamphlet Les Tables tournantes (1855) he reviewed Count de Gasparin's experiments and detailed his own observations with a circle of private friends under test conditions. He was the first exponent of the theory of ectoplasm. He named the substance that he believed to be a link between the soul and body "psychode," and the force that manipulated it "ectenic force." This force, he believed, was subject to the will power of the medium.

While De Gasparin repudiated Spiritism as absurd and contrary to moral truth, Thury contended that while "the known facts are not as yet sufficient for the demonstration of the spirit theory," yet "the absurdity of the belief in the intervention of spirits has not been scientifically demonstrated." He asserted that there may exist in this world wills other than those of man and the animals, wills capable of acting on matter.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Thury, Marc. Les Tables tournantes. Geneva, 1855.

TIBET

Historical Background

Tibet is a country with ancient religious and mystical traditions that, over the last two centuries, have become the focus of occult legends. The peaceful accumulation of data on Tibet was abruptly altered following the Chinese communist invasion in October 1950, when Tibet lost its independent status. On May 23, 1951, Tibetan leaders were obliged to sign a Sino-Tibetan agreement for "the peaceful liberation of Tibet."

Tibetans had formerly been a separate people with a distinctive language, culture, and religion, but had been in an uneasy relationship with China since 1720, when the Manchus entered Tibet to help drive out Mongol invaders and used the situation to become overlords. Over the subsequent period, the acknowledgment of Chinese suzerainty was the price of Tibetan autonomy, but for practical purposes Tibet was an independent state.

The 1950 invasion was justified by the Chinese as necessary in order to destroy inequitable feudalism in Tibet and to bring progress, education, and social justice. In practice, this involved suppression of the Buddhist religion, destruction of monasteries and their libraries, and the public humiliation of priests. Tibet was a theocratic society and any reorganization of its governmental system would necessarily involve the destruction of the power held by the Buddhist religious functionaries.

In all fairness, it must be said that these and other reported violations of human rights were largely paralleled by similar excesses in China itself in the early period of the communist revolution and the upheavals of the Cultural Revolution. Since then, however, the age-old Buddhist religion of Tibet has been largely suppressed and related occult practices replaced by practical socialism and exploitation of Tibetan resources and territory.

Religion and Superstition

Buddhism came to Tibet from India in the eighth century C.E. and it pushed aside the earlier polytheistic and magical religion of the Tibetan people. However, the price of the conquest was the integration of many of the old deities, beliefs, and occult practices into the unique form of Buddhism that emerged in the land. Also moving into Tibet from India was a form of Hindu tantra, with its emphasis upon the subtle energies of the body and ritualized sex. Strong superstitions, belief in ghosts, demons, and magic coexisted with deep mystical thought.

The apostle of Buddhism in Tibet was named Padmasambhava and entered the country in the 1740s. As Buddhism developed, it divided into various sects, the degree of acceptance of the local religion being an important differentiating factor. The four main groups are popularly distinguished by the color of the hats their followers wear. The older Red Caps or Ningmapas, for example, follow the Adi-Yoga or path of the Great Perfection, founded by the guru Padmasambhava, while the Yellow Cap sect or Gelugpas follow a Middle Way Buddhism; the Kargyütpas, or Followers of Successive Order (deriving from the great Tibetan saint Milarepa, died 1135, successor of the revered gurus Marpa, Tilopa, and Naropa) follow the way of Mahamudra or Great Symbol. As with the various sects of Hindu religious philosophy, with their many subtle emphases, the general overall philosophy of the four groups is the same.

By the fifteenth century a teaching had emerged in Tibet that the heads of all of the many monasteries were bodhisattvas, highly evolved beings who were refraining from entering Nirvana to assist other souls in their spiritual pilgrimage. The monastic rulers, or lamas, thus attained a unique role in Tibetan Buddhism as well as significant political power as temporal rulers.

The present spiritual leader of Tibet, the fourteenth Dalai Lama, who escaped to India in 1959, and the other lamas and their successors, are dedicated to keeping alive the spiritual traditions and the political aspirations to independence of the Tibetan people.

Like his predecessors, the Dalai Lama is claimed as a living incarnation of the Divine Spirit, and was discovered as such by traditional search and testing. When a Dalai Lama (or any lama for that matter) departs from life, priests traditionally conduct a search for his successor through signs and visions. Selected children are tested by their ability to recognize objects belonging to the former Dalai Lama. After identification, the child is brought to the holy city of Lhasa and initiated as a monk in the monastery of the Potala, which becomes a power center of the Divine Spirit, which issues forth from the Dalai Lama over the whole of Tibet. As Tibetan Buddhism has spread to the west and lamas have died in the west, the search for successors has also been conducted in the families of Western converts and several European children have been "identified" as reincarnated lamas.

The title "Dalai Lama" is from a Mongolian term meaning "Wide Ocean," and is not normally used by Tibetans among themselves, who prefer such terms as "Precious Protector" or "Precious Ruler," of Kundun (Presence), implying spiritual association. The first Dalai Lama was Tsong Ka-pa, born in Am-do in 1358. His disciples became the Yellow Hat sect, as distinct from the earlier priesthood of the Red Hats.

In addition to the regular monastic disciplines of complex prayer, meditation rites, and regular religious festivals, lamas traveling through Tibet were expected to act as oracles, fortune-tellers, and healers for the ordinary people. Prayer wheels with the mystic mantra "Om mani padme Hum" (Om, The Jewel in the Lotus) and rosaries were in use all over the country, and groups of prayer-flags fluttered around the villages. In the monasteries, tankas (complex symbolic mandala banners) became a focus for mystical meditation.

It is not difficult to understand why Lamaism should be permeated with demonology in view of the vast and terrifying grandeur of the Tibetan environment, in which the forces of nature appear to have the power of supernatural beings. Belief in magic was once universal.

The Dalai Lama came under attack in 1998 when he publicly announced that Dorje Shugden practices should no longer be performed by any sect of Tibetan Buddhism. Shugden has been regarded as a protector spirit of the Geluk sect, to which the Dalai Lama himself belongs. However, after studying ancient texts and consulting the state oracle, the Dalai Lama is convinced that Shugden is a hungry spirit and therefore incorrect to worship and regard as a protector for the Buddhist. Due to the Dalai Lama's opposing view, he is accused by some Buddhists for being a religious censor. Since the Tibetan culture and religion is thought to be near extinction, the Dalai Lama attempted to set a level of commonality between all sects of Buddhism. The great controversy that resulted from this attempted act of unification, may have also been the cause for the deaths of three monks in the Dalai Lama's inner circle.

Dissent within the Tibetan culture may be the result of the larger issues that still exist between Chinese and the Tibetan government-in-exile. The Chinese government seeks to control, and ultimately squelch, the Tibetan Buddhism religion. Ultimately the set-up of the religious hierarchy may become the demise of the religion itself. The Dalai Lama exists as the highest, top authority, while the Panchen Lama is the second in command, and the Karampa is the third in power. Presently the Panchen Lama, a boy of ten years, will be the one to choose the next Dalai Lama. However, with the aging Dalai Lama living in India, the Panchen Lama is still being held under Chinese supervision. This is a direct example of the Chinese wishing to control the Buddhist chain of command, and influence the continuity of the religion. The Chinese government conducted the search for this present Panchen Lama but the Dalai Lama announced their discovery publicly before ever having met him. The boy has never even been in Dharmsala, India. Thus, the boy has become a political pawn between the Dalai Lama (Tibetan Buddhism) and the Chinese government.

The Karampa, third in command, has been raised to heed the Chinese government as well. However, on December 28, 1999, he made his escape from Tibet to India to be united with the Dalai Lama. The two men met " 'as if a father was meeting his dear son after a long separation' ". The Dalai Lama reported his spirit as clear and strong saying after proper instruction he will be able to make great contributions. The struggle between Tibet and China continues and therefore the outcome of the survival of Tibetan Buddhism.

David-Neel's Psychic Sports

For centuries, Tibet was a forbidden territory to Westerners, and only a handful of Europeans succeeded in penetrating the country, usually in disguise. From 1912 on, an intrepid Frenchwoman, Alexandra David-Neel, began a series of travels through Tibet over fourteen years. She acquired the rank of lama.

An Oriental scholar, David-Neel learned Sanskrit and Tibetan and studied the various forms of Buddhism and Lamaism. She became the first European woman to penetrate the holy city of Lhasa. Although skeptical regarding the supernatural, she gained firsthand experience of Tibetan ghosts and demons and saw the paranormal feats of mystics. In her book With Mystics and Magicians in Tibet (1931), she revealed how Tibetan mystics acquired the ability to live naked in zero temperatures by generating a protective body heat (tumo), how they learned to float in air and walk on water, and how they brought corpses back to life or created thoughtforms that had independent existence.

She described such feats as "psychic sports," acquired by special mind and body training. Amongst such feats was the lung-gom training of "inner breathing" and meditation, which enabled an individual to travel at high speed for days and nights without stopping, sometimes with the feet hardly touching the ground. David-Neel herself witnessed a lung-gom-pa, or swift traveler. She described the special training necessary for feats of levitation and for thought-reading and telepathy ("sending thoughts on the wind").

She successfully experimented in the creation of a tulpa or phantom thoughtforms. After a period in isolation following special concentration techniques, she claimed that she succeeded in creating a phantom monk, who became a guest in her party, seen and accepted by the others. But in the course of time, this phantom form changed from a fat jolly monk, becoming lean, mocking, and somewhat malignant, and it was necessary for her to concentrate on special techniques to destroy a phantom, which was beginning to take on independent life.

She explained that Tibetans believed that such psychic phenomena were the result of utilizing natural forces by the powers of the mind. Her experiences seem to have been the result of a long and intimate association with Tibet and its peoples in a period when magic and mystery were more common. Few subsequent travelers have reported such remarkable phenomena, and her books survive as a unique record of a Tibet that has largely been destroyed. However, they helped create the image of Tibet as a place where the most successful mastery of the occult arts had been made. The spread of Buddhist masters to the west has done much to offer a more mundane picture of Tibetan life.

Tibetan medicine, the fundamentals virtually unchanged for 2,000 years, is completely intertwined with Tibetan Buddhism, in that they are based on the most essential Buddhist belief, that of karma. Thus, unhealthy human actions, such as, greed, hatred, and desire can be the cause of disease. Like karma, disease can be caused from present as well as past actions. Disease is also thought to be caused by an imbalance of the three basic humors of the body—air, bile, and phlegm. Diagnosis consists of three techniques, visual observation, pulse reading, and questioning. Simply put, Tibetan medicine is highly holistic in the areas of diagnosis and treatment. Treatments are usually always of the non-invasive variety. Lifestyle changes are recommended, medicines are made of herbs, and "surgery" consists of acupuncture, cauterization, hot and cold compresses, hot springs and vapor treatments.

A lot can be learned from Tibetan medicine by Western countries, as it and its practitioners listen and are aware of the individual body, as an extension of religion. The body then exists as only part of the whole scheme of the universe.

It is still too early to predict whether the upheavals of the last half of the twentieth century will involve a permanent loss of spiritual and psychic identity for the Tibetan people. Those many Tibetans who moved into exile have established strong enclaves of traditional Tibetan culture and many people have given of their time, energy, and financial resources to see that the manuscripts and artifacts taken out of the country are preserved.

Sources:

Bernard, Theos. Land of a Thousand Buddhas. London: Rider, 1952.

Bromage, Bernard. Tibetan Yoga. London: Aquarian Press, 1952.

"A Buddha Busts Out: Inside the Dramatic Escape of a Living Buddha." Newsweek 135 (March 6, 2000): 38.

Chang, Garma C. C., trans. The Hundred Thousand Songs of Milarepa. 2 vols. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1962.

———. Teachings of Tibetan Yoga. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1963.

David-Neel, Alexandra. My Journey to Lhasa. London: William Heinemann, 1927.

———. With Mystics and Magicians in Tibet. London: John Lane, 1931. Reprinted as Magic & Mystery in Tibet. New York: Claude H. Kendall, 1932. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1956.

David-Neel, Alexandra, and Lama Yongden. The Secret Oral Teachings in Tibetan Buddhist Sects. Calcutta, India: Maha Bodhi Society of India, n.d.

Evans-Wentz, W. Y. Tibet's Great Yogi Milarepa. London: Oxford University Press, 1928.

Gore, Donald R. "Tibetan Medicine." Perspectives in Biology and Medicine 42 (Winter '99): 270–71.

Harrer, Heinrich. Return to Tibet. London: Weinfeld & Nicholson, 1984.

———. Seven Years in Tibet. London: Rupert Hart-Davis; New York: E. P. Dutton, 1953.

Klein, Richard. "The World's Youngest Political Prisoner." The Humanist. 59 (March 1999): 91.

Tibet and Freedom. The Tibet Society of the United Kingdom, 1961.

Tibetan Government in Exile Official Website. http://www.tibet.com/. June 19, 2000.

Waddell, L. Austine. Tibetan Buddhism: With Its Mystic Cults, Symbolism and Mythology, and in Its Relation to Indian Buddhism. London: W. H. Allen, 1895. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1972.

Wilson, Mike. "Schisms, Murder, and Hungry Ghosts in Shangra-La." Cross Currents 49 (Spring 1999): 251.

Woodward, Kenneth. "A Scratch in the Teflon Lama." 131 (May 11, 1998): 64.

"The Tibetan"

The Master, known in theosophical circles as Dhwal Khul (under various spellings) who first spoke to Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, and in the early twentieth century spoke through Alice A. Bailey (1880–1949). Bailey, formerly a member of the Theosophical Society, withdrew in the 1920s and established the Arcane School in New York.

Tibetan Foundation

The Tibetan Foundation began in June of 1982 when Janet McClure established contact with the Ascended Master Djwal Khul. He asked her to assist him in his work of helping people in their own spiritual progress and bringing about the coming New Age. Previously she had studied with the Brotherhood of the White Light, from whom she received a doctorate degree, and was happy to join in the work. Djwal Khul is the same master who was originally identified by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky (1831–1891) as one of the spiritual hierarchy and later was credited with channeling a number of volumes through Alice A. Bailey (1880–1949). Bailey generally referred to Djwal Khul as The Tibetan.

While McClure was generally thought of as channeling The Tibetan, she spoke of his overshadowing her. Overshadowing is a special connection by which they became permanently linked. The Tibetan was thought to be anchored in McClure's head. He could speak through her without the necessity of her entering a trance state.

The foundation was established in Youngstown, Arizona, but soon developed affiliate centers in Colorado and California. Once launched on her new endeavor, McClure channeled a considerable amount of material from The Tibetan that was published in a number of booklets. She also began to channel from other beings such as Vywamus and Lenduce. She was among the first of the channels to receive material from both the spiritual hierarchy and the space hierarchy led by Ashtar. Receiving from both hierarchies would become common in the 1990s. The channels associated with the foundation would become part of the post-New Age Movement that was focused in the Sedona Journal of Emergence.

McClure channeled only eight years before passing away in 1990. However, by that time other channels had become associated with the Tibetan Foundation and had begun to channel the various masters previously channeled by McClure, especially The Tibetan and Vywamus. Light Technology Publishing, the parent company that produces the Sedona Journal of Emergence, published many of McClure's volumes of channeled material and keeps them in print at present.

Sources:

Bjorling, Joel. Channeling: A Bibliographic Exploration. New York: Garland Publishing, 1992.

McClure, Janet [Vywamus]. Sanat Kumara: Training a Planetary Logos. Sedona, Ariz.: Light Technology Publishing, 1989.

———. Scopes of Dimensions. Sedona, Ariz.: Light Technology Publishing, 1989.

———. The Source Adventure. Sedona, Ariz.: Light Technology Publishing, 1988.

Tii

A Polynesian vampire.

Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie

Major Dutch journal of parapsychology, founded and edited for many years by W. H. C. Tenhaeff (1894–1981) and more recently edited by Dick J. Bierman. It functions as the journal of both the Studievereniging voor Psychical Research (the Dutch Society for Psychical Research) and the Parapsychology Institute. Address: Springweg 7, 3511 VH Utrecht, The Netherlands.

Tillyard, R(obin) J(ohn) (1881–1937)

British psychical researcher and biologist, vice president of the National Laboratory of Psychical Research in 1926. He was born in Norwich, England, on January 31, 1881. He was educated at Dover College, and Queen's College, Cambridge University (M.A., Sc.D.). Following his graduation in 1903 he migrated to Australia and taught at the Sydney Grammar School for a decade (1904–13) before becoming a Fellow in Zoology at Sydney University (1914–17) and then a lecturer in zoology in 1917. In 1920 he became Chief Entomologist to the Commonwealth of Australia.

He traveled to England and the United States in the 1920s to sit with mediums, especially Mina Crandon ("Margery"). This sitting convinced him of survival of bodily death. He published his convictions in 1928 in Nature. In a "solus" sitting with "Margery" in Boston, he obtained apparent fingerprints of "Walter," the control. In his enthusiastic letter to Sir Oliver Lodge he stated: "This séance is, for me, the culminating point of all my psychical research; I can now say, if I so desire, nunc dimittis, and go on with my own legitimate entomological work." However, there now seems little doubt that this particular phenomenon was fraudulent.

During his association with psychical researcher Harry Price at the National Laboratory of Psychical Research, Tillyard also investigated the phenomena of Eleonore Zügun and Stella C.

In his book Confessions of a Ghost Hunter (1936; 1974), Harry Price described a visit to Jeanne Laplace, a French clairvoyant, who gave a remarkable series of correct statements about Tillyard through simply holding a letter from him (without seeing the letter itself). The impressions included the prediction, later fulfilled, that he would die in a railway accident.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Evans, J. W. The Life and Work of Robin John Tillyard, 1881–1937. St. Lucia: University of Queensland Press, 1963.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Tillyard, R. J. "Evidence of Survival of a Human Personality." Nature 122 (August 28, 1928).

———. "Science and Psychical Research." Nature 118 (1926).

Timaeus of Locri (ca. 400 B.C.E.)

One of the earliest known writers on the doctrines of magic. He was a Pythagorean philosopher born in Locri, Italy, and lived ca. 420–380 B.C.E. He is credited with the work On the Soul of the Universe, although some historians believe this may be an abridgement of Plato's dialogue of Timaeus.

The Timaean theory of God, the Universe, and the World-soul was thus set forth by A. F. Büsching:

"God shaped the eternal unformed matter by imparting to it His being. The inseparable united itself with the separable; the unvarying with the variable; and, moreover, in the harmonic conditions of the Pythagorean system. To comprehend all things better, infinite space was imagined as divided into three portions, which are—the centre, the circumference, and the intermediate space.

"The centre is most distant from the highest God, who inhabits the circumference; the space between the two contains the celestial spheres. When God descended to impart His being, the emanations from Him penetrated the whole of heaven, and filled the same with imperishable bodies. Its power decreased with the distance from the source, and lost itself gradually in our world in minute portions, over which matter was still dominant.

"From this proceeds the continuous change of being and decay below the moon, where the power of matter predominates; from this, also, arise the circular movements of the heaven and the earth, the various rapidities of the stars, and the peculiar motion of the planets. By the union of God with matter, a third being was created. namely, the world-soul, which vitalizes and regulates all things, and occupies the space between the centre and the circumference."

Plato's Timaeus also tells the legendary story of the lost drowned continent of Atlantis.

Time (in Paranormal Perception)

Time is an element of uncertainty in paranormal functions. Yet we know from hypnotic experiments that the subconscious mind has a remarkable faculty in estimating time. J. Milne Bramwell made classical demonstrations, such as suggesting to a hypnotic subject, Miss A., that at the expiration of 11.470 minutes, she should make a cross on a piece of paper and note the time. Out of 55 similar experiments, 45 were completed successfully.

One would expect that if an entity, communicating through an entranced individual, was either a hypnotic or secondary personality, that the entity should demonstrate the same consciousness of time discovered by Bramwell. Such has not been the case. Its surprising absence needs an alternative explanation. Certainly fraudulent production of the entity by the medium would explain the lack of time consciousness. Spiritualists have suggested that the odd relationship to time, often manifesting displacements of a day or more, provides additional proof of the presence of extraneous entities in séances.

In one instance, "Pelham," a spirit control of Leonora Piper, was often asked to go and see what a certain friend was doing at the moment. The account that he gave on his return often contained descriptions that applied to happenings a day after or what he thought a day before.

The psychical researcher S. G. Soal received through Blanche Cooper communication from Gordon Davis, a friend who, a few months after, turned up alive. Through the medium, he gave a description of his house. The description was incorrect at the time he turned up but perfectly matched his home a year after.

In clairvoyant perceptions, a similar uncertainty is often noticed. The percipients often do not know whether the visions of events that unfold themselves refer to the past or future. There is a good instance in Quaker history. George Fox cried "Woe to the bloody city of Lichfield" as he passed through it, and discovered later this was not a prophecy but a psychometric sensation of the martyrdoms in a past age. The British investigator J. W. Dunne observed a mixture of past and future elements in dreams, as described in experiments he conducted.

Sources:

Bramwell, J. Milne. Hypnotism. London: G. Richards, 1903.

Dunne, J. W. An Experiment with Time. London: A. & C. Black; New York: Macmillan, 1927.

Time Pattern Research Institute

A New York astrological corporation founded May 1967, bringing modern technology to horoscopes. The institute used an IBM 360-30 computer in conjunction with well-known astrologer Katina Theodossiou. The computer's memory banks held twenty-five million items of basic information. Individual horoscopes ran to ten thousand words, including character analysis and future trends, and the company merchandized hundreds of thousands of horoscopes, using department stores as outlets. The service provided by the institute became obsolete as the slew of astrological computers permeated the market. (See also Astroflash)

Tingley, Katherine (Augusta Westcott) (1847–1929)

Prominent American Theosophist who founded a Theosophical community at Point Loma, California. Tingley was born on July 6, 1847, at Newburyport, Massachusetts, and was educated at a public school in Newburyport and under a private instructress. She took an early interest in social work before becoming active in the fields of Spiritualism and later Theosophy. In 1887, she formed the Society of Mercy (concerned with emergency relief work on New York's East Side). At this time she became known as a Spiritualist medium.

Through her social work she met theosophist William Q. Judge, who made a profound impression on her. With the sponsorship of Judge, one of the co-founders of the Theosophical Society, she quickly became an important figure in the American branch.

After the death of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky in 1891, Judge led the majority of American Theosophists in a secession from the international society then headed by Annie Besant and Henry S. Olcott. Judge died in March 1896, and his independent Theosophical Society in America stated that he had nominated a successor, referred to in symbolic language as "The Purple Mother." A month later, E. T. Hargrove, then president of the Theosophical Society in America, confirmed that "The Purple Mother" was Katherine Tingley.

Soon afterward, Tingley began a World Crusade for Theosophy, during which she claimed to have encountered a theosophical master in Darjeeling. Upon returning to the United States, she founded the School for the Revival of the Lost Mysteries of Antiquity, at Point Loma, California. She also founded the Universal Brotherhood organization, and after taking charge of the Theosophical Society, she merged it with the Universal Brotherhood. Permanent headquarters were established at Point Loma, San Diego, California, in 1900.

During the Spanish-American War, Katherine Tingley organized the War Relief Corps and established an emergency hospital on Long Island for soldiers wounded in Cuba. In 1899 the International Brotherhood League, a department of the Theosophical Society, undertook relief work in Cuba. Later, Tingley visited Cuba and brought a group of children to Point Loma for education. She was first obliged to prove the financial and moral competence of the society to take charge of the children. She was funded by the U.S. government to establish hospitals in Cuba, and in 1925 was awarded the Medal of Honor of the German Red Cross. In 1924 she established a summer school for children at Visingsoe, Sweden, and in the following year, she opened seven new Theosophical Centers in Europe.

Tingley was editor of Theosophical Path, published at Point Loma, as well as other Theosophical magazines in Holland, Germany, and Sweden. She also founded The New Way, a monthly magazine for free distribution to prisoners in penitentiaries and jails.

She died July 11, 1929, in Sweden, after an automobile accident in Germany, and was succeeded at the Point Loma community by Dr. Gottfried de Purucker. The community survived until World War II when a combination of financial difficulties and the strategic position of the community's land on the Point Loma peninsula led to its sale. The property is now the site of a college.

Sources:

Greenwalt, Emmett A. California Utopia: Point Loma, 1897–1942. San Diego, 1978.

Tingley, Katherine. The Gods Await. Point Loma, Calif., 1929.

———. Theosophy and Some of the Vital Problems of the Day. N.p., 1915.

———. Theosophy, The Path of the Mystic. Point Loma, Calif., 1922. Reprint, Pasadena, Calif.: Theosophical University Press, 1977.

———. The Voice of the Soul. Point Loma, Calif., 1928.

———. The Wine of Life. Point Loma, Calif.: Woman's International Theosophical League, 1925.

———. The Wisdom of the Heart: Katherine Tingley Speaks. Compiled by W. Emmett Small. San Diego, 1978.

Tischner, Rudolf (1879–1961)

Ophthalmologist of Munich, who entered the ranks of leading German psychical researchers in 1919 with the publication of his Über Telepathie und Hellsehen, one of the groundworks on the subject (translated into English as Telepathy and Clairvoyance, 1925). It was followed in 1920 by a small book on the clairvoyant Ludwig Aub, Einführung in den Okkultismus and Spiritismus, and Monismus und Okkultismus.

Tischner was also the author of many small monographs and of a large historic work: Geschichte der okkultistischen Forschung. Von der Antike bis zur Gegenwart (1924), which was published as the second volume to August F. Ludwig's Geschichte der okkultistischen Forschung bis zur Gegenwart . . . Mitte des 19 Jahrhunderts. It is a comprehensive and careful survey of the history of psychical research. The Society for Psychical Research, London, honored this work by making Tischner a corresponding member. He published a study under the title Fernfühlen und Mesmerismus, (1925) which deals with the experiments of Eugerne Rochas on the exteriorization of sensibility.

With his research, lectures, and propaganda work Tischner did a great deal for the advancement of psychic science in Germany prior to the disruptions of the Nazi era.

His later books included: Der Okkultimus als Natur und Geisteswissenschaft (Occultism as a Natural and Philosophical Science, 1926), Ergebnisse Okkulter Forschung (Results of Occult Research, 1950), and Geschichte der Parapsychologie (History of Parapsychology, 1960). Tischner was among the first to use the term "extrasensory perception" before it was adopted by J. B. Rhine. He died April 24, 1961 at Vierhöfen, Germany.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Tischner, Rudolf. Franz Anton Mesmer: Leben, Werk und Wirkungen. Munchen: Verlag der Müncher Drucke, 1928.

———. Geschichte der okkultistischen Forschung. Pfülling: Johannes Baum Verlag, 1924.

Tissot, James Joseph Jacques (1836–1902)

Well-known French painter of the life of Christ, chiefly remembered in Spiritualism for his mezzotint "Apparition Medianimique," which portrayed his impressions of a materialization séance in 1885 with the medium William Eglinton. He saw the apparition of his departed fiancée accompanied by "Ernest," the guide of the medium. The painting was acquired by the London Spiritualist Alliance.

TM

Initialism for Transcendental Meditation, the popular Hindu meditation system taught by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi.

Tocquet, Robert (1898– ?)

Professor of chemistry who published books on parapsychology and the occult. He was born on June 5, 1898, in Saint-Oulph (Aube), France. He taught at the École des Travaux Publics and the Ecole d'Anthropologie de Paris. In addition to his many books on chemistry and science, he published Encyclopédie pour la Jeunesse, a five volume encyclopedia for young people.

Tocquet had a strong interest in psychology and was a member of the board of the Institut Métapsychique International. He authored a number of articles and several books on occult topics. His titles include: Les Calculateurs prodiges et leurs secrets (The Magic of Numbers, 1957), La Médecine se tait (When Medicine is Silent, 1954), Phénomès de mediumnité (Phenomena of Mediumship), Les Pouvoirs secrets de l'Homme (The Secret Powers of Man, 1963), and Tout l'Occultisme dévoilé (Secrets of the Occult Revealed, 1952.)

Today's Astrologer

Monthly bulletin of the American Federation of Astrologers available to members of the federation. The bulletin contains news of classes, lectures, and events connected with the AFA, and substantive articles on various aspects of astrology of a professional nature. The headquarters of the federation may be reached at P.O. Box 22040, Tempe, AZ 85285 or through their web site at http://www.astrologers.com.

Token Object

An object associated with the subject, held by the psychic giving a reading. It might be a slip of paper with a name on it, unseen to the psychic, who gives information relative to that named person while holding the paper. It might alternatively be an object that the psychic holds while giving impressions through psychometry, i.e., apparently being sensitive to impressions from that object.

Toland, John (1670–1722)

John Toland, first chief of the revived Druid movement in England, was born on November 30, 1670, near Londonderry, Ireland. Originally named Junius Janus, he took the name John to avoid being a butt of jokes by his youthful schoolmates. Though raised a Catholic, he converted to Protestantism as a teenager. Some Irish Protestants saw to his education and eventually sent him to Glasgow. He earned his M.A. at Edinburgh in 1690. He completed his education in Leyden, Holland.

By the early 1690s, he had begun to hold liberal opinions that questioned the orthodoxy of his teachers. In 1696 he published his most famous work, Christianity not Mysterious, now considered an early classic of the Deist movement, a movement that not only denied the Christian doctrine of the Trinity, but challenged the idea of God's continued activity in the world. He soon became the subject of sermons denouncing his thought. After the Irish House of Commons voted to burn the book and sent out orders for his arrest, Toland moved to England. He made his living as an editor and writer on a variety of subjects. Though he would often attempt to distance himself from his work, he was never successful, as he basically continued to believe. However, his beliefs would lead in a different direction.

In 1717, a number of delegates from what have been described as Druidic circles across the British Isles and Brittany met in Covent Gardens (London) at the Apple Tree Tavern. There they organized the Mother Grove of a revived Druidic order, a group continuing the ancient Druidic traditions as then understood. Toland was elected the chief of this grove, called Ar Tigh Geatha Gaurdeachus. Toland's own understanding of Druidism seemed to have been summarized in his 1720 publication Pantheisticon, in which he described a nature-oriented religion. He died two years later on February 11, 1722, at Putney, where he had been living since 1718.

While there were rumors of an earlier Druidic organization, possibly traceable to John Aubrey, an early writer on Druidism whom Toland had met in 1694, from Toland's term as the Druidic leader there is an organizational continuity of modern Druidism.

Sources:

Carr-Gomm, Philip. The Elements of the Druid Tradition. Shaftesbury, Dorset, UK: Element, 1991.

Toland, John. Christianity not Mysterious. N.p., 1696.

———. Pantheisticon. Putney, 1720.

Tomczyk, Stanislawa (Mrs. Everard Feilding) (ca. 1920)

Non-professional Polish medium, the subject of the experiments of Julien Ochorowicz in 1908–9, at Wisla, Poland. Tomczyk was regularly hypnotized by Ochorowicz for therapeutic purposes, when she became controlled by an entity called "Little Stasia." She could produce movement of objects without contact (telekinesis), stop the movement of a clock in a glass case, and influence a roulette wheel to the extent that the numbers chosen by the medium turned up more often than justified by chance.

Ochorowicz hypothesized that the physical movements were performed by rigid "rays" projecting from the fingers of the medium. The medium's hands were thoroughly examined and washed before each séance. A small object, such as a ball, cork, matchbox, or scissors, was placed before her on a table. The medium then placed her fingers about six to eight inches from the sides of the object. The object would move and eventually rise in the air, floating between the medium's fingers on each side.

Sometimes investigators claimed to feel a subtle "thread," but it was a psychic line of force, not a material thread. Ochorowicz stated: "I have felt this thread on my hand, on my face, on my hair. When the medium separates her hands the thread gets thinner and disappears; it gives the same sensation as a spider's web. If it is cut with scissors its continuity is immediately restored . . . it is then seen to be much thinner than an ordinary thread." These observations have a strong resemblance to the od, the claimed "odic force" of Baron Karl von Reichenbach, which sensitive individuals claimed to see in a darkened room issuing from the fingertips. However, Tomczyk's phenomena took place in good light.

"Little Stasia" was a mischievous entity who played many tricks on the medium. She said herself that she was not the spirit of any dead person. The medium considered her, at first, as her double. This was Ochorowicz's opinion, too, until he was shaken in this view by having obtained Little Stasia's photograph, as announced by her, in an empty room with all light excluded, while the medium in a normal condition was with him in an adjoining room.

Theodore Flournoy witnessed a séance in Paris in 1909. It left him "in no doubt as to the reality of simple telekinesis." However, at a later series of séances at Geneva to which, besides Flournoy, Professors Clarapède, Cellerier, Batelli, and Flournoy's son were invited, the expectations of the sitters were not fulfilled.

In 1910, Tomczyk was investigated at the Physical Laboratory in Warsaw by a group of scientists. She produced remarkable physical phenomena under strict test conditions. Baron Schrenck-Notzing described the experiments in his Physikalische Phenomene des Mediumismus, München, 1920. Charles Richet quoted his own observations in his book Traité de Métapsychique, (1922) (translated as Thirty Years of Psychical Research, 1923).

In 1919, Tomczyk married the distinguished British psychical researcher F. H. Everard Feilding (1867–1936), and seems to have discontinued séances.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Feilding, Evarard. "Note on the English Sittings with Miss Tomczyk." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 17 (1915).

Richet, Charles. Traité de Métapsychique. N.p., 1922. English edition as Thirty Years of Psychical Research. New York: Macmillan, 1923. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1975.

Tomga

Familiar spirits among the Eskimos.

TOM Religious Foundation

The TOM Religious Foundation is a Spiritualist organization founded in the 1960s by Rev. Ruth Johnson in Velarde, New Mexico. The headquarters were moved to Canon City, Colorado, in 1970, and more recently they moved back to New Mexico. The teachings are based upon Johnson's own study and exploration of her past lives, which are disseminated primarily through correspondence lessons, "Moon Time Studies in Spiritual Culture." These lessons cover subjects familiar to occult students, including psychic development, dreams, ESP, Atlantis, the Bible, and what is said to be original Christianity. According to Johnson, God is the divine One, Spirit, or Whole, who knows, loves, and cares for us and manifests that love through divine guidance. Students may pursue ordination and receive charters to establish churches. Address: P.O. Box 52, Chinmayo, NM 87522.

Tongues, Speaking in Vocalization that sounds like a language but is devoid of semantic meaning or syntax; also known as glossolalia. Glossolalia is a protolanguage based on the everyday spoken language of the person, but lacking enough sounds (vowels and consonants) upon which to build an actual language. Glossolalia often occurs in a religious context, most notably modern Pentecostalism, where it appears as a vocalized religious expression.

Glossolalia is to be sharply distinguished from xenoglossia, or xenoglossy, the speaking or understanding of a foreign language one does not normally know or recognize. In the Bible, glossolalia is referred to as the tongues of angels (1 Cor. 13:1), possibly suggesting that the unintelligible sounds are an angelic language.

Glossolalia is familiar to most from its association with the birth of Christianity at Pentecost as described in the Christian New Testament (Acts 2), though what in fact is described is an event of xenoglossia. Those listening to the apostles speak were amazed to hear the sermon each in their own language. The more obvious example of glossolalia occurred in the Corinthian church of which Paul spoke when he said, "For he that speaks in a tongue speaks not unto men but unto God; for no man understands, but in the spirit he speaks mysteries" (1 Cor. 14:2).

There are accounts of how the gift of tongues descended on the London congregation of Rev. Edward Irving in 1831. Robert Baxter, in his book Narrative of Facts Characterizing the Supernatural Manifestations in Members of Mr. Irving's Congregation (London, 1833), gives a narrative of his own experiences:

". . . The power of the Spirit was so great upon me that I was obliged to call out, as in agony, for pardon and forgiveness and for strength to bear a faithful testimony. In these cryings I was, however, at the time conscious of a power of utterance carrying me beyond the natural expression of my feelings. . . . for the space of more than ten minutes I was, as it were, paralysed under a shaking of my limbs, my knees rapping one against the other, and no expression except a sort of convulsive sigh. During this period I had no other consciousness than this bodily emotion, and an inexpressible constraint upon my mind, which although it left me composed and sensible of all I was doing, yet prevented my utterance and gave no distinct impression, beyond a desire to pray for the knowledge of the Lord's will. This increased so much that I was led to fall on my knees and cry in a loud voice 'Speak, Lord, for they servant hearest,' and this I repeated many times, until the same power of the Spirit which I had before felt, came upon me, and I was made to cry out with great vehemence, both of tone and action, that the coming of the Lord should be declared, and the messengers of the Lord should bear it forth upon the mountains and upon the hills, and tell it to the winds, that all the earth should hear it and tremble before the Lord."

The utterances often began in an unknown tongue and then passed into English. As one witness described them, "The tongue invariably preceded, which at first I did not comprehend, because it burst forth with an astonishing and terrible crash, so suddenly and in such short sentences that I seldom recovered from the shock before the English commenced."

The phrases were mostly taken from the Scriptures and repeated again and again. The actual words of the tongues were not recorded. Baxter believed them to be a jargon of sounds. However, the possessed also spoke with extraordinary fluency in languages with which they were but imperfectly acquainted. The utterances were supposedly grandiose both in manner and diction.

In a pamphlet, Drei Tage in Gros Almerode (Three Days in Great Almerode), J. Busching, a theological student at Leipzig, Germany, described ten cases of glossolalia at a religious revival in 1907 at Almerode, a small town in Hesse. The phenomena began with a hissing or peculiar gnashing sound. It was said that these sounds were produced when the subject, not wishing to disturb the order of service by interrupting a prayer already commenced, tried to repress the inward impulse acting on the speech organs; but the sounds had to come out, and the momentarily repressed glossolalies only burst forth with increased vigor.

Modern American Pentecostalism began in 1901 with the speaking in tongues that occurred at the Bethel Bible School in Topeka, Kansas. While away during the Christmas season of 1900, the school's founder set a task for the students: investigate the "baptism of the Holy Spirit" and discover what, according to the Bible, is the sign(s) of its presence. When he returned on New Year's Eve, he asked what the students had discovered. They replied, "speaking in tongues." Shortly after reaching a consensus on that point, the group retired to the chapel, where they entered a time of prayer. Then, on New Year's Day, 1901, Agnes Osman became the first person in modern times to ask for and receive the gift of the Holy Spirit with the accompanying sign of speaking in tongues.

Usually accompanying speaking in tongues is the additional phenomenon of the "interpretation of tongues," in which a reputed "translation" of the glossolalia is offered. An interpretation of tongues does not always occur even when it is prayed for. When it does occur, the speaker may either envision a written translation or hear it inwardly, or perceive directly the meaning of the foreign words.

Receiving the "baptism of the Holy Spirit" accompanied by speaking in tongues became the distinguishing mark of Pentecostalism. The movement spread from Topeka to Houston, Texas, and then to Los Angeles, California, from where it spread around the world.

Although Pentecostals were denigrated as "Holy Rollers" through much of the twentieth century (see George B. Cutten's Speaking with Tongues), in the 1960s Pentecostalism began to spread through the mainline Christian churches first in North America and then in Europe. This new charismatic movement, as it was called, brought a new respectability to Pentecostalism and resulted in the acceptance of Pentecostals into the larger Evangelical movement. It also led to new attention to glossolalia by social and behavioral scientists and historians. While supernatural explanations still dominate among Pentecostal believers, a more mundane perspective has emerged from those who have observed glossolalia widely.

A few detractors put forth the idea, a remnant of religious prejudice from earlier in the century, that glossolalia was a sign of psychopathology. This idea was possibly the first laid to rest as it had no basis in empirical data. In fact, quite the opposite was found to be true, in that Pentecostals seemed to have a higher level of mental health than that of the general population.

Other detractors suggested that glossolalia was simply gibberish; however, linguistic studies, most prominently that of William Samarin, have suggested that it is in fact a very structured speech, easily distinguishable from gibberish or attempts to imitate glossolalia. It is also said to be a protolanguage, highly structured and derived from the everyday language of the speaker.

Its relation to everyday language suggests that it too, like everyday language, is a learned behavior, and experimental data, testing people's ability to learn glossolalia in a nonreligious setting, provides some substantiation of this hypothesis. Others have also suggested that glossolalia is related to altered states of consciousness. Glossolalia is not generally associated with severe alteration of consciousness as in trance or hypnosis, but it seems to involve lightly altered consciousness such as that which occurs in daydreaming.

Historians have noted the widespread appearance of glossolalia in various religious traditions from ancient Greece to modern Spiritualism, although certainly the great majority of recorded cases are in Christianity. Some Christians have countered the obvious implications of cross-cultural studies by arguing that some tongues speaking is simply a ruse by the devil to imitate the actions of the Holy Spirit.

Sources:

Christie-Murray, David. Voices from the Gods: Speaking in Tongues. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1978.

Cutten, George B. Speaking With Tongues: Historically and Psychologically Considered. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1927.

Goodman, Felicitas D. Speaking in Tongues: A Cross-Cultural Survey of Glossolalia. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1972.

Kelsey, Morton T. Tongue Speaking: An Experiment in Spiritual Experience. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1968. Reprint, London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1973.

Kildahl, John P. The Psychology of Speaking in Tongues. New York: Harper & Row, 1972.

Samarin, William J. Tongues of Men and of Angels: The Religious Language of Pentecostalism. New York: Macmillan, 1972.

Spanos, Nicholas O., Wendy P. Cross, Mark Lepage, and Marjorie Coristine. "Glossolalia as Learned behavior: An Experimental Demonstration." Journal of Abnormal Psychology 95 (February 1986): 21–23.

Toolemak

Familiar spirits among the Eskimos.

TOPY See Thee Temple ov Psychick Youth

Totemism

A form of religious and social organization among tribal peoples that associates groups of persons with particular animals or objects. The term derives from the language and practice of the Ojibway tribe of Native Americans, but the Ojibways' own form of totemism was not typical of the use of the term as adopted by anthropologists. A totemic tribe consists of a number of totem groups, each closely related to a totem, which may be an animal or an inanimate object. That totem is specific for that particular group, thus while every member of the tribe has a characteristic totem, it will differ from those of other totem groups within the same tribes in the same area. Plants are used as totems in some parts of the world, and other totems are sometimes only a token part of an animal (i.e., a buffalo tongue instead of a buffalo).

A totem implies some kinship between the animal or object and the members of the group, sometimes a belief in descent from an animal totem. Masks and images may reinforce this association. Members of a particular totemic group respect the animal or object used as totem, and place a taboo on its being destroyed by members of that group, although their taboo does not apply to other members of the tribe.

Totemism is practiced around the world, among Australian aborigines, some African societies, certain North and South American Indian tribes, and among the peoples of Indonesia and Melanesia. Among Australian aborigines, totemism is related to a belief in the constant reincarnation of the spirits of primary animal forms into human beings.

In North America, the totem pole, used by Native American tribes of the Northwest coast of Canada and the United States, is the most widely recognized example of totemism. These poles or pillars are carved and painted with symbolic animals or spirits to represent ancestry or to tell family legends.

Sources:

Durkheim, Emile. The Elementary Forms of the Religious Life. Reprint, New York: Collier, 1961.

Frazer, James G. Totemism and Exogamy. 4 vols. N.p., 1910.

Freud, Sigmund. Totem and Taboo. New York: Random House, 1960.

Tedlock, Dennis. Teachings from the American Earth: Indian Religion and Philosophy. New York: Liveright, 1975.

Touches, Psychic

Tactile sensations represent an allied phenomenon to the paranormal movement of objects. Spiritualists claim such touches are intentional, just as the movement of objects is characterized by perfect localization; the touch is invariably meant for the one who receives it.

While the objects by which the sitters are touched may be recognized, in psychic contacts the case is different, as there is no apparent material means for their production. If the touches are produced by rods of ectoplasm, they may cause an immense variety of sensations according to the manipulation of this substance. The tactile sensation is often announced in advance, affected by psychic lights or luminous structures, and is visible to others.

The effect of the sensation may be as though coming from a soft object, for example, a rubber ball, an animal's paw feathers, gloves, fur, powderpuff, cobwebs, flowers, or fingers. The touch itself may be sharp, soft, dry, wet, clammy, or cold. It may be a tap, a caress, a stroke, a slap, a kick, a prick, a push, a punch, or a kiss. The invisible operator may pull or rumple your hair, she may rub your legs and search your pockets.

In 1905, in the Annales des Sciences Psychiques, psychical researcher Charles Richet translated a Latin chronicle from 1656 dealing with the phenomena that happened to a young girl named Regina Fischerin of Presbourg, Hungary. The chronicle, which is still part of the records of the Venerable

Chapter in the Archbishopric of Pest, gave report on the apparitions of Jean Clement of Presbourg, who led an evil life. The chronicle contained the following dramatic passages:

"Therefore, fearing that she might be the victim of an illusion, Regina asked of the spirit, if it were truly a spirit, to touch her with its finger. Immediately it touched her right arm and she felt the contact instantly. There appeared immediately a blister, giving her the same sensation of pain as though it had been a burn; moreover, fully to attest the phenomenon, the blister remained upon the skin a long time, and all the servants of the house saw it. Thereafter, desirous to be sure that this was not the work of an evil spirit, Regina demanded as proof that the visitor was a good spirit to make the sign of the cross. 'Here then,' said the phantom 'what you ask!' At once a flaming cross appeared outside the cloak which enveloped the figure, and with this it burned deeply the hand of the young girl, leaving thereon a branded cross which everyone could see. . . .

"A little later this spirit of Jean Clement recalled with remorse a crime which he had committed during his life, declaring that the money which had been secured from this crime was not all spent [this proved afterwards to be true]; that part of it had been used for his subsistence, another part had been otherwise spent, but that some still remained and that this should be restored from the possessions which he had left.

"Regina demanded yet other proofs. Surely the proof of the cross burned on her hand, and on her mantle was sufficiently strong, but it did not suffice for the young woman, who, in order to be absolutely sure that the strange visitant was truly a good spirit, insisted that it should make the same Sign of the Cross on a piece of money. The spirit obeyed, took a coin, threw it on the ground, and snatching a piece of cloth from the girl's hands, threw this upon the coin; then, taking Regina's hand violently in his grasp, scorching her deeply as before, burned thereon through the hand and the linen cloth upon the coin the character of a triple cross. 'Here is a further sign,' said he, and launched forth a flame with so much force that it reached the heart of the young woman, while another jet of flame crossed the entire room and struck the opposite wall. Whereupon Regina fell unconscious. . . .

"This affair seems extraordinary to us; firstly because a cross and an exact form of the hand have been marked in every detail; secondly, because this brand of burning did not extend beyond limits of the marks, though, upon linen material, fire has a tendency to spread. Finally, the right hand which was thus branded in on flesh and cloth, was an exact replica of the right hand of Clement, just as though he had been operating by his own dead physical hand. And the proof of this is that, during life, the tip phalange of Clement's forefinger had been amputated by a surgeon for a disease which was then known as 'Worms' and the absence of the finger-tip is clearly indicated upon the branded hand." (This account can also be found in the English edition of Annals of Psychical Science, No. 4, April 1905).

Other chronicles contained similar accounts. In 1908 and 1910 Mrs. Zingarapoli, a Naples lawyer, published a dozen such cases in Luce e Ombra. One was recorded from the seventeenth century and the brands or scorch marks of the hands of fire preserved at the Convent St. Claire at Todi. The exhibits in Father V. Jouet's Other World Museum at Rome comprised photographic records of the marks. In another instance in 1853, a spirit left an imprint as if by an iron hand heated red-hot on the door of the convent of the Franciscan nuns of Saint Anne at Foligno. When the grave of the deceased was reopened, the hand was found to fit the scorch marks to perfection.

In William Howitt's History of the Supernatural (2 vols., 1863), a story was told of an apparition that appeared to the grandfather and father of a fellow student of Johann H. Jung. It stated in part:

"Yet there were circumstances which made the father and son believe that he was far from his purification, for fire streamed from every finger when he became angry at their resistance to his wishes. Still more, when he touched the Bible it smoked, and the marks of his thumb and finger shrivelled up the leather of the binding where he held it, and also the paper where he pointed out the place in the hymn 'From guilt of blood deliver me' was black and singed. The Bible with these marks is preserved in the family, and many creditable persons have seen it and may still see it."

Howitt added:

"The fiery touch of the spirit which induced the father and son to believe it a bad one, modern spiritualists can testify to belong to many spirits. How often have we seen fire streaming even from the finger of a medium? How often have spirits, before shaking hands with you, desired you, at Mr. Home's, to lay your handkerchief over your hand first? How often have you felt the touch of spirit fingers prick as from the sparks of electricity?"

Under the mediumship of the Rev. William Stainton Moses there are two instances of somewhat similar character. According to his note dated April 18, 1874, a psychic light touched his fingers, which resulted in the skin being broken up and the joint swollen. Mrs. Speer stated in her account in Light that a spirit of low order was responsible for the injury.

In the second instance, W. B., a friend of Stainton Moses, figured he had committed suicide. His portrait appeared on a plate on May 16, 1876, when Moses sat for spirit photography. On May 20, Moses woke up in the night and saw the spirit trying to reach him; it struggled with two other spirits. He was inspired with horror and revulsion. The spirit got nearer and stretched out his hand. Moses did not remember any more. In the morning, he found on his forehead an oblong dull red mark in the exact place where his friend wounded himself. The mark was a red discoloration and faded in two or three days.

The psychical researcher Frank Podmore quoted a similar case in Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 10, p. 204). A Miss M. P. was awakened in the night with a jump with a horrible feeling that there was someone in the room. An icy hand pressed against her face. The next moment her sister cried out and complained of a violent burn on her cheek. "The gas having been turned up higher, we saw on one side of her face, a very vivid red mark, which rapidly took the form of a hand, with fingers open."

The psychical researcher Ernesto Bozzano analyzed this and many similar cases in the journal The Seer (1931) under the title 'Spirit Hands of Flame,' and drew attention to the fact that the elder sister felt an icy sensation and a minute later, apparently by the same hand, her sister was burned. Bozzano asked whether the opposed sensation felt by the two percipients might not be explained by "a rapid change in the ectoplasmic condensation of the phantom hand resulting from a sudden modification of the vibratory tonality. This vibratory tonality, under certain circumstances, seems to be very much more intense either on living or inanimate matter, and as a result, like fire, it would destroy living animal or vegetable tissue."

In a séance with Heinrich Melzer, the Dresden apport medium, as reported in the June 1906 issue of Die Ünbersinnliche Welt, a plant was apported. The sitter, at the very same instant that he received the plant, felt the sensation of burning on the thumb. When the light was switched on, the mark of a burn was clearly seen and a blister formed immediately.

Emma Hardinge Britten in her book Modern American Spiritualism (1870), vouched for the following occurrences in the family of a well-known merchant of San Francisco in a séance with the eldest daughter:

"Instantly, and while every eye was fixed upon her, she sank back in her chair in a swoon and there, in the broad glare of the sunlight, appeared on her face, which the moment before was perfectly white and colorless, a large patch of wet, reeking blood, one of her cheeks being marked exactly as if struck with a bloody hand. On approaching the swooning figure, a second patch appeared on the other cheek; and as she stretched out her hand as if to ward off an invisible foe, another wet and reeking stain instantaneously became manifest on its palm.

"The ladies present procured a washbowl and removed the stains from the young woman's face and hand; but though they replaced her in the chair, restored her to consciousness and never for one moment lost sight of her, nor suffered a single movement to escape them, this terrible phenomena was repeated five times in less than an hour."

The house in which this occurred was haunted, and the scene of frightful disturbances at night. The younger children always insisted that these frightful marks were made "by a Spanish girl" who followed their sister about. She had her throat cut. Another apparition who helped to make the marks was their mother whom they represented as reproaching her daughter with an infamous life. The fluid was several times analyzed and found to be human blood. The phenomena lasted for many months. Finally the police interfered and the circles were terminated.

The issue of psychic touches has actually been discussed but it is such an allusive phenomena that little can be concluded from its occurrence. It has been noted that records of such occurrences in modern séances have usually be in conjunction with other fraudulent phenomena such as apports and materializations; the mundane action of a sitter or accomplice in a darkened room could account for the overwhelming psychic touches. A variety of body sensations, from the ordinary to the spectacular, can also be ascribed to actions completely internal to the person him/herself. It can even be argued that some cases of burns and bleeding might be ascribed to autosuggestion (or hypnotism).

Tower of London

Ancient British fortress on the east side of the city of London, England, scene of many executions, once used for imprisonment of high-ranking traitors. With its grim history, it is not surprising that various ghosts are associated with it.

The jewelroom at the Tower of London is reported to be haunted and in 1860 there was published in Notes and Queries by Edmund Lenthal Swifte, Keeper of the Crown Jewels, an account of a spectral appearance witnessed by himself in the tower. He stated in October 1817, he was having supper with his wife, her sister, and his little boy in the sitting room of the jewel house. Swifte stated:

"I had offered a glass of wine and water to my wife when, on putting it to her lips, she exclaimed, 'Good God! what is that?' I looked up and saw a cylindrical figure like a glass tube, seemingly about the thickness of my arm, and hovering between the ceiling and the table; its contents appeared to be dense fluid, white and pale azure. This lasted about two minutes, when it began to move before my sister-in-law; then, following the oblong side of the table, before my son and myself, passing behind my wife, it paused for a moment over her right shoulder. Instantly crouching down, and with both hands covering her shoulder she shrieked out, 'O Christ! it has seized me!'

"It was ascertained that no optical action from the outside could have produced any manifestation within, and hence the mystery has remained unsolved."

Notes and Queries also reported how "one of the night sentries at the jewel house was alarmed by a figure like a bear issuing from underneath the jewel room door. He thrust at it with his bayonet which stuck in the door. He dropped in a fit and was carried senseless to the guard-room. . . . In another day or two the brave and steady soldier died."

In February 1933, a sentry at the Tower reported seeing the ghostly figure of a woman in white floating toward him. A newspaper report stated: "Confronted by such an apparition, the sentry fled, making his way to the guardroom, greatly unnerved."

On February 12, 1957, a young Welsh Guardsman was on duty, and at 3 A.M. saw a "white shapeless form" forty feet up on the battlements of the Salt Tower. He called for a search party, who found nothing, although another guardsman later admitted to seeing a shapeless white apparition. The time and the date was in conjunction with the execution of Lady Jane Grey, four hundred and three years earlier.

Trance

An altered state of consciousness, either spontaneous or induced, bearing some analogy to the ordinary sleep state, but differing from it in certain marked particulars. Among tribal peoples, trance states have been common since ancient times, used by the shaman, medicine man, or other religious practitioners for demonstrations of paranormal knowledge. Such shamans were forerunners of the modern Spiritualist mediums.

The term is loosely applied to many varied mental states (e.g., hypnosis, ecstasy, catalepsy, somnambulism, certain forms of hysteria, and the mediumistic trance). Sometimes, as in catalepsy, there is a partial suspension of the vital functions; generally, there is insensibility to pain and to any stimulus applied to the sense organs. The main distinguishing feature of the trance is that the subject retains consciousness and gives evidence of intelligence, either his or her own normal intelligence or, as in cases of possession and impersonation, some foreign intelligence.

In hypnosis, the subject, although indifferent to sensory stimuli, has been known to exhibit a curious sensitivity to such stimuli applied to the hypnotist's body (see Community of Sensation).

In ecstasy, which is frequently allied with hallucination, the subject remains in rapt contemplation of some transcendental vision, deaf and blind to the outside world. It was formerly considered to indicate that the soul of the ecstatic was viewing some great event distant in time or place or some person or scene from the celestial sphere. Today such a state is believed to be brought about by intense and sustained emotional concentration on some particular mental image, by means of which hallucination may be induced.

The mediumistic trance is recognized as being similar to hypnosis, for the hypnotic trance, induced many times in the same subject, may become spontaneous. It then strongly resembles the trance of the medium.

Some Spiritualists have objected to the term trance being applied when there is no sign of spirit possession. The entranced medium (who seems able to produce this state at will) frequently displays an exaltation of memory (hypermnesia), of the senses (hyperesthesia), and even of the intellectual faculties.

Automatic writing and utterances are generally produced in the trance state and frequently display knowledge the medium does not normally possess, or knowledge that is said to give evidence of telepathy. Such were the trance utterances of the medium Leonora Piper, whose automatic phenomena in the late nineteenth century provided a wide field for scientific research.

Spiritualists believe these phenomena are caused by spirits of the dead acting through the medium's physical organism, as distinct from ancient ideas that trance personalities were all the result of demonic possession. Moreover, the trance messages of Spiritualist mediums are said to come from the spirits of deceased persons, and this assertion is often supported by the medium's exhibiting the voice, appearance, or known opinions of the dead friend or relative.

Such trance representations supply a large part of the evidence on which the structure of Spiritualism rests. In cases of fraud, however, the information concerning the deceased was probably obtained by normal means, or, in some cases, obtained telepathically from the minds of the sitters. While there is some strong evidence for a Spiritualist view, there are also many cases when other explanations seem more appropriate.

Subjective Aspects of Trance

Some light can be shed on the nature of trance from the reports of those who have experienced it. The great medium D. D. Home, for example, described his movement into trance before a committee of the London Dialectical Society in 1869: "I feel for two or three minutes in a dreamy state, then I become quite dizzy, and then I lose all consciousness. When I awake I find my feet and limbs cold, and it is difficult to restore the circulation. When told of what has taken place during the trance it is quite unpleasant to me, and I ask those present not to tell me at once when I awake. I myself doubt what they tell me."

Lord Adare, who studied Home's mediumship, observed, "The change which takes place in him is very striking; he becomes, as it were, a being of higher type. There is a union of sweetness, tenderness and earnestness in his voice and manner which is very attractive."

W. Stainton Moses, himself a medium, added his observations:

"By degrees Mr. Home's hands and arms began to twitch and move involuntarily. I should say that he has been partly paralysed, drags one of his legs, moves with difficulty, stoops and can endure very little physical exertion. As he passed into the trance state he drew power from the circle by extending his arms to them and mesmerizing himself. All these acts are involuntary. He gradually passed into the trance state, and rose from the table, erect and a different man from what he was. He walked firmly, dashed out his arms and legs with great power and passed round to Mr. Crookes. He mesmerized him, and appeared to draw power from him."

"I feel a cold shivering," stated Annie Fairlamb, "a sensation as of water running down my back, noise in my ears, and a feeling as if I were sinking down into the earth; then I lose consciousness."

Leonore Piper noted:

"I feel as if something were passing over my brain, making it numb; a sensation similar to that experienced when I was etherized, only the unpleasant odour of the ether is absent. I feel a little cold, too, not very, just a little, as if a cold breeze passed over me, and people and objects become smaller until they finally disappear; then, I know nothing more until I wake up, when the first thing I am conscious of is bright, a very bright light, and then darkness, such darkness. My hands and arms begin to tingle just as one's foot tingles after it has been 'asleep,' and I see, as if from a great distance, objects and people in the room; but they are very small and very black."

It is interesting to note that when the Seeress of Prevorst (Frederica Hauffe) awoke from trance, she said that the persons around her looked so thick and heavy that she could not imagine how they could move.

Objective Aspects of Trance

On awakening from trance, Piper often pronounced names and fragments of sentences that appeared to have been the last impressions on her brain. After that, she resumed conversations at the point where they were broken off before she fell into trance. It is significant to quote from among the mumbled remarks during her return to consciousness, "I came in on a cord, a silver cord." Before she became conscious she heard a snap, sometimes two. They were physiological experiences. She said she heard "sounds like wheels clicking together and then snaps." Similar observations have been made by individuals reporting out-of-the-body travel experiences.

Describing the development in Piper's trances, Sir Oliver Lodge writes in his book The Survival of Man (1909):

"In the old days the going into trance seemed rather a painful process, or at least a process involving muscular effort; there was some amount of contortion of the face and sometimes a slight tearing of the hair; and the same actions accompanied the return of consciousness. Now the trance seems nothing more than an exceptionally heavy sleep, entered into without effort—a sleep with the superficial appearance of that induced by chloroform; and the return to consciousness, though slow and for a time accompanied by confusion, is easy and natural. . . . For half an hour or so after the trance had disappeared the medium continues slightly dazed and only partly herself. . . . A record was also made of the remarks of Mrs. Piper during the period of awaking from trance. . . . part of them nearly always consisted of expressions of admiration for the state of experience she was leaving, and of repulsion—almost disgust—at the commonplace terrestrial surroundings in which she found herself. Even a bright day was described as dingy or dark, and the sitter was stared at in an unrecognising way, and described as a full and ugly person. . . ."

Piper's trances seemed to have three distinct stages—subliminal 1, in which the medium was partly conscious of her surroundings but saw things distorted and grotesque; subliminal 2, in which she was possessed by spirits and lost contact with the material world; and subliminal 3, a deep trance in which the loss of consciousness was complete, the body became anaesthetic, and automatic writing began.

William James found Piper's lips and tongue insensible to pain while she was in trance. Richard Hodgson later confirmed this by placing a spoonful of salt in Piper's mouth. He also applied strong ammonia to her nostrils.

James also led what became a series of more intrusive experiments, once making a small incision in Piper's left wrist. During trance the wound did not bleed and no notice was taken of the action. It bled freely afterward and the medium bore the scar for life. In England, Lodge pushed a needle into her hand. At another time, Charles Richet inserted a feather into her nostril. Harsh experiments in 1909 resulted in a badly blistered and swollen tongue that caused the medium inconvenience for several days, while another test resulted in numbness and partial paralysis of her right arm for some time afterward. Although these scientific experiments were of great importance, it is obvious that the experimenters overstepped the mark in causing inconvenience and pain to the medium.

The trance of the medium Eusapia Palladino was described by Italian researcher Cesare Lombroso:

"At the beginning of the trance her voice is hoarse and all the secretions—sweat, tears, even the menstrual secretions are increased. Hyperaesthesia . . . is succeeded by anaesthesia. . . . Reflex movement of the pupils and tendons are lacking. . . . Respiratory movements . . . passing from 18 inspirations to 15 and 12 a minute . . . heartbeats increase from 70 to 90 and even 120. The hands are seized with jerkings and tremors. The joints of the feet and the hands take on movements of flexure or extension, and every little while become rigid.

"The passing from this state to that of active somnambulism is marked by yawns, sobs, perspirations on the forehead, passing of insensible perspiration through the skin of the hands, and strange physiognomic expressions. Now she seems a prey to a kind of anger, expressed by imperious commands and sarcastic and critical phrases, and now to a state of voluptuous erotic ecstasy. In the state of trance she first becomes pale, turning her eyes upward and her sight inward. . . . exhibiting many of the gestures that are frequent in hysterical fits. . . . Toward the end of the trance when the more important phenomena occur, she falls into true convulsions and cries like a woman who is lying-in, or else falls into a profound sleep while from the aperture in the parietal bone in her head there exhales a warm fluid or vapour, sensible to the touch.

"After the séance Eusapia is overcome by morbid sensitiveness, hyperesthesia, photophobia and often by hallucinations and delirium (during which she asks to be watched from harm) and by serious disturbances of the digestion, followed by vomiting if she has eaten before the séance, and finally by true paresis of the legs, on account of which it is necessary for her to be carried and to be undressed by others.

"These disturbances are much aggravated. . . . if she is exposed to unexpected light."

"My eyes ache a good deal after a séance," said Annie Fairlamb, "and generally my lower limbs are thin, sometimes very thin, and usually I feel pain in the left side."

Pioneering researcher F. W. H. Myers distinguished between three successive stages in trance. In the first stage the subliminal (subconscious) self obtains control. In the next stage the incarnate spirit, whether or not maintaining control of the whole body, makes excursions into or holds telepathic intercourse with the spiritual world. In the third stage, the body of the medium is controlled by another discarnate spirit.

The first stage is well illustrated by the case of Alabama minister C. B. Sanders, whose trance personality always called itself by the name of "X Y Z," and claimed to represent the incarnate spirit of Rev. Sanders exercising his higher faculties. He spoke of Sanders in his normal state of consciousness as his "casket," but showed no evidence of direct communication with discarnate spirits.

The nineteenth-century histologist Gaëtano Salvioli, investigating hypnosis, noticed for the first time that in trance the flow of blood to the brain is greater than in waking hours, which might account for the greater psychical activity and an increase in muscular excitability.

Theodore Flournoy frequently found complete allochiria, a confusion between the right and left side, with the medium Hélène Smith. In trance she would consistently look for her pocket on the left side instead of on the right. If one of her fingers was pricked or pinched behind a screen, it was the corresponding finger on the other hand that was agitated. Allochiria is one of the stigmata of hysteria.

Lombroso also called attention to the fact that Eusapia Palladino, who was usually left-handed in sittings, became right-handed in one séance and fellow researcher Enrico Morselli became left-handed. This observation served as confirmation of one doctor's hypothesis of transitory left-handedness in the abnormal state, and the transference to the sitters of the anomalies of the medium. The left-handedness seemed to indicate the increased participation of the right lobe of the brain in mediumistic states.

Morselli measured Palladino's left-handedness in dynamometric figures. He found, after a séance, a diminution of 6 kilograms for the right and 14 for the left hand. The spirits around Leonore Piper always communicated on the left side. The trance, as a rule, began with hissing intakes of breath and ended with deep expirations.

There is a suggestion in this of pranayama, the yoga system of breathing. "Like the fakirs," wrote Morselli, "when they wish to enter into trance, Eusapia begins to slacken her rate of breathing." The seer Emanuel Swedenborg believed that his powers were connected with a system of respiration. He said that in communing with the spirits he hardly breathed for half an hour at a time.

The poet Gerald Massey, who published an alternative history of humankind, wrote of his own mystical vision: "You know Swedenborg and Blake claimed a kind of inner breathing. I know that is possible. I have got at times to where I find there needs to be no further need for expiring, it is all inspiration, I consider that consciously or unconsciously we all draw life from the spirit world, just as we shall when we pass into it."

"I have tried to simulate the deep and rapid breathing of Rudi in the trance state," writes psychical researcher Harry Price in his book Rudi Schneider (1930). He says: "This breathing has been likened to a steam engine, a tyre being pumped up, etc. Taking off my collar and tie and with my watch in my hand, I found that in six and a quarter minutes I was exhausted and could not continue. I have known Rudi to continue this hard breathing, interspersed with spasms and the usual clonic movements, for seventy-five minutes without cessation. And this while being held and in a most uncomfortable position, while, of course, I was quite free."

Trances did not always come at will and occasionally appeared when not desired. In Cambridge, England, at the request of F. W. H. Myers, Piper looked into a crystal before going to bed. She saw nothing but looked exhausted the next morning and said that she thought that she had been entranced during the night. The next time when she went into a trance, her spirit control "Phinuit" said that he came and called but no one answered. Piper's trances generally lasted about an hour. On one occasion, in Sir Oliver Lodge's experience, it lasted only for a minute.

The trance, as a rule, is continuous. In the mediumship of Mrs. J. H. Conant, much discomfort was caused at an earlier stage by the medium's return to consciousness as soon as the control had left. She had to be entranced again for the next communicator. Each change took about ten minutes. In the case of Rudi Schneider, the trance was similarly intermittent but the same entity, "Olga," remained in control.

To be roused from trance by a materialized spirit is exceptional. The spirit form "Katie King" was said to have roused the medium Florence Cook when the time of her farewell arrived and a tearful scene was witnessed between the two. The novelist Florence Marryat, who was present at this séance, describes a similar experience with the medium Mary Showers in her book There is No Death (1891): "The spirit ['Peter'] proceeded to rouse Rosie by shaking her and calling her name, holding me by one hand as he did so. As Miss Showers yawned and woke up from her trance, the hand slipped from mine, and 'Peter' evaporated. When she sat up I said to her gently: 'I am here! Peter had brought me in and was sitting on the mattress by my side till just this moment.' 'Ha, ha!' laughed his voice close to my ear, 'and I'm still here, my dears, though you can't see me.'"

The medium F. W. Monck was once apparently awakened by the common consent of the materialized spirit and the sitters. However, controversy surrounds the mediumship of Florence Cook, Mary Showers, and Monck, and these unusual occurrences seem to be but further confirmation of the fraud engaged in by the three mediums.

Usually the medium has no remembrance of what has passed in the trance. To all intents and purposes he or she is an entirely distinct being while in that state, with physiological functions totally different from the normal ones. Florence Marryat wrote that the medium Bessie Williams ate like a sparrow, and only the simplest things. "Dewdrop" (her guide), on the other hand, liked indigestible food and devoured it freely, yet the medium never felt any inconvenience from it.

About 1846 the limbs of Mary Jane, servant girl of a Dr. Larkin of Wrentham, Massachusetts, were, under the spirit influence of a rough sailor, thrown out of joint in several directions in a moment and without pain. Larkin was often obliged to call in the aid of his fellow doctors and two or three strong assistants to replace them. On one occasion the girl's knees and wrists were thrown out of joint twice in a single day. These painful feats were always accompanied by loud laughter and hoarse, profane jokes.

On the testimony of S. W. Turner of Cleveland, Ohio, in December 1847, the Spiritual Telegraph reported the peculiar adventure of a medium called William Hume. In a trance state and under the control of "Capt. Kidd," Hume threw himself into the lake to recover a ring and was brought out of the water, still in trance, after swimming for 15 to 20 minutes, without injury to his health.

Trance in Animal Magnetism and Hypnotism

The first surgery on a subject in mesmeric trance was performed in France in April 1829, by M. Cloquet on a Mme. Plantin, a 64-year-old woman who suffered from an ulcerated cancer in the right breast. The operation lasted 10–12 minutes. The patient's pulse and breathing remained unchanged. She was not awakened until two days later. The case was reported to the Section of Surgery of the Academy. In 1836 a Dr. Hamard invited a member of the academy, M. Oudet, to extract a tooth from a somnambulic patient. The operation was a success.

In England the first operation in mesmeric trance took place in 1842, in Nottinghamshire, on James Wombell, whose leg was amputated above the knee. W. Topham, a London barrister, was the mesmerist, and the operation was performed by Squire Ward, M.R.C.S. James Esdaile records a number of similar incidents in his book, Mesmerism in India (1846).

There is one instance on record in the mediumship of F. L. H. Willis, who later acquired a medical degree and became professor of materia medica in New York, when not the patient, but the operator was in trance. Controlled by the spirit of "Dr. Mason," Willis successfully performed a difficult operation.

Apart from Swedenborg, the first modern conversation with spirits of the departed through the use of trance was recorded in May 1778 by the Societé Exegetique Philantropique of Stockholm. A 40-year-old woman was controlled in trance by her own infant daughter and another young child of the town, who gave accounts of both their Earth lives and their existence in the spirit world.

The somnambulic state in mesmerism was the discovery of the Marquis Chastenet de Puységur. Franz Anton Mesmer himself was aware of something unknown in the "magnetic sleep" and warned against deepening it. The use of animal magnetism was primarily for healing power, and the possibility of intercourse with spirits was largely avoided. It cropped up as early as 1878 in Tardy de Montravel's writings, but he opposed it. Kaleph Ben-Nathan admitted the possibility in 1793 but contended that spirits with which a somnambule might hold intercourse would be spirits of an inferior order and that magnetists practiced sorcery and divination.

Dr. Alexandre Bertrand recorded the exclamation of his young somnambule: "There are no spirits, they are stories, yet I see them, the proof is perfect." J. P. F. Deleuze conceded in 1818 that the phenomena of clairvoyance established the spirituality of the soul, but he did not consider spirit intercourse proven by the phenomena of somnambulic trance. In later years, however, under the effect of Dr. G. P. Billot's experiments, he appeared to have changed his belief. Billot's somnambules were mediums in the present-day sense. The spirits who possessed them proclaimed themselves to be their guardian angels and on occasion produced physical phenomena.

Louis-Alphonse Cahagnet recorded fully developed trance communications through the early medium Adèle Maginot. Before Cahagnet's appearance, an official acknowledgment of trance took place in 1831 when an investigating commission of the Royal Academy of Medicine reported on the phenomena of animal magnetism and found it genuine and the state of somnambulism, although rare, well authenticated.

In Germany the theory of spiritual intercourse in trance took a quicker hold on the imagination of mesmerists. Jung-Stilling (J. H. Jung) founded the school with the theory of the psychic body and its elements, based on the luminiferous ether. Auguste Müller, of Carlsruhe, appears to have been the first somnambule whose spirit communications and other phenomena were carefully recorded; Fräulein Römer, the second. Müller was the first interplanetary traveler, making claimed clairvoyant excursions to the moon. The most stirring account of intercourse with the spirit world was the story of the Seeress of Prevorst, Frederica Hauffe, published in 1826 by Dr. Justinus Kerner.

Sources:

Cahagnet, L. A. The Celestial Telegraph; or, Secrets of the Life to Come Revealed Through Magnetism. 2 vols. London & New York, 1851. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1976.

Dingwall, E. J. Abnormal Hypnotic Phenomena. 4 vols. London: Churchill, 1967–68.

Esdaile, James. Natural and Mesmeric Clairvoyance; With the Practical Application of Mesmerism in Surgery and Medicine. London, 1852. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1975.

Fahnestock, W. B. Statuvolism, or Artificial Somnambulism. Chicago, 1871.

Flournoy, Theodore. From India to the Planet Mars. New York: Harper & Bros., 1900.

Garrett, Eileen J. My Life as a Search for the Meaning of Mediumship. New York: Oquaga; London: Rider, 1939. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1975.

Goodman, Felicitas D., Jeanette H. Henney, and Esther Pressel. Trance, Healing and Hallucination: Three Field Studies in Religious Experience. Wiley-Interscience, 1974.

Gopi Krishna. The Biological Basis of Religion and Genius. New York: Harper & Row, 1972.

Inglis, Brian. Trance: A Natural History of Altered States of Mind. London: Grafton, 1989.

Kerner, Justinus. The Seeress of Prevorst. London, 1845.

Laski, Marghanita. Ecstasy. London: Cresset, 1961.

Salter, W. H. Trance Mediumship: An Introductory Study of Mrs. Piper and Mrs. Leonard. London: Society for Psychical Research, 1962.

Spiegel, H., and D. Spiegal. Trance and Treatment: Clinical Users of Hypnosis. New York: Basis Books, 1978.

Sunderland, La Roy. The Trance, and How Introduced. Boston, 1860.

Wavell, Stewart, Audrey Butt, and Nina Epton. Trances. London: Allen & Unwin, 1966.

Trance Personalities

Trance messages claiming to come from the medium's spirit control do not always reveal a definite personality. The control often reflects the thoughts and opinions of the medium and the sitters, possesses little knowledge that they do not possess, and is an artificial personality. Yet, frequently a trance medium is controlled by a spirit of distinct or distinguished personality, whose education level appears to be more extensive and culture of a much different quality than the medium's and whose ideas and opinions appear independent.

Such spirits are generally given distinguishing names. They may control the medium alternately with other controls. On the other hand, the medium has generally a monopoly of one or more of these spirits, though sometimes one control may seemingly appear to be shared by several mediums.

Among those who may justly be regarded as the common property of dubious mediums are the spirits of certain great men—Virgil, Socrates, Shakespeare, Milton, Benjamin Franklin, Victor Hugo, Swëdenborg, and so on. The messages delivered through their control seldom resemble anything they wrote or said during their lives.

Not all the mediums involved in such counterfeit personalities are frauds; some are self-deluded. Others exhibit the faculty of the subconscious mind to weave fantasies like the characters and incidents of a novelist. Similar artificial personalities sometimes manifest in the claimed reincarnation experiences of subjects in hypnotic regression as in the famous "Bridey Murphy" case (see Morey Bernstein).

Some trance personalities assume pseudonyms, suggesting the possibility that the personality of everyday life, which is modified from year to year, may suffer radical change after death, losing the distinctive nature that the physical body, memories, and emotions normally reinforce.

Some of the most well-known pseudonymous trance personalities were those of the Rev. William Stainton Moses—"Imperator," "Rector," "Mentor," "Prudens," and others. "Imperator" and "Rector" were also among the controls of the medium Leonora E. Piper in subsequent years and indeed much of her automatic discourse did not come directly from communicating spirits, but was dictated by them to "Rector." It was suggested, however, by Sir Oliver Lodge and other investigators, that Piper's controls were not identical with those of Stainton Moses but were merely masqueraders.

Piper had, however, several interesting trance personalities of her own without borrowing from anybody. One of her earliest controls was "Sebastian Bach;" but before long he gave place to a spirit calling himself "Dr. Phinuit," who was an influence for a considerable time, then succumbing in his turn to George Pelham ("G. P."). Pelham was a young author and journalist who died suddenly in 1892. Soon after his death he supposedly controlled Piper, and indeed gave many striking proofs of his identity. He constantly mentioned intimate details of the affairs of Pelham, recognized his friends, and gave to each their due welcome. He never failed to recognize an acquaintance, or give a greeting to one whom he did not know. Many of Pelham's old friends did not hesitate to recognize in him that which he claimed to be.

Only on one occasion, when asked for the names of two persons who had been associated with him in a certain enterprise, the spirit "G. P." refused, saying that as there was present one who knew the names, his mentioning them would be referred to as telepathy. Later, he gave the names—incorrectly. When "G. P." ceased to communicate as the principal control of Piper, his place was taken by "Rector" and "Imperator," as mentioned above.

Another well-known trance medium, Rosina Thompson, had as her chief control "Nelly" (a daughter of hers who had died in infancy), a "Mrs. Cartwright," and others. Thompson's controls were said not to have shown any individual characteristics, but to resemble Thompson herself strongly both in voice and manner of speech, although Margaret Verrall, one of the sitters, stated that the impersonations gave an impression of separate identity to the sitter. Thompson's early trance utterances were controlled by another band of spirits, with even less individuality than those mentioned.

Frequently mediums and investigators themselves, when reaching the discarnate plane, seem to become controls in their turn. The psychical researchers F. W. H. Myers, Edmund Gurney, Richard Hodgson, and Henry Sidgwick claimed to speak and write posthumously through many mediums, notably through Piper, Thompson, Verrall, and Alice K. Fleming (i.e., Mrs. Holland). Many of the statements made by these controls were correct; some matters revealed were apparently outside the scope of the medium's normal knowledge. At the same time several fatal discrepancies were found to exist between the controls and those they were supposed to represent.

Thus the script produced by Fleming contained grave warnings, claiming to come from Myers, against the medium Eusapia Palladino and her physical phenomena, whereas Myers was known to hold opinions favorable to the physical manifestations.

On the whole, such trance personalities show themselves influenced by the personality of the medium. In cases where the latter was acquainted with the control, the trance personality was proportionately strong. When there was no personal acquaintance, it was often of a neutral tint, and sometimes bad guesses were made, as when Fleming represented the Gurney control as of a harsh and almost discourteous temperament.

But such instances must not be taken as impeaching the medium's good faith. Instances in which the trance personality is patently the product of the medium's own consciousness do not in themselves suggest that there is any intentional deception. In some of the most definite cases, there is evidence suggesting the operation of a discarnate intelligence, evidence that has proved convincing to careful investigators.

Among the most important pieces of evidence in evaluating the separate existence of trance personalities as spirit entities is the case of "Philip." In 1972–73, members of the Toronto Society for Psychical Research, Canada, deliberately created an artificial séance entity named "Philip," with a history, personal characteristics, and an appearance decided upon by the group in a quite mundane manner. Sitting as in a séance, the experimenters soon obtained raps from the séance table and communications from "Philip." It seems that in many instances, a spirit control may simply be a convention of personality. In other cases, however, convincing evidence of true personality survival has been established.

Sources:

Broad, C. D. Personal Identity and Survival. London: Society for Psychical Research, 1968.

Carington, Whately. The Foundations of Spiritualism. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1920.

Ducasse, C. J. A Critical Examination of the Belief in a Life After Death. Springfield, Ill.: C. C. Thomas, 1961.

Garrett, Eileen J. My Life as a Search for the Meaning of Mediumship. New York: Oquaga; London: Rider & Co., 1939.

Hart, Hornell. The Enigma of Survival: The Case For and Against an After Life. Springfield, Ill.: C. C. Thomas, 1959.

M. A. (Oxon) [W. Stainton Moses]. Spirit Identity. London, 1879.

Myers, F. W. H. Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death. 2 vols. London: Longmans, Green, 1903.

Owen, Iris M., and Margaret Sparrow. Conjuring Up Philip. New York: Harper & Row, 1976.

Penelhum, Terence. Survival and Disembodied Existence. New York, Humanities Press, 1970.

Richmond, Kenneth. Evidence of Identity. London: G. Bell, 1939.

Salter, W. H. Trance Mediumship: An Introductory Study of Mrs. Piper and Mrs. Leonard. London: Society for Psychical Research, 1962.

Transcendental Meditation (TM)

A popular Hindu meditation technique first taught in the West by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, an Allahabad University physics graduate who, in the 1940s and 1950s studied among monks in the Himalayas. Emerging with his teachings in 1958, the Maharishi's transcendental meditation spread across the United States and Europe by the mid-1960s. Due largely to the endorsements of celebrities such as the Beatles, Jane Fonda, and Mia Farrow, TM became one of the first forms of Eastern meditative practices to receive widespread media attention in the West. Essentially, TM is a streamlined form of the ancient Hindu initiation of bestowing a mantra, or sacred Sanskrit word or phrase, for the pupil to meditate upon for a short period each day.

A number of personal and social benefits have been claimed as a result of meditating. In fact, the movement has cited 508 individual scientific studies conducted since the 1970s, measuring psychological and physiological differences between meditators and non-meditators. The reports laud the physical and mental benefits of transcendental meditation, citing increased creativity, broader comprehension, improved perception, lowered blood pressure, reduced anxiety, and decreased medical visits among the meditators.

In 1977, studies such as those conducted by Fales and Markovsky at the University of Iowa question the validity of claims made by TM studies. Particularly, the analysis examines the phenomenon known as the Maharishi Effect, which asserts the effect advanced TM meditators can exercise over the social serenity of local communities. The scientific work on TM has been criticized within the academic community for methodological flaws, vague definitions, and loose statistical controls. It has been argued that the effects attributed to TM are the same effects produced by any number of yogic and meditative techniques; this places TM in the context of goals and results of traditional meditation.

The TM movement has also been criticized for lifting the time-honored Hindu practice from its religious context, mass producing it as a contemplative quick-fix for western consumers. Critics have argued that TM is disjointed from the Hindu mysticism from which it emerged, as well as from the other great world religions that have emphasized the need for patient and continuing self-purification through spiritual disciplines in order to give integrity to spiritual growth or eventual transcendental consciousness.

Traditional Hindu mysticism regards meditation as a later stage in the program of continuing spiritual discipline, and passive meditation is considered secondary to active meditation in quality and results. Moreover mantra-diksha, or initiation, is not normally given until the aspirant has proven his or her fitness to engage in meditation. Hinduism also reserves its highest transcendental experiences for those who have properly fulfilled their social and religious obligations.

Criticisms aside, the five million TM participants (as asserted by the program) seem to attest to the everyday value of TM as a simple, natural means of relaxation and a feeling of well-being. The method has received worldwide endorsement at every level of society, including support from politicians, scientists, doctors, and members of the general public. Many have brought TM to the pragmatic world of business, asserting its positive affects on productivity, job satisfaction, and employee health in the workplace.

Sources:

Akins, W. R., and George Nurnberg. How to Meditate Without Attending a TM Class. New York: Crown, 1976.

Bloomfield, Harold M., Michael Peter Cain, and Dennis T. Jaffe. TM: Discovering Inner Energy and Overcoming Stress. New York: Delacorte Press, 1975.

Chopra, Deepak, M.D. Creating Health. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co., 1987.

Fales, Evan and Markovsky, Barry. "Evaluating Heterodox Theories." University of Iowa 1997. http://www.trancenet.org/. March 28, 2000.

Forem, Jack. Transcendental Meditation. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1974.

Hemingway, Patricia D. Transcendental Meditation Primer. Philadelphia: McKay, 1975.

Kory, Robert B. The Transcendental Medication Program for Business People. New York: American Management Association, 1976.

Maharishi Mahesh Yogi. Meditations of Maharishi Mahesh Yogi. New York: Bantam, 1973.

Orme-Johnson, David W., and John T. Farrows, eds. Scientific Research on the Transcendental Meditation Program. Collected Papers 1. Seelisberg, Switzerland: Maharishi European Research University Press, 1977.

Kanellakos, Demetri P., and Jerome S. Lukas. Psychobiology of Transcendental Meditation: A Literature Review. W. A. Benjamin, 1974.

Scott, R. D. Transcendental Misconceptions. San Diego: Beta Books, 1978.

The Transcendental Meditation Program. http://www.tm.org/. March 28, 2000.

Transfiguration

The metamorphic power ascribed to certain mediums to assume facial or bodily characteristics of deceased people for their representation. The phenomenon was described in detail in the account of William J. Erwood in The National Spiritualist, at a séance in 1931 with a Mrs. Bullock, a Chicago medium. In the light, which showed every movement of the medium, he claimed to have seen more than fifty faces in an hour and a half.

He writes:

"It was as though the medium's face were of plastic material being rapidly molded from one form to another by some master worker in plastics. Oriental faces, Indians, calm, dignified, serious, spiritual, in short, almost every type of face was depicted during the most unusual séance. One of the most striking was the impersonation of a paralysed girl whom I had known in the States. The medium's entire body, as well as face, was twisted out of all semblance of its normal state, to depict the condition of this victim of paralysis."

H. Dennis Bradley, in his book The Wisdom of the Gods (1925), described an experience with the medium Mrs. Scales:

"Gradually the whole of the expression of the medium's face changed completely. It was a transformation. Whilst the outline remained, the eyes and the expression became beautiful . . . At first is was only with very great difficulty that the first few words were articulated. It was as if they were produced with considerable effort. Within a little while, however, the power strengthened considerably, and the spirit of my sister was able to assume complete control. It was my sister. It was her spirit, using the organism of another physical body, and speaking to me in her own voice."

Joseph Maxwell vouched for the following case of transfiguration in sleep, narrated by one of his colleagues in the magistracy:

"On January 1, 1903, my father began to feel the first attacks of the painful disease from which he died after six months of terrible suffering . . . I watched him as he slept, and was not long in noticing that his physiognomy gradually assumed an aspect which was not his own. I finally observed that his face bore a striking resemblance to that of my mother. It was as though the mask of her face was placed over his own. My father had no eyebrows for a long time, and I noticed above his closed eyes the very marked black eyebrows which my mother had retained to the last. The eyelids, the nose, the mouth, were those of my mother. . . . My father wore his moustache and a pointed, but rather short beard. This beard and moustache, which I saw, helped, contrary to what might have been expected, in forming the features of my mother. The appearance lasted for ten or twelve minutes; then it gradually disappeared, and my father resumed his habitual physiognomy. Five minutes later he awoke, and I immediately asked him if he had not been dreaming, especially about his wife. He answered in the negative."

The phenomenon was witnessed by a woman servant who came into the room while it lasted. She was told: "Jeanne, look at Monsieur sleeping!" She cried out, "Oh, how he resembles poor Madame. It is striking, it is quite extraordinary!"

In the experiences of Allan Kardec, founder of French Spiritism, there was an extraordinary case of a young girl of fifteen whose metamorphic power extended to the duplication of the stature, mass, and weight of deceased persons, especially of her brother. Kardec recorded that another metamorphic meduim, a Ms. Krooke, saw one evening her own face changed. She observed a thick black beard and by it her son-in-law recognized his dead father. A little later, her face changed into that of an old woman with white hair. She preserved her consciousness in the meantime, yet felt through her entire body a prickling like that of a galvanic battery. No such miracles are recorded in modern experience.

Transfiguration is most often reported as occurring in séances in conjunction with materializations. It involves grave risks for the medium, but no records of any harm have been reported. There is an observation based on several accounts including an experiment at the British College of Psychic Science, a Spiritualist organization, with the medium Ada Besinnet in 1921. A light was flashed on a face that was illuminated by a spirit lamp. The medium was leaning over the table and illuminated her own face with light held in her hand. The light quickly vanished, as did the white drapery which draped over her head. When awakened, she was in trance and complained of great pain in the pit of her stomach; for three days she was shaken with muscular contractions.

There are some past experiences on record of the disappearance of the medium during materialization. In such cases, Spiritualist argue, the entire bodily substance of the medium is believed to have been withdrawn for the purpose of building up phantom bodies. Such occurrences are also known as transfigurations. More rational approaches to the séance have ascribed more mundane causes to such occurrences.

Henry S. Olcott and John Newbrough experienced transfigurations with the medium Elizabeth J. Compton. While phantoms were parading in front of the sitters before the cabinet, she vanished from the chair into which she was tied in such a way that the least effort to face herself would have given her away. Not only had her body vanished, but the fastenings, threads, wax-ends, seals, and nails as well. Yet something must have been left in the chair, for Olcott was strictly forbidden to touch the chair when he was allowed to go into the cabinet.

Where was the medium? According to Olcott and Newbrough, she was transfigured into the phantom bodies. Many of the phantoms were recognized as departed relatives and divulged intimate knowledge of the lives of their relations. If they were seized, and they were sometimes, they resolved into Compton and always rendered her ill.

In 1890 Alexander N. Aksakof had a similar experience with the medium Elizabeth d'Esperance, at a séance in Gothenburg. While the phantom "Yolande" was outside the cabinet, he slipped his arm through the curtains and felt for the medium's chair. He found it empty; at the same time his hand was flung aside. At the very moment "Yolande" returned into the cabinet, the séance came to an abrupt end and the medium was discovered on her chair in her red dress ("Yolande" was in white).

Through automatic writing, Aksakof, who did not tell of his part in the sudden disturbance, was told by "Walter," d'Esperance's control, that if the contribution of the circle was insufficient there might not be enough left of the medium to be visible; the clairvoyant may still see the body, but in reality there might not be much more in her place than her organs of sense. In such cases, a simple touch may do the medium serious injury.

When Aksakof asked what would happen if in such a case he should pull the band of cloth which encircled the medium's waist, whether it would not cut her body in two, the answer was yes. D'Esperance summed up her only sensations in this sentence: "I felt as I were empty inside."

The existence of transfigurations is questionable at best, and like many of the physical phenomena with which it was associated, reports of its occurrence have become quite rare. Most psychical researchers regard it with skepticism, suggesting that its primary occurrences in séances were fraudulently produced. Reported cases have been rare and it is unsatisfactory to attempt to assess them long after the event.

Sources:

Aksakof, Alexander. A Case of Partial Dematerialization of the Body of a Medium. Boston, 1898.

Holms, A. Campbell. The Facts of Psychic Science. 1925. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1969.

Transition

Spiritualist term for death, used to emphasize survival of personality after death. Another term sometimes used is "promotion."

Transmutation of the Body

The aim of spiritual alchemy—to restore a human being to the fundemental condition of grace, strength, perfection, beauty, and physical immortality. Dedicated alchemists over the ages labored to discover the secret of the elixir of life, which occultists believed would achieve this renewal of youth, and grant immortality. Endless recipes for this medicine have been given, and some alchemists honestly believed they had attained it, but it still has not been proven.

Sources:

Atwood, Mary Anne. Suggestive Inquiry Into the Hermetic Mystery. London, 1850. Reprint, Belfast, Ireland, 1918. Reprint, New York: Julian Press, 1960.

Redgrove, H. Stanley. Alchemy: Ancient and Modern. London, 1911. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1969.

Transportation

Alternative term for the claimed phenomenon of teleportation, the paranormal movement of human bodies through closed doors and over a distance.

Transposition of the Senses

An extraordinary phenomenon, first reported by Tardy de Montravel. In his Essai sur la Theorie du Somnambulisme Magnetique (1785), he described how in his half-waking trance he could see with the "pit of his stomach." In 1808, Dr. Pététin reported in his book, Electricité Animale (1808), that he found the senses of taste, smell, and hearing also wandering from the pit of the stomach to the tip of the fingers and of the toes. Since then many similar cases have been recorded, especially with hysterical subjects.

Cesare Lombroso carefully observed the phenomenon of eyeless sight. C. S. was a young girl who lost the power of vision, but as a compensation she "saw" with the same degree of acuteness at the point of the nose and the left lobe of the ear. Her sense of smell was transposed under the chin and later to the back of the foot. (See also Stomach, Seeing with the)

Transvection

Term used to indicate the claim of witches flying through the air on a broomstick, but also on a distaff, a shovel, or an animal. The term was originally used in a religious sense for the transportation of saints, such as St. Joseph of Copertinn. There were some seventy aerial flights claimed, but from the sixteenth century onward the flight of witches was also described as transvection.

The flight of witches was achieved with a magical flying ointment. However, if the witches heard the sound of church bells while flying to the Sabbat, they might be grounded. It is likely that the special ointments used to assist transvection may have had a hallucinatory effect, giving the illusion of traveling through the air. Such ointments could have produced experiences akin to astral projection or out-of-the-body travel.

Transylvanian Society of Dracula

The Transylvanian Society of Dracula emerged at the end of the 1990s as the largest vampire-interest organization in the world. It was founded in the early 1990s by a group of writers, Romanian scholars, tourist experts, and others interested in Dracula and vampire folklore in Romania and initially announced its existence through the sponsorship of the World Dracula Congress in 1995. Taking the lead was Nicolae Paduraru, formerly with the Romanian Ministry of Tourism. During that conference both an American and a Canadian chapter were established by J. Gordon Melton and Elizabeth Miller respectively, and a short time later an Italian chapter was founded by Massimo Introvigne. Each is a scholar in vampire studies and the author of multiple titles in the field.

The Canadian and American chapters joined with the Count Dracula Fan Club to sponsor Dracula 97, the centennial celebration of the publication of the novel Dracula, that brought some 100 scholars and more than 600 participants to Los Angeles, California, August 14–17, 1997. For three years, the two chapters cosponsored The Transylvanian Journal (1996–98). Currently, the Canadian chapter issues a newsletter,

The Borgo Post, and an annual Journal of Dracula Studies. It has an extensive Internet site at http://www.ucs.mun.ca/~emiller/. The American chapter has issued a set of monographs including a detailed bibliography of the English-language editions of Dracula. The Italian chapter has an Internet site (in Italian) at http://www.cesnur.org/dracula.htm.

The Romanian chapter sponsors an annual symposium in the Borgo Pass in May of each year. The original novel Dracula opens in May as Jonathan Harker travels to Borgo Pass to meet the Count. In May 2000, the society is sponsoring a much larger event, Dracula 2000, which will include a number of international scholars in Dracula and vampire studies.

The international headquarters of the Transylvanian Society of Dracula is at 47 Primaverii Blvd., Bucharest 1, Romania. The Canadian chapter is at P.O. Box 23240, Churchill P.O., St. John's, NF, Canada A1B 4J9; the American chapter at P.O. Box 91611, Santa Barbara, CA 93190-1611; and the Italian chapter at Via Bertola 86, 10122 Torino, Italy.

Sources:

Introvigne, Massimo. La stripe de Dracula: Indagine sul vampirismpo dall'antichita ai nostro giorni. Milan: Arnoldo Mondadari Editore, 1997.

Melton, J. Gordon. The Vampire Book: The Encyclopedia of the Undead. 2nd ed. Detroit: Visible Ink Press, 1999.

———. The Vampire Gallery. Detroit: Visible Ink Press, 1998.

———. VideoHound's Vampires on Video. Detroit: Visible Ink Press, 1996.

Miller, Elizabeth. Dracula: Sense and Nonsense. Westcliff-on-Sea, UK: Desert Island Books, 1998.

———. Dracula: The Shade and the Shadow. Westcliff-on-Sea, UK: Desert Island Books, 1998.

———. Reflection on Dracula: Ten Essays. White Rock, B.C.: Transylvanian Press, 1997.

TREAT See Treatment and Research of Experienced Anomalous Trauma

Treatment and Research of Experienced Anomalous Trauma (TREAT)

A center focusing on UFO (unidentified flying object) abduction phenomena, TREAT was founded in 1989 by psychiatrist Rima E. Laibow. It held its first conference May 12–14, 1989, at Fairfield University in Connecticut. Laibow has suggested that such "abductions," which she considers "experienced anomalous trauma," are the result of an unknown factor, possibly one outside the realm of conventional psychological explanation. However, even though the cause remains unknown, it is possible to treat the effects (symptoms) which are themselves well known.

Although Laibow initially maintained a friendly relationship with ufologists, for whom abduction phenomena had emerged as a major issue of research, tension soon developed. Laibow broke with leading abduction spokespersons Budd Hopkins and David M. Jacobs and removed them from participation in TREAT. She also disagreed with other ufologists by asserting the dominant role of mental health professionals, as opposed to a cooperative (essentially equal) role between psychologists and ufologists.

In spite of the problems, TREAT has continued to function. It holds annual meetings in the United States, paralleled by a series of regional meetings in Europe and Russia. Such meetings between professionals and interested parties are intended to create a nexus of collaborators and colleagues worldwide to further research and investigate UFO and parapsychological phenomena. Address: 13 Summit Terr., Dobbs Ferry, NY 10522.

Sources:

Clark, Jerome. UFOs in the 1980s: The UFO Encyclopedia, Volume I. Detroit: Apogee Books, 1990.

Laibow, Rima E. "Dual Victims: The Abused and the Abducted." International UFO Reporter 14, 3 (May/June 1989): 4–9.

Tree Ghosts

Tree spirits of the Indian subcontinent were among the many mythological spirit entities described by William Crooke in his book Religion and Folklore of Northern India (1926).

"These tree ghosts are, it is needless to say, very numerous. Hence most local shrines are constructed under trees; and in one particular tree, the Bira, the jungle tribes of Mirzapur locate Bagheswar, the tiger godling, one of their most dreaded deities. In the Konkan, according to Mr. Campbell, the medium or Bhagat who becomes possessed is called Jhad, or 'tree,' apparently because he is a favourite dwelling-place for spirits.

"In the Dakkhin it is believed that the spirit of the pregnant woman of Churel lives in a tree, and the Abors and Padams of East Bengal believe that spirits in trees kidnap children. Many of these tree spirits appear in the folk-tales. Thus, Devadatta worshipped a tree which one day suddenly split in two and a nymph appeared who invited him to go inside the tree. In there was a heavenly palace of jewels and Vidyatprabha, the maiden daughter of the king of the Yakshas [supernatural beings]; in another story the mendicant heard inside a tree the Yaksha joking with his wife."

Sources:

Crooke, William. Religion and Folklore of Northern India. Humphrey, Milford: Oxford University Press, 1926.

The Tree of Life, and The Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil

Two of the trees said to have been planted by God in the Garden of Eden (Gen. 2:17; 3:24). They were believed by St. Ambrose to be of mystical significance. The former is understood to be the manifestation of God, and the latter of the worldly wisdom to which our human nature is too apt to incline.

Tremblers of the Cevennes

A Protestant caste of convulsionaries, who during the sixteenth century grew in numbers from their center in the Cevennes (south of Lyon, France), over almost the whole of Germany. They possessed many points of resemblance with cases of obsession and possession, and are said to have been insensible to thrusts and blows with pointed sticks and iron bars, as well as to the oppression of great weights. They had visions, communicated with good and evil spirits, and are said to have performed many miraculous cures similar to the apostolic miracles. They made use of modes of treatment called grandes secours or secours meurtriers, which were authenticated by the reports of eyewitnesses and by judicial documents.

Although they were belabored by the strongest men with heavy pieces of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boards, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a twenty pound weight, alternately applied to the breast and the stomach with such force that the room trembled; they begged the blows might be laid on harder, as light ones only increased their sufferings. It seemed only when the power of these blows had penetrated to the most vital parts that they experienced real relief.

Joseph Ennemoser explained this insensibility to pain by stating that in his experience:

". . . spasmodic convulsions maintain themselves against outward attempts, and even the greatest violence, with almost superhuman strength, without injury to the patient, as has often been observed in young girls and women, where anyone might have almost been induced to believe in supernatural influence. The tension of the muscles increases in power with the insensibility of the power, so that no outward force is equal to it; and when it is attempted to check the paroxysm with force, it gains in intensity, and according to some observers not less psychical than physical. . . . I have observed the same manifestations in children, in Catholics, Protestants and Jews, without the least variation, on which account I consider it to be nothing more than an immense abnormal and inharmonic lusus naturoe." (See also Convulsionaries of St. Médard)

Sources:

Ennemoser, Joseph. The History of Magic. 2 vols., 1854. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1960.

Trench, (William) Brinsley Le Poer (1911–1995)

Distinguished British authority on UFOs. He is the 8th Earl of Clancarty and a member of the House of Lords, where he introduced a serious debate on UFOs January 18, 1979. This was a historic occasion—the first on which this subject had been discussed by the British Parliament.

Born September 18, 1911, Trench is the fifth son of the fifth Earl of Clancarty and of Mary Gwatkin. He was educated at Nautical College, Pangbourne. His interest in UFOs extends over thirty years. After World War II, he noticed many reports of UFO sightings and began to collect press cuttings on the subject. Through a meeting with Desmond Leslie, he was encouraged to attend a lecture on flying saucers at Battersea Polytechnic, London.

Trench, Derek Dempster (aviation correspondent of the British newspaper Daily Express), and other interested individuals founded a company named Flying Saucer Service Ltd. and commenced publication of a magazine Flying Saucer Review. The first edition appeared in spring 1955 with Derek Dempster as editor, followed by Trench in September 1956, then in September 1959 by Waveney Girvan. When Girvan died, the magazine was edited by Charles Bowen. After 25 years of publication, this remains the first authoritative British publication on the subject of UFOs. It is now included in the House of Lords library.

In 1967, Trench founded Contact International, a worldwide UFO organization with members in 37 different countries. His interest led to his writing a variety of books including some which moved from ufology to a consideration of the ancient astronaut hypothesis.

He died May 18, 1995.

Sources:

Trench, Brinsley Le Poer. The Eternal Subject. London: Souvenir, 1973.

———. The Flying Saucer Story. London: Neville Spearman, 1966.

———. Forgotten Heritage. London: Neville Spearman, 1964.

———. Men Among Mankind. London: Neville Spearman, 1962.

———. Operation Earth. London: Neville Spearman, 1969.

———. Secret of the Ages: UFOs From Inside the Earth. London: Souvenir Press, 1974.

———. The Sky People. London: Neville Spearman, 1960.

Who's Who 1996. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1996.

Trent, A. G. (1789–1850)

Pseudonym of philologist and author Richard Garnett, assistant keeper of printed books at the British Museum Library. He used this alias for his writings on astrology, at a time in which his professional reputation might have suffered if it had been known that he was actively interested in such a subject.

Trevelyan, Sir George (Lowthian) (1906–1996)

Fourth Baronet, born November 5, 1906, eldest son of the Rt. Hon. Sir C. P. Trevelyan who was Minister of Education in Ramsay MacDonald's first Labour Government in Britain. Sir George grew up with a background of liberal politics and progressive thought. He was educated at Sidcot School and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He also worked as an artist-craftsman with Peter Waals workshops 1930–1.

For four years (1932–36), he trained and worked in the Alexander Technique, the psychophysical healing system developed by F. M. Alexander. Then until World War II, he taught at Gordonstown School and Abinger Hill School. During the war, he was a Home Guard Training Captain and following the war taught at No. 1 Army College, Newbattle Abbey (1945–47). On retirement for the Army, he became principal of Attingham Park, the Shropshire Adult College, where he did pioneering work in the teaching of spiritual knowledge as adult education.

On his retirement in 1971, he founded the Wrekin Trust, one of the pioneering New Age organizations, concerned with dissolving the barriers between science and religion. The trust held important conferences on science in relation to mysticism, with papers from such distinguished individuals as Prof. Glen W. Schaefer, Prof. Joscelyn Godwin, and Pir Vilayat Inayat Khan. These conferences provided a nexus of early New Age networks. As the new age developed Trevelyan authored a number of books reflecting on the growing vision and offering the movement his mature insights.

He died February 7, 1996.

Sources:

Tarne, Ingham. "A Little Lower Than the Angels. . . and Crowned with Glory." Meditation 3, no. 4 (Fall 1988): 24–28.

Trevelyan, George. The Active Eye in Architecture. N.p., 1977.

———. Operation Redemption. Wellingborough, Northamptionshire, England: Turnstone Press, 1981.

———. A Vision of the Aquarian Age. London: Stillpoint, 1984.

Trevelyan, George, and Edward Marchett. Twelve Seats at the Round Table. Jersey: Neville Spearman, 1976.

Trévisan, Bernard of (1406–1490)

Italian alchemist seeking to discover the philosophers' stone. Trévisan began at an early age to spend large sums of money on the pursuit.

Trévisan was born at Padua. His father was a doctor of medicine, so it is probable that Bernard received his initial training in science at home. At the age of fourteen he devoted himself to alchemy. He read the works of Eastern philosophers Gerber and Rhasis. Trévisan augmented his learning with the writings of Sacrobosco and Rupecissa. He engaged in a long course of reading and praying.

Trévisan heard that Henry, a German priest, had succeeded in creating the philosophers' stone. He went to Germany, accompanied by other alchemists. Henry claimed he would disclose all if they would supply a certain sum of money to procure the necessary tools and materials. After Henry proved fraud Trévisan decided to abandon his search. However, he visited Spain, Great Britain, Holland, and France, trying in each of these countries to learn more about creating the philosophers' stone. Eventually he went to Egypt, Persia, and Palestine and subsequently travelled in Greece.

Ultimately Trévisan found himself impoverished and was forced to sell his parental estates. He retired to the Island of Rhodes and met a priest who knew something of science. Trévisan proposed they should start fresh experiments together. The cleric agreed to help, so the pair borrowed a large sum of money to purchase the necessary paraphernalia. The two found some success.

It is belived that Trévisan was at least partly responsible for an octavo volume published in 1643, Le Bernard d'Alchmague, cum Bernard Treveso, while he is commonly credited with another work titled La Philosophic Naturelle des Metaux. In this latter work he insists on the necessity of meditation by the scientist who would create the philosophers' stone.

Bernard of Trévisan is often confused with two other individuals—Bernardo Trevisano (1652–1720), a Venetian devoted to languages, mathematics, philosophy, and painting, and Bernardinus Trivisanus (1506–1583), who studied arts and medicine at Padua and became professor of logic and medical theory.

Triad Group

Nonprofit organization founded by author Whitley Strieber to catalog and study "visitor experiences"—claims of contacts with extraterrestrials or other creatures. The project followed Strieber's claimed experiences detailed in his book Communion (1987). After the formation of the organization, rather than joining his cause, many believers in unidentified flying objects claimed Streiber was an amatuer. After several years, he dissolved the group.

Triad Society

An ancient esoteric society of China. The candidate was taken to a dark room by two members to kneel before the president. He was given a living cock and a knife and took an oath to assist his brethren in any emergency, even at the risk of his life. He then cut off the head of the cock, mingled its blood with his own, and the three assisting individuals added some of their own blood.

After being warned that death is the punishment should he divulge the secrets of the society, he was initiated and given the triad signs of recognition. For example, a member had to lift any object with three fingers only. This society, originally altruistic, later became political.

Various Triad societies were revived in Hong Kong to operate criminal extortion and protection rackets. Cinema protection was a specialty of these gangs and usually involved Triad members being employed as ushers, ticket-sellers, or submanagers.

Financial operations involve magic numerals, symbolic of the particular Triad society. For example, protection money may be demanded in sums relating to the figure 8, the lower half of the Chinese character Hung, used by some Triad societies. The numeral 3 denotes heaven, earth, and man. The word Triad originally was used as a mystical symbol.

In the 1970s, the Triad racketeering operations in Hong Kong resulted in the publication of a police manual, Triad Societies of Hong Kong, restricted to police personnel. In 1976, the Triad societies spread their operations to Britain, where cities like Birmingham, Bristol, Liverpool, Portsmouth, Southampton, Manchester, and London with large Chinese populations could be victimized. Triad protection rackets even operate in the West End cinemas and clubs of London, where vicious fights have been reported involving meat cleavers.

A muscleman in the Shing Wo Triad is known as "426," a numerical symbol for "Red stick" or "enforcer." In some British cities, the protection racket is being partially reduced by closing down illegal gambling clubs where Triad members meet or convert their funds.

Sources:

Chesneaux, Jean. Secret Societies in China in the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1971.

Triangles (Network)

Network funded by the Lucis Trust, formed to propagate the teachings of Alice A. Bailey (1880–1949), former Theosophist who founded her own Arcane School.

The Triangles Program was inaugurated in 1937 by Bailey in which she called upon people to form groups of three who would daily unite to channel spiritual energy to the world. Address: 120 Wall St., 24th Fl., New York, NY 10005. British headquarters are at Ste. 54, 3 Whitehall Ct., London, SW1A 2EF, England. Website: http://www.lucistrust.org/.

Trilite Seminars

Trilite Seminars is a Canadian channeling organization built around the activity of a walk-in personality named Shaari. Prior to 1989, she had been a professional in computer graphics who was also a trance medium who led personal growth workshops. That year she was in a car accident. During her period of recovery, she decided that she had completed her life work and requested that she end her incarnation. However, rather than let her body die, she offered it for the use of someone else. That someone came to be known as Shaari.

According to Shaari, she is a commander in the Star Command, which she has worked with for more than 750 years. She had an unusual birth as a Pleiadian/Arcturan hybrid. She was not born of normal parents but created as a result of action by a Pleiadian and Arcturan council. In her early years, she traveled the universe studying various cultures. She had a family with her husband Mishar.

During what on Earth was the 1980s, she had traveled to the planet Ur to assist the development of consciousness of a primitive life form. On the return journey, she stopped at the Ashtar Command headquarters near Earth. This area is under the command of Veyares and operates under the strict directives of Ashtar, the Star Command, and the Intergalactic Council of Twelve. While here, she was offered the opportunity to assist in the leap of consciousness of Earth and humanity by consciously integrating into another life form. The Earth mission was to last 30 years, at the conclusion of which she would take over the post currently held by Veyares.

Shaari channels Abraham, a member of the Light Brotherhood and Intergalactic Cmmand, as well as Malaya, a feminine consciousness. Together she and these two entities form the triad for which her organization is named. These two entities had previously been channeled by the person whose body she took over. The Trilite organization offers seminars and retreats, and Shaari channels in private sessions for individuals. Several times a year she leads travel seminars to power spots in order to provide a focus for the healing of the planet.

Trilite is headquartered at P.O. Box 22040, Brentwood Bay, BC, Canada, V0S lR0. It does not have a website, but information can be found on the Internet at http://members.spiritweb.org/Spirit/et-journey.htm.

Sources:

Trilite Seminars. http://members.spiritweb.org/Spirit/et-journey.htm. February 28, 2000.

Trintzius, Rene (1898–1953)

A writer and unorthodox healer, born July 29, 1898, at Rouen, France. He became a novelist and playwright and wrote biographical studies of Rousseau, Charlotte Corday, Jacques Cazotte, and John Law. His books include: L'Astrologie à la portée de tous (Astrology for All), Lisez dans vos mains (Palmistry), La Magie a-t-elle raison (Is Magic on the Right Lines?), Les Guérisons supranormales (Supernormal Cures), Les Pouvoirs inconnus de l'Homme (Man's Unknown Powers), La Voyance et ses supports (Clairvoyance and Its Supports), and Au seuil du Monde invisible (On the Threshold of the Invisible World). He died in 1953.

Triskaidekaphobia Illuminatus Society

A defunct organization founded in 1984 concerned with superstitions about the number 13. Membership was comprised of individuals who believed the number 13 had the ability to affect the balance of world power and political structure through the "Illuminati" (persons who are or who claim to be unusually enlightened). The society sought to isolate seemingly unconnected events caused by the numerical forces inherent in the number 13, correlate the meanings of these events, and develop solutions and strategies.

The society promoted the organization of illuminated task forces for the elimination of Triskaidekaphobia (fear of the number 13) from society. It operated a think tank, bestowed an annual award for contributions concerning the "power" of the number 13, and maintained an archive collection of media clippings and videotapes from television shows. The society published The 13th Illuminated Stratum newsletter (two to five per year); Thirteen, an editorial report issued at irregular intervals; and Fear to Feel: the Illuminated Network of 13 Concealed Phantoms, a book. The society disbanded around 1990.

Trithemius (Johann) (1462–1519)

Alchemist and magician. The son of a German vine grower named Heidenberg, he received his Latin name from Trittenheim, a village in the electorate of Trêves, where he was born. He lost his father when he was a year old, and his mother remarried.

Trithemius worked all day in the vineyards and studied at night. He read whatever books he could beg or borrow. With his share of the patrimony bequeathed by his father, Trithemius went to Trêves, entered as student at the university, and assumed the name of Trithemius.

By the age of 20, Trithemius had acquired the reputation of a scholar. In the winter of 1482, he left Trêves and returned to Trittenheim to visit his mother.

On arriving at Spanheim, Trithemius found the roads impassable due to snow. He went to a neighboring Benedictine monastery. There he stayed for several days. He liked the monastery and voluntarily took the monastic vows and retired from the world. In the course of two years, he was elected abbot and devoted himself to the repair and improvement of the monastery.

After 21 years as abbot, the monks elected another abbot. Trithemius left Spanheim and wandered from place to place, until finally elected abbot of St. James of Wurzburg, where he died in 1519.

Trithemius devised a shorthand called stenoganographia, stigmatized as a Kabalistic and necromantic writing, concealing his most fearful, occult secrets. He wrote a treatise on the subject, another on the supposed administration of the world by its guardian angels, translated into English in 1647 by the astrologer William Lilly. He wrote a third book on geomancy, or divination by means of lines and circles on the ground, a fourth upon sorcery, and a fifth on alchemy. In his work on sorcery, Trithemius made an early mention of the popular story of Faust, and recorded his experiences with the spirit named Hudekin.

Reportedly, Trithemius gave the Emperor Maximilian a vision of his deceased wife, the beautiful Mary of Burgundy. Reputedly he defrayed the expenses of his monastic establishment at Spanheim by resources obtained from the philosophers' stone.

Sources:

Seligmann, Kurt. The History of Magic. New York: Pantheon Books, 1948. Reprinted as Magic, Supernaturalism and Religion. New York: Pantheon Books, 1971.

Trivah

Among the Dayaks of Borneo, the trivah, or feast of the dead, was celebrated after a death had taken place. A panel containing a representation of the tempon-teloris (ship of the dead) was generally set up at the trivah, and sacrifices of fowls were offered to it. It was believed that until the trivah had been celebrated, the souls were unable to reach the golden shores. (See also Book of the Dead; Egypt)

Trollope, Thomas Adolphus (1810–1892)

British novelist, author on travel, biography, history and frequent investigator of the medium D. D. Home. In 1855, Trollope opposed Sir David Brewster when the latter published a denial of having witnessed Home's psychic phenomena.

Eight years later, in a letter to The Athenaeum (April 1863), Trollope testified to "having seen and felt physical facts, wholly and utterly inexplicable, as I believe, by any known and generally received physical laws. I unhesitatingly reject the theory which considers such facts to be produced by means familiar to the best professors of legerdemain."

The report by a committee of the London Dialectical Society contained his written testimony on an apport of jonquil flowers through the mediumship of Agnes Guppy-Volckman in his own home in Florence, Italy.

Tromp, S(olco) W(alie) (1909–1983)

Geophysicist, director of the Bioclimatological Research Center, Leiden, Netherlands, and writer on parapsychological subjects. Tromp was born on March 9, 1909, at Djarkarta, Indonesia. He moved to Europe for his education and earned his Ph.D. at the University of Leiden in geology in 1932.

After military service (1932–33), Tromp was a field geologist for oil companies in Indonesia and Egypt from 1933 to 1940. During World War II, he worked as an advisor on oil explorations for the Turkish Government (1940–43) and then joined his country's war effort as the director of economic warfare, Netherlands Army (1943–45). After the war he held a variety of positions as an economic geologist. Related to his geological interests, Tromp specialized in the study of phenomena connected with dowsing (water divining) about which he wrote several articles and books. He died March 17, 1983, in the Netherlands.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Tromp, S. W. Dowsing and Science. N.p., 1950.

———. "First Report on Experiments Concerning the Influence of Variations in the Strength of the Magnetic Field on Muscular Contraction." Dutch Journal of Parapsychology (January 1947).

———. Fundamental Principles of Psychical Physics. N.p., 1952.

———. "The Problem of the Possible Influence of Dowsing Zones on the Health of Men." Dutch Journal of Parapsychology (November 1948).

———. Psychical Physics. N.p., 1949.

Tron, Giorgio (1884–1963)

Italian physician who studied parapsychology. Tron was born on September 12, 1884, in Turin, Italy. He studied at the University of Pavia (M.D., 1910; teaching diploma in hygiene, 1924). He was staff doctor at the Hospital for Infectious Diseases, Milan (1915–26), hygiene officer at Milan (1927–38), and director of the Instituto Sieroterapico Italiano, Naples (1940–53). Tron was a member of the Società Italiana di Parapsicologia and served as the society's secretary (1955–59).

In addition to his writings on medical subjects, Tron contributed articles to the Bulletin of the Società Italiana di Parapsicologia. He also wrote a chapter on unorthodox healing in the book Studia Parapsychologica (1956) and on physical mediumistic phenomena in Nuovi Problemi di Metapsichica (1953). He died February 5, 1963, in Rome.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Trophonios

Trophonios, a legendary Greek hero who was eventually considered a god-like being, was credited with building the original temple housing the Oracle at Delphi. At a later date, the Oracle at Delphi is said to have ordered the building of an oracle site to be established at Lebadea (known today as the town of Livadia) dedicated to Trophonios. The site would become one of the prominent oracular centers in ancient Greece, and accounts of it survive in the writings of Pausanius.

Those who consulted the oracle at Labadea followed a pattern common in the ancient world. They took up residence at the center for several days, during which they offered sacrifices of various animals. Following the sacrifices, soothsayers were present to read the entrails of the animals (a practice termed extispicy), specifically determining if Trophonios would receive the inquirer graciously or not. The night before entering the cave where the god dwelled, the person would receive a bath and was anointed with olive oil. The priests then took him to water springs where the water of forgetfulness (for the loss of memory of all that was past) and the water of memory (to recall all that would be seen) were consumed. It is believed that these waters contained doses of hallucinogenic drugs.

The inquirer was taken to the entrance of the cave and supplied with a ladder by which he went down into a room. In the floor was a small opening through which the person entered into the actual oracle space. Here the person had both visionary experiences and encounters with the deity (possibly one of the priests acting as a medium). Upon his return, the person was seated on the Throne of Memory and questioned as to what had been seen or heard.

The site of the Trophonion oracle is well known, though modern explorers of the area have been unable to locate the entrance to the caves used for divination in ancient times. Some believe that a complex of interconnected caves exist in the area.

Sources:

Pausanius. Guide to Greece. Translated by Peter Levi. Harmondsworth, UK: Penguin, 1971.

Temple, Robert K. G. Conversations with Eternity: Ancient Man's Attempt to Know the Future. London: Rider, 1984.

True Black Magic, Book of the

A grimoire (manual of ceremonial magic) that is an adapted version of the Key of Solomon the King.

True World Order (TWO)

Movement started by Swami Vishnudevananda, disciple of the late Swami Sivananda of Rishikesh, India, and believer in hatha yoga.

TWO is dedicated to promoting world peace and understanding, good health, and happiness through yoga harmony and a vegetarian diet. For information: International Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Center, 673 8th Ave., Val Morin, Quebec, Canada J0T 2R0.

Trumpet

A funnel-shaped device of cardboard, aluminum, or other lightweight material used at Spiritualist séances for the manifestation of direct voice communication from spirits. Jonathan Koons, the nineteenth-century American farmer medium, appears to have been the first to use a trumpet.

Spiritualists have suggested the trumpet serves as a condenser of psychic energy and increases the volume of the spirit voice. Reportedly, weak or inexperienced spirits often have to use the trumpet. It is seldom necessary for a spirit guide. Some mediums also wet the trumpet with water, in the belief this facilitates the phenomena.

The trumpet is usually coated with a marking of luminous paint. Supposedly at séances in dark rooms the trumpet is seen levitating when there is sufficient psychic force and moving around the circle, conveying personal messages to individual sitters.

Reportedly as a safeguard against fraud, psychical researchers have devised techniques and apparatus to attempt to exclude the possibility of a medium employing ventriloquism in producing voices ostensibly from the trumpet. One method is to fill the medium's mouth with water. During the investigation of the medium Mina Crandon (better known as "Margery"), Mark Richardson of Boston invented a "Voice Control Machine."

The American direct voice medium Elizabeth Blake used a double trumpet with a saucer-shaped extension at the small end to be placed on the ear of the sitter and on her own. Another trumpet, the "Shastaphone," was developed through a psychic communication in Australia, but does not appear to have been widely used.

Trungpa Rinpoche, Chogyam (1940–1987)

Throughout the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, teachers of the occult have portrayed Tibet as an outpost of the highest occult wisdom. However, it was not until after the Chinese invasion of Tibet in 1959 that Tibetan teachers arrived in the West, making firsthand encounters with Tibetan Buddhism available to more than a few adventurous explorers. Among the first to arrive was Chogyam Trungpa, the eleventh Trungpa Tulku. He was born in February 1929 in Geje, Tibet. Designated the reincarnation of a famous lama as an infant, he was raised in a monastery and trained in Tibetan Buddhism. He fled Tibet at the time of the invasion, and in 1963 received a Spaulding grant to attend Oxford University. While in England he wrote his autobiography, Born in Tibet (1966), and established a center in Scotland.

In 1970 Trungpa renounced his monastic vows to marry. He moved to the United States that same year and founded Karme Choling, a seed center of what would grow into Vajradhatu, an international fellowship of his students. He presented his version of Tibetan Buddhism in a number of books, including Mudra (1972); Cutting through Spiritual Materialism (1973); Visual Dharma, the Buddhist Art of Tibet (1975); The Dawn of Tantra (1975), with Herbert Gunther; and The Myth of Freedom (1976). He found ready acceptance among one segment of people who appreciated his total dedication to his spiritual teachings and his simultaneous ability to enjoy life, manifested through his love of alcohol and women. He was also a patron of the arts, especially poetry, and founded a school, Naropa Institute, which offers an alternative curriculum with college-level instruction. The institute has taught the likes of Allen Ginsberg and Ram Dass.

Trungpa possibly became best known for his denunciation of "spiritual materialism," manifest in the spiritual seekers of alternative religions who seemed preoccupied with collecting as many varied spiritual experiences as possible. Such seekers never settle down long enough to have their search rewarded with real insight, he said.

In 1981 Trungpa expanded his teachings to Canada, where he established a community in Halifax. He died at these Canadian headquarters April 4, 1987 of cardiac arrest and respiratory failure. He was succeeded by Osel Tendzin, his chief disciple.

Sources:

Clark, Tom. The Great Naropa Poetry Wars. Santa Barbara, Calif.: Cadmus Editions, 1980.

Fields, Rick. How the Swans Came to the Lake: A Narrative History of Buddhism in America. Boulder, Colo.: Shambhala, 1981.

Queen, Edward L., Stephen R Prothero, and Gardiner H Shattuck. "Chogyam Trungpa," Encyclopedia of American Religious History. 2 vols. New York: Facts on File, 1996.

The Tibetan Book of the Dead. Translated and with a commentary by Francesca Fremantle and Chogyam Trungpa. Berkeley, Calif.: Shambhala, 1973.

Truth Journal

Publication of the Center for Spiritual Awareness (CSA), a kriya yoga organization developed from the teachings of Swami Paramahansa Yogananda and headed by Roy Eugene Davis. CSA may be contacted at P.O. Box 7, Lakemount, GA 30552-0001. The center's website is http://www.csa-davis.org/.

Sources:

Center for Spiritual Awareness. http://www.csa-davis.org/. March 8, 2000.

Truzzi, Marcello (1935–)

Contemporary sociologist and scholar of parapsychology and the occult. Truzzi was born on September 6, 1935, in Copenhagen, Denmark. He attended Florida State University (B.A., 1957), the University of Florida (M.A., 1962), and Cornell University (Ph.D., 1970). He taught at several universities before settling permanently in the sociology department at Eastern Michigan University, Ypsilanti. He chaired the department for 12 years (1974–86).

Born into a prominent circus family, Truzzi has interests encompassing folklore, stage magic, the history of science, popular culture, and parapsychology. He has been most identified with anomalous phenomena and coined the term amnomolistics to designate the field of study.

In 1972 Truzzi began to issue a small newsletter, Explorations, renamed The Zetetic two years later. In 1976 The Zetetic was offered to the Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal, cofounded by Truzzi, as its official publication. Within a short time, Truzzi, who viewed himself as a true skeptic, found himself in conflict with the majority of the committee members. As a skeptic, he expressed his doubts about unproven claims and withheld judgement pending definitive evidence. The majority of the committee proved themselves to be debunkers who opposed all discussion of the paranormal. Truzzi broke with the committee when it was discovered that members had falsified data that tended to support Michel Gauquelin's views on astrology.

After separating from the committee, Truzzi founded the Center for Scientific Anomalies Research and began a new periodical, the Zetetic Scholar. He edited the Zetetic Scholar for a decade (1978–87). Besides his more conventional books on sociology, Truzzi has ventured into the sociology of witchcraft and the occult and cowritten (with Arthur Lyons) the definitive text on the use of occult powers in solving crimes, The Blue Sense: Psychic Detectives and Crime (1991).

Sources:

Clark, Jerome. Encyclopedia of Strange and Unexplained Phenomena. Detroit: Gale Research, 1993.

Clark, Jerome, and J. Gordon Melton. "The Crusade Against the Paranormal." Fate pt. 1, 32, 9 (September 1979): 70–76; pt. 2, 32, 10 (October 1979): 87–94.

Lyons, Arthur, and Marcello Truzzi. The Blue Sense: Psychic Detectives and Crime. New York: Mysterious Press/Warner Books, 1991.

Truzzi, Marcello. Cauldron Cookery: An Authentic Guide for Coven Connoisseurs. New York: Meredith, 1969.

———. "The Occult Revival as Popular Culture: Some Random Observations on the Old and Nouveau Witch." Sociological Quarterly 13 (Winter 1972): 16–34.

———. Where Witchcraft Lives. London: Aquarian Press, 1962.

The Tsitsith

An article of Jewish religious apparel, the fringe or tassels attached to the outer garment, which are believed to be endowed with talismanic properties. In modern times, the fringe has survived in the praying shawl named talith and in a garment worn on the chest. A sentence in the Talmud states: "Whoever has the tephillin bound to his head and arm, and the tsitsith thrown over his garments . . . is protected from sin." (See also Tephillin)

Tubby, Gertrude Ogden (1878–1967)

Teacher, author, and psychic researcher. Born June 18, 1878, at Kingston on Hudson, New York, Tubby studied at Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts (B.S., 1902). In 1907 she became the special research assistant to James H. Hyslop, then president of the American Society for Psychical Research (ASPR) and remained in that position for the rest of Hyslop's life. The society split in 1925, with dissident members forming the Boston Society for Psychic Research. Tubby, who had control of Hyslop's papers, continued to work for the ASPR as a secretary and as editor of its Journal until 1924. However, after a dispute with the leadership of the society she refused to give them the Hyslop collection for their archives. Eventually she turned that material over to the Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship (now the International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship).

Also, as a result of working as Hyslop's assistant, Tubby investigated a wide range of psychic phenomena, including mediumship, telepathy, clairvoyance, psychokinesis, and survival. After his death, she collected communications apparently from him from various mediums. These messages are discussed in the book James H. Hyslop—X, His Book (1929). She also published the book Psychics and Mediums, A Handbook for Students (1935; British ed. 1938), as well as various articles in the Journal and Proceedings of the ASPR.

She died July 1967.

Tulku

Term for a Tibetan entity recognized in a present incarnation. Tibetan Buddhism teaches that highly evolved individuals become spiritually liberated by abandoning the sense of ego or separate identity, but the spiritual forces comprising such an individual may still elect to be reborn for the benefit of other people. It is believed they are only illusory manifestations sustained by the sense of ego.

Traditional tests exist for the identification of tulkus, especially in the case of the Dalai Lama. Other contemporary tulkus include Chogyam Trungpa (1939–1987), author of the book Born in Tibet (London, 1966) and Tarthang Tulku, both popularly known by their disciples as "Rinpoche," a title meaning "precious master."

Tulpa

Tibetan term for a phantom form generated by mental concentration. In her book With Mystics and Magicians in Tibet (1931), Alexandra David-Neel describes how she created a tulpa of a monk, who supposedly became a recognizable member of her party during a journey. Reportedly in the course of time this phantom took on an independent life of its own. David-Neel claimed it took six months of intense concentration to dissolve this phantom.

A tulpa may also double as the magician who created it, employed for protective purposes by appearing instead of its creator. A tulpa should be distinguished from a tulku, which is either the reincarnation of a saintly individual or the incarnation of a non-human entity, such as a god, demon, or fairy.

Sources:

David-Neel, Alexandra. Initiations and Initiates in Tibet. London, 1932. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1959.

———. The Secret Oral Tradition in Tibetan Buddhist Sects. San Francisco: City Lights, 1964. Reprint, Calcutta: Maha Bodhi Society of India, 1971.

———. With Mystics and Magicians in Tibet. 1931. Rev. ed. as Magic and Mystery in Tibet. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1956. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1971.

Tumah

According to the Kabala, the term refers to physical or moral uncleanness. The latter is divided into three main divisions—idolatry, murder, and immorality. Sin has rendered humanity imperfect, but also affected the whole of nature, even to the sphere of angels and the divinity. In physical uncleanness, there is a coarser and subtler form. The latter causes a dimness in the soul felt by those who are nearest to sacred things. Organic matter that comes into contact with the human body is more liable to tumah than remoter things. The human corpse is more unclean than lower animals, because its more complex nature involves more decay.

Tumo

The mystical practice from Tibet of generating bodily heat, so that a hermit may spend winter naked in a cave amid snow and freezing temperatures at an altitude between 11,000 and 18,000 feet. Adepts have supposedly distinguished various types of tumo: exoteric arises spontaneously in the course of mystical raptures; esoteric keeps a hermit comfortable on a snowy hill; and mystic produces experiences of paradisiacal bliss.

According to Alexandra David-Neel, tumo "is also the subtle fire with which warms the generative fluid and drives the energy in it, till it runs all over the body along the subtle channels." This has some similarity to the Hindu teachings of the nature of kundalini energy—possibly aroused in subtle physical channels, related to the energy of sexual activity, and productive of either heat or cold in the body.

Sources:

David-Neel, Alexandra. Initiations and Initiates in Tibet. London, 1932. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1959.

———. The Secret Oral Tradition in Tibetan Buddhist Sects. San Francisco: City Lights, 1964. Reprint, Calcutta: Maha Bodhi Society of India, 1971.

———. With Mystics & Magicians in Tibet. 1931. Rev. ed. as Magic and Mystery in Tibet. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1956. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1971.

Tunisa

Burmese diviners. (See also Myanmar)

Turin Shroud

A relic housed in a chapel in Turin (or Turino), Italy, and believed by some to be the shroud in which Jesus was wrapped after his crucifixion. In the accounts of Jesus' burial in the Christian New Testament, the earliest of which appears in the Gospel of Mark 15:46, it is noted, "And he [Joseph of Arimathea] brought fine linen, and took him [Jesus] down and wrapped him in the linen, and laid him in a sepulchre which was hewn out of a rock. . . ." There is no record of the survival of that burial cloth for the next five centuries. Then about 570 C.E., a pilgrim reported that it was kept in a monastery by the river Jordan. In 670 C.E. the French bishop Arculph, returning from a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, was shipwrecked on the coast of Scotland and traveled to a monastery on the island of Iona. Here he said he had seen the shroud and been allowed to kiss it.

Subsequent references are made to a surviving shroud by the Venerable Bede, St. Willibald, St. John Damascene, and the Emperor Baldwin. In 1284, Robert de Clari, chronicler of the Fourth Crusade, described the triumphant entry of Crusaders into Constantinople and mentioned the monastery of Lady St. Mary of the Blachernes, in which a cloth claiming to be the shroud was kept. In the Middle Ages some 40 different shrouds were claimed to be the one in which Christ was buried. At this time there also existed a variety of similar relics, including tears from Jesus, milk from the Virgin Mary, thorns from the crown of thorns worn by Jesus, and enough pieces of the cross to make a number of different such instruments of execution. The reformation of the church concerning such superstitions began in earnest in the sixteenth century and continued in subsequent centuries.

Nothing is known of the particular piece of cloth known as the Shroud of Turin until its appearance in the church of Lirey, Troyes, France, during the fourteenth century. At the time between 1353 and 1356, the shroud was placed in a small wooden church at Lirey by Geoffrey de Charny, Lord of Lirey, but exhibition of the relic aroused opposition from Henry of Poitiers, Bishop of Troyes. Many years later, in 1389, the Lord of Lirey's son (Geoffrey II) obtained permission to exhibit the shroud, but Henry's successor as bishop of Troyes, Pierre d'Arcis, objected most strenuously.

In a statement to the Avignon Pope Clement VII, he complained that the exhibition was not for devotion, but for monetary gain, and that the relic was a forgery, "a certain cloth cunningly painted, upon which by clever sleight of hand was depicted the twofold image of one man, that is to say the back and the front, [the canons at Lirey] falsely declaring and pretending that this was the actual shroud in which our Saviour Jesus Christ was enfolded in the tomb." D'Arcis claimed that Henry of Poitiers, 30 years earlier, after "diligent inquiry and examination" had established that the shroud had been "cunningly painted, the truth being attested by the artist . . . that it was a work of human skill and not miraculously wrought . . ." and that the first exhibition by Geoffrey's father had been prohibited.

Meanwhile, however, Geoffrey's widow had married Aymon of Geneva, who had ecclesiastical influence with Pope Clement, and the prohibition was bypassed, much to the anger of d'Arcis, hence his complaint in 1389. Pope Clement resolved the matter by declaring that Geoffrey II could continue exhibiting the shroud provided that it was always stated that it was only "a figure or representation" of Christ's cloth, and that d'Arcis must keep silence in the matter under pain of excommunication.

This affair has often been revived as "proof" that the shroud was a forgery, but the accusations of d'Arcis were never proved, and the original campaign against the genuineness of the shroud had started on the somewhat flimsy grounds that if such a cloth imprinted with an image of Jesus Christ had really existed, it would have been mentioned in the Gospels, and that the exhibition at Lirey was all part of a plot to hire persons for pretended miracles of healing. The statement that diligent inquiry had revealed a cunning artist remains unconvincing, since the artist was never named or punished.

After the death of Geoffrey II, his widow Margaret claimed that the relic had only been loaned to Lirey by her grandfather, but she was eventually obliged to give it up.

In 1452, it passed into the keeping of the Duke of Savoy. In 1532 it was kept in the sacristy of Sainte Chappelle, France, where it was nearly destroyed in a fire. It was then taken to the monastery of St. Clair where it was patched by nuns. It was brought to Saint Charles Borromeo in Turin, Italy, in 1578, and for more than four centuries remained the property of the ruling House of Savoy from which came the kings of Italy. It was exhibited annually until it was feared that frequent handling might damage it. By the end of the nineteenth century it was exhibited only on very special occasions.

In 1946, Umberto II, former king of Italy and the owner of the shroud, was exiled. He settled in Portugal and in the ensuing years, the Catholic Church, in the person of the archbishop of Turin, became its custodian. In 1978 it was disclosed that Umberto was leaving the shroud to the Pope, an event that occurred in 1983 with Umberto's passing. Italy did not challenge the will or claim the shroud for itself. Since that time, the Roman Catholic Church has had the power to respond directly to pressure to have the shroud definitively tested by modern scientific methods.

Description of the Shroud

The shroud always had vague markings indicating the outlines of a body, but these took on a special significance only at the end of the nineteenth century. Modern interest in the shroud dates from 1898, when Secundo Pia obtained permission to photograph it for the first time and discovered that his negative plate revealed a perfect image of a noble and majestic face with forehead wounds suggesting a crown of thorns, and a body with wounds in the hands and side.

The supposition is that in some unknown way, emanations from the body laid in the shroud reacted with the spices used for burial in such a way as to cause an image on the cloth, rather like a photographic negative. Although the shroud had been venerated for centuries, nobody had formerly realized that the markings might be more revealing than supposed. Pia's negative plate showed a positive picture, virtually a full-length photograph of the occupant of the shroud.

The publication of Pia's negative caused great excitement, and led to a scientific investigation by Paul Vignon, professor of Biology at the Institut Catholique in Paris. With his coworker Yves Delage he presented his findings, favorable to the authenticity of the shroud, to the French Academy of Science. The collaboration was a strange one, since Delage was an agnostic and Vignon a Catholic. Since then, the shroud has received increased attention and scholarship, and Vatican experts spent some years studying and verifying historical documents connected with it.

On September 6, 1936, Pope Pius XI offered his opinion of the cloth, "These are the images of the Divine Redeemer. We might say they are the most beautiful, most moving and dearest we can imagine."

The name sindonology has been given to studies of the shroud, and in 1939 the first Sindonological Congress was held in Turin. The Centro Internazionale di Sindonologia was created, drawing upon the highest academic, scientific, and ecclesiastical authorities.

In August 1978, the Holy Shroud was publicly exhibited again in the Cathedral of Turin, Italy. Because Turin had been a flashpoint for Red Brigade terrorism, special precautions were taken to protect the relic. In addition to extra police protection, the shroud itself was housed in a special display case with bulletproof glass. Archbishop Anastasio Ballestrero of Turin insisted that the shroud not be the subject of any form of commercialism, and the cost of the new protective case was born by a Turin exposition fund launched in the United States.

In October 1978, at the end of the exposition, a special Shroud Congress was held in Turin and attended by scientists from around the world. Advanced techniques of image analysis were discussed, including infra-red photography, photomicrography, high contrast photography, X-ray fluorescence, radiographic examination, and carbon dating.

Unfortunately much of the scientific analysis and discussion resulted in controversy and confusion. Many issues were hotly debated, such as whether the amount of iron oxide on the shroud indicated genuine bloodstains or artistic pigment. The main issue of dating the shroud was delayed through the reluctance of the authorities to permit destruction of a sample piece of the material for carbon dating. For a presentation of scientific views for and against the authenticity of the shroud, see the book The Image on the Shroud by H. David Sox (1981) and more recently The Mysterious Shroud by Ian Wilson (1986).

A significant breakthrough in the study of the shroud occurred in early 1987, when Pope John Paul II finally approved a plan to test fragments of the cloth in laboratories for radiocarbon content. Tests had been scheduled to begin in 1986, but were halted at the last minute by the Bishop of Turin.

Three major laboratories—in Switzerland, the United States, and Britain—were involved in these carbon-14 dating tests. Three other institutions were involved in statistical analysis of the results of tests, which included scientific controls using pieces of linen from known sources, ancient and modern. These included fragments of medieval cloth and a specimen from ancient Egypt, as well as modern cloth. The scientists involved did not know which cloth they were being provided with for testing until the results were correlated by the British Museum Research Laboratory and evaluated at the Vatican in Rome.

Edward Hall, of the Research Laboratory for Archaeology and Art at Oxford University, England, was one of the scientists involved in testing. He used an Accelerator Mass Spectrometer, generating a charge of two million volts. This massive new tool for radio-carbon dating is said to have influenced the Vatican decision to go ahead with the tests on actual fragments of the Turin Shroud. Earlier apparatus would have required the destruction of a sample about the size of a pocket handkerchief, whereas the new machine required a sample of only about a quarter of an inch.

In a report by Pearson Phillips in The Times, London, (April 15, 1987), Hall was quoted as stating: "If we get a medieval dating then we shall know it is a forgery and we can relax and forget the whole business. Although there will still be a mystery about how anyone in medieval times could have produced such a complex and effective fraud." Hall assumed an agnostic viewpoint, stating: "My view of Christ as a historical individual is that he was obviously a powerful personality. I suppose it is possible that, in some way we do not currently fully understand, some kind of impression from him was transferred to the shroud. But if we produce a carbon date around the start of the first century A.D., the fat will really be in the fire. As a scientist, I would then find it difficult to dismiss the shroud's authenticity."

An official report on October 13, 1988, revealed that the three laboratories in Oxford, Zürich, and Arizona had independently carbon dated the cloth fragments as medieval, and not from the time of Jesus Christ. There was close agreement on the possible dates, giving an estimated span of circa 1260–1390. For most skeptics, this established once and for all that the shroud was a medieval forgery.

Die-hard believers in the authenticity of the shroud either questioned the accuracy of the scientific evidence or propounded fantastic theories to account for the dating of the cloth, e.g., that the image was formed by a burst of divine radiant energy that somehow altered the texture of the cloth.

The close concurrence in dating of three independent scientific laboratories, with the best and most accurate apparatus, cannot be dismissed lightly. The normal margin of error in carbon dating is considered to be about 100 years either way.

It is unlikely that these tests can resolve the enigma of the shroud. Critics of the carbon testing have noted that scientific tests of any kind sometimes overlook anomalies revealed by later research. In the case of the dating of the shroud, there is no reason to doubt the good faith and accuracy of reputable scientific laboratories, but it is good to remember that the centuries-old shroud has been through many vicissitudes, and we are dealing with minute fragments of material.

In 1532, for example, when the shroud was kept in a silver casket at the church of Sainte Chappelle in Chambery, France, a fire broke out in the sacristy, melting drops of silver, which fell on the shroud and burned through folds in the cloth. In 1534, the burns on the cloth were patched by nuns at the monastery of St. Clair. The shroud has also suffered damp stains, and may have been washed or cleaned with oil at some time. Could the samples tested for carbon dating have been contaminated with threads or solutions from the later history of the shroud?

Moreover, carbon dating, accurate or misleading, cannot explain the extraordinary and awe-inspiring character of the image on the shroud as disclosed by the camera negative of Secondo Pia in 1898. There are no apparent brush marks, and other theories of production of the marks, however ingenious, hardly do justice to the beauty and accuracy of the icon. Common sense suggests that even a medieval forger of genius would be unlikely to have the prescience to produce a perfect and noble image in negative. What the pilgrims of that period in an out-of-the-way French district would surely have expected to see would have been a stylized rudimentary positive image, more like the icons in stained glass windows or the paintings in churches.

Dr. Robert Otlet, of the Atomic Energy Research Establishment at Harwell, had hoped that his famous laboratory would be included in the carbon dating tests, and later commented: "It is most unfortunate—entirely unnecessary when you put the amount of material to be taken in context. It will lead to a result which will be wide open to criticism and sadly will not be seen as definitive." It is clear that the story of the shroud has not come to an end. True believers in its authenticity have found ways to ignore and question the carbon dating evidence, while many fully accept the carbon dating results as conclusive.

Sources:

Barnes, Arthur Stapylton. The Holy Shroud of Turin. London: Burns Oates & Washbourne, 1934.

Heller, John H. Report on the Shroud of Turin. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1983.

Nickell, Joe. Inquest on the Shroud of Turin. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Press, 1983.

Reban, John. Inquest on Jesus Christ. London: Leslie Frewin, 1967.

Rinaldi, Peter M. The Man in the Shroud. New York: Vantage Press, 1972. Reprint, London: Futura, 1974. Reprinted as It Is The Lord: A Study of the Shroud of Christ. New York: Warner, 1973.

Sox, H. David. The Image on the Shroud: Is the Turin Shroud a Forgery? London: Unwin, 1981.

———. The Shroud Unmasked; Uncovering the Greatest Forgery of All Time. Basingstoke, England: Lamp Press, 1988.

Stein, Gordon. Encyclopedia of Hoaxes. Detroit: Gale Research, 1993.

Vignon, Paul. The Shroud of Christ. London: Constable, 1902. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1970.

Walsh, John. The Mysterious Shroud. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1986.

———. The Shroud. London: W. H. Allen, 1964.

Wilson, Ian. The Turin Shroud. London: Gollancz, 1978.

Wuenschel, Edward. Self-Portrait of Christ. New York: Esopus, 1954.

Zugibe, Frederick T. The Cross and the Shroud: a Medical Inquiry into the Crucifixion. New York: Paragon House Publishers, 1988.

Turner, Ann

A nineteenth-century English reputed witch. (See also England)

Turner, M(alcolm) E(lijah) (1929–)

Biometrician who experimented in the field of parapsychology. Turner was born on May 27, 1929, in Atlanta, Georgia. He studied at Duke University (B.A., 1952) and North Carolina State College (M.S. experimental statistics, 1955; Ph.D., 1959). After graduation he joined the faculty at the Medical College of Virginia. He joined the faculty of Emory University, Atlanta, Georgia, in 1963.

In the field of parapsychology, Turner experimented in model-building and statistical inference. He collaborated with Ann B. Turner and Elizabeth McMahan in experiments relating to the effects of time and distance on card-calling. Turner also worked with Karlis Osis on experiments in extrasensory perception over distance and developed a statistical model to evaluate ESP over spatial distances.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Osis, Karlis, and M. E. Turner. "Distance and ESP: A Transcontinental Experiment." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 27 (1968).

Osis, Karlis, M. E. Turner, and M. L. Carlson. "ESP Over Distance: Research on the ESP Channel." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 65 (1971).

Turoff, Stephen

Contemporary British spiritual healer who practices psychic surgery. His healing is through an entity claimed to be "Dr. Joseph Kahn," whose healing resembles that of Philippine healers. At times, a real scalpel is manipulated; at other times, an invisible syringe or other apparatus is involved.

Purported healings effected through Turoff's mediumship include cases of fibroids in the womb, infected lungs, and liver tumor. "Dr. Kahn" is said to be one of a team of 18 spirit helpers. Turoff has demonstrated his healing before members of the Noah's Ark Society for Physical Mediumship.

Turquoise

A number of ancient beliefs surround this stone. J. B. Van Helmont stated: "Whoever wears a Turquoise, so that it, or its gold-setting touches the skin, may fall from any height; and the stone attracts to itself the whole force of the blow, so that it cracks, and the person is safe."

Medieval writers stated that turquoise became paler if its owner was ill, lost color entirely at his or her death, but recovered color when placed upon the finger of a new and healthy owner. It was believed to be a good amulet for preventing accidents to horsemen or becoming tired. Another belief was that turquoise moved itself when any danger threatened its possessor. Turquoise originally came from Persia, where it would sometimes be engraved with a motto or a verse from the Koran. The stone was also prized by Native American healers.

Turvey, Vincent Newton (1873–1912)

A British seer who refused to be classified as a medium since he was never entranced or controlled, did not develop his gifts (which he was born with), functioned not by mental passivity but mental activity, and instead of being controlled was able to control others, as a spirit might. Supposedly Turvey saw phantoms as a child. One such experience was a vision of his father while singing in church as a choir boy; the father died at the same time three hundred miles away. At the age of ten Turvey lost his visionary faculty.

Turvey studied engineering. In 1902, while engaged in his profession, he suffered a serious accident. For many years, he lived alone in his garden, in a tent, and spent ten or twelve hours a day reading, writing, and meditating on occult things.

The result is described in his own words:

"After forty thousand hours on one topic, I think I can claim to be, in a small way, a yogi. My illness and my meditation have produced, or awakened, my psychic gifts; and all the Yoga, Vedic and Gnostic teachings which I now read (and much more besides) seem to be familiar to me. I seem to have evolved them in my own mind, during meditation from a sort of 'memory.' In fact I often pitch a book away and say 'Why, I know all this,' and yet I had not read it before. Many Eastern forms come and argue with me, and, of course, I learn from them; but they do not come to teach me as a guru would. They come 'to help you to teach yourself in this present life.' In a word, I am 'Self-taught'; but I owe a great deal to Eastern forms, many of whom visit me and give tests of their identity by talking to me in their own languages; and I get the messages translated."

Turvey affiliated with Spiritualism. The Bournemouth Society of Spiritualists, of which he was vice president from 1908, gave demonstrations of clairvoyance at the end of their Sunday service. Turvey announced from the platform the presence of spirit visitors before the service was over, so that those who recognized them could stay for a closer communion.

Supposedly these spirits came to Turvey days before and impressed their appearance on his mind. Once a visitor appeared by the side of his bed, which was only a few inches from the wall. Turvey wrote: "Sometimes, they will come at dead of night and wake me up; at other times they will come when I am alone in the tent in my garden, or in my drawing room, or, what is still more obliging of them, they will look in while passing when I have earthly visitors with me who can bear witness that I described the visitants to them, before I went to the hall!"

Turvey's 1911 book records his experiences in long-distance clairvoyance, out-of-the-body travel, predictions, spirit seeing, and a variation of clairvoyance he termed "phonevoyance." A voucher was printed in the book by four men who testified to having inspected the original documents and controlled their reproduction. The journalist and Spiritualist W. T. Stead, declared "Mr. Turvey is a man of truth, that his testimony is trustworthy evidence as to what is within his own knowledge, and that the witnesses' letters which are held for the scrutiny of inquirers are the genuine epistles of credible witnesses."

Sources:

Turvey, Vincent Newton. The Beginnings of Seership. 1911. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1969.

Tutankhamen Curse

On November 26, 1922, in the Valley of the Kings, the tomb of Tutankhamen, the boy king of Egypt, was discovered. After three thousand years, four burial chambers were uncovered with nearly five thousand objects of gold, alabaster, lapis lazuli, and onyx, in addition to the mummy of the king and his gold mask. These treasures have expanded modern understanding of the art, life, religion, and history of ancient Egypt.

Two men were responsible for this discovery—Howard Carter, a British painter-archaeologist, and George E. S. M. Herbert, fifth Earl of Carnarvon. A few weeks after the excavation, Lord Carnarvon died suddenly, and this event, together with the deaths of various other individuals associated with the Tutankhamen tomb, started the story of a "Curse of the Pharaohs." One writer claimed the curse was responsible for the lives of some three dozen scientists, archaeologists, and scholars.

Who Was Tutankhamen?

It has been claimed that Tutankhamen was a great king because his tomb contained such treasures. Others have suggested he was the pharaoh of Exodus and it was his wife, Ankhesenpa-Aten, who found Moses in the bulrushes and raised him. In fact, both claims are incorrect. Tutankhamen reigned during the Eighteenth Dynasty of the New Kingdom. He was a boy of nine when he came to the throne and his reign lasted nine years, from about 1334 to 1325 B.C.E. He was not the ruler of Egypt during the exodus described in the Bible.

It is believed Tutankhamen's name was originally Tutankhaten ("perfect life of Aten"). He married Ankhesenpa-Aten when a child. He wife was a daughter of King Amenhotep IV (1372–1334 B.C.E.) who had earlier attempted to supplant the god Amun by the Aten, in the process changing his name to Akhenaten ("pleasing to the Aten"). At that time, the priests of Amun had more power than the ruler, so as Akhenaten he reinforced his rule and suppressed worship of Amun.

During the reign of Tutankhamen, the priesthoods dissolved by Akhenaten were partially reinstated and new images installed in temples. However, in giving pride to Amun, there was no attempt to destroy the worship of Aten, only a displacement of Aten's former status as principal or sole god. Many of the treasures from the tomb of Tutankhamen indicate tolerance toward former gods. One inscription on a golden throne calls Tutankhamen "image of Ra, beloved of the gods," and a cabinet inscription states "eldest son of Aten in heaven." The memory of Akhenaten is also preserved in tomb objects such as a box bearing the name of Akhenaten, and an artist's palette that belonged to Akhenaten's eldest daughter Meritaten.

Tutankhamen died before a grand burial tomb could be prepared. Its importance lies in its contents—chariot bodies, state chairs, gilded couches, royal apparel, trinkets, cosmetics, statues, alabaster vessels, even food, and the golden mask of Tutankhamen himself. Most of the other royal tombs had been ravaged by robbers over the centuries.

The Excavators

Credit for discovery of the tomb was given to Howard Carter. Born May 9, 1873, in Swaffham, Norfolk, England, he was the son of a watercolor painter. At the age of 17, he was hired by Percy E. Newberry of the Egyptian Museum of Antiquities to work at the British Museum, London, to make finished drawings of Egyptian inscriptions. Carter later became assistant to Sir William Flinders Petrie, an Egyptologist, traveling in Egypt and recording in watercolors the paintings and inscriptions in temples.

In 1899, at the age of 25, Carter became inspector of monuments in Upper Egypt and Nubia, employed by the Antiquities Service, which was then administered by the French authorities. In 1904, Britain and France partitioned North Africa, the French assuming control of Morocco, and the British of Egypt. But French rights in archaeology continued, and authorization to excavate tombs required the investigator be accompanied by an inspector of antiquities and share the finds with the Antiquities Service on behalf of the Egyptians.

While Carter was an inspector of monuments, he worked for several seasons excavating the Valley of the Kings with American millionaire Theodore M. Davis. After opposition from the Egyptians, the French, and the newspapers, Carter lost his position as an inspector in 1903 due to an incident in a tomb at Saqqara.

For a time, Carter sold watercolor paintings to tourists and made paintings for Theodore Davis. In 1907, he stated working for the amateur archaeologist Carnarvon. George Edward Stanhope Molyneux Herbert became fifth Earl of Carnarvon on the death of his father in 1890. After an automobile accident he was advised by physicians to avoid the damp English winter and spent a year in Egypt, where he first became attracted to archaeological excavation.

The joint explorations of Carnarvon and Carter began in the winter of 1907–08, with excavations in the Valley of Der al-Bahari in Western Thebes. In 1910–11, they discovered an unfinished temple of Hatshepsut and other remains. In 1911–12, new ground was broken with excavations of Xois near the Nile delta. It was thought by 1922 that there were no more royal tombs in the Valley of Kings, but Carter persisted, and in December 1922 discovered the tomb of Tutankhamen.

On November 6, Carter sent a telegram to Carnarvon in England: "AT LAST HAVE MADE WONDERFUL DISCOVERY IN VALLEY. A MAGNIFICENT TOMB WITH SEALS INTACT. RE-COVERED SAME FOR YOUR ARRIVAL. CONGRATULATIONS." Carnarvon went to Egypt and 20 days later the entrance to the tomb was finally excavated and Carter entered, accompanied by Carnarvon, Lady Evelyn Herbert (Carnarvon's sister), and an assistant.

On February 17, 1923, Carter and Carnarvon entered the main burial chamber of Tutankhamen and found a wall of gold. The work of describing, classifying, and removing the shrine contents, including the mummy of the pharaoh himself, could not take place for another season. There were also disputes between Carter and the Egyptian authorities, notably with the Frenchman Pierre Lacau, appointed head of the Antiquities Service in Cairo in 1917. These disputes concerned the ownership of the antiquities in the Tutankhamen tomb—Carnarvon and Carter claiming rights to a proportion of them and Lacau maintaining all the contents were the property of the Antiquities Service and the Cairo Museum.

In March 1933, Carnarvon and Evelyn left for Cairo so that Carnarvon could negotiate for a "proper division" of the tomb antiquities. However, Carnarvon did not live to see the conclusion of the dispute or even the removal of the golden funerary mask of the Tutankhamen mummy. In April, he became seriously ill after his razor nicked a mosquito bite. Infection set in, followed by pneumonia. He died on April 6. The newspapers printed a story that he was a victim of the "Curse of the Pharaohs."

The Legend of the Curse of the Pharaohs

Curses were certainly known in ancient Egypt, usually invoking the wrath of the gods against those seeking to embezzle funds for guards, occasionally against thieves. Many tombs were robbed by grave robbers over the centuries. An inscription of the Fifth Dynasty of the Old Kingdom, made over five thousand years ago, reads: "As for any people who shall take possession of this tomb as their mortuary property or shall do any evil thing to it, judgment shall be had with them by the great God."

In his book The Curse of the Pharaohs (1975), Philipp Vandenberg states there were 22 other "mysterious" deaths of individuals associated with the tomb. The American archaeologist Arthur Mace, who had assisted Carter in opening the tomb, suffered from exhaustion after the death of Carnarvon and fell into a deep coma, dying in the same hotel as Carnarvon. George J. Gould, son of the financier, visited the tomb and died the next day after a high fever ascribed to bubonic plague. Joel Wood, a British industrialist who visited the tomb, died of a high fever on the ship carrying him back to England. Archibald Douglas Reid, a radiologist who worked on the Tutankhamen mummy, suffered from weakness, and died after returning to England.

Other fatalities associated with the tomb included a Professor Winlock, a Professor Foucraft, and archaeologists Garry Davies, Edward Harkness, and Douglas Derry. Carnarvon's wife, Lady Alimina, died in 1929, apparently from an insect bite, and Carter's secretary Richard Bethell died the same year with a circulatory collapse. When Bethell's father heard the news, he committed suicide, and reportedly his hearse ran over a boy on the way to the cemetery.

Vandenberg further claimed Carter had found a clay tablet in the antechamber with an inscription that Alan Gardiner deciphered as "Death will slay with his wings whoever disturbs the peace of the pharaoh." However, such a tablet was never cataloged and there is no trace of it.

One newspaper reported there was a hieroglyphic curse on the door of the inner shrine: "They who enter this sacred tomb shall swift be visited by wings of death," but this story is a fabrication. Similarly another report cited an inscription on the mud base of a candle that stated: "It is I who hinder the sand from choking the secret chamber. I am for the protection of the deceased and I will kill all those who cross this threshold," but the last phrase was another invention.

"The Curse of the Pharaohs" became a newspaper topic for many years and every death of an individual even distantly associated with the tomb long after the excavation was solemnly recorded as another victim of the curse.

Some of these claims were remote. They included the friend of a tourist who had entered the burial chamber; the friend was knocked down by a Cairo taxicab. An associate curator of Egyptology at the British Museum in London died peacefully in his bed, while an Egyptologist in France died of old age—both were reported as curse victims. A workman in the British Museum was said to have died suddenly while labeling objects from the tomb—although the British Museum did not have any of the Egyptian antiquities. For some time, such stories panicked collectors of Egyptian antiquities, who hurriedly donated their souvenirs to museums.

Carnarvon's son was interviewed on NBC Television in New York on July 14, 1977, and questioned about the "curse." Carnarvon's son stated he "neither believed it nor disbelieved it," but added that he would "not accept a million pounds to enter the tomb of Tutankhamen in the Valley of the Kings." A New York Daily News report claimed that the same evening, the younger Lord Carnarvon was attending a dinner in an apartment high above Manhattan and looked out over the city and saw all the lights flicker and black out. After candles were lit, he said to his hosts: "It is again the curse of Tutankhamen." However, Carter lived for 17 years after his great discovery, dying March 2, 1939, in his mid-sixties.

For decades, relics of Tutankhamen remained in the Cairo Museum, limited by space, and many objects were not even displayed. In June 1974, President Richard M. Nixon visited Egypt, where President Anwar Sadat suggested an exhibition of the masterpieces of Tutankhamen in the United States could affirm the friendly accord and goodwill between the two nations.

The subject of "King Tut's Curse" has been raised from time to time and still has believers. The term is also used by travelers in the Middle East to describe the hazard of diarrhea, also known in Mexico as "Montezuma's Revenge."

Sources:

Budge, E. A. W. Tutankhamen: Amenism, Atenism and Egyptian Monotheism. London: M. Hopkinson, 1923. Reprint, New York: Bell Publishing, 1979.

Carter, Howard. The Tomb of Tut-ankh-Amen. 3 vols. London: Cassell, 1923–33. Reprint, New York: Cooper Square Publishers, 1963.

Gilber, Katherine S., with Joan K. Holt and Sara Hudson, eds. Treasures of Tutankhamen. Catalog of an Exhibition between 1976 and 1979. New York: Ballantine Books; New York: Metropolitan Museum of Art, 1976.

Herbert, G. E. S. M. (5th Earl of Carnarvon), and Howard Carter. Five Years' Explorations at Thebes, 1907–1911. London: H. Frowde, 1912.

Hoving, Thomas. Tutankhamen: The Untold Story. New York: Simon & Schuster; London: Hamish Hamilton, 1978.

Stein, Gordon. Encyclopedia of Hoaxes. Detroit: Gale Research, 1993.

Vandenberg, Philipp. Der Fluch der Pharaonen. Scherz Verlag, 1973. English edition as The Curse of the Pharaohs. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott, 1975.

———. Der Vergessene Pharao. C. Bertelsmann Verlag, 1978. English edition as The Golden Pharaoh. New York: Macmillan; London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1980.

Wynne, Barry. Behind the Mask of Tutankhamen. New York: Taplinger, 1973.

Tuttle, Hudson (1836–1910)

American seer of the early days of Spiritualism. Tuttle was born October 4, 1836, in Berlin Heights, Ohio, and spent his early years in a wilderness on the southern shores of Lake Erie. His father's house was the headquarters for itinerant Unitarian preachers and the atmosphere was burdened with dogmatic disputations. As a result young Tuttle became at an early age skeptical of organized religion.

Tuttle attended his first Spiritualist séance at the home of a retired Congregational minister who had heard of the Rochester rappings and called in a few friends for an experiment. Tuttle fell into trance and wrote spirit messages automatically. Simultaneously with his automatic writing, raps developed and the table moved. The séances were free. The communicators, in hours of seclusion, were his teachers. "It was my only source of knowledge," he wrote in the preface to his book Arcana of Spiritualism (1871), "for I had access to few books. I had attended school eleven months in all, six of which were at a district school, and five at a small academy."

In 1857, he married Emma Rood, writer, lecturer on education, composer of songs, and a frequent contributor to the Spiritualist press.

The first article Tuttle published was on prayer in The Spiritual Telegraph. He often wrote and rewrote a script several times before the communicator would declare the result satisfactory. He began writing a story founded on spirit life. It was entitled Scenes in the Spirit World (1855). In England it was published under the title Life in Two Spheres (1895). After completing it, he began a scientific work, Arcana of Nature.

His impression was that the French naturalist Lamarck and Alexander von Humboldt, along with other intelligences, were associated in the production of the book. But he knew nothing of these great minds. He was only entering his eighteenth year. When the book was completed, his spirit guides declared it to be unsatisfactory and demanded the destruction of the script. Reluctantly he burned the large bulk of the manuscript and started again.

For two years, the remaining manuscript lay on his table and he made some correction or addition to it nearly every day. The engravings in both volumes were made by the same influences that wrote the book. He claimed no merit for himself and said: "Mine has been the task of an amanuensis, writing that which has been given to me. I claim no honour, except honestly and faithfully attempting to perform my part of the task."

Arcana of Nature, two volumes, published 1860–63, was certainly a remarkable book for the time. It was quoted by F. C. L. Büchner in his own book Force and Matter (1864) to strengthen his materialistic position, while Charles Darwin in the Descent of Man quoted statements from Tuttle's later Origin and Antiquity of Physical Man. Both Büchner and Darwin were unaware that the book was produced by an uneducated farm boy.

The spirit controls were good educators. But Tuttle never gave up his modest life as a farmer and breeder of horses in Berlin Heights, Ohio. The spirit influences did not come to Tuttle at all times. He said:

"Sometimes I have prolific periods, and again, I go over a deserted country. For days, weeks, even months, I feel forsaken and alone. The very fountains of thought seem dried up. No incitement can compel me to write, or if I attempt to do so it is worthless, or worse, unreliable. It sometimes seems to me that I have never written anything of value, and I am sure I never can again. At the same time, when I study it, this experience is one of the most convincing tests that some superior intelligence comes into my life."

He died December 15, 1910, in Berlin Heights, Ohio.

Sources:

Tuttle, Hudson. Career of Religious Ideas. New York: D. M. Bennett, 1878.

———. Career of the Christ—Idea in History. Boston: Adams, 1870.

———. Career of the God—Idea in History. Boston: Adams, 1869.

———. Ethics of Spiritualism. Chicago: Religio-Philosophical Publishing, 1878.

———. Mediumship and Its Laws. Chicago: Progressive Thinker Publishing, 1900.

———. Philosophy of Spirit and the Spirit World. London: H. A. Copley; Berlin Heights, Ohio: H. Tuttle, 1896.

———. Religion of Man and Ethics of Science. New York: M. L. Holbrook, 1890.

———. Studies in Outlying Fields of Psychic Science. New York: M. L. Holbrook, 1889.

Tuttle, Hudson, and Emma Rood Tuttle. Stories from Beyond the Borderland. Berlin Heights, Ohio: Tuttle Publsihing, 1910.

Twain, Mark (1835–1910)

Pseudonym of author Samuel Langhorne Clemens. Throughout his life, the great humorist and observer of the world around him often reflected upon the psychic and metaphysical events of which he was aware. In 1880 he wrote an article on "mental telegraphy" that related a personal experience of telepathy. He also had a vivid premonitory dream of the death of his brother Henry. Twain was an early and long-term member of the Society for Psychical Research, London.

After his death, various posthumous communications and writings were claimed. In 1917, the story Jap Herron was published in New York, purporting to come from the discarnate Mark Twain, as received by Emily Grant Hutchings and Lola V. Hays. Hutchings, the recorder of the Patience Worth material of Pearl Lenore Curran of St. Louis, was herself an author who greatly admired Mark Twain. She had a keen sense of somewhat similar humor and a strong tinge of melancholy like Mark Twain's. She had strongly wished him to communicate through her. All this furnished an ideal condition for subconscious production.

James H. Hyslop resolved the problem by interesting cross-reference experiments. The two women received the communications through the ouija board; the presence of both of them was necessary to operate it. They were brought by Hyslop to Boston. He gave each woman, at separate times, five sittings with the medium "Mrs. Chenoweth" (see Minnie M. Soule). But he did not admit them to the séance room until "Mrs. Chenoweth," who knew nothing of them, went into trance, and he made them sit behind her where they could not be seen.

Instead of the usual family relatives, Mark Twain purported to communicate with each of them. He used many of the same expressions that came through the ouija board, mentioned incidents in his life to prove his identity, described what he was doing through the women, and revealed the password that he gave to Hyslop in a St. Louis sitting.

"The outcome of the experiments," concluded Hyslop in the Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (July 1917), "is that there is abundant evidence that Mark Twain is behind the work connected with his name, though the student of psychology would probably find abundant evidence that it was colored more or less by the mind through which it came." The conclusion also applied to Brent Roberts, another posthumous Mark Twain novel that the two women received.

In Hyslop's Contact with the Other World (1919), a long chapter was devoted to other evidential spirit communications from Mark Twain.

Sources:

Paine, Albert Bigelow. Mark Twain. 3 vols. N.p., 1912.

Tweedale, Charles L(akeman) (d. 1944)

Prominent British writer on Spiritualism. He was educated at Durham University, England, and became the Church of England vicar of Weston, Otley, Yorkshire. A talented and versatile man, he was an astronomer, musician, and inventor. He published books on astronomy and discovered a comet. He was also a close friend of psychic photographer William Hope, whom he defended against hostile criticism. He died June 29, 1944.

Sources:

Tweedale, Charles L. Man's Survival After Death. N.p., 1909.

———. News From the Next World. N.p., 1940.

Tweedale, Violet (1862–1936)

British novelist, granddaughter of author Robert Chambers, and a convinced Spiritualist. She attended séances with Lord Haldane, Arthur Balfour, and his brother James Balfour. W. E. Gladstone held sittings in her house. Most of her experiences came through the mediumships of Charles Williams and Cecil Husk.

She was a powerful witness in the famous trial when trance speaker Meurig Morris sued the Daily Mail for libel in 1932. In addition to many poems and novels, she published over 30 books on Spiritualist subjects. She died December 10, 1936.

Sources:

Tweedale, Violet. The Cosmic Christ. N.p., 1930.

———. Ghosts I Have Seen. N.p., 1920.

———. Mellow Sheaves. N.p., 1927.

———. Phantoms of the Dawn. N.p., 1924.

Twigg, Ena (1914–ca. 1984)

Well-known British medium. Born in Kent, England, January 6, 1914, she was a member of a psychic family in which the parents and other children had sensitive ability. She played with spirit children at the age of seven and at 14 predicted the death of her father. Her psychic gifts disturbed her marriage to Harry Twigg.

After a serious illness, spirit visitors assured her that she would be restored to health; when she was eventually healed she made a decision to devote her life to helping other people. She became a member of the Marylebone Spiritualist Association and in due course opened her own healing clinic.

Sources:

Twigg, Ena, with Ruth Hagy Brod. Ena Twigg: Medium. New York: Hawthorn Books, 1972. Reprint, London: W. H. Allen, 1973.

Twins

It has long been believed that there is a special relationship between identical twins, a belief that has become the subject of contemporary research from a variety of approaches. Research has suggested that there are startling correspondences between twins' temperaments, personalities, lifestyles, and even sensitivity to names.

In 1979, the University of Minnesota began a study of identical twins in which twins separated for years were investigated and subjected to medical and psychological tests. The results of nine identical twin studies, involving over 15,000 questions, demonstrated affinities between the subjects.

For example, unknown to each other, Jim Spring and Jim Lewis were raised in different Ohio towns. Both married and divorced women named Linda and chose women named Betty as second wives. Each of the two Jims named his son James Allan and had a favorite dog named Toy. Both twins had remarkable similarities in medical profiles, including identical blood pressures and sleep and heartbeat patterns. Both also suddenly put on 10 pounds at the same time in their lives. At the age of 18, both Jim twins suffered similar syndromes of intermittent migraine headaches. Their drinking and smoking habits were also identical, and both chewed their fingernails.

Another pair of identical twins, Jack and Oscar, were raised apart with completely different backgrounds. Jack was brought up as an American Jew by his father after his parents separated; the mother took Oscar back to Germany (where she had been born) where he was raised as a Catholic, later joining the Nazi Youth party. In adult life, Jack ran a store in San Diego, while Oscar became a factory supervisor in Germany. But both men wore wire-rimmed eyeglasses and mustaches and two-pocket shirts with epaulets. Both were absentminded and had other matching idiosyncracies, such as storing rubber bands on their wrists.

Bridget and Dorothy were identical British twins who were raised apart after being separated soon after birth, yet when they met in 1941, each wore two bracelets on one wrist, and a watch and bracelet on the other. Each sister also wore seven rings. Each twin had married and had a family of a boy and a girl. The sons had been christened Richard Andrew and Andrew Richard, while the daughters were Karen Louise and Catherine Louise.

Many such identical twins share IQ and psychological profiles, as well as EEG tracings. It is not yet clear whether the coincidences derive from some kind of psychic bonding or simply indicate some manifestation of inheritance. It should be noted that astrologers have investigated twins, with ambiguous results to date, with the idea of verifying and informing astrology.

Sources:

Watson, Peter. Twins: An Investigation Into the Strange Coincidences in the Lives of Separated Twins. London: Hutchinson, 1981.

Twitchell, (John) Paul (ca. 1918–1971)

Founder of the ECKANKAR, a spiritual movement teaching the "ancient science of soul travel." ECKANKAR is derived from the Radhasoami religion of the Punjab area of India. Twitchell was born in Paducah, Kentucky, around 1918. He joined the navy during World War II and then pursued a career as a journalist and the life of spiritual seeking after the war.

His spiritual search led him to the Church of Absolute Monism, a Hindu offshoot of the Self-Revelation Fellowship. He became editor of the church's periodical, The Mystic Cross, but came into conflict with the church's founder, Swami Premananda, in 1955. Shortly after leaving, he became a disciple of Kirpal Singh, a teacher in the Radhasoami tradition and head of the Ruhani Satsang. He also became involved with the recently founded Church of Scientology.

In 1964 Twitchell and his wife, Gail Atkinson, moved to San Francisco, where he became an independent Radhasoami teacher, and the following year founded ECKANKAR and announced that he was the Living ECK Master. He claimed that he had originally heard of soul travel from his foster father, who learned about it from an Indian holy man, Sudar Singh, originally from Allahabad, whom Twitchell later met in Paris, France. He further claimed that he had been taught soul travel by a mysterious Tibetan master named Rebazar Tarzs, who first appeared to Twitchell in 1944 while Twitchell was serving on a U.S. Navy vessel in the Pacific. He visited India after World War II and upon returning to the United States began writing books allegedly dictated by Rebazar Tarzs.

Twitchell authored a number of books in the years after the founding of ECKANKAR. He died unexpectedly on September 17, 1971, by which time ECKANKAR had become a successful new religion. He was succeeded by Darwin Gross as the new Living ECK Master.

During the 1980s David Christopher Lane made serious charges of plagiarism against Twitchell. He suggested that Twitchell not only took his basic teachings from the Radhasoami tradition but also plagiarized lengthy passages from the books of several prominent authors. Lane's well-documented charges caused much dissension within the movement and a reappraisal of Twitchell's career.

Sources:

Lane, David Christopher. The Making of a Spiritual Movement. Del Mar, Calif.: Del Mar Press, 1983.

Simpson, Patti. Paulji: A Memoir. Menlo Park, Calif.: ECKANKAR, 1985.

Steiger, Brad. In My Soul I Am Free. New York: Lancer Books, 1968.

Twitchell, Paul. The Tiger's Fang. New York: Lancer Books, 1969.

TWO See True World Order

Two Worlds (Magazine)

Spiritualist monthly magazine, founded in 1887 as a weekly newspaper in Manchester, England, by Emma Hardinge Britten. (Another weekly paper under the same title was started in London in 1858 at the beginning of the movement in England but lasted for only a brief period.) It was, for many years, the voice of Spiritualists in the north of England (the movement being dominated at the time by the London centers). It was edited for some time by Ernest W. Oaten. Beginning in the 1930s it had as its major rival Psychic News, the newspaper edited by Maurice Barbanell in London. However, in 1960 the editorial offices of the two periodicals were united, Two Worlds was transformed into a monthly magazine, and Barbanell edited both until his death in 1981. Tony Ortzen is the current editor. Address: 7 The Leather Market, Weston St., London, SE1 3ER England. Website: http://www.users.globalnet.co.uk/~tortzen/.

Sources:

Edmunds, Simeon. Spiritualism: A Critical Survey. London: Aquarian Press, 1966.

Two Worlds. http://www.users.globalnet.co.uk/~tortzen/. March 8, 2000.

Tyl, Noel (1936–)

American astrologer, born in West Chester, Pennsylvania, on December 31, 1936. Tyl attended Harvard University and received his B.A. in psychology in 1958. He worked in business for more than a decade before becoming a writer-astrologer in 1970. He developed a relationship with Llewellyn Publications, a leading publisher of astrology literature, which, beginning in 1973 with Horoscope Construction, released a 12-volume series entitled The Principles and Practice of Astrology. The series largely established his reputation in the field. Through the 1980s he edited Astrology Today, Llewellyn's astrology magazine.

In addition to operating as a consulting astrologer, Tyl has continued to write. Additional titles include The Horoscope as Identity (1974), The Missing Moon (1979), and Holistic Astrology: The Analysis of Inner and Outer Environments (1980). He has worked to redefine astrology as a psychological counseling practice.

Sources:

Tyl, Noel. Holistic Astrology: The Analysis of Inner and Outer Environments. McLean, Va.: TAI Books, 1980.

———. The Horoscope as Identity. St. Paul: Llewellyn Publications, 1974.

———. The Missing Moon. St. Paul: Llewellyn Publications, 1979.

Typtology

The science of communicating with spirits by means of raps, various codes being arranged for the purpose. The sitters may read the alphabet aloud, or slowly pass a pencil down a printed alphabet, and the rappings will indicate letters that form a message or an answer to some question. One rap may be made to mean "yes," two "no," and so on. Some relationship seems to exist between such rapping and the use of the divining rod and pendulum in dowsing.

Tyromancy (or Tiromancy)

An old form of divination based on interpretations from cheese. Unfortunately, the method does not appear to have been recorded.

Tyrrell, G(eorge) N(ugent) M(erle) (1879–1952)

Mathematician and parapsychologist. He was a member of the council of the Society for Psychical Research (SPR), London (1940–52), and was elected its president in 1945. Born in 1879, he was educated at Haileybury School, Seafield Engineering College, and London University (where he attained degrees in physics and mathematics). A pioneer in the study of wireless telegraphy, Tyrrell worked under Guglielmo Marconi. He served in the British Army during World War I.

Tyrrell joined the SPR in 1908. After conducting a series of experiments in telepathy and precognition with Gertrude Johnson, he devoted himself exclusively to psychical research. He undertook further experiments with Johnson in 1924, using quantitative methods, and invented mechanical devices to randomize selection and scoring. His apparatus, unfortunately, was destroyed during an air raid in World War II, and in the years after the war he concentrated on the theoretical and philosophical aspects of extrasensory perception. Out of this period came possibly his single most important volume, Apparitions (1953), cited for its clarity in integrating data. He died October 29, 1952.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Salter, W. H., G. W. Fisk, and Harry H. Price. "G. N. M. Tyrrell and His Contributions to Psychical Research." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 37 (1953).

Tyrrell, George N. M. Apparitions. London: Society for Psychical Research, 1953. Reprinted in Science and Psychical Phenomena and Apparitions. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1961.

———. "Further Research in Extrasensory Perception." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 44, no. 147 (1936–37).

———. Grades of Significance. N.p., 1930.

———. Homo Faber. N.p., 1951.

———. The Nature of Human Personality. London: Allen & Unwin, 1954.

———. The Personality of Man. Harmondsworth, UK: Penguin Books, 1947.

———. "Presidential Address." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 47, no. 171 (1945).

———. Science and Psychical Phenomena. London, 1938. Reprinted in Science and Psychical Phenomena and Apparitions. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1961.

U

U.S. Psychotronics Association

Founded in 1975 for persons interested in the study of psychotronics, "the science of mind-body-environment relationships, concerned with the interactions of matter, energy and consciousness," psychic phenomena, free energy systems, radionics, and alternative health methodologies.

It provides a forum for the exchange of current research developments in psychotronics; seeks to maintain high standards of ethical, humanitarian, and scientific practices in the study and application of psychotronics; promotes standardization in investigation, testing, reporting, and evaluation of psychotronics; and preserves the history of the field.

The association promotes continuing education and training of members, presents members' views to the government, the public and other organizations, bestows research awards, and makes available cassette recordings of conference lectures. Research areas include: anti-gravity, agri-radionics, free energy, psychic detectors, psychic instrumentation (hardware types), radionics, and tesla waves. It publishes a quarterly newsletter and can be contacted at PO Box 45, Elkhorn, WI 53121. Website: http://www.elknet.net/uspa.

Übersinnliche Welt, Die (Journal)

Former German Spiritualist monthly, founded in 1893. It changed into a biweekly in 1902 and merged with Psyche under the title Psyche und die Übersinnliche Welt.

Udumbara (Center)

Alternative name for the Minnesota Zen Meditation Center and also the title of their biannual periodical.

UFO See Unidentified Flying Objects and the Occult

UFOCAT

Computerized files of reports of UFOs and related material, maintained by the Center for UFO Studies and Dr. Donald A. Johnson. UFOCAT99 contains over 109,000 UFO reports and related information, which may be retrieved by date, geographic location, and special features. The files are available at minimum cost to serious researchers. Inquiries concerning UFOCAT should be directed to the J. Allen Hynek Center for UFO Studies, 2457 W. Peterson Ave., Chicago, IL 60659.

The UFO Examiner (Journal)

Former quarterly publication of Private UFO Investigations, a group concerned with UFO reports and international sightings, headquartered in Hazelton, Iowa.

UFOIN See UFO Information Network

UFO Information Network (UFOIN)

Name adopted in the late 1970s by the Page Research Library. It published a newsletter, which merged with Ohio Sky Watcher in 1979 to become UFO Ohio. UFOIN, which existed only a few years, collected and collated information on UFOs and other Fortean phenomena. It was headquartered in Rome, Ohio.

UFO Information Retrieval Center

Founded in 1966 to collect, analyze, publish, and disseminate information on reports of unidentified flying objects and related anomalies. The center compiles statistics, conducts research programs, maintains a library and an on-line data base, runs children's and students' services, and gives referrals. From time to time it publishes Reference for Outstanding UFO Sighting Reports. Address: 3131 W. Cochise Dr., No. 158, Phoenix, AZ 85051-9501.

UFO Investigator (Newsletter)

Longtime monthly newsletter of National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena. It was discontinued in 1980, a short time before the organization folded.

UFO Magazine

UFO Magazine, the primary English-language UFO newsstand periodical as the twenty-first century begins, was founded in 1985 as a quarterly California UFO periodical, but quickly moved to national prominence as the abduction phenomenon renewed public interest in extraterrestrial explanations of UFOs. Editor Vicki Ecker also demonstrated both a knowledge of the field and a genuine interest in reporting the news. Several other newsstand periodicals, since defunct, played to outlandish and sensational accounts of UFOs and contactees, and were not above fabricating stories to fill space. The magazine has adopted an objective approach that is nevertheless sympathetic to the ufological enterprise.

Each issue of UFO Magazine is built around a half-dozen or more feature articles that highlight spectacular sightings, interview celebrities concerning their views on UFOs, focus on issues of government involvement in (and cover-up of) UFO research, debate controversies within the ufological community, and inform readers on various related topics such as time travel or conspiracy theories. The magazine covers more prominent UFO conventions, especially those on America's West Coast, and provides a synopsis of presentations and pictures of participants. Regular columns review new UFO books, highlight prominent websites, and provide contact information on UFO organizations.

In the late 1990s, the magazine launched its own website at http://www.ufomag.com/. It provides space for timely items of interest, guest opinions, an archive of past articles from the magazine, and editorials by Ecker, her husband Don Ecker, the magazine's research director, and publisher William J. Birnes. Also, Peter Robbins continues his timely surveys of other UFO-related websites in a regular page on the UFO Magazine website. UFO Magazine may be contacted at 5455 Centinela Ave., Los Angeles, CA 90066.

Sources:

UFO Magazine. Los Angeles, California. n.d.
UFO Magazine. http://www.ufomag.com/. June 10, 2000.

UFO Magazine New Bulletin

Former quarterly publication reporting UFO sightings, with critical analyses, published in Cleveland, Ohio.

UFO Nachrichten (Journal)

German bimonthly publication concerned with UFOs. Last known address: Karl L. Veit, Deutsche UFO-Studiengesellschaft, Ventla-Verlag, Postfach 13185, 6200 Wiesbaden 13, Germany.

UFO Newsclipping Service

Monthly publication that reproduces North American and other newspaper reports of UFOs and other related unexplained phenomena. It may be ordered from 2 Caney Valley Dr., Plumerville, AR 72127-8725.

UFO-Nyt (Journal)

Danish-language quarterly periodical dealing with unidentified flying objects. It is published by Skandinavisk UFO Information, Postbox 6, DK-2820, Gentofte, Denmark. Website: http://www.ufo.dk.

UFO Quebec (Periodical)

Bilingual (French and English) Canadian quarterly concerned with UFOs. Last known address: Claude McDuff, BP 53, Dollard-des-Ormeaux, PQ Canada H9G 2H5.

UFO Reporter (Journal)

Former bimonthly publication reporting UFO sightings and related events, published in La Mesa, California.

UFO Research Newsletter

Former monthly journal edited by Gordon I. R. Lore from Los Angeles, California.

Uhland, Ludwig (1787–1862)

Famous German poet who figured posthumously in an interesting lawsuit in Berlin over ownership of a holograph parchment apport obtained in a séance with Else Arnheim in 1920. The medium, in trance, described the presence of Ludwig Uhland. There appeared in her hands, which were tightly clasped by a well-known German author, a yellowed piece of parchment with two short verses scrawled on it, signed: "Uhland, 1920."

The handwriting was pronounced identical to that of Uhland's, the parchment was of his era, and the verses were in genuine Uhland style. A clairvoyant, to whom Uhland's handwriting and the parchment were shown, declared after touching both papers that they were written by the same hand but that a long interval had elapsed between the writing of them.

The German author whose hand had encircled the medium's when the parchment appeared claimed the paper. Since witnesses stated that it had been thrust into the medium's hand, the court decided that the parchment belonged to the medium.

UHSC See Universal Hagar's Spiritual Church

Ullman, Montague (1916–)

Psychiatrist, parapsychologist, and trustee of the American Society for Psychical Research. He was born on September 9, 1916, in New York City and studied at the City College of New York (B.S., 1935), New York University College of Medicine (M.D., 1938), and New York Medical College (1948). After graduation, he joined the psychoanalytic faculty of New York Medical College (1950–62). Having encountered psi events in his counseling work, he began to work with Gardner Murphy in exploring ESP experimentally. With Murphy and Laura Dale, he helped establish the medical section of the ASPR. The section lasted until 1953.

That same year, the REM (or rapid eye movement) stage of sleep was discovered. Ullman soon had the idea of using REM sleep in a controlled experiment in telepathy. With funds provided by the Parapsychology Foundation, Ullman, Karlis Osis, and E. Douglas Dean carried out the initial experiments. Murphy then arranged for a large grant for the establishment of the famous Dream Laboratory at Maimonides Hospital in New York City. Ullman became its initial director and an associate professor of psychiatry at Downstate Medical Center, State University of New York. The work of the dream laboratory produced some striking results, leading Ullman to conclude that altered states of consciousness, such as dreaming, were associated with ESP.

In 1966 Ullman was elected president of the Parapsychological Association. He is the author of numerous papers and several books, the most important for parapsychology being his work on dream telepathy.

Sources:

Ullman, Montague. "On the Occurrence of Telepathic Dreams." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (April 1959).
Ullman, Montague, and Roberto Cavanna, eds. Proceedings of an International Conference on Hypnosis, Drugs, Dreams and Psi: Psi and Altered States of Consciousness. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1968.
Ullman, Montague, and Stanley Krippner. Dream Studies and Telepathy: An Experimental Approach. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1970.
Ullman, Montague, Stanley Krippner, and Alan Vaughan. Dream Telepathy. 1979. Reprint, Los Angeles: J. P. Tarcher, 1985.
Ullman, Montague, and Nan Zimmerman. Working with Dreams. London: Hutchinson, 1983.

Umbanda

A contemporary Afro-Brazilian religion. Like Santeria, it is basically a possession religion in which members assume the form of deities both for worship and magic. It was founded in 1920, at a time when a wave of anti-European feelings was sweeping through the country, fanned by the inspiration of a young man, Zélio de Moraes, by an alleged Indian spirit. Among the initial leaders were former Spiritist mediums who became known for receiving spirits of caboclos, Brazilian Indians, and pretos velhos, former African slaves.

Umbanda's stronghold is Rio de Janeiro and the surrounding area in the south of Brazil. Worship is lively with much clapping, singing, and dancing.

Sources:

Brown, Diana DeGroat. Umbanda: Religion and Politics in Urban Brazil. Ann Arbor, Mich.: UMI Press, 1986.

Hess, David J. Samba in the Night: Spiritism in Brazil. New York: Columbia University Press, 1994.

St. Clair, David. Drum and Candle. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday; London: Macdonald, 1971.

Ummo Hoax

Ummo is a planet that reputedly circles the star Iumma located some 14.6 light-years from Earth. Knowledge of this planet and the associated star emerged in 1965 through Spanish contactee Fernando Sesma, president of the Society of the Friends of Space, headquartered in Madrid. In 1967 Sesma let it be known that a spacecraft would appear near the city on the evening of June 1. Contact with the Ummites was quite different. Sesma had neither direct physical contact nor telepathic contact. Instead he was contacted via the mail or by telephone. He had received several lengthy documents in typescript that included descriptions of Ummo and insights into a variety of scientific, psychological, technological, and socio-political issues.

The messages from Ummo intersected with a series of UFO sightings that began on February 6, 1966. Several people saw the saucer near Alauche, Spain, and one, José Luis Jordan Peña, drew a sketch and reported it to the newspapers. The saucer was distinguished by a peculiar symbol. A second sighting occurred on June 1, 1967, at which time pictures were taken. One picture showed the same symbol Jordan had reported the previous year. Copies of the pictures were recovered by a Madrid newspaper photographer from an anonymous source. Adding to the mystery, a flyer signed with the name Henri Dagousset was circulated, suggesting that the 1967 UFO had left behind some small cylinders and asking anyone who found one to make contact through the general post office. One of these was sent anonymously to UFO author Marius Leuget. Inside the object was a piece of paper with the mysterious symbol.

In the days after the announcement of Sesma's contact with the Ummites others began to report intriguing but anonymous contacts with people who also claimed to be from Ummo. In the meantime the lengthy messages from the Ummites continued to appear. By 1983 the number had grown to some 6,700.

While written from a knowledgeable standpoint, the Ummo communications were always troubling because of their lack of a means of independently verifying that they were from Ummites. None of those who wrote and circulated the documents allowed any direct contact. In addition, none of the other people who claimed contact were ever located. Then, the U.S.-based Ground Saucer Watch examined the pictures of the Ummo symbol and determined that they were taken of a small object held close to the camera. The saucer appeared to be an eight-inch plate with the symbol painted on it in ink.

In spite of the finding concerning the photographs and the lack of independent verification of either the sightings or the documents, the latter have been published in both English and Spanish. The Ummo material has subsequently been integrated into the large body of flying saucer contactee material and several websites have been placed on the Internet, including one detailing the Ummite philosophy at http://perso.wanadoo.fr/ummo.textes-essentiels/anglais/a016.htm (as of December 1999).

Sources:

Ribera, Antonio. Ufo Contact from Planet Ummo: The Incredible Truth. 2 vols. Tucson, Ariz.: UFO Books, n.d.

Sesma, Fernando. Otro Planeta Habitado, Ummo. Madrid, Spain: Editorial Grafica Espejo, 1967.

Vallee, Jaques. Revelations: Alien Contact and Human Deception. New York: Ballantine Books, 1991.

Underhill, Leah

Married name of Leah Fox, the eldest of the famous Fox sisters, who launched American Spiritualism. She became Mrs. Underhill by her third marriage. She published the book The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism (1885; reprinted 1976).

Understanding Cults and Spiritual Movements (Research Publication Series)

A short-lived research journal published three times a year in the 1980s and designed to analyze critically new religious groups and their leaders. David Christopher Lane, its editor, defined its goals:

"With the continuing growth of new spiritual movements, it is imperative for both the scholar and the seeker to be able to discriminate between groups which are fraudulent and manipulative and those which are genuine and beneficial. The failure to do so has troublesome consequences: witness Jim Jones and Jonestown. What is necessary, therefore, in the examination of religion and its mystical claims—be they old and traditional like Roman Catholicism or new and emerging like Eckankar—with unbridled rational scrutiny. That is, the opportunity to fully investigate every facet about the particular spiritual movement: from the biography of its founder, the history of its organization, the value of its teachings, to the practical application of its techniques, etc.

"Understanding Cults and Spiritual Movements is . . . interested in promoting rational inquiries into the entire cult phenomenon. Editorially, it does not hold to any particular religious doctrine, nor does it have any church affiliation. Thus, in this way, it is an open system of study primarily concerned with documented appraisements which help in developing a keen sense of critical discrimination."

Lane established a high standard of scholarly reporting and investigation. Lane has become a leading authority on the history of the Radhasoami spiritual movement, and much of the emphasis of Understanding Cults and Spiritual Movements was directed to an examination of the new religions that emerged out of that tradition. Most of the writings originally published in the 1980s have been republished as a book, Exposing Cults. Lane now teaches in Los Angeles.

Sources:

Lane, David Christopher. Exposing Cults: When the Skeptical Mind Confronts the Mystical. New York: Garland Publishing, 1994.

Understanding Magazine

Journal published into the 1980s by Daniel W. Fry, author of the book White Sands Incident (1954), in which he claimed contact with a UFO. Understanding explored the metaphysical ideas that grew out of Fry's claimed contacts. It was the organ of World Understanding, the religious group Fry founded to promote his perspective.

Underwood, Peter (1923–)

British writer on occultism and psychical investigation. He has also written on the cinema. He is a member of the Society for Psychical Research, the vice president of the Unitarian Society for Psychical Studies, and a former member of the Research Committee of the Psychic Research Organization.

Underwood took part in investigations into a haunting, conducted worldwide tests in telepathy and ESP, and has compiled comprehensive files of hauntings in the British Isles. He has been president and chairman of the Ghost Club for many years. He has written a number of books, has lectured extensively on psychic matters, and made several hundred television appearances and radio broadcasts. His interests have reached far beyond ghosts and hauntings to include horror movies, vampires, and the occult in general.

Sources:

Underwood, Peter. The Complete Book of Dowsing and Divining. London: Rider, 1980.

———. Dictionary of the Supernatural. 1978. Reprinted as Dictionary of the Occult of Supernatural. London: Harrap, 1978.

———. A Gazetteer of British Ghosts. New York: Walker, 1975.

———. A Gazetteer of Scottish and Irish Ghosts. New York: Bell, 1985.

———. Ghosts and How to See Them. North Pomfret, Vt.: Trafalgar Square, 1995.

———. Haunted London. N.p., 1973.

———. Hauntings; New Light on the Greatest True Ghost Stories of the World. London: Dent, 1977.

———. No Common Task: The Autobiography of a Ghost Hunter. N.p., 1983.

———. The Vampire's Bedside Companion. London: Frewin, 1975.

Unguents

General term for ointments used in anointing ceremonies in various religions from Christianity to witchcraft. There are many kinds of magical unguents, each with its peculiar properties. Christians ascribed these compounds to the devil, who they believed invented them in order to harm the human race. According to medieval mythology, for example, one such unguent was composed of human (or even baby) fat and was said to be used by witches to enable them to fly through the air.

Many old recipes exist for unguents to induce sleep or visions, and these unguents were made from various obscure ingredients. Some of them are described in Des Science Occultes by Eusèbe Salverte (1829).

Sources:

Robbins, Rossell Hope. The Encyclopedia of Witchcraft and Demonology. New York: Crown Publishers, 1959.

Unidentified Flying Objects and the Occult

UFOs entered popular consciousness as "flying saucers"—the name an anonymous wire-service reporter gave to the silvery discs Americans were reporting by the thousands in the last week of June 1947. At 3 P.M. on June 24 private pilot Kenneth Arnold, passing over Mount Rainier, Washington, spotted nine shiny disc-shaped objects flying in formation at what he conservatively estimated to be 1200 mph. The worldwide publicity resulting from his sighting, plus the other sightings that came in its immediate wake, brought the UFO age into being.

Since then UFOs have been the focus of furious controversy. Many dispute their existence, claiming that unexplained reports exist only because of inadequate investigation or insufficient data. Proponents counter that some of the best cases have withstood the most thorough scrutiny. The debate that began in earnest in 1947 continues, with essentially the same arguments being recycled endlessly.

Early Reports of UFOs

The UFO phenomenon did not spring abruptly into being one summer afternoon in 1947. In fact, the first UFO book, Charles Fort's The Book of the Damned, was published in 1919. An eccentric social critic and keen satirist, Fort collected accounts of anomalous physical phenomena, including extraordinary aerial objects, and poked fun at scientists' sometimes labored efforts to account for them in prosaic terms. In The Book of the Damned and two subsequent books, New Lands (1923) and Lo! (1931), he theorized that visitors from other worlds are observing Earth.

Although it is often claimed that the phenomenon has been part of human history for many centuries, reports of anything resembling modern UFOs do not appear in print until the early decades of the nineteenth century. UFOs, in other words, seem to be a product of the modern age. In the twentieth century UFOs were called, successively, "airships," "foo fighters," and "ghost rockets" before "flying saucers" and (starting in the late 1940s, in U.S. Air Force memos), "unidentified flying objects" and (in the early 1950s) "UFOs."

Postwar UFO Investigations

Between 1947 and 1969 the U.S. Air Force ran three successive public UFO projects. The first was code-named Sign, followed by Grudge (1949–52) and Blue Book (1952–69). A faction within Project Sign concluded by mid-1948 that UFOs were extraterrestrial spacecraft, but air force Chief of Staff Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg rejected its report. Reorganized as Grudge, the project took a pronounced anti-UFO line. Except for a period between 1951 and 1953, when Capt. Edward J. Ruppelt, neither pro- nor anti-UFO but committed to open-minded inquiry, directed the project (renamed Blue Book in March 1952), Air Force UFO investigations sought to debunk sightings and to explain them, if not always persuasively, as arising from misidentifications and hoaxes.

In 1966 the Air Force entered into a contract with the University of Colorado ostensibly to conduct an independent investigation under the leadership of physicist Edward U. Condon but in fact to find a way of ridding itself of its UFO albatross. The Condon committee, as it was called informally, soon became embroiled in controversy as Condon's view, which echoed the Air Force's in dismissing UFOs as nonsense, were known. Released in January 1969, the Condon Report (formally titled Scientific Study of Unidentified Flying Objects) declared the phenomenon nonexistent and further research pointless. The National Academy of Sciences endorsed the report's conclusions, and in December 1969 the Air Force cited them when it announced it was closing Blue Book. To many it appeared as if the UFO controversy had ended.

Yet the Condon Report had its critics, including University of Arizona atmospheric physicist James E. McDonald and Northwestern University astronomer (and longtime Blue Book consultant) J. Allen Hynek, who pointedly observed that fully one-third of the cases in the report were listed as unsolved. They also contended that even some of the "explained" cases had been inadequately accounted for. In November 1970 a UFO subcommittee of the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics, explicitly rejecting Condon's conclusions, remarked on the "small residue of well-documented but unexplainable cases which form the hard core of the UFO controversy." Hynek's 1972 book The UFO Experience argued for renewed inquiry into what he thought might prove to be "not merely the next small step in the march of science but a mighty and totally unexpected quantum leap."

A wave of sightings in the fall of 1973 served to revive popular interest. By the 1980s much of the fascination focused on abduction stories, reported in such widely read books as Budd Hopkins's Missing Time (1981) and Whitley Strieber's Communion (1987), and on alleged official cover-ups of UFO secrets, including the crash of an unidentified object near Roswell, New Mexico in 1947. In 1994 the Air Force acknowledged its cover-up of the so-called Roswell incident but said authorities at the time had been trying to conceal a classified project, Mogul, in which balloons were sent aloft to monitor possible Soviet nuclear tests. Three years later, in a follow-up study, it theorized that the humanoid bodies associated with the crash were "anthropomorphic test dummies that were carried aloft by U.S. Air Force high altitude balloons for scientific research"—though such tests had not commenced until six years later.

Though polls have consistently found that a significant plurality of Americans "believe" in UFOs, the scientific establishment continues to treat the phenomenon as illegitimate. In the fall of 1997, however, an international panel of scientists met in Tarrytown, New York, to examine a body of UFO evidence, mostly cases involving physical evidence, presented by a small group of ufologists. The panel's report, released in June 1998, cautiously stated that "unexplained observations" exist—though it distanced itself from extraterrestrial theories—and that further evidence of the best cases is worth science's time.

Nonetheless, UFOs remain a fringe subject. Most scientific investigations of the phenomenon since the Condon period have been conducted by individuals acting on their own or in concert with such civilian groups as the J. Allen Hynek Center for UFO Studies (CUFOS), the Mutual UFO Network, and the Fund for UFO Research. CUFOS, founded by Hynek in 1973 (Hynek died in 1986), publishes the Journal of UFO Studies, the one refereed scientific journal devoted exclusively to the subject.

Schism: Science vs. the Occult

The controversy about UFOs and their meaning has generated innumerable books, scientific papers, popular articles, specialist periodicals in many languages, and Internet websites. Much of this writing, especially in mainstream magazines, newspapers, and journals, has been from a skeptical perspective. Active UFO proponents worldwide probably number no more than several thousand, and they range from the intellectually careful to the wildly credulous. The literature they have produced since the 1940s documents a variety of approaches to the questions raised by UFO reports.

Early on, active proponents divided themselves into two camps. The first, who in the 1950s started calling themselves "ufologists," held a relatively conservative view. In their reading of the phenomenon, UFOs were unexplained occurrences that merited conscientious study. Scientific procedures and logical analysis of the evidence would eventually yield a solution, which probably would validate the notion of extraterrestrial visitation. Ufologists thought communication with UFO intelligences might occur in the future but rejected claims that such contacts were already taking place.

The second camp consisted of individuals sometimes called "saucerians." Saucerians typically were enthusiasts of occultism and the paranormal. Many had backgrounds as active Theosophists, Spiritualists, or followers of other esoteric doctrines. Some believed—even before the Arnold sighting put flying saucers on the world stage—that contact with otherworldly beings not only was possible but already had been accomplished. Such beings, who lived on other planets, in the spirit realm, or in the astral world (or all of these), were on the whole advanced and benevolent, concerned about the fate of the lowly, violent human race and engaged in efforts to guide our spiritual evolution in positive directions. Believers also acknowledged, however, that evil space and spirit entities, operating in concert with terrestrial allies, sought to exert malevolent influences over life on Earth.

Charles Fort's books, especially the collective omnibus The Books of Charles Fort (1941), influenced many individuals who would go on to become ufologists. If Fort had alerted them to reports of unusual aerial phenomena, he had also piqued their interest in other mysteries of the physical world: falls from the sky, monsters, archaeological anomalies, and more. The Fortean Society continued to collect and chronicle accounts of "Fortean phenomena" after Fort's death. In the early UFO age a few ufological theorists, most notably Morris K. Jessup (in The Case for the UFO, [1955], and The Expanding Case for the UFO, [1957]), sought a sort of unified field theory of anomalistics. Jessup wrote that spillage from "celestial hydroponic tanks" in alien spacecraft causes falls of fish, frogs, and other organic matter, and in his view archaeological evidence indicates that earth once housed an advanced civilization which has now returned to its ancestral home in flying saucers.

Both ufologists and saucerians read Fate magazine, the first issue (Spring 1948) of which featured a long article by Kenneth Arnold. A digest-sized pulp quarterly which went bimonthly in 1949 and then monthly in 1952, Fate became the only national magazine to cover UFOs on a regular basis. It also reported on Fortean occurrences. Its main interest, however, was the psychic. Even ufologists who initially had no particular interest in such matters could not help being exposed to material on ghosts, poltergeists, ESP, and psychokinesis.

The most important early saucerian theorist was California occultist N. Meade Layne, founder of the Borderland Sciences Research Foundation. To Layne, who tied the old occult idea of an "etheric world" to the new phenomenon of flying saucers, UFOs were "ether ships." They and their occupants, the "ethereans," come from a fourth dimension of existence or atomic vibration. They enter our realm by lowering their vibratory rates. Their realm exists as an etheric counterpart of our universe. Its inhabitants are also our ethereal counterparts, but they are far more advanced than we are. In the Borderland publication Round Robin and in his book The Ether Ship and Its Solution (1950), Layne brings forth an eclectic mix of Theosophy, Swedenborgianism, Spiritualism, and Fortean events. Much of the material came from San Diego medium Mark Probert, who channeled teachings from alleged discarnates, among them the 500,000-year-old Himalayan philosopher Yada Di' Shi'ite.

Saucerians embraced Layne's ideas, and favorite Layne phrases such as "mat" (materialization) and "demat" (dematerialization) quickly entered their vocabulary. To southern California's contactee subculture, which arose in the early 1950s in the wake of claimed contacts (physical and telepathic) with space people by George Adamski, George Van Tassel, and others, Layne was an intellectual hero. To ufologists, who despised the contactees and all they stood for, he was just another crackpot. Yet a modified version of his idea, called the 4D (fourth-dimensional) theory, found favor among some ufologists. Here science fiction, another important influence on first-generation ufologists, was at least as much an inspiration as watered-down Borderland doctrine.

Generally speaking, ufologists and saucerians existed in separate universes, the former as would-be (and sometimes actual) scientists, the latter as more or less open occultists. In the 1960s, however, the lines began to blur, and occultism became a major force in ufology. Before then, ufologists had assumed that they were dealing with a reasonably straightforward issue. As they saw it, the UFO phenomenon consisted of credible observations of anomalous lights and structured objects in the sky. A number of prominent ufologists went further and included reports of humanoid occupants (later called "close encounters of the third kind") in their definition of the phenomenon. Unlike the golden-haired, angelic "space brothers" of contactee lore, these entities were both uncommunicative and strange enough—alien—to frighten those who encountered them. Such reports were consistent with the conservative version of the extraterrestrial hypothesis ufologists championed.

By the mid-1960s, however, new developments challenged ufology's dominant view that UFOs are space visitors. For one thing, UFO encounters seemed to be getting weirder. Persons of ostensible sanity and sincerity claimed to have been abducted into UFOs and communicated with their crews, who gave odd, conflicting accounts of themselves, their motives, and their origins. Monstrous creatures showed up in areas where UFOs were being seen. UFO witnesses sometimes complained of postsighting visits by odd-looking, dark-suited individuals like the menacing "men in black" in saucerian literature. Some close-encounter percipients told investigators of poltergeistlike infestations in their homes.

Ultraterrestrials: A Malevolent Genesis

Many of these claims seemed incompatible with extraterrestrial theories, which started to fall out of favor in some circles of ufology. The principal figure in this revisionist ufology, at least initially, was writer John A. Keel, whose investigations in New York, West Virginia, and Ohio elicited scores of incredible tales that could not be shrugged off as the creations of lunatics and charlatans. On the other hand, these were extraordinary claims without extraordinary—or even ordinary—proof. Someone more cautious would have hesitated to use such material, which existed only in testimony (admittedly, for all its fantastic qualities, at times compelling testimony), to construct a phantasmagorical explanatory scheme. Brash and opinionated, Keel had no such reluctance.

Keel credited Layne with having "worked it all out in the early 1950s;" unfortunately, Keel added, "nobody would listen to him." But ufologists, Forteans, and psychic enthusiasts were listening to Keel, whose writing and pronouncements excoriated traditional ufology as the domain of "buffs" who lacked the courage, the imagination, or even the mental health to face the truth. The truth according to Keel was that "ultraterrestrials" from the "superspectrum" (Keel's term for the etheric realm) are entering our world and doing terrible things to us. "We are biochemical robots helplessly controlled by forces that can scramble our brains, destroy our memories and use us in any way they see fit," he wrote. "They have been doing it to us forever." Here he parted radically from Layne, who believed the ethereans to be largely benevolent.

To Keel the contact claims loved by saucerians were not the hoaxes suspected by ufologists; they were actual experiences, but not the sort contactees thought they were. According to Keel, "The quasi-angels of Biblical times have become magnificent spacemen. The demons, devils, and false angels were recognized as liars and plunderers by early man. These same impostors now appear as long-haired Venusians."

He holds that Homo sapiens came into existence because of a war waged between ultraterrestrial factions. One faction took on human form so that it could more easily communicate with Neanderthals, whom this ultraterrestrial group wanted to enlist in its "physical army." An unintended consequence of this assumption of physical form was erotic desire. Sexual intercourse between the ultraterrestrials and the protohuman Neanderthals created the modern human race. As Keel tells the tale in Our Haunted Planet (1971), "This produced strange responses in [the offspring's] materialized nervous system. Emotions were born. Frequencies were changed. The direct control of the superintelligence was driven from their bodies. They were trapped on Earth, unable to ascend the electromagnetic scale and reenter their etheric world. With the loss of control they became animals, albeit highly intelligent animals."

The other ultraterrestrials continue to torment us, their former adversaries, and effectively control the world, manipulating our social, political, scientific, and religious beliefs, creating all paranormal phenomena and destroying the lives of individual human beings who interact with them.

Jacques Vallee and Magicland

A more restrained, erudite occult ufology is expressed in a series of books by an equally influential theorist, Jacques Vallee. A French American educated in astronomy and computer science (with a Ph.D. in the latter), Vallee worked at Northwestern University with Allen Hynek in the mid-1960s. His first two books, Anatomy of a Phenomenon (1965) and Challenge to Science (1966, with Janine Vallee), were hailed as seminal works of scientific UFO literature. But soon Vallee's thoughts had gone elsewhere, back to an early fascination with the esoteric. In Passport to Magonia (1969) Vallee holds that UFOs are a modern manifestation of a supernatural otherworld long ago known as Magonia ("Magicland," according to one controversial translation), whose inhabitants other ages experienced as angels, demons, and fairies.

Passport was misread by some as an effort to depict the UFO phenomenon as a modern folklore (folklore here being equated with delusion). More careful reading reveals Vallee's true meaning: an unknowable "other intelligence" plays to human dreams and manifests accordingly; it manipulates human consciousness and seeks to affect human affairs. Though Vallee sees nothing inherently evil in this, his idea is strikingly like Keel's.

If Vallee at first looked less paranoid than Keel, elements of paranoia would show up soon enough. In such subsequent books as Messengers of Deception (1979) and Revelations (1991), Vallee speculates that a shadowy human group, intent on manipulating societal consciousness (for reasons Vallee never explains), may be producing fraudulent UFO encounters and paranormal occurrences. It is even conceivable, Vallee hints, that this group has some kind of link with Magonia itself. This group or the UFO phenomenon or both—again Vallee is unclear—comprise a "control system" which communicates with us on a subliminal level, employing a symbolic language of "metalogic" as well as a "schedule of reinforcement." In his view, "UFOs can never be analyzed or conceived because they are the means through which man's concepts are being rearranged."

In time, Vallee persuaded his friend and onetime mentor Hynek that the quest for nuts-and-bolts extraterrestrial UFOs was doomed to certain failure. Particularly in his later years, Hynek's pronouncements took on an increasingly occultish coloration, even to the extent of references to the astral world and to elementals. While such talk provided ammunition for his critics and made many of Hynek's friends and colleagues uncomfortable, it also reflected a longtime, privately held interest in the occult.

Journalism on the Fringe

Under Charles Bowen's editorship Flying Saucer Review (FSR), published in England, carried some of the best ufological writing of the 1960s and became for a time the world's most influential UFO magazine. Two or three years into Bowen's stewardship, FSR's contents turned more and more to extraordinary claims and extreme speculations. Eventually, as Bowen's health began to fail, Gordon Creighton—temperamentally much like Keel—assumed de facto (then, in 1982, actual) editorship. Sober material continued to appear, but increasingly Creighton's openly supernaturalist approach dominated the pages of FSR. According to Creighton, the jinn, the demonic spirits of Middle Eastern mythology, are the cause of UFO, Fortean, and paranormal phenomena, and they are doing all manner of harm to the human race. Among other atrocious acts they are responsible for the AIDS epidemic. (Comparable views figure in the writings of Salvador Freixedo, sometimes called the Latin American John Keel, and of California ufologist Ann Druffel.)

By 1984 Creighton's extremism had so alienated more conservative ufologists that one of them, John Rimmer, was led to observe, "No journal espousing the bizarre beliefs that are now emanating from [FSR's] pages can be considered worthy to be the literary flagship of British ufology. From now on, it seems, it will be of interest largely to paranoid cultists, conspiracy-mongers, and students of fringe literature." FSR's readership and influence have declined markedly during Creighton's tenure.

More UFO Theories

Not all proponents of occult ufology and anomalistics went as far as Creighton, but the notion that UFOs and other strange phenomena may be related, and all the product of paranormal forces, continued to have a wide appeal. Two popular British writers, Janet and Colin Bord, argued the case for a unified paranormal theory in a number of books. In Alien Animals (1981) they chronicle worldwide reports of anomalous creatures. All such reports, in their view, "have features in common which suggest they are all aspects of a single phenomenon, together with UFOs and other weird apparitions." These otherworldly entities may feed on electrical power and "earth energies."

Another theorist in what may be termed the paracryptozoological school, the late F. W. Holiday (author of The Dragon and the Disc, 1973), held that all through history good and evil entities have fought for the soul of the human race. To the ancients the disc represented the benevolent forces, the dragon the destructive ones, and the two have a sort of symbiotic relationship. Creatures such as the Loch Ness Monster are dragons in the literal sense—supernatural and evil. Discs, of course, are flying saucers. On June 2, 1973, accompanied by Holiday, the Rev. Dr. Donald Omand exorcised Loch Ness and subsequently other British and European lakes in which serpent-like beasts traditionally are believed to dwell.

Parapsychologist D. Scott Rogo offered a different sort of paranormal theory to explain UFO and Fortean occurrences. They are, he wrote, the product of mass psychic energy. If the psychokinetic energy emanated by the unconscious of a single individual can produce something so dramatic as a poltergeist, what might the psychokinesis of the entire human race produce? Rogo speculated in The Haunted Universe (1977) that "our entire culture may be projecting UFOs psychically" in response to our "needs and expectations."

Psychologist Michael Grosso calls these psychokinetically generated entities "psychoterrestrials." Their function is to affect the evolution of human consciousness, specifically to break down modern humanity's excessive focus on materialism and rationalism. Grosso borrows here from the prominent Swiss psychologist-philosopher Carl G. Jung who, in Flying Saucers: A Modern Myth of Things Seen in the Skies (1959), characterizes the appearance of UFOs as indicative of "psychic change . . . which may be expected when the spring-point enters Aquarius." According to Grosso the UFO image inspires fantasies and dreams and, more profoundly, draws archetypal material from deep within the collective unconscious. Symbolically the disc shape of the flying saucer represents psychic wholeness, a resolution of the conflict between rational (conscious) thought and intuitive (unconscious) feeling.

To Jung, however, the notion of a "materialized psychism"—Grosso's "psychoterrestrial"—"opens a bottomless void under our feet" and "surpasses our comprehension." It is absurd to propose that "psychic projections throw back a radar echo." Since some UFOs seem to do just that, Jung wrote it is more probable that the "appearance of real objects affords an opportunity for mythological projections." These "real objects" may be spacecraft whose presence only now is being noticed because our "earthly existence feels threatened [and] unconscious contents have projected themselves on these inexplicable heavenly phenomena and given them a significance they in no way deserve."

But in Grosso's more radical version of Jung's hypothesis, psychic projections do show up on radar. "If UFOs are mythic constructs," he writes, "it is not surprising that their physical effects fit the UFO construct. To look like real spaceships, they obligingly affect radar." Psychoterrestrials also manifest as religious visions, monsters, men in black, angels, and more—all "forces of rebirth" in the service of the consciousness transformation that will save us from otherwise certain self-destruction.

Unlike Jung, but in common with Grosso and other occult-oriented theorists, folklorist Peter M. Rojcewicz rejects extraterrestrial UFOs in favor of the psychoterrestrials Grosso describes. "In the narrative accounts born of the ongoing human interaction with other worldliness," he writes in The Boundaries of Orthodoxy (1984), "we see the articulation over time of a mental argument, both for a more cooperative and harmonious existence on the one hand, and on the other, [for] a transcendent dimension of human will and imagination." Rojcewicz defines "UFO phenomenon" as virtually any sort of encounter with paranormal entities. He argues, "The 'UFO Phenomenon,' so Other, so here and now, reveals to us ourselves triggered by the intensity of unanswered longing and passionate collective desire."

As UFO abduction stories came into prominence in the 1980s, they inspired a new round of both extraterrestrial and occult hypotheses. Among proponents of the latter, Grosso, Rojcewicz, and Dennis Stillings quickly identified the abducting entities as psychoterrestrials, while Whitley Strieber, Kenneth Ring (The Omega Project, 1992), and John E. Mack (Abduction, 1994) believed them to be genuine otherworldly supernatural intelligences bent on human betterment. In this view, abduction experiences were a variety of contact claim. The aliens may be odder-looking than the ones who figure in classic contact tales, and they may not come from outer space, and their methods may be bizarre and even cruel in the short term, but their mission is the same.

Not all ufologists have embraced occultism. Indeed, occult ufology reached its peak in the 1970s, and by the turn of the century, with Keel and Vallee growing less active and publishing little, it was no longer a significant element of mainstream ufology. Meantime, extraterrestrial theories underwent something of a revival.

Just as significantly, by the late 1970s and early 1980s some disillusioned proponents of paranormal ufology had radically altered the occult model in a way that made it possible for them to deal with extreme experiential claims without also having to embrace unverifiable supernatural explanatory schemes. Thus was born the "psychosocial" school, which proposed what were represented as psychological solutions to entity encounters. Though these solutions were themselves often speculative, they were certainly not occult-based; yet they borrowed ideas from Vallee, Grosso, and Rojcewicz, especially the relationship between alleged human needs and encounter experiences. Essentially the psychosociologists disagreed with the occults on only one point, albeit a crucial one: they did not believe dreams and visions could have physical properties.

Over time the psychosocial approach has evolved into more conventionally defined skepticism. It is more popular in Britain and the European continent than in the United States. Criticisms of occult ufology within the UFO literature have focused on its speculative nature and unfalsifiability. Beyond that, Keel and Vallee have been accused of using dubious material, including rumors and claims later exposed as hoaxes, to argue their cases. Critics have also objected that the evidence linking UFOs to other anomalous and paranormal manifestations is slight. In the Journal of UFO Studies Thomas E. Bullard writes of Rojcewicz and others:

"Claims about reality demand proof on the same terms that we treat other scientific claims. What do we find instead? The phenomenological theories of alternate realities handicap themselves with a well-nigh fatal combination of poor comparative methodology and unsound structural components, and no algebra of apologetics can transform these two minuses into a plus. Speculations about the psychoid properties of archetypes will not explain the physical effects of UFOs. If those physical effects are genuine, then prove to me first that archetypes exist and can have physical effects, or I will look for simpler and more direct solutions elsewhere. Using one unproven theory to support another is just a more sophisticated tautology, more verbose but ultimately no more informative about the physical world than identifying a bald man as hairless. In one sense this tack is even less informative. It clouds the basic questions with confusing masses of theory, distracting participants in the dialogue to talk only about theories and forget the real issues. The very proliferation of phenomenological theories with no way to sort out the right from the wrong simply underscores the danger that we may become more deeply mired in sophistry than the Athenian Academy."

Another critic complained (in International UFO Reporter, January/February 1994) that occult theories turn the UFO argument on its head. The extreme experiential claims on which occult ufologists have been fixated comprise the least compelling evidence for the existence of UFOs. The best evidence—in the form of radar trackings, landing traces, photographs—suggests that at least some UFOs may be technological devices. The extreme claims, even when related by apparently sincere persons, amount only to stories. He went on:

"The fantastic entities described—fairies, merfolk, Blessed Virgins, apparitions of all kinds—do not bless us with physical evidence or even coherent pictures of themselves, their behaviors, and their missions. Of such things we can say only that experiences of them are possible, but the question of whether these experiences are events is another matter altogether. If events—in other words, occurrences amenable to incorporation into consensus acceptance via traditional methods of scientific documentation—they would force us to reinvent the world, and they would give us real reason to believe fourth dimensions, ethereal realms, superspectrums, and Magonias are more than words without meaning or attempts to redefine God. Nothing we have seen so far calls on us to embark on so daring an undertaking."

Meanwhile, the saucerian movement, which in its present form began in 1952 with contactees Adamski and Van Tassel, goes on. The flamboyant figures of the early years, often suspected (and often with reason) of conscious charlatanry, are gone, but channelers and visionaries in the thousands still claim to commune with space and extradimensional personalities. An enormous literature of contactee lore and philosophy circulates in books and newsletters and now on the Internet.

Sources

Bord, Janet, and Colin Bord. Alien Animals. Harrisburg, Pa.: Stackpole Books, 1981.

Bullard, Thomas E. "Fresh Air, or Air Castles in Folklore Theories?" Journal of UFO Studies 4 (n.s., 1992): 165–73.

Clark, Jerome. The UFO Encyclopedia, Second Edition: The Phenomenon from the Beginning. 2 vols. Detroit: Omnigraphics, 1998.

———. "Wagging the Dog." International UFO Reporter 19, 1 (January/February 1994): 3, 22–24.

Gillmor, Daniel S., ed. Scientific Study of Unidentified Flying Objects. New York: Bantam Books, 1969.

Grosso, Michael. Frontiers of the Soul: Exploring Psychic Evolution. Wheaton, Ill.: Quest Books, 1992.

Holiday, F. W. The Dragon and the Disc: An Investigation Into the Totally Fantastic. New York: W. W. Norton, 1973.

Jacobs, David M. The UFO Controversy in America. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1975.

Jung, C. G. Flying Saucers: A Modern Myth of Things Seen in the Skies. New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1959.

Keel, John A. The Eighth Tower. New York: Saturday Review Press, 1975.

———. Our Haunted Planet. Greenwich, Conn.: Fawcett Publications, 1971.

———. UFOs: Operation Trojan Horse. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1970.

Layne, N. Meade. The Ether Ship and Its Solution. Vista, Calif.: Borderland Sciences Research Associates, 1950.

Mack, John E. Abduction: Human Encounters with Aliens. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1994.

Reeve, Bryant, and Helen Reeve. Flying Saucer Pilgrimage. Amherst, Wis.: Amherst Press, 1957.

Ring, Kenneth. The Omega Project: Near-Death Experiences, UFO Encounters, and Mind at Large. New York: William Morrow, 1992.

Rojcewicz, Peter M. "The Boundaries of Orthodoxy: A Folklore Look at the UFO Phenomenon." 2 vols. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania, Ph.D. dissertation, 1984.

Rogo, D. Scott. The Haunted Universe: A Psychic Look at Miracles, UFOs and Mysteries of Nature. New York: New American Library, 1977.

Stillings, Dennis, ed. Cyberbiological Studies of the Imaginal Component in the UFO Contact Experience. St. Paul, Minn.: Archaeus Project, 1989.

Stupple, David M. "Historical Links Between the Occult and Flying Saucers." Journal of UFO Studies 5 (n.s., 1994): 93–108.

Sturrock, Peter A. The UFO Enigma: A New Review of the Physical Evidence. New York: Warner Books, 1999.

Vallee, Jacques. Messengers of Deception: UFO Contacts and Cults. Berkeley, Calif.: And/Or Press, 1979.

———. Passport to Magonia: From Folklore to Flying Saucers. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1969.

———. Revelations: Alien Contact and Human Deception. New York: Ballantine Books, 1991.

Unification Church

A religious movement founded in 1954 in Korea by Rev. Sun Myung Moon, a South Korean engineer. His family had converted to the Presbyterian Church, and in 1935 he had a vision of Jesus, who reportedly told him to complete Jesus' unfinished work. He began to collect followers as early as 1944 into the Broad Sea Church. In 1946 he began a six-year stint in a North Korean prison camp. After his release, he made his way to Pusan, South Korea, where he eventually founded his church. Its basic teachings were written down in the Divine Principle, first published in 1957.

The first missionaries of the church were sent to Japan, where they had their greatest success. Members moved to the United States in 1959, and the first centers were begun in Eugene, Oregon, and Washington, D.C. Moon moved to the United States in 1971. Soon established were a headquarters in Manhattan, a seminary in Barrytown, New York, and Moon's residence in Irvington, New York.

Unification thought is based on a unique understanding of the concepts of Creation, the Fall, and Restoration. The principle of Creation asserts that God created the world and by that act became known. The world, reflecting God's nature, has two expressions, as Sung Sang (internal, invisible) and Hyung Sang (external, visible). It also is expressed as male and female. In the first set of expressions, one sees the relationship of spiritual and material; the second reveals what is traditionally known as yin and yang, the masculine and feminine. God created out of his inner nature, his heart of love. The purpose of creation is to experience the joy that comes from loving.

The Fall came about from Adam and Eve's failure to realize God's purpose in creation. The Fall placed Satan in control of creation. God has been trying to restore his primal intention ever since. The Bible is an account of God's various restoration attempts.

The principle of Restoration delineates the conditions necessary for the reestablishment of God's intention. The plan involves both God's sending of one sinless man and the response of a free and responsible humankind. The Messiah was to be born as a substantial, physical being, an example of the ideal person. He was also to take a bride and realize the ideal family and thus become the True Parent. Through the True Parent, God will implant love in the hearts of all who follow him. He will also show them how to accomplish the true purpose in life.

Throughout the 1970s the Unification Church (full name: The Holy Spirit Association for the Unification of World Christianity) became one of the more controversial of the new religions. Because of its intense indoctrination, it was labeled a "cult" by many parents of the primarily youthful converts. Many were offended by the church's policy concerning sex and marriage. New members spent at least seven years in celibacy, after which Moon selected a spouse for them. Most marriage partners were drawn from a different country or race. Following their engagement, couples were married in mass weddings, the most recent of which occurred in 1995.

The church spawned a number of organizations, some evangelistic arms and others designed to carry out social policies. The church also made friends with many scholars and intellectuals. Most of the church's programs are now organized into two structures, the International Cultural Foundation and the International Religious Foundation. The former has sponsored possibly the most successful program involving nonchurch members, the International Conference on the Unity of the Sciences.

The church has spread internationally and is active in over 150 countries. It has approximately five thousand members in the United States but counts members in the hundreds of thousands worldwide. Address: HSA-UWC, 4 W. 43rd St., New York, NY 10036. Website: http://www.unification.org/.

Sources:

Barker, Eileen. The Making of a Moonie. Oxford: Basil Blackwell, 1984.

Biermans, John T. The Odyssey of New Religious Movements. New York: Edwin Mellon, 1986.

Divine Principle. New York: Holy Spirit Association for the Unification of World Christianity, 1973.

Outline of the Principle, Level 4. New York: Holy Spirit Association for the Unification of World Christianity, 1980.

The Unification Church. http://www.unification.org/. March 8, 2000.

Union Esperitista Cristiana de Filipinas, Inc.

The Spiritualist church to which many of the psychic surgeons in the Philippines belong.

Current address unavailable.

Union Spirite Bordelaise (Journal)

Nineteenth-century Spiritist journal, published in Bordeaux, France, incorporating other journals.

Union Spirite Française

French Spiritualist organization, active in the 1930s, founded by Léon Chevreuil, its president, and Jean Meyer, its vice president. It published Le Bulletin de l'Union Spirite Francaise from its headquarters at the Maison des Spirities, 8 Rue Copernic, Paris, a center founded by Jean Meyer.

United Lodge of Theosophists

The United Lodge of Theosophists is an independent theosophical organization founded in 1909 by Robert Crosbie (1849–1919). Crosbie belonged to the theosophical community created by Katherine Tingley at Point Loma, San Diego, California, in the early 1900s. Before long he argued that the community had lost its direction as originally established. He moved to Los Angeles, opened the United Lodge, and founded a publishing facility, the Theosophy Company. The first issue of Theosophy Magazine appeared in 1912.

Among the people attracted to the United Lodge was B. P. Wadia, an Indian who had held a high position in the Theosophical Society. Wadia eventually succeeded Crosbie as head of the lodge and is credited with turning it into an international organization. More recently a leadership role was assumed by Rhagavan N. Iyer, now a retired professor of political science at the University of California, Santa Barbara. With his wife, Nandini, Iyer heads the lodge's Santa Barbara group and founded Concord Press, which has developed an extensive publishing program of theosophical and related materials.

The United Lodge of Theosophists has no formal membership but there are some 11 lodges in the United States and 11 more in other countries. Along with the magazine Theosophy, the group publishes the monthly, The Theosophical Movement, and the bimonthly, Vidya. Address: 245 W. 33rd St., Los Angeles, CA 90007. Website: http://www.ult.org/.

Sources:

Crosbie, Robert. Answers to Questions on the Ocean of Theosophy. Los Angeles: Theosophy, 1937.

———. The Friendly Philosopher. Los Angeles: Theosophy, 1934.

The Theosophical Movement, 1875–1950. Los Angeles: Cunningham Press, 1951.

United Lodge of Theosophists. http://www.ult.org/. March 8, 2000.

United Lodge of Theosophists: Its Mission and Its Future. Los Angeles: Theosophy, n.d.

United Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ

The United Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ were founded in 1945 by Bishop Thomas Watson, but date to the earliest days of the spiritual church movement in New Orleans. The spiritual movement, the name assumed by many African American Spiritualist churches in the early twentieth century, was brought to New Orleans by Rev. Leafy Anderson in 1921. The popular leader of the Eternal Life Christian Spiritualist Association attracted many African Americans who were interested in psychic phenomena and mediumship. Among them was Thomas Watson. In 1929, two years after Anderson's death, Watson withdrew from his association and founded the St. Joseph Helping Hand Church in a New Orleans suburb. This independent congregation grew by the addition of affiliated congregations into the St. Joseph Helping Hand Missionary Association (1934) and the Divine Spiritual Church of the Southwest (1935).

In 1936 Watson was elected senior bishop of the church. Among his major decisions for the new church was a rejection of his own heritage with Anderson. In 1940, having concluded that women should not be ordained ministers, he removed all of the women mediums and pastors, many of whom left the church. Then in 1942 Watson led his church into a merger with the Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ to form the United Spiritual Churches of Christ. When William F. Taylor, the former president of the Metropolitan Churches, died shortly after the merger, Watson was selected to succeed him. However, Watson immediately ran into a conflict with Clarence Cobbs, who also thought he should be president of the United Spiritual Churches.

The conflict grew over the next three years and eventually Cobbs forced Watson out of office and became the new president. With his following, Watson withdrew and reorganized his following into the United Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ. There is no difference in belief and practice between the two churches, and the area of disagreement was purely administrative.

Current address unavailable.

Sources:

Jacobs, Claude F., and Andrew J. Kaslow. The Spiritual Churches of New Orleans: Origins, Beliefs, and Rituals of an African American Religion. Knoxville: University of Tennessee Press, 1991.

Murphy, Larry G., J. Gordon Melton, and Gary L. Ward. Encyclopedia of African American Religions. New York: Garland Publishing, 1993.

United Spiritualist Church

The United Spiritualist Church was founded in 1967 by Rev. Floyd Humble, Edwin Potter, and Howard Mangan. Humble had earlier served a variety of independent Spiritualist congregations. The church affirms belief in Spiritualism and mediumship, both spiritual and physical, and the example of Jesus as a teacher, healer, and prophet. Humans are immortal and will bring the kingdom of God to Earth as they develop their spiritual sides.

The United Spiritualist Church differs from most Spiritualist churches by its development of a centralized form of government. Most Spiritualists have been organized into very loose fellowships of autonomous congregations. The United Church is headed by a presidency consisting of a president, first adviser-secretary, and second adviser-treasurer. They oversee the board of governors, which in turn guides the boards of publication, education, and church extension and missions. The board of governors is elected by the general conference. The church publishes a periodical, the Spiritual Outlook. Address: 813 W. 165th Pl., Gardena, CA 90247.

Sources:

Humble, Floyd. Bible Lessons. Gardena, Calif.: United Spiritualist Church, 1969.

Unity-and-Diversity World Council

An international coordinating body devoted to linking metaphysical and New Age groups. It was originally formed as the International Cooperation Council, and it has been led for three decades by its coordinator Leland Stewart. The council seeks to coordinate cultural and religious organizations that, in their own ways, "foster the emergence of a new universal person and a civilization based on unity in diversity among all peoples." Formed to propagate ideals of unity during International Cooperation Year, it was voted into being in 1965 by the General Assembly of the United Nations. The Unity-and-Diversity World Council continues its work of publicizing the aims and ideas of humanitarian groups that bring together the methods and discoveries of modern science with the insights of religion, philosophy, and the arts. Much of this synthesis is concerned with developing areas of awareness in human consciousness and unorthodox healing techniques.

In its early period, the council took part in a New Age Institute directed toward public and private education. A World-View Exploration Seminar, formed in spring 1969, grew out of the Fifth Annual International Cooperation Festival, composed primarily of professionals from the fields of science, religion, art, education, and philosophy, who met on the campus of the California State College at Los Angeles to explore "the meaning of the new universal person and the world civilization."

In place of the magazine The Cooperator, the Unity-and-Diversity Council now issues the monthly newsletter Spectrum and also publishes a World Directory of affiliated organizations from its headquarters at 5521 Grosvenor Blvd., Ste. 22, Los Angeles, CA 90066-6915.

Univercoelum (Journal)

Early Spiritualist periodical started by Andrew Jackson Davis in December 1847, in New York, for "the establishment of a universal system of Truth, the Reform and Reorganization of Society." It ran for a year and a half before being absorbed in July 1849 by W. M. Channing's The Present Age.

Univercolian (Magazine)

Quarterly publication growing out of former Pyramid Guide Newsletter, concerned with earth mysteries, featuring articles on such subjects as Easter Island, Stonehenge, Atlantis, UFOs, and energy centers. Its mailing address is P.O. Box 292, Dalton, MA 01226.

Universal Balm

An elixir sought by alchemists that was supposed to be a remedy for every malady and would even bring the dead back to life. (See also elixir of life)

Universal Christ Church

The Universal Christ Church is a small fellowship of Spiritualist congregations in Southern California. It was founded in 1970 by Rev. Anthony Benik and was unique in its acceptance of an element of ritualism in its worship. It operates out of a Spiritualist perspective and reincarnation is accepted. Most of the churches are in the Los Angeles area, but there is one large congregation reported in Australia. In the 1970s there were five congregations in the greater Los Angeles area, but recent attempts to contact the church have failed. Its present status is unknown.

Universal Church of the Master

The Universal Church of the Master, one of the largest Spiritualist churches in the United States, especially on the West Coast, was founded in 1908 in Los Angeles by Dr. B. J. Fitzgerald (d. 1966) and others. The church was incorporated in 1918 and during its first generation was largely confined to congregations on the West Coast. Fitzgerald was the author of the church's basic textbook, A New Text of Spiritual Philosophy and Religion. In 1930 the church's headquarters moved to Oakland, California, and then in 1966 to San Jose. The church was headed for many years by Birdie Peterson, who passed away in 1994.

The church has a statement of faith that affirms the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; the necessity of living in harmony with nature; life after death; communication [through mediumship] with the unseen world; the Golden Rule; individual responsibility; the continual possibility of improvement; prophecy; and the eternal progress of the soul. The implication of the emphasis on the laws of nature defies any supernaturalism in the communication with the dead or other psychic phenomena. The church also suggests the use of The Aquarian Gospel of Jesus the Christ, a channeled work by Levi Dowling, as a source for teachings.

In the 1980s it had over 300 associated congregations. The church is headquartered at 501 Washington St., Santa Clara, CA 95050.

Sources:

Dowling, Levi. The Aquarian Gospel of Jesus the Christ. Los Angeles: Leo W. Dowling, 1925.

Fitzgerald, B. J. A New Text of Spiritual Philosophy and Religion. San Jose, Calif.: Universal Church of the Master, 1954.

Universal Faithists of Kosmon

The Universal Faithists of Kosmon is one of several groups founded by believers in the authority of Oahspe: A New Age Bible. Oahspe was channeled by John Ballou Newbrough (1828–1891) and published in 1882. The first convention of Faithists, held in 1883, planned the formation of a community in New Mexico called Shalam. Initially successful, it was destroyed by a flu epidemic, which took many of its leaders, including Newbrough.

The Faithist cause has been kept alive by a variety of independent groups, the Universal Faithists among the oldest of the several presently existing organizations. It has assumed responsibility for preserving Faithist communication. The movement has had some alignment with the New Age movement, since Oahspe was originally described as a "New Age" Bible. It describes the evolution of the human race into the Kosmon Era, a time of worldwide peace and joy.

The Universal Faithists publish the periodical Kosmon Voice. The organization may be contacted at the Oahspe Information Service, Messilla, New Mexico 88046-0891.

Sources:

Dennon, Jim. Newbrough and Oahspe. Kingman, Ariz.: Faithist Journal, 1975.

———. The Oahspe Story. Kingman, Ariz.: Faithist Journal, 1975.

Stowes, K. D. The Land of Shalam: Children's Land. Evansville, Ind.: Molinet Print Shop, n.d.

Universal Hagar's Spiritual Church (UHSC)

The Universal Hagar's Spiritual Church (UHSC), a Spiritualist church operating primarily among African Americans, was founded in 1923 in Detroit, Michigan, by George Willie Hurley (1884–1943). Hurley moved to Detroit from Georgia in 1891 and affiliated with Triumph the Church and Kingdom of God in Christ and rose to become the leader of the church in Michigan. A short time later he became involved with the esoteric, left his position in 1920 to join a Spiritualist church, and three years later founded his own church. In 1924 he established the School of Mediumship and Psychology, and as new congregations developed, each also had a school attached to it. Hurley conceived of the school as a branch of the Great School of the Prophets, which he believed to be the school Jesus attended during the 18 years between his appearance in the temple in Jerusalem and the beginning of his public ministry at the age of 30.

UHSC was one of the main bodies spreading Spiritualism through the African American community in the twentieth century. Like other spiritual churches, (spiritual was the name adopted by Spiritualism in the black community), UHSC altered traditional Spiritualism by blending Catholic ritual, Holiness preaching, and elements of the folk magic culture or voudou. Hurley also drew upon Ethiopianism, a belief that identified black people (Ethiopians) with the ancient Israelites; astrology; and insights from The Aquarian Gospel of Jesus Christ, a channeled book that purports to tell of Jesus' lost years. Unlike many spiritual leaders, Hurley took a strong stand on social issues and was an early supporter of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The church planted congregations across the Northeast and Midwest during Hurley's lifetime. As the church expanded, Hurley acquired an increasingly grandiose self-understanding. He told his followers that his carnal flesh had been transformed into the flesh of Christ and that he had become the "God" of this Aquarian Age, just as Jesus had been the God of the previous Piscean Age. Since Hurley's death, the UHSC has been led by Prince Thomas Surbacher, Mother Mary Hatchett, Prince Alfred Bailey, and Rev. G. Latimer, Hurley's daughter. Hurley welcomed women to the ministry, and they have always been well represented on the Wiseman's Board, the church's ruling structure. State directors are called princes, a term taken over from Triumph the Church and Kingdom of God in Christ. In recent years the church has spread into the Southwest and California.

Current address unavailable.

Sources:

Baer, Hans A. The Black Spiritual Movement: A Religious Response to Racism. Knoxville: University of Tennessee Press, 1984.

Universal Harmony Foundation

The Universal Harmony Foundation is a Spiritualist church founded in New York in 1942 as the Universal Psychic Science Association. The founders, Revs. Helene Gerling and J. Bertram Gerling, were both prominent mediums at Lily Dale, the Spiritualist camp near Rochester, New York. Association headquarters were soon moved to Saint Petersburg, Florida. Helene Gerling wrote several books and a set of correspondence lessons and also opened a seminary for training mediums, through which students could receive ordination and charters for churches. Ordained positions include ministers, healers, missionaries, and teachers.

The church strives for a universal philosophy and draws insight from revelation and the teachings of all religions and prophets. Church belief is premised upon the religious and scientific demonstration of the talents and powers of the Living Spirit, that is, mediumship. The foundation affirms the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, the eternalness of life, the power of prayer, spiritual healing, the reality of the psychic, soul growth as the purpose of life, and that the way of life is fraternal service.

Helene Gerling led the foundation for almost a half century. She retired in 1988 and was succeeded by Rev. Nancy Castillo. Castillo pastors the mother church, and members are encouraged to join it and support it in an annual free-will offering. The church issues the magazine Spiritual Digest. Address: c/o Rev. Nancy Castillo, 5903 Seminole Blvd., Seminole, FL 33542.

Sources:

Gerling, Helene. Healthy Intuitive Development. New York: Exposition Press, 1971.

Universal Life—The Inner Religion

Universal Life—The Inner Religion began in 1977 to spread the message of contemporary German channel Gabriele Wittek (b. 1930). In 1975, according to Wittek, the same spirit of Christ who had been present in Jesus of Nazareth stepped into her life and chose her as his prophetic instrument for this generation. He disclosed his intention to lead his children back to their eternal home and to build the kingdom of God on Earth. Wittek organized the Homebringing Mission of Jesus Christ, the original name of the new religion.

Wittek, a Wurzburg housewife, received an awakening experience in 1970 when she saw the spirit of her deceased mother. Convinced of "survival of bodily death," she began visiting a local medium, then operated as a channel herself for several years before going public with the messages she was receiving. Wittek emphasized the indwelling kingdom of God and taught a method of going within to open the kingdom and experience God in one's innermost being. She advised people to learn to live God's laws as expressed in the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount.

The mission operated for seven years, and in 1984 was superseded by Universal Life—The Inner Religion. Wittek now taught that, given the contact with God, it was possible to put the Sermon on the Mount into operation immediately. She encouraged those formerly associated with the mission to form businesses that would operate on the principles of the Sermon on the Mount. Toward the end of the decade, a school based on the same principles was opened.

During these years, the mission-turned-religion spread across Europe and into North and South America. By the early 1990s, the teachings had been translated into ten languages, and over 130 Inner-Spirit-of-Christ churches opened. Universal Life publishes the periodical Christ State-International and may be contacted through its world headquarters, Universelles Leben, Postfach 5643, 8700 Wurzburg, Germany. In the United States the address is Box 3579, New Haven, CT 06525.

Sources:

The Christian Mystery School. Pelham, N.H.: Homebringing Mission of Jesus Christ, 1983.

The Divine Mystical Method of Instruction of the Homebringing Mission of Jesus Christ. Pelham, N.H.: Homebringing Mission of Jesus Christ, 1980.

A Formerly Spiritually Unknown Person on the Path to God: The Course of Life of the Prophetess in the Homebringing Mission of Jesus Christ. Pelham, N.H.: Homebringing Mission of Jesus Christ, 1980.

Universal Religion of America

The Universal Religion of America was a Spiritualist movement founded in 1958 in Kenosha, Wisconsin, by the Rev. Marnie Koski. Koski was formerly a minister with the Spiritual Science Mother Church. She was known by the members of her church as Soraya ("Solar Ray") as a result of the channeled messages she receives from Jesus.

During the 1960s, Koski left the Kenosha congregations under the leadership of her students and moved to Florida, first to Rockledge and then to Merritt Island. The Universal Religion had some 500 members in its two centers. Last known address: Christ Universal Church, 295 North Tropical Trail, Merritt Island, FL 32952.

Sources:

Koski, Marie. Personal Talks with Jesus. Washington, DC: ES-Press, 1979.

Universal Spiritualist Association

The Universal Spiritualist Association is an association of Spiritualist churches and clergy. It was originally founded in 1956 by Clifford Bias to issue credentials for Camp Chesterfield, which housed the seminary where many Spiritualist ministers and healers were trained and licensed. Until 1956, the Spiritualist Episcopal Church was in charge of the seminary. At that point the leaders of the new association, mostly former Spiritualist Episcopalians, assumed the administrative and faculty roles at the Chesterfield school, an arrangement that was cordial until 1970, when a dispute erupted between the camp and the association. The school reverted to the control of the Chesterfield staff, and the Universal Spiritualist Association conducted its own seminary. In 1985 the association moved to the Maple Grove Spiritual Retreat near Pendleton, Indiana, and opened the Institute for Holistic Studies. In 1993 the association moved headquarters once again to the Universal Institute for Holistic Studies at Ball State University, Muncie, Indiana.

The Universal Spiritualist Association provides limited demonstrations of the physical phenomena of spiritualism for their institute registrants and candidates for the clergy, primarily for lack of demand.

Clifford Bias served as first president of the association until his death in 1986. He organized the Ancient Mystical Order of Seekers, the esoteric society for the association's ministers and more serious lay students. Bias' successor was Warren Smith, who retired in 1990. The association is presently led by T. Ernest Nichols. The president heads the association's general board, which charters churches and licenses ministers. A board of regents oversees the Institute for Holistic Studies. Both boards are elected at the annual membership-at-large meeting.

In 1990 the association reported 512 members in 14 churches, including one in Windsor, Ontario, Canada. It publishes the magazine Banner of Light, and may be contacted at the Universal Institute for Holistic Studies, 4905 W. University Ave., Muncie, IN 47304-3460. Website: http://www.spiritualism.org.

Sources:

Bias, Clifford. The Way Back. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1985.

Universal Spiritualist Manual. Universal Administration, Muncie, Ind.: Universal Spiritualist Association, n.d.

Wallace, Austin D. Thistle Presents Prince Nikeritis. Eaton Rapids, Mich.: Transcendental Science Publications, 1905.

Universe Quarterly

Former quarterly journal of the Vortex Institute of Fairbanks, Alaska, concerned with spiritual life in Alaska, self-growth techniques, and meditation.

Universities (Occult)

In many works on the occult sciences, allusions are made to schools and universities and the instruction of those who were drawn to them. The idea for such schools derived from the philosophical schools and academies of the ancient Greek teachers. In the early Christian era, Gnosticism was taught in such schools. Since that discipline was centered upon gnosis or knowledge, a school (rather than a temple or church) was the natural form that its group life assumed.

While a few similar schools might have existed in the Dark Ages, the idea of such institutions was largely a myth used to credential otherwise informally and self-taught occultists or to refer to the places where alchemists and occultists quietly gathered to consult with each other. It was the practice of those on the faculties of the universities and those who operated independently to draw students around them, and professors of the occult sciences were no different.

There is no doubt that during the Middle Ages many lecturers taught alchemy and kindred subjects at great universities. Thus Paracelsus lectured on alchemy at the University of Basel, and he was preceded and followed there and elsewhere by others who taught that and other occult arts.

Louis Figuier, in his book L'alchimie et les alchimistes (1854), alluded to a school in Paris frequented by alchemists that he himself attended in the middle of the nineteenth century. The school—an ordinary chemical laboratory during the day—became in the evening a center of the most elaborate alchemical study, where Figuier met alchemical students, visionary and practical.

The novelist Balzac alludes to an occult school in the story "The Secret of Ruggier," which he placed at the time of Catherine de Medici. He stated: "At this epoch the occult sciences were cultivated with an ardour which put to shame the incredulous spirit of our century. . . . The universal protection accorded to these sciences by the ruling sovereigns of the times was quite remarkable."

He goes on to say that at the beginning of the sixteenth century, Ruggier was a member of a secret university for the study of the occult sciences, where astrologers, alchemists, and others studied several branches of hidden knowledge. Balzac gives no details as to its locality, or as to the exact nature of its curriculum.

The College of Augurs in Rome and the Calmecac of ancient Mexico are distinct examples of institutions for the study of divination, and in this connection, the House of Wisdom of the Ismaelite sect at Cairo, Egypt, may be mentioned.

Helena Petrovna Blavatsky insisted that a great "school" of illuminated occult adepts flourished in Tibet, but nobody except herself and her immediate friends ever saw them or had any dealings with them. Prior to 1959, Tibet was the home of a large number of monasteries that were also the schools of Tibetan Buddhism and its esoteric practices.

Instructional centers for people who studied the occultism integral to Hinduism, Buddhism, and other Asian systems did exist (and continue to exist) across Asia. These centers, remote and mysterious prior to the transportation and communications revolution of the twentieth century, took on a mythical character in the occult literature of the nineteenth century. Those associated with these Asian schools were rumored to have extraordinary occult prowess.

In the nineteenth and twentieth centuries attempts have been made to recreate these ancient occult schools. For example, the School for the Discovery of the Lost Secrets of Antiquity flourished for a generation in San Diego, California. It was founded by Katherine Tingley late in the nineteenth century and taught Theosophy. A decade earlier, Blavatsky founded the Esoteric Section of the Theosophical Society, an organization carried on by Theosophists associated with the Theosophical Society.

One modern equivalent of ancient occult universities are the secret magical orders, such as the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, where occult and mystical subjects are taught to students, with grades of advancement. Many such orders, based in part on a format adopted from Freemasonry, exist.

One outstanding attempt to recreate the ancient Gnostic schools, with an intense course in esoteric training, is Ramtha's School of Enlightenment in Yelm, Washington, opened in 1988 by JZ Knight. Ramtha, a channeled entity, instructs students through the entranced Knight.

University Books, Inc.

One of the most influential imprints in occult publishing from the 1950s on. The corporation was founded by Felix Morrow, who played a major role in the modern occult revival by reprinting rare and important scholarly works of occultism and mysticism that had long been unavailable.

In addition to being sold to libraries, the books reached a large general public through the Mystic Arts Book Club. The spokespersons of the occult revival of the 1960s and 1970s drew heavily from these texts. In 1966, the company was absorbed by Lyle Stuart, Inc., which continued occult publishing under the Citadel Press imprint.

University of London Council for Psychical Investigation

A reorganization of the National Laboratory of Psychical Research, which had been founded by psychical researcher Harry Price in 1926. The National Laboratory passed under the direction of the University of London Council on June 6, 1934. At that date the organization was still at the National Laboratory address, but by the end of 1936 the large library assembled by Price was moved to University College, London.

Later the National Laboratory's séance room and laboratory equipment were transferred to the administrative offices of the University Council, but all experimentation ceased with the outbreak of World War II. After the death of Harry Price in 1948, the library was bequeathed to the University of London.

A short-title catalogue of the library was issued as volume 1, number 2 of the Proceedings of the National Laboratory of Psychical Research, and a supplement was issued as the first bulletin of the University of London Council for Psychical Investigation. A second publication was issued by the University of London Council as Bulletin II, A Report on Two Experimental Fire-Walks; Bulletin III, Preliminary Studies of a Vaudeville Telepathist.

Last known address: University of London, Senate House, Male St., London.

University of the Trees

An experimental New Age school community for world change through consciousness research and related spiritual development. The main thrust of teaching was directed towards self-discovery and creative individual change, and in addition to community life courses, teaching was also maintained through correspondence with students all over the world. Courses were wide-ranging, including art, literature, environmental studies, changing, transpersonal awareness, alternative energy systems, health and yoga, healing, history and neurology of consciousness, philosophy, mysticism, radiational physics, and what is termed "supersensonics" (which includes radiesthesia, dowsing, pyramid research, and psychotronics).

The university granted degrees in consciousness research, but aimed to provide students with methods of study that deepen their inner awareness. The term "the Trees" denoted the nerve dendrites in the brain, and the "Tree of Life" of the nervous system that can combine with knowledge to enhance direct perception of truth.

The community was founded in 1973 and grew out of the teachings of Christopher Hills, a New Age teacher, researcher, and yogi who directs the work of the university. Associated with the university is a Research Institute for Supersensonic Healing Energies. Last known address: P.O. Box 644, 13151 Pine St., Boulder Creek, CA 95006.

The Unknown (Magazine)

Former British monthly magazine "exploring strange phenomena." The first issue, published July 1985, included discussions at a popular level of spontaneous combustion, ley lines, wolf children, lost civilizations, sea serpents, alchemy, and the Fatima apparitions.

The Unknown World (Journal)

Occult and metaphysical journal founded by James Elliott and edited by Arthur Edward Waite (1857–1942). Eleven issues appeared from August 1894 to June 1895. It was devoted to "The Occult Sciences, Magic, Mystical Philosophy, Alchemy, Hermetic Archaeology, and the Hidden Problems of Science, Literature, Speculation and History."

Sources:

Gilbert, R. A. A. E. Waite: A Bibliography. Wellingsborough, Northamptonshire, England: Aquarian Press, 1983.

Unknown Worlds (Newsletter)

Bimonthly newsletter reporting strange phenomena of a Fortean kind. It was published by World Investigators of Strange Phenomena. Last known address: Rte. 2, Box 159, Vina, AL 35593.

Upanishads

The Upanishads, literally teachings received while sitting at the feet of a master, are a set of writings produced in the first millennium B.C.E. in India, which had been the most important in defining the general perspective of that set of religions generally referred to as Hinduism. Transmitted to the West in the nineteenth century, they became a major source for contemporary belief in karma and reincarnation, and through Theosophy were integrated into the teaching of Western occult thought.

The first era of Indian thought was built around the Vedas, writings which suggest that India's ancient culture was built around the celebration of nature, the activity of the deities in the world, and the propitiation of the gods in acts of devotion, temple sacrifice, and the following of rules. The Upanishads represent a radical shift in perspective that developed around 1000 B.C.E. The authors of the Upanishads launched a search for the unifying reality behind the visible universe.

There are 13 Principle Upanishads, which summarize the whole of the teachings, and numerous lesser supportive documents. They critique the Vedas and are often referred to as the Vedanta, or "end of the Vedas." Rather than outward acts of temple worship, the Upanishads call for an inward search for the ultimate principle of reality (called Brahman) and a mystical union with that principle. Brahman is the source of the visible world that goes through a continuous process of being created, sustained, and destroyed. Brahman is hidden by maya (illusion), that aspect of the world that conceals reality from us.

The essential mystical insight offered by the Upanishads is the identification of Brahman with Atman. Atman is the essential core of the individual self. The implication is that to reach the inner essence of oneself is to discover ultimate reality. It is upon this identification that disciplines of concentration and meditation and ultimately the practice of yoga are based.

According to the Upanishads, individuals are trapped in maya. Lost in maya, we face a continuous series of incarnations, the exact nature of any incarnation being the result of the consequences of actions in prior lives (karma). To escape maya one must focus upon reality, the yogic path being the ideal process for pursuing that focus. It is also recognized that such a focus can lead to selfishness. To prevent such an error, the Upanishads recommend the cultivation of virtues such as detachment and self-control, and call for the performance of one's social duties.

The Upanishads now exist in several translations in English and other Western languages, though the 1879 translation by world religions scholar Max Müller was the important early one which built support for Indian perspectives in the West. In 1893, Swami Vivekananda brought the teachings of the Vedanta to the West and established it throughout the Vedanta Societies that grew out of his work. Through the twentieth century, numerous commentaries on the Upanishads were published and circulated by the many Indian religions operating in the West. Equally important, insights from the Upanishads, freed from the texts, have permeated Western esoteric and metaphysical groups through which they have been popularized among a public unaware of their origin.

Sources:

Beidler, William. The Vision of the Self in Early Vedanta. Delhi: Motilal Barnarsidass, 1975.

Radhakrishnan, Sarvepalli. The Principal Upanishads. New York: Harper and Brothers, 1953.

Uphoff, Walter (1913–1998)

Professor of economics who has also written and lectured extensively in the field of parapsychology. He was born February 28, 1913, in Sheboygan County, Wisconsin, and studied at the University of Wisconsin (B.S., 1934; Ph.D., 1935). In 1938 he married Mary Jo Weiler, who co-authored some of his writings on parapsychology. He worked in business for many years before joining the faculty of the University of Minnesota in 1951. He moved to the University of Colorado in 1961. He retired in 1976 and until his death pursued the interest in psychical research that he developed during his student days.

Uphoff and his wife founded the New Frontiers Center and he served as its president. He was a member of the American Society for Psychical Research, International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship, and the Society for Psychical Research, London. He was a board member of ESP Research Associates Foundation and a member of the former Academy of Parapsychology and Medicine. One of Uphoff's books concerns the early experiments with Masuaki Kiyota, the metal-bending psychic who later admitted that he had fraudulently accomplished his remarkable PK effects. Uphoff died September 26, 1998.

Sources:

Uphoff, Walter, and Mary Jo Uphoff. Mind Over Matter: Implications of Masuaki Kiyota's PK Feats with Metal and Film. Oregon, Wis.: New Frontiers Center, 1980.

———. New Psychic Frontiers: Your Key to New Worlds. Gerrard's Cross, U.K.: Colin Smyth, 1975.

The Upright Man

In the sixteenth century, the vagabonds and beggars of Britain were organized into unions with rules and grades. Of these grades, the order of the "Upright Man" seems to have had some special significance and authority, and it is believed by some authorities to have descended from the folk adherents of paganism, the "Old Religion," or witchcraft.

Ura

A Babylonian spirit. (See also Babylonia)

Uranian Astrology

Uranian astrology is an innovative system of astrology developed early in the twentieth century by Friedrich Sieggrün (1877–1951) and Alfred Witte (1878–1943), two pioneers of the contemporary astrological revival. The system is sometimes referred to as the Hamburg School, a reference to Witte's main teaching centre in Germany.

The Uranian system was distinguished from traditional astrology at several points. First, traditional astrology bases many of its interpretations of the chart on the angles formed between planets in the charts. Important relationships or aspects are formed when planets are apart as 0° (conjunction), 30° (semisextile), 45° (semisquare), 60° (sextile), 90°(square), 120° (trine), and 180° (opposition). There are also a set of lesser aspects. Some aspects have traditionally been regarded as beneficent and others as more malevolent. These latter, now termed the hard aspects, include the square, semisquare, and opposition. The Uranian system emphasized the role of hard aspects.

Second, the Uranian system introduced the idea of midpoints to astrological interpretation. As the name implies, a midpoint is a spot halfway between any two planets pictured on the horoscope. The midpoint is the place where the combined energies of the two planets manifest. The two planets and their midpoint form a planetary picture. The calculation of said midpoints requires an additional level of mathematical skill by the astrologer drawing up the chart, a fact that limited the spread of the Uranian approach.

Third, the most questionable aspect of the Uranian system was the introduction of hypothetical planets to the chart. Prior to the advent of space travel and the development of various means of verifying the existence of otherwise unknown planets, the existence of different as yet undiscovered planets was proposed. Such speculation was encouraged by the discovery of Uranus and Neptune and heralded the discovery of Pluto (1930) and Chiron (1977), a comet originally believed to be a planet.

Uranian astrology was unique in suggesting the existence of no less than eight hypothetical planets that were given the names Cupido, Hades, Zeus, Kronos, Apollon, Admetos, Vulcanos, and Poseidon. Each of these planets was assigned its particular role in the chart.

Uranian astrology enjoyed its greatest success in German-speaking countries during the first half of the twentieth century. It also gave birth to cosmobiology, an astrological system started by Reinhold Ebertin, one of Witte's students. It has had little success outside of German-speaking countries, though Witte's most important book, Rules for Planetary Pictures, was published in an English edition in 1939. Also, modern advances in astronomy made the addition of hypothetical planets to the horoscope an increasingly dubious endeavor.

Sources:

Brau, Jean-Louis, Helean Weaver, and Allan Edwards. Larousse Encyclopedia of Astrology. New York: New American Library, 1982.

Holden, James H., and Robert A. Hughes. Astrological Pioneers of America. Tempe, Ariz.: American Federation of Astrologers, 1988.

URANTIA

A lengthy nineteenth-century channeled message published in The URANTIA Book (1955). It explains that the true name of Earth is Urantia and that we are part of the universe of Nebadon, or the larger universe of Orvonton, whose central committee of Uversa dictated the work. The book presents its own unique view of human origins, including the precursors of Adam and Eve and a claimed more accurate version of the life and teaching of Jesus (said to have been really Michael of Nebadon, one of the myriad sons of the Eternal Son). The miracles are given largely natural explanations.

The book owes its publication to William S. Sadler (1875–1969), former Seventh-Day Adventist minister, who served as a surgeon in Adventist hospitals before leaving the movement. Although skeptical of psychic phenomena, he became involved with the Urantia writings, which proceeded from an unnamed individual who "became a clearing house for the coming and going of alleged extraplanetary personalities." These channeled communications were first studied in the 1920s by a group of individuals named The Forum. The URANTIA Foundation was formed in 1950 in Chicago, Illinois, and published The URANTIA Book five years later. The foundation promotes the study of the book and sponsors study groups of interested people. It is located at 533 Diversey Pkwy., Chicago, IL 60614, and publishes the URANTIAN NEWS . . . from URANTIA Foundation.

Sources:

Gardner, Martin. "The Great URANTIA Mystery." The Skeptical Inquirer 14, no. 2 (winter 1990).

Myers, Martin W. Unity, Not Uniformity. Chicago: URANTIA Foundation, 1973.

The URANTIA Book. Chicago: URANTIA Foundation, 1955.

URANTIA Brotherhood Association

The URANTIA Brotherhood Association was founded in 1989 to continue the work of the URANTIA Brotherhood, founded in 1955. That year people attracted to the teachings of The URANTIA Book, a large volume of channeled material first published in 1955, organized to nurture their learning experience. Over the years the URANTIA Brotherhood formed a number of groups around the country. They operated in harmony with the URANTIA Foundation, the corporation established in 1950 to publish and hold the copyrights and trademarks associated with the book. However, in 1989 the brotherhood and the foundation had an irreconcilable disagreement, and the foundation withdrew the use of the name URANTIA and the associated symbols from the brotherhood. Committed to the book, the brotherhood reorganized as the Fifth Epochal Fellowship. Those students still in relation to the foundation organized a new structure, the URANTIA Brotherhood Association. It may be contacted at 529 W. Wrightwood Ave., Chicago, IL 60614. Website: http://urantiabook.org/.

Sources:

Special Report to the Readers of THE URANTIA BOOK: URANTIA Foundation Ends Its Relationship with the Former URANTIA Brotherhood. Chicago: URANTIA Foundation, 1990.

The URANTIA Book. Chicago: URANTIA Foundation, 1955.

Urban, Hubert Josef (1904–)

Professor of neuropsychiatry who investigated areas of parapsychology. He was born on June 4, 1904, in Linz, Austria. He studied at the University of Vienna (B.A., 1923; M.D., 1929). He pursued post-graduate studies at several locations and in 1938 became a professor of neuropsychiatry at the University of Innsbruck, Austria. Urban took special interest in telepathy, clairvoyance, and mediumship as related to psychiatry, and studied the question of extrasensory ability before and after shock treatment or narcoanalysis. Between 1948 and 1958, he made visits to India to conduct field work in psychiatry, which allowed observation and research on spontaneous psi phenomena. He published articles on connections between psi, psychiatry, and medicine in various journals.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Urim and Thummim

Literally "lights and perfections," a means of divination employed by the ancient Hebrews. The objects were placed on a breastplate, which bore the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, that was worn over the heart of the high priest when he went before the Lord (Ex. 28:30). It was believed to consist of a species of casting lots.

The use of Urim and Thummim was not for determining questions concerning individuals, only for questions of national import. Answers were usually given in a brief fashion, yes or no, or the designation of one tribe out of the twelve. There is no mention of the Urim and Thummim after the time of King David. Their form and method of use is uncertain, but from passages in the Hebrew Bible, it seems probable that they were used somewhat like dice to cast lots (I Sam. 10:19–22 and 14:37–42).

The Urim and Thummin reappeared in the nineteenth century in the form of two divining stones possessed by Joseph Smith, Jr., prophet and founder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, whose followers are commonly called Mormons. Smith used the stones to "translate" the Book of Mormon from what was claimed to be golden tablets with writing in a reformed Egyptian text.

Urine

Urine has long been credited with magical and medicinal properties. It has been featured in black magic rituals. It has been mixed with wine, herbs, or oils; used as an ointment and in pills; employed in amulets, talismans, and charms; and used in aphrodisiacs and fertility potions.

Medicinally, urine has unusual properties. It contains ammonia, which can neutralize acids, and is usually free from bacteria, thus has disinfectant properties. Women have drunk urine from their husbands to speed up childbirth or have been given their own urine to relieve hysteria. Male urine contains androsterone, a male hormone, and it has long been believed that drinking one's own urine improves health and virility. Moraji Desai, former prime minister of India, openly admitted to drinking a small quantity of his own urine each morning for health reasons.

USSR See RUSSIA

Usui, Mikao (1865–1926)

Mikao Usui, the creator of the Reiki system of healing, a Japanese healing discipline that became a global phenomena during the years of the New Age Movement, was born on August 15, 1865, in Yago, Yamgata district, Gifu Prefecture, Japan. As a young man he married Sadako Suzuki, with whom he fathered two children. For a while he was associated with a Japanese Spiritualist group, Rei Jyutsu Kai, whose headquarters was west of Kyoto at the base of Kurama Kai, a holy mountain. However, he spent most of his life as a Buddhist. He completed the study and reflection that led to his creation of Reiki in 1914. Then, following a mystical experience he had while meditating on Kurama, he was led to found an organization, Usui Reiki Ryoho Gakkai, to disseminate the teachings and practice of Reiki.

Reiki, a Japanese word roughly translated as "universal energy," is a healing system based upon the subtle energy system (variously called qi, chi, or ki) within the human body as developed in Taoist China. It is the same system that underlies acupuncture, and pictures energy flowing through the body vertically from the head downward through a set of channels or meridians. The Reiki system teaches a method of attuning to the energy and assisting its flow in the body of the patient.

After developing Reiki, Usui worked in a poorer section of Kyoto for several years, but around 1921 moved to the Harajaju section of Tokyo. There he set up a school/clinic. His students would move into the school and work with Usui until they had learned the system, though occasionally he traveled to other parts of the country to teach. Anticipating a practice later popularized in the New Age Movement, Usui is remembered as using crystals in his healing work. He taught the Reiki system to some 2,000 students, several of whom opened clinics and centers around the country. Usui also wrote a brief handbook which included a description of Reiki healing (though without mentioning any of the particulars of the method), the answers to some frequently asked questions, and some poems composed by the emperor designed to advise people on a worthy life.

Usui died on March 9, 1926, of a stroke. He was buried at Saihoji Temple, a traditional Buddhist temple in a Tokyo suburb. Leadership of Usui Reiki Ryoho Gakkai was passed to a Mr. Ushida, and continues to the present. Among his last students was Dr. Chujiro Hayashi, a retired naval officer. He in turn taught Ms. Hawayo Takata, a Japanese-American who had traveled to Japan in the mid-1930s to seek help for her failing health. Hayashi named her his successor. Toward the end of her life, she initiated the first non-Japanese into Reiki and through the Reiki Masters she initiated, Reiki became a global phenomenon.

Sources:

Petter, Frank Arjava. Reiki Fire. Twin Lakes, Wis.: Lotus Light Publications, 1997.

———. Reiki: The Legacy of Dr. Usui. Twin Lakes, Wis.: Lotus Light Publications, 1998.

V

Valentine, Basil

This German adept in alchemical philosophy is commonly supposed to have been born at Mayence toward the close of the fourteenth century. As a young man he became a Roman Catholic priest and entered the Abbey of St. Peter, at Erfurt. He eventually became its prior, but otherwise very little is known concerning him, and even the date of his death is not known. His very existence is believed to be mythical by some authorities.

He appears to have been a very modest person, for according to Olaus Borrichius, the author of De Ortu et Progressu Chemioe, Valentine hid all the manuscripts of his writings inside one of the pillars of the Abbey Church where they might have remained for an indefinite period, but they were discovered during a thunderstorm, when a flash of lightning dislodged them from their curious hiding place. Valentine's reluctance for his work to be known may have been prompted by fear of the Inquisition discovering his researches in alchemy.

Valentine's works in alchemy certainly mark him as a very shrewd man and a capable scientist. Unlike much other medieval literature, his treatises were not all in Latin, some of them being in high Dutch and others in German. Prominent among those in his own language is The Triumphal Chariot of Antimony, first published at Leipzig in 1624. In this work, Valentine extolled antimony as an excellent medicine. The volume also embodies a lengthy metrical treatise on the philosophers' stone, the writer contending that whoever should discover and use this must do charitable deeds, mortify the flesh, and pray without ceasing. Among the alchemist's further writings are Apocalypsis Chymica, De Microcosmo degue Magno Mundi Mysterio et Medecina Hominis and Practica unà cum duodecim Clavibus et Appendice. All these were originally published in Germany at the beginning of the seventeenth century, and various passages in them demonstrate that the author understood the distillation of brandy and was acquainted with the method of obtaining hydrochloric acid from saltwater. Reverting to his faith in antimony, he has been credited with having been the first to extract this from sulphuret.

Valiantine, George (ca. 1874– ?)

Controversial direct voice medium of Williamsport, New York. He was a small manufacturer when at the age of 43 his mediumship was discovered by accident. At a hotel where he was staying he heard distinct raps on the door. No physical agency could be detected and he was deeply puzzled. A lady acquaintance who was familiar with Spiritualism later persuaded him to hold a séance.

The result was surprising. His deceased brother-in-law, Bert Everett, claimed to be present and rapped out that the spirits for a long time had been trying to attract Valiantine's attention. "Everett" then instructed Valiantine to make a cabinet. One evening, the medium went into trance and "Bert Everett" appeared in a materialized form. But direct voice communications became the chief feature of the séances as Valiantine's organism appeared to lend itself to this manifestation. "Bert Everett" found assistants in other controls: "Dr. Barnett," who often gave medical prescriptions, "Hawk Chief" and "Kokum," two Native Americans with booming voices and "Black Foot," another Native American, the last usually speaking in deep tones from the center of the floor.

In 1923 The Scientific American of New York offered a prize of $2,500 for the production of genuine physical phenomena. Valiantine was one of the mediums tested. Gardner Murphy of Columbia University and Kenneth Andrews of the New York World visited him at Wilkes-Barre for two preliminary sittings. Both sittings were successful and they returned with an initial favorable impression. Thereupon Valiantine came to New York.

During his first two séances before the committee of The Scientific American, eight distinct spirits manifested and spoke to the sitters. For the third séance, an electrical control apparatus had been secretly fixed to the medium's chair. It was meant to disclose to observers in another room whether the medium left his chair during the séance, under the cover of darkness, to reach for the trumpet. The apparatus did not register the medium's full weight for fifteen seconds on one occasion and from 1–14 seconds on other occasions.

For this reason, although the voices admittedly came from high in the air and carried on prolonged conversations, the result, in the report published in the July 1923 issue of The Scientific American, was ruled out as evidence. Over the construction of the report, which conveyed the impression that Valiantine was actually caught in fraud, a controversy arose between psychical researcher J. Malcolm Bird and British author H. Dennis Bradley, who pointed out the weaknesses of the report and its important admissions, which, however, were not sufficiently emphasized.

On several occasions, Bradley vigorously defended Valiantine. He met him at Arlena Towers, Ramsey, New York, in the home of Joseph de Wyckoff, a wealthy American financier who had been in close association with Valiantine for some years.

In November 1923, Wyckoff received long scripts from Valiantine which Valiantine said he had obtained through direct writing in his home. They were signed by "Everett" and "Dr. Barnett," and referred to a project involving an expedition to Guiana. Wyckoff discovered by chance that Valiantine's handwriting showed striking resemblance to the spirit scripts and took them to a handwriting expert who pronounced them identical. Wyckoff showed the report to Valiantine. He insisted that he did not do the writings. A test séance was arranged at his own house at Williamsport. Valiantine, at his request, was tied up. The séance was a failure. Wyckoff thereupon broke off his relations with Valiantine.

Not long afterwards, Wyckoff went to Europe. He met Bradley, who convinced him, by showing indirect evidence that he obtained in sittings with Gladys Osborne Leonard, that his evaluation of the Valiantine communications was unjust. Thereupon Wyckoff cabled to Valiantine from Europe and invited him to come and join him. Valiantine arrived in February 1924 and gave séances almost daily for five weeks in Bradley's home.

In the presence of more than fifty prominent people, over one hundred different spirit voices manifested and carried on long conversations in Russian, German, Spanish and even in idiomatic Welsh. Caradoc Evans, the Welsh novelist, spoke with his father's spirit in Cardiganshire Welsh.

But the seeds of suspicion had been sown. Wyckoff soon leveled a second charge against Valiantine, which grew out of a sitting in the St. Regis Hotel in New York on April 19, 1924. When the sitting was closed by the address of "Dr. Barnett," it was revealed that the trumpet had fallen sideways between Valiantine's legs, with the small end against the edge of the chair. As the medium was setting it upright, Wyckoff struck a match and scolded him for his action. Moreover, as Malcolm Bird pointed out in a letter to Light, "examination of the trumpet developed the facts that it was quite warm at the point where a human hand would naturally and conveniently grasp it, and that the mouthpiece was damp."

Bradley answered that this is exactly what would happen with independent voice phenomena. In his own séances, in which a luminous trumpet was seen sailing about the room, at the finish the inside was found moist, according to Bradley, for the simple reason that it is necessary for a spirit to materialize the vocal organs and breathe in order to produce its voice.

The following year, Valiantine paid another visit to England. In March 1925, he gave two test sittings before the Society for Psychical Research at Tavistock Square. Five words were spoken at the first, none at the second. They were considered blank.

Following this failure, Una, Lady Troubridge and Miss Radcliffe Hall of the society attended some sittings in Bradley's house. Later they were joined by Dr. V. J. Woolley, research officer of the society. Eleven distinct and individual voices were heard. Woolley agreed that he heard them and could not account for them. He was also satisfied that the movement of the luminous trumpet in the air was supernormal. Shortly afterward E. J. Dingwall, in company with Dr. Woolley, the other research officer of the society, obtained voices in daylight inside Valiantine's trumpet.

In his reports published in the Journal of the SPR (vol. 26, pp. 70–71; vol. 27, p. 170) and the Proceedings (vol. 36, pp. 52–53), Woolley wrote of these experiences and stated:

"Both of us heard raps which seemed similar to those she [Lady Troubridge] has described, but as I wish only to deal in this account with evidential utterances I do not propose to consider them in further detail. Both of us also heard whispering sounds, apparently in the trumpet, at times when we were convinced that Mr. Valiantine's lips were entirely closed, and I was able also to distinguish the words 'Father Woolley,' but nothing further."

The Coming of Confucius

But the most important phase of Valiantine's mediumship was yet to come. Strange languages were heard in séances in New York, and it was decided to test their nature by inviting a scholar. Dr. Neville Whymant, an authority on Chinese history, philosophy, and ancient literature, who happened to be in New York, was requested by Judge and Mrs. Cannon to come to a séance. He was slightly amused, but accepted. To quote from his notes:

"Suddenly, out of the darkness was heard a weird, crackling, broken little sound, which at once carried my mind straight back to China. It was the sound of a flute, rather poorly played, such as can be heard in the streets of the Celestial Land but nowhere else. Then followed in a low, but very audible voice the words 'K'ung-fu T'Zu.' Few persons, except Chinese, could pronounce the name correctly as the sounds cannot be represented in English letters. The idea that it might be Confucius himself never occurred to me. I had imagined that it might be somebody desirous of discussing the life and philosophy of the great Chinese teacher."

When, however, correct personal information was given, Whymant decided to test the matter. He said: "There is among your writings a passage written wrongly; should it not read thus?" At this point, Whymant began to quote as far as he knew, that is to say, to about the end of the first line. At once the words were taken out of his mouth, and the whole passage was recited in Chinese, exactly as it is recorded in the standard works of reference. After a pause of about fifteen seconds, the passage was again repeated, this time with certain alterations which gave it a new meaning. "Thus read," said the voice, "does not its meaning become plain?" Previous to the voice of "Confucius," Whymant heard a Sicilian chant and conversed with one of the controls, "Cristo d'Angelo," in Italian.

At the next séance at which Whymant was present, after having been absent through illness, "Confucius" again manifested and, omitting all ceremonious expressions, referred to Whymant's indisposition, saying "the weed of sickness was growing beside thy door." This metaphor was used in ancient Chinese literature but it is no longer current in the language. Nor was the dialect in which "Confucius" spoke any longer used in the Chinese Empire.

There are only about twelve Chinese sounds of which it can be definitely said that it was known how the Chinese of Confucius' time would have pronounced them. The voice which claimed to be that of Confucius used these archaic sounds correctly. Moreover, there were at that time only about six Chinese scholars in the world whose knowledge would have been equal to the one displayed by the direct voice. None of them was in America at the time.

In 1927, when Valiantine paid a third visit to England further tests of importance took place. Countess Ahlefeldt-Laurvig brought an ancient Chinese shell to a sitting in the apartment of Lord Charles Hope. At the top of the shell, circular folds ended in a small hollow mouthpiece. In China the shell was used as a horn and blown on occasion. The sitters tried it but could produce no sound whatsoever. Yet at one period during the sitting, from high up in the room, the shell horn was blown, and the peculiar notes were rendered in the correct Chinese fashion.

But the most important Chinese test tried was in making a phonograph record of the voice of "Confucius." The attempt was successful. The voice of "Confucius," (who died in 479 B.C.E.) was recorded in 1927 in London. It has curious flute-like tones, which rise and fall, and sometimes break into a peculiar sing-song tone. Whymant could only interpret a few sentences because the voice was faint and became blurred in the recording. But he recognized a number of the peculiar intonations. He could gather the meaning of the recorded speech by the tonal values. The voice was identical with the one he heard in America.

From H. Dennis Bradley's summary of this strange occurrence it is interesting to quote:

"I have heard the K'ung-fu T'ze voice speaking on two or three occasions in archaic Chinese. I have also heard the same voice with its peculiar intonation, speaking to me personally in English. The voice has spoken slowly, but with quite beautiful cadences. It possessed an extraordinary dignity."

New Controversies

In his books Towards the Stars (1942) and The Wisdom of the Gods (1925), Bradley published many important accounts of sittings with Valiantine. On several occasions he heard Valiantine speak simultaneously with the voices. He listened to the voices of the controls of Valiantine in séances with other mediums and heard "Feda," the control of Gladys Osborne Leonard, and "Cristo d'Angelo," who later associated himself with the Marquis Centurione Scotto, speak through Valiantine.

Including the 1927 period, Bradley conducted over a hundred experiments of which he deemed 95 percent successful.

This high percentage of success was undoubtedly partly due to the powerful direct voice mediumship which Bradley and his wife themselves developed after the first sittings with Valiantine in New York. But the physical manifestation was only part of the evidence. Bradley observed of Valiantine in his book . . . And After (1931),

"He is a man of instinctive good manners but it is essential to state that he is semi-illiterate. He possesses no scholastic education whatever, beyond the ordinary simplicities; he is ill-versed in general conversation and ideas. I mention these facts because many of the communications which have been made in the direct voice under his mediumship have been brilliant in their expressions and culture."

On April 26, 1929, Valiantine arrived for the fourth time in England from America. He spent one day with Bradley and then left with the Bradleys for Berlin. The sittings were held in a Ms. von Dirksen's house. Bradley considered them comparatively poor in result. Some members of the Berlin Occult Society, for which the séances had been arranged, subsequently claimed imposture and supported their assertions by referring to Bradley's and Valiantine's refusal to permit strict control. These charges were published five months afterward by Dr. Kroner in the Zeitschrift für Parapsychologie. Kroner attended only three of the sittings. Two lady sitters made direct allegations of fraudulent movements on Valiantine's part. However, no definite proof of having caught Valiantine in fraud was brought forward.

In May 1929, Valiantine gave a series of séances at the house of the Marquis Centurione Scotto in Genoa. One of the sittings, held in the presence of psychical researcher Ernesto Bozzano, was rigorously controlled. Valiantine was fastened to his chair and an adhesive bandage secured over his mouth. The knots were sealed, the doors were locked.

The results were excellent. The enthusiasm, however, was soon marred by a charge made by Rossi and Scotto. Rossi claimed to have distinctly felt Valiantine in one of their sittings lean forward and speak into the trumpet. He also said that Castellani caught hold of Mrs. Bradley's hand which was touching the back of his (Castellani's) head. Both of them were furiously indignant and left immediately. Castellani later withdrew his allegation against Mrs. Bradley and Rossi also became wavering. (These allegations charged the Bradleys with being Valiantine's accomplices. Evidence that such was the case would be forthcoming.)

As Bradley pointed out there was a truly bizarre aspect in the situation:

"The Marquis Centurione Scotto, Mr. Rossi and Madame Rossi, unknown before to me or to Valiantine, visit me in England in 1927. The Marquis, to his astonishment, speaks to his [dead] son in Italian. The Marquis and Mrs. Rossi then develop voice mediumship entirely from, and because of, their meeting and initiation with Valiantine. Valiantine then, in 1929, visits them in Italy and is accused of being a fraud. The poet is right when he declares 'It is a mad world.'"

In 1931, Valiantine was again invited to England. This visit ended on a tragic note. Bradley asked him to devote six evenings to experiments for psychic imprints (molds). Striking previous successes were recorded in the book The Wisdom of the Gods. Since then, famous people whom Bradley knew had died and their original left and right hand imprints were in the possession of palmistry authority Noel Jaquin. Scientifically, therefore, the experiments held potential promise. The claimed spirits of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Lord Dewar, and Sir Henry Segrave all apparently complied with Bradley's eager request, but the plastic substance used in the séances, unknown to Valiantine, was chemically prepared. A stain was found on Valiantine's elbow and expert examination disclosed that the spirit thumbprint of "Sir Arthur Conan Doyle" was exactly similar to the print of Valiantine's big toe on his right foot, a spirit thumbprint of "Lord Dewar" to that of Valiantine's left big toe, a spirit fingerprint of "Sir Henry Segrave" to the print of Valiantine's middle finger and another spirit impression to that of Valiantine's elbow.

Ex-Chief Detective Inspector Bell, the head of the fingerprint department at New Scotland Yard, declared that in a court of law the resemblance would be sufficient to hang a man charged with murder. According to Bradley, when Valiantine was confronted with this evidence, he broke down completely and sobbed. He would not, however, admit fraud. His only answer to questions was: "I cannot understand it."

Bradley believed that the rapid accumulation of money and fame as a professional medium did not have a beneficial effect upon Valiantine's character. He found that he had progressively changed, becoming a conceited and arrogant man. Yet "his reason for attempting these imprint frauds will remain incomprehensible. He received no money from me, and for him to imagine that in the presence of imprint experts he could commit palpable fraud and escape detection was a sign of sheer lunacy."

Besides Valiantine, his controls were also compromised, as on the night, just near the end of the sitting, when "Bert Everett" spoke in his usual shrill tones, announcing that an imprint had been made which was excellent. Mr. X., with whom Valiantine stayed during the visit, obtained the fingerprint of "Walter Stinson," control of the American medium Mina Crandon (known as "Margery"). This print was identified by Noel Jacquin as identical to that of the middle finger of Valiantine's left hand.

After the exposure, Valiantine gave twelve séances to Dr. Vivian. The report stated that while two voices were speaking, Valiantine was simultaneously heard to draw the attention of the sitters to the two voices. Surgeon Admiral Nimmo had two sittings in daylight. The voice that he heard to come distinctly from within the trumpet gave intelligent and evidential communication. In the presence of a second doctor, the voices were heard again, speaking distinctly and intelligently. During the phenomena, the doctors kept Valiantine's face under acute observation but they did not discover any movement whatever on it.

The experiences of Whymant with the voice of "Confucius" came before the Society for Psychical Research in 1927. Whymant delivered a lecture, played the phonograph record of the voice, and submitted his account of twelve séances. No action was taken. Thereupon the records were the subject of a book by Whymant, published in 1931 under the title Psychic Adventures in New York. In Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 40, pt. 125), the report of Lord Charles Hope on his sittings in 1927 concluded: "I was disappointed at the lack of evidence for survival which the voices had given me. I was left uncertain whether Valiantine was a genuine medium or not." (For other cases of imprints and molds, see plastics.)

Sources:

Bradley, H. Dennis. . . . And After. London: T. Werner Laurie, 1931.

———. Towards the Stars. London: T. Werner Laurie, 1924.

———. The Wisdom of the Gods. London: T. Werner Laurie, 1925.

Whymant, Neville. Psychic Adventures in New York. London: Morley & Mitchell, 1931.

Valiente, Doreen (1922–1999)

Doreen Valiente, poetess and one of the founders of modern Wicca, was born on January 4, 1922, in London, England. During World War II (1939–45) she married a soldier who had been wounded fighting for the Free French and had been sent to England to recuperate from his wounds. Her rise out of obscurity began in 1952 when she was introduced to Gerald B. Gardner, who was in the process of creating a new Goddess-oriented religion that he called Witchcraft. Following her initiation into the Craft, she worked with Gardner to perfect the rituals he had assembled. Among her most important contributions was a poetic piece called "The Charge to the Goddess." After four years with Gardner, she left to become the priestess of her own coven, and in 1962 authored her first book, a small volume describing the new Wicca religion. In 1964 she accepted a second Witchcraft initiation from Robert Cochrane.

Valiente worked quietly through the 1960s but became an object of controversy in the 1970s as Wicca emerged as a popular counterculture religion and various researchers began to explore the literary origins of the Pagan rituals. This controversy grew in the 1980s after Gardner's papers were sold to Ripley's Believe It or Not. The papers indicated that Gardner had not inherited the Witchcraft rituals, but had created them with the assistance of various people, especially Valiente.

Valiente began to emerge into her own in the 1970s when she wrote a set of popular books on Witchcraft, An ABC of Witchcraft Past and Present (1973), Natural Magic (1975), and Witchcraft for Tomorrow (1978). Then, as the controversy on Gardner heated up, and speculations concerning her own role in the development of the Gardnerian rituals were rife, she published her account of the story confirming much of what had been said about the discontinuity of Gardner's work with any folk survivals of the Craft from previous centuries. At the same time, she documented one of the major aspects of Gardner's story, that he had been initiated into Witchcraft in 1939 by a woman named Dorothy Clutterbuck. Some had speculated that Clutterbuck had never existed. Valiente tracked her birth and death records and found a copy of her will. All of this material was included in her most important book, The Rebirth of Witchcraft (1989). Besides being a significant contribution to modern religious history, the book established her place in the creation of modern Wicca.

During the last decade of her life, Valiente was widely acknowledged as a matriarch within the Wiccan community internationally though she lived quietly and made few public appearances. She died on September 1, 1999.

Sources:

Valiente, Doreen. An ABC of Witchcraft Past and Present. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1973.

———. Natural Magic. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1975.

———. The Rebirth of Witchcraft. Custer, Wash.: Phoenix Publishing, 1989.

———. Where Witchcraft Lives. London: Aquarian Press, 1962.

———. Witchcraft for Tomorrow. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1978.

Valkhoff, Marius (1905– ?)

Professor of Romance studies who investigated areas of parapsychology. He was born on January 7, 1905, at Zwolle, the Netherlands. He studied at the University of Amsterdam (D.Litt., 1931), taught at Amsterdam University for many years (1932–1950), and then moved to South Africa to become head of the Department of Romance Studies and a professor of French at the University of Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, South Africa. In South Africa he became chair of the South African Society for Psychical Research and published various articles on parapsychology in Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie and various publications of the South African Society for Psychical Research. He experimented with psychokinesis and with drug-induced states related to extrasensory perception.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Vallee, Jacques Francis (1939–)

French scientist and authority on Unidentified Flying Objects. He was born September 24, 1939, in Pontoise, France and attended the Sorbonne (B.S. mathematics, 1959), Lille University (M.S. astrophysics, 1961), and Northwestern University (Ph.D. computer science, 1967). He organized a computer company in northern California, and became a member of the editorial board of Telecommunications Policy.

While at Northwestern he became an associate of J. Allen Hynek and authored two important works in ufology, Anatomy of a Phenomenon (1965) and Challenge to Science: The UFO Enigma (1966). Vallee was quickly hailed as one of the most important theorists in the field and was said to be the original of the character "Lacombe" in Steven Spielberg's popular movie Close Encounters of the Third Kind.

Several years later, Vallee released Passport to Magonia (1969) in which he directed attention to the similarity of UFO reports to folklore. This volume was followed by others in the 1970s which tied some of his speculations concerning the nonphysical nature of UFOs to political conspiracy theories and occultism. The Invisible College (1975) and Messengers of Deceit (1979) largely marginalized Vallee in the ufological community. There he remained through most of the 1980s, but he returned to the center with Confrontations (1990), an account of investigations of UFO-related deaths and various physical evidence cases.

Sources:

Hynek, J. Allen and Jacques Vallee. The Edge of Reality. Chicago: Regnery, 1975.

Vallee, Jacques. Anatomy of a Phenomenon: Unidentified Objects in Space, A Scientific Appraisal. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1965.

———. The Invisible College. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1975.

———. Messengers of Deception. Berkeley, Calif.: And/Or Press, 1979.

———. Passport to Magonia. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1969. Reprint, Chicago: Contemporary Books, 1993.

———. UFO Chronicles of the Soviet Union. New York: Ballantine, 1992.

Vallee, Jacques, and Janine Vallee. Challenge to Science; The UFO Enigma. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1966.

Vambéry, Arminius (1832–1913)

Hungarian historian and world traveler who may have communicated to author Bram Stoker the facts and legends concerning the real Prince Dracula (Vlad V), who supplied the inspiration for Stoker's famous occult thriller. Stoker and Vambéry met at the Beefsteak Club on April 30, 1890, after a performance of Henry Irving in the play The Dead Heart, and also two years later at Trinity College, Dublin, where Vambéry was presented with an honorary degree.

Sources:

Adler, Lory, and Richard Dalby. The Dervish of Windsor Castle. London: Bachman & Turner, 1979.

Melton, J. Gordon. The Vampire Book: An Encyclopedia of the Undead. Detroit: Gale Research, 1994.

Vambéry, Arminius. The Story of My Struggles: The Memoirs of Arminius Vambéry. 2 vols. New York, 1904; London: T. F. Unwin, 1905.

Vampire

Russian vampir, South Russian upuir, probably from the root pi, to drain, with the prefix va, or av. A dead person who returns in spirit form from the grave for the purpose of sucking the blood of living persons, or a living sorcerer who takes a special form for destructive purpose. Webster's International Dictio- nary defines a vampire as "a blood-sucking ghost or reanimated body of a dead person; a soul or re-animated body of a dead person believed to come from the grave and wander about by night sucking the blood of persons asleep, causing their death."

The belief in vampires is an ancient one. It was found in ancient India, Babylonia, Greece, and for a time accepted by early Christians. The conception of the vampire was common among Slavonic peoples, especially in the Balkan countries and in Hungary, Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia.

In these territories from 1730 to 1735, there was a claimed epidemic of vampirism, but it was by no means confined there. In Russia and the Ukraine it was believed that vampires were generally wizards or sorcerers, but in Bulgaria and Serbia it was thought that any corpse over which a cat or a dog jumped or over which a bird flew was liable to become a vampire. In Greece, a vampire was known as a broncolaia or bourkabakos, which was identified with the Slavonic name for "werewolf," vlkodlak, or vukodlak. The vampire, too, was often supposed to steal the heart of his victim and to roast it over a slow fire, thus causing interminable amorous longings.

Marks of Vampirism

Vampirism is said to be epidemic in character: where one instance is discovered it is almost invariably followed by several others. It is believed that the victim of a vampire pines away and dies and becomes in turn a vampire after death, and so duly infects others.

After the disinterment of a suspected vampire, various well-known signs are looked for by experienced persons. Thus, if several holes about the breadth of a man's finger are observed in the soil above the grave, the vampire character of its occupant may be suspected. The corpse is usually found with wide-open eyes, ruddy, life-like complexion and lips, a general appearance of freshness, and shows no signs of corruption.

It may also be found that the hair and nails have grown as in life. On the throat, two small livid marks may be observed. The coffin is also very often full of blood, the body has a swollen and gorged appearance, and the shroud is frequently half-devoured. The blood contained in the veins of the corpse is found, on examination, to be in a fluid condition as in life, and the limbs are pliant and have none of the rigidity of death.

Examples of Vampirism

Many tales of vampirism have been recorded. Charles Ferdinand de Schertz, in his work Magia Posthuma, printed at Olmutz in 1706, related several stories of apparitions of this sort.

One, among others, was of a herdsman of the village of Blow near the town of Kadam in Bohemia, who visited several persons who all died within eight days.

At last, the inhabitants of Blow dug up the herdsman's body and fixed it in the ground with a stake driven through it. The man, even in this condition, laughed at the action of the people about him and told them they were very obliging to furnish him with a stick with which to defend himself.

The same night, he extricated himself from the stake, frightened several persons by appearing to them, and caused the deaths of many more individuals. He was then delivered into the hands of the hangman, who put him into a cart in order to burn him outside the town. As they went along, the carcass shrieked in the most hideous manner and moved as if it were alive, and upon being again run through with a stake, it gave a loud cry, and a great quantity of fresh blood issued from the wound. At last, the body was burned to ashes.

Augustine Calmet, in his Dissertation on Vampires appended to his Dissertation upon the Apparitions of Angels, Demons, and Ghosts (English translation, 1759), gave several instances of vampirism:

"It is now about fifteen years since a soldier, who was quartered in the house of a Haidamack peasant, upon the frontiers of Hungary, saw, as he was at the table with his landlord, a stranger come in and sit down by them. The master of the house and the rest of the company were strangely terrified, but the soldier knew not what to make of it. The next day the peasant died, and, upon the soldier's enquiring into the meaning of it, he was told that it was his landlord's father who had been dead and buried above ten years that came and sat down at table, and gave his son notice of his death.

"The soldier soon propagated the story through his regiment, and by this means it reached the general officers, who commissioned the count de Cabreras . . . to make an exact enquiry into the fact. The count, attended by several officers, a surgeon, and a notary, came to the house, and took the deposition of all the family, who unanimously swore that the spectre was the landlord's father, and that all the soldier had said was strictly true. The same was also attested by all the inhabitants of the village.

"In consequence of this the body of the spectre was dug up, and found to be in the same state as if it has been but just dead. . . . The count de Cabreras ordered its head to be cut off, and the corpse to be buried again. He then proceeded to take depositions against other spectres of the same sort, and particularly against a man who had been dead above thirty years, and had made his appearance there several times in his own house at meal-time. At his first visit he had fastened upon the neck of his own brother, and sucked his blood; at his second, he had treated one of his children in the same manner; and the third time, he fastened upon a servant of the family, and all three died upon the spot.

"Upon this evidence, the count gave orders that he should be dug up, and being found, like the first, with his blood in a fluid state, as if he had been alive, a great nail was drove through his temples, and he was buried again. The count ordered a third to be burnt, who had been dead above sixteen years, and was found guilty of murdering two of his own children by sucking their blood.

"The gentleman who acquainted me with all these particulars, had them from the count de Cabreras himself, at Fribourg in Brisgau, in the year 1730."

Other cases alluded to by Calmet are as follows:

"In the part of Hungary . . . on the other side of the Tibiscus, . . . the people named Heydukes have a notion that there are dead persons, called by them vampires, which suck the blood of the living, so as to make them fall away visibly to skin and bones, while the carcasses themselves, like leeches, are filled with blood to such a degree that it comes out at all the apertures of their body. This notion has lately been confirmed by several facts.

"About five years ago, an Heyduke, named Arnold Paul, an inhabitant of Medreiga, was killed by a cart full of hay that fell upon him. About thirty days after his death, four persons died suddenly, with all the symptoms usually attending those who are killed by vampires. It was then remembered that this Arnold Paul had frequently told a story of his having been tormented by a Turkish vampire, in the neighbourhood of Cassova, upon the borders of Turkish Servia (for the notion is that those who have been passive vampires in their life-time become active ones after death; or, in other words, that those who have had their blood sucked become suckers in their turn) but that he had been cured by eating some of the earth upon the vampire's grave, and by rubbing himself with his blood. This precaution, however, did not hinder him from being guilty himself after his death; for, upon digging up his corpse forty days after his burial, he was found to have all the marks of an arch-vampire. His body was fresh and ruddy, his hair, beard, and nails were grown, and his veins were full of fluid blood, which ran from all parts of his body upon the shroud that he was buried in. The hadnagy, or bailiff of the village, who was present at the digging up of the corpse, and was very expert in the whole business of vampirism, ordered a sharp stake to be drove quite through the body of the deceased, and to let it pass through his heart, which is attended with a hideous cry from the carcass, as if it had been alive. This ceremony being performed, they cut off the head, and burnt the body to ashes. After this, they proceeded in the same manner with the four other persons that died of vampirism, lest they also should be troublesome. But all these executions could not hinder this dreadful prodigy from appearing again last year, at the distance of five years from its first breaking out. In the space of three months, seventeen persons of different ages and sexes died of vampirism, some without any previous illness, and others after languishing two or three days. Among others, it was said, that a girl, named Stanoska, . . . went to bed in perfect health, but awoke in the middle of the night, trembling, and crying out that the son of the Heyduke Millo, who died about nine weeks before, had almost strangled her while she was asleep. From that time she fell into a languishing state, and died at three days' end. Her evidence against Millo's son was looked upon as a proof of his being a vampire, and, upon digging up his body, he was found to be such.

"At the consultation of the principal inhabitants of the place, . . . it was considered how it was possible that the plague of vampirism should break out afresh, after the precautions that had been taken some years before: and, at last, it was found out that the original offender, Arnold Paul, had not only destroyed the four persons mentioned above, but had killed several beasts, which the late vampires, and particularly the son of Millo, had fed upon. Upon this foundation a resolution was taken to dig up all the persons that had died within a certain time. Out of forty were found seventeen, with all the evident tokens of vampirism; and they had all stakes drove through their hearts, their heads cut off, their bodies burnt, and their ashes thrown into the river."

Methods of Extirpation

The commonest methods of extirpation of vampires are beheading the suspected corpse, taking out the heart, impaling the corpse with a white-thorn stake (in Russia an aspen), and burning it. Sometimes more than one or all of these precautions is taken.

Instances are on record where the graves of as many as thirty or forty persons have been disturbed during the course of an epidemic of suspected vampirism and their occupants impaled or beheaded.

Persons who dread the visits or attacks of a vampire sleep with a wreath made of garlic round the neck, as garlic is supposed to be especially obnoxious to the vampire.

When impaled, the vampire is usually said to emit a dreadful cry, but it has been pointed out that intestinal gas may be forced through the throat by the entry of the stake into the body, and that this may account for the sound.

The method of discovering a vampire's grave in Serbia was to place a virgin boy upon a coal-black stallion which had never served a mare and to mark the spot that the horse refused to pass. An officer quartered in Wallachia wrote to Calmet, giving him an instance of this method.

A Bulgarian belief was that a wizard or sorcerer may entrap a vampire by placing some food for which the vampire has a partiality in a bottle. When the vampire enters in the shape of fluff, the sorcerer can seal up the flask and throw it into the fire.

Scientific Views of Vampirism

The British custom of piercing a suicide's body with a stake would appear to be a remnant of the belief in vampirism. Such beliefs were also to be seen in the Polynesian tii, the Malayan hantu penyardin (a dog-headed water demon), and the kephn of the Karens, which devoured human souls.

The English anthropologist E. B. Tylor considered vampires to be "causes conceived in spiritual form to account for specific facts of wasting disease." The Russian folklorist Alexander N. Afansyev regarded them as thunder gods and spirits of the storm, who sleep during winter in cloud coffins and rise again in spring.

Calmet's difficulty in accepting vampires was that he could not understand how a spirit could leave its grave and return there with matter in the form of blood, leaving no evidence that the surface of the earth above the grave had been stirred. But this view might be combated by the theory of the precipitation of matter.

In modern times, it is easy to understand how individuals in an unrecognized condition of cataleptic trance might have been prematurely buried alive and upon regaining consciousness have struggled to escape their horrible plight. Their bodies would have exhibited many of the signs associated with vampires.

It is now also generally known that some individuals suffer from a morbid fascination with human blood, and it would have been easy in the past to associate such unnatural appetite with vampirism. The infamous Countess Elizabeth Bathory of Transylvania (d. 1614) was reputed to have murdered nearly 700 young women in the belief that their blood would keep her young.

No doubt the observed activities of the various types of vampire bats (Desmodus Rufus, Didemus Yungi, Diphylla Caudata, Desmodus Rotunda) in sucking blood from cattle and horses have helped to spread legends of vampires. The vampire bat drinks 20 ccs of blood per day and has been known to attack human beings. It also spreads rabies, thus enhancing stories of a vampire plague.

Psychic Theories of Vampires

Some individuals seem to have the ability to draw some kind of psychic energy from others. Every stage performer or public speaker is aware of the rapport which exists between performer and audience, and many have become expert at gaining confidence and power through some instinctive techniques of centralizing and transforming psychic or nervous energy.

The common experience of out-of-the-body travel or astral projection has sometimes been associated with visits to other individuals, as well as contacts with frightening elementals on the astral plane. Some occultists appear to have mastered techniques by which they can astrally project, and visit their victims while asleep and drain their vitality from them.

During the nineteenth century, the French Spiritualist Z. J. Piérart attempted to reconcile the theory of premature burial with astral projection by those who died after being buried alive. He wrote:

"Poor dead cataleptics, buried as if really dead in cold and dry spots where morbid causes are incapable of effecting the destruction of their bodies, the astral spirit enveloping itself with a fluidic ethereal body, is prompted to quit the precincts of its tomb and to exercise on living bodies acts peculiar to physical life, especially that of nutrition, the result of which, by a mysterious link between soul and body which spiritualistic science will some day explain, is forwarded to the material body lying still within the tomb, and the latter is thus helped to perpetuate its vital existence."

Adolphe d'Assier, in his book Posthumous Humanity (1887), admitted that the body of the vampire may be dead but the spirit earthbound and obsessed with the idea that the physical body must be saved from dissolution. Consequently the dense astral body feeds on human victims and, by some mysterious process, conveys the blood into the tomb.

Both speculations furnish explanations of the attestation of numerous ancient chronicles that fresh blood was found in the exhumed and uncorrupted body of dead people suspected of vampirism.

Following the occult boom of the 1950s, Bram Stoker's powerful but much neglected masterpiece Dracula was taken up again, examined by critics and found to be as full of vitality as during Stoker's own lifetime. Almost by contagion, it has generated a plethora of horror movies, plays, and other vampire thrillers.

In Britain, the Dracula Society, with its general interest in Gothic themes, pioneered tourist expeditions to Transylvania, and in Stoker's Ireland, a Bram Stoker Society was founded to honor a much neglected Irishman. Through the 1980s and 1990s, the most active organization was the Count Dracula Fan Club, headquartered in New York City. However, in 1999, the club announced its closing.

Much of the interest in vampires has also been carried by fan clubs that have grown out of television series. "Dark Shadows" fandom, from the 1960s, had retained its vitality for over 30 years and still attracts 400-600 members to its annual meeting. Another set of fan clubs sprung up from "Forever Knight," the series featuring a vampire policeman from Toronto. As the century ended, vampire fandom received an unexpected boost from the successful series, "Buffy the Vampire Slayer."

In the 1990s, interest in vampires shifted largely to the Internet where thousands of sites cover all aspects of the vampire world. Over 2000 sites alone were devoted just to the "Buffy the Vampire Slayer" show in 1999. Vampire Junction, formerly a fan magazine, was one of the first to make the transition to the Internet and emerged as one of the most complete guides to vampires. (See also Dracula; Magia Posthuma; Monsters)

Sources:

Auerbach, Nina. Our Vampires, Ourselves. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1995.

Barber, Paul. Vampires, Burial, & Death: Folklore & Reality. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1988.

Burton, Sir Richard. Vikram and the Vampire, or Tales of Hindu Devilry. London: Tilston & Edwards, 1832. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1969.

Calmet, Augustine. Dissertations Upon the Apparitions of Angels, Demons, and Ghosts, and Concerning . . . Vampires. Paris: De Burel'aine, 1746. Reprint, London, 1759.

———. The Phantom World; or, The History and Philosophy of Spirits, Apparitions, & Co. 2 vols. London: Richard Bentley, 1850; Philadelphia: A. Hart, 1850.

De Schertz, Charles F. Magia Posthuma. Olmutz, 1706.

Dresser, Norine. American Vampires: Fans, Victims & Practitioners. New York: W. W. Norton, 1989.

Dundas, Alan. The Vampire: A Casebook. Madison: University of Wisconsin Press, 1998.

Ennemoser, Joseph. The History of Magic. 2 vols. 1854. Reprint, New York: University Books, 1970.

Frayling, Christopher, ed. Vampyres: From Lord Byron to Count Dracula. London: Faber and Faber, 1991.

Glut, Donald F. The Dracula Book. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1975.

Harenburg, Johann C. Von Vampyren. N.p., 1739.

Hartmann, Franz. Premature Burial. London: Swann Sonnenschein, 1896.

Hertz, Wilhelm. Der Werwolf. Stuttgart, 1862.

Introvigne, Massimo. La stripe de Dracula: Indagine sul vampirismpo dall'antichita ai nostro giorni. Milan: Arnoldo Mondadari Editore, 1997.

Mackenzie, Andrew. Dracula Country. London: Arthur Barker, 1977.

Marigny, Jean. Vampires: Restless Creatures of the Night. New York: Abrams, 1994.

McNally, Raymond T. Dracula Was a Woman. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1983.

McNally, Raymond T., and Radu Florescu. In Search of Dracula: A True History of Dracula and Vampire Legends. New York: New York Graphic Society, 1972. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1994.

Mannhardt, W. Über Vampirismus. (see vol. 4 of Zeitschrift für Deutsche Mythologie und Sittenkunde) Göttingen, 1858.

Masters, Anthony. The Natural History of the Vampire. London: Ruper Hart-Davis, 1972; London: Mayflower 1974.

Melton, J. Gordon. The Vampire Book: The Encyclopedia of the Undead. 2nd edition. Detroit: Visible Ink Press, 1999.

———. The Vampire Gallery. Detroit: Visible Ink Press, 1998.

———. Video Hound's Vampires on Video. Detroit, Visible Ink Press, 1996.

Miller, Elizabeth. Dracula: Sense and Nonsense. Westcliffe-on-Sea, UK: Desert Island Books, 1998.

———. Dracula: The Shade and the Shadow. Westcliffe-on-Sea, UK: Desert Island Books, 1998.

———. Reflection on Dracula: Ten Essays. White Rock, BC: Transylvanian Press, 1997.

Perkowski, Jan I., ed. Vampires of the Slavs. Cambridge, Mass.: Slavica Press, 1976.

Ralston, W. R. S. Russian Folk Tales. London: Smith, Elder, 1873.

———. The Songs of the Russian People. London, 1872. Reprint, New York: Haskell House, 1970.

Ranfft, Michael. De Masticatione Mortuorum in Tumulis. Leipzig, 1728.

Rickles, Laurence A. The Vampire Lectures. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1999.

Rohr, Philip. De Masticatione Mortuorum. N.p., 1679.

Ronay, Gabriel. The Dracula Myth. London: W. H. Auden, 1972; London: Pan 1975.

Roth, Phyllis A. Bram Stoker. Boston: Twayne, 1982.

Senf, Carol A. The Vampire in Nineteenth-Century English Literature. Bowling Green, Ohio: Bowling Green State University Popular Press, 1988.

Shepard, Leslie. The Dracula Book of Great Vampire Stories. New York: Citadel, 1977.

Summers, Montague. The Vampire, His Kith and Kin. London: Kegan, Paul, 1928; New York: University Books, 1960.

———. The Vampire in Europe. London: Kegan, Paul, 1929; New York: University Books, 1962.

Thompson, R. Campbell. The Devils and Evil Spirits of Babylonia. 2 vols. London, 1903–04.

Underwood, Peter. The Vampire's Bedside Companion: The Amazing World of Vampires in Fact and Fiction. London: Leslie Frewin, 1972.

Wright, Dudley. The Book of Vampires. 2d ed. London, 1924; Causeway Books, 1973.

Zopfius, Johan Heinrich. Dissertatio de Vampiris Seruiensibus. Halle, 1733.

Vampire Information Exchange

Vampire interest group founded by Eric Held and Dorothy Nixon in 1978. In 1979 they began a newsletter which Held has continued over the years as Nixon moved on to other interests. Held has also published an annual Calendar of Vampire Events and a bibliography of vampire books for its members. For information on membership, write to Eric Held, Dir., P.O. Box 290328, Brooklyn, NY 11229-0328.

Sources:

Held, Eric. The Vampire Bibliography of Fiction and Nonfiction. Brooklyn, N.Y.: Vampire Information Exchange, 1992.

———. 1993 Calendar of Vampire Events. Brooklyn, N.Y.: Vampire Information Exchange, 1992.

Melton, J. Gordon. The Vampire Book: An Encyclopedia of the Undead. 2nd edition. Detroit: Gale Research, 1999.

The Vampire Journal

Former publication devoted to the subject of vampires that served as the organ of the now defunct Dracula and Company, a vampire interest group headquartered in the New Orleans suburb of Metairie, Louisiana.

Vampire Quarterly (Magazine)

Magazine devoted to the subject of vampires formerly published from Toms River, New Jersey.

Vampire Studies

Founded in Chicago in 1977 as the Vampire Studies Society by Martin V. Riccardo, the organization was the first vampire fan club to use the word "vampire" in its name (there had previously been several organizations built around Dracula). For several years the society published a Journal of Vampirism. The word "society" was dropped in 1990 and Vampire Studies now exists as a correspondence network and information clearinghouse for people interested in all aspects of vampire lore. Those interested may contact Riccardo at P.O. Box 151, Berwyn, IL 60402-0151.

Sources:

"The Lure of Martin V. Riccardo." Special issue of The Vampire Information Exchange Newsletter 53 (April 1991).

Melton, J. Gordon. The Vampire Book: An Encyclopedia of the Undead. 2nd edition. Detroit: Gale Research, 1999.

Riccardo, Martin V. Liquid Dreams of Vampires. St. Paul: Llewellyn Publications, 1997.

———. The Lure of the Vampire. Chicago: Adams Press, 1983.

———. Vampires Unearthed. New York: Garland, 1983.

Van Bruhesen, Peter (d. 1571)

A Dutch doctor and astrologer who died at Bruges. He published in that town in 1550 a Grand and Perpetual Almanack in which he scrupulously indicated by the tenets of judicial astrology the correct days for bathing, shaving, haircutting, and so forth. The work caused offense to a certain magistrate of Bruges, a barber by profession, with the result that there appeared against Bruhesen's volume another Grand and Perpetual Almanack, with the flippant subtitle a scourge for empirics and charlatans. This squib was published by a rival doctor François Rapaert, but Peter Haschaerts, a surgeon and protagonist of astrological science, warmly defended Bruhesen in his Astrological Buckler.

Van Busschbach, J(ohan) G(eorge) (1896–1974)

Dutch Inspector of Schools who was winner of the first McDougall Award for Distinguished Research in Parapsychology for his work in investigating ESP between teachers and pupils in American schools. Van Busschbach was born July 3, 1896, in Amsterdam. He was a primary school teacher (1916–21), teacher in psychology (1927–39), director of training school for teachers (1940–49), and inspector of schools, Amsterdam, (1944–61). He was a charter member of the Parapsychological Association, a council member of the Parapsychologisch Onderzoek (Amsterdam Foundation for Parapsychological Studies), and a member of the Studievereniging voor Psychical Research (Netherlands Society for Parapsychology).

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Van Busschbach, J. G. "A Further Report on an Investigation of ESP in School Children." Journal of Parapsychology 19 (1955).

———. "An Investigation of ESP Between Teacher and Pupils in American Schools." Journal of Parapsychology 20 (June 1956).

———. "An Investigation of Extrasensory Perception in School Children." Journal of Parapsychology 17 (1953).

Van de Castle, Robert L(eon) (1927–)

Clinical psychologist and parapsychologist. He was born on November 16, 1927, at Rochester, New York, and studied at Syracuse University (B.A., 1951), the University of Missouri (M.A., 1953), and the University of North Carolina (Ph.D., 1959). While in North Carolina he was a research associate at the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke University (1954–55). Following graduation in 1959 he joined the faculty in psychology at the University of Denver where he remained until he became the director of the Sleep and Dream Laboratory at the University of Virginia in 1967. He is now a psychologist at the Blue Ridge Hospital in Charlottesville, Virginia.

While in Denver he did research with members of the Cuna tribe as part of research on whether people from a nontechnological society would score significantly on ESP tests. He went on to conduct dream research with Calvin Itall at the Institute of Dream Research in Miami, publishing a joint work The Content Analysis of Dreams (1966). He also studied personality correlates in extrasensory perception and psychokinesis, and conducted experiments relating psychological tests to extrasensory ability, on grants from the Parapsychology Foundation.

He was a charter member of the Parapsychological Association, since 1969 a council member, and was elected its president in 1970.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Van de Castle, Robert L. "Development and Validation of a Perceptual Maturity Scale Using Figure Preferences." Journal of Consultative Psychology 29 (1965).

———. "An Exploratory Study of Some Personality Correlates Associated with PK Performance." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 52 (1958).

———. "The Facilitation of ESP Through Hypnosis." American Journal of Clinical & Experimental Hypnosis 12 (1969).

———. "An Investigation of Psi Abilities Among the Cuna Indians of Panama." Journal of Parapsychology 38 (June 1974).

———. Our Dreaming Mind. New York: Ballantine, 1995.

———. "Psi Abilities in Primitive Groups." Proceedings of the Parapsychological Association 7 (1970).

Vandermeulen Spirit Indicator

One of various devices invented to facilitate communication with spirits through mechanical means. It consisted of two glass prisms—one plain, the other resinous—fixed face-to-face on a board. Between them hung a very light triangle of wire. The prisms were connected to the positive and negative poles of a dry bell battery.

If the hanging triangle swung out and touched the positive wire, the circuit was closed and the bell rang. The spirits were expected to generate electricity in the prisms. If this was done, the hanging triangle wired to the negative pole would be repelled by the negative prism and attracted to the positive wire. The bell would ring, which was taken as an indication that a spirit desired to communicate, and the observers would rush to the ouija board to obtain the message.

The young inventor died in 1930 before his apparatus could be tested properly, but it was revived by a Mr. Rutot, a Belgian professor and a member of the Royal Academy of Sciences. Rutot claimed that by means of the apparatus he had been able to contact the dead inventor. The apparatus, which came to be known as Rutot's Spirit Indicator, was described in Revue Métapsychique (May–June, 1930, p. 256), and Rutot's own experiences were published in the Bulletin du Conseil de Recherches Métapsychiques de Belgique (July 1930). An English-language description of the apparatus, with detailed instructions for construction, was published by Robert J. Strong in his book Spiritual Engineering (1931).

For a detailed report of tests, with photographs, see the chapter "Rutot's Triangles" in Laboratory Investigations into Psychic Phenomena by Hereward Carrington (n.d.). It was not possible for Carrington to confirm the "instrumental communication with the dead" claimed by Rutot. Mechanical faults were not ruled out, and it was suggested that Rutot's claimed results may have been due to experimenters with mediumistic or telekinetic powers. (See also electronic voice phenomenon)

Van Eeden, Frederik (1860–1932)

Dutch physician, author, and poet, who was also actively interested in psychiatry and psychical research and was acquainted with Frederic William Henry Myers. He conducted important research with the non-professional British medium Rosina Thompson and also made valuable contributions to the study of dreams. He coined the term "lucid dreams" to denote dreams in which the sleeper is aware of dreaming, i.e., some degree of waking consciousness persists in the dream state, often a preliminary to out-of-the-body (OOB) experiences. He appears to have had some OOB experience himself, since he described it in one of his novels (The Bride of Dreams, 1918). He also obtained cross-correspondences between his own dreams and the trance utterances of "Nelly," Thompson's control, while Van Eeden was in Holland and Thompson in England.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Van Eeden, Frederik. "A Study of Dreams." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 26 (1913).

Vanga

The unenrolled members of the Ndembo secret society of the Lower Congo. (See Ndembo)

Van Gelder Kunz, Dora (1904–1999)

American psychic and leader in the Theosophical Society. She was born on April 28, 1904, in Java, where she grew up on her father's sugar plantation. Here she saw and communed with fairies, unaware that this was a special psychic faculty. At the age of eleven, she left Java for Australia, where she studied with an Anglican priest who also possessed unusual psychic abilities. At the age of twenty-two, she married an American and moved to the United States, where she became president of a corporation concerned with teaching materials, while her husband became head of an educational foundation.

Van Gelder had never been a professional paid medium nor publicized her psychic abilities but instead worked unobtrusively with physicians on difficult cases for diagnostic and healing purposes. She showed a natural ability to see the psychic energy patterns in human beings and their relationship to conditions of health and disease. She also claimed the unusual ability of being able to predict specific illness, sometimes as early as eighteen months in advance.

She said she never lost her ability to commune with fairy life. When she was a young woman she wrote about her fairy experiences. This early manuscript was revised and published as The Real World of Fairies (1977). She stated that fairy life is still apparent, but becoming less evident with the growing pollution of cities and urban life. She even reported seeing fairies in Central Park, New York.

Van Gelder Kunz died on August 25, 1999.

Sources:

Van Gelder, Dora. The Real World of Fairies. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1977.

Van Helmont, Jean Baptiste (1577–1644)

Belgian physician, chemist, and physiologist, whose research was associated with occult theories. He was born to an aristocratic family in Brussels. Studying at Louvain, he attained early distinction in mathematics, lecturing on physics at the age of 17. Before he was 22, he had read Hippocrates and the Greek and Arabian authors, had become eminent in the doctrines of Aristotle and Galen, and had practiced medicine, according to Vopiscus and Plempius.

In the year 1599, he received his Ph.D. in medicine. After this, he spent some years in the practice of medicine, but meeting a follower of Paracelsus, he became interested in the theories of chemical medicine to such a degree that he retired to the castle of Vilvorde, near Brussels, to spend the rest of his life in the study of experimental chemistry, on which he wrote various treatises, becoming famous throughout Europe for his scientific knowledge.

He revolutionized medicine as known in his day, turning aside from the theories of Galen and the Arabs, and creating an epoch in the history of physiology, being the first to recognize the functions of the stomach and its relation to the other organs of the body.

Van Helmont's many and varied experiments led him to deal with aerial fluids, to which he gave the name of gas—carbonic acid gas being his discovery—and it is said that without him the chemistry of steel in all probability would have been unknown to science.

Van Helmont is remembered as an alchemist more than a scientist. Alchemy, with its visions of the elixir of life and the philosophers' stone, presented itself to him as another field of experiment and research. Although he never pretended to the art of making the transmuting powder, he testified his belief in the transmutation of metals, claiming to have seen the experiment performed many times.

Among other things he became a firm believer in mineral and human magnetism, anticipating Franz Anton Mesmer in almost the very terms of the later exponent of the theory, and basing his argument on the observed sympathy or antagonism that seems to spontaneously arise between individuals and the influence exerted by a firm will over a weak imagination.

In 1609, he retired to Vilvorde, near Brussels, and devoted himself to medical practice and chemical experiments. He declined to leave his retirement, although his fame brought him flattering invitations and offers from the Emperor and the Elector Palatine. Almost unknown to his neighbors, he attended anyone stricken by illness without accepting any fees for his services.

His published writings included: De Magnetica Vulnerum naturali et Legitima Curatione (1621), De aquis Leondiensibus medicatis (1624), Opuscula Medica inaudita (1641), and Febrium doctrina inaudita (1642). Some of these were translated into Dutch, French, and German. English translations of his tracts include: A Ternary of Paradoxes; The Magnetick Cure of Wounds, The Nativity of Tartar in Wine, The Image of God in Man (1650), and Deliramenta Catarrhi: or the Incongruities, Impossibilities and Absurdities couched under the vulgar opinion of Defluxions (1650).

He died December 30, 1644.

Van Hoof, Mary Ann (1909–1984)

Mary Ann Van Hoof, who reported apparitions of the Virgin Mary at Necedah, Wisconsin, for a quarter of a century beginning in 1949, was born Mary Ann Bieder on July 31, 1909, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. She grew up in Kenosha County, Wisconsin, in a German-speaking family and attended school only through the eighth grade. As a young woman she married Godfried Van Hoof, and together they had eight children. They moved to Necedah, Wisconsin, in 1942.

Van Hoof had her initial brief apparition of the Virgin on November 12, 1949, which happened to be the anniversary of the last apparition of a set of appearances by the Virgin that had occurred the previous year in Lipa, Philippines. The following spring, beginning on April 7 (Good Friday), Van Hoof experienced a set of apparitions that called for a large shrine to be established for Marian devotion. Subsequent apparitions occurred on May 28 (Pentecost Sunday), May 29 and 30, and June 6 (Trinity Sunday). By the time of the June apparition, many had heard of Van Hoof seeing the Virgin, and a large crowd gathered. With the announcement that Mary would return on August 15 (marked by Roman Catholics as the feast day of the Assumption of Mary into heaven) and October 1 (the feast day honoring the rosary), the story became news and articles began to appear in newspapers throughout the Midwest.

In the meantime, the local Roman Catholic priest became aware of the apparitions and sent an initial report to his bishop in La Crosse, Wisconsin. The bishop issued an initial statement decrying any sensationalism associated with the apparitions and launched a study of Van Hoof's claims. Van Hoof believed the apparition told her the American Catholics must rededicate themselves to prayer and peity, or the Korean War would be the beginning of the end for America. She also indicated that the Soviets would invade the United States and Alaska would be "the first stepping stone." Prior to the August apparition, the diocesan paper called them into question. In spite of many bishops discouraging the faithful from attending, crowds estimated in the tens of thousands were present for the last two apparitions of 1950. Over the next few years the apparitions continued, and not only did people travel long distances to be present, but several hundred relocated their residence to Necedah. An organization emerged and the shrine that began at the location of the apparitions grew into a set of related shrines.

In 1955 the bishop gave a more definitive ruling. He suggested that Van Hoof's claims to supernatural visitation were false and prohibited all religious worship at the shrine, now named after Mary's appearance as the Shrine of Our Lady of the Holy Rosary, Mediatrix of Peace. Van Hoof and her supporters were disappointed but continued in hope of a reversal of the ruling. Reminiscent of the apparition of Catherine Labouré in 1830, in 1957 Van Hoof was shown the design of a medal for the unity of church, home, and school, which was later struck and distributed.

Finally, in 1975, the bishop of La Crosse placed Van Hoof and her followers under an interdict, one step short of excommunication. They were denied access to all sacraments except confession. The interdict did not stop work at the shrine. Two years later Van Hoof announced plans to build a large sanctuary on her property, which she had inherited when her husband died in 1960.

In 1979, the final break with the Roman Catholic Church came as Van Hoof developed a relationship with Edward Michael Stehlik, the archbishop of a small independent church, the American National Catholic Church. She also pushed ahead with plans to build a home for infants and organized an order of nuns. Stehlik consecrated the shrine, which had grown into a sizable place of pilgrimage, but two years later Stehlik left the shrine. He denounced Van Hoof as a fraud and returned to the Roman Catholic Church. The scandal accompanying Stehlik's departure hurt Van Hoof, but did not affect many who had come to support her apparitions. Her visions of the Virgin continued, the work of the shrine grew, and several books appeared with texts of the apparitions and accounts of Van Hoof by her supporters.

In 1978, Van Hoof married Raymond Hirt. By this time, a pattern of pilgrimages to the shrine on the anniversaries of the 1950 apparitions had been established. Van Hoof died on March 18, 1984. She was buried at the shrine her visions inspired.

Sources:

Revelations and Messages as Given to Mary Ann Van Hoof. 2 vols. Necedah, Wis.: For My God and My Country, Inc., 1971, 1978.

Swan, Henry. My Work at Necedah. 4 vols. Necedah, Wis.: For My God and My Country, Inc., 1959.

Van Peursen, C(ornelis) A(nthonie) (1920–)

Dutch professor of philosophy who has written on parapsychology. He was born July 8, 1920, at Rotterdam, Netherlands. His educational career was interrupted by World War II but he completed his doctorate in 1948 at the University of Leiden. After several years with the Netherlands Committee for the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) (1948–50), he taught successively at the University of Utrecht (1950–53), the University of Groningen (1953–60), and, since 1960, at the University of Leiden. He has shown an interest in psychical research and was a member of the editorial board of a Dutch parapsychology journal.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Van Peursen, C. A. Body, Soul, Spirit: A Survey of the Body-Mind Problem. Translated by Hubert H. Hoskins. New York: Oxford University Press, 1966.

———. "Parapsychologie en Wijsgerige Bezinning" (Parapsychology and philosophical reflection). Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie 1–3 (1959).

———. The Strategy of Culture. n.p.: North-Holland Publishing, 1974.

Van Praagh, James (ca. 1960–)

James Van Praagh, a Spiritualist medium and author of two best-selling books on his experiences with psychic reality, was born into a Catholic family in Bayside, New York, around 1960. As a youth he attended Sacred Heart School. Responding to his mother's wish that he become a priest, he entered a junior seminary, Eymard Preparatory School in Hyde Park, New York. He stayed only one year, having concluded that neither the priesthood nor the Roman Catholic Church were for him. He completed his high school years in a public school.

As a child, Van Praagh had a variety of psychic experiences. One in particular stood out. At the age of eight, he had a vision of a giant hand above his bed one evening. He interpreted it as the Hand of God and from that time forward his belief in God never wavered. Also, on the first anniversary of singer Janis Joplin's death he tried to contact her. Sitting before a candle, he called her spirit to manifest and immediately afterward the flame bent in a most unusual manner.

In 1978 Van Praagh left New York to attend San Francisco State University, where he majored in broadcasting. He hoped for a career in Hollywood as a screenwriter. Following his graduation in 1982, he moved to Los Angeles and took a menial job as he began working his way up. A colleague at his workplace invited him to visit Spiritualist medium Brian Hurst, who told him that one day he would also be a medium. He was intrigued enough with the prediction that he began to pick up books on psychic development and find ways to hone his skills. Within a year he was regularly receiving calls from friends and acquaintances asking him for advice.

Within a short time, he was spending so much of his time doing readings for people who valued his talents that he was forced to make a choice to either drop his spiritual work or his plans for a Hollywood career. He chose to continue with his spirit contact and soon emerged as a Spiritualist medium. Over the years he gave private readings, conducted many development classes, and traveled frequently. He founded Spiritual Horizons in Los Angeles to coordinate his activities.

In 1997, Van Praagh took a step upward with the publication of his first book, Talking to Heaven. The book became a best-seller and he became a public personality as a result of the subsequent radio and television appearances. It was followed by a sequel, Reaching to Heaven (1999), which also became a best-seller. Both books recount some of his more successful experiences of spirit contact, discuss the view of the universe they suggest, and offer means for individuals to develop their own clairvoyance and mediumistic abilities.

Sources:

Van Praagh, James. Reaching to Heaven: A Spiritual Journey through Life and Death. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1999.

———. Talking to Heaven: A Medium's Message on Life After Death. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1997.

Van Tassel, George W. (1910–1978)

Early flying saucer contactee and author of the pioneering flying saucer volume I Rode in a Flying Saucer (1952). As people responded to his claims of extraterrestrial contact and other contactees emerged, Van Tassel organized the Giant Rock Space Convention, held annually at Giant Rock Airport, near Yucca Valley, California. Van Tassel was proprietor of the airport and had some background in aeronautics.

Van Tassel was born on March 11, 1910, in Jefferson, Ohio. He went into aviation as a young man and worked for both Howard Hughes and Lockheed. He moved to the desert in 1947 where he opened a restaurant, an airport, and a dude ranch. In 1952 he began to receive psychic messages from extraterrestrials, primarily from a group of people who made up what was called the Ashtar Command. The Ashtar Command operated very much like the Masters of theosophical traditions, but were seen as authorities in this solar system.

Over the years Van Tassel claimed to have continued contact with the Ashtar Command telepathically. He often went into a trance in his circle of friends and communicated messages allegedly from UFO entities. Such communications were published in his journal, Proceedings of the College of Universal Wisdom, and became the basis for future books.

He constructed a round domed building called an "Integraton" at Giant Rock, based on instructions from his outer space contacts. The Integraton was designed to assist the development of antigravity and time travel. The Integraton was never finished.

Van Tassel also published Into this World and Out Again; a modern proof of the origin of humanity and its retrogression from the original creation of man. Verified by the Holy Bible. Revelations received through thought communication (1956).

Van Tassel died February 9, 1978, after a sudden heart attack. The work of completing the Integraton was continued by an associate designated as successor by Van Tassel in 1977 and the building was later purchased by the Christology Church, P.O. Box 4648, San Diego, CA 92104. The work of his College of Universal Wisdom was continued by Van Tassel's widow, Doris Van Tassell.

Sources:

Barker, Gray. Gray Barker at Giant Rock. Clarksburg, W.V.: Saucerian Publications, 1976.

Clark, Jerome. The Emergence of a Phenomenon: UFOs from the Beginning through 1959. The UFO Encyclopedia. Vol. 2. Detroit: Omnigraphics, 1992.

Van Tassel, George. The Council of Seven Lights. Los Angeles: DeVorss & Company, 1958.

———. I Rode in a Flying Saucer. Los Angeles: New Age Publishing, 1952.

Van Vuurde, Wilhelm (1909– ?)

Wilhelm van Vuurde, a famous subject of parapsychological research, was born and grew up in the Netherlands. As a young man he attempted to escape the coming war by migrating to South Africa, but wound up a prisoner of the Japanese. While a prisoner he suffered from extreme malnutrition and lost some of his sight. After the war he settled in South Africa.

Van Vuurde believed he had a talent for wakening himself at any unknown and randomly chosen times. He developed an experiment to test himself using two clocks, one of which would be set before he went to sleep at an unknown position and the other set to run but with a string that could be pulled to stop the clock upon awakening. The next morning the two clocks could be checked to see if the times coincided. He tested himself over 200 times between 1951 and 1954 and published a report on his effort in 1956. As a result of his claim, A. E. H. Bleksley of the South African Society for Psychical Research conducted a series of experiments between 1959 and 1967, which produced a spectacular level of positive results. During the 1980s van Vuurde moved back to the Netherlands and has most recently been involved in a new set of experiments with Jeff C. Jacobs of the Sychronicity Research Unit. Van Vuurde has thus emerged as one of a very few subjects who have been able consistently to produce positive results over a long period of time in repeated experiments.

Sources:

Bleksley, A. E. H. "An Experiment of Long-Distance ESP During Sleep." Journal of Parapsychology 27 (1963): 1.

Jacobs, Jeff C. "Psi-Guided Awakening from Sleep 1: The Original Experiments of W. Van Vuurde." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 53 (1985): 159.

Van Vuurde, Wilhelm. "ESP During Sleep." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 38 (1956): 282.

Vardøgr

A psychic double or forerunner that appears in advance to announce the arrival of an individual. Sometimes it may manifest simply as familiar sounds associated with the individual concerned. Occasionally it may appear to the individual himself or herself, as in the celebrated experience of the great German poet Johann Goethe, who met his double on the road to Drusenheim dressed in a garment which Goethe was to wear by accident eight years later on the same route. Little has been published on the curious phenomenon of the vardøgr apart from an article in 1917 by Wiers Jensen, editor of the Norwegian Journal of Psychical Research.

Varley, Cromwell Fleetwood (1828–1883)

Renowned Spiritualist and consulting electrician of the Atlantic Telegraph Company and the Electric and International Telegraph Company. He was born at Kentish Town, London, April 6, 1828, and named after two of his ancestors, Oliver Cromwell and General Fleetwood. He was educated in South London, and went on to study telegraphy, joining the Electric and International Telegraph Company in 1846.

He was first attracted to Spiritualism in 1850. He investigated the hypothesis that table rapping was the result of an electric force and demonstrated that this hypothesis was altogether unfounded. In later years, he had many curious psychic experiences, discovered that he possessed mesmeric healing power, and effected cures on his wife. She in turn had clairvoyant visions and spells of trance in which she foretold the exact course of her illness. After the birth of a son, Varley was one night aroused by three tremendous raps. He felt impelled to go into his wife's room, where he found the nurse intoxicated and his wife rigid and in a cataleptic state.

He later made the acquaintance of the famous medium Daniel Dunglas Home. Narrating his experiences before the committee of the London Dialectical Society in 1869, he concluded:

"Still, I was too astonished to be able to feel satisfied. Fortunately, when I got home, a circumstance occurred which got rid of the element of doubt. While alone in the drawing room, thinking intently on what I had witnessed, there were raps. The next morning I received a letter from Mr. Home, in which he said 'When alone in your room last night you heard sounds. I am so pleased.' He stated the spirits had told him they followed me, and were enabled to produce sounds. I have the letter in my possession now, to show that imagination had nothing to do with the matter."

Varley gave account of other personal occurrences. In the winter of 1864, at Beckenham Kent, he was awakened during the night by raps. His wife was lying by his side in trance and he saw the transparent phantom of a man in military dress in the air. He asked him, through the voice of his wife, to deliver a message to his brother in Birmingham.

Varley also had other curious experiences. In a dream state, he saw and heard the double of his sister-in-law. Next morning she confirmed everything by narrating her own dream experience. At another time, having accidentally chloroformed himself, he had vivid out-of-the-body experiences which were similarly confirmed by his wife. In 1860, at Halifax, his double, anxious to wake his physical self, made him dream of a bomb explosion; when the shock woke him he found the scene outside his window exactly corresponding to what his double saw.

In New York, he made the acquaintance of several mediums and conducted experiments in the home of C. F. Livermore, the banker, with the famous medium Kate Fox of the Fox Sisters. His efforts to find the laws that govern the physical phenomena of Spiritualism were fruitless. He began to suspect that powers other than electricity and magnetism were at work. On the basis of his varied experiences he was led to believe "that we are not our bodies; that when we die we exist just as much as before, and that under certain conditions we are able to hold communications with those on earth; but I also believe that many of the phenomena are often caused by the spirits of those whose bodies are present."

When Sir William Crookes started his famous investigation into the phenomena of Spiritualism, Varley assisted him in devising means of electric control. For his outspoken stand he was subject to abuse from the skeptical W. B. Carpenter who, in the October 1871 Quarterly Review, assured readers that there were grave doubts of his scientific ability and that these misgivings of the learned world had kept Varley out of the Royal Society. At the time of this attack, Varley had been a fellow of the Royal Society for more than three months.

In addition to his researches in Spiritualism, Varley was renowned for his important part in the successful laying of the first Atlantic cable. He died at Bexley Heath, Kent, September 2, 1883.

Varma, Devendra P. (1923–1994)

Leading authority on the Gothic novel and author and editor of over two hundred books on the subject. Dr. Varma was born on October 17, 1923, in northeastern India, on the borders of the Himalayan Mountains. He has been a professor of English in Katmandu, Nepal, and also taught at the University of Damascus in Syria and in Cairo. For many years he taught English at Dalhousie University in Halifax, Nova Scotia, specializing in the Gothic romance.

He had taken a particular interest in the study of the vampire and discussed the subject in his introduction to the three-volume reprint of Varney the Vampire by James Malcolm Rymer (often mistakenly attributed to Thomas Prest), a mid-nineteenth-century vampire novel. In 1973, he traveled to Castle Dracula in Transylvania to investigate the background of Bram Stoker's famous novel Dracula, first published in 1897.

Varma had kept in close touch with such Hollywood directors of horror movies as Curtis Harrington, Frank Cunningham, Walter Doughty, and Forrest Ackermann and was friends with such actors as Christopher Lee and Vincent Price. He edited the seven volumes of the "horrid novels" mentioned in Jane Austen's Northanger Abbey, the Gothic Studies and Dissertations Series in 36 volumes, and three series of Gothic Novels reprinted by Arno Press (including The Complete Works of Sheridan LeFanu) in 52 volumes. In 1977, he was awarded the Queen's Silver Jubilee Medal in Britain for his contributions to education and the arts.

Vsarma died in 1994.

Sources:

Varma, Devendra. "The Genesis of Dracula: a Re-Visit." In Peter Underwood, ed. The Vampire's Bedside Companion. London: Leslie Frewin, 1975.

———. The Gothic Flame. London: Arthur Barker, 1957.

———. The History of the Gothic Novel in England. N.p., 1957.

———. "The Vampire in Legend, Lore, and Literature." Introduction to Varney the Vampyre; or, the Feast of Blood. New York: Arno Press, 1970.

———, ed. Voices from the Vaults: Authentic Tales of Vampires and Ghosts. Toronto: Key Porter Books, 1987.

Vasiliev, Leonid Leonidovich (1891–1966)

Soviet physiologist and parapsychologist. Born in Russia, he graduated from Petersburg University in 1914. He was a teacher of biological sciences at Ufa, Bashkir (1914–21), head of the Physiology Department, Bekhterev Brain Institute, Leningrad (1921–38), and a professor of physiology at Leningrad University from 1943 onward. Vasiliev pioneered parapsychology in the Soviet Union, and helped to establish the first parapsychology laboratory at Leningrad (now St. Petersburg). His work is both contemporaneous with and of equal quality as that of J. B. Rhine. He began by attempting to replicate some of the experiments of Pierre Janet, the nineteenth-century French psychologist. His spectacular success gave parapsychology some recognition in the highly politicized atmosphere of Stalinist Russia. He first developed a "politically correct" hypothesis of the material basis of telepathy, but his experiments to establish his theory proved quite the opposite. Financial support was withdrawn and Vasiliev's work was not published until the 1960s, after Stalin's death.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Ebon, Martin, ed. Psychic Discoveries by the Russians. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1963; New York: New American Library, 1971.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Vasiliev, Leonid L. Experiments in Distant Influence. London: Wildwood House, 1976; New York: Dutton, 1976.

———. Experiments in Mental Suggestion. Church Crookham, Hampshire, U.K.: Study of Mental Images Publications, 1963.

———. Mysterious Manifestations of the Human Psyche. 1959. Reprinted as: Mysterious Phenomena of the Human Psyche. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1965.

Vassago

According to the Lemegeton (Book of the Spirits), a famous work attributed to King Solomon, Vassago was one of the seventy-two spirits to be conjured up by magical evocation. Vassago is described as a prince in the hierarchy of genii, favored by those who would know the unknown; he could tell of the future and find anything lost or stolen. As with other princes among the spirits, Vassago could be conjured into a mystical triangle, but kings and emperors among the spirits could be conjured into a magical crystal. (See also crystal gazing)

Vasse, Christine M(aria) Piot (1922–)

Teacher who has written on parapsychology. Born December 8, 1922, in Salouel, France, Vasse received her college degree (B.A.) in 1941 and was a charter member of the Parapsychological Association.

She experimented in extrasensory perception with children, and studied teacher-student relationships in these tests. She collaborated with her husband on experiments involving dice placement and also plant growth. She is co-author of various articles with her husband Paul M. Vasse, and translator of French the Handbook of Tests in Parapsychology by Betty Humphrey Nicols.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Vasse, Paul M. and Christine M. Vasse. "Comparison of Two Subjects in PK." Journal of Parapsychology (December 1951).

———. "ESP Test with French First-Grade School Children." Journal of Parapsychology (September 1958).

———. "Plant Growing Experiments." Revue Métapsychique (April–June 1948).

Vasse, Paul M(arie) (1910– ?)

Physician who experimented in areas of parapsychology. He was born February 17, 1910, at Amiens, France, studied at the University of Paris (B.A., 1928; M.D., 1936), and was a charter member of the Parapsychological Association and the Ordre des Medécins. In collaboration with his wife, Christine M. Vasse, Vasse conducted experiments in dice placement and in the growth of plants and lectured on his results at the Institut Métapsychique.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Vasse, Paul M. and Christine M. Vasse. "Comparison of Two Subjects in PK." Journal of Parapsychology (December 1951).

———. "ESP Test with French First-Grade School Children." Journal of Parapsychology (September 1958).

———. "Plant Growing Experiments." Revue Métapsychique (April–June 1948).

"Vates"

One of the spirit controls of William Stainton Moses. "Vates" was an assistant to the control "Imperator," said to have been the prophet Daniel.

Vaughan, Alan (1936–)

Author, editor, and psychic who has written widely on psychical and parapsychological topics. He was born on December 28, 1936, in Akron, Ohio, and studied at the University of Akron (A.B., 1958), Rutgers University (1958–59), the New School for Social Research (1966–67), and the University of Freiburg (1967–68). He held several editing jobs before going to work for Psychic magazine (later New Realities) in 1969. He was the editor of Psychic for five years (1972–77). From 1978 onward he was president of New Ways of Consciousness Foundation, San Francisco. He also started a Los Angeles-based computer software company called Mind Technology Systems.

Vaughan has worked in parapsychology, especially with the Dream Laboratory at Maimonides Hospital, and he is an associate member of the Parapsychological Association. He is also a psychic, having begun his development in Europe in the 1960s. In 1983 he began channelling an entity named "Li Sung" who claimed to be an ancient Chinese healer and herbalist. Vaughan reflected upon his unusual dual life:

"The transition from a skeptical science textbook editor to a parapsychologist and practicing psychic was a painful one. I had to give up the cherished idea of traditional science to discover the more important underlying realities of consciousness and its psychic effects. The research leading to Patterns of Prophecy opened up my own prophetic talent, and enabled me to teach others how to develop their latent psi gifts. . . . Each of us has a unique consciousness and a unique task in life. We also have unique problems to solve. But only our consciousness has the answers to our problems. Your inner self has the wisdom of the universe locked up within it. By finding the key to unlock that wisdom, you will enrich your life."

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Vaughan. Alan. The Edge of Tomorrow. New York: Coward, McGann, 1982.

———. Incredible Coincidence: The Baffling World of Synchronicity. New York: Lippencott, 1979.

———. Patterns of Prophecy. New York: Hawthorn Books, 1973.

Ullman, Montague, Stanley Krippner, and Alan Vaughan. Dream Telepathy. N.p., 1973.

Vaughan, Alan, and James Bolem. Psychics. New York: Harper & Row, 1972.

Vaughan, Diana

The mythical figure in a famous nineteenth-century occult hoax initiated by Leo Taxil, pseudonym of Gabriel Jogand-Pagés, a French journalist. From 1885 to 1886, Taxil published a sensational story that one branch of Freemasonry was following a form of devil-worship called Palladianism, of which Diana Vaughan was the High Priestess. Allegedly, she was the descendent of the seventeenth-century alchemist Thomas Vaughan.

These revelations synchronized with Roman Catholic opposition to Freemasonry (based upon their support of democratic trends in nineteenth-century Europe) and were profitable for Taxil. Diana Vaughan was supposed to have repented to her Satanist background and embraced the Catholic Church. Her memoirs were read with satisfaction by the pope himself.

An announcement appeared that she would appear at a press conference on Easter Monday 1897. Instead, Taxil appeared and calmly revealed his hoax, stating that he was merely anxious to see how far he could dupe the church. News of this deception was badly received, for the plot had lasted three or four years, and Taxil had to be smuggled away under police protection. In Britain, the hoax was exposed by occult scholar Arthur Edward Waite in his book Devil Worship in France (1896).

Sources:

Waite, Arthur Edward. Devil Worship in France; or, The Question of Lucifer: A Record of Things Seen and Heard in the Secret Societies According to the Evidence of Initiates. London, George Redway, 1896.

Vaughan, Thomas (1622–1666)

British alchemist and poet, who wrote under the pseudonym Eugenius Philalethes. He was born April 17, 1622, at Newton, Breconshire, the younger twin brother of poet Henry Vaughan. He matriculated at Oxford and entered Jesus College, Oxford University, becoming a fellow of his college. In 1640, at the age of eighteen, he received the living [i.e., the income as parish priest] of St. Bridget's [Church of England], Breconshire, and on February 18, 1642, the B.A. degree. He was a royalist during the Civil War and in 1658 was accused of "drunkenness, swearing, and incontinency, being no preacher," and deprived of the living of St. Bridget's. However, this may have been no more than high spirits. He became a devoted student of chemistry, following his research both in Oxford and London, under the patronage of Sir Robert Murray. He died February 27, 1666, at the rectory of Albury, Oxfordshire, allegedly from inhalation of fumes of mercury, upon which he was experimenting.

Vaughan was an ardent follower of Cornelius Agrippa, to whom, as he stated, "he acknowledged that, next to God, he owed all that he had." He claimed to be a philosopher of nature rather than a vulgar alchemist. In one of his manuscripts he recorded strange dreams of premonitions that he had experienced and prayed for forgiveness of past errors, including former revels and drunkenness. Although he published a translation of a Rosicrucian work with a preface by himself, he explicitly stated that he was not a member of any such fraternity. Under the pseudonym of Eugenius Philalethes, he published a number of books including: Anthroposophia Theomagica, with Anima Magica (London, 1650; Amsterdam, 1704; and in German, Leipzig, 1749); Magia Adamica; or the Antiquities of Magic (London, 1650, 1656; Amsterdam, 1704, in German), Lumen de Lumine (London, 1651; Hof, 1750, in German), Aula Lucis; or the House of Light (London, 1652), Euphrates; or the Waters of the East (London, 1655, Stockholm & Hamburg, 1689, in German), and The Chymists Key to shut, and to open; or the True Doctrine of Corruption and Generation (London, 1657). He contributed verses for Thomas Powell's Elementa Opticæ (1651), for the English translation of Cornelius Agrippa's Three Books of Occult Philosophy (1651), and William Cartwright's Comedies (1651). A collection of his Latin verses was included at the end of Henry Vaughan's Thalia Rediviva (1678).

Vaughan was falsely identified with the mystical writer "Eirenæus Philalethes" through the Diana Vaughan writings of Leo Taxil (pseudonym of Gabriel Jogand-Pagés), who also popularized a false legend of a pact between him and Satan.

Vaulderie

A term indicating connection with Satanic powers, so called from Robinet de Vaulx, a hermit, one of the first persons accused of the crime. In 1453, the Prior of St. Germain-en-Laye, Guillaume de l'Allive, a doctor of theology, was accused of Vaulderie, and sentenced to perpetual imprisonment. Six years later there was burned at Lille a hermit named Alphonse, who preached heterodox doctrines. During the fifteenth century, many accusations of "witchcraft" were directed against those who followed the heretical sect of the Waldenses or Vaudois.

Such were the preludes of a persecution which, in the following year, the Vicar of the Inquisition, administrator of the Diocese of Arras, seconded by the Count d'Etampes, Governor of Artois, directed at first against loose women, but afterwards against citizens, magistrates, knights, and especially the wealthy.

The procedures against the accused had almost always for their basis some accusation of sorcery (i.e., malevolent magic). Most of the unhappy creatures confessed to having attended the Witch's Sabbat, and the strange revelations wrung from them by torture gave some idea of the ceremonies that, according to the popular tradition, were enacted in the lurid festivals presided over by Satan.

The following are some extracts from the judgment pronounced at Arras in 1460 upon five women, a painter, a poet nicknamed "an abbé of little sense" and aged about seventy, and several others, who all perished in the flames kindled by barbarous ignorance and fed by a cruel superstition:

"And the said Inquisition did say and declare, that those hereinunder named had been guilty of Vaulderie in manner following, that is to say:—'That when they wished to go to the said Vaulderie, they, with an ointment given to them by the devil, anointed a small wooden rod and their palms and their hands; then they put the wand between their legs, and soon they flew wherever they wished to go, over fair cities, woods and streams; and the devil carried them to the place where they should hold their assembly, and in this place they found others, and tables placed, loaded with wines and viands; and there they found a demon in the form of a goat, a dog, an ape, or sometimes a man; and they made their oblation and homage to the said demon, and adored him, and yielded up to him their souls, and all, or at least some portion of their bodies; then, with burning candles in their hands, they kissed the rear of the goat-devil. . . . [Here the Inquisitor becomes untranslatable].

". . . . And this homage done, they trod and trampled upon the Cross, and befouled it with their spittle, in contempt of Jesus Christ, and the Holy Trinity, then turned their backs towards heaven and the firmament in contempt of God. And after they had all eaten and drunk well, they had carnal intercourse all together, and even the devil assumed the guise of man and woman, and had intercourse with both sexes. And many other crimes, most filthy and detestable, they committed, as much against God as against nature, which the said Inquisitor did not dare to name, that innocent ears might not be told of such villainous enormites.'"

The eagerness displayed by the inquisitor and his acolytes so excited the public indignation that at the close of the year 1460 the judges did not dare any longer to condemn to death the unfortunate wretches accused. It was said that the persecution was only for the purpose of depriving them of their property. As in the case of many great wrongs, a reaction set in favor of justice.

Thirty years later, when the country of Artois had been reunited to the Crown, the Parliament of Paris declared, on May 20, 1491, that these trials were "abusive, void, and falsely made" and condemned the heirs of the duke of Burgundy and the principal judges to an amend of 500 Parisian livres, to be distributed to a reparation among the heirs of the victims. The events as Arras stand behind the formal change of attitude toward witchcraft made by the Roman Catholic Church in 1484 in that it was redefined as Satanism. (See also Sabbat; Witchcraft)

Sources:

Robbins, Russell Hope. The Encyclopedia of Witchcraft and Demonology. New York: Crown Publishers, 1959.

Russell, Jeffrey Burton. Witchcraft in the Middle Ages. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1972.

Vay, Baroness Adelma (1840–1924)

Authoress, medium, and pioneer of Spiritualism in Hungary. Her powers, inherited from her mother, the Countess Teleki, later Duchess Solm, first blossomed in 1865. She became clairvoyant; wrote, spoke and drew in trance; had the prophetic gift; and was credited with many cures. In 1873, with her husband, she formed the Hungarian Spiritualist Association of which they became the first presidents. Her books included: Spirit, Force and Matter (1869), Studies on the Spirit World (1874), From My Life (1900), and Pictures from the Beyond (1905).

Vedanta

Vedanta is the highest teaching of the Vedas, (veda means knowledge), the ancient Sanskrit scriptures of India. There are four Vedas: the Rig-Veda, the Yajur-Veda, the Sama-Veda, and the Artharva-Veda, which are comprised of hymns, ritual texts, and philosophical treaties that are regarded as divine revelation. Vedanta is considered one of the six darshanas (viewpoints) of orthodox Hinduism. However, it is not simply a formal instruction but a revelatory experience of transcendental consciousness.

In 1893, Swami Vivekananda appeared "like an Eastern comet in the Western spiritual sky" and made a startling appearance at the Parliament of Religions at the Chicago World's Fair. With him, he brought news of yoga and Vedanta; since then, yoga has taken solid root in the Western soil, with an estimated 2 million participants outside India. Vedanta, on the other hand, has remained relatively unknown.

The Vedas, completed between 1500–500 B.C.E, were originally an oral tradition, later codified in scriptures called the Upanishads (meaning nearness to wisdom). Of the 108 Upanishads, created between 900–500 B.C.E., some ten out of twelve books are regarded as the principle ones. The Vedanta, like the New Testament of the Bible, not only serves as the end of the Upanishads but the culmination of the scriptures.

Hindu scriptures differ from the sacred writings of other religions as they go beyond faith in particular deities (regarded as legal fictions, useful only at certain stages in life) to awareness of an Absolute, beyond time, space and causality. It is said the Vedanta's two main themes are humanity's true nature as divine, and this divinity as the aim of human life. The ideas of the Vedanta also introduce and reflect the traditional yogic paths.

There are three perspectives of Vedanta: One is dualistic (dvaita), the second is nondualistic (advaita), while the third is qualified nondualistic (vishishtadvaita). The advaita perspective proclaims there are no individual souls, but all are unified. It is called nondualistic because "it acknowledge[s] only one Spirit, a single underlying reality beyond which nothing else could possibly exist."

Sources:

Advaita Vedanta. http://www.advaita-vedanta.org/. March 1, 2000.

Introduction to Vedanta. http://www.geocities.com/Rodeo Drive/1415/veda.html. March 30, 2000.

Johnsen, Linda. "Tantra & Classical Yoga." Yoga International (September 1997): 22–29.

Nikhilananda, Swami. The Upanishads. 4 vols. London: Phoenix House, 1951–59; New York: Ramakrishna-Vivekananda Center, 1975–1979.

Torwesten, Hans. Vedanta: Heart of Hinduism. New York: Grove Weidenfield, 1985.

Vedanta Societies

American Vedanta Societies stem from the visit to the United States by Swami Vivekananda in 1893, when he lectured on Hinduism at the World Parliament of Religions held in Chicago. The Swami founded the Vedanta Society of New York in 1896, followed by the Vedanta Society of San Francisco in 1900.

Swami Vivekananda became the foremost interpreter of Yoga and Hinduism in Western countries, basing his teachings on the inspiration of his master Sri Ramakrishna.

Vedanta comprises the supreme wisdom of the Vedas, the ancient Sanskrit scriptures of India, together with the Upanishads, which derived from them. This wisdom is manifest as a revelatory experience after following spiritual disciplines (such as the various forms of yoga) in conjunction with scripture study under the guidance of a qualified guru or teacher.

There are now some sixteen Vedanta Centres in the United States which form branches of the Ramakrishna Order of India. Addresses: Vedanta Society of Northern California, 2323 Vallejo St., San Francisco, CA 94123; Vedanta Society of Southern California, 1946 Vedanta Pl., Hollywood, CA 90068. There are also Vedanta Centre/Ananda Ashrama communities providing spiritual retreats in both Massachusetts and Southern California. Addresses: Vedanta Centre, 130 Beechwood St., Cohasset, MA 02025; Ananda Ashrama, 5301 Pennsylvania Ave., CA 91214.

Vedic Astrology

Astrologers in India trace their art to the fifth millennium B.C.E. though a new shape was given to ancient astrological speculations by Parashara Muni around 1500 B.C.E. He is one of the first astrologers in the world known to have actually cast horoscopes, the personal birth charts for individuals. He also is known to have had a special interest in the application of astrology to health and longevity concerns. He wrote several books, the most important being the Brihat Parashara Hora Shastra, and composed hymns to the several planetary deities.

Muni's work was expanded by Ranavira, who lived during the same era. Ranavira, who also operated as a clairvoyant seer, concentrated on the astrological correlated to compatible personal relationships, female astrology, and psychological astrology. Ranavira appears to be the fountainhead of Indian astrology's continued interest in applying astrology to predicting successful marriages.

Astrology emerged in the context of the Vedas, the ancient holy writings of the Indian people, which through the Vedic hymns offered a positive worldview oriented to nature and the pastoral agricultural life. Astrology, also called Joytisha (meaning of the shining world of light), complemented this worldview in its attempt to shine the divine light on the individual's life. As a teacher, astrological knowledge attempted to dispel the darkness of illusion and assist the person to understand the purpose of the soul's present incarnation.

The birth chart pictures the consequences or karma that the person brings into this incarnation (Indians believing that the soul reincarnates in a series of embodied existences either as humans or animals). While at times, as in Western astrology, astrological interpretation has fallen into a fatalistic mode, contemporary Vedic astrologers, drawing on the optimistic spirit of the Vedic literature, specifically eschew such a view. They emphasize that the natal chart offers a picture of karmic influences but also shows indicative rather than deterministic forces active in the person's life.

The Vedic birth chart differs from the traditional Western horoscope in several ways. Most importantly, Indian astrologers use what is termed the sidereal zodiac rather than the topical zodiac. The sidereal zodiac is based upon the actual positions of the 12 signs of the zodiac in the sky. The topical zodiac is based upon the position of the Sun as it rises at the spring equinox. Over the years, that point (called O° Aires) shifts slightly year by year, one aspect of the phenomenon known as the procession of the equinoxes. Over the centuries, the two zodiacs have developed a difference of 23°, enough to throw most planets into an adjacent sign. Vedic astrologers cast a chart based upon the moment of birth (defined as the moment of the first cry of the newborn).

The most important elements in the individuals' charts are the planets, which were in ancient times identified with lesser deities. Planets are termed graha, that which possesses a person, hence the planets are seen as symbolic of the illusions (maya) of earthly existence that obscure the individual's divine nature. Each planet has acquired a set of associations and its particular placement in the chart indicates a variety of strengths and weaknesses. Generally, only the ancient visible planets are utilized by Vedic astrologers and thus one will not find Uranus, Neptune, or Pluto, not to mention the asteroids or hypothetical planets that occasionally appear as elements in Western horoscopes.

Besides the signs, planets, and houses that both Indian and Western astrology share, Vedic astrology also includes a unique set of divisions placed on the birth chart, the planetary periods. Vedic astrology not only divides the zodiac into the 12 signs, but it also divides it into 27 lunar mansions roughly defined by the movement of the Moon around the earth every 27 days. The planetary periods relate to the lunar mansions very much as houses relate to the traditional signs. The planetary periods are of varying lengths as they are related to the different planets. The place of the newborn in the cycle of periods is determined by the position of the Moon in the natal chart. The recognition of these periods provides Indian astrologers with an additional level of interpretation of the person's life not available to traditional Western practitioners.

The Western appropriation of Vedic astrology began early in the twentieth century but did not become prominent until the migration of large numbers of Indians to the West after World War II (1939–45) and the contemporaneous turn Eastward by numerous young spiritual seekers. The flux through which Western astrology has passed in the last decades of the twentieth century, during which time every aspect and boundary of traditional Western astrology was challenged, provided openings for the introduction of Vedic astrology. Many Westerners found it more appealing than the dominant system and a growing number of books explaining the system have been published in the West. Also, materials published in India have become freely circulated through the English-speaking world. During the 1990s, annual conventions of Vedic astrologers were held in North America.

Sources:

Braha, James T. Ancient Hindu Astrology for the Modern Western Astrology. Hollywood, Calif.: Hermetician Press, 1986.

Cameron, Barbara. Predictive Planetary Periods: The Hindu Dasa. Tempe, Ariz.: American Federation of Astrologers, 1984.

DeLuce, Robert. Constellational Astrology: According to the Hindu System. Los Angeles: DeLuce Publishing, 1963.

Vehm-Gerichte

A secret tribunal that during the Middle Ages, exercised a peculiar jurisdiction in Germany and especially in Westphalia. Its origin is uncertain. The sessions were often held in secret, and the uninitiated were forbidden to attend them on pain of death. Various stories have been circulated concerning the group, but these have been discounted by modern research. Far from dabbling in the occult, these courts frequently punished persons convicted of witchcraft and sorcery (malevolent magic).

Veleda (ca. 70 C.E.)

A prophetess among the ancient Germans, of whom the historian Tacitus stated:

"She exercises a great authority, for women have been held here from the most ancient times to be prophetic, and, by excessive superstition, as divine. The fame of Veleda stood on the very highest elevation, for she foretold to the Germans a prosperous issue, but to the legions their destruction! Veleda dwelt upon a high tower, whence messengers were dispatched bearing her oracular counsels to those who sought them; but she herself was rarely seen, and none was allowed to approach her. Cercalis is said to have secretly begged her to let the Romans have better success in war. In the reign of the Emperor Vespasian she was honored as a goddess."

Veleda predicted the success of Claudius Civilis in the Batavian revolt against Rome (69–70 C.E.) and the fall of the Roman Empire.

Velikovsky, Immanuel (1895–1979)

Psychoanalyst and cosmologist who emerged as a major defender of catastrophism, the idea that the earth's history and prehistory have been distorted by significant catastrophies. Catastrophism stands over against uniformitarianism, the dominant postulate of geologic sciences that the earth has developed slowly by long-term processes which are still occurring and observable. About the time of the prophet Moses in 1500 B.C.E., a comet from the planet Jupiter is supposed to have collided with Mars, formed the planet Venus, and shifted the orbit of the earth, displacing oceans and reversing the earth's poles.

Velikovsky was born on June 10, 1895, at Vitebsk, Russia. He attended the Medvednikov Gymnasium in Moscow, graduating with full honors. After a short period of study at Montpellier, France, he traveled in Palestine, then started pre-medical studies in natural science at Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1914. On the outbreak of World War I, he enrolled in the Free University in Moscow, studying law and ancient history. In 1915 he took up medical studies again at the University of Moscow and received his medical diploma in 1921. He moved to Berlin, where together with Prof. Heinrich Loewe he founded and published Scripta Universitatis, a series of scholarly volumes contributed by Jewish scholars in various countries. Velikovsky also met Albert Einstein, who edited the mathematical-physical volumes.

Velikovsky then moved to Palestine, where he practiced as a physician for fifteen years. He then spent some time in New York researching a study of Freud's own dreams and the relationship of Freud's thought to such figures as Oedipus, Akhnaton and Moses, but in the course of his researches, he became intrigued by the suggestion that there might have been a catastrophe at the time of the Exodus of the Israelites from Egypt.

A new book began to develop, under the title Ages in Chaos, followed by a further manuscript, Worlds in Collision. The latter work was published in 1950 and created a storm in the scientific world, and the original publisher felt compelled to drop the book. The extraordinary campaign of suppression is fully documented in Alfred de Grazia's book The Velikovsky Affair; the Warfare of Science and Scientism (University Books, 1966). Diehard and intolerant scientists were later infuriated when various hypotheses of Velikovsky, originally sneered at as "unscientific" and inaccurate, were eventually proved correct. Velikovsky correctly predicted the existence of geomagnetic planetary fields, the negative electrical charge of the sun, the high temperature of Venus, the existence of hydrocarbon clouds surrounding Venus, and emission of radio sounds from Jupiter—all vindicated by space probes and other recent scientific developments. (At the same time, of course, many other ideas proved completely false).

Velikovsky developed a small but loyal following in the scientific community and a large public response. Two journals, including the S. I. S. Review published by the Society for Interdisciplinary Studies, appeared in the 1970s to expand the discussion of his ideas, though support has noticeably declined since his death on November 17, 1979 in Princeton, New Jersey. During his lifetime, his ideas were attacked vigorously by many of the same writers who attacked psychic research. Carl Sagan penned the most definitive refutation of Velikovsky's ideas.

Sources:

Gardner, Martin. Fads and Fallacies in the Name of Science. New York: Dover Publications, 1957.

Velikovsky, Immanuel. Ages in Chaos. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1952.

———. Earth in Upheaval. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1955.

———. Oedipus and Akhnaton: Myth and History. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1960.

———. Peoples of the Sea. N.p., 1977.

Veltis

An evil spirit who assaulted St. Margaret of Cortona (died 1297), but was overcome by her. On being asked by St. Margaret who he was and whence he came, he replied:

"My name is Veltis, and I am one of those whom Solomon by virtue of his spells, confined in a copper cauldron at Babylon, but when the Babylonians, in the hope of finding treasure dug up the cauldron and opened it, we all made our escape. Since that time our efforts have been directed to the destruction of righteous persons, and I have long been striving to turn thee from the course thou hast embraced."

Verdelet

Said to be a demon of the second order, master of ceremonies at the infernal court. He was charged with the transport of witches to the Sabbat. He took the names of "Master Persil," "Sante-Buisson," and other names of a pleasant sound, so as to entice women into his snares.

Verdun, Michel (d. 1521)

A self-confessed werewolf, burned at Besançon, France, in 1521 together with his accomplice Pierre Burgot. They had stated that they had stripped naked and anointed themselves with a certain unguent, after which they changed shape and became werewolves, hunting and attacking children and adults. Verdun was discovered after attacking a traveler who wounded him while in animal form. Following the trail of the wounded creature, the traveler discovered Verdun, who had returned to human form, with his wife bathing the wound.

Sources:

Summers, Montague. The Werewolf. London, 1933. Reprint, New York: University Books, 1966.

La Vérité (Journal)

Nineteenth-century Spiritualist journal published in Lyons, France.

Verograph

One of various modern devices for experimenting with aura-electronics or kirlian photography. It is small enough to be conveniently portable.

Veronica

A religious term for a cloth bearing the likeness of Jesus imprinted miraculously. The term was coined by St. Gregory of Tours (538–594 C.E.), deriving from the Greek icon (image) and Latin vera (true).

The story of veronica is that a woman of rank, living in the Via Dolorosa, broke through the procession of Jesus' crucifixion when it stopped for Simon of Cyrene to assist in carrying the cross. The woman, usually named as Seraphia (sometimes called Veronica), wiped the face of Jesus with a cloth, and the miraculous portrait became impressed from the blood and sweat. Other versions of the story claim that the woman simply handed the cloth to Jesus, who wiped his own face and returned the cloth. A detailed and highly circumstantial version of the incident was given by Anne Catherine Emmerich (see Germany) when in an ecstatic trance.

A claimed veronica was placed in a marble coffer on the altar of a chapel attached to St. Peter's in Rome during the period of Sixtus V, but it was moved in 1440 and is said to be deposited in the Vatican. Another cloth with a similar miraculous portrait was presented by two Fathers to the seventh synod of Nice, C.E. 787. Such miraculous likenesses not made by people are also known as Acheropites.

In 1813, when a vault was opened in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, England, one of the coffins, believed to be that of Charles I, was opened and a portrait found on the grave cloth which had wrapped the body. The myth which surrounds the Turin Shroud is quite similar to that of the veronicas.

Verrall, Arthur Woollgar (1851–1912)

Classical scholar, husband of the psychical researcher and medium Margaret de Gaudrion Verrall, and father of Helen Verrall Salter, the wife of W. H. Salter. After his death he was one of the purported communicators in the famous "cross-correspondence" tests of the Society for Psychical Research, London, in which wife and daughter participated by producing automatic scripts.

Verrall was born on February 5, 1851, in Brighton, England. He studied at Wellington College and Trinity College, Cambridge University, (B.A., 1873; M.A., 1874). He lectured at Trinity, where he became First King Edward VII Professor of English Literature in 1911. He died June 18, 1912.

Verrall, Margaret de Gaudrion Merrifield (1859–1916)

Prominent British psychical researcher, medium and lecturer in classics at Newnham College. She was born December 21, 1859, at Brighton, England, and educated at Newnham College, Cambridge University. She married A. W. Verrall, the well-known classical scholar, in 1882.

Verrall joined the Society for Psychical Research, London, in 1889. She wrote a number of papers for the Proceedings at the request of Frederic William Henry Myers, held sittings with the medium Leonora S. Piper when she visited England, and was elected to the Council in 1901.

Eventually she developed psychic powers herself and in 1901 through automatic writing obtained the first significant results after the death of Myers. Afterwards she produced hundreds of scripts which often contained matter of paranormal interest. In 1906, she published an analysis of her own scripts in the society's Proceedings which formed the starting point of a serious study in cross-correspondence.

Sir Oliver Lodge paid the following tribute to Verrall in his book The Survival of Man (1909):

"The fame of Mrs. Piper has spread into all lands, and I should think the fame of Mrs. Verrall also. In these recent cases of automatism the society has been singularly fortunate, for in the one we have a medium who has been under strict supervision and competent management for the greater part of her psychical life; and in the other we have one of the sanest and acutest of our own investigators, fortunately endowed with some power herself, some power of acting as translator or interpreter between the psychical and the physical worlds."

After years of experiments and testing, Verrall concluded:

"It cannot be denied that the 'communicator' of the Piper sittings and of my own scripts presents a consistent personality dramatically resembling that of the person he claims to be. I entirely acquiesce in this judgment. . . . The boundary between the two states—the known and the unknown—is still substantial, but it is wearing thin in places; . . . and we are at liberty, not indeed to announce any definite conclusion, but to adopt as a working hypothesis the ancient doctrine of a possible intercourse of intelligence between the material and some other, perhaps ethereal order of existence."

She died July 2, 1916, at Cambridge. Her daughter Helen married W. H. Salter, another prominent psychical researcher.

Versailles Adventure

One of the most famous psychic experiences reported at the beginning of the twentieth century. In August 1901, two English ladies, C. A. E. Moberly and E. F. Jourdain, took an afternoon walk in the Gardens of Versailles, France, and found themselves transported to the Trianon of 1789, complete with buildings and other people of the period. They described their experience with much corroborative detail in their 1911 book An Adventure. In the first edition their identity was concealed by the names "Miss Morison" and "Miss Lamont."

The book went into many editions and generated much controversy, coinciding with rising British interest in psychic phenomena through the work of the Society for Psychical Research, London. In spite of many subsequent attempts to discredit the writers, the adventure still stands as a unique experience.

Sources:

Flew, Antony G. N. A New Approach to Psychical Research. London: Watts, 1953.

Gibbons, M. E., and A. O. Gibbons. The Trianon Adventure. London: Museum Press, 1958.

Iremonger, Lucille. The Ghosts of Versailles. London: Faber & Faber, 1957.

Mackenzie, Andrew. The Unexplained: Some Strange Cases of Psychical Research. London: A. Barker, 1953. Reprint, New York: Abelard, 1968.

Moberly, C. A. E., and E. F. Jourdain. An Adventure. London: Faber & Faber, 1911.

Olivier, Edith. Four Victorian Ladies of Wiltshire. London: Faber & Faber, 1945.

Parrott, Ian. The Music of "An Adventure." London: Regency Press, 1966.

"Richard's Garden Revisited." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 41, 712 (June 1962).

Sturge-Whiting, J. R. The Mystery of Versailles: A Complete Solution. London: Rider, 1938.

Vervain

A sacred herb used to cleanse the table of Zeus before a feast in ancient Greece. In Rome it was also strewn on the altars of Jupiter, and water containing vervain was also sprinkled in houses to cast out evil spirits.

Among the Druids particularly it was employed in connection with many forms of superstition. They gathered it at daybreak, before the sun had risen. Later sorcerers followed the same usage, and demonologists believed that in order to evoke demons it was necessary to be crowned with vervain.

During the Crusades it was believed that when the nails were driven into the hands of Christ, vervain sprang upon Calvary.

The old herbalists recommended vervain to ease childbirth, and for jaundice, dropsy, gout, worms, stomach complaints, wound healing, ulcers and piles. Native Americans used vervain to cure menstrual disorders.

Vestigia (Organization)

Founded in 1976, with membership that consisted of scientists, engineers, technicians, and interested individuals, to investigate and conduct research into unexplained anamolous scientific phenomena of the kind usually associated with Charles Fort. Members are trained in investigative techniques and supply speakers to universities and organizations. The name of the group is the Latin word for "investigate," which, in itself, means footprint.

The group sponsored charitable programs, maintained a library and biographical archives, compiled statistics, and offered computerized services. It had committees on photography and technical matters, and divisions on aerial phenomena, biological matters, earth sciences, and parapsychology, as well as published an annual newsletter. Last known address: 56 Brookwood Rd., Stanhope, NJ 07874.

Vett, Carl Christian (1871–1956)

Danish agriculturalist and author, who played a leading part in organizing international cooperation and spread of information in the field of parapsychology. He was born September 25, 1871, in Aarhus, Denmark. Vett became a director of textile companies in Scandinavia. During World War I he was a diplomatic courier and cultural advisor to the Danish Ministry of Education on museum acquisitions. He was also a pioneer of biodynamic agricultural methods.

Vett was intensely interested in psychical research as a proper scientific study, and it was largely through his efforts that the First International Congress on Psychic Research was held in Copenhagen in 1921, with researchers from fifteen different countries. He became general secretary of a permanent committee for the organization of later international congresses of this kind, held at Warsaw (1923), Paris (1927), Athens (1930), and Oslo (1935). A tribute was paid to his work at the First International Conference of Parapsychological Studies held in Utrecht, Netherlands, in 1953. In the years after World War II, Vett lectured and wrote on parapsychological topics. He died February 1, 1956, in Rome, Italy.

Sources:

Vett, Carl Christian. "Memoirs of Psychic Research." Tomorrow, 3, 4 (Summer 1955).

Victoria, Queen (1819–1901)

Queen of England, Scotland and Ireland (1837–1901), Empress of India (1876–1901), who presided over the great days of the British Empire. She was known to be sympathetic to Spiritualism, and to have held séances with Prince Albert and other individuals. She approved of the book Our Life After Death by medium Robert James Lees and was said to have used Lees as a personal medium. Her belief in the possibility of communication between the spirit world and the living is illustrated by an entry in her journal commenting on the story that Princess Feodora, when at the point of death, had talked about a beloved child who had died earlier: "Surely at the approach of death the veil is raised and such pure spirits are allowed to see a glimpse of those dear ones waiting for them."

A short time before the death of Prince Albert, he had told the Queen: "We don't know in what state we shall meet again, but that we shall recognize each other and be together in eternity I am perfectly certain." After Albert's death, Victoria relied heavily on the companionship of her personal servant, the rough Highlander John Brown. Rumors suggested both that he was her lover and that together they participated in Spiritualist séances. After his death in 1883, the Queen erected a statue to him at Balmoral.

The Queen's Prime Minister W. E. Gladstone was also sympathetic to psychical research and was an early member of the Society for Psychical Research, London. He once summoned the famous palmist "Cheiro" to explain his theories and also sat with the medium William Eglinton.

Sources:

Underwood, Peter. Queen Victoria's Other World. London: Harrap, 1986.

Vidya

In Theosophy, the knowledge by which man on the Path of Life can discern the true from the false and so direct his efforts correctly by means of the mental faculties which he has learned to use. It is the antithesis of avidya (ignorance). Both terms are borrowed from Hindu religious philosophy.

Viedma

A Russian name for a witch. (See Slavs)

Vila

Vili were nymphs who frequented the forests at the bases of the Eastern Alps. According to popular belief, they could be seen traversing glades, mounted on stags, or driving from peak to peak on chariots of clouds. Old Serbian ballads tell how Marko, the great hero of ancient Serbia, was joined in a bond of brotherhood with a Vila, who showed to him the secrets of the future. At that period, Serbia was a mighty nation, extending from the Alps to the Black Sea, from the Danube to the Adriatic.

Vinchon, Jean (1884– ?)

French neuropsychiatrist who published books in areas of parapsychology. He was born on June 21, 1884, in the Department of the Somme, France. He received his M.D. in 1911 at Paris. He was successively the medical director of the Neuropsychiatric Center of the French Army of the East during World War I (1917–18), director of the clinic of Paris Medical School between the wars, and director of Army Neuropsychiatric Center, Paris Region as World War II began (1939–40). He then became a neuropsychiatrist at the War Veterans Ministry and a neuropsychiatric consultant at Hôpital de le Pitié.

Through most of his career Vinchon had a lively interest in psychic phenomena. He was a member and, for a period, president of the Institut Métapsychique. He authored several books growing out of his broad interests.

Sources:

Vinchon, Jean. L'Art et la Folie (Art and Insanity). Paris: Stock, Delamain et Boutelleau, 1950.

———. La Magie du dessin: Du griffonage automatique au dessin thérapeutique (The Magic Drawing: From Automatic Scribbling to Therapeutic Drawing). N.p., 1959.

———. Mesmer et son secret (Mesmer and His Secret). Toulouse Privat, 1936.

Vinchon, Jean, and Maurice Garçon. Le Diable. 1928. English ed. as The Devil. London, 1929. Reprint, New York: E. P. Dutton, 1930.

Vintras, Eugène (1807–1875)

A Normandy peasant of great devoutness, who in the year 1839 was nominated by a strange sect named the Saviours of Louis XVII as a fitting successor to their prophet Thomas Martin who had just died. The sect believed that the child of Louis XVII and Marie Antoinette did not die in prison and would be restored to the throne of France. The Saviours addressed a letter to the pretended Louis XVII and arranged that it should fall into the hands of Vintras. It abounded in good promises for the reign to come and in mystical expressions calculated to attract the attention of a naive excitable character as they believed Vintras to be. Later, in a letter, Vintras himself described the manner in which this communication reached him as follows:

"Towards nine o'clock I was occupied in writing, when there was a knock at the door of the room in which I sat, and supposing that it was a workman who came on business, I said rather brusquely, 'Come in.' Much to my astonishment, in place of the expected workman, I saw an old man in rags. I asked merely what he wanted. He answered with much tranquility, 'Don't disturb yourself, Pierre Michel.' Now, these names are never used in addressing me, for I am known everywhere as Eugène, and even in signing documents I do not make use of my first names. I was conscious of a certain emotion at the old man's answer, and this increased when he said: 'I am utterly tired, and wherever I appear they treat me with disdain, or as a thief.' The words alarmed me considerably, though they were spoken in a saddened and even a woeful tone. I arose and placed a ten sous piece in his hand, saying, 'I do not take you for that, my good man,' and while speaking I made him understand that I wished to see him out. He received it in silence but turned his back with a pained air. No sooner had he set foot on the last step than I shut the door and locked it. I did not hear him go down, so I called a workman and told him to come up to my room. Under some business pretext, I was wishing him to search with me all the possible places which might conceal my old man, whom I had not seen go out. The workman came accordingly. I left the room in his company, again locking my door. I hunted through all the nooks and corners, but saw nothing.

"I was about to enter the factory when I heard on a sudden the bell ringing for mass, and felt glad that, notwithstanding the disturbance, I could assist at the sacred ceremony. I ran back to my room to obtain a prayer book and, on the table where I had been writing, I found a letter addressed to Mme. de Generès in London; it was written and signed by M. Paul de Montfleury of Caen, and embodied a refutation of heresy, together with a profession of orthodox faith. The address notwithstanding, this letter was intended to place before the Duke of Normandy the most important truths of our holy Catholic, Apostolic and Roman religion. On the document was laid the ten sous piece which I had given to the old man."

Vintras immediately concluded that the bringer of the letter was a messenger from heaven and became devoted to the cause of Louis XVII. He became a visionary. He had bloody sweats, he saw hearts painted with his own blood appear on hosts, accompanied by inscriptions in his own spelling. Many believed him a prophet and followed him, among them several priests, who alleged that they partook of his occult vision. Doctors analyzed the fluid which flowed from the hosts and certified it to be human blood. While his enemies referred these miracles to the devil, a small band regarded Vintras as a new Christ.

But one follower named Gozzoli published scandalous accounts of his activities, alleging that horrible obscenities and sacrilegious masses took place in their private chapel at Tilly-sur-seules. The unspeakable abominations alluded to were contained in a pamphlet entitled Le Prophète Vintras (1851). The sect was formally condemned by the pope, and in response Vintras designated himself sovereign Pontiff.

He was arrested on a charge of exploiting his followers for money, tried at Caen, and sentenced to five years' imprisonment. When freed in 1845, he went to England and in London resumed his leadership role. In the relative freedom provided in England, he carried on the group's affairs for some time and eventually returned to France and settled in Lyons.

Sources:

Waite, Arthur E. Studies in Mysticism. London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1906.

Vishnu Devananda, Swami (1927–1993)

Disciple of the late Swami Sivananda, teacher of hatha yoga, and founder-president of the Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Centers, with branches in Canada, the United States, and Europe. He was born Swamy Kuttan Nair, on December 31, 1927, in Kerala, India. He became a school teacher at the age of 17, then later joined the Indian Army in which he served for two years. By chance he read a pamphlet by Swami Sivananda which emphasized the importance of studying the Hindu scripture Bhagavad-Gita. He did so and felt a strong impulse to visit the Sivananda Ashram. In 1946, while on army leave, he went to Rishikesh and became a disciple of Sivananda's. He decided to leave his family and become a renunciate. He was initiated, settled at the ashram, and became the professor of hatha yoga at the affiliated Yoga Vedanta Forest Academy.

At the suggestion of his guru, he undertook a tour of India, demonstrating hatha yoga asanas (positions) and training many hundreds of individuals. In 1957, he undertook a world tour, spending two years traveling throughout the U.S. and eventually settling in Canada, where he founded a Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Center. Of the several students of Sivanada operating in North America, he is the one recognized by the Divine Life Society, the Sivananda organization in India.

He became the first yoga instructor to obtain a pilot's license and flew a private "peace plane" decorated by artist Peter Max to such disturbed areas of the world as Northern Ireland, West Pakistan and the Suez Canal, dropping peace leaflets. He established yoga centers in twenty-five communities, including a large yoga camp in Quebec, Canada, and another in the Bahamas. He also founded True World Order, an organization dedicated to yoga harmony, health, peace, and vegetarianism. International headquarters of the Sivananda Yoga Ashram is at 673 8th Ave., Val Morin, PQ, Canada J0T 2R0.

Swami Sivananda died of kidney failure in 1993.

Sources:

Vishnu Devananda, Swami. The Complete Illustrated Book of Yoga. Julian Press, 1960.

———. Meditation and Mantras. New York: OM Lotus Publishing, 1978.

———. The Sivananda Upanishad. New York: OM Lotus Publishing, 1987.

Vision (Ocular and Inner)

Ocular vision is the perception of material objects in accordance with optical laws from a definite point in space. Difficult to classify are those rare cases when the sense of sight is transposed and the subject "sees" with his elbows, forehead, fingertips or stomach, since it is not clear what mechanism of vision is involved.

Inner vision is independent of space, objective existence, and, seemingly, optical laws. The simplest type of inner vision is presented by memory images, waking dreams, and images of imagination. The latter type may attain such an intensity as to emerge spontaneously and reach the pitch of hallucination.

Hallucination is the widest extent of inner vision. Dreams represent the primary type. They are hallucinations of low intensity. Generally, hallucinations appear to conform to all factors of ocular vision—space, optical laws, objectivity. The images appear externalized in space.

Indeed, objectivity in some cases of hallucinations may be more than an appearance, as some believe that a camera may register an apparition when outwardly nothing is visible and the vision must have taken place internally (see psychic photography). A still stronger proof of objectivity is furnished by cases of veridical visions in which the perception is afterward found to be a true visual representation of incidents taking place at a distance.

On the other hand, no objectivity is discoverable in degenerative hallucinations, the dogs and snakes of the drunkard, the scarlet fire of the epileptic, or the visions of the psychotic.

Inner vision may be developed empirically in crystal gazing and afford fruitful study for the determination of what elements are externalized from the subconscious mind of the scryer or of discarnate intelligences. Visions may also be distinguished as either spontaneous or induced. (See also Transposition of the Senses.)

Vision Magazine

Vision Magazine, self-described as a "Catalyst for Conscious Living," is a New Age networking tabloid serving San Diego and the surrounding counties in Southern California. Similar to other networking magazines, it attempts to keep readers informed of events and services in the constantly changing post-New Age scene. It seeks to offer a model for a more conscious, peaceful, and healthful world.

Each issue carries a series of short articles that highlight individuals and groups who are active in San Diego or who are visiting the area to put on special programming. Articles are organized so as to present the spectrum of reader interest from natural health to astrology and food. There are also one or two feature articles, often interviews conducted by one of the editors with leading figures in the national metaphysical or holistic health world.

Vision Magazine functions as a means for New Age practitioners to reach potential clients, and each issue devotes a significant amount of space to advertisements that inform readers where they may contact an astrologer, a meditation teacher, a hypnotist, a qigong teacher, or a spiritual community. Ads are selected from those organizations deemed to provide tools that are inspirational, solve problems, and provide dialogue on health, the environment, and the future course of society. The bulk of the ads are grouped into a "Monthly Calendar" and a "Community Resource Directory." The advertising supports the magazine, which is distributed freely throughout Southern California.

Vision Magazine began in 1994 and is published monthly from its headquarters at 4452 Park Blvd., Ste. 211, San Diego, CA 92116. It is edited by Sydney Murray and Kendall Klug. Vision Magazine has also extended itself into the Internet with a site found at http://www.visionmagazine.com/. Unlike most similar sites, however, Vision's editors have moved to transform their Internet presence into an extension of the networking services offered by the magazine rather than simply an Internet description of the magazine.

Sources:

Vision Magazine. San Diego, Calif., n.d.

Vision Magazine. http://visionmagazine.com/. March 15, 2000.

Visions

Term derived from Latin visus, past participle of videre, to see, indicating the appearance to human beings of supernatural persons or scenes. Of great frequency in early and medieval times, and among primitive or semi-civilized races, visions seem to have decreased proportionately with the advance of learning and enlightenment. Thus, among the Greeks and Romans of the classic period, they were comparatively rare, although visions of demons or gods were occasionally seen. On the other hand, among Oriental races, the seeing of visions was a common occurrence, and these visions took more varied shapes.

In medieval Europe, visions were almost commonplace, and directions were given by the church to enable men to distinguish visions of divine origin from false delusions which were either self-generated or the work of the demons and/or the devil.

Visions may be roughly divided into two classes—those which are spontaneous and those which are induced. The great majority belong to the latter class.

In 1854, Joseph Ennemoser, in his work The History of Magic, enumerated causative factors in the appearance of visions to an individual: (1) a sensitive organism and delicate constitution; (2) a religious education and ascetic life (fasting, penance, etc.); (3) narcotics—opium, wine, incense, narcotic salves (witch-salves); (4) delirium, monomania; and/or (5) fear and expectation, preparatory words, songs, and prayers.

Among the visions induced by prayer and fasting and the severe self-discipline of the religious ascetic, must be included many historical or traditional instances—the visions of St.

Francis of Assisi, St. Anthony, St. Bernard Ignatius, St. Catherine of Siena, St. Hildegarde, and Joan of Arc. It may be noted that the convent has often been the special haunt of religious visions. A wave of apparitions of the Virgin Mary began in France early in the nineteenth century and several hundred incidents have been reported in the intervening decades to the present time. (See Garabandal; Medjugorje)

But the most potent means for the induction of visionary appearances are those discovered and used by indigenous people around the world. Over the ages people have indulged in narcotic substances, especially those with hallucinogenic properties, from opium and hashish to peyote. They have also used a variety of spiritual, psychic, and physical disciplines. Thus some fakirs, yogis, and other practitioners have been known to gaze for hours at a time at one object or remain for months in practically the same position, or practice various mortifications of the body, so that they may fall at length into a visionary state. Another ancient method of inducing visionary experience was staring into a shiny object such as a crystal or magic mirror.

The narcotic salves with which some anoint themselves are said to be similar to the witch unguents used in the Middle Ages, which induced in the witch the hallucination that she was flying through the air on a goat or a broomstick. Opium is also said to produce a sensation of flying, as well as visions of celestial delight. Alcoholic intoxication can induce visions of a more negative nature, most notably of insects or animals, as those who have experienced delirium can attest. Nitrogen may have a similar effect. The vapors rising from the ground in some places, or those found in certain caverns, are said to exercise an influence similar to that of narcotics.

Native Americans practiced external methods of inducing visions—solitude, fasting, and the use of salves or ointments. The vision quest was a popular activity of young men in many tribes. In some African, West Indian, and Arabic countries certain dances produced altered conferences, helping participants toward the desired visionary ecstasy. Rhythmic and repetitive music also assisted this process.

Spontaneous Visions

Spontaneous visions, although less common, are yet sufficiently numerous to merit attention here. The difficulty is, of course, to know just how far "fear and expectation" may have operated to induce the vision. In many cases, as in that of the seer Emanuel Swedenborg, the visions may have commenced as "visions of the night," hardly to be distinguished from dreams, and so from vision of an "internal" nature to clearly externalized apparitions. Swedenborg himself declared that when seeing visions of the latter class he used his senses exactly as when awake, dwelling with the spirits as a spirit, but able to return to his body when he pleased. The artist Benvenuto Cellini, like Swedenborg, had a number of spontaneous visions, though little of the same positive results.

Visions are by no means confined to the sense of sight. Taste, hearing, smelling, and touch may all be experienced in a vision. Joan of Arc, for instance, heard voices encouraging her to be the deliverer of her country. Examples may be drawn from the Hebrew Bible, as the case of the child Samuel in the temple (I Sam. 3:4), and instances could be multiplied from all ages and all times.

The visions of John Pordage (1607–1681) and the "Philadelphia Society," or, as they called themselves later, the "Angelic Brethren," a British organization stemming from the mysticism of Jakob Boehme in 1651, were noteworthy in this respect because they included the taste of "brimstone, salt, and soot." In the presence of the "Angelic Brethren," pictures were drawn on the windowpanes by invisible hands and were seen to move about.

Physiological explanations of visions have, from the earliest times, been offered. Plato observed:

"The eye is the organ of a fire which does not burn but gives a mild light. The rays proceeding from the eye meet those of the outward light. With the departure of the outward light the inner also becomes less active; all inward movements become calmer and less disturbed; and should any more prominent influences have remained they become in various points where they congregate, so many pictures of the fancy."

Democritus held that visions and dreams are passing shapes, ideal forms proceeding from other beings. Of deathbed visions Plutarch said:

"It is not probable that in death the soul gains new powers which it was not before possessed of when the heart was confined within the chains of the body; but it is much more probable that these powers were always in being, though dimmed and clogged by the body; and the soul is only then able to practise them when the corporeal bonds are loosened, and the drooping limbs and stagnating juices no longer oppress it."

The Spiritualist theory of visions can hardly be called a physiological one, save insofar as spirit may be regarded as refined matter. An old theory of visionary ecstasy on these lines was that the soul left the body and proceeded to celestial spheres, where it remained in contemplation of divine scenes and persons.

In modern times, the idea of the soul as an entity distinct from the physical body has been studied under the name of out-of-the-body travel. Stemming from this concept is the modern study of near-death experiences, in which individuals regarded as clinically dead have been revived and have described visionary experiences (see death).

Similar to this was the doctrine of Swedenborg, whose spirit, he believed, could commune with discarnate spirits (the souls of the dead) as one of themselves. To this may be traced the doctrines of modern Spiritualism, which thus regarded visions as actual spirits or spirit scenes, visible to the ecstatic or entranced subject whose spirit was projected to discarnate planes.

The question whether or not visions are contagious has been much disputed. It has been said that such appearances may be transferred from one person to another by the laying on of hands. In the case of those Scottish seers who claimed second sight, such a transference may take place even by accidental contact with the seer. The vision of the second person is, however, less distinct than that of the original seer.

The same idea prevailed with regard to the visions of "magnetized" patients in the days of animal magnetism. Insofar as these may be identified with the collective hallucinations of the hypnotic state, there is no definite scientific evidence to prove their existence.

Visions occur to people of all cultures and all states and positions. They come to the irreligious and educated, and by no means have they been confined to the ignorant or the superstitious. Many men of genius have been subject to visionary appearance. While Raphael was trying to paint the Madonna, she appeared to him in a vision. The famous composition known as the "Devil's Sonata" was said to have been dictated to Tartini by the devil himself. Johann Wolfgang von Goethe also had visions. William Blake's portraits of the Patriarchs were done from visionary beings which appeared to him in the night. There have been a number of such instances.

Sources:

Barrett, Sir William. Death Bed Visions. London: Methuen, 1926.

Besterman, Theodore. Crystal-Gazing: A Study in the History, Distribution, Theory and Practice of Scrying. London: William Rider, 1924. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1965.

Fielding-Ould, Fielding. The Wonders of the Saints in the Light of Spiritualism. London: John M. Watkins, 1919.

Halifax, Joan. Shamanic Voices: A Survey of Visionary Narratives. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1979.

Hall, Manly P. Visions and Metaphysical Experiences. Los Angeles: Philosophical Research Society, n.d.

Huxley, Aldous. The Doors of Perception. London: Chatto & Windus, 1954. Reprint, New York: Harper & Row, 1970.
Klonsky, Milton. William Blake: The Seer and His Visions. New York: Crown Publishers, 1977.
Lewis, David. The Life of S. Teresa of Jesus. London, 1970.
Muldoon, Sylvan J., and Hereward Carrington. The Projection of the Astral Body. London: Rider, 1929.
Pordage, John. Truth Appearing Through the Clouds of Undeserved Scandal. N.p., 1655.
Ring, Kenneth. Life at Death; A Scientific Investigation of the Near-Death Experience. New York: William Morrow, 1980.

Visions (Magazine)

Monthly publication containing articles on psychic phenomena, energy fields, and unorthodox healing. It was published by the American National Institute for Psychical Research. Last known address: 11222 La Cienega Blvd., Inglewood, CA 90304.

Visitants

Another term for spirit apparitions.

Vitality

Vitality is a name given that force or principle possessed by living things. In the case of human beings, controversy has long raged between those who interpret vitality mechanistically as the energy derived from food and oxygen intake and those who support theories of vitalism, a doctrine that the origin and phenomena of life derive from a vital principle as distinct from a purely chemical or physical force.

Vitalists argue that the mechanistic view appears inadequate as a matter of everyday experience, since there are limits to the vitality obtainable from oxidation of food and air. At a certain point of eating and breathing one becomes tired, and it is impossible to regain vitality without rest and sleep. Exactly what happens in the sleep state to enhance vitality is still not entirely clear. It does appear, however, that the human body is not simply an internal combustion machine, but rather an energy transforming machine. Contrary to the energy combustion view is the fact that fasting may often enhance vitality rather than deplete it.

The mind also has a profound effect on the vital condition of the body, as, vitalists further suggest, is clear from one's attitude to life, as well as the special phenomena of hypnosis and the profound effects which are possible through meditation techniques. It would seem that subtle processes are involved in energy transformation of food and air and the relationship of such transformation to the psychic life of human beings and their mental activities, states of consciousness, and sociological and spiritual aspirations.

Various great religions posit the existence of an individual soul as an essential principle of a human being, influenced by the physical and mental life as well as by environment and food intake, but independent from the physical body and surviving it after death. Spiritualists and psychical researchers have offered evidence for such survival, while materialists have argued that the phenomena presented as evidence of such apparent survival may be nothing more than mental artifacts. However, even this latter view also predicates mental life as capable of existing in a form almost as subtle as that of the claimed soul.

From a subjective point of view, the experience of out-of-the-body travel or astral projection has usually carried an overwhelming awareness of individuality as distinct from the body, which it apparently leaves, and for many individuals the experience has been one of deep religious conviction. J. Sylvan Muldoon, a pioneer writer on the subject, has argued in the light of his out-of-the-body experiences that the sleep state is a condition of vitality transfer between a "soul body" and the physical body, drawing upon some subtle life force outside the body.

Such a view is similar to the Polynesian concept of mana and the Hindu concept of prana, a subtle principle in the air and in food that is transformed into kundalini, energy in the body. A proportion of kundalini remains static in the body, but may become dynamic in sexual activity. It may also be diverted to subtle centers in the body through the spinal column by the practice of meditation in conjunction with the psycho-physical effects of purification of the mind and emotions, traditionally through self-purification and ethical living. Ancient Hindu treatises on prana have described at length the atomic structure of matter and its connection with the subtle currents of prana operating in the universe generally, as well as modified in the individual human being.

Sources:

Carrington, Hereward. Vitality, Fasting and Nutrition. New York: Rebman, 1908.
Crookall, Robert. During Sleep: The Possibility of "Co-Operation" Between the Living and the Dead. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1974.
Gopi, Krishna. The Biological Basis of Religion and Genius. New York: Harper & Row, 1972.
Hollander, Bernard. In Search of the Soul and the Mechanism of Thought, Emotion, and Conduct. 2 vols. London: Kegan Paul; New York: E. P. Dutton, 1920.
LeShan, Lawrence L. The Medium, The Mystic and The Physicist. New York: Viking; London: Turnstone Books, 1974.
Muldoon, Sylvan J., and Hereward Carrington. The Projection of the Astral Body. London: Rider, 1920.
Rama Prasad. The Science of Breath and the Philosophy of Tattvas . . . Nature's Finer Forces. 3rd rev. ed., Adhyr, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1897.
Wheeler, L. Richmond. Vitalism: Its History and Validity. London: Witherby, 1939.

Vitality (Magazine)

Vitality, the primary New Age networking periodical serving Toronto and surrounding communities in Ontario, Canada, emerged in the 1980s and during the 1990s grew into a substantive bimonthly magazine with more than 100 pages per issue. Vitality began as a self-described "wellness journal" primarily as an organ of the holistic health community and through the mid-1990s concentrated its attention on natural foods, herbs, nutrition, alternative psychologies, various body work therapies, and related other forms of drugless and noninvasive healing treatments. However, as the decade progressed, while the holistic health emphasis remains, the attention of the magazine grew to encompass all of the psychic and spiritual concerns of the post-New Age.

Vitality sees itself as an information organ. Each issue highlights the organizations and events that constitute holistic health and the New Age. As with most networking magazines, it is built around the advertisements placed by organizations that sponsor events and individuals who offer services to the public. Four times a year, Vitality publishes a pullout supplement, the "Vitality Resource Directory," in which coming events and major holistic organizations are listed.

Each issue carries a set of feature articles, the majority on health issues. There are also a set of columns that treat astrology, New Age lifestyles, and meetings and gatherings in the Toronto area. Vitality sees its purpose as providing an antidote to the world situation by offering a positive vision of the New Age of wholeness and health for body and soul.

Vitality is distributed as a free magazine in metaphysical and health food stores in Ontario, but subscriptions for home delivery may be obtained at 356 Dupont St., Toronto, ON Canada M5R 1V9.

Sources:

Vitality. Toronto, Ontario, Canada, n.d.

Vivekananda, Swami (1863–1902)

Hindu monk who became the leading interpreter of Yoga and Hinduism in the West; founder of the Ramakrishna Mission. Born as Narendra Nath Dutt in Calcutta in a Bengali family, January 12, 1863, he was educated at a Christian College in Calcutta. Here he was much impressed by the analytic and scientific methods of Westerners. For a time, Narendra was influenced by the Brahmo Samaj movement, but its rationalistic spirit did not altogether satisfy him.

When eighteen years old, he first met his spiritual teacher Sri Ramakrishna, who was much impressed by the boy's beautiful singing. Within a couple of years, Narendra was won over by the deep spiritual realization of Sri Ramakrishna and became his follower.

He made a number of visits to Sri Ramakrishna at Dakshineswar, but after the death of his father he was obliged to take charge of family affairs and got a job in an attorney's office. Eventually he persuaded Sri Ramakrishna to use his spiritual powers to ensure that his mother and brothers would never lack food and clothing, then renounced his worldly life.

Sri Ramakrishna died in 1886 and Narendra adopted the name Vivekananda in 1893, when he sailed from Bombay on May 31 to attend the Parliament of Religions held in Chicago in connection with the World's Fair.

In his opening address he caused tumultuous applause by commencing "Sisters and Brothers of America," and thereafter his simple trenchant style and his grasp of both Hindu and Christian beliefs won over many audiences. His book on Raja Yoga attracted the attention and respect of such enlightened thinkers as William James and Leo Tolstoy. Vivekananda lectured throughout Chicago, Detroit, Boston and New York for two years, then visited England, where he also aroused great enthusiasm, before returning to Calcutta in 1897.

Back in India, he took up the cause of ordinary people with realism as well as spiritual insight, stating: "The great national sin is the neglect of the masses and that is one of the causes of our downfall. No amount of politics would be of any avail until the masses of India are once more well educated and well cared for."

Soon afterwards he established the Ramakrishna Mission for training young monks and preachers. In June 1899, he made a second journey to the West, but by now his strength was giving out. He spent some time in California, which was congenial to his health and his teachings, and in December 1900 returned to India, where he passed away July 4, 1902, in Behur Monastery.

Today there are Ramakrishna Vedanta Centers in a number of countries, and the books of Swami Vivekananda remain one of the best and clearest introductions to Hindu spiritual teachings and yoga. These books are constantly reprinted, and include such popular works as Jnana Yoga, Raja Yoga, Bhakti Yoga, and Karma Yoga. His Collected Works covers eight volumes. The standard biography is by Swami Nikhilananda: Swami Vivekananda; A Biography, Adraita Ashram, Calcutta, India, 1975.

Vjestica

A name for a witch among the Slavs.

Voices (Paranormal)

Paranormal voices may be objective or subjective. The latter category is covered by clairaudience. The former is on the borderline of apparitions, as in the biblical statement: "And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him: Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? . . . And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man." (Acts 9:4, 7).

According to Eusebius, a spirit voice was heard by the crowds at the martyrdom of Bishop Polycarp: "Be brave, Oh Polycarp." St. Francis, praying in a little ruined church, heard a voice from the painted wooden crucifix before which he knelt: "Francis, seest thou not that my house is being destroyed? Go, therefore, and repair it for me."

Joan of Arc was started on her mission by voices. "A very bright cloud appeared to her and out of the cloud came a voice." The sentence of death was based on admission of her monitary voices. She heard them first at thirteen years of age. They came mainly when she was awake, but also roused her sometimes from sleep. They were not always intelligible. She believed in them implicitly. The predictions of the voices were mainly fulfilled: the siege of Orleans was raised, Charles VII was crowned at Rheims and Joan was wounded, all as foretold. The preacher George Fox stated in his Journal:

"When my troubles and torments were great, when all my hopes in men were gone so that I had nothing outwardly to help me, nor could I tell what to do, then, O then, I heard a voice which said: 'There is one, even Jesus Christ, that can speak to thy condition.' When I heard it my heart did leap for joy."

Dr. Edwin Ash, in his book Faith and Suggestion (1912), described the case of Dorothy Kerin, who, after a long illness and on the point of death, suddenly heard a voice say "Dorothy." She woke up and saw the bed enveloped in light and a beautiful woman holding an Annunciation lily in her hand, saying "Dorothy, you are quite well," putting the stress on "quite." She became instantly well. For her own account, see Dorothy Kerin's book The Living Touch (1919).

There are various types of clairaudience. As a conscious subjective phenomenon, many writers, from Socrates onward, have claimed that their works were dictated by an inner voice. In automatic writing, psychics and Spiritualist mediums are usually unaware what is being written through their hands. Many Spiritualist mediums go into trance and apparently transmit messages from the spirits of the dead through their own vocal organs, sometimes with the tones and mannerisms of the deceased, but often only an approximation. Inspirational speakers, or channelers, also occasionally speak with the voices of spirit entities, while at other time employing their own vocal mannerisms with only the message being dictated by inner inspiration.

In the case of a clairvoyant, images of the deceased are perceived and described by the mediums, sometimes in conjunction with clairaudient messages. Both clairvoyance and clairaudience are classed as mental phenomena, involving extrasensory perception. In such cases, the voices may be paranormal in origin, but not in manifestation, and sometimes they may be more reasonably credited to unconscious mental activity.

Much controversy has surrounded the phenomenon of "direct voice" in Spiritualist séances, where spirits are claimed to speak independently of the medium, either through a trumpet or through a "voice box" built up from ectoplasm drawn from the medium. Both the use of trumpets and the idea of ectoplasm have been largely abandoned.

In line with modern technological developments, a new type of paranormal vocal phenomenon has emerged—"Raudive voices," or "electronic voice phenomenon." It is claimed that messages, often individual words or phrases apparently from deceased individuals, have appeared paranormally on audiotape recordings. In spite of much research, the evidence is ambiguous, as some apparent successes might be due to a mediumistic power of the investigator, rather than to some susceptibility of audiorecording to communications from deceased individuals.

A variant phenomenon which has been reported anecdotally in modern times is the "electronic visual (or video) phenomenon," in which it is believed that paranormal images have appeared on videotape recordings. Much research remains to be done before such claims can be validated.

Sources:

Ellis, David. The Mediumship of the Tape Recorder. Pulborough, U.K.: D. J. Ellis, 1978.

Lang, Andrew. The Valet's Tragedy and Other Studies. London: Longmans Green, 1903.

Raudive, Konstantin. Breakthrough: An Amazing Experiment in Electronic Communication with the Dead. Gerrards Cross, UK: Colin Smythe; New York: Taplinger, 1971. Reprint, New York: Lancer Books, 1973.

Smith, Hester Travers. Voices from the Void. London: William Rider, 1919.

Stokes, Doris. Voices in My Ear. London: Futura, 1981.

Swaffer, Hannen. Adventures with Inspiration. London: Kennerly, Morely and Mitchell, 1929.

Volguine, Alexandre (1903–1976)

Prominent French astrologer. In 1937 he founded Les Cahiers Astrologiques, a forum of French astrological research, which he edited until his death in 1976. He wrote a number of works on astrology, some of which have now been published in English translation.

Sources:

Volguine, Alexandre. Lunar Astrology. New York: ASI Publishers, 1974.

———. The Ruler of the Nativity. New York: ASI Publishers, 1973.

———. The Technique of Solar Returns. New York: ASI Publishers, 1976.

Vollhardt, Maria (Frau Rudloff) (ca. 1925)

A physical medium whom Dr. F. Schwab, author of Teleplasma und Telekinese (Berlin, 1923) made the subject of searching studies for two years. Vollhardt, the wife of an official in the Berlin Postal Ministry, produced telekinesis (movements of objects at a distance), levitations, apports, ectoplasm and stigmata phenomena of a baffling character.

In his book My Psychic Adventures (1924), psychical researcher J. Malcolm Bird wrote of having seen a quantity of irritated-looking puncture wounds, some actually bleeding, appear in a rough square pattern on the medium's hand. The only suggestion he could make for normal duplication was a battery of three or four forks or a section of nutmeg grater. The mystery of how such wounds were produced deepened when the sitters declared that they had seen on Vollhardt's hand a small object, the shape of a bird's beak, or claw. They put a pot full of farina on the table and asked for an imprint. They got it—in the shape of a chicken's foot.

Once the medium's hand was stigmatized across the hand of one of the sitters who was controlling her. At each puncture, the medium gave a sharp cry of pain. She stated that she felt as though an electric current had entered at the skin and passed through the body.

Schwab observed the phenomenon some fifty times outside the séance room in good light. When he made photographs with a stereoscopic camera he got a picture of a sort of claw of several branches, poised upon the perfectly controlled hand of the medium. He believed it was a materialized symbol of the medium's subconscious notion of oppression and torture.

In 1925, Vollhardt figured in court proceedings. At a séance given to a number of scientists and doctors, her arms, linked up in the orthodox manner, were found, on the lights being turned up, encircled by two massive rings. Albert Moll refused to believe in the penetration of matter passing through matter and later declared in a book that the medium must have had the rings concealed under her sleeves. The medium retorted with libel proceedings and offered to demonstrate her powers before the Bench. The offer came to nothing as Moll insisted that the demonstration should be done in daylight.

Degner testified on behalf of Vollhardt. The court found Moll guilty of calumny, but acquitted him as his statement was made "in defense of justified interests." The medium appealed against the acquittal and lost her case. Prof. Busch testified that the apports produced were fraudulently introduced by the medium while in a "semi-conscious condition."

Sources:

Bird, J. Malcolm. My Psychic Adventures. New York: Scientific American Publishing, 1924.

Volometer

An instrument invented by Dr. Sydney Alrutz (1868–1925) of Uppsala University, Sweden, to measure will as a dynamic power.

Von Däniken, Erich (1935–)

Swiss writer whose 1969 book, Chariots of the Gods, gave focus to a wave of popular interest in the idea that in ancient times the earth was visited by extraterrestrials whose presence is documented in a variety of archeological remains. Born in Zofingen, Switzerland, April 14, 1935, he was brought up in a conservative Roman Catholic setting at St. Michel College in Fribourg. At an early age von Däniken was fascinated by "inconsistencies" between religious doctrine and the accounts of mysterious events in the Bible. After leaving school, he took various jobs in hotels, and this seasonal work left him with spare time that he spent in traveling and reading. He visited South America, Russia and Egypt, seeing firsthand many of the monuments of the ancient past.

In his reading, he was particularly impressed by the biblical account of Ezekiel's fiery wheel and by Sumerian accounts of the coming of the Sun God in the ancient epic of Gilgamesh. Von Däniken began to evolve a theory of sky-borne gods in vehicles resembling accounts of flying saucers, built around the religious legends and myths of ancient civilizations. With the advent of American and Soviet space travel, such theories became much more plausible to many people.

In 1961, von Däniken started publishing articles about his theories and by 1966 had prepared a book, Erinnerungen an die Zukunft, which was published in Germany and serialized in the Swiss newspaper Die Weltwoche. This book was translated into English and published in England in 1969 and in the United States the following year under the title Chariots of the Gods? Von Däniken's introduction stated:

"I claim that our forefathers received visits from the universe in [the] remote past. Even though I do not know who these extraterrestrial intelligences were or from which planet they came, I nevertheless proclaim that these 'strangers' annihilated part of mankind existing at the time and produced a new, perhaps the first homo sapiens."

As evidence, von Däniken cited accounts of cosmic battles in ancient legends and inscriptions suggestive of space travel. In later books he supported his theories by further legends, traveler's tales and photographs of ancient religious inscriptions.

Critics jumped upon von Däniken's facile interpretations such as his claims that Mayan temple figures and inscriptions represent spacemen at the controls of their vehicles. Such interpretations pulled odd artifacts out of their cultural context, revealed a significant misunderstanding of ancient cultural motifs, and falsely assumed that "ancient" astronauts would employ "twentieth-century" technology and design.

More crucial to his credibility, however, von Däniken admitted to falsifying his presentation. In an interview on the PBS

Nova science program on television in 1978, he confessed that he had not really explored an artifact-filled cave in South America as claimed in his book The Gold of the Gods (1973). In fact the artifacts were brass, not gold. He admitted:

"No that did not happen, but I think when somebody writes books in my style and in my sense, which are not scientific books, we call it in German 'Sachbucher.' It's a kind of popular book but it's not science fiction, though all the facts do exist but with other interpretations. Then an author is allowed to use effects. So some little things like this are not really important because they do not touch the facts . . ."

This astonishing defense of falsehood in order to strengthen a romantic interpretation of facts necessarily casts doubt on Von Däniken's theories. Von Däniken has not appeared perturbed by adverse criticism from scholars and scientists. He believes that his unconventional interpretations of mythology and archaeology will be generally accepted in the course of time.

Von Däniken has found his strongest support in the writings of Zecharia Sitchin. His theories have been debunked by Ronald Story and Clifford Wilson. In light of the intense criticism the idea of ancient astronauts received in the late 1970s, the wave of interest in the idea subsided and new books on the subject have become quite rare.

Sources:

Sitchin, Zecharia. The 12th Planet. New York: Stein and Day, 1976.

———. The Wars of Gods and Men. New York: Avon, 1985.

Story, Ronald D. The Space-Gods Revealed. New York: Harper & Row, 1976; Barnes & Noble, 1978.

Von Däniken, Erich. According to the Evidence: My Proof of Man's Extraterrestrial Origin. London: Souvenir, 1977.

———. Chariots of the Gods? London: Souvenir Press, 1969. Reprint, New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1970.

———. The Gods and Their Grand Design: the Eighth Wonder of the World. London: Souvenir, 1984.

———. The Gold of the Gods. London: Souvenir Press, 1973.

———. In Search of Ancient Gods; My Pictorial Evidence for the Impossible. London: Souvenir Press, 1974.

Wilson, Clifford. Crash Go the Chariots. New York: Lancer, 1972.

Voudou

The African-based religion of Haiti. Voudou can be traced to the first Africans brought to Haiti in the sixteenth century. However, it was during the years of French acquisition of land in Haiti that the bulk of African people were brought to the island. Between 1664 and 1830 some 1,650,000 Africans arrived in Haiti. The dominant group came from Dahomey, and the Dahomean religion became the most important element in the emergence of Voudou.

The Africans brought with them beliefs found throughout West Africa, including a belief in a supreme deity or divine power. In Haiti that deity came to be known as le Bon Diei (the Good God). This deity had largely withdrawn from human affairs, but under him were a number of greater and lesser deities. Among the major deities were Legba, Erzulie, and Damballah. The lesser deities (loas) are numerous, and are of two varieties, those of African origin (the Rada) and those of Haitian origin (Pétro). Many of the African deities, especially those tied to local sites, did not survive the Atlantic crossing, and they were replaced with new local deities. The name Pétro derived, according to oral tradition, from a man named Don Pédro who introduced a distinctive dance into Haitian religion.

The plantation owners in Haiti attempted to impose Catholicism on the slave population. One of the means by which Voudou survived was in the identification of the loas with various Catholic saints. Thus Legba was identified with Saint Anthony, Erzulie with the Virgin Mary, and Damballah with Saint Patrick. Damballah is pictured as a snake, and, as in Ireland, there are practically no snakes in Haiti. Hence the association with St. Patrick.

Voudou worship and practice is conducted by male (oungan) and female (manbo) priests. They operate out of a worship center called ounfo. In the center of the ounfo is a peristil, a pole that usually has a representation of Damballah coiled around it. Worship includes honoring the deities (which may involve the sacrifice of various animals), lively dancing with drum accompaniment, and the possession of priests or others in attendance by loas.

Like all West African religion, Voudou includes the practice of magic. Voudou has a particularly bad image, even among other African-based religions, as the home to much sorcery (malevolent magic), even to the extent of the calling forth of zombies, dead people brought back to life to handle menial labor in the fields.

The image of evil attached to Voudou in the popular imagination seems to have begun with what is known as the Affaire de Bizoton. On December 27, 1863, a little girl of the town of Bizoton was kidnapped and used in a sinister cannibalistic ritual. Eventually the perpetrators were caught, tried, and convicted. While the actions of the people who had killed the girl were offensive to all, in the popular press, especially the foreign press, the actions of the murderers were identified with the Voudou community. Besides the gruesome stories printed at the time, in the 1880s a volume on Haiti by Sir Spenser St. John describes the incident in vivid detail and uses it in a diatribe against Voudou. His work has been followed by a variety of writings, varying from the academic to the journalistic to the merely exploitive, that point a self-righteous finger at Voudou adherents.

There is, of course, an element of magic, even of black magic in Voudou, but it operates quite differently than outsiders have usually presented it. Besides the oungans and manbos, there are bocors (sorcerers), and caplatas (lesser magical functionaries). Most magic is used to ward off evil. Charms ward off the evil eye and various loas are seen as the cause of the different ills people suffer. Magic will be applied to discover the loa responsible and the means of getting the loa to go away. There are also accounts of evil spirits, creatures such as vampires and werewolves.

During the eighteenth century, the ruling class did not take particular notice of Voudou. They tended to identify it with the nocturnal gatherings most notable for dancing. The dancing drums, however, served as a communication system across Haiti, and in 1804 they became the means of organizing a massive and successful revolt. Haitians were able to pull off the revolution without the aid of a great leader because they were united by their religious beliefs. Those beliefs, including the protection of the loas, allowed them to rise against the better-armed rulers.

The use of Voudou in this revolt led the first black ruler of Haiti to oppose it. Later rulers embraced Voudou, most notably Jean-Claude Duvalier, who promoted his own image as a great Voudou magician and his use of Voudou priests in his militia.

Voudou was brought to the United States in 1804 and the years following the Haitian revolt. It spread through the black population of New Orleans and the surrounding countryside. It found its most famous practitioner in Marie Laveau in the mid-nineteenth century. Legal measures were taken to curb its power in the years prior to the Civil War, but they merely drove the practice underground. It survives today, both in a public mode accessible to tourists and as a semisecret religious community. In the 1920s it provided inspiration for the development of African American Spiritualism and the Spiritual Church movement.

Sources:

Bisnauth, Dale. History of Religion in the Caribbean. Kingston, Jamaica: Kingston Publishers, 1989.

David, Wade. The Serpent and the Rainbow. New York: Warner, 1985.

Denning, Melita, and Osborne Phillips. Voudou Fire: The Living Reality of Mystical Religion. St. Paul: Llewellyn Publications, 1979.

Deren, Maya. Divine Horsemen: The Voodoo Gods of Haiti. New York: Chelsea House, 1970.

Leyburn, James G. The Haitian People. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1966.

Selden, Rodman. Spirits of the Night. Dallas: Spring, 1992.

Vril

A word invented by Edward Bulwer Lytton, famous novelist, politican and occultist, to describe a kind of psychic energy. It was featured in his book Vril: Power of the Coming Race (1871), which told how "Vril" enabled a race to reach a high degree of civilization and develop a Utopian society without poverty, inequality, or war. Lytton himself had some connections with occultism and received the magician Éliphas Lévi at his house. The idea of Vril was very much in tune with ideas of magical power that Lytton had previously espoused in his books and which continue to be used by occultists to the present time. In prewar Germany there was a Vril Society founded in Berlin.

Sources:

Lytton, Edward Bulwer. Vril: Power of the Coming Race. Edinburgh; London: W. Blackwood and Sons, 1871.

W

WADL See Witches Anti-Defamation League

Wafer (in Devil Worship)

The sacred wafer used in the Christian Eucharist is frequently cited as a prized item in devil worship for purposes of profanation. When Satanism was invented in the late fifteenth century by Roman Catholic inquisitors, no phenomenon existed which could be called Satanism. The inquisitors envisioned Satanism as a reversal of Christianity, the devil being the opposite of God. Devil worship, then, would be a reversal of Christian rituals, primarily the Roman Catholic Mass. Thus a Satanist would speak the Lord's prayer in reverse. The idea of a cult that parodied and profaned Christianity was in all likelihood built out of incidents in which different individuals, over the centuries, actually performed individual sacrilegious acts.

It was rumored that Satanists would attempt to obtain consecrated hosts or wafers from the chalice of a church altar to be profaned in some manner. Sometimes, a turnip was said to be colored black and used to imitate a host wafer.

The practice of Satanism was recorded in the memory and documents of the Christian Church in the West but no actual incident of devil worship occurred until the time of Louis XIV of France, although it was alleged that in the house of the Irish sorcerer, Dame Alice Kyteler, a wafer of sacramental bread was found bearing the name of the Devil.

Sources:

Robbins, Rossell Hope. The Encyclopedia of Witchcraft and Demonology. New York: Crown Publilshers, 1959.

Wagner, Edward A. (1906–1982)

Journalist and astrologer, born in Philadelphia on November 15, 1906. As a youth he moved with his family to Cleveland, Ohio, where he finished high school. In 1924 he went to work for the Cleveland Press. He emerged from obscurity to become an assistant to Harry Houdini in the exposure of Spiritualist frauds and charlatans. Houdini died in 1926 and Wagner turned his attention to astrology with the idea of publishing a Houdini-like exposé. In order to carry out that task, Wagner immersed himself in the subject, learning to cast horoscope charts and interpret them. In the process he was converted to a belief in astrology, and rather than write an exposé, he became a professional astrologer. He affiliated with the Rosicrucian Fellowship and eventually moved to Oceanside, California, as the fellowship's assistant superintendent of publications.

In the early 1930s Wagner established a business in Los Angeles and for two years published the National Astrological Journal (1933–35). In 1936 he began a nationally syndicated column, "Your Daily Forecast," which continued until the general discontinuance of astrological columns during World War II (a voluntary gesture of the journalistic and astrological community due to Hitler's use of astrology). Wagner served in the army during the war. In 1946 he established a weather forecasting business, but also became the editor-in-chief for Dell Publishing Company (1946–73). Dell published, amid its many astrological publications, Horoscope magazine. In 1973 Wagner was named consulting executive editor of Horoscope, and he was named editor emeritus in 1975. He died in May of 1982.

Sources:

Holden, James H., and Robert A. Hughes. Astrological Pioneers of America. Tempe, Ariz.: American Federation of Astrologers, 1988.

Waite, Arthur Edward (1857–1942)

A British scholar and historian of occultism and mysticism. Waite was born on October 2, 1857, in Brooklyn, New York, and brought to London, England, by his family when he was an infant. He was educated in Roman Catholic schools. As a boy, he cherished an affection for "penny dreadfuls," the romantic popular pulp literature of the day.

Waite grew up during the first European renaissance of occultism which stretched from the end of the nineteenth century to the outbreak of World War I, and his personal friends included Arthur Machen and Ralph Shirley. He also met William Butler Yeats, Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, Annie Besant, Rudolf Steiner, Wynn Westcott, Algernon Blackwood, and Aleister Crowley.

Waite regularly contributed to Shirley's Occult Review, and for some twenty years he edited anonymously its monthly "Review of Periodical Literature." During this period he acquired a knowledge of the major current developments in occultism all over the world.

He was also a Freemason and authority on Masonic writings. He was responsible for the first British publication of many important occult and mystical texts. He translated and publicized the writings of occultist Éliphas Lévi (Alphonse Louis Constant).

In 1891 Waite joined the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn but quit in less than a year believing his time was better spent studying and translating alchemical texts. He developed a negative attitude toward all magical ritual and believed that rituals differed primarily in the amount of black magic they contained.

Waite became a devoted mystic and in the wake of the collapse of the Golden Dawn in 1915, he founded the Fellowship of the Rosy Cross. He believed that suitably constructed rituals, which he endeavored to write, that had a dramatic form but were of a religious (devotional) rather than magical (manipulative) format, could assist the mystical quest.

Waite was involved in the transition from the first to the second generation of the occult revival. He was a productive occult writer and produced some historical texts and translations. Because he critiqued the magical endeavor, he was disliked and denegrated by occultists, and orthodox mystics distrusted him because of his association with the occult. Recovery of his work has been assisted by the efforts of Robert Gilbert, who has produced a biography and a bibliography of his writings.

Through the twentieth century, Waite was known for his work with Pamela Coleman-Smith in the production of a deck of tarot cards (the Waite deck) and his commentary on the tarot, The Key to the Tarot (1910). Both the deck and the book remain popular in spite of the numerous new divinatory tarot decks that have been produced in the late twentieth century as expressions of the Wiccan and New Age movements.

Waite died May 19, 1942.

Sources:

Gilbert, Robert A. A. E. Waite: A Bibliography. Wellingborough, Northamptonshire, England: Aquarian Press, 1983.

———. A. E. Waite: Magician of Many Parts. Wellingborough, Northamptonshire, England: Crucible, Thorsons, 1987.

Waite, Arthur E. Azoth; or, The Star in the East. London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1893.

———. The Book of Black Magic and of Pacts. London: George Redway, 1898. Revised as The Book of Ceremonial Magic. London: William Rider, 1911.

———. The Brotherhood of the Rosy Cross. London: William Rider & Sons, 1924.

———. The Hidden Church of the Holy Grail. London: Rebman, 1909.

———. The Key to the Tarot. London: William Rider, 1910.

———. The Occult Sciences. London: George Redway, 1891. Reprint, Secacus, N.J.: University Books, 1974.

———. The Pictorial Key to the Tarot. London: William Rider, 1911.

———. The Real History of the Rosicrucians. London: George Redway, 1887.

———. Shadows of Life and Thought. London: Selwyn and Blount, 1938.

———. Studies in Mysticism and Certain Aspects of the Secret Tradition. London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1906.

Waldensians

The name of a proto-Protestant Christian sect that arose in the south of France late in the twelfth century C.E. Peter Waldo, a prosperous merchant from Lyon, appeared about 1170 as a wandering preacher. He soon built a substantial following in the same region in which the heretical Albigensians had their centers. However, the Waldensians were a Bible-centered, theologically orthodox group. The Albigensians had adopted a Gnostic religious system that rested somewhat upon that of Manichaeism, with its extreme dualism (a belief that God and evil exist as two equal and opposing forces) and severe asceticism. Waldo's complaints were against much of the undisciplined behavior of priests, and a number of "unbiblical" practices such as pilgrimages, worship of saints, and church wealth, all of which arose as items on the agenda of protestants in the sixteenth century.

Waldensianism's adherents were divided into two classes: "Christ's paupers," who left their secular lives behind; and the "friends" who accepted Waldo's teachings but remained in their secular lives. This division was similar to the two levels of membership among the Cathari. As the movement spread to Italy and Germany, it was carried by wandering preachers who went out in pairs.

After a generation in which the church attempted to win them back to the fold, the Waldensians began to experience persecution about the second decade of the thirteenth century. A number were burned in southern France and Germany, but in Italy they were able to survive by retreating into the Alpine mountain valleys. The group survived primarily in Italy, where they aligned themselves to the sixteenth-century reformation. In the last half of the twentieth century, they emerged as a recognized group in Italy and the Methodist Church of Italy recently merged with them.

During the Middle Ages the spokespersons of the Roman church believed that, like the Albigenses, the Waldensians had a diabolical element in their religion, and from time to time they were classed with the various secret societies that sprang up in medieval Europe, such as the Templars and the Rosicrucians. Although the Waldensians possessed an internal doctrine and disciple accepted by the inner core of adherents, their beliefs and practices were more of an ethical nature and were in no manner associated with the occult or magic.

Sources:

Westin, Gunnar. The Free Church through the Ages. Nashville, Tenn.: Broadman, 1958.

Walder, Phileas

A Swiss Lutheran minister who became an occultist and Spiritualist, and a friend of French occultist Éliphas Lévi. In the anti-clerical hoax of Léo Taxil (Gabriel Jogand-Pagès), Walder and Miss Sophia Walder were represented as associates of Freemason Albert Pike in the rites of devil worship in Charleston, South Carolina. In reality, Walder was an earnest Freemason and mystic.

WALES

Wales shares with other Celtic countries an ancient mythology and traditional lore, although much of this was suppressed with the spread of Christianity from the fifth century on, and a succession of conquests by Romans, Normans, and English. Many of the enchanted stories of the King Arthur cycle are also found in Welsh tradition.

In the seventeenth century, Puritanism took a firm hold, and the spread of Methodism in the eighteenth century further worked to eradicate traditions of magic, although the religious revivals of the late nineteenth century had a wild, almost Pagan flavor about them and were accompanied by the appearance of various forms of paranormal phenomena.

Ancient Traditions

One of the great sources of Welsh legends is the Mabinogion, dating from medieval times, containing stories for oral recitation by bards in the halls of the ancient princes of Wales. Typical motifs in these tales are supernatural birth, visits to the Other World, and magic shape-changing. Rhiannon, the wife of Pwyll, possessed marvelous birds that came from the Unseen World, and their singing held warriors spellbound for 80 years. In another story, Lvevelys helps his brother Lludd to eradicate three plagues that have devastated Britain—the Coranians, a strange race whose knowledge is infinite and who hear everything uttered, even the softest whisper; a horrifying shriek that penetrates every house on a May evening, caused by the battle between two dragons; and a great giant who carries off all the food from the king's palace.

A well-known story is that of the birth of Taliesin, chief of the bards of the west. The hero, Gwion Bach, goes to the Land under Waves at the bottom of Lake Bala in North Wales. There he finds the giant Tegid the Bald and his wife Ceridwen, goddess of poetry and knowledge. Ceridwen owns an immense cauldron in which she brews a mixture of science and inspiration, with the aid of her books of magic. This great brew has to simmer for a year and a day, and she sets the blind man Morda to keep the fire going and Gwion to stir the brew. It is to yield three magical drops.

Toward the end of the year, as Ceridwen is picking herbs and making incantations, three drops of the brew spurt out of the cauldron and fall upon Gwion Bach's finger. With the sudden heat on his finger, he puts it into his mouth to cool, whereupon the three drops instantly give him knowledge and meaning of all things, and he becomes aware that he must guard against Ceridwen's cunning, so he flees to his own land. Meanwhile the cauldron bursts and the rest of the brew is a black poison that overflows into the waters, poisoning the horses of Gwyddno Garanhir.

Ceridwen seizes a billet of wood and strikes blind Morda on the head, but he declares that he is innocent and that it is the fault of Gwion Bach. She runs in pursuit of Gwion, but he sees her coming and changes himself into a hare. She changes herself into a greyhound and follows him. He runs toward a river and becomes a fish, but she, in the form of an otter, chases him under the water, so he must turn himself into a bird. She becomes a hawk and gives him no rest in the sky. Just as she is going to swoop on him, he sees a heap of winnowed wheat on the floor of a barn, so he drops among the wheat and turns himself into one of the grains. She turns herself into a black hen, scratches at the wheat and swallows him.

She carries him for nine months and is delivered of him, but cannot kill him because of his beauty, so she wraps him in a leather bag and casts him into the sea to the mercy of God. He is carried into the weir of Gwyddno Garanhir and found by Prince Elphin, who has come to catch fish in his net. Elphin renames him Taliesin, which can mean "beautiful brow" or "great value."

Druids

Wales is also considered a center for the cult of the Druids (brought by the Celts), who came into Wales as early as 200 B.C.E. They were said to practice human sacrifice, although it has also been claimed that the victims were criminals. They also employed methods of divination.

The Druids are thought to have come from ancient Gaul, where they were suppressed in the Roman Conquest as a rival source of power and prestige. The historian Pliny the Elder recorded their association with the mistletoe plant in their sacred rites.

He also mentioned a mysterious object used by the Druids, which he named the "serpent's egg." It was roughly the size and shape of a small apple, and it was said that a mass of hissing serpents threw this egg into the air. If it could be caught in a white cloak before touching the ground, it would convey powers of magic to the possessor, such as the ability to float against a river current, and success in legal undertakings.

Witchcraft and Demonology

Sir Dafydd Llwyd, who lived in Cardiganshire in the reign of Charles II, had studied black magic at Oxford. He practiced as a physician and was famous for his wonderful cures, but his skill was owed to a familiar spirit or demon that he kept locked up in a book of spells. One day, the story is told, he accidently left this grimoire behind and sent his pageboy home to fetch it, commanding him to on no account open it. Like most lads the boy could not resist being inquisitive; he lifted the cover and turned over the leaves, with their weird inscriptions.

Suddenly there came forth a huge demon who frowned and in a hoarse grumbling voice asked to be set to work. In spite of his terror, the boy had the wit to say, "Fetch me some stones out of the River Wye." In a few moments, stones and pebbles began hurtling through the air, when Sir Dafydd, aware that something was wrong, came hurrying back and conjured the spirit back into the book before any serious harm could be done.

As early as the twelfth century, Christian priests in Wales were warned about letting the Eucharistic Host get into the hands of magicians and witches, who might secretly slip it out of their mouths and hide it in a handkerchief or glove. In 1582 the wife of Edward Jones was called upon to prove to the satisfaction of the archdeacon of Lewes "that she did eat the Communion bread and put yt not in hir glove."

As late as the opening years of the eighteenth century, two old dames were said to have attended the morning service at Llanddewi Brefi Church to partake of Holy Communion, but instead of eating it like the other communicants, they kept it in their mouths and went out. Then they walked round the church nine times, and at the ninth circuit the Devil came out of the church wall in the form of a frog, to whom they gave the Host from their mouths, and by doing this, sold themselves to Satan and became witches.

There are many stories about Dr. John Harries (1785–1839), a celebrated Welsh physician and seer of Cërt-y-Cadno, Carmarthenshire, who was said to possess a great book of magic, which was kept locked to prevent any ignorant person from letting loose its powerful influences. Harries boasted of his knowledge of future and distant events, imparted to him by familiar spirits.

Belief in witchcraft persisted into the twentieth century in Wales, but it concerned "white witches" who cast useful spells and horoscopes, or averted evil events. In 1933 there was a wise man in Llangwrig, Montgomeryshire, who was famous throughout Wales for breaking the spells of witches. He kept his book of divination and an almanac in a rosewood casket.

In November 1936 a correspondent in John O'London's Weekly stated that "even now belief in witchcraft in the upper parts of the Wye Valley is not quite extinct." In the following month, another correspondent stated: "When we lived in a small village in Montgomeryshire some years ago we found a widespread belief in witchcraft among the farmers of the district." If the cattle became sick, farmers visited the wise man to find out who had bewitched their beasts. If two farmers had a serious quarrel, one of them went to the wise man to obtain a charm to injure his neighbor.

Phenomena at Religious Revivals

Welsh preaching is celebrated for its fervor, and the traditional hwyl or peroration of a sermon is said to have magic effects. During the nineteenth century, there were reports of mysterious luminous phenomena associated with revivalism, and such accounts were given again in 1904 and 1905 during the inspired revival campaigns of Mary Jones of Egryn. Jones was a happily married peasant woman with a family, when in December 1904 she received beatific visions instructing her to undertake the work of religious revival that had earlier been the mission of the preacher Evan Roberts in Glamorgan.

The first night of Jones' mission was marked by the appearance of a mysterious star and various lights. She herself reported seeing "a circle of small stars, encompassing a cross of diamond stars, and on this cross at times the draped figure of the Saviour." The strange luminous phenomena were witnessed by other individuals. A skeptical businessman was driving her home one evening from a meeting, and prayed that he might be accorded a sign if she was indeed a divinely ordained preacher. Immediately there appeared above the road, in front of the car, a misty star. As the man gazed a luminous cross was formed inside it, sparkling with diamonds, and upon this was a draped figure with bowed head.

On another occasion, Jones herself reported seeing the Devil, who first appeared in the figure of a man, but when she started singing revival hymns, suddenly stopped, turned on her and became transformed into an enormous black dog. She prayed for strength, and the dog rushed growling into a hillock.

The star and the light were seen by many people from the first day of Jones' mission. The star seemed to rest above particular houses where converts later came to the meetings. It also followed her on her journeys. On her trip to Criccieth, for example, the lights were witnessed by the people with her. At Bryncrug, a few miles inland from Towyn, the gallery of the chapel was flooded during the service by the mysterious light. After the service, the light, in the form of a ball of fire casting its rays down to earth, was seen by a party of young quarrymen. Overtaking the light, which had stopped, they knelt down in the middle of the road and held a prayer meeting, bathed in the unearthly light.

Some of these lights and their movements are reminiscent of many modern accounts of UFOs.

The Gardnerian Revival

In the last generation, growing out of the initial work of Gerald B. Gardner (the witch of the Isle of Man), a new neopagan witchcraft or Wicca movement spread from England through the British Isles, the lands of the commonwealth, and the United States. As the movement grew and broke into numerous segments, there arose a number who attached themselves to Welsh witchcraft traditions. Among the early covens in the northeastern United States in the 1970s were the New York Coven of Welsh Traditional Witchcraft and the New England Coven of Welsh Traditional Witchcraft, which supplemented their Gardnerian rituals with material from folkloric, archeological, and anthropological texts on Wales. Several significant groups—the most notable possibly the Church and School of Wicca (Box 1502, New Bern, NC 28560) and the Cymry Wicca (Box 4196, Athens, GA 30605)—claim to draw on Welsh traditions. In addition, many modern witches, drawing on the Mabinogion, have chosen such names as Ceridwen and Taliesin as their religious names.

Sources:

Adler, Margot. Drawing Down the Moon. Boston, Mass.: Beacon Press, 1987.

Charlton, I. W. The Revival in Wales. London, 1905. (Pamphlet)

Graves, Robert. The White Goddess. London: Faber & Faber, 1948.

Guest, Lady Charlotte, trans. The Mabinogion: From the Llyfr Coch o Hergest. 3 vols. London, 1948.

Jones, Edmund. A Relation of Ghosts and Apparitions Which Commonly Appear in the Principality of Wales. Bristol, England: 1767.

Jones, T. Gwynn. Welsh Folklore and Folk Customs. London: Methuen, 1930.

Morgan, J. V. The Welsh Religious Revival, 1904–05. London: Chapman & Hall, 1909.

Walker, Kenneth Macfarlane (1882–1966)

Surgeon and author of books relating to parapsychology and mysticism. Walker was born in 1882 in London, England. He studied at Cambridge University (M.A., M.B., Ch.B.), the Royal College of Surgeons, and the International College of Surgeons. He was a captain in the Royal Army Medical Corps during World War I (1915–19) and later a consulting surgeon at London hospitals.

As an adult Walker was introduced to the writings and work of Georgei I. Gurdjieff, a mystic. In England he studied with Maurice Nicoll and P. D. Ouspensky. He visited Gurdjieff in France in 1948–49 (a visit described in a 1952 article). He wrote both autobiographically of his time as a Gurdjieff student and about his philosophical conclusions. By the time of his death, January 25, 1966, he was a well-known exponent of Gurdjieff's perspective.

Sources:

Driscoll, J. Walter. Gurdjieff: An Annotated Bibliography. New York: Garland Publishing, 1985.

Walker, Kenneth. Diagnosis of Man. Harmondsworth, U.K.: Penguin Books, 1942.

———. I Talk of Dreams. London: Jonathan Cape, 1946.

———. The Making of Man. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1963.

———. Meaning and Purpose. London: Jonathan Cape, 1944.

———. A Study of Gurdjieff's Teachings. London: Jonathan Cape, 1957.

———. The Unconscious Mind. London: Rider, 1961. Reprinted as The Extra-sensory Mind. New York: Emerson, 1961.

———. Venture with Ideas. London: Jonathan Cape, 1951.

Walker, Roland (1907–1993)

Professor of biology who wrote on parapsychology. Walker was born on February 8, 1907, at Stellenbosch, South Africa. He studied at Oberlin College, Ohio (B.A., 1928; M.A., 1929) and Yale University (Ph.D., 1934). Following his graduation he began a long tenure in the biology department at Rennselaer Polytechnic Institute, Troy, New York. Walker developed a side interest in parapsychology and operated from a critical perspective. The primary product of that interest was an essay critical of fellow biologist J. B. Rhine's understanding of extrasensory perception (ESP) and psychokinesis (PK). He died July 30, 1993.

Sources:

Walker, Roland. "Parapsychology and Dualism." Scientific Monthly (July 1954).

Walker, Thane (ca. 1890– ?)

Founder (with Phez Kahlil) of the Prosperos, a group stemming from the philosophy of mystic G. I. Gurdjieff. Walker was born in Nowaway County, Missouri. He claimed to have been one of America's first psychologists and to have been imprisoned in a Nazi concentration camp after writing the article "I Saw Hitler Make Black Magic." He was a Marine Corps officer and entertained American troops in Japan during the occupation in World War II.

As a former pupil of Gurdjieff, Walker became a Gurdjieff-style figure, teaching students through stories and disorienting activities, but also drawing upon Freudian and Jungian psychology and occult and astrological traditions. Walker believed students should wake from the misleading reality of everyday sensory experience and limited personality to a wider reality.

The Prosperos group was founded in Florida in 1956, but the organization has since moved its headquarters to California and reported some 3,000 members at the end of the 1980s.

Sources:

Melton, J. Gordon. Encyclopedia of American Religions. Detroit: Gale Research, 1992.

Walker, William

British spirit photographer, a member of the Crewe Circle associated with William Hope. Walker was the first to perform psychic photography on which spirit "extras" appeared in full color.

Walk-ins

In 1979 popular New Age author Ruth Montgomery identified an unknown phenomenon that had occurred to a variety of unrelated individuals. They reported that the soul originally inhabiting their body had vacated it so that another could "walk in" and take over. Montgomery wrote about walk-ins in her book, Strangers Among Us (1979), suggesting that at times people with otherwise perfectly healthy bodies no longer wished to live. If they were allowed to leave, the people would turn over their physically sound bodies to some advanced (though as yet unperfected) soul. In a subsequent book, Threshold to Tomorrow (1983), Montgomery related some 17 case histories of walk-ins, including New Age leaders Dick Sutphen and Carol Parrish-Harra.

The background of a person claiming to be a walk-in often contains a traumatic, even life-threatening, event through which the person passed to a new, transformed life. Some individuals suffered a medical crisis, often to the point of clinical death and revival. Others reached the conclusion that they simply no longer wanted to live. Because the new personality emerging after the crisis retains the memory of the previous personality, some observers have suggested more mundane explanations of the walk-in experience, including a dramatic reintegration of a previously fragmented personality. The experience of walk-ins has also been compared to near-death experiences, which have led to similar life transformations, though without the feeling of being a different person.

Montgomery claims she received the concept of walk-ins from her "guides," a group of evolved entities from whom Montgomery had channeled material for many years. According to her guides, many of the world's leading figures have been walk-ins, including Moses, Joseph, and Jesus of Nazareth. More recent leaders include Muhammad, Christopher Columbus, Abraham Lincoln, Joseph Smith Jr., Mary Baker Eddy, and many of the founders of the American nation, notably George Washington, Alexander Hamilton, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, and Abigail Adams.

None of the outstanding people from history identified by Montgomery as walk-ins left any hint of having experienced anything similar to the experiences of contemporary walk-ins. Montgomery believed the public nature of the contemporary phenomenon is related to the approaching New Age, which she believed would be initiated by a polar shift in the year 1999. In the past, walk-ins have not identified themselves as such, but in the light of the events of 1999, they need to know of each other so they can locate each other as the leaders who will build the new golden age.

Among the more interesting of the contemporary walk-ins is the couple who heads the Extraterrestrial Earth Mission. Over the last decade they have claimed to be inhabited by a series of extraterrestrial metaphysical teachers. In 1986, John, a metaphysical teacher in Seattle, Washington, abandoned his body to a personality known as "Avinash." Later that year he met another walk-in, then named "Arthea." During the next eight years Avinash would also depart and be succeeded by persons known as "Aktivar," "Alarius," "Savizar," and "ZaviRah." At the same time Arthea was followed by "Akria," "Polaria," "Silarra," and "Ziva'rah." There is every expectation that further walk-in teachers will appear in the future.

Sources:

Montgomery, Ruth. Strangers Among Us: Enlightened Beings from a World to Come. New York: Coward, McGann & Geohegan, 1979.

———. Threshold to Tomorrow. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1983.

Parrish-Harra, Carol W. Messengers of Hope. Marina del Rey, Calif.: DeVorss, 1983.

Zuromski, Paul. "Dick Sutphen." Body, Mind, Spirit (September/October 1987): 14–18.

Wallace, Alfred Russel (1823–1913)

British naturalist, codiscoverer with Charles Darwin of the principles of biological evolution. Wallace was a philosophical skeptic, a materialist. His experience of Spiritualist phenomena overcame his skepticism.

In the preface to his book On Miracles and Modern Spiritualism (1874) Wallace writes:

"They compelled me to accept them, as facts, long before I could accept the spiritual explanation of them: there was at that time 'no place in my fabric of thought into which it could be fitted.' (Argument of Dr. Carpenter). By slow degrees a place was made."

Wallace was led to believe 1) in the existence of numerous preternatural intelligences of various grades and 2) that some of these intelligences, although usually invisible and intangible to us, can and do act on matter, and do influence our minds. It was by the latter doctrine that he accounted for some of the residual phenomena in his work Contributions to the Theory of Natural Selection (1870).

Wallace was born on January 8, 1823, at Usk, Monmouthshire. After leaving school he worked as a land surveyor and architect. Around 1840 his interest in botany began and he started a herbarium. In 1845, he was an English teacher at the Collegiate School, Leicester, where he met H. W. Bates, who influenced him to collect and study beetles.

In 1848, they commenced a joint naturalist expedition to the River Amazon. On the return journey, most of Wallace's collection was destroyed in a fire on the ship, but his book A Narrative of Travels on the Amazon and Rio Negro appeared in 1853. He next traveled in the Malay Archipelago, and his large insect collections passed to Oxford University and the British Museum.

In February 1858, during a severe attack of fever, he was thinking about Malthus' Essay on Population when, to quote his own words: "There suddenly flashed upon me the idea of the survival of the fittest." He drafted a theory which he posted to Charles Darwin a few days later. By coincidence, Wallace's paper was virtually an abstract of Darwin's own theory, written in 1842.

Wallace's earliest experiences relating to Spiritualism dated from 1844 when he was a schoolmaster in Leicester. Influenced by a lecture given by Spencer Hall on mesmerism, he tried similar experiments. Later, during twelve years of tropical wanderings in which he was occupied in the study of natural history, he heard occasionally of table-turning and spirit rapping. He decided to investigate them on his return.

His first opportunity came on July 22, 1865, in the house of a friend. After more than a dozen sittings he became satisfied that "there is an unknown power developed from the bodies of a number of persons placed in connection by sitting round a table with all their hands on it."

The next stage of his inquiry began in September 1865 and was devoted to the physical and mental phenomena of Mary Marshall. In broad daylight, Wallace observed levitation, movement of objects without contact (telekinesis), and the alteration of weight. Although unknown to Marshall, the place name "Para," where Wallace's brother died, his name and that of the last friend who saw him were spelled out. Messages came spelled backwards, through direct writing.

Impressed by these occurrences, Wallace investigated in his own home with the help of a medium. Phenomena were obtained and from November 1866 onward, Wallace had the opportunity to watch mediumship of Agnes Guppy-Volckman develop. A stout woman, she was lifted noiselessly on the top of the table while sitting in her chair, with five or six persons close around her. Musical sounds were heard without the presence of instruments. A German guest, a stranger, sang several songs and the strains of this music accompanied her throughout.

Guppy-Volckman supposedly had the ability to apport flowers and fruit. In midwinter, after she sat for four hours in a small, warm, gas-lighted room in the Wallace home, a quantity of flowers appeared upon a bare table—anemones, tulips, chrysanthemums, Chinese primroses, and several ferns. Wallace stated: "All were absolutely fresh as if just gathered from a conservatory. They were covered with a fine cold dew. Not a petal was crumpled or broken, not the most delicate point or pinnule of the ferns was out of place."

Wallace stated that the phenomenon was repeated afterward hundreds of times. The flowers sometimes arrived in large quantities. They were often brought on request, fruits as well as flowers. A friend of Wallace asked for a sunflower, and one six feet high fell on the table, with a large mass of earth about its roots.

The naturalist formed a committee of the London Dialectical Society in 1869 and witnessed, under test conditions, a variety of telekinetic phenomena. When the possibility of spirit photography was for the first time demonstrated in England in the studio of Frederick A. Hudson, Wallace was anxious to test this new phenomenon. Sitting with Guppy-Volckman he obtained a communication by raps that his mother would try to appear on Hudson's photographic plate.

He sat three times, choosing his own position, and found a male figure with a short sword on the first photographic plate, and a female figure on the two other plates. Reportedly, both of the latter images resembled his mother, and the second plate was unlike any known photograph previously taken of her. Under a magnifying glass, supposedly this second picture disclosed a special feature of his mother's face.

In view of these experiences and the large amount of testimony in the literature of Spiritualism to similar occurrences, Wallace declared it was his opinion that the phenomena of Spiritualism did not require further confirmation. "They are proved, quite as well as any facts are proved in other sciences."

His later attitude was in accordance with this conviction. He never missed an opportunity to test psychic phenomena. He made several attempts to convince the pillars of scientific skepticism and started by inviting W. B. Carpenter to attend some sittings in his own home. Carpenter came one evening. Raps were heard, and these were repeated, sounding, at request, in any part of the table. Carpenter sat still and made no comment. He never returned to Wallace's home.

The same thing happened with his colleague John Tyndall, another scientific skeptic. Wallace had sent Thomas Henry Huxley his paper "The Scientific Aspect of the Supernatural," which was later included in On Miracles and Modern Spiritualism. Huxley responded to Wallace, "I am neither shocked nor disposed to issue a commission of lunacy against you. It may be true, for anything that I know to the contrary, but really I cannot get up interest in the subject." G. H. Lewes accepted an invitation to the Wallace home but never went.

Between 1870 and 1880, Wallace had many opportunities to witness interesting phenomena in the houses of various friends. Through a member of his own family, automatic writing was received in his own home, purporting to come from his deceased brother William and containing many predictions which were later fulfilled.

In 1874, Wallace was asked by the Fortnightly Review to write an article on Spiritualism. It appeared under the title "A Defence of Modern Spiritualism" and also later in On Miracles and Modern Spiritualism, first published in 1875. The volume also included two new chapters on the nature and purport of apparitions. Later editions would be enlarged with accounts of the author's further personal experiences in séances with Katie Cook, W. Haxby, Francis Ward Monck, William Eglinton, and others. During much of the rest of his life, Wallace found himself defending mediums, who were increasingly seen as frauds. His defense would lead to a lively discussion with Eleanor Sidgwick in the Journal of the Society for Psychical Research in 1888.

Wallace defended Henry Slade and gave evidence of the genuineness of his phenomena at the trial in Bow Street Police Court, London, in 1876. In the same year, by casting his vote as president of the anthropological subcommittee of the British Association for the Advancement of Science he made possible the presentation of William F. Barrett's paper on Spiritualism.

In the years 1886–87, during a lecture tour of America, Wallace stayed for some time in three centers of Spiritualism—Boston, Washington and San Francisco. He attended materialization séances with a medium named Ross, and when it was rumored that she was caught in fraud he testified on her behalf in a letter to the Banner of Light.

In Washington, in the company of Elliot Coues, General Lippitt and D. Lyman, Wallace had remarkable experiences with the medium Pierre L. O. A. Keeler, and he sat in San Francisco at an outstanding slate-writing séance with Fred P. Evans in which writing was produced in five different colors and, on his impromptu suggestion, six crayon drawings were precipitated on six pieces of paper placed between a pair of slates, some of the drawings having personal relevance.

In later years, Wallace did not encounter much Spiritualist phenomena but he remained true to his convictions up to the end of his busy life. In 1910, he received the Order of Merit for his scientific researches, however, because of his advocacy of Spiritualism, his scientific contributions were largely ignored and have remained unheralded. He died at Broadstone, Dorset, on November 7, 1913.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Wallace, Alfred Russell. "Correspondence." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 16 (1898).

———. My Life: An Autobiography. 2 vols. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1906.

———. On Miracles and Modern Spiritualism: Three Essays. London: James Burns, 1975.

Wallis, E. W. (1848–1914)

British trance medium, inspirational speaker, healer, lecturer, and author. "Lightheart," the spirit of a South American Indian, claimed responsibility for his mediumistic development. "Standard Bearer," "Leader," and "Tom Joyce" were others of his well-known controls.

Assisted by his wife, also a notable psychic, Wallis did propaganda work for many decades. He assisted Emma H. Britten in starting the journal The Two Worlds in Manchester, which he edited until 1899. In that year he came to London and became editor of Light, a position he held until his death.

As a medium, his wife did not enter deep trance. She could hear the words she spoke but reportedly could not prevent herself from saying them. Her mediumship began at the age of eighteen in 1872. A young Spanish Indian girl, "Veina Goree," was her first control. From 1875 onward, she gave inspirational addresses at the Spiritual Institution founded by James Burns. While speaking there, she was suddenly controlled by "Morambo," an African slave who died in South America.

Wallis produced physical phenomena for many years. His wife was associated with the London Spiritualist Alliance and answered questions on Spiritualism in afternoon meetings.

Walsch, Neal Donald (1943–)

Neal Donald Walsch, the channel for receiving the material in a three-volume best-selling metaphysical book, Conversations with God, was born and raised in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. He grew up in a Roman Catholic family and for a while considered the priesthood. Instead, he went to work at a local radio station and for the next 30 years worked in a variety of jobs that took him around the United States. He also married multiple times.

At the end of the 1980s he was in Ashland, Oregon, and went to work as a talk show host. Fired from one job, he landed a job at KOPE and became known locally as a radio personality under his public name, Bob White. In 1992 he experienced a period of frustration and depression. He was, in part, upset that the success in life that he had hoped for had alluded him. He fell back on a technique that had worked for him in the past. He composed a letter in which he poured out all of his anger in a series of questions. Previously, he would address such letters to individuals with whom he had problems. This time, he decided to direct the letter to God. As he finished the letter, he received an answer. Words formed in his mind and he wrote them down. God asked if Walsch wanted answers to his questions or was merely venting. He responded that he was venting but in fact wanted answers to the questions.

Thus began a dialogue with God that would last over the next three years. Walsch would pose questions and God would reply. Walsch wrote the answers out in longhand. This process has traditionally been called automatic writing, and has more recently been seen as a variety of channeling. As the material was received, an initial batch of it was compiled as volume one of Conversations with God and published in 1995. It quickly became a best-seller and remained on the New York Times list for 91 weeks, and was subsequently translated into 27 languages. Volume two appeared in 1997 and it too reached the best-seller list. Volume three appeared in 1998.

As the response to the volumes grew Walsch founded ReCreation, an organization to put the idea of the books into action. ReCreation now sponsors a full range of lectures, workshops, retreats, and seminars across the United States and abroad. Beginning in the year 2000, it is organizing an annual Empowerment Week that includes a training session for leaders who wish to expand the work. Walsch also created the CWG in Action program to establish local centers for the work.

Walsch resides in Ashland and continues to lead ReCreation, which may be contacted at PMB #1150, 1257 Siskiyou Blvd., Ashland, OR 97520. His Internet site is at http://www.conversationswithgod.org/.

Sources:

Varble, Bill. "Former Rogue Valley Radio Host Finds Success in Conversations with God." Mail Tribune (Ashland, Ore.) (September 14, 1997).

Walsch, Neal Donald. Conversations with God I, II, III. Charlottesville, Va.: Hampton Roads Publishing, 1995, 1997, 1998.

"Walter"

The claimed spirit control of the medium Mina Stinson Crandon, popularly known as "Margery," the name used by those who investigated her early in the twentieth century. "Walter" was identified with Walter Stinson, the medium's brother, who had died in a railway accident in 1911 at the age of 28. He manifested at a séance for the first time during his sister's visit to a clairvoyant. "Walter" furnished proofs of personal identity and took charge of Crandon's sittings.

"Walter" was described as a spirit communicator, active, having a keen sense of humor, showing no pretence of saintliness, and, on occasions, swore and cursed. He was supposedly highly intelligent and full of energy and curiosity. He never pretended to know whether he could accomplish something new, but was always ready to try and was gratified at his own achievements.

Supposedly, "Walter" gave the impression that he himself was learning about conditions while giving a demonstration. "I don't give a damn about convincing the public or anyone. You have no idea why I am here," he said once.

Reportedly, "Walter" often threatened the sitters: "When this is done I am going away, and I shan't come back. My crowd came here because we liked you people, and you kept us here working at this damned thing." However, he never kept this threat. It is believed the satisfaction that his increasing dexterity gave him in producing high-grade psychic phenomena was enough to bind him to the "Margery" circle.

He introduced many new features into the experiments, provided cross correspondences, and gave his fingerprints (see plastics). These fingerprints were later found to be those of another living individual, prompting accusations that Crandon's mediumship was partly or wholly fraudulent.

"Walter" was also manifested at Glen Hamilton's circle in Winnipeg, being the chief control of the medium "Mary M."

Sources:

Bird, J. Malcolm. 'Margery' the Medium. New York: Maynard, 1925.

Tietze, Thomas R. Margery. New York: Harper & Row, 1973.

Walter, W(illiam) Grey (1910–1977)

Physiologist with special interests in the study of the neurophysiological correlates of such paranormal states as hypnosis, sleep, trance, and hallucination. Walter was born on February 19, 1910, in Kansas City, Missouri. He studied at Cambridge University (B.A., 1931, M.A., 1935; D.Sc., 1947). He was director of the Physiological Department at Burden Neurological Institute, Bristol, England, from 1939 onward, founder of the EEG Society, and the editor of EEG Journal. He wrote a number of books, the most famous being The Living Brain (1953), which was translated into several foreign languages. He died May 6, 1977.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Walter, W. Grey. The Living Brain. New York: Norton, 1953.

———. "The Neurophysiological Aspects of Hallucination and Illusory Experience." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research.

Walther, Gerda (1897–1977)

Psychical researcher and author. She was born on March 18, 1897, at Nordrach-Colonie, Baden, Germany. As a child she discovered she could communicate telepathically with both the living and the dead. She studied at Ludwig Maximilians University, Munich, Germany (Ph.D. summa cum laude, 1921).

In 1927, she became scientific secretary to Baron Albert von Schrenck-Notzing, the German psychic researcher, and assisted his investigations of the mediums Willi and Rudi Schneider. After Schrenck-Notzing's death, she edited his manuscripts for publication. She continued her contributions to the field over the years by writing numerous reviews of European books on psychical research for English-language journals. During 1941 in Germany, her research in parapsychology resulted in a short period of imprisonment under the Hitler regime.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Walther, Gerda. Zum anderen Ufer. Remagen: Otto Reichl, 1960.

The Wandering Jew

A medieval German legend that takes several forms. Although writers and details differ, the essential features of the narratives that have been handed down to us are basically the same.

The legend is that as Christ was being dragged on his way to Calvary, he passed the house of a Jew and stopped there, being weary under the weight of his cross. The Jew, however, inspired by the mob, would not allow him to rest there and drove him on. Jesus, looking at him, said, "I shall stand and rest, but thou shalt go till the last day." The Jew was compelled to wander over the Earth until this prophecy was fulfilled.

The legend of the Wandering Jew is regarded as the epic of the Semite people in the Middle Ages. Unfortunately it has often become a vehicle for crude anti-Semitic propaganda and persecution.

In some parts of Germany, the Wandering Jew theme has been identified with the wild huntsman myth, while in several French districts that mythical character is regarded as the wind of the night. This legend was treated in literary fashion by Eugène Sue in his novel Le Juif errant (10 vols., 1844–45) and by the British author George Croly in his novel Salathiel; A Story of the Past, The Present and The Future (1829). Something of the same atmosphere also pervades the legend of the Flying Dutchman.

Sources:

Barring-Gould, Sabine. Curious Myths of the Middle Ages. 1866–68. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1967.

Wang, Chung Yu (1880–1958)

Metallurgist, with interests in various aspects of parapsychology. Born in 1880 in Hong Kong, Wang studied at Queens College and Peiyang University and came to the United States for graduate work at the University of California and Columbia University (M.A. mining and geology). He was a member of the American Society for Psychical Research. He died August 30, 1958, in New York City.

Sources:

Wang, Chung Yu. "China's Unwanted Heritage." Tomorrow (Autumn 1955).

Wannein Nat

A Burmese evil spirit. (See also MYANMAR)

Warcollier, René (1881–1962)

Chemical engineer, author, parapsychologist, and president of the Institut Métapsychique International, Paris (1951–62). He was born on April 8, 1881, at Ormonville-la-Rogue, France. He studied at Ecole Nationale Supérieure de Chimie, Paris (Ch.E., 1903).

He became interested in psychical research, especially in telepathy, in the 1920s and collaborated with such experimenters as Cesar de Vesme and Eugene Osty on investigations of clairvoyance and related phenomena. He oversaw the European end of an experiment in telepathy jointly conducted with Gardner Murphy. He was affiliated with the Institut Métapsychique, served as its treasurer (1929–38), and edited the Revue Métapsychique for two years (1938–40) until the beginning of World War II. He died May 23, 1962, in Paris, France.

Sources:

Warcollier, René. Experimental Telepathy. London: George Allen & Unwin, 1939. Reprint, New York: Arno Press, 1975.

———. Experiments in Telepathy. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1938.

———. "Fifty Years of Telepathy." Tomorrow (summer 1961).

———. Mind to Mind. New York: Collier Books, 1963.

Warcollier, René, and Edmond Duchatel. Les Miracles de la Volonté (Miracles of the Will). N.p., 1912.

Ward, Arthur Henry (Sarsfield) (1883–1959)

Author who wrote under the pseudonym "Sax Rohmer" and created the celebrated fictional character Dr. Fu-Manchu. Ward was also a student of the occult. Born of Irish Catholic parents in Birmingham, England, on February 15, 1883, Ward had no formal schooling until the age of nine, when he attended a day school in London. As a youth, Ward stopped attending Mass and became an agnostic. His first job was as a bank clerk in London, after which he worked briefly as a newspaper reporter. He started writing short stories at the age of twenty and first used the pseudonym "Sax Rohmer" in 1912. He also wrote some successful songs for music hall comedians George Robey and Little Tich.

His famous character Fu-Manchu was based on reports of a Chinese master criminal operating an international opium racket, and the atmosphere of Limehouse, London's Chinatown district, provided local color. The first Fu-Manchu book was published in 1913, but Rohmer did not immediately settle down to developing his character. Instead, he spent much time on his nonfiction study The Romance of Sorcery (first published London, 1914; E. P. Dutton, 1915). The book brought a letter from illusionist Harry Houdini, who soon afterward became a friend.

Rohmer is said to have become a member of the Hermetic society the Golden Dawn and may also have belonged to a Rosicrucian order. However, his occult interests were eventually overshadowed by the success of his Fu-Manchu books. In 1929, Paramount Pictures first brought the character to the screen with The Mysterious Dr. Fu-Manchu, starring Warner Oland and Jean Arthur. Rohmer died June 1, 1959.

Sources:

Rohmer, Sax. The Romance of Sorcery. London, 1914. Reprint, New York: E. P. Dutton, 1915. Reprint, New York: Causeway, 1973.

Warminster UFO News

Monthly publication through the 1970s of the British UFO Society, dealing with news and sightings in the Warminster district of Britain, where hundreds of local residents have reported UFO phenomena since the 1960s.

Warner, Abby

An illiterate American orphan girl who was instrumental in arousing lively interest in Spiritualism in Ohio soon after the phenomenon of the Rochester Rappings. Mrs. Kellogg of Massillon, in whose house Warner performed domestic services, discovered that raps were produced in the girl's presence. Soon she was able to move into a trance state, and the uneducated girl, who at eighteen could only read printed characters, wrote with both hands at the same time on different subjects, while a third communication was spelled out by raps.

Reports of the séances began to be widely circulated. Abel Underhill, a physician, took the girl into his family for medical treatment and wrote her history. The occurrences at St. Timothy's Church on Christmas Eve, 1851, put her in the limelight. Supposedly, unusually powerful raps resounded in the church in her presence and attracted the attention of the whole assembly. The minister asked that "those knockings might cease." Instead, they increased in vehemence.

Warner was arrested on a charge of disturbing a religious meeting and brought before a public tribunal. The trial commenced on December 27 and lasted for three days. As "not a single witness could be found who could swear that they perceived the slightest movement in the accused party; on the contrary, when closely examined, those who professed to have scrutinized the action of the spirit rapper narrowly were compelled to admit that they could not detect the least perceptible motion, even of her dress, at the times when the knocks were most numerous and emphatic," the defendant was discharged.

Following the acquittal, Underhill announced an investigation by a selected committee, under stringent test conditions, of the medium's physical and mental phenomena. Four séances were held. The committee believed the phenomena wholly unaccountable and genuine evidences of an occult and intelligent force outside the medium.

Warner, Lucien (Hynes) (1900–1963)

Psychologist and opinion analyst who conducted surveys in parapsychology. He was born on September 9, 1900, at Irvington, New York. He studied at Oberlin College (B.A., 1922) and Columbia University (Ph.D., 1927). After graduation he held a variety of research positions prior to becoming a professor of biology and psychology at Claremont Men's College and Graduate School, Claremont, California, in 1948. He is most remembered in parapsychological circles for the 1938, 1952, and 1955 surveys he conducted among psychologists to ascertain attitudes to extrasensory perception. His reports were published in the Journal of Parapsychology (vol.2, 1938; vol.16, 1952; vol.19, 1955). He died in 1963 in Las Vegas, Nevada.

Wartime Occult Phenomena (World War I)

The emergence of Spiritualism heightened interest in the separations and deaths caused by war. Thus it was not surprising that a number of stories of supernatural events should have crystallized around the international circumstances of World War I. Perhaps the most striking of these was the alleged vision of the Angels of Mons. The first account was the story in the London Evening News of September 14, 1915, by writer Arthur Machen describing a statement by an officer who had been in the retreat from Mons. This officer saw a large body of horsemen who later vanished. Machen suggested that they were the spirits of the English bowmen who had fought at Agincourt.

Although this story was fiction, it stimulated corroborative reports of phantom armies. The most significant of these were repeated by a Red Cross nurse, Phylis Campbell, who claimed to have heard several different stories of phantom soldiers. In his book On the Side of the Angels (1915), Harold Begbie repeated the claims that soldiers saw a vision of angels during the retreat from Mons and gives the narrative of a soldier, who states that an officer came up to him "in a state of great anxiety" and pointed out to him a ". . . strange light which seemed to be quite distinctly outlined and was not a reflection of the moon, nor were there any clouds in the neighbourhood. The light became brighter and I could see quite distinctly three shapes, one in the centre having what looked like outspread wings. The other two were not so large, but were quite plainly distinct from the centre one. They appeared to have a long, loose-hanging garment of a golden tint and they were above the German line facing us. We stood watching them for about three-quarters of an hour."

All the men in the battalion who saw this, with the exception of five, were killed. Begbie went on to say that a nurse told him that a dying soldier spoke to her of the reluctance of the Germans to attack the British line, "because of the thousands of troops behind us." It is believed this man had heard these claims from German prisoners and believed in the ghostly nature of those supporting hosts.

Ralph Shirley published a pamphlet titled Prophecies and Omens of the Great War (1914; 1915) dealing with various oracular utterances on the struggle.

Stories were also common in the early period of the war regarding the appearance of saintly and protective figures resembling the patrons of the several allied countries. Thus the English were convinced that in certain engagements they had seen the figure of Saint George mounted on a white charger and the French were equally sure that the figure in question was either Saint Denis or Joan of Arc. Wounded men in base hospitals asked for medallions or coins on which the likenesses of these saints were impressed in order to verify the statements they made.

Sources:

Brown, Raymond Lemment. The Phantom Soldiers. New York: Drake, 1975.

Machen, Arthur. The Angels of Mons: The Bowman and Other Legends. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1915.

Stein, Gordon. Encyclopedia of Hoaxes. Detroit: Gale Research, 1993.

Warts

Small skin lesions on face, fingers, or elbows, and sometimes on the genitals, caused by a virus, as distinct from moles, which are birthmarks. The general medical term for a wart is verruca, but warts on the genitals or around the anus are known as condylomae, or venereal warts.

Warts often appear and disappear without any obvious cause, and this characteristic tended to reinforce belief in many old folk cures or wart-charming. In eastern Massachusetts, central New York, and parts of England, it used to be believed that warts could be removed by rubbing them with spittle. Other widespread superstitions about warts:

To cure warts, wash hands in the moon's rays in a dry metal basin, saying:

I wash my hands in this thy dish,
O man in the moon, do grant my wish
And come and take away this!

Water taken from a gravestone and rubbed on warts will cure them.

Striking warts with an undertaker's hammer will cure them.

To remove warts from the hand, watch for a funeral procession to pass and as it goes by, say secretly: "I do sincerely hope that these warts will pass off my hands as that body decays in the ground."

If a person steals an egg and secretly buries it in the ground, his or her warts will disappear when the egg decays.

Pick up an old marrow bone, touch it to your warts, walk off, throw it behind you, and don't look back.

If you take as many pins as you have warts and give them to someone else, your warts will be transferred to the other person.

Take as many pebbles as you have warts and touch each wart with a pebble, then wrap the stones in cloth or paper and throw them away in the roadway. Whoever picks up the parcel of pebbles will get your warts, and you will lose them.

Take a piece of string and tie as many knots in it as there are warts and lay the string under a stone. Whoever treads on the stone will be attached to the warts.

Such superstitions are often very ancient. Pliny (23–79 C.E.) recommended that warts be touched with chick peas on the first day of the moon, and that the peas then be wrapped in cloth and thrown away behind you. The pebble charm was known to Marcellus of Bordeaux in the fourth century, and it is cited in his book De Mendicamentis.

Apart from natural remission, it is possible that many wart cures worked through a process analagous to selfhypnosis. Other wart remedies were of a pseudomedical nature, such as rubbing warts with milkweed, or the fluid from grasshoppers, or the fresh blood of mice. Modern medical remedies involve treating warts with a substance that dissolves the hard layer and cauterizes the remainder, which is then scraped off.

During the witchcraft manias of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, warts and moles were considered "devil's marks" if they did not bleed when pricked.

Washington Research Center and Parapsychology Group

The Washington Research Center and Parapsychology Group was founded in 1982 by Russian-American parapsychologist Larissa Vilenskaya (b. 1948). Vilenskaya had been involved in parapsychological research throughout the 1970s at the Research Institute of General and Pedagogical Psychology of the USSR Academy of Sciences. She moved to the United States in 1981. The center published a journal, Psi Research, which made an effort at informing an English-speaking audience of research being conducted in Russia, Eastern Europe, and China.

The center also became identified with the firewalking movement. Vilenskaya became interested in firewalking and conducted numerous events teaching attendees to experiment with the practice. Last known address: 484B Washington St. #317, San Francisco, CA 93940.

Wasserman, Gerhard Dietrich (1919–)

University lecturer in applied mathematics who experimented in the field of parapsychology. Wasserman was born December 12, 1919, at Leipzig, Germany. He studied at Queen Mary College, University of London (B.Sc. hons. math. 1942, Ph.D. quantum mechanics, 1946). In 1948 he began a tenure as an instructor in applied mathematics at King's College Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Durham University.

In the field of parapsychology he has taken special interest in the construction of theoretical models for psi phenomena. His article "An Outline of a Field Theory of Organismic Form and Behavior" was published in a Ciba Foundation symposium on extrasensory perception.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Wasson, R(obert) Gordon (1898–1986)

Journalist and writer who argued for "ethno-mycology," the claimed relationship of wild mushrooms (especially hallucinogenic varieties) to various human cultures throughout history. Wasson was born on September 22, 1898, at Great Falls, Montana. He studied at the Columbia School of Journalism, and in 1926 he married Valentina Pavlovna Guercken, who shared his research in ethno-mycology.

Wasson worked as a reporter through the 1920s before becoming a prominent banker for the Guaranty Company of New York (1928–34) and later the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company. In the 1950s Wasson and his wife conducted field research in Mexico, studying firsthand the sacred mushroom ceremonies of the Mazatec Indians. Their record album Mushroom Ceremony of the Mazatec Indians of Mexico (Folkways Records, New York, 1957) was the first documented recording of its kind. Wasson's researches influenced the psychedelic revolution of the 1960s.

Wasson concluded that the "soma" mentioned in the literature of ancient India was in fact the amanita muscaria mushroom. He suggested that Hindu mysticism arose from its priests' intoxication from this mushroom, considered to be the elixir of immortality. This line of speculation was followed up by John M. Allegro in his book The Sacred Mushroom and the Cross (1970), which suggested the crucifixion story of Jesus was a myth, symbolic of the ecstasy of a drug cult. More recently it has been revived approvingly in the journal ReVision (vol. 10, no. 4, Spring 1988), together with the suggestion that amaita muscaria was the forbidden fruit from the tree in the Garden of Eden in the Old Testament story. Wasson's research found little approval in the scholarly world. He died December 23, 1986.

Sources:

Wasson, R. Gordon. Persephone's Quest: Entheogens and the Origins of Religion. New Haven: Yale University Press, 1986.

———. Soma: Divine Mushrooms of Immortality. The Hague: Mouton, 1968. Reprint, New York: Harcourt Brace, 1971.

———. The Wondrous Mushroom: Mycolatry in MesoAmerica. New York: McGraw, 1980.

Wasson, R. Gordon, and Valentina Pavlovna Wasson. Mushrooms, Russia, and History. New York: Pantheon, 1957.

Waterfall Astrological Directory

An annual reference work for individuals involved in astrology formerly published by Tony Waterfall of Vancouver, British Columbia.

Watkins, Geoffrey (1896–1981)

Proprietor and later director of Watkins Book Shop, a major London bookstore dealing in the literature (both new and used) of the occult, alternative religous traditions, and esoteric philosophy since 1894, when Watkins' father John M. Watkins founded the company at the instigation of Theosophist Helena Petrovna Blavatsky. The bookshop has long been a meeting place for leading personalities in such subjects as metaphysics, mystical and hermetic studies, oriental and comparative religion, parapsychology, astrology, and the occult. John Watkins was a close friend of Blavatsky, who was cofounder of the Theosophical Society. Carl G. Jung, Aldous Huxley, William Butler Yeats, and magician Aleister Crowley were frequent visitors to the shop. Crowley was reputed to have caused thousands of books in the store to vanish and reappear by his occult powers, but, like other stories about Crowley and invisibility, this apocryphal story retains its element of tongue-in-cheek humor.

Watkins, who carried on his father's tradition in the bookshop, was born June 7, 1896. He attended a private school in Heidelberg, Germany. Known to close friends as "Wattie" or "Nigel," he was employed by British Intelligence in both World Wars. In World War I, his duties included interrogation of German officers who were prisoners of war. In World War II, he was concerned with the distribution of top-secret documents to appropriate government departments.

One of his closest friends was Christmas Humphreys, who was president of the Buddhist Society for many years and author of numerous books on Buddhism and Eastern philosophy. Humphreys acknowledged Watkins' valuable assistance in the preface to his book Concentration and Meditation (1935).

Watkins took over running the bookshop when his father became blind. During his tenure running the bookshop international visitors most remembered him as a spiritual guide rather than a bookseller. Though specializing in selling occult books, he disliked the word "occultism" because of its perjorative connotations. His own special interests lay elsewhere, in depth psychology and the spiritual wisdom commonly called the "perennial philosophy," a term popularized by Aldous Huxley in his book of that name.

Kathleen Raine stated in an obituary in Temonos (no.2, 1982):

"Geoffrey Watkins was far more than a bookseller; indeed he was perhaps the only bookseller who made a practice of advising customers (many of whom were, or became, his friends) against purchasing books which he thought unsuitable for their particular interests, or too valuable to be entrusted to ignorant hands. . . . As to his courtesy, he welcomed his customers as his guests, assuming that we were seekers for wisdom, and meeting each of us at the level of our learning (or our ignorance) as he was well able to do. He seemed always to have time to listen. When we left, he saw us to the door of his shop like a courteous host."

Repotedly, Watkins had an encyclopedic knowledge of books and was well-informed on all aspects of the groups, societies, and individuals in the fields of mysticism and occultism. He gave valuable information to many individuals who later became famous. Kathleen Raine, who has since published many works of poetry, literary criticism, and philosophy, acknowledged the help Watkins gave her in her special studies on Thomas Taylor the Platonist. Alan Watts also paid tribute in his autobiography In My Own Way (1972):

"Nigel [Geoffrey Watkins] runs the most magical bookshop in the world, and is the most unobstrusively enlightened person

I have ever known. . . . Nigel not only became my bibliographer on Buddhism, comparative religion, and mysticism, but also my most trusted adviser on the various gurus, pandits, and psychotherapists then flourishing in London. . . . In the Watkins bookshop one would expect at any moment, to come across a Mahatma or a high Lama visiting England on a secret mission to feel out academically accredited professors. Instead of giving lectures and holding seminars, he simply tells you what to read. . . . He never tries to convert anyone to a system. He is what the Japanese would call a buji-nin; a man without affectations, who has also compassion and clarity of mind."

With the death of Watkins, many regular customers at the bookshop felt they had lost a true friend and wise guide. Meanwhile, the bookshop started by his father continues to flourish.

Watkins Book Shop

Long established British bookshop specializing in occultism, mysticism, comparative religion, parapsychology, esoteric psychology, and related topics, founded by John M. Watkins in 1894. Watkins was a friend of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and other leading occult figures of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The shop in Cecil Court, Charing Cross Road, London, was a meeting place for such famous and varied individuals as A. E. Waite, William Butler Yeats and Aleister Crowley. Watkins also published texts in the fields of occultism and mysticism. After his death, the business was carried on by his son Geoffrey Watkins (1896–1981).

All through the prewar occult boom of the 1920s and 1930s and the more recent occult explosion of the 1960s, the Watkins Book Shop has been a central focus of occultism, with a strong emphasis on mysticism and Eastern religion. After the death of Watkins, the company went through various changes of title, including Stuart & Watkins (associated with Stuart & Robinson), but retained its essential character, as familiar to British students of occultism and mysticism as the Weiser Bookshop in New York.

In April 1984, the company became firmly linked with the Weiser Bookshop through the formation of Watkins Books Ltd., with directors Donald Weiser and Henry Suzuki of Samuel Weiser, Inc., and Valerie Chris of Robert Chris Bookseller (also in Cecil Court). Formerly a general literary book shop, Robert Chris is now a leading supplier of books on health and alternative medicine. Both Weiser and Watkins remain important book shops but with the growth of the field, the proliferation of alternative bookshops, and the passing of shops like Watkins into the hands of other owners, they have lost their unique place in the occult/alternative religious community.

The Watseka Wonder

A story told in a pamphlet by physician E. W. Stevens, The Watseka Wonder, which details a most intriguing case of continued spirit control. In 1865, at the age of nineteen, a girl named Mary Roff who was mentally ill died in Watseka, Illinois. Thirteen years later, another Watseka girl, Lurancy Vennum, almost a stranger to the Roff family, became similarly afflicted. Stevens diagnosed her case as an obsession. In the hypnotic state, Vennum confirmed the diagnosis.

Stevens suggested that she try to induce a good spirit to control her. She answered that several spirits were about who would be willing. "There is one who was called Mary Roff." The father of Mary Roff was present, and he approved the idea. "Mary Roff" was asked to control Vennum. Supposedly she did so.

Reportedly, on February 1, 1878, she possessed Lurancy's body and remained in possession for 16 weeks in an almost unbroken continuity. As soon as she appeared, she took over Vennum's body and behaved like Mary Roff. She did not know Vennum's parents, went "home," and recognized every old object in the Roff house. She continued where she had left off over 13 years before. She exhibited paranormal faculties during this time, gave proofs of clairvoyance, made predictions, had out-of-body experiences in trance, and described her astral journeys on her return to consciousness.

On May 21, 1878, she supposedly left in tears from her Roff parents and all of her friends, fell into trance, and awoke as Lurancy Vennum again. The new Vennum was mentally and physically reestablished. It is believed Vennum had been watched over for a time by "Mary Roff," who came back occasionally in trance. Three and a half years later, Vennum married and when her first baby came "Mary Roff" put her into trance to save her the pains of childbirth. "Mary Roff" never appeared to anyone at Watseka, except through Vennum's body. She never materialized independently.

The psychical researcher Richard Hodgson investigated the case on behalf of the American Society for Psychical Research and concluded:

"I have no doubt that the incidents occurred substantially as described in the narrative by Dr. Stevens, and in my view the only other interpretation of the case—besides the spiritistic—that seems at all plausible, is that which has been put forward as the alternative to the spiritistic theory to account for the trance communications of Mrs. Piper, and similar cases, viz., secondary personality with supernormal powers. It would be difficult to disprove this hypothesis in the case of the Watseka Wonder, owing to the comparative meagreness of the record and the probable abundance of 'suggestion' in the environment, and any conclusion that we may reach would probably be determined largely by our convictions concerning other cases. My personal opinion is that the 'Watseka Wonder' case belongs in the main manifestations to the spiritistic category."

The evidence obtained by Hodgson was published in the Religio-Philosophical Journal (Chicago, December 20, 1890), and his account was verified by J. Bundy, the Religio-Philosophical Journal's editor. A detailed report also appeared in The Spiritualist (September & October 1878).

Sources:

Anderson, Rodger J. "The Watseka Wonder: A Critical Reevaluation." Theta 8, no. 4 (1980).

Myers, F. W. H. Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death. 2 vols. London: Longmans, Green, 1903.

Stevens, E. W. The Watseka Wonder. Chicago, 1879.

Watson, Lyall (1939–)

Zoologist and archaeologist whose book Supernature attempted to bridge the gap between science and the occult. Watson was born April 12, 1939, in Johannesburg, South Africa. He was educated at the University of Witwatersrand (B.S., 1958), the University of Natal (M.S., 1959), and the University of London, England (Ph.D., 1963). Through the 1960s he was director of the Zoological Gardens of Johannesburg, South Africa (1964–65), produced documentary films for the British Broadcasting Corporation, London (1966–67), and was an expedition leader and researcher in Antarctica, the Amazon River area, Seychelles, and Indonesia (1968–72). In 1967 he founded the life science consultancy Biologic of London, and in the 1970s he wrote a number of books. Three further books followed themes first developed in Supernature: The Romeo Error (1974), Gifts of Unknown Things (1976), and Lifetide: The Biology of The Unconscious (1979).

Lifetide had an important effect within the emerging New Age movement. In two pages it told the story of four scientists studying monkeys in islands off the coast of Japan. The scientists left food for the monkeys. In 1953 they observed an older monkey wash the sand and grit from a potato. She then seemed to teach the other monkeys the same procedure. Gradualy the practice spread to the other monkeys in the group. Watson stated:

"In the autumn of that year [1958] an unspecified number of monkeys on [the island of] Kosima were washing sweet potatoes in the sea. . . . Let us say, for argument's sake, that the number of monkeys was ninety-nine and that at eleven o'clock on Tuesday morning one further convert was added to the fold in the usual way. But the addition of the hundreth monkey apparently carried the number across some sort of threshold, pushing it through a kind of critical mass, because by that evening almost everyone was doing it. Not only that, but the habit seems to have jumped natural barriers and to have appeared spontaneously, like glycerine crystals in sealed laboratory jars, in colonies on other islands and on the mainland in a troupe of Takasakiyama."

What became known as the "hundreth monkey" myth would be seized upon by New Age spokespersons who were seeking to explain to people how relatively small groups would be capable of bringing New Age consciousness to a public generally apathetic to their concerns. It was believed if only a critical number of people accepted the consciousness, it would, as if by magic or atomic explosion, spread suddenly to everyone.

Given the jumps in such an argument, Watson was soon attacked on the factual basis of the story. Psychologist Maureen O'Hara and psychic-critic Ron Amundson both challenged the story and forced Watson to admit that it was in essence fiction. By that time, however, it had become a widely discussed issue in the New Age movement and author Ken Keyes had printed and distributed over 300,000 copies of a book, The Hundreth Monkey (1982).

Sources:

Keyes, Ken. The Hundreth Monkey. Coos Bay, Ore.: Vision Books, 1982.

Melton, J. Gordon. New Age Encyclopedia. Detroit: Gale Research, 1990.

Watson, Lyall. Dark Nature: A Natural History of Evil. New York: HarperCollins, 1995.

———. Gifts of Unknown Things. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1976.

———. Lifetide: The Biology of The Unconscious. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1979.

———. The Romeo Error: A Matter of Life and Death. Garden City, N.Y.: Anchor Press, 1975.

———. Supernature. Garden City, N.Y.: Anchor Press, 1973.

Watson, Thomas (1898–1985)

Thomas Watson, a pioneer spiritual church leader and medium, was raised in New Orleans and attended Xavier University, a school founded to serve the African American community, and Texas Christian University. He became a schoolteacher after graduation. He was in New Orleans at the time Leafy Anderson brought the spiritual movement to the city. He joined Anderson's Eternal Life Christian Spiritual Association and emerged as a leader. He left the association in 1929, two years after Anderson's death, and founded an independent congregation, St. Joseph Helping Hand Church in Algiers, a New Orleans suburb.

Over the next five years similar congregations were founded and affiliated with Watson's work. These were formally organized into the St. Joseph Helping Hand Missionary Association in 1934. Following Anderson's emphasis, the new association retained a strong attachment to traditional Christian affirmations, unlike other Spiritual churches, which had discarded most Christian distinctions. The next year the association reorganized into the Divine Spiritual Churches of the Southwest. This church adopted a strong hierarchial structure and named Watson as its senior bishop. Bessie S. Johnson was named as his junior bishop. During the late 1930s Watson reconsidered his opinions on women ministers, and in 1940 he demoted Smith to Reverend Mother Superior, a non-ministerial position common in many black churches. The change led to a schism, and those members who supported the women pastors and mediums left.

In 1942 Watson led his church into a merger with the Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ to form the United Spiritual Churches of Christ. Shortly after the merger, the leader of the Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ, William Taylor, died, and Watson was named his successor. However, he immediately ran into conflict with Clarence Cobbs, a prominent medium from Chicago. The conflict led to a schism in 1945. Watson departed with his following and organized the United Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ. He led the churches until his death on November 12, 1985, when he was succeeded by his son, Bishop Aubrey Watson.

Sources:

Jacobs, Claude F., and Andrew J. Kaslow. The Spiritual Churches of New Orleans: Origins, Beliefs, and Rituals of an African American Religion. Knoxville: University of Tennessee Press, 1991.

Murphy, Larry G., J. Gordon Melton, and Gary L. Ward. Encyclopedia of African American Religions. New York: Garland Publishing, 1993.

Watts, Alan (Wilson) (1915–1973)

British-born American philosopher, teacher of Zen Buddhism, and pioneer popularizer of Eastern philosophy in the United States. Watts was born January 6, 1915, in Chislehurst, Kent, England. He came to the United States in 1938, and he was naturalized in 1943. The same year he moved to the United States he married the daughter of Ruth Fuller Everett (who was involved with the First Zen Institute of America). Even as a youth he had been interested in Eastern religions in general and Zen Buddhism in particular. However, Watts studied for the priesthood and after completing his course at Seabury-Western Theological Seminary, he was ordained in the Episcopal Church in 1944. He remained in Evanston, Illinois, and pursued a master of sacred theology degree (1948) at Seabury while serving as a chaplain at Northwestern University (adjacent to the Seabury campus) for six years (1944–50).

In 1950 Watts divorced, resigned from the priesthood, and entered a year of seclusion. In 1951 he moved to California as an instructor at the American Academy of Asian Studies (1951–57). He gained some degree of fame in 1957 with the positive response to his book, The Way of Zen (1957), which became a book introducing Zen to a public eager for Eastern wisdom. Over the next fifteen years he wrote numerous books presenting his personal appropriation of Buddhism. As a lecturer, from 1956 onward he traveled to universities across the continent. He directed the Eastern Wisdom and Modern Life series on station KQED, San Francisco (1959–60).

In 1962 some of those who had gathered around him as students founded the Society for Comparative Philosophy as a vehicle for his teaching. He died November 16, 1973.

Sources:

Melton, J. Gordon. Religious Leaders of America. Detroit: Gale Research, 1991.

Stuart, David. Alan Watts. Radnor, Pa.: Chilton Book, 1976.

Watts, Alan. The Book on the Taboo Against Knowing Who You Are. New York: Vintage Books, 1966.

———. The Early Writings of Alan Watts. Edited by John Snelling. Berkeley, Calif.: Celestial Arts, 1987.

———. The Essential Alan Watts. Berkeley, Calif.: Celestial Arts, 1977.

———. In My Own Way: An Autobiography, 1915–1945. New York: Pantheon Books, 1972.

———. Psychotherapy, East and West. New York: Ballantine Books, 1961.

———. The Spirit of Zen. New York: Grove Press, 1958.

———. The Way of Zen. New York: Pantheon Books, 1968.

Wayland Smith

A character in German mythological romance, father of Weltich, whom he trained in the art of warfare and sent to the Court of Dietrich in Bern. Wayland Smith gave the sword Miming to Weltich and told him of a mermaid to whom he was to apply when in difficulty.

Wayland Smith is also referred to in the Sigfried story as in company with another metalsmith named Mimi when Sigfried joins the smithy. His workmanship is praised in the Beowulf saga and he is mentioned there and elsewhere as a maker of impregnable armor. He is the supernatural smith of the Teutonic peoples and comparable to the gods Vulcan and Hephaistos in Roman and Greek mythology.

Weatherhead, Leslie (Dixon) (1893–1976)

British Methodist minister interested in aspects of parapsychology. Weatherhead was born on October 14, 1893, in London. He studied at the University of Manchester (M.A., 1926) and Richmond College, and he later received his doctorate at the University of London (1950). He served as a chaplain to British troops during World War I, ministered at the English Church in Madras, India, after the war (1918–22), and served several appointments prior to becoming the pastor of City Temple, the large Methodist church in London, in 1936.

Weatherhead wrote a number of notable books over the years, including a frequently reprinted early text on God and the problem of evil. As an adult, he became interested in psychic phenomena and wrote a series of books that ran from a pioneering text in pastoral psychology to more controversial texts within the Christian community on such topics as reincarnation. He died January 5, 1976.

Sources:

Weatherhead, Leslie. After Death. London: J. Clarke, 1923.

———. Psychology, Religion, and Healing. Rev. ed. London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1952.

———. The Resurrection of Christ in the Light of Modern Science and Psychical Research. London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1959.

Webb, James (C. N.) (1946–1980)

Scottish author who conducted historical surveys of the occult. Webb was born in 1946 in Edinburgh, Scotland. He was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge University. He spent some years as a ghostwriter, television producer and trainer, and schoolmaster, but in 1969 became a full-time writer.

He was advisory editor of The Occult, a series of thirty-three reprints chosen to illustrate the origins and development of modern occultism, as well as Perspectives in Psychical Research, a series of 34 books (both for Arno Press, New York, 1976) and contributed to Man, Myth and Magic (Marshall Cavendish, 1970), and Encyclopedia of the Unexplained (McGraw-Hill, 1974).

Webb's major contribution, however, came from the special study he conducted of the historical and cultural background of Western occultism, with special reference to its relationship with extremist political movements. This research resulted in three major books: The Occult Underground (1974; British title The Flight from Reason, 1971), The Occult Establishment (1976), and The Harmonious Circle (1980). Along the way he also edited several volumes, including The Quest Anthology (1976), The Subliminal Consciousness (selections from writings by Frederic W. H. Myers in Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, London, 1976), and The Mediums and the Conjurers (anthology of writings by J. N. Maskelyne, G. Smith-Buck, and George Sexton, 1976).

The scholarly surveys by Webb of the ideas and personalities preceding the occult revival of the 1960s and 1970s constitute an overview of the problem of the twentieth century as a battleground between reason and unreason. He started his writings with a somewhat skeptical viewpoint, but in the course of time experienced unusual visions and insights, sometimes associated with hallucinations and nervous breakdowns. He died May 9, 1980, in Scotland.

Sources:

Collin-Smith, Joyce. "A Precognitive Dream: James Webb." Light (summer 1982).

Webb, James. The Harmonious Circle. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1980.

———. The Occult Establishment. LaSalle, Ill.: Open Court Press, 1976.

———. The Occult Underground. LaSalle, Ill.: Open Court Press, 1974. Reprinted as The Flight from Reason. 1971.

Wilson, Colin. "James Webb and the Occult." Light (summer 1982).

Webber, Jack (1907–1940)

Jack Webber was a prominent physical medium who in his few years greatly impressed his fellow Spiritualists with his abilities. Webber lacked formal education and had been a miner in Wales who was brought to Spiritualism by his wife. He attended a home circle and discovered his own mediumistic abilities. He acquired several spirit controls, the most famous being an Irish spirit named Paddy. He began with table tipping and soon afterwards experienced the levitation of objects, including the famous trumpets which spirits reportedly used as a megaphone-like device. He also became a healer. As he developed, those attending his seances reported hearing spirit voices, both coming through the trumpets and independent of them. They also saw objects move and levitate.

Through the 1930s Webber traveled at an increasing pace and during the last two years of the decade was widely heralded in the Spiritualist press for the phenomena he produced. While not formally investigated, he was the object of attention of several skeptical journalists who reported favorably on what they had witnessed. He worked in a darkened room, but without a cabinet. He was frequently tied to his chair with wire. Among his more spectacular feats was the production of ectoplasm in the form of light rods that were used to levitate objects and the movement of objects from distant places ostensibly through solid walls. At one point a recording was made of Paddy and of a second spirit guide singing a duet.

While Webber was touted in the Spiritualist press and many leading Spiritualists from Maurice Barbanell to Harry Edwards voiced their support of his work, skeptics accused him of fraud, and today most, even in the larger psychic community, would deny that the abilities Webber reportedly demonstrated exist. Though never exposed as a fraud, his career has to be seen in the light of the many mediums caught in fraud doing exactly the same acts attributed to Webber.

Webber died in 1940 at the age of 33. Within weeks, various mediums, including Bertha Harris and Harold Evans, reported that they had heard from him from the spirit world. Harry Edwards penned his biography.

Sources:

Barbanell, Maurice. This Is Spiritualism. London: Spiritualist Press, 1959.

Edwards, Harry. The Mediumship of Jack Webber. London: Rider & Co., 1940.

Weeping Statues

Through the 1980s and 1990s, a profusion of reports of statues and icons weeping tears emanated from Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox settings. These reports came from around the world, including Asia and Africa. One of the more spectacular reports came from an icon at St. George's Antiochean Orthodox Church in Cicero, Illinois, a suburb of Chicago. In the spring of 1994, tears began to flow from an icon picturing the Virgin Mary and the baby Jesus. The tears originated at the eyes of the Virgin. As word spread concerning the occurrence, thousands of people came to see the phenomenon. Ultimately, Metropolitan Philip, the head of the Antiochean Church, visited and pronounced the phenomenon miraculous.

While the number of reports of weeping statues and icons have multiplied in the last decades of the twentieth century, in part a function of media interest, similar events have been recorded since the sixteenth century. An account has survived from 1527 of a statue that wept just prior to the sacking of Rome. In 1719, a statue of St. Lucy wept in the town of Syracuse on the island of Sicily. Syracuse appears to be the originating point of modern accounts of weeping statues as it was the site in 1953 of a widely reported incident. The eyes of a statue of the Virgin Mary given to a newly wedded couple began to produce a substance which upon analysis proved to be the same as human tears. The story of the statue was widely disseminated through Roman Catholic circles. The incident has been analyzed from both a parapsychological perspective (as a poltergeist phenomenon) and a skeptical (as a hoax) viewpoint.

Possibly the most spectacular modern incident of a weeping statue occurrence is Akita, Japan, where from 1975 to 1981, a statue of the Virgin Mary was seen to weep on more than 100 separate occasions. Sister Agnes, a nun, also experienced the stigmata, three apparitions of the Virgin Mary, and locutions from an angelic being. The statue not only wept, but had previously sweated what upon analysis proved to be human sweat, and bled human blood. The incident in Akita demonstrated the close connection between weeping statues and icons and bleeding statues and icons. Some of the reports of weeping icons concern the weeping of blood, the production of a red substance coming from the eyes.

In 1996, an icon on the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem, Israel, began to weep tears of blood, a phenomenon seen by many of both Christian and Muslim persuasion. In this case, the eyes on the icon were also reported to have winked at the people viewing it. One skeptical journalist, Stephanie Nolen, a Canadian and lapsed Catholic, reported seeing both the red tears and the wink.

Investigators of such incidents have generally sought initially to rule out the obvious, hoaxes and natural phenomena (for example, a leak above the statue or icon). Enough hoaxes have been uncovered, even among people with reputations for piety and honesty, that an extended search for mundane explanations and the hesitancy of church officials to promote phenomena such as weeping statues except in the rarest of cases is justified. Once obvious natural causes are ruled out, a search is launched for various mundane explanations such as might be provided by the particular substance from which the weeping object was made. Beyond the natural explanation, parapsychologists have offered psychic explanations and skeptics have reached for any possible explanation, in the end suggesting hoaxing as the most widespread cause. Unfortunately, in most cases, especially from Third World countries, no adequate investigation has been done.

Sources:

Nickell, Joe. Looking for a Miracle. Amherst, N.Y.: Prometheus Press, 1998.

Rogo, Scott. Miracles: A Parascientific Inquiry into Wondrous Phenomena. New York: Dial Press, 1982.

Wege—Zur Synthese von Natur und Mensch (Magazine)

A bimonthly German-language, New Age publication. Each issue included articles, a program of mystical/spiritual activities in the Frankfurt area, and listings of New Age organizations. Last known address: Aviva, Kobachstr. 12, D-6000 Frankfurt 50 FN, Germany.

Weiant, C(larence) W(olsey) (1897–1986)

Anthropologist and chiropractor with interests in parapsychology. Weiant was born on November 30, 1987, at West Haverstraw, New York. He studied at the School of General Studies, Columbia University (B.S., 1937), pursued graduate work in 1937 at the Instituto de Filosofia y Letras, Mexico City, and finished a doctorate at Columbia University (1943). He lectured in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Hunter College, New York (1943–51). He became a chiropractor and was associated with the Chiropractic Institute of New York. He retired as its dean in 1963.

Weiant was interested in clairvoyance, mediumship, reincarnation, and survival theories. He translated the book Lo Sagrado entre los Primitivos y la Parapsicologia (The Sacred Among Primitive Peoples, and Parapsychology), by Juan Rogers, and contributed to Tomorrow magazine. He died in October of 1986.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Weiant, C. W. "Parapsychology and Anthropology." Manas 13 (1960).

Weinberger, Julius (1893–1978)

Radio engineer who wrote on parapsychology. Weinberger was born on July 22, 1893, in New York City and studied at the City College of New York (B.S., 1913). He worked 42 years for the Radio Corporation of America (RCA) in various positions (1916–1958). He wrote numerous aricles in his chosen field, but also delved into parapsychology and reflected upon a variety of issues. He died in June of 1978.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Weinberger, Julius. "On Apparatus Communication with Discarnate Persons." International Journal of Parapsychology 3, no. 1 (winter 1961).

———. "A Physicist Looks at Spiritual Healing." Laymen's Movement Review 1, no. 5 (1958); 2, no. 1 (1959).

———. "A Physicist Looks at Survival." Tomorrow (autumn 1956).

———. "Some Findings of Experimental Psychical Research." Proceedings of the Seminar on Decline of Material (November 1956).

Weingarten, Henry

American astrologer, executive secretary of the National Astrological Society (1974–) and editor of NASO Journal. He has lectured extensively on astrology and taught at the NASO School of Astrology in New York.

Sources:

Weingarten, Henry. A Modern Introduction to Astrology. New York: ASI Publishers, 1974.

———. Principles of Synastry. New York: ASI Publishers, 1978.

———. The Study of Astrology. 3 vols. New York: ASI Publishers, 1977.

Weiser Bookshop

Occult bookstore in the United States through most of the twentieth century, the New York equivalent of London's Watkins Book Shop or Atlantis Bookshop, patronized by occultists and students of the occult. Weiser's was located at 117 4th Ave., then in a large rambling store at 845 Broadway, and in the 1960s it moved to 740 Broadway. Founded by Samuel Weiser, it was taken over by his son Donald in the 1960s. The store has in each of its locations been known for its large antiquarian occult stock as well as a comprehensive selection of new volumes. Its regular catalogs, issued through the 1950s, of new and old occult books have since become useful bibliographical records.

In the 1980s the store moved again, this time to 132 E. 24th St. (between Park Avenue and Lexington), New York, NY 10010. It slowly adapted to New Age emphases and responded to the competition supplied by the emergence of many esoteric bookstores both in New York and around the country. It was one of the more significant retail specialty shops in North America.

In April 1984, Donald Weiser and Henry Suzuki of Samuel Weiser, Inc., became directors (with Valerie Chris, England) of the famous Watkins Book Shop in Cecil Court, Charing Cross Road, London. Samuel Weisers, Inc. is an affiliated publishing company specializing in occult titles. The bookshop is now closed.

Weisman, Kenneth E(arl) (1930–)

Teacher who has been active in the field of parapsychology. Weisman was born on November 16, 1930, in Chicago, Illinois. He served in the United States Army from 1951 to 1954, and he then studied at Bradley University, Peoria, Illinois (B.S. biology, 1958). He began a teaching career in the Peoria, Illinois, public school system.

Weisman conducted experiments among school children to correlate clairvoyant ability with class grades, sex, achievement test ratings and teacher attitude toward pupils.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Weiss, Claude J. (1941–)

Claude J. Weiss, a prominent Swiss astrologer, was born on May 6, 1941, in Basel, Switzerland. He attended the Swiss Institute of Technology, where he earned an engineering degree with a specialization in agronomy. He later spent two years in India, and during his stay, in 1967, was introduced to astrology. He studied astrology over the next decade and became a full-time professional in 1977. The following year he created Astrodata, a calculation and interpretation service for astrological delineations that is now the largest in Continental Europe. He continues to serve as its president.

Weiss has emerged as one of the leading European voices calling for the psychological interpretation of astrology, and he has been a particular devotee of transactional analysis and Jungian psychology. He has emphasized the role of free will and individual choice in light of the insights of astrology. He authored a widely used two-volume work on horoscope interpretation and a specialized study of the effects of the planet Pluto.

Through the 1980s and 1990s, Weiss became a dominant voice in the German-speaking astrological community. He is a popular lecturer, has written a number of books, and edits a periodical, Astrologie Heute. He has helped organize four world astrological congresses and has served as president of the Swiss Astrological Association. He has also become known as a master of mundane astrology, the astrology that deals with the larger political fates of people and nations. His office is in Wettswil, near Zürich.

Sources:

Weiss, Claude J. Astrologie: Eine Wissenschaft von Raum und Zeit. Wettswil, Switzerland: The Author, 1967.

———. Horoskopanalyse. 2 vols. Wettswil, Switzerland: Edition Astrodata, 1992.

———, and Verena Bachmann. Pluto: Das Eritische und Dämonische. Wettswil, Switzerland: Edition Astrodata, 1991.

WEL

Initialism for Welt-Eis-Lehre (Cosmic Ice Theory), a cult built around the eccentric theories of Austrian engineer Hans Hörbiger, author of Glazial-Kosmogonie (1912). These theories involved a complex system of "cosmic ice" that generated stellar systems in which smaller planets become moons and are captured by larger planets. According to Hörbiger, Earth's present moon is coated with ice 140 miles thick and is now moving towards Earth with a spiral motion.

After Hörbiger's death, his theories were further developed by the British mythologist Hans Schindler Bellamy in his book Moons, Myths, and Man (1936). The WEL cult combined such theories with Nazi political philosophy and anti-Semitism. The character of the WEL is indicated by statements such as:

"Our Nordic ancestors grew strong in ice and snow; belief in the World Ice is consequently the natural heritage of Nordic Man. . . . Just as it needed a child of Austrian Culture— Hitler!—to put the Jewish politicians in their place, so it needed an Austrian to cleanse the world of Jewish science."

Sources:

Bellamy, Hans Schindler. Moons, Myths, and Man. London: Faber & Faber, 1949.

Hörbiger, Hans. Glazial-Kosmogonie. N.p., 1912.

Wellman, Adele

Former executive secretary of the American Society for Psychical Research. He was born in Brooklyn, New York.

Wendigo (or Windigo)

A creature of the forests featured in the mythology of many North American and Canadian native peoples. Algonquin tribes believe that a hunter lost in the bush without food may become a Wendigo, seeking other human beings in order to eat their flesh. Members of the Ojibwa tribe use the term "Windigo" to denote a ferocious ogre who will take away children if they do not behave properly.

A powerful horror story called The Wendigo was written by novelist Algernon Blackwood (1869–1951). It was first published in The Lost Valley and Other Stories, London, 1910. It was probably drawn from legends encountered by the author during his own travels in the Canadian backwoods.

In 1982 John Colombo assembled a comprehensive compilation of accounts (both traditional and modern) on the Wendigo. He observed:

"Windigo has been described as the phantom of hunger which stalks the forests of the north in search of lone Indians, halfbreeds, or white men to consume. It may take the form of a cannibalistic Indian who breathes flames. Or it may assume the guise of a supernatural spirit with a heart of ice that flies through the night skies in search of a victim to satisfy its craving for human flesh. Like the vampire, it feasts on flesh and blood. Like the werewolf, it shape-changes at will."

Colombo lists some 37 variant forms of the word "Windigo" or "Wendigo" and states that the first appearance of the word in print appears to be in an account by the French traveler Bacqueville de la Potherie in 1722, when it appeared as "Onaouientagos." The word derives from the Algonquian Indian root witiku meaning "evil spirit" or "cannibal." Legends of the Wendigo are current among the Algoquian tribes in the Northwest Territories of Canada and the northern regions of Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta.

The Wendigo is said to inhabit a large territory bounded by the Atlantic Ocean in the east, the Arctic Ocean in the north, and the Rocky Mountains in the west. According to Algonquian belief, a human being may "turn Windigo" through an act of cannibalism, being in the presence of the demon, or the sorcery of a shaman. Such transformation has much in common with legends of the vampire and werewolf.

Sources:

Colombo, John R., ed. Windigo: An Anthology of Facts and Fantastic Fiction. Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 1982.

Wenzl, Aloys (1887– ?)

Philosopher active in the field of parapsychology. He was born on January 25, 1887, in Munich, Germany, and studied at the University of Munich (Ph.D., 1912). He was a lecturer in philosophy and psychology at the University of Munich (1926–38), but was discharged on ideological grounds during the Nazi regime. He returned to his position as professor of philosophy at the University of Munich in 1946. He retired with emeritus status in the early 1960s.

Wenzl took an interest in clairvoyance and psychokinesis, and he attended the International Conference on Philosophy and Parapsychology at St. Paul de Vence, France, held in 1954. He was the author of a number of books, several of which considered parapsychological questions.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Wenzl, Aloys. Philosophische Grenzfragen der Naturwissenchaften (Philosophical Border Problems of the Natural Sciences). N.p., 1956.

———. Unsterblichkeit (Immorality). Bern: A. Francke, 1951.

Wereide, Thorstein (1882– ?)

Norwegian physicist and parapsychologist. He was born on March 9, 1882, at Nordfjord, Norway. He studied at the University of Oslo (B.A., 1910; Ph.D., 1914). He joined the staff of the University of Oslo as a physicist in the Medical College following World War I and remained there throughout his long career.

In 1919 he was among the cofounders of the Norwegian Society for Psychical Research. In 1926 he became editor of Psykisk Tidsskrift, the society's journal (1926–39), and the following year was elected president of the NSPR. He was a delegate to the international psychical research congresses at Copenhagen (1920), Warsaw (1923), Paris (1927), and Athens (1930) and president of the International Congress of Psychical Research held in Oslo in 1935. Having survived World War II, he was also able to attend the International Conference on Parapsychological Studies at Utrecht in 1953 and the International Conference on Spontaneous Phenomena at Cambridge, England, 1955.

His investigations covered mediumship, materialization, and multiple personality phenomena. He made a special study of the Norwegian medium Ingeborg Koeber and the multiple personalities of Hungarian Lujza Ignath. Among his many writings, several were translated into English for Tomorrow magazine.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Scarabaeus [Thorstein Wereide]. Mysteriesamfund (Mystery Societies). N.p., 1948.

Wereide, Thorstein. Byggesamfund (Building Societies). N.p., 1956.

———. "Medium or Murderess." Tomorrow (winter 1957).

———. Menneskets Metafysikk (The Metaphysics of Man). N.p., 1953.

———. "Norway's Human Doubles." Tomorrow (winter 1955).

Werewolf

A human temporarily or permanently transformed into a wolf, from the Anglo-Saxon wer (man) and wulf (wolf). It is a term used in the phenomenon of lycanthropy, which in ancient and medieval times was of very frequent occurrence. It was in Europe, where the wolf was one of the largest carnivorous animals, that the superstition became prevalent. Similar tales in other countries usually introduced bears, tigers, leopards, or other animals.

Origins

The belief in werewolves may be a relic of early cannibalism. Communities of semicivilized people would begin to shun those who devoured human flesh, ostracizing them and classifying them as wild beasts. The idea that they had something in common with animals would grow, and the concept that they were able to transform themselves into veritable animals would likely arise.

More likely, however, the belief derives from early ritual practices in the Balkan area. For example, the Dacians, an ancient people who had the wolf as their totem animal, annually turned their young men into wolves during a ritual in which they wore wolf skins and imitated the animal. The wolf was much respected in the area as a hunter. The ritual transformation into a wolf survives today in the Greek word vrkolaka (and its Slavic equivalents), derived from the old Slavic word for wolf-pelt, though the term is now applied to a form of vampire. It has been suggested that as the people settled into an agricultural life, the wolf lost its positive associations and became the outlaw animal many still consider it today. Thus the vrkolaka became the werewolf. Werewolf itself is an Old English term meaning shape-shifter, probably derived from older Germanic roots.

The oldest account of a man changing into a wolf came from Greek writings. Lycaon (from whom the term lycanthropy is derived) was changed into a wolf by Zeus, whom the unfortunate Lycaon had displeased.

The Nature of the Werewolf

There were two kinds of werewolves: voluntary and involuntary. The voluntary were, as has been said, persons who, because of their taste for human flesh, had withdrawn from association with other people.

They possessed a reputation for the magic power to transform themselves into the animal shape at will. This they effected by merely disrobing—by taking off a girdle made of human skin, or putting on a belt of wolf skin, obviously a substitute for an entire wolf skin. There were also cases in which they donned the entire skin. In other instances, the body was rubbed with a magic ointment, or water was drunk from a wolf's footprint. The brains of the animal were also eaten. Olaus Magnus (1490–1558) stated that "the werewolves of Livonia drained a cup of beer on initiation, and repeated certain magic words."

In order to throw off the wolf shape, the animal girdle was removed, or else the magician merely muttered a certain formula. In some instances, the transformation was supposed to be the work of Satan.

The superstition regarding werewolves seems to have been exceedingly prevalent in France during the sixteenth century, as is evidenced by numerous trials, in some of which murder and cannibalism took place. Self-hallucination may have accounted for some of these cases, the supposed werewolves admitting that they had transformed themselves and had slain numerous persons, but at the beginning of the seventeenth century such confessions were not believed. Self-hallucination does not cover a number of cases in which werewolves were seen by witnesses, however. In Teutonic and Slavonic countries, men of learning complained that werewolves did more damage than real criminals, and a regular "college" or institution for the practice of the art of animal transformation was attributed to them.

Involuntary werewolves were often said to be persons transformed into animals because of the commission of sin, and condemned to pass a certain number of years in that form. Certain saints were said to metamorphose sinners into wolves. In Armenia it was thought that sinful women were condemned to pass seven years in the form of a wolf. To such a woman a demon appeared, bringing a wolf skin. He commanded her to don it, and from that moment she became a wolf, with all the nature of a wild beast, devouring her own children and those of strangers; wandering at night, undeterred by locks, bolts, or bars; returning only in the morning to resume her human form.

French romance literature often mentions werewolves, and there are complete romances on the theme, such as the Lais du Bisclavret of Marie de France and the Guillaume de Palerne (known as William and the Werewolf) of the twelfth century. However, in such romances the werewolf was the innocent victim of magic, rather than a dangerous cannibal.

Many werewolves were said to be innocent persons suffering through the witchcraft of others. To regain their true form it was necessary for them to kneel in one spot for a hundred years, to lose three drops of blood, to be hailed as a werewolf, to have the sign of the cross made on their bodies, to be addressed thrice by their baptismal names, or to be struck thrice on the forehead with a knife.

According to Donat de Hautemer, quoted by Simon Goulart (1543–1628), "There are some lycanthropes who are so dominated by their melancholy humour that they really believe themselves to be transformed into wolves. This malady . . . is a sort of melancholy, of a black and dismal nature. Those who are attacked by it leave their homes in the months of February, imitate wolves in almost every particular, and wander all night long among the cemeteries and sepulchres, so that one may observe a marvelous change in the mind and disposition, and, above all in the depraved imagination, of the lycanthrope. The memory, however, is still vigorous, as I have remarked in one of these lycanthropic melancholiacs whom we call werewolves. For one who was well acquainted with me was one day seized with his affliction, and on meeting him I withdrew a little, fearing that he might injure me. He, having glanced at me for a moment, passed on followed by a crowd of people. On his shoulder he carried the entire leg and thigh of a corpse. Having received careful medical treatment, he was cured of this malady. On meeting me on another occasion he asked me if I had not been afraid when he met me at such and such a place, which made me think that his memory was not hurt by the vehemence of his disease, though his imagination was so greatly damaged."

Guillaume de Brabant, in the narrative of Wier, repeated by Goulart, writes in his History that a certain sensible man was so tormented by the evil spirit that at a particular season of the year he would think himself a ravening wolf and would run through the woods, caves, and deserts chasing little children. It was said that this man was often found running in the deserts like a man out of his mind, and that at last by the grace of God he came to himself and was healed. Job Fincel, in the book On Miracles, relates that a villager near Paule in the year 1541 believed himself to be a wolf and assaulted several men in the fields, killing some. Captured at last, though not without great difficulty, he strongly affirmed that he was a wolf, and that the only way in which he differed from other wolves was that they wore their hairy coats on the outside, while he wore his between his skin and his flesh. Certain persons, more inhuman and wolfish than he, wished to test the truth of this story, and gashed his arms and legs severely. Learning of their mistake and of the innocence of the melancholiac, they passed him on to the surgeons, in whose hands he died some days later.

Those afflicted with lycanthropy are pale, with dark and haggard eyes, seeing only with difficulty; the tongue is dry, and the sufferer very thirsty.

Speaking of lycanthropy, Gaspar Peucer (1525–1602) stated the following:

"As for me I had formerly regarded as ridiculous and fabulous the stories I had often heard concerning the transformation of men into wolves; but I have learnt from reliable sources, and from the testimony of trustworthy witnesses, that such things are not at all doubtful or incredible, since they tell of such transformations taking place twelve days after Christmas in Livonia and the adjacent countries; as they have been proved to be true by the confessions of those who have been imprisoned and tortured for such crimes.

"Here is the manner in which it is done. Immediately after Christmas day is past, a lame boy goes round the country calling these slaves of the devil, of which there are a great number, and enjoining them to follow him. If they procrastinate or go too slowly, there immediately appears a tall man with a whip whose thongs are made of iron chains, with which he urges them onwards, and sometimes lashes the poor wretches so cruelly, that the marks of the whip remain on their bodies till long afterwards, and cause them the greatest pain. As soon as they have set out on their road, they are all changed into wolves. . . .

"They travel in thousands, having for their conductor the bearer of the whip, after whom they march. When they reach the fields, they rush upon the cattle they find there, tearing and carrying away all they can, and doing much other damage; but they are not permitted to touch or wound persons. When they approach any rivers, their guide separates the waters with his whip, so that they seem to open up and leave a dry space by which to cross. At the end of twelve days the whole band scatters, and everyone returns to his home, having regained his own proper form. This transformation, they say, comes about in this wise. The victims fall suddenly on the ground as though they were taken with sudden illness, and remain motionless and extended like corpses, deprived of all feeling, for they neither stir, nor move from one place to another, nor are in any wise transformed into wolves, thus resembling carrion, for although they are rolled or shaken, they give no sign of life."

Jean Bodin (1529–1596) related several cases of lycanthropy and of men changed into beasts, including the following:

"Pierre Mamot, in a little treatise he has written on sorcerers, says that he has observed this changing of men into wolves, he being in Savoy at the time. Henry of Cologne in his treatise de Lamiis regards the transformation as beyond doubt. And Ulrich in a little book dedicated to the emperor Sigismund, writes of the dispute before the emperor, and says that it was agreed, both on the ground of reason, and of the experience of innumerable examples, that such transformation was a fact; and he adds that he himself had seen a lycanthrope at Constance, who was accused, convicted, condemned, and finally executed after his confession. And several books published in Germany say that one of the greatest kings of Christendom, who is not long dead, and who had the reputation of being one of the greatest sorcerers in the world, often changed into a wolf.

"I remember that the attorney-general of the King, Bourdin, has narrated to me another which was sent to him from the Low Countries, with the whole trial signed by the judge and the clerks, of a wolf, which was struck by an arrow on the thigh, and afterwards found himself in bed, with the arrow (which he had torn out), on regaining his human shape, and the arrow was recognised by him who had fired it—the time and place testified by the confession of the person.

"Garnier, tried and condemned by the parliament of Dole, being in the shape of a werewolf, caught a girl of ten or twelve years in a vineyard of Chastenoy, a quarter of a league from Dole, and having slain her with his teeth and claw-like hands, he ate part of her flesh and carried the rest to his wife. A month later, in the same form, he took another girl, and would have eaten her also, had he not, as he himself confessed, been prevented by three persons who happened to be passing by; and a fortnight after he strangled a boy of ten in the vineyard of Gredisans, and ate his flesh; and in the form of a man and not of a wolf, he killed another boy of twelve or thirteen years in a wood of the village of Porouse with the intention of eating him, but was again prevented. He was condemned to be burnt, and the sentence was executed.

"At the parliament of Bezançon, the accused were Pierre Burgot and Michel Verdun, who confessed to having renounced God, and sworn to serve the devil. And Michel Verdun led Burgot to the Bard du Chastel Charlon where everyone carried a candle of green wax which shone with a blue flame. There they danced and offered sacrifices to the devil. Then after being anointed they were turned into wolves, running with incredible swiftness, then they were changed again into men, and suddenly transformed back to wolves, when they enjoyed the society of female wolves as much as they had done that of their wives. They confessed also that Burgot had killed a boy of seven years with his wolf-claws and teeth, intending to eat him, but the peasants gave chase, and prevented him. Burgot and Verdun had eaten four girls between them; and they had caused people to die by the touch of a certain power."

Some cases of lycanthropy may have been a cover for a perverse appetite for drinking blood or eating human flesh, but it is also possible that there were cases of psychic transformations, in which the astral double of a lycanthrope was projected in the form of a beast, similar to other stories of witches and wizards attacking their victims in an astral form.

Modern attempts to understand the werewolf have opted for a psychological approach, one exception being Robert Eisler, who has explained it in terms of the cycles of human violence that have been a part of social existence since time began. Richard Noll has gathered a variety of reports of modern werewolves, whom psychologists see as people under the delusion that s/he has been transformed into an animal.

Another aspect of lycanthropy is the Romulus and Remus theme of abandoned children reared by wolves. One classic case of such "feral children," as they are termed, is that of the two wolf girls of Midnapore, India, who were rescued by the Reverend J. A. L. Singh in 1942. This case is discussed in detail by Charles Maclean in his book The Wolf Children (1978). (See also Vampire)

Werewolf Fiction

In the middle of the nineteenth century, as other forms of modern horror fiction were emerging, three werewolf novels appeared: Hughes the Wer-wolf, by Sutherland Mnzies (a serial published in installment in the 1850s); The Wolf-Leader (1857); and Wagner the Wehrwolf, by George W. M. Reynold (1857). The latter is considered the fountainhead of modern werewolf fiction, and it was not until 1934 that another noteworthy werewolf novel was published.

Guy Endore's The Werewolf of Paris was bought by Universal Studios, who wanted to produce a cinematic version. The screenplay changes the location of the movie, which appeared in 1935 as The Werewolf of London. The story was inspired by the true story of Francis Bertrand, a French noncommissioned officer who in 1848 was convicted of breaking into several Paris graveyards, and consuming the flesh of several recently buried bodies. His ghoulish activity was transformed into the story of Bertrand Caullet, the son born as a result of a brief affair between his mother and a priest. He discovered that he was a werewolf when shot with a silver bullet. (The now-standard association of werewolves and silver is derived from a Scottish belief in the efficacy of silver in killing witches.)

The Werewolf of London was followed by its more famous sequel, The Wolf Man, starring Lon Chaney, Jr. Chaney reappeared in several movies with other Universal monsters, but made his next notable appearance in the 1961 remake, The Curse of the Werewolf. The werewolf became a television star as a character in the early 1960s in the vampire television soap opera Dark Shadows.

Since the 1970s the werewolf has become an integral part of a horror genre that has grown spectacularly. While not approaching the popularity of the vampire, new werewolf novels have appeared annually and some, such as Whitney Streiber's Wolfen have become popular movies. Gary Brandner's The Howling led to no less than five sequels, most of which were made into movies. The lycanthropy/shape-shifting theme also was prominent in movies like the Cat People, which features a woman able to transform into a panther.

Sources:

Baring-Gould, Sabine. The Book of Were-Wolves. London, 1965; New York: Causeway Books, 1973.

Cooper, Basil. The Werewolf in Legend, Fact and Art. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1977.

Douglas, Adam. The Beast Within: Man, Myths and Werewolves. London: Chapmans, 1992. Reprint. London: Orion, 1993.

Dunn, Charles W. The Foundling and the Werewolf: A Literary-Historical Study of Guillaume de Palerne. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1960.

Eisler, Robert. Man into Wolf: An Anthropological Interpretation of Sadism, Masochism, and Lycanthropy. Santa Barbara, Calif.: Ross Erikson, 1978.

Gesell, Arnold. Wolf-Child and Human Child. London: Harper/Methuen, 1941.

Hamel, Frank. Human Animals. London, 1915. University Books, 1969.

Kaigh, Frederick. Witchcraft & Magic of Africa. London: Richard Lesley, 1947.

Maclean, Charles. The Wolf Children. Hill & Wang, 1978.

Noll, Richard. Vampires, Werewolves, and Demons. New York: Brunner/Mazel, 1992.

O'Donnell, Elliott. Werewolves. London, 1912. Rev. ed. New York: Wholesale Book Corp., 1972.

Summers, Montague. The Werewolf. London, 1933. University Books, 1966.

Woodward, Ian. The Werewolf Delusion. London & New York: Paddington Press, 1979.

Weschcke, Carl Llewellyn (1930–)

Prominent American astrologer, occultist, publisher, and owner-president of Llewellyn Publications, St. Paul, Minnesota, originally founded as Llewellyn Publishing Company by Llewellyn George in 1905 in Portland, Oregon. Weschcke was born on September 10, 1930, in St. Paul, Minnesota. He was educated at the St. Paul Academy; the Babson Institute, Wellesley Hills, Massachusetts; and the University of Minnesota.

He purchased the Llewellyn Publishing Company of Los Angeles, California, in 1960 and moved the business to St. Paul, Minnesota. For a number of years the Llewellyn enterprise also included Gnostica, a large retail bookstore housed in a 12,000-square-foot former mortuary in St. Paul. In addition to publishing a number of popular occult books, Llewellyn also issued Gnostica magazine (now superseded by Llewellyn's New Worlds of Mind and Spirit) and Astrology Now magazine (discontinued). Among the company's prominent publications are the annual Moon Sign Book (established by Llewellyn George in 1905) and Daily Planetary Guide. It is now one of the largest wholesale dealers in occult books and products in the United States.

Weschcke was editor-in-chief of Gnostica magazine, and his own writings included articles on lunar astrology, gardening, tantra, and witchcraft. He is a practicing witch and has chaired the Council of American Witches. In addition to many appearances on radio and television interview programs, he was responsible for a half-hour commercial television program on Halloween and prepared a videotape on witchcraft for the University of Wisconsin.

Sources:

Weschcke, Carl L. The Occult Renaissance. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publishing, 1972.

———. The Science of Feeling Fine. St. Paul, Minn.: Chester-Kent, 1954.

West, D(onald) J(ames) (1924–)

Psychiatrist and parapsychologist. He was born on June 9, 1924, in Liverpool, England, and studied at Liverpool University (M.B., Ch.B., 1947; M.D., 1958). He did postgraduate work at London University (D.P.M., 1952) and Cambridge University, England (M.A., 1960). For many years he was the director of the Cambridge University Institute of Criminology. After his retirement in 1984, he was named professor emeritus of clinical criminology research.

He has been a long-time member of the Society for Psychical Research, London, having joined when he was only 17. He later served as its research officer (1947–49) and on two occasions as president (1963–65). With G. W. Fisk he carried out a set of experiments designed to show the effects of the experimenter on the results of ESP tests. In 1958 he and Fisk won the William McDougall Award for Distinguished Research in Parapsychology. He wrote a book on Lourdes, notable for its conclusion that miracles have not been proven to have occurred at the famous shrine. West has played an important part in British laboratory experiments in extrasensory perception.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

West, Donald J. Eleven Lourdes Miracles. London: Duckworth, 1957.

———. "The Identity of 'Jack the Ripper.' " Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 35 (1949).

———. Psychical Research Today. London: Duckworth, 1956.

———. "Psychokinetic Experiments with a Single Subject." Parapsychology Newsletter (November–December 1957).

West, Donald J., and G. W. Fisk. "ESP and Mood: Report of a 'Mass' Experiment with Clock Cards." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 38 (1956).

Westcar Papyrus

An Egyptian papyrus dating from the eighteenth century B.C.E. devoted chiefly to tales of magic and enchantment. The beginning and ending are missing, yet much of the subject matter has survived.

Alfred Wiedemann, in his book Popular Literature of Ancient Egypt (1902), describes these tales of magic and enchantment as follows:

"The papyrus tells how Kheops—the king whom notices of Greek writers have made universally famous as the builder of the Great Pyramid of Gizeh—commands stories of magic to be told to him. The first of these, of which the conclusion only remains, is supposed to have occurred in the reign of King T'eser of the Third Dynasty. The next, which is complete, belongs to the reign of Nebka, a somewhat earlier king.

"In those days it came to the ears of a great nobleman that his faithless wife was in the habit of meeting her lover by the side of a lake. Being skilled in magic he modelled a crocodile in wax and ordered one of his servants to cast it into the water. It was immediately transformed into a real crocodile and devoured the lover. Seven days later the king was walking by the lake with his friend the nobleman, when at the command of the latter the crocodile came to the shore and laid its victim at their feet. The king shuddered at the sight of the monster but at the touch of its maker it became once more a mere figure of wax. Then the whole astonishing story was told to the king, who thereupon granted the crocodile permission to take away that which was its own. The creature plunged into the depths of the lake and disappeared with the adulterer, while the guilty wife was burnt to death and her ashes were scattered in the stream.

"A tale of enchantment follows, the scene of which is laid during the reign of King Sneferu, the predecessor of Kheops. The king was one day taking his pleasure on a lake in a boat rowed by twenty beautiful maidens, when one of the girls dropped a malachite ornament into the water. The king promised to give her another in its stead, but this did not content her, for she wanted her own jewel and no other. A magician was summoned who repeated a spell by the might of which he piled one half of the lake on the top of the other, so that the water, which at first was twelve ells deep in the middle of the lake, now stood twenty-four ells high. The jewel, found lying in the mud in the dry portion of the lake, was restored to its owner; and the magician having once more mumbled his spell the water returned to its former place.

"When Kheops had listened for some time with much interest to the accounts of the strange events that had transpired in the days of his predecessors, then stepped forward Prince Horduduf, who is really known to us from the song in the tomb-temple of King Antef as renowned for his wisdom. He told the king that all marvels were not things of the past but that even then there was living a magician named Deda, who was one hundred and ten years old, and consumed every day five hundred loaves, a side of beef, and a hundred jars of beer.

"Kheops was so much interested that he sent the prince to escort the magician to his presence. Deda obeyed the royal summons and performed his chief feat before the king. This consisted in decapitating a goose, a duck, and an ox, and charming the heads back again on to the bodies so that the creatures lived and breathed as before. Kheops fell into talk with the magician, who told him that the wife of a priest in Sakhebu was awaiting the birth of three sons, children of the god Ra, who should one day sit on the throne of Egypt. Deda sought to allay the king's natural distress at this information by prophesying that only after the reigns of his son and grandson should the power fall into the hands of the descendants of the Sun-god. But Kheops was not to be consoled; he inquired into the details of the story and announced that he would himself travel to Sakhebu, no doubt with the ultimate intention of finding an opportunity to put out of the way the pretenders to his throne.

"The scene of the sequel is laid in Sakhebu. The birth and infancy of the three children are described in detail, and all sorts of marvelous incidents are represented as influencing their fate. The gods cared for the safety of the little ones. A maid to whom the secret was known being enraged by a severe punishment inflicted upon her, threatened to betray all to Kheops. Her own brother beat her, and when she went down to the water she was carried off by a crocodile. Here the papyrus ceases, but it is possible to a certain extent to restore the conclusion. The names of the three children of Ra show that they stand for the first three kings of the Fifth Dynasty, the family that followed the house of Kheops. The papyrus must therefore have told how the boys escaped all the snares laid for their lives and in due time ascended the throne for which they were destined." (See also Egypt)

Sources:

Budge, E. A. W. Egyptian Magic. London: Kegan, Paul, 1899.
Maspero, G. Les contes populaires de l'Egypte ancienne. Paris, 1881.
Wiedemann, A. Popular Literature of Ancient Egypt. London: David Nutt, 1902.

Westcott, William Wynn (1848–1925)

Prominent British occultist and one of the founders of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn. He was born in December 1848 at Leamington, Warwickshire, England. He lost both parents before the age of ten and was adopted by Richard Westcott Martyn, an uncle who was a surgeon by profession. Westcott was educated at the Queen Elizabeth Grammar School at Kingston-upon-Thames, London, and studied medicine at University College, London.

He qualified as a physician in 1871 and became a partner in his uncle's practice in Somerset. He also joined a Masonic lodge in Crewkerne. After 1879, he moved to Hendon, where he pursued studies in occultism for two years. About 1880, he became a leading member of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia (Rosicrucian Society of England), an occult society open only to master masons. A year later he was appointed deputy coroner and later coroner for northeast London, and he wrote a number of articles for the Medical Directory. During this period, his occultism remained a closely guarded secret.

In 1887, he acquired an old manuscript written in code, said to have been bought from a bookstall in Farringdon Road, London. In the pages of the manuscript was a sheet of paper with the name and address of a Fraulein Sprengel, a Rosicrucian adept living in Germany. Westcott deciphered the manuscript, which contained fragments of mystical rituals.

These rituals were expanded by Westcott's occultist friend S. L. MacGregor Mathers, also a member of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia. Westcott thereupon corresponded with Sprengel, who authorized him to found an English branch of the German occult society Die Goldene Dämmerung. Westcott, Mathers, and W. R. Woodman thereupon founded the Isis-Urania temple of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn in 1888. Westcott's occult motto in the order was Sapere Aude (Dare to Be Wise).

This is the official story of the foundation of the famous Golden Dawn order, but there is strong reason to suppose that the manuscript may have been the invention of Westcott or his associates and that Sprengel never existed. Correspondence with her has been produced, but many students of occultism doubt its genuineness. For all that, the Golden Dawn attracted some of the most eminent talents of its day, including poet William Butler Yeats, until it eventually degenerated into undignified squabbles, expulsions, resignations, and complex fragmentation.

Westcott had retired from the Golden Dawn by around 1897, possibly because of pressure relating to his official status as a coroner. He continued to be a member of the Rosicrucian Society, and, after the death of Woodman in 1891, he became supreme magus. Through the 1890s he published a number of books and pamphlets. In his later years, he moved to Durban, South Africa, where he became vice president of two Theosophical Society lodges. He died June 30, 1925.

Westcott is not only known for his work with the Golden Dawn, he wrote books on the Kabbalah and translated work of Eliphas Levi.

Sources:

Gilbert, R. A., ed. The Magical Mason: Forgotten Hermetic Writings of William Wynn Westcott. Wellingborough, Northamptonshire, England: Aquarian Press, 1983.
Howe, Ellie. The Magicians of the Golden Dawn. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1972.
King, Francis. The Rites of Modern Occult Magic. New York: Macmillan, 1970.
Westcott, Wynn. Aesch Mezareph, or Purifying Fire. N.p., 1894.
———. The Chaldean Oracles of Zoroaster. London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1895.
———. Egyptian Magic. London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1896.
———. Numbers: Their Occult Power and Mystic Virtue. 1890. Reprint, London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1911.
———. The Pymander of Hermes. N.p., 1894.
———. Rosicrucians, Their History and Aims. N.p., 1894.
———. The Science of Alchymy. N.p., 1893.
———. Sepher Yetzirah, the Book of Formation. London, Theosophical Publishing Society, 1893. Rev. ed. Gillette, N.J.: Heptangle Books, 1987.
———. Somnium Scipionis. N.p., 1894.

West Indies

The importation of Africans into the Caribbean area as slaves began in the sixteenth century but expanded greatly after 1640 when the islands became a major source of sugar and workers were needed for the plantations. Most of these people came from the various tribes along the coast of West Africa from present-day Senegal to Nigeria. The white planters looked upon Africans with disdain and developed the opinion that they had no religious life, that they were at best bearers of a set of heathenish superstitions. Such was not the case. While a few of the Africans were Muslims, the majority were followers of the West African religious system, which with relatively minor alterations from tribe to tribe pervaded the area from which the slaves were taken.

The West African system acknowledged a supreme divine power but found its more personalized expression in the various deities responsible for the harmonious operation of the natural world. In the West Indies the major deities included Shango, Ogun, and Eshu (in Trinidad) and Legba, Erzulie, and Damballah (in Haiti). The Haitian deities (loas) were of two varieties: those of African origin (Rada) and those of Haitian origin (Pétro). Rites were constructed for both.

There was also a belief in fate, which to a large extent determined the course and eventual destiny of the individual. A person's future could be seen through divinatory practices. Also, by propitiating the messenger to the Gods, who carried words of the individual's fate, that fate could be altered to one more favorable. The religion was led by priests and priestesses (variously termed in the different islands), who performed the rites for the higher deities; medicine men, who dealt with lower evil spirits (the cause of disease and harm to individuals); and sorcerers, who were supposed to attack tribal enemies but sometimes, for a price, attacked individuals with their magical powers. The sorcerer (obayifo) worked clandestinely at night. People wore amulets to protect themselves. The priest supplied the amulets and often worked to counter the effects of the sorcerer.

In Africa, this religion permeated tribal life. Religious practice included obeah (magic), "possession" of certain people by the deities (similar to mediumship), and communication with and guidance from ancestor spirits.

In the New World, such religion was at best distasteful to the European understanding; it was often despised by the ruling elite. However, some of the planters did not hesitate to make use of obeah to manage the workers. To prevent theft of crops, for instance, they sometimes adorned trees around the edge of a banana or orange grove with miniature coffins, old bones, bottles of dirty water, and other obeah objects. Then the workers would not enter and steal. As late as 1908, a case of obeah was reported in a Jamaican journal:

"The cause célèbre at Half-way Tree Court, Jamaica, recently, was the case of Rex V. Charles Donaldson for unlawfully practicing Obeah. Robert Robinson, who stated that he was a laborer living at Trench Pen, in the parish of St. Andrew, stated that on Tuesday, the 8th ult., he was sitting down outside the May Pen cemetery on the Spanish Town Road. He was on his way from work, and had a white handkerchief tied around his head. He was feeling sick, and that led him to sit down. While there sitting the prisoner came to him. He did not know the man before, but he began by asking him what was the matter. Witness replied, 'I am well sick.' The prisoner said, 'No, you are not sick; you have two ghosts on you—one creole and one coolie.' Witness told the prisoner to go away and was left. He next saw prisoner on Wednesday 9th. He came to him at Bumper Hall, where he was working, and he said to him, 'Man, how you find me here?' 'Oh,' replied the prisoner, 'if a man is in hell self I can find him; I come for you to give me the job?' Witness then inquired, 'What job?' and accused told him he wanted to 'take off the two ghosts.' He would do it for £25, and he 'killed' for any sum from £25 to £50. He had worked for all classes—white, black, coolie, Chinese, etc. Witness said he did not give him any 'good consent' at the time, but reported the matter after the accused left to Clark and Wright, two witnesses in the case. Clark told him he must not scare the man but go home. On Thursday, the 10th, the defendant came to him at his yard at French Pen. The accused told him he would come back to him to take off the ghost. He also told him to get a bottle of rum and 5s. He (witness) consented to the arrangement. The defendant began by taking off his jacket. He then opened his 'brief bag' and took out a piece of chalk. The accused then made three marks on the table and took out a phial and a white stone. The phial contained some stuff which appeared like quicksilver. He arrayed his paraphernalia on the table. They consisted of a large whisky bottle with some yellow stuff, a candle, a pack of cards, a looking-glass, three cigarette pictures, a pocket knife, etc. The accused also took out a whistle which he sounded, and then placed the cards on the table. He then asked for the 5s. which was given to him. He placed the coins on the cards around a lighted candle. The pint of rum which he (witness) had brought was on the table and prisoner poured some of it into a pan. He went outside and sprinkled the rum at the four corners of the house. Accused came back in and said, 'Papa! papa! your case is very bad! There are two ghosts outside. The creole is bad, but the coolie is rather worse. But if he is made out of hell I will catch him.' The prisoner then began to blow his whistle in a very funny way—a way in which he had never heard a whistle blown before. He also began to speak in an unknown tongue and to call up the ghosts."

[The following dialogue is taken from court proceedings regarding the case.]

Mr. Lake—"Aren't there a lot of you people who believe that ghosts can harm and molest you?"

Witness—"No, I am not one."

Mr. Lake—"Did you not tell him that a duppy [Jamaican ghost] struck you on your back and you heard voices calling you?"

Witness—"He told me so."[Continuing, witness said he had seen all sorts of ghosts at all different times and of different kinds also].

Mr. Lake—"Of all different sexes, man and woman?"

Witness—"Yes; any man who can see ghosts will know a man ghost from a woman ghost."

While it empowered those who practiced it, African religion had to be practiced undercover, and as a result it underwent some changes. For example, it took on an overlay of Christianity of whatever variety was dominant on the plantation. In Haiti, Voudou resulted from obeah's association with French Catholicism. In Cuba and Puerto Rico, Santeria emerged its mixing with Spanish Catholicism. In Brazil, Macumba is a result of its mixing with Portuguese Catholicism.

African-based religions gained significant favor in the West Indies because of their role underlying the various rebellions by which the slaves gained their freedom. Today, they survive in competition with the dominant Catholicism or Anglicanism. They are reemerging despite several centuries of negative writing by outsiders.

African-derived Caribbean religion entered the United States at the time of the Haitian slave rebellion in 1908 and in the years to follow. Voudou eventually became established in New Orleans and the surrounding countryside. During the twentieth century, and especially as immigration laws have eased during the last generation, numerous people have moved to America from the Caribbean, carrying their faiths with them.

Sources:

Bisnauth, Dale. History of Religion in the Caribbean. Kingston, Jamaica: Kingston Publishers, 1989.

Denning, Melita, and Osborne Phillips. Voudoun Fire: The Living Reality of Mystical Religion. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1979.

Deren, Maya. Divine Horsemen: The Voodoo Gods of Haiti. New York: Chelsea House, 1970.

Westlake, Aubrey T(homas) (1893–1985)

Prominent British authority on radiesthesia, alternative medical therapies, and holistic health. Born in 1893, in Redhill, Surrey, he was educated at the Quaker Sidcot school, and he trained in medicine at Birmingham and Cambridge universities and St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London. He entered general practice in Bermondsey, London. In 1938, he and his family moved to the family estate at Fordingbridge, Hampshire, where Westlake continued the private practice of medicine.

He also spent many years investigating a wide range of alternative studies beyond the purely physical parameters of orthodox medical science, such as the Bach flower remedies, medical dowsing, radiesthesia, radionics, the odic force of Baron von Reichenbach, the orgone energy of Wilhelm Reich, Huna, homeopathy, and anthroposophical medicine. In 1956, he formed a study group with several associates, investigating the use of radiesthesia techniques in healing patients at a distance.

The wide range of his inquiries is demonstrated in his important paper "Vis Medicatrix Naturae," given at the Scientific and Technical Congress of Radionics and Radiesthesia, London, May 16, 1950. He published a number of important articles and a major work, The Pattern of Health (1961).

He was a founding member of the Soil Association, an active member of the Medical Society for the Study of Radiesthesia, an honorary fellow of the Radionic Association, an honorary life vice president of the British Society of Dowsers, and president of the Psionic Medical Society. He died at the age of 92 in Fordingbridge, on October 30, 1985.

Westwood, Horace (1884–1956)

Unitarian minister who wrote on parapsychology. He was born on August 17, 1884, at Wakefield, England. He became an ordained minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1906 and pastored at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan (1906–08). Then in 1910 he joined the Unitarian Church and was pastor successively at the First Unitarian Church, Youngstown, Ohio (1910–12); All Soul's Church, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada (1912–19); and First Church, Toledo, Ohio (1919–27). He was minister at large for the Unitarian Church (1927–33) and for the First Unitarian Church, Berkeley, California (1934–45).

He studied psychic research for a number of years and described his personal attitudes in his book There Is a Psychic World (1949). He died December 24, 1956.

Sources:

Westwood, Horace. Apostle of Darkness and Prophet of Light. N.p., 1939.

———. This Do and Live. N.p., 1938.

Weyer, Johan (also known as John Wier or Wierus) (1515–1588)

Protestant physician and demonologist, born in Basel, Switzerland, who compiled an inventory of devils published in 1568, in which he estimated that the devil's kingdom consisted of an army of 7,405,926 devils and demons, organized in 1,111 divisions of 6,666 each. During the Reformation, this total was raised by the Lutherans, who calculated that the true figure was 2,665,866,746,664 devils.

However, in his major work De Praestigiis Daemonum et Incantationibus ac Veneficiis (Basel, 1568), Weyer denounced witch hunters for extracting confessions under torture, pointing out that extreme hardships would force even the most innocent to confess themselves guilty. Weyer offered a voice of reason, claiming mental disease rather than demonic possession. Unfortunately his book went unheeded and heavily criticized.

For a summary of Weyer's comprehensive book, see H. C. Lea, Materials Toward a History of Witchcraft. (See also demonology)

Sources:

Lea, H. C. Materials Toward a History of Witchcraft. Edited by Arthur C. Howland. 3 vols. Philadelphia, University of Pennsylvania Press, 1939. Reprint, New York: T. Yoseloff, 1957.

Weyer, Johannes. Witches, Devils and Doctors in the Renaissance: Johann Weyer, De Praestigiis. Edited by George Mora. Binghamton, N.Y.: Medieval & Renaissance Texts & Studies, 1991.

Weza

Burmese sorcerers. (See also MYANMAR)

WFLK Fountain of the World

Hindu-based religious community centered in the San Fernando Valley of southern California. The WFLK Fountain of the World was founded by Francis H. Pencovic (1911–58). He grew up in Utah but became known in 1932 under his religious name, Krishna Venta. As Krishna Venta he claimed that he had been sent from heaven to work among the American Indians. He was believed to be the latest in a series of "saviours" who had come to assist humankind. The lineage included Adam, Enoch, Methuselah, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Elijah, Jesus, and more recently Abraham Lincoln and Joseph Smith, Jr., (the founder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints).

Krishna Venta established his followers on land in Box Canyon in the San Fernando Valley. They lived communally, a practical step in their gaining a unity of mind and spirit, and attempted to put into practice the four cardinal virtues taught by Krishna Venta: Wisdom, Faith, Love, and Knowledge (WFLK), from which the group took its name. The members became well known in the area for their outstanding work in the periodic and dangerous fires that afflict the area.

The organization was traumatized in 1958 when Krishna Venta was assassinated by two former members who complained that he had debauched their spouses. They set off a dynamite explosion in the group's headquarters on December 10, 1958, killing themselves, Krishna Venta, and seven other members. Krishna Venta's wife, Mother Ruth Pencovic, took over leadership of the group and led the group through the 1970s. It was formally dissolved in the early 1980s.

Sources:

Mathison, Richard. Faiths, Cults, and Sects of America. Indianapolis, Ind.: Bobbs-Merrill, 1960.

Ormont, Roger. Love Cults & Faith Healers. New York: Ballantine Books, 1961.

Wheatley, Dennis (Yates) (1897–1977)

British author of many fictional works on occult themes, born on January 8, 1897, and described by a British newspaper writer as "the greatest adventure-writer of our time." Wheatley wrote stories about black magic and witchcraft during the 1930s.

Although Wheatley was essentially a popular writer with a prodigious output, many of his occult thrillers have retained their appeal over several decades and are constantly reprinted; some, such as To the Devil—a Daughter (1953), have been filmed, others translated into 27 different languages. A versatile individual, Wheatley traveled in 56 countries, became proprietor of a wine merchant business, was a member of Churchill's War Cabinet Secret Planning Committee, and invented (with J. G. Links) the Crime Dossier Murder series of fictional stories in the form of complete police files with clues and reports. Born January 8, 1897, in London, England, he was educated at Dulwich College (1911) and privately in Germany. Upon the death of his father in 1926 he became sole owner of a wine company. He served in the British Army in World War I from 1914 to 1919, becoming second lieutenant. After the war he became the director of various companies.

From 1940 to 1941, Wheatley toured England as a member of Sir John Anderson's panel of voluntary speakers on National Service. In 1945 he was a wing commander serving on Sir Winston Churchill's staff, and he worked for three years in offices of the War Cabinet. He was awarded the United States Bronze Star. He was a fellow of the Royal Society of Literature and the Royal Society of Arts.

Wheatley also edited the Dennis Wheatley Library of the Occult, a series of reprints of significant occult books by other writers. His nonfiction volume, The Devil and All His Works (1971), reproduced much of the popular fiction about witches and Satanists. He died November 11, 1977.

Wheatley, J(ames) M(elville) O(wen) (1924–)

Assistant professor of philosophy, active in the field of parapsychology. He was born February 29, 1924, at Guelph, Ontario, Canada. He studied at the University of New Brunswick (B.S., 1947; M.A., 1949) and the University of Toronto (Ph.D. philosophy, 1957). He joined the faculty of the University of Toronto and taught there for many years.

Wheatley has taken special interest in the philosophy of parapsychology, the question of survival, quantitative research in extrasensory perception, psychokinesis, and epistemological aspects of psi. He worked with Karlis Osis in an exploratory study among college students concerning clairvoyance scores in card reading. He was an associate member of the Parapsychological Association.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Wheatley, J. M. O. "Implications for Philosophy." In Philosophical Dimensions of Parapsychology. Edited by H. L. Edge. Springfield, Ill.: Charles Thomas, 1976.

Whistling

Various superstitions are connected with whistling. It has long been considered unlucky for women to whistle. It was unlucky for sailors to whistle aboard ship, because it was thought that doing so might raise a wind. It was also considered unlucky for miners to whistle in a mine, since this might be followed by an explosion.

A more recent superstition is that whistling in a theater or its dressing rooms may cause a play to fail.

White, Rhea A(melia) (1931–)

Prominent American parapsychologist. Born May 6, 1931, in Utica, New York, she studied at Pennsylvania State University (B.A., 1953). After graduation she spent four years as a research fellow at the Parapsychology Laboratory, Duke University (1958), became a research assistant at the Foundation for Integral Research (1959), and worked as a research and editorial associate at the American Society for Psychical Research (1959–63).

She was a charter member of the Parapsychological Association and held the offices of secretary (1958, 1962), council member (1958, 1960–63), and president (1984). She was the director of information of the American Society for Psychical Research beginning in 1965. She published a series of bibliographical articles for the successive editions of Advances in Parapsychological Research, and was editor of the Parapsychological Association's Research in Parapsychology from 1981–1985. She also edited Theta for the Psychical Research Foundation from 1981–1986. Her background in library science led to the first of a series of bibliographical publications with her 1973 Parapsychology: Sources of Information.

In 1981 she founded the Parapsychology Sources of Information Center, an organization with bibliographical control over the vast and ever-growing body of parapsychological and related material. The Psi-Line Database System was the first computerized database of the literature on psychical research and parapsychology. The center publishes Parapsychology Abstracts International, providing brief summaries of periodical literature from English, Spanish, Dutch, Portuguese, Italian, German, French, Polish, Japanese, and Russian researchers. The center's other important publications include bibliographies on specific paranormal topics and reading lists for students, the general public, and specialists. In 1992 White published Parapsychology: New Sources of Information and in 1994, with Michael Murphy, she wrote In the Zone: Transcendent Experience in Sports.

White also has direct involvement in parapsychological research, and quite apart form her bibliographical work, she has published on a wide variety of topics. Address: EHE Network, 414 Rockledge Rd., New Bern, NC 28562. Website: http://www.ehe.org.

Sources:

Anderson, Margaret L., and Rhea A. White. "A Survey of Work on ESP and Teacher-Pupil Attitudes." Journal of Parapsychology 22, no. 4 (1958).

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Murphy, Gardner, and Rhea White. Challenge of Psychical Research: A Primer of Parapsychology. New York: Harper & Row, 1961.

Murphy, Michael, and Rhea A. White. The Psychic Side of Sports. Reading, Mass.: Addison-Wesley, 1978.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

White, Rhea. "Comparison of Old and New Methods of Response to Targets in ESP Experiments." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 58 (1964): 21–56.

———. "Depth Perspectives and Experimental Parapsychology." International Journal of Parapsychology 2, no. 2 (1960).

———. "ESP Score Level in Relation to Students' Attitudes Toward Teacher-Agents Acting Simultaneously." Journal of Parapsychology 22, no. 1 (1958).

———. "The Relationship Between Changes in Student Attitude and ESP Scoring." Journal of Parapsychology 22, no. 3 1958.

White, Rhea, and Laura A. Dale. Parapsychology: Sources of Information. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1973.

White, Stewart Edward (1873–1946)

Author who published a number of books of "channeled" material. Born March 12, 1873, in Grand Rapids, Michigan, he studied at the University of Michigan (Ph.D., 1895; M.A., 1903). In 1904 he married Elizabeth (Betty) Grant, and they settled in California where he became well known as an author of many books, articles, and short stories dealing with his experiences around the state in mining and lumber camps, and on exploration trips.

In 1922 he and Betty met a couple known in the literature as Joan and Darby. Several years earlier the couple had been playing with a Ouija board and made contact with a spirit entity, "Stephen," who became the source for a book they published in 1920 as Our Unseen Guest. Joan had become a full trance medium. Betty eventually followed a similar course and also became a medium in contact with a group of entities called simply "the Invisibles." Betty channeled numerous sessions with them. In 1937, after many years of quietly working with a very small group, Stewart told the story of Betty's development and repeated the basic teachings of "the Invisibles" in what has become a classic work in the field, The Betty Book. White believed that these messages embodied a valuable philosophy and religious interpretation for daily life. Enough readers agreed and a second "Betty" book was issued in 1939 as Across the Unknown.

Betty died in 1939, and in the months after her death, White received communication he believed to be from her through Joan. These were gathered into a book, The Unobstructed Universe (1940), which proved the most popular volume in the series and remains in print.

The continued response, possibly accelerated by the war, led to a number of further books. The Road I Know (1942) was an anthology of further selections from the material Betty had channeled. Anchors to Windward (1943) was a philosophical treatment of the Betty material. The Stars Are Still There (1946) grew out of specific questions sent to White during the war. With Folded Wings (1947), the last in the Betty book series, was published posthumously.

White died September 18, 1946, at Hillsborough, California. After his death, two manuscripts remained, both reflective of White's own development as a medium. One, The Job of Living, was published in 1948; the other, The Gaelic Manuscripts, was never published, though it circulated among White enthusiasts in mimeographed form.

Sources:

Joan and Darby. Our Unseen Guest. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1920.

Melton, J. Gordon. The Betty Book Literature of Stewart Edward White. Evanston, Ill.: The author, 1971.

White, Stewart Edward. Across the Unknown. N.p., n.d.

———. Anchors to Windward. N.p., 1943.

———. The Betty Book. N.p., 1939.

———. The Road I Know. N.p., 1942.

———. The Stars Are Still There. N.p., 1946.

———. The Unobstructed Universe. N.p., 1940.

———. With Folded Wings. N.p., 1947.

White Brotherhood

The White Brotherhood, a Bulgarian occult order with roots in Rosicrucianism, was founded in 1900 by Peter Konstantinov Deunov (1864–1944), known more popularly by his spiritual name, Beinsa Douno. Douno was raised in the Bulgarian Orthodox Church and at one time thought of being a monk. However, he became a school teacher and then traveled to the United States, where he received a seminary degree in religion and one in medicine. Shortly after his return to Bulgaria, he began a period of seclusion during which time, in 1897, he had an initiatory experience that he described as the Spirit of God descending upon him. He emerged from the experience as The Master and began to take students. He organized the White Brotherhood with his first three students, whom he called to the first of what would become an annual meeting in August of 1900. He also began to write books out of his own mystical experiences.

Douno traveled widely through Bulgaria, and the organization grew through the first decade of the new century. By 1914 Douno was ready to relocate his base of activity to Sofia, the capital. However, his presence in the country's center also called the attention of the government and the closely aligned Orthodox church to his work. Various efforts were made to suppress the movement. Members were arrested and meetings were broken up. In 1922 Douno was excommunicated from the Bulgarian church. However, the movement persisted, and in 1926 a new headquarters was opened in Izfreva, not far from Sofia. A complex of buildings, including a publishing center, soon sprang up.

Among the popular elements of his teachings, paneurhythmy, a set of exercises set to music, was introduced in 1934. Two years later, the first group of the White Brotherhood was brought together in Paris, and other followers emerged in Latvia and Estonia. However, the positive upward course of the movement was brought to a halt by World War II (1939–45) and the changes in the political situation following the war. Douno died only a few weeks after the Soviet Army took control of Bulgaria in 1944.

After the war, the brotherhood reorganized under a council and moved to pick up the work as before. The first major sign of trouble came in 1948 when the headquarters property was nationalized. As a realization of the new hostile environment grew, steps were taken to preserve Douno's writings. A series of suppressive acts culminated in the leveling of the headquarters community in 1970. However, by this time work had been developed in Western Europe and the United States, and manuscripts had found their way throughout Europe and were being translated. In the meantime, Michael Aivanhov, who in 1937 had been sent to take charge of the work in Paris, founded his own movement continuing Douno's teachings in a separate organization, now known as the Universal Great Brotherhood.

Douno saw his work as continuing the true spirituality of Christianity and a modern transmission of the eternal religion of Christ. He thought of the White Brotherhood as continuing the Church of St. John as opposed to the official church, the Church of St. Peter.

The White Brotherhood survived as a small movement in the West, and was able to revive in Bulgaria as soon as the political changes at the beginning of the 1990s brought a new level of religious freedom to the country. It was officially recognized in November of 1990. A periodical was reinstituted in 1991. The rebuilding of a White Brotherhood community and an educational center in Sofia began in 1995.

Today the brotherhood exists as a vital international organization with international headquarters in Sofia and North American headquarters at Telesma-Evida Publishing, P.O. Box 174, Ahuntsic, Montreal, PQ Canada H2L 3N7. It has an expansive Internet presence at http://www.vega.bg/~beinsa_douno/.

Sources:

Douno, Beinsa. The Master Speaks: The Word of the Great White Brotherhood. Los Angeles: Sunrise Press & Books, 1970.

———. Reminiscences: Talks with the Master. Los Angeles: Sunrise Press, 1968.

———. The Teachings of Beinsa Douno: Pearls of Love. Glasgow: Beyond the Rising Sun Publications, n.d.

White Dove's Message

White Dove's Message is a quarterly magazine that features the channeled messages of Zavena White Dove, the name adopted by a medium now residing in Wichita, Kansas. The name White Dove was given to her as a child by angelic beings she came to know as her playmates. The little angels told her they were from Gabriel, her guardian angel. They also prophesied that she would one day become a messenger of the Spirit and would experience three confirmatory events that would designate the time that she was to start using her "rightful" name. Two of these events occurred in the late 1980s when she received messages from two Native American guides, one an Apache and one a Cheyenne. The third occurred two years later in a vision of the Indian hierarchy that confirmed the time had come. Since that time she has been known as White Dove. An associated near-death experience confirmed that she had a special mission to fulfill.

In 1997, she was given the additional name Zavena during an initiation ceremony where it was revealed that she was now a Cosmic Inter-galactic Server. She began using her full name on September 21, 1997. She brings messages from a spectrum of beings including her Native American guide, Silver Eagle, a light being, Firefly, and ascended master Kuthumi. She is also a Reiki Master and teaches Reiki healing.

White Dove's Message was launched in 1993 as a monthly, but in 1999 became a quarterly publication. At about the same time, White Dove began her Internet presence and posts a daily message for interested readers. The Internet site is at http://www.whitedovemsg.com/. Much of the emphasis in White Dove's communication concerns the handling of the ongoing and even accelerated changes in the lives of people involved in the post-New Age spiritual community.

White Dove's Message may be contacted at P.O. Box 781792, Wichita, KS 67278-1792.

Sources:

White Dove's Message. http://www.whitedovemsg.com/. June 10, 2000.

White Eagle Lodge

British Spiritualist organization founded in 1934, arising from the mediumship of Grace Cooke (d. 1979), assisted by her husband Ivan Cooke, and presenting the teachings channeled from her Native American spirit guide, "White Eagle." These teachings present "a way of life which is gentle and in harmony with the laws of life," involving the belief that "God, the eternal spirit, is both Father and Mother, and that the Son—the Cosmic Christ—is also the light which shines in every human heart."

Cooke worked for many years as a medium primarily with the Stead Borderland Library in London. Then in 1930 she was contacted by a member of the Polaire Brotherhood in France, who informed her that Arthur Conan Doyle, an author and Spiritualist, had chosen her as the medium through which he wished to speak from the other side. She was also given a six-pointed star as a symbol for new work.

The lodge teaches that there is a unity that runs through all forms of life, visible and invisible, including the fairy and angelic kingdoms. White Eagle spoke of five Cosmic Laws: (1) reincarnation—the soul may return to earth many times until it has mastered all the lessons it must learn; (2) cause and effect—the belief in the law of karma (i.e., "as you sow, so you will reap"); (3) opportunity—every experience in life is an opportunity for an individual to become more Godlike and everyone is placed in exactly the right conditions needed "to learn lessons and give service"; (4) correspondence—the belief that "as above, so below." The microcosm is part of the macrocosm. We are cells of the cosmos, just as our bodies, in turn, are made up of cells, with the same laws applying at all levels; (5) equilibrium and balance—the law connected to karma, described as "the law of compensation." It claims that no action can continue indefinitely, but will travel just as far before a reaction pulls things back to normal. Human joy and sorrow follow this law (i.e., extremes of emotion will eventually cause a reaction that pulls the soul back to normal).

The physical body is considered the outer garment of the soul, which includes subtler bodies of emotions and thoughts, and the spirit that is the heart of the soul and is known as the "Christ Spirit," or real self. Spiritual healing involves concentrating divine power on the soul of the sick person to dissolve the disharmony causing the sickness. In "absent healing," six healers sit as a group, sending out "rays of spiritual light." In lone healing, 36 healers combine meditative healing from their own homes. In contact healing, there is a laying on of hands at special lodge services. The lodge also propagates "spiritual communion," a pure form of meditation.

Membership in the lodge is in three stages—ordinary membership, progressing to "outer brother," and eventually to "inner brother." The lodge publishes a bimonthly magazine, Stella Polaris, which includes White Eagle teachings, answers to readers' questions and general articles on healing and meditation.

The lodge is headquartered at New Lands, Rake, Liss, Hampshire, GU33 7HY, England, and has a major center at 9 St. Mary Abbot's Pl., Kensington, London, W8 6L5, England. There are also branches throughout the British Isles. The movement spread to the United States in the 1950s and is headquartered at St. John's Retreat Center, P.O. Box 930, Montgomery, TX 77356. Website: http://www.saintjohns.org/.

Sources:

Cooke, Grace, ed. The Illuminated Ones. Liss, England: White Eagle Publishing Trust, 1966.

Cooke, Ivan, ed. The Return of Arthur Conan Doyle. Liss, England: White Eagle Publishing Trust, 1956.

Lind, Ingrid. The White Eagle Inheritance. Wellingborough, England: Turnstone Press, 1984.

The Story of the White Eagle Lodge. Liss, England: White Eagle Publishing Trust, 1986.

Whiteman, J(oseph) H(ilary) M(ichael) (1906– ?)

Mathematician and writer on religion, science, and parapsychology. He was born on November 2, 1906. He attended Highgate School, London; Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge; and the University of Cape Town (Ph.D. and M.Mus.). He joined the faculty of mathematics at the University of Cape Town and remained there for many years (1939–71). He was named emeritus professor of mathematics in 1972. Also an accomplished musician, he published some 100 articles on music in the journal South African Music Teacher, and he also contributed to various symposia on music.

Whiteman experienced out-of-the-body travel, prompting his interest in parapsychology. He has described these experiences in several of his books and articles. From a scientific perspective, he has also argued that the new post-quantum physics will provide a new worldview that has a place for parapsychology and psychic phenomena. He has contributed numerous papers on parapsychology and related subjects to various publications. He received the Valkhoff Medallion from the South African Society for Psychical Research for his contributions to the field.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Whiteman, J. H. M. The Mystical Life: An Outline of Its Nature and Teachings from the Evidence of Direct Experience. London: Faber & Faber, 1961.

———. "The Mystical Way, and Habitualizing of Mystical States." In Handbook of States of Consciousness. Edited by B. Wolman and Montague Ullman. New York: Van Nostrand Reinhold, 1986.

———. "Parapsychology and Physics." In Handbook of Parapsychology. Edited by B. Wolman. New York: Van Nostrand Reinhold, 1977.

———. "The Process of Separation and Return in Experiences Fully 'Out of the Body.' " Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 50 (1956).

Whiteman, Michael. Philosophy of Space and Time and the Inner Constitution of Nature: A Phenomenological Study. London: Allen & Unwin; New York: Humanities Pub., 1967.

White Order of Thule

The White Order of Thule describes itself as a loose alignment of Aryan minds, hearts, and souls working together for the Cause, that is, the revitalization of the culture-soul of the European people. It is modeled upon the idea of an ancient mystery school that facilitates its members' acquisition of a higher state of consciousness, though it is not a mystery school itself, merely an esoteric brotherhood. The order emerged in the late 1990s when its leader, Nathan Pett, posted information about the group on the Internet.

Thule is the mythical site of the origin of the Aryan race. It is believed that the Aryans have become disunited and need to be called to a new unity to face the challenges of the future. To accomplish this task, the order has acquired the knowledge of the mystery schools of the Hermetic alchemical traditions that it is now offering to the Aryan people. The practical work of the order includes meditation, the use of imagery, and rituals designed to initiate changes in the inner self leading to an expansion of consciousness. Higher consciousness moves the individual past self-consciousness to the level of intuition where direct knowledge of the answers to life's questions is perceived and a vision of Truth seen. The teachings do not replace activism in the cause of racial advancement but are a means of empowering the individual engaged in active work.

The order teaches the Hermetic tradition in a planned course of study that begins with Hermetic philosophy and Jungian psychology, especially the concept of archetypes. Specific archetypes will become the focus of attention and the subject of pathworking, the foundation of the order's esoteric practices. The basic curriculum also includes instruction in Pagan mythology, genealogy, and astrology. The order teaches that the deities of Norse Paganism represent in essence the creative/destructive forces of the cosmos. Students are also advised to supplement their study with additional readings, including the writings of Adolf Hitler, Freidrich Nietsche, Julius Evola, and Oswald Spengler.

The order may be contacted at Box 1473, Deer Park, WA 99006. It publishes a quarterly periodical, Crossing the Abyss. Its Web presence may be accessed at http://www.thulean.org/. The order came to public attention in August of 1999 when it held a ceremony on Whitbey Island, Washington, near the site where Robert Mathews had been killed in a shootout with the FBI. Mathews led The Order, a controversial racialist group in the early 1980s tied to a series of violent crimes.

Sources:

White Order of Thule. http://www.thulean.org/. May 5, 2000.

White Sands Incident

Title of a book by Daniel Fry published in 1954, claiming that the author saw a flying saucer land at the White Sands Proving Ground in New Mexico and took a trip in it. Fry has importance in UFO history for being among the first to claim to have traveled in a UFO.

White Temple Church

The White Temple Church is the ecclesiastical organization associated with the Brotherhood of the White Temple, an occult school headquartered in Sedalia, Colorado. The church emphasizes the "Original Gnostic Teachings of Jesus," the occult beliefs that members of the brotherhood believe Jesus passed on to humankind. The White Temple Church may be contacted c/o the Brotherhood of the White Temple, PO Box 966, Castle Rock, CO 80104.

Whittlesey, John R. B. (1927–)

Data processing analyst who experimented in areas of parapsychology. He was born on July 21, 1927, in Los Angeles, California. He studied at the California Institute of Technology (B.S. physics, 1948; M.S. astronomy, 1950), the University of North Carolina (1951–54), and the Graduate School of Religion, University of Southern California (1960–61). He served with the United States Army (1954–56) and then joined the faculty at the University of California at Los Angeles as a data analyst in 1957.

Whittlesey has taken a special interest in computer statistics and probability as related to ESP and ESP in its relationship to religion and mystical experience. He designed an experiment in the use of the chemical LSD and analyzed data in its relation to extrasensory perception, working with several psychiatrists. He also designed and built an electronic device for experimental testing of precognition, using non-verbal responses from subjects influenced by drugs. He is coauthor of various papers on LSD experiences read before the American Psychiatric Association and the California State Psychological Association.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Whittlesey, John R. B. "Further Comments on Causality." Journal of Parapsychology 17 (September 1953).

———. "Some Comments Apropos of Pooling." Journal of Parapsychology 23 (June 1959).

———. "Some Curious ESP Results in Terms of Variance." Journal of Parapsychology 24 (September 1960).

Whole Again Research Guide

Comprehensive annual directory and resource guide (superseding and incorporating Guide to Psi Periodicals), several editions of which appeared in the 1980s. First published 1982, it was edited by Tim Ryan and Rae Jappinen and had nearly 30 contributors, including Elizabeth M. Werner (of Guide to Psi Periodicals and other publications) and Elisabeth Kübler-Ross. The Guide covered alternative technologies and therapies, New Age teachings, psychic studies, spiritual growth, yoga, UFOs, nature religions, environmental issues, minority rights, as well as media—magazines, newspapers, journals, newsletters, sourcebooks, directories, and bibliographies. It was issued by SourceNet in Santa Barbara, California.

Whole Life

New Age networking journal serving New York City and the northeast with news of current events in holistic health, macrobiotics, ecology, spiritual growth, yoga, gurus, and mysticism. It features a national calendar of events and personalities, as well as directory information. Last known address: Whole Life Enterprises, P.O. Box 2058, New York, NY 10159. Whole Life also created Whole Life Times, a similar networking journal serving Southern California. Whole Life Times is currently an independent venture that sponsors annual New Life expositions in several locations on the West Coast from its headquarters at P.O. Box 1187, Malibu, CA 90265. Website: http://www.wholelifetimes.com/.

Whole Life Expo (Fair)

Annual New Age exposition featuring leading spokespeople and organizations in the fields of health, fitness, education, social action, science, the environment, yoga, spiritual growth, and related topics. Address: Whole Life Expo, National Headquarters, 803 Fourth St., Suite 7, San Rafael, CA 94901. Information on upcoming expositions can be found at http://www.wholelifeexpos.com/.

Whole Life Times

Whole Life Times is one of the more prominent networking journals to emerge in the 1980s to serve the growing New Age Movement. The possibilities of networking as a means of organizing without the burdensome hierarchies of pyramidal structures was placed before New Agers in 1982 by Jessica Lipnack and Jeffrey Stamps in their best-selling book, Networking: The First Report and Directory. Periodicals supplying addresses, phone numbers, and announcements of coming events and gatherings initially appeared in the major metropolitan complexes. In the Northeast, Whole Life served New York and Boston, but soon developed a section including Los Angeles. Whole Life evolved into two editions, one based in New York and one in Los Angeles. By the end of the decade, these had become independent publications with the Los Angeles edition taking the name Whole Life Times.

Whole Life Times follows a model pioneered by Common Ground, the original networking periodical serving the San Francisco Bay area. It is an oversized magazine built around a set of advertisements organized topically into a directory. Groups and events are arranged under such topics as astrology, beauty and personal care, healing and health centers, psychology and counseling, schools and instruction, and spirit and transformation. Each issue also includes an additional supply of display ads, the advertisements paying the cost of the magazine, which is distributed through health food and metaphysical bookstores without charge.

Also included in each issue is a set of feature articles about issues and personalities of interest to the continuing post-New Age community. These range from issues of health and personal spiritual and psychic development to profiles of channelers and psychic counselors. Additional content is supplied with news coverage and columns.

Whole Life Times is the largest circulating of the regional networking periodicals in the United States. It also organizes the Whole Life Expo held annually in the Los Angeles area. Publishing offices of the Whole Life Times may be contacted at P.O. Box 1187, Malibu, CA 90265. Its website is at http://www.wholelifetimes.com/.

Sources:

Whole Life Times. http://www.wholelifetimes.com/. February 28, 2000.

Whole Life Times. Malibu, Calif., n.d.

The Whole Person

The Whole Person—Calendar of Events in Southern California is one of several magazines dedicated to networking within the metaphysical/psychic/spiritual community in the greater Los Angeles area. The Whole Person is devoted entirely to announcements of upcoming events and has no feature articles, news columns, or book reviews. Over half of the content of any issue is given over to display advertisements. It is designed entirely to serve individuals looking for activities to attend of a spiritual and metaphysical nature, from yoga classes to lectures by visiting teachers.

The Whole Person is published monthly and built around two extensive lists of want-ad-type announcements of events. The initial list provides basic information on events (including location, registration, and sponsor) occurring on each day of the month (with three to four pages devoted to each day). A second list provides information on ongoing events, primarily weekly gatherings held by metaphysical or Eastern spirituality groups on a continuing basis. These announcements are solicited monthly and published without cost to the person or group submitting them.

Readers may subscribe to The Whole Person for home delivery, but the overwhelming percentage of copies is distributed monthly to stores in the areas covered by the announcements and given away free. The many advertisements pay the cost of the publication. From a small newsletter in the 1980s, The Whole Person has grown into a large magazine of more than 100 pages per issue. It may be ordered from The Whole Person, P.O. Box 2398, Santa Barbara, CA 93102. It is assembled by Leslie Snyder and a small staff.

Sources:

The Whole Person. Santa Barbara, Calif., n.d.

Whymant, (A.) Neville (John) (1894– ?)

Author and editor who investigated the phenomena of the medium George Valiantine. He was born on September 4, 1894, at Rothwell, England, and studied at Oxford University (Ph.D.). After World War I he served as a professor of Oriental literature and philosophy at the Universities of Tokyo and Peking. He became an editor and journalist in 1926 and eventually became editor of The Indian Nation in the 1930s. He was advisor to the embassy of the Republic of China in London from 1947 to 1950.

In addition to various books on China and the Chinese, he published Psychical Research in China (1925), dealing with sand painting and "ghost photographs," and Psychic Adventures in New York (1928). Whymant was present at séances with the medium George Valiantine, who produced messages in ancient Chinese languages. A report of the phenomena was published in the Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (April 1928).

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

WICA See Witchcraft International Craft Association

WICA Newsletter

Early newsletter serving the Wiccan and neo-pagan community as it emerged as a national network in the 1970s. Its editor, Leo Martello, a former Spiritualist medium, wrote a number of books detailing the practice of contemporary witches. Martello heads Witchcraft International Craft Associates in New York City.

Wicca

The first world religion to originate in England, Wicca represents a new religious expression inspired by pre-Christian ethnic and tribal religions. The word wiccan as a plural for witch was used in Old English; its singular forms were feminine wicce with the masculine form as wicca. Pronounced with hard C's instead of the former "witch-a," the term Wicca was adopted by Gerald Gardner and other English Witches in the 1940s to distinguish their life-affirming and fertility-based Pagan religion from Satanism or individual sorcery.

Although Wiccan writers are prolific, Wicca has no sacred texts as such to guide belief and practice. Most Wiccans view the Divine as dual (male/female) or plural, accept the idea of reincarnation, and see the natural world as a manifestation of divine force rather than as something created by a transcendent god. Attunement of the self to natural cycles through seasonal rituals is Wicca's central public religious practice.

Wicca as a religion has no central authority nor organization, although various umbrella groups such as the Covenant of the Goddess in North America and the Pagan Federation in the United Kingdom include many individuals and groups. The primary organization remains the coven, ideally numbering thirteen persons but in actuality often comprised of fewer. Because of Wicca's rapid growth, however, some adherents now seek more formal organizational plans and credentialing of leaders (priests and priestesses), a trend resisted by those Witches who hold individual and small-group practice and experience to be primary. Wiccans often identify with a particular "tradition"—a school of teaching or an initiatory lineage—but the boundaries between traditions are loosely drawn, and new traditions are constantly being created.

Estimates of the number of Wiccans in North America in 2000 ranged from 300,000 to the low millions. Sociological studies of Wicca show its followers as tending to be younger and better-educated than the population overall.

Wiccan Church of Canada

The Wiccan Church of Canada is one of the pioneering organizations of the modern Witchcraft movement in Canada. It was founded by two Wiccan priests, Tamara James and Richard F. James, who had their initial contacts with Neo-Paganism while in California in 1977. They moved to Toronto two years later, where they founded the Wiccan Church of Canada and opened an occult store that catered to Pagans and witches. By 1983 the community had grown to the point that an initial regional Pagan festival could be held. In 1984 the first of several covens formed within the church.

It is the belief of the church that many of the important ultimate questions of life are unanswerable. Humans cannot know about the origin of the universe, the reality of life after death, or the mechanics of the miraculous. Thus, the religious answers that are given to such questions carry a large element of subjectivity. They must be held with some reserve and must not become the basis of intolerance and judgmental attitudes toward those who believe differently. Morality also falls into the same category. It is a human creation. However, the church believes that society has a right to organize and pass laws that protect individuals from violence and the land from outside forces.

Its ignorance asserted, the church believes that the universe is self-aware, and that elements of that awareness have been differentiated as the deities. The number of deities is unknown. Awareness is genderless and individual deities may be either male or female. There is also an ordering among the deities and it is proper to speak of the greater and lesser deities. The Wiccan church follows primarily a European format with worship centered upon the eight annual festivals common to Pagans and also the small coven gatherings at the new and full moon (esbats). The church also has its own rituals to designate important moments in the life cycle, from the naming ceremony for the new born (wiccaning) to the passing from this incarnation (funeral). It performs both weddings and handpartings (for couples that are separating).

All of the priests and priestesses of the church constitute a ruling Priesthood Council. Their job is to train members and any new priests. The church is headquartered at 109 Vaughn Rd., Toronto, ON, Canada M6C 2L9. Most of its several hundred members reside in Ontario. Its webpage may be found at http://www.wcc.on.ca/.

Sources:

Hopman, Ellen Evert, and Lawrence Bond. People of the Earth: The New Pagans Speak Out. Rochester, Vt.: Destiny Books, 1996.

James, Richard. The WIC-CAN Handbook. Toronto: Wiccan Church of Canada, 1987.

Rabinovotch, Shelley Tsivia. "The Institutionalization of the Wicca in Ontario via the Wiccan Church of Canada." Unpublished paper in the American Religion Collection, Davidson Library, University of California—Santa Barbara, 1991.

Wickland, Carl August (1861–1945)

Physician, psychiatrist, and Spiritualist who spent more than three decades researching and experimenting with the application of Spiritualist techniques to assist those suffering from mental illnesses. Wickland was born on February 14, 1861, in Leiden, Sweden. He qualified as a physician at Dunham Medical College, Chicago, Illinois, later becoming a medical advisor for the National Psychological Institute, Los Angeles.

He claimed that discarnate spirits caused some phases of mental illness in the living, and his book Thirty Years Among the Dead (1924) reports his experiences. Using the services of his wife as a medium, he operated what amounted to a rescue circle dealing with what Spiritualists describe as earth-bound entities who attach themselves to unsuspecting individuals. Their work in diagnosing and treating mental patients believed to be possessed by spirit entities had much in common with that of Titus Bull. Mrs. Wickland died in March 1937; Carl Wickland died November 13, 1945.

Widdershins

Widdershins, a Pagan periodical that serves the northwest Pagan and Wiccan community, is a tabloid newspaper distributed without cost in the states of Washington and Oregon. It is unique, as most Pagan publications have attempted to transform from informal newsletters into newsstand magazines. In contrast, Widdershins has adopted a popular format that has proved successful in the New Age community.

Each issue of Widdershins includes several longer articles of interest to Neo-Pagans, with special attention to themes that are common to all of the variety within the larger world of contemporary Paganism and Witchcraft. The publication also attempts to introduce non-Pagan readers with the essentials of Pagan spirituality and practice, while emphasizing those concerns of common interest with the larger New Age community such as ecology, attention to the changing seasons, and feminism.

Neo-Pagans, still a miniscule minority largely invisible within the larger culture, also have a need for communication among its far-flung groups, the covens and groves, most of whom meet in private homes.

Widdershins carries notices of pubic Pagan events and of individuals and groups that are open to contact. Advertising carries notices of Pagan business, especially stores that carry Pagan and Wiccan books and supplies (candles, incense, and ritual implements).

Widdershins is published eight times annually, its appearance following the eight major Pagan festivals that are spread evenly throughout the year. It is published by Emerald City/Silver Moon Productions, 12345 Lake City Way NE, Ste. 268, Seattle, WA 98125. While distributed free throughout the Seattle and Portland metropolitan regions, it is also available by subscription for delivery to individual addresses. It maintains a Web presence at http://www.widdershins.org/. As many Pagans still do not feel comfortable with identifying themselves openly, most of the editors and writers for Widdershins are listed by their first names only.

Sources:

Widdershins. Seattle, Wash., n.d.

Widdershins. http://www.widdershins.org/. May 1, 2000.

Wiesinger, Alois (1885–1955)

Abbot of the Cistercian Order who was active in the field of parapsychology. He was born on June 3, 1885, at Magdalenaberg, Upper Austria. Ordained in 1909, he received his doctorate in theology in 1912 at the University of Innsbruck. He taught philosophy for five years (1912–17) and then became abbot of the Cistercian Monastery, Schlierbach, when World War I was beginning. During his lengthy career as abbot, he took a great interest in such parapsychological phenomena as poltergeists and materialization.

In addition to his writings on Christianity, he was editor-publisher of the journal Glaube und Erkenntnis (Journal for Christian Parapsychology) and author of Okkulte Phanomene im Lichte der Theologie (Occult Phenomena from the Theological Point of View, 1948). He died January 3, 1955, at Schlierbach, Upper Austria. The German periodical Die Vergorgene Welt published a tribute to his lasting contributions as a parapsychologist.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Wiesinger, Alois. "Wie Stellt Sich der Katholik zu den okkulten Erscheinungen?" (The attitude of the Catholic toward occult phenomena). Neue Wissenschaft (1953).

Wilber, Ken

Psychologist and writer on mysticism and transpersonal consciousness. He was one of the pioneers of transpersonal psychology, and his early volume, The Spectrum of Consciousness (1977), is considered one of its classic statements. For several years, he was editor-in-chief of the journal ReVision, prior to its acquisition by Heldref Publications.

Wilber has taken a special interest in the study of new religious movements in the light of transpersonal psychology, arguing for a non-reductionistic approach that is rooted in a transcendental structuralism and takes into account the various stages of human evolution, which culminates in God-realization. Wilber is a Buddhist but hailed the mystic Da Free John as a New Age avatar. In the 1980s he became the general editor of the New Science Library, published by Random House.

Sources:

Anthony, Dick, Bruce Ecker, and Ken Wilber. Spiritual Choices: The Problem of Recognizing Authentic Paths to Inner Transformation. New York: Paragon House Publishers, 1987.

Wilber, Ken. Eye to Eye: The Quest for the New Paradigm. Garden City, N.Y.: Anchor/Doubleday, 1983.

———. No Boundary: Eastern and Western Approaches to Personal Growth. Los Angeles: Center Publications, 1979.

———. A Sociable God: A Brief Introduction to a Transcendental Sociology. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1982.

———. Up From Eden: A Transpersonal View of Human Evolution. Garden City, N. Y.: Anchor Press/Doubleday, 1981.

Wilber, Ken, Jack Engler, and Daniel P. Brown. Transformation of Consciousness: Conventional and Contemplative Perspectives on Development. Boston: New Science Library, 1986.

Wild-Women

In German folklore the Seligen Fräulein were a species of nature spirits. An early account is provided by Thomas Keightley in his book The Fairy Mythology (1850):

"The Wilde Frauen or Wild-women of Germany bear a very strong resemblance to the Elle-maids of Scandinavia. Like them they are beautiful, have fine flowing hair, live within hills, and only appear singly or in the society of each other. They partake of the piety of character we find among the German Dwarfs.

"The celebrated Wunderberg, or Underberg, on the great moor near Salzburg, is the chief haunt of the Wild-women. The Wunderberg is said to be quite hollow, and supplied with stately palaces, churches, monasteries, gardens, and springs of gold and silver. Its inhabitants, besides the Wild-women, are little men, who have charge of the treasures it contains, and who at midnight report to Salzburg to perform their devotions in the cathedral; giants, who used to come to the Church of Grödich and exhort the people to lead a godly and pious life; and the great emperor Charles V., with golden crown and sceptre, attended by knights and lords."

Keightley continues:

"The inhabitants of the village of Grödich and the peasantry of the neighbourhood assert that frequently, about the year 1753, the Wild-women used to come out of the Wunderberg to the boys and girls that were keeping the cattle near the hole within Glanegg, and give them bread to eat.

"The Wild-women used frequently to come to where the people were reaping. They came down eagerly in the morning, and in the evening, when the people left off work, they went back into the Wunderburg without partaking of the supper.

"It once happened near this hill, that a little boy was sitting on a horse which his father had tethered on the headland of the field. Then came the Wild-women out of the hill and wanted to take away the boy by force. But the father, who was well acquainted with the secrets of this hill, and what used to occur there, without any dread hasted up to the women and took the boy from them, with these words: 'What makes you presume to come so often out of the hill, and now to take away my child with you? What do you want to do with him?' The Wild-women answered: 'He will be better with us, and have better care taken of him than at home. We shall be very fond of the boy, and he will meet with no injury.' But the father would not let the boy out of his hands, and the Wild-women went away weeping bitterly.

"One time the Wild-women came out of the Wunderberg, near the place called the Kugelmill, which is prettily situated on the side of this hill, and took away a boy who was keeping cattle. This boy, whom every one knew, was seen about a year after by some wood-cutters, in a green dress, and sitting on a block of this hill. Next day they took his parents with them, intending to search the hill for him, but they all went about it to no purpose, for the boy never appeared any more." (See also Fairies)

Sources:

Arrowsmith, Nancy, and George Moorse. A Field Guide to the Little People. New York: Wallaby Books, 1977.

Will

Will, a basic category in philosophy, emerged in the nineteenth century as a concern of psychical research, as attempts were made to prove that human will was a dynamic energy. The earliest experimental apparatus was constructed by M. E. Savary d'Odiardy. An investigation of the instrument by the Society for Psychical Research, London (Proceedings, vol. 8, p. 249) dismissed his claims.

Another instrument was designed by Sydney Alrutz, of the University of Uppsala, Sweden. He called it a volometer or "will board." It comprised a small board resting on knife-edged pegs. The longer and heavier end was supported by means of a string attached to a letter scale and held the board in horizontal position. In this position the scale registered a pressure of five ounces. If the short end was depressed, the long end rose and the letter scale showed a decrease of weight.

The task put before the subjects of Alrutz's experiment was to fix their attention on the long end and will its depression. In a number of cases, 40–100 grams of pressure was thus obtained. Among those who attempted the experiment were many members of the Sixth Psychological Congress at Geneva in August, 1909.

Theodore Flournoy wrote after his own test:

"I was able to prove conclusively, after three trials, and under conditions precluding all possibility of fraud or illusion, that the will of these ladies, concentrated upon a certain material object, with a desire to produce a movement in it, ended by producing this movement as if by means of a fluid or an invisible force obeying their mental command."

While these results were impressive, the experiment was flawed by severe methodological vagueness. The experiment demonstrated an unusual effect, but said nothing about the agency involved in causing the change. It could just as easily been an experiment to demonstrate "mesmeric fluid" or ectoplasmic emanations. The intrusion of concepts of "will" have been discarded by parapsychologists in the twentieth century.

Willett, Mrs.

Pseudonym of medium Winifred Margaret Serocold Coombe-Tennant.

William Rufus (William II of England) (ca. 1056–1100)

Son of William the Conqueror, and tyrant of England in the eleventh century. Much disliked, particularly by priests and monks, whom he reduced to extreme poverty, he became the subject of a devilish legend after his welcomed death.

One day when he was out hunting in the year 1100 (the 44th year of his life, the 13th of his reign), he was assassinated by an arrow launched by an unknown assailant. According to the legend, while Rufus was drawing his last breath, the Comte de Comonailles, who had been separated from the hunt, saw a shaggy black goat carrying off a mangled human form, pierced by an arrow. The Comte ordered the goat to halt, asked who he was, and tried to find out where he was going. The goat responded that he was the Devil and was carrying William Rufus off to be judged, condemned for his tyranny, and forced to accompany him (the Devil) to his abode.

Williams, Bessie

Late nineteenth-century British clairvoyant, trance and healing medium, later also known under her married names as Mrs. Fitzgerald and Mrs. Russell Davies. Her spirit control, "Dewdrop," claimed to be a Native American girl and played all the tricks of a mischievous secondary personality on the medium, such as controlling her in an omnibus and talking loudly in a foreign language until the other passengers thought that they were riding with a lunatic.

For a long time, Williams assisted a well-known spiritualist healer known as Dr. Mack in diagnosing medical conditions. She gave her services free. As she took on all the symptoms of the illnesses diagnosed, her failing health compelled her, after a while, to give up this pursuit. W. T. Stead thought highly of the medium's powers and included articles by her on the subject of haunted houses in his journal Borderland.

Sources:

Marryat, Florence. The Spirit World. New York: C. B. Reed, 1894.

———. There Is No Death. New York: Lovell, Coryell, 1891.

———, ed. The Clairvoyance of Bessie Williams. Related by Herself. N.p., 1893.

Williams, Charles

British materialization medium, claiming the spirit control "John King," who worked from 1871 on in partnership with fellow medium Frank Herne. They gave public séances at 61 Lamb's Conduit St., in west central London. The first was held under the patronage of the medium Agnes Guppy-Volckman. The famous transportation of Guppy-Volckman occurred at one of these séances.

Williams often sat with W. Stainton Moses, but the results were always very meager. Moses was in doubt about the authenticity of Williams' mediumship and asked his controls for information. They were reluctant to give it. Catherine Berry's book Experiences in Spiritualism (1876) and A. Smedley's Some Reminiscences (1900) contained enthusiastic accounts, but fraud was often suspected and, in at least one case, glaringly proved.

In Paris, at a séance on May 14, 1874, an attempt was made to seize "John King." He eluded capture and left a piece of drapery behind, the further history of which is not known. The medium was found in his seat. The search of his person revealed nothing suspicious.

In 1878, the research committee of the British National Association of Spiritualists constructed a cabinet with an automatic recording apparatus. An observer sat in another cabinet with a lighted lamp. In one sitting with Williams, a spirit form appeared, sometimes ten or twelve feet from the cabinet. These appearances corresponded with fluctuations recorded by the self-registering apparatus. The maximum loss of weight amounted to 100 pounds. There was no weight in the cabinet that could have been fixed on the weighing platform. Frank Podmore suggested that the medium need only have fastened the suspended cabinet to the floor by a gimlet or a piece of string, but that seemed insufficient to explain fully the extreme variations in weight.

However, a few months after this experiment, in a Spiritualist circle in Amsterdam, Williams and his fellow medium A. Rita were exposed. "Charlie," a materialized spirit, was seized and found to be Rita. Many handkerchiefs, a bottle of phosphorized oil, several yards of very dirty white muslin, a false black beard with brown silk ribbon, and other paraphernalia were found on the persons of the two mediums.

The exposure did not stop a subsequent visit to Russia, where Professor Boutlerof and Alexander Aksakof (a strong believer in Spiritualist phenomena) had what they considered convincing experiences. In a note to Boutlerof's account of the visit in Psychische Studien, Aksakof added:

"I can testify to having received the confirmation of the appearance of John King from Mr. Crookes in his own house, Mrs. Crookes' hand being on William's shoulder while he was asleep behind the curtain; also that in the house of Mrs. MacDougall Gregory, the curtain behind which Williams was placed was in a niche almost hermetically sealed; and that John King appeared above the table, round which the company were assembled in front of the curtain."

Williams, Mrs. M. A.

American materialization medium. Florence Marryat, who sat with her in a public séance in New York without being introduced, described in her book There is No Death (1892) the appearance of her daughter (also named Florence), exactly the way she had seen her in Europe under the mediumships of Florence Cook, Arthur Colman, Charles Williams, and William Eglinton. Another familiar apparition was "Joey," Eglinton's spirit control. Altogether 40 different materializations were witnessed that evening.

In 1894, Williams was the guest of the Duchess of Pomar in Paris. Paul Leymarie, the son of the editor of La Revue Spirite, slipped behind the curtain during the séance and grasped the spirit. When the lights came up Williams was found in flesh-colored tights and the whole apparatus of her fraudulent spirit puppet show was discovered in the cabinet.

Williamson, Cecil H.

British occultist who claimed the power to conjure spirits by ritual magic. He was a graduate of Malvern College and spent some time as a tobacco planter in Rhodesia. During World War II he was in the British Intelligence Service. An expert on witchcraft, he is proprietor of a museum of magic and witchcraft known as the Witches' House, situated in the small Cornish village of Bocastle, England, near Tintagel. The museum was originally based at Bourton-on-the-Water in the Cotswold countryside, but closed about 1966. Williamson was formerly an associate and friend of witchcraft revivalist Gerald B. Gardner, who also ran a Museum of Magic and Witchcraft on the Isle of Man.

Williamson, George Evans (1887– ?)

A businessman active in South African parapsychology. He was born on January 14, 1887, at Malvern, England. He studied at Rugby School (1900–05) and Cambridge University (M.A., LL.B., 1908). He served in the British Army during World War I (1914–18) and then became a businessman in England (1918–39). He moved to South Africa as World War II began and lived there for the rest of his life. He was a founding member and president for some years of the Cape Town Psychic Club and Library, and a fellow of the College of Psychic Science, London.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Williamson, George Hunt (1926–1986)

George Hunt Williamson, a metaphysical teacher, flying saucer contactee, and bishop, was born on December 9, 1926, in Chicago, Illinois. As a youth Williamson had a variety of psychic experiences capped by a vivid out-of-body experience in his late teens which aroused his interest in the occult. He attended college and studied anthropology, though he never attained the advanced degrees he later claimed. In 1951 he read The Flying Saucers Are Real by Donald Keyhoe and became interested in UFOs. Thus it was that in 1952, he and his wife, Betty, then living in Prescott, Arizona, met another couple interested in the saucers, Alfred and Betty Bailey. One evening the four experimented with automatic writing and received a message purportedly from an extraterrestrial, Nah-9 of Solar X Group. In subsequent communications, he and other extraterrestrials warned of a nuclear blast about to occur on Earth. The ongoing messages received by the small group later became the basis of a 1954 book, The Saucers Speak!

His involvement in contact with the space entities led Williamson to George Adamski, and he, his wife, and the Baileys began to commute to Southern California to attend Adamski's lectures. Adamski channeled messages from his space contacts, one of which heralded an imminent face-to-face contact. That contact occurred on November 20, 1952, when the Williamsons, the Baileys, Adamski, and two of his associates met at Blythe, California, and headed into the nearby desert. Here Adamski would have his meeting with Orthon, which the rest looked upon from some distance. After Adamski told his story to the press, the Williamsons moved near Adamski's residence at Palomar, but soon parted company over Adamski's public stance against channeling.

Following the publication of The Saucers Speak!, Williamson was briefly associated with fellow contactee Dick Miller at the Telonic Research Center, but soon moved to Peru. There, under the name Brother Philip, he founded the Brotherhood of the Seven Rays, an occult community that attracted not only other contactees, but many of a theosophical inclination. This was Williamson's most productive period as a writer. He authored Secret of the Andes (as Brother Philip) (1958), Secret Places of the Lion (1958), UFOs Confidential (with John McCoy) (1958), and Road in the Sky (1959), and a volume he had written earlier, Other Tongues—Other Flesh, was also published (1957). He was the first to call attention to the Nasca lines as a possible artifact related to extraterrestrials.

By 1958 the Peruvian experiment had come to an end, and Williamson spent the next years touring the world and lecturing to contactee-oriented audiences. However, by the early 1960s he disappeared from the flying saucer world. In fact, in 1969 he legally changed his name to Michael D'Obenovic, asserting that this was the real name of his Serbian-American family prior to their migrating to America. Also, in 1971, he was ordained as a priest in the Liberal Catholic Church by Archbishop Gerrit Munik and became the priest of a small congregation in Cornville, California. Early in the 1970s he left the Liberal Catholic Church and in 1974 was consecrated as a bishop by John Marion Stanley of the Orthodox Church of the East. He was consecrated a second time in 1977 by Albert R. Coady of the Eastern Catholic Syro-Chaldean Archdiocese of North America, like Stanley's church, a small independent Orthodox jurisdiction. Both jurisdictions were aligned with the Charismatic Movement and believed in the experience of glossolalia or speaking-in-tongues.

D'Obenovic had reasserted his Orthodox heritage, but did not agree with the Charismatic emphasis of his consecrators, and a short time after his second consecration, he found a new independent jurisdiction, the Holy Apostolic Catholic Church Syro-Chaldean Diocese of Santa Barbara and Central California. By this time he was pastoring a small parish in Santa Barbara, California. During these years Williamson rarely associated with the flying saucer community though he gave a few conservative lectures on UFOs as D'Obenovic. He died in 1986, and his church dissolved shortly thereafter. A friend who was a member of the church in Santa Barbara subsequently authored a brief biography.

Sources:

Griffin, John. Visitants. Santa Barbara, Calif.: The Author, 1989.

Robinson, John J. "George Hunt Williamson—Revisited." Saucer News 10, no. 3 (September 1963): 9–10.

Ward, Gary L. Independent Bishops: An International Directory. Detroit: Apogee, 1990.

Williamson, George Hunt. Other Tongues—Other Flesh. Amherst, Wis.: Amherst Press, 1957.

———. Road in the Sky. London: Neville Spearman, 1959.

———. The Saucers Speak. London: Neville Spearman, 1963.

———. (under pseudonym Brother Philip). Secret of the Andes. Clarksburg, W.Va.: Sucerian Books, 1958.

———. Secret Places of the Lion. Amherst, Wis.: Amherst Press, 1958.

Williamson, Marianne (1953–)

Marianne Williamson, a popular metaphysical teacher of the channeled text A Course in Miracles (ACIM), was born in Houston, Texas, the daughter of a prominent Jewish lawyer who specialized in immigration law. Her father, Alan Vishnevetsky, had changed the family name when he moved to the United States from his birthplace in Russia. In her youth, she was influenced more by leftist politics than spirituality. She attended Pomona College for two years (1970–72), but found herself rudderless through the next years of her life. In 1977, while living in New York City and trying to develop a singing career, she first encountered A Course in Miracles. Though initially put off by its Christian references, the following year she volunteered at the Foundation for Inner Peace, the corporation set up to publish the books and disseminate the teachings, and assisted in its move to Tiburon, California.

Williamson moved back to Houston in 1979, and she married a businessman. The marriage soon ended in divorce. Her first attempt to appropriate the teachings of the Course led her into a lengthy spiritual crisis which she termed a "dark night of the soul." She eventually found her way to a psychiatrist who was also a student of the ACIM, and attributes his help in getting her through this difficult period. She finally reached the point where she invited God into her life and in essence began her life anew. In 1983 she moved to Southern California. She took a secretarial job with the Philosophical Research Society in Hollywood, and soon became the weekly lecturer on A Course in Miracles.

Articulate, attractive, and entertaining, Williamson soon outgrew the facilities at the society, and went out on her own. She drew large audiences in both Los Angeles and New York, and discovered that she had a special appeal among gay males who had been affected by the AIDS epidemic. Her recognition of her gay audience led her to found the Center for Living, a combination hospice/cultural center for people with catastrophic illnesses. Centers were opened in both Los Angeles and New York. She spent a considerable amount of her time raising financial resources for the center.

Williamson attained a new level of fame beginning in 1991 when the newsstand magazine Vanity Fair published a feature article on her. Then she officiated at the wedding of Liz Taylor and Larry Fortensky. When her first book, A Return to Love, appeared early in 1992, Oprah Winfry invited her on the show and endorsed the volume, copies of which she distributed to the audience that day. Williamson was a national celebrity, her fame reaching far beyond that previously attained by ACIM. In the meantime, dissension had emerged at the two centers. She eventually withdrew from an active administrative role and in the mid-1990s moved to Santa Barbara for several years before relocating to New York.

While being attacked in the press for what were considered by some as personality flaws, Williamson continued to write popular spiritual texts including A Woman's Worth and Illuminata. Still drawing large audiences for her presentations, she remains the single most popular interpreter of A Course in Miracles.

Sources:

Bennetts, Leslie. "Marianne's Faithful." Vanity Fair (June 1991).

Miller, D. Patrick. The Complete Story of the Course: The History, the People and the Controversies Behind A Course in Miracles. Berkeley, Calif.: Fearless Books, 1997.

Oumano, Elena. Marianne Williamson: Her Life, Her Message, Her Miracles. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1992.

Willington Mill

A famous British haunted house. The story of the mill was reported in an early issue of the Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 5) in the 1880s. It was owned by a Mr. Proctor, who was quite used to the ghosts. The following extracts give some idea of the manifestations:

"When two of Mrs. Proctor's sisters were staying at the Mill on a visit their bed was suddenly violently shaken, the curtains hoisted up all round to their tester, and then as rapidly let down again, and this again in rapid succession. The curtains were taken off the next night, with the result that they both saw a female figure, of mysterious substance and of a greyish-blue hue, come out of the wall at the head of the bed and lean over them. They both saw it distinctly. They saw it come out of and go back again into the wall. . . . Mrs. Davidson's sister-in-law had a curious experience on one occasion. One evening she was putting one of the bedrooms aright, and, looking towards the dressing table, saw what she supposed was a white towel lying on the ground. She went to pick it up, but imagine her surprise when she found that it rose up, and went behind the dressing table over the top, down on the floor across the room, disappearing under the door, and was heard to descend the stairs with a heavy step! The noise which it made in doing so was distinctly heard by Mr. Proctor and others in the house."

The old mill foreman once saw a bald-headed, luminous figure at a window. The body was brilliant, diffusing radiance, then it turned bluish and gradually faded from the top down. One of the little girls living in the house said on one occasion: "There is a lady sitting on the bed in Mamma's bedroom. She has eyeholes but no eyes, and she looked so hard at me."

It was the opinion of Andrew Lang that the noises and apparitions at Willington Mill were a stimulus to the novelist Edward Bulwer Lytton in writing his famous supernatural story The Haunted and the Haunters.

Sources:

Armitage, Harold. The Haunted and the Haunters by Lord Lytton, With an Introduction; and an Account of the Haunted House at Willington. London: Simpkin, Marshall, 1925.

Willis, F. L. H.

Instructor in medicine at a New York college, who, as a student, was forced out of the Divinity School at Harvard University in 1857, largely because of his developing mediumship. He came from a respected family in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and was a good speaker and improvisor of poetry. While studying at divinity school, he was discovered to be a strong physical medium, and as a result of charges brought against him by a Professor Eustis, he was expelled. He was charged with simulating spiritual phenomena at Harvard, although the authenticity of the phenomena were attested by the famous author and reformer Thomas Wentworth Higginson.

Willis was observed producing apports, direct writing, and direct music. He was levitated on several occasions and possessed gifts of healing. Once, while in trance and controlled by the spirit of a "Dr. Mason," he performed a difficult operation on a female patient. He achieved this feat prior to his medical studies.

Willis was known to Epes Sargent, author of The Scientific Basis of Spiritualism (1880), who included in this book extracts from a letter written by Willis in May 1879 regarding his materialization of spirit hands. Willis wrote:

"It is 23 years ago that these materializations of hands occurred. . . . On one occasion a gentleman present drew a knife from his pocket with a long, keen blade, and taking no one into his counsel, watching his opportunity, pierced with a violent blow one of the psychic hands. The medium [Willis] uttered a shriek of pain. The sensation was precisely as if the knife had passed through his hand. The gentleman sprang to his feet exultant, thinking he had made a most triumphant exposé of trickery, and fully expected to find the medium's hand pierced and bleeding. To his utter chagrin and amazement there was no trace of a scratch even upon either hand of the medium; and yet to him the sensation was precisely as if the knife had passed through muscle and tendon, and the sensation of pain and soreness remained for hours."

This account of early materialization of spirit hands, long before the days of Eusapia Palladino and other physical mediums, is of special interest for its claim that violence to pseudopodic ectoplasm reacts painfully upon the medium.

Willis described events in his life during a lecture at the Spiritual Institute in London in 1869, published in The Spiritual Magazine (1870, p. 193) and in Human Nature (1869, p. 573).

Sources:

Britten, Emma Hardinge. Modern American Spiritualism. New York: The author, 1870.

Willow Tree

Many superstitions have been connected with the willow ever since, according to the authorized version of the English Bible, the Israelites were said to have hung their harps on willow trees (Psalms 137:2). The weeping willow is said to have drooped its branches since the time of the captivity of the Jews in Babylon, in sympathy with this circumstance.

The common willow was once popularly believed to be under the protection of the devil, and it was said that if any person were to cast a knot upon a young willow, sit under the tree, and renounce his or her baptism, the devil would confer upon that person supernatural power. It was believed in Bulgaria that a fever would depart if you ran around a willow tree three times at sunset, crying "The fever shall take thee and the sun shall warm me."

Wilson, Cedric W(illiam) M(alcolm) (1925–)

Lecturer in pharmacology who has written on parapsychology. He was born on November 23, 1925, in Edinburgh, Scotland. He studied at the University of Edinburgh (B.S., 1947; M.C., Ch.B., 1949; Ph.D., 1954; M.D., 1958). He had a distinguished medical career, and in 1955 he became a lecturer in pharmacology and general therapeutics at the University of Liverpool. In addition to his articles on medical and pharmacological subjects, he has contributed to the Journal of Parapsychology and the International Journal for Parapsychology. Wilson also conducted experiments on the telepathic control of automatic responses and the influence of drugs on such responses.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Wilson, Colin (Henry) (1931–)

Popular British novelist and writer on occultism who attracted worldwide attention with his first book, The Outsider. He was born on June 26, 1931, in Leicester, England. He was educated at the Gateway School, Leicester, and worked at a great variety of jobs before becoming a writer. In 1947 he was employed by a wool company, and he subsequently worked as a laboratory assistant at a secondary technical school (1947–48) and as a tax collector (1947–49). He spent time in Germany and France, and while in Paris he worked on Merlin and Paris Review. Wilson was writer-in-residence at Hollins College, Virginia (1966–67) and now resides in Cornwall, England.

While preparing his first book The Outsider (1956), Wilson researched at public libraries, slept outdoors, and wrote in coffee houses. The book was an instant success, and the term "outsider" passed into common use as a romantic way to denote a type of brilliant misfit capable of surveying life in an original way. Assuming that role himself, Wilson has shown originality in his other writings, and in recent years he has achieved the status of an authority on popular occultism for his many writings and reviews in that subject area. His major study The Occult (1971) is a substantive survey of the emerging occult community at the beginning of the 1970s. He has produced several books annually through the 1980s to the present. He has continued to reflect upon the world of psychic experience, the occult, and alternative spirituality. His novel, The Space Vampires (1975), was turned into a movie.

Sources:

Wilson, Colin. Beyond the Outsider. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin, 1965.

———. Enigmas and Mysteries. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1976.

———. The Essential Colin Wilson. London: Harrap, 1985.

———. The Geller Phenomena. London: Aldus Books, 1976.

———. Mysterious Powers. Reprinted in the United States as They Had Strange Powers. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1975.

———. The Occult. London: Hodder & Stoughton; New York: Random House, 1971.

———. The Unexplained. Lake Oswego, Ore.: Lost Pleiade Press, 1975.

Wilson, Colin, and John Grant, eds. Directory of Possibilities. Exeter, England: Webb & Bower, 1981.

Wilson, Graham (1940–   )

New consciousness entrepreneur who organized the international annual Mind-Body-Spirit Festivals held in England in the 1970s. Born in Yorkshire, England, he spent his preschool years on a farm. After World War II his family returned to London, where Wilson attended Wandsworth Grammar School, studying advanced level zoology and botany and investigating the writing of Rudolph Steiner and other occult mystics in his spare time. He was also active in sports and became a London Youth Athletics champion for the half-mile and cross country events at the age of 18. He played rugby and soccer as well as squash, and he took a great interest in the "peak" experiences of athletes.

After a varied business career, Wilson teamed up with Terry Ellis in 1976 to hire an exhibition hall in London and present the first Festival for Mind and Body, drawing upon his own knowledge of mystical and spiritual philosophies and athletic experiences. He put all his own money into the venture, which was presented in April 1977 in London. It was a success and led to successive annual festivals in Britain, Australia, and the United States. He later launched the UK's first Psychics and Mystics Fayres and the UK's first holistic health clinic, the London Natural Health Clinic.

In organizing these festivals, Wilson and his associates provided a regular focal point for New Age and mystical activities, and he himself believes that "you can use the best of the commercial world to allow in a spiritual flow in such a way that the final product has quality and integrity."

Wilson, James (fl. 18th century)

Through the seventeenth century, astrology enjoyed broad support in the West, though it had come under attack by Protestant church leaders and from the same skeptical voices that had taken the lead in denouncing the witchcraft hysteria. In the eighteenth century it suffered greatly from the new scientific worldview and appeared to be on its way to disappearing completely. However, in the early nineteenth century, as part of the general post-scientific occult revival, astrology also experienced a rebirth. At the fountainhead of that revival in the English-speaking world was James Wilson.

Little is known of this astrologer who worked during the early decades of the nineteenth century except that he published what became the seminal work from which modern astrology would develop. The Dictionary of Astrology, a comprehensive new astrology textbook, appeared in 1819. Wilson had made an extensive study of the teachings accumulated by astrologers over the centuries and rejected everything for which he could find no evidence. He paid particular attention to horary astrology, a branch of astrology that assumes that whenever a question is asked, the answer is reflected in the patterns of the planets at that particular moment. The following year Wilson released a new set of astrological tables, the charts of planetary positions needed by the astrologer to construct a horoscope. Later in the decade he would publish a new edition of Ptolomy's Tetrabiblos, the book from which all Western astrology derives.

Wilson's Dictionary went through several editions and was periodically reprinted throughout the century. It would influence several generations of British astrologers until replaced by the writings of William J. Simmonite and Raphael (Robert Cross Smith). It was regularly quoted by Luke Broughton, the founder of contemporary American astrology.

Sources:

Holden, James H., and Robert A. Hughes. Astrological Pioneers of America. Tempe, Ariz.: American Federation of Astrologers, 1988.

McCaffery, Ellen. Astrology: Its History and Influence in the Western World. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1942.

Wilson, James. Dictionary of Astrology. London: W. Hughes, 1819. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1969.

———. A New and Complete Set of Astrological Tables. London: W. W. Hughes, 1920.

Wilson, John C.

Pseudonym of Felix Morrow, pioneer publisher of occult and metaphysical books under the imprint of University Books, Inc.

Wilson, Percy (1893–   ?)

Electronics and acoustics consultant and Spiritualist leader who also wrote on psychical subjects. He was born on March 8, 1893, in Halofax, Yorkshire, England. He attended Oxford (M.A., 1918). He became the technical editor of The Gramophone magazine in 1924 and later head of the Roads Department, Ministry of Transport, London (1938–49). He was also chairman of Psychic Press and a consultant in electronics and acoustics.

He was president of the Spiritualists' National Union (1950–53), member of the Society for Psychical Research, London, and vice president of the College of Psychic Science, London. He was author of the books Modern Gramophones (1929) and The Gramophone Handbook (1957), and he also published a number of articles on physical and trance mediumship, clairvoyance, clairaudience, and healing in the Spiritualist periodicals Two Worlds, Psychic News and Light.

Wilson, Richard (1926–   )

Physics professor who was active in the field of parapsychology. He was born on April 29, 1926, in London, England. He studied at Oxford University (M.S., Ph.D.). He began his teaching career as a research lecturer at Christ Church, Oxford (1948–53). He spent two years in the United States before returning to Oxford for two years (1953–55), and then moved to the United States as a professor at Harvard University.

A corresponding member of the Society for Psychical Research, London, Wilson devised a random number selector for extrasensory perception.

Sources:

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Wilson, Richard. "A Random Number Selector." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 48 (1946–49).

Winds (Paranormal)

Paranormal breezes, currents of air, and cooling temperatures are frequently reported séance room phenomena, as well as being traditionally associated with the subjective effects of hauntings. It is an open question whether such temperature changes serve a direct purpose or are only by-products.

Such thermic manifestations are a great convenience both for the sitters and the medium, who sometimes report excessive perspiration. One the other hand, Celestine Sanders, a New York medium, used to feel so unnaturally cold during her séances that she enveloped herself in many coverings and shawls to counteract the effect. It is difficult to allot the parts that the sitters and the medium play in the phenomenon. Sometimes the source seems to be the medium.

The spouting fountain of air that psychical researcher Cesare Lombroso discussed in his account of séances with Eusapia Palladino issued from a depression on the medium's forehead. Hereward Carrington noticed that after a good séance the breeze was strong, and after a poor one it was altogether lacking. Yet the breeze was not generally an after-séance effect. It usually preceded and heralded strong physical phenomena.

The chilly feeling that accompanies apparitions may be the result of a sudden drop in the temperature. All those who saw the apparition of a wooden cross in a certain haunted house felt unnaturally cold.

"Walter," the spirit control of the medium Mina S. Crandon ("Margery"), said that cold breezes and drops in temperature were the result of some psychic emanation from the sitters' brains. "Walter" found immense pleasure in using the thermometer as an indicator of the physical conditions confronting him. He said that if he looked at it and it was steady, he used "Margery" alone, and if it was going down, he used the sitters' brains as well. If he used "Margery" alone no cold breezes or drops in temperature were produced.

"Walter's" statement contains nothing new for Spiritualists. A control of the famous medium D. D. Home said more than a half a century earlier: "It is through your brains that the atmosphere we make use of is thrown off." Lord Adare, in a séance with Home, heard the sound of a great wind. "We also felt the wind strongly," he wrote "the moaning, rushing sound was the most weird thing I ever heard."

Prior to the Spiritualist era, the seer Emanuel Swedenborg also encountered the phenomenon. He wrote in his Spiritual Diary:

"A spirit is compared to the wind (John iii, 8); hence it is that spirits have come to me both now, and very frequently before, with wind, which I felt in the face; yea, it also moved the flame of the candle, and likewise papers; the wind was cold, and indeed most frequently when I raised my right arm, which I wondered at, the cause of which I do not yet know."

The same experience has been recorded with many physical mediums. Sir William Crookes wrote in Researches into the Phenomena of Spiritualism (1874):

"These movements, and indeed, I may say the same of every kind of phenomenon, are generally preceded by a peculiar cold air, sometimes amounting to a decided wind. I have had sheets of paper blown about by it, and a thermometer lowered several degrees. On some occasions I have not detected any actual movement of the air, but the cold has been so intense that I could only compare it to that felt when the hand has been within a few inches of frozen mercury."

In the experiments at the Millesimo Castle with the Marquis Centurione Scotto, the psychical researcher Ernesto Bozzano recorded:

"On the evening of July 7, 1928, the heat was very oppressive . . . we happened to mention this disadvantage, and immediately blasts of unusually strong, icy air were felt by us all. . . . There was a continual change in the direction from which these air currents came; sometimes they descended from the ceiling, then we felt them in front of us, or at our side, or blowing from behind us; sometimes they were like small whirlwinds. It felt as though several electric fans were working in the centre, outside and above the circle."

In the next séance, the phenomenon was repeated and perfected:

"Almost immediately we felt strong blasts of icy air which rapidly increased in force, giving one the impression of a powerful supernormal electric fan which periodically wafted its pleasant, cooling currents of air over the sitters. . . . These currents were so strong that our hair waved in the wind, and men's coats, and the lace on the ladies' dresses were blown about."

Bozzano added that not the slightest sound accompanied the production of this phenomenon. The breezes sometimes brought down the temperature of the séance room by as much as 20 degrees.

George Henslow described the sensations of the sitters of T. d'Aute Hooper of Birmingham, England, as of that of "an intensely cold dew or mist, as though a vapour of methylated spirit were floating about the room." While apports were being produced, "the sitters felt as if they were sitting up to their knees in cold water."

Measuring Temperature Differences

The psychical researcher Harry Price established a definite connection between the phenomenon of telekinesis and the drop in temperature. In his experiments with the medium Stella C. at the National Laboratory of Psychical Research he noticed a maximum drop of 20.5 degrees Fahrenheit. At the close of the séance the temperature was again normal. The medium's temperature was always higher at the end of the sitting, but she herself always complained of feeling cold. The rapidity of her pulse beats was always accompanied in the trance by a pronounced coldness in the extremities.

In the "Margery" séances, a maximum-and-minimum thermometer was employed to measure the temperature. In one case the initial temperature dropped from 68 to 42, a difference of 26 degrees. After the breezes had been blowing for a while "Margery" often complained of feeling as though cobwebs were on her face.

General experience regarding the nature of the cold breezes was curiously contradicted in an address by the British clairvoyant Robert King (Light, April 25, 1903). He stated that the peculiar cold air of the séance room is not a wind,

". . . it does not move things. I have watched pieces of paper placed on the table when these cold airs have been playing around. If a wind of that intensity had been blowing, the paper would have been moved, so I rather incline to the opinion that this phenomenon is due to a difference in pressure caused by abstraction of etheric matter from the sitters."

Sources:

Hack, Gwendolyn Kelley. Modern Psychic Mysteries. London: Rider, 1929.

Windsor Castle

One of the largest inhabited castles in the world. Windsor Castle, in Berkshire, England, is one of the royal residences and headquarters of the Order of the Garter. It is frequently cited as a haunted house, filled with numerous notable specters. Queen Elizabeth, Henry VIII, Charles I, and some of the Georges have all been reputed to haunt the castle, and Herne the Hunter is also said to roam the twelve-acre Great Park.

In February 1897, Lieutenant Carr Glynn of the Grenadier Guards was sitting in the library reading in the twilight when he heard the rustle of a silken dress and, looking up, saw the ghost of Queen Elizabeth I glide across the room. He buckled on his sword and reported the matter. The story attracted the attention of the country for some weeks. Sir Richard Holmes and his assistants kept watch for many nights, but the ghost did not reappear.

On another occasion, a housemaid in St. John's Tower thought she saw a ghost. She was so frightened that she became ill and had to be sent home. In 1908, a sentry discharged five rounds of ball cartridge at a figure that appeared on the terrace, which he declared was a specter.

A famous ghost is that of Sir George Villiers, father of the Duke of Buckingham in the reign of James I. Herne the Hunter, who is said to lead a wild hunt in the park, was immortalized in W. Harrison Ainsworth's novel Windsor Castle (1843).

Today, Windsor Castle is open daily except when used for royal visits. There are historic treasures in the state apartments, including period furniture, fittings, paintings and suits of armor. The castle also houses Queen Mary's Dolls' House, which is a popular exhibit.

Wingfield, Kate (d. 1927)

British non-commercial medium, the "Miss A." of whom psychical researcher F. W. H. Myers wrote enthusiastically in Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 8, 498–516; vol. 9, 73–92) and in his book Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death (1903). Wingfield was also the "Miss Rawson" of J. G. Piddington's report in Proceedings of the SPR (vol. 18) on cross correspondence with Rosina Thompson.

Her identity was eventually revealed by Sir Lawrence J. Jones, president of the society in 1928, in his presidential address in Proceedings (vol. 38). He told the story of a series of sittings that he and his wife had with her in the years 1900 and 1901, when her clairvoyance and automatic writing developed into trance mediumship. He observed many physical phenomena: raps, table tilting, movement of objects (telekinesis) and apports. In one instance, three tiny unset turquoises were brought as apports.

But it was the trance speaking phase of Wingfield's mediumship that convinced Jones of survival. Deceased relatives proved their identity and on several occasions their living daughter came through as a communicator.

Among the medium's controls was an entity "Semirus," who claimed to have been a doctor in ancient Egypt. Once a sitter desired some information from him. "Semirus" did not come. Later in the day he came through in automatic writing and explained that he heard the call, but was unable to come as he was assisting in a new operation. The operation was successful. On inquiry the story of the operation was found to be true. "Semirus" could report on patients at a great distance with incredible rapidity. Someone asked for information about the health of his aunt. "Semirus" went away and came back to say that the aunt was dead. The sitter hurried away and to his relief found his aunt alive. But he suddenly realized that he had given, by mistake, the address of a neighbor's house to the spirit control. A day or two later, a funeral took place there.

Wingfield's sittings were primarily rescue circles. The controls aided many spirits by pointing out the errors of their ways. She ceased holding sittings in 1901, as her family objected that she become known as a trance medium. The automatic writings that came through her hand were published in two books.

Sources:

Wingfield, Kate. Guidance from Beyond. N.p., 1923.

———. More Guidance from Beyond. N.p., 1925.

Wirdig's Magnetic Sympathy

A theory of magnetic attraction and repugnance formulated by Tenzel Wirdig, professor at Rostock, who published his Tenzelius Wirdig, Nova medicina spirituum in 1673. Wirdig believed that everything in the universe possessed a soul, and that the Earth itself was merely a larger animal. Between the souls of things in accordance with each other there was a "magnetic sympathy" and a perpetual antipathy existed between those of an uncongenial nature. To this sympathy and antipathy Wirdig gave the name magnetism. He stated:

"Out of this relationship of sympathy and antipathy arises a constant movement in the whole world, and in all its parts, and an uninterrupted communion between heaven and earth, which produces universal harmony. The stars whose emanations consist merely of fire and spirits, have an undeniable influence on earthly bodies; and their influence on man demonstrates itself by life, movement, and warmth, those things without which he cannot live. The influence of the stars is the strongest at birth. The newborn child inhales this influence, and on whose first breath frequently his whole constitution depends, nay, even his whole life."

Wisconsin Phalanx

A Spiritualist community, based upon the doctrines of communalist Francois Fourier, founded by Warren Chase in 1844. Chase had settled in Southport, Wisconsin, in 1838, and with his wife and child, he lived there for a time in poverty. At length, however, their circumstances improved and Chase attained to a position of civic honor in Southport. During this time he studied mesmerism and socialism with the aid of a few periodicals such as La Roy Sunderland's Magnet and the New York Tribune, and he was filled with the idea of founding a community where his ideals of social order and harmony might be carried out.

With the aid of his friends, he formed such a community. Each member had a share of 25 dollars. The chosen settlement—near the town of Ripon—was christened "Ceresco," in honor of Ceres, the Roman goddess of agriculture. For six years the Wisconsin Phalanx flourished, with Chase acting as its leader and ruling spirit.

But dissension arose, and in 1850 the community was dissolved. When its affairs were closed, a considerable profit fell to its members. In all, it was one of the more successful Spiritualist communes of the time. (See also Apostolic Circle; Mountain Cove Community)

Sources:

Noyes, John Humphery. History of American Socialisms. 1870. Reprinted as Strange Cults and Utopias of 19th-Century America. New York: Dover Publications, 1966.

Wissenschaftliche Gesellschaft zur Förderung der Parapsychologie

The Wissenschaftliche Gesellschaft zur Förderung der Parapsychologie (Scientific Society for the Advancement of Parapsychology), founded in 1981 by Eberhard Bauer, Walter von Lucadou, and German researchers interested in parapsychology, sponsors and promotes research in universities and similar research institutions. Psychical research had been stamped out in Germany during the Nazi regime and faced a difficult period of recovery after World War II. Several attempts to found parapsychological associations have failed, but this society succeeded in a unique way and through the 1980s was able to secure a membership, among whom were a number of professors in leading German schools. Last known address: Abteilung für Psychologie und Grenzgebiete der Psychologie, Albert-Ludwigs-Universität, Freiburg i. Br., Belforrstrasse 16, 7800 Freiburg i. Br., Germany.

Witch Balls

Decorative items made of glass or metal, used as ornaments and to avert ill fortune or witchcraft. These appear to date from the eighteenth century. One variety favored by antique collectors and occultists is that manufactured in Nailsea, near Bristol, England. These balls are full of swirling colors.

Witchcraft

The word "witchcraft" derives from the Saxon wicca, sometimes translated as "wise person" but more accurately derived from an Indo-European root, "weik," that produced words in various Western languages related to magic, religion, and divination. Currently, the word is used to designate a variety of very different but vaguely related phenomena including, but not limited to, (1) the magical/religious practitioners in a variety of third world pre-industrial societies; (2) the Satanism described in the anti-witchcraft books beginning in the late fifteenth century in Europe; (3) the Neopagan followers of Wicca, the religion started by Gerald B. Gardner in the 1940s; and (4) individuals (primarily female) who are reputed to have psychic abilities.

Interpretations of Historic Witchcraft

Throughout the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, the figure of the European witch was interpreted and reinterpreted in numerous ways, depending on the orientations of the scholars involved. They described her (typically) as variously an anti-social practitioner of malevolent magic; as a pro-social healer, midwife, and magician condemned by churches and universities; as a victim of mental illness or of accidental poisoning by mind-altering plants; or as a deliberate user of mind-altering plants who sought a shamanic "soul flight." She was either the follower of a Satanic religion developed in opposition to Christianity, or she was the inheritor of pre-Christian Paganism. She was supported by her neighbors, or she was the unfortunate scapegoat for social tensions, a lonely victim with no family to protect her. These different pictures of the typical witch of the Burning Times or the Great Hunt (both terms for the persecutions that peaked in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries) in turn reflect the sympathies of the writers, whether pro or anti-Catholic, socially rebellious, socially conservative, feminist, or Neopagan. These different perspectives on historical European witchcraft have also influenced what is today called Neopagan Witchcraft, a new religious movement.

Since the mid-1970s, historians have more closely examined the court records of witch trials in various European countries (and in North American colonies). They have studied the verdicts, punishments, social status of accused witches, lists of goods confiscated from the accused, and other evidence. In one notable case, scholarly re-examination of older work revealed a major forgery, a portion of Etienne Leon de Lamothe-Langon's Histoire de l'Inquisition en France (History of the French Inquisition), written in 1829. Lamothe-Langon's description of huge 14th-century witch trials with hundreds of executions in the South of France turned out to be complete inventions by the writer—who had also written a profitable series of "gothic" horror novels with titles like The Monastery of the Black Friars.

Today, informed estimates of the total deaths in central and western Europe range from 40,000 to 50,000, much lower than the millions once claimed. Contrary to the picture created by writers such as Lamothe-Langon, the Inquisition (an arm of the Roman Catholic Church created in 1246 to combat heresy) did not execute many witches; secular courts were more likely to condemn accused witches than were church courts. As many or more accused witches were executed in Protestant lands as in Catholic countries, and the witch trials did not peak until 1550-1650, a period that historians describe as "early modern" rather than "medieval."

During the early Middle Ages, Church writers were more likely to insist that witchcraft was a delusion and that priests should discourage their congregations from believing that anyone could cast spells or fly through the air in the entourage of a Pagan deity. The famous Canon Episcopi, publicized in the tenth century but possibly of earlier date, stated that it was heretical to believe in witchcraft, not to practice it. This ecclesiastical legal document, like others of its kind, urged bishops and priests to combat the practice of sorcery, but also suggested that people who believed that they were witches were deluded by the Devil. Another set of church ordinances from the late eighth century demanded the death penalty not for the witch, but for the person who murdered an alleged witch—again, because believing in witches was a Pagan superstition.

After the Black Death swept Europe in the 1340s, mysteriously killing thousands of people, Europeans were more likely to accept conspiracy theories involving enemies of Christianity, defined variously as heretics, Muslims, Jews or possibly witches. Officers of the Inquisition now began to expand their scope from Christian dissenters and heretics, such as Cathars and Waldensians, to people who supposedly had chosen to follow a diabolical anti-Christian religion (rather than a lingering Paganism). New manuals for witch-hunters appeared, such as the infamous Malleus Maleficarum, or "Hammer of Witches," a book that although authored by Dominican monks was used and reprinted equally by Protestant witch-hunters in Germany and England. By the sixteenth century, the witches' sabbat was regarded by authorities as a parody of the Christian Sabbath, the worshipful aspect of a religion which was a distorted image of true religion, i.e., Christianity. According to the records, the sabbat was generally held in some wild and solitary spot, often in the midst of forests or on the heights of mountains, at a great distance from the residence of most of the visitors. (The use of the word "sabbat," clearly derived from the Jewish Sabbath, indicates the way in which medieval and early modern Christians tended to blur distinctions between all perceived enemies of Christianity, whether Jews, Muslims, Pagans, or perceived sorcerers and witches.)

The witches themselves told a story—usually after torture—of taking off their clothes and anointing their bodies with a special unguent or ointment. They then strode across a stick, or any similar article, and, muttering a charm, were carried through the air to the place of meeting in an incredible short space of time. Sometimes the stick was to be anointed as well as the witch. They generally left the house by the window or by the chimney, which perhaps suggests survival of the custom of an earth-dwelling people. Sometimes the witch went out by the door, and there found a demon in the shape of a goat, or at times of some other animal, who carried her away on his back, and brought her home again after the meeting was dissolved.

In the confessions extorted from them, the witches bore testimony to the truth of all these details, but those who judged them, and who wrote upon the subject, asserted that they had many other independent proofs in corroboration.

Powers of Witches

In the eyes of the populace, the powers of witches were numerous. The most peculiar of these were: The ability to blight by means of the evil eye, the sale of winds to sailors, power over animals, and the power of witches to transform themselves into animal shapes.

Witches were also believed to possess the power of making themselves invisible, by means of a magic ointment supplied to them by the Devil, and of harming others by thrusting nails into a waxen image representing them.

New research has shown that witch trials were more likely to occur in areas of political instability and religious conflict. Hence both Germany and Switzerland, each a patchwork of small political entities and divided between Catholics and Protestants, witnessed more witch trials than did France or Spain. In late seventeenth-century Spain, after an outbreak of witchcraft accusations in the Basque region (shared with France), a lawyer for the Spanish Inquisition convinced its supreme council not to prosecute. Instead, the council ordered an "Edict of Silence" forbidding further discussion of witchcraft. In that Spanish case and others, local secular authorities went around the Catholic Church and appealed to the king for the right to try witches. The king agreed with their request and accused witches began to be sentenced until the Inquisition stopped the process on the grounds that this was church business only.

By the eighteenth century, however, fewer educated Europeans believed in spell-casting, witches flying through the sky, or other typical accusations of the Great Hunt. Thinkers of the Enlightenment such as Voltaire (1694–1778) had denounced the witch trials as the product of religious bigotry, whether Catholic or Protestant, supported by superstitious monarchs across Europe. They hoped that new, more rational attitudes would produce societies where such events could not occur.

In America, the Salem witch trials of the 1690s were similarly seen as the product of a repressive Puritan church struggling to hold onto power. Nineteenth-century American historian George Bancroft's History of the United States used the Salem trials to condemn Puritan "superstition," as did the poet and editor James Russell Lowell. As part of the nineteenth-century struggle for authority between science and religion, the witchcraft trials were entered into evidence as examples of the excesses of religion. This view tended to overlook the fact that secular courts were as likely or more likely to execute accused witches than were religious courts, producing the slightly skewed stereotype of "medieval" witches being hauled before the "Inquisition."

The Witch as Romantic Rebel

This anti-clerical view of the medieval and early modern witch as the victim of superstitious churchmen was strengthened by a new nineteenth-century view of the witch as a Romantic rebel or outlaw—an idea which partly underlies the new religion of Neopagan Witchcraft. It connects with the romanticization of medieval life (and of rural nineteenth-century life) by writers such as Sir Walter Scott and Thomas Hardy, both of whom described fictional "cunning women" or solitary rural witches in their novels. A leading proponent of this new Romantic view of witches was the French writer Jules Michelet, a fervent anti-Catholic and anti-monarchist, who produced numerous books of history, natural history, and social reform. Advocating a turn from Christianity to worship of a Great Mother Goddess such as Isis, Michelet held that women were morally superior to men, and that their persecution as witches in former centuries was an attack by the elites on both the rights of women and the working classes. Michelet took the position of the Malleus Maleficarum that women were innately drawn to witchcraft and made a positive good of it. Medieval witchcraft, he declared in his 1862 book La Sorcière, had been an egalitarian rural religion led by female priestesses—a view which was to resonate with later maverick writers on witchcraft such as Charles Leland and Margaret Murray. Had the witches worshipped Satan, as their accusers claimed? Indeed they had, Michelet wrote, for "Satan" was merely the god of fertility and the patron deity of those persons condemned by kings and bishops and their henchmen. Although he did little actual research for La Sorcière, Michelet succeed in introducing ideas that would be taken up by later generations of non-academic writers and by unconventional academics. One was the idea that witches were healers and midwives persecuted by a male-dominated medical establishment; another was that the persecuted witches represented traces of a secret Pagan religion.

Michelet's advocacy of a Mother Goddess religion helped reinforce a new current in nineteenth-century scholarship: that there had once been a universal matriarchal period of goddess-worship, later buried by a patriarchal Paganism typified by the well-known Greco-Roman pantheon: Jupiter/Zeus, Hera/Juno, and so on. The notion of a universal ancient matriarchy appealed to thinkers as different as Karl Marx and Sigmund Freud, both of whom incorporated parts of it in their theories of communism and psychoanalysis respectively. It also influenced the first wave of women's rights advocates, such as the American feminist Matilda Joslyn Gage, who published her own version of the anti-clerical witch trials in 1893, Women, Church, and State. Basing her research largely on Michelet, Gage produced a figure of nine million victims of the Burning Times, a figure which although wildly inflated continues to be repeated by some persons today.

Witches, Drugs, and Shamans

As the nineteenth century closed, two interpretations of the medieval and early modern witchcraft period were gaining adherents. One interpretation, suggested above, held that the persecuted witches were leaders and followers of an underground pre-Christian religion. The second, somewhat related to the first, was that at least some of the accused practiced an underground form of European shamanism, utilizing an ancient tradition of entheogenic plants such as Amanita mushrooms and members of the solanaceous plant genus such as henbane, mandrake, belladonna, and datura.

During the height of the Great Hunt, the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, some lawyers and physicians had made their own tests of the unguents or "flying ointments" seized from accused witches, attempting to learn their compositions and effects. At the time, these men were advancing a counter-argument to the witch-hunters' position that the witches worshiped Satan. No, said such men as Andrés Laguna, physician to Pope Julius III, the witches were merely "wretched ones," deluded by drugs, who "firmly believe that they have done in a waking state all of that which they dreamt while sleeping."

Theologian Nicholas Remy, writing at the height of the trials, in the late 1500s, made numerous references to witches smearing their bodies with oils and ointments, noting, "Now if witches, after being aroused from an 'iron' sleep, tell of things they have seen in places so far distant as compared with the short period of their sleep, the only conclusion is that has been some unsubstantial journal like that of the soul."

In an account published in 1555, Laguna described one of his experiments, using "a jar half-filled with a certain green unguent" confiscated from some accused witches, which he believed was prepared with "cold" herbs such as henbane or mandrake. He took the mixture to another city, where he gave it to the wife of the public hangman. This woman suffered from insomnia, lying awake with worry because she thought her husband was unfaithful to her.

"On being anointed," Laguna wrote, "she suddenly slept such a profound sleep, with her eyes open like a rabbit, that I could not imagine how to wake her. By every means possible, with strong ligatures and rubbing her extremities, with effusions of oil of costus-root and officinal spurge, with fumes and smoke in her nostrils, and finally with cupping glasses, I so hurried her that at the end of thirty-six hours she regained her senses and memory: although the first words she spoke were: 'Why do you wake me at such an inopportune time? I was surrounded by all the pleasures and delights of the world.' And casting her eyes on her husband (who was there all stinking of hanged men), she said to him, smiling: 'Knavish one, know that I have made you a cuckold, and with a lover younger and better than you,' and she said many other and very strange things."

Such experiments led Laguna and some of his contemporaries, including some clergy, to a conclusion that the theologians and demonologists were wrong: the flights through the air, feasts and orgies, encounters with Satan and other fantastic experiences reported by (or tortured out of) the accused witches were really the results of using psychedelic drugs.

These earlier accounts of experiments with witches' unguents led to new experiments using old recipes in the late nineteenth and twentieth centuries. Karl Kiesewetter, a German scholar of the occult, reported dreams of flying after reproducing some of the old ointments; his later experiments were fatal. The pharmacologist Gustav Schenk wrote in The Book of Poisons that he experienced the sensations of flying through the clouds after breathing the smoke of burning henbane seeds. As interest in entheogenic or psychedelic drugs increased in the 1950s and 1960s, anthropologists such as Michael Harner returned to the older writings about "flying ointments" in order to suggest that European witches took part in shamanic "soul flights," projecting their consciousness into other realms of existence even while their physical bodies appeared to sleep. If parallel with the shamanism reported from other cultures around the world, these soul-journeys might be attempted to gain a cure for a sick person, for knowledge or simply for the experience.

Some of the same herbs, such as datura, have been traditionally used in India both for religious purposes, pleasure, and as poisons. Likewise, the fly agaric mushroom, Amanita muscaria, has been proposed as the source of soma, the drink of the gods in the ancient Hindu scriptures. Unlike the peyote and ayahuasca of the New World, plants such as henbane, datura or fly agaric can be fatally poisonous—they continue to claim victims today. Therefore, if sixteenth-century witches such as Laguna's indeed were using them, they likely were heirs to an underground tradition of safe preparation and use, although we do not know what form such a shamanic tradition might have taken.

Witchcraft as "The Old Religion"

The identity and motives of the witches and their accusers continue to be re-interpreted. In the period from 1890 to 1930, however, one interpretation of the trials not only blossomed but produced a genuine new religion. That was the theory that the witches followed an underground pre-Christian religion. Even though most modern scholars reject the notion, it contributed to the birth of today's fast-growing Neopagan Witchcraft.

Charles Godfrey Leland, an American lawyer, political journalist, and folklore scholar who lived a number of years in the Italian city of Florence, produced three books in the 1890s arguing that some Italian peasants, through their innate religious conservatism, maintained not only a pre-Christian but a pre-Roman religion, dating to the days of the ancient Etruscan culture. Camouflaged with Catholic saints' names and other details, this hidden "Old Religion" maintained its own deities, creation stories, prayers, and rituals, Leland wrote, describing these surviving bits of Paganism as "something more than a sorcery and something less than a faith." His most influential book, Aradia: or the Gospel of the Witches, published in 1899, synthesized traditional legends with material gathered for him by a woman known as Maddalena or Margherita (her surname may have been Talenti) and translated from local dialects into standard Italian, which Leland spoke and wrote moderately well. Aradia, which Leland claims was originally a Semitic goddess name, is described as the daughter of Diana, goddess of darkness, and Lucifer, god of light. Aradia comes to earth, and in the style of Michelet, teaches her ceremonies to outlaws and outcasts, as well as the secrets of poisoning corrupt feudal lords. What remains problematic about Aradia is the source of Leland's witchcraft gospel. Is it genuine, or did Maddalena herself concoct it to please her wealthy American patron, or did Leland shape it from a body of genuine invocations, stories, and folk practices?

Twenty years after Leland's work, the English archaeologist Margaret Murray (1862–1963) developed her own version of the "Old Religion" through her reading of witch-trial records from the British Isles and France. A recognized Egyptologist, Murray turned her attention to the witch-cult problem while World War I prevented her from working in Egypt. Her 1921 book The Witch Cult in Western Europe and its two successors laid out an apparently clear picture of the Old Religion. Even though that picture has largely been refuted by more recent historians such as Russell Hope Robbins, Elliot Rose, L'Estrange Ewen, and Ronald Hutton, its evocative power threatened to overwhelm the former academically accepted idea of the medieval and early modern witches as victims of bigotry, social stresses, and mob psychology. Many followers of modern Witchcraft continue to accept large portions of Murray's version of earlier witchcraft.

In essence, her version was this. The "witch cult" was a pre-Christian religion centered on a fertility god (somewhat parallel to the Greek Pan), whom Christian theologians deliberately confused with their Devil in order to persecute the witches. This god was often depicted with horns, and a man portrayed and embodied him during group rituals. (Murray had much less to say about goddesses than did Leland.) Covens of witches, ideally consisting of thirteen persons, grouped together at four major holidays—Candlemas, around 1 February; May Day; Lammas, around 1 August; and All Hallows or Hallowe'en. These large-group meetings, with their feasting and fertility rituals, alternated with smaller meetings ("esbats") for spell-casting and other local witch business.

In medieval England, Murray claimed, the Old Religion had been protected by the Plantagenet dynasty of kings, beginning with William the Conqueror in 1066. These were "sacred kings" who had to die as sacrificial victims or else find a substitute after they had reigned for seven years, or a multiple of seven years. Murray held that the murder in 1170 of the archbishop of Canterbury, Thomas à Becket (later made a saint), supposedly at the orders of King Henry II, his longtime friend, was actually the substitution of a voluntary victim for the king himself. Murray also maintained that the French mystical warrior maiden Joan of Arc (1412–1431) was in fact a priestess of the Old Religion. This underground religion, in Murray's view, permeated medieval society, and its followers left traces in the carvings on Christian churches and in folklore.

Murray's views were almost immediately attacked by historians who pointed out that she manipulated evidence, lifted quotations from witch-trial records out of context, and ignored evidence that did not fit her theory. But her picture of the "Old Religion" was embraced by many folklorists, occultists, and all those who wanted to believe that British rural life retained traces of ancient Paganism, even after 1500 years of Christianity.

Neopagan Witchcraft

Neopagan Witchcraft is the only worldwide religion to have begun in England. Its apparent birth date lies between 1939 and 1951, when the Witchcraft Act of 1735 was repealed by Parliament and reports about people claiming to follow the religion of Witchcraft began appearing in British newspapers. Contemporary Witchcraft appears to have multiple parents, and historians of religion continue to debate who exactly was present at its creation, for no solid evidence exists of a religious continuity with pre-Christian Paganism. This new religion of Witchcraft (usually capitalized it differentiate from definitions 1, 2, and 4 above) has grown rapidly in all English-speaking countries and in Western Europe, aided by its compatibility with the feminist and environmental movements. It is often referred to as Wicca, although some Neopagan Witches limit that term to the "tradition" founded by Gerald Gardner (see below), and as "The Craft," a term borrowed from Freemasonry along with certain aspects of Masonic ritual.

The most public figure associated with the new religion of Witchcraft was Gerald Gardner (1884–1964). Gardner spent most of his adult life in Britain's Asian colonies, owning and managing tea plantations and later working for the colonial customs service in Malaya. He and his wife retired to England in 1936. During his time in Asia, his lifelong interest in magic and the supernatural led him both to the Masonic order and to visits with Buddhists priests, tribal shamans, spiritualists, and any other practitioners he chanced across.

In 1949 Gardner published an adventure novel, High Magic's Aid, set in the Middle Ages and incorporating much ceremonial magic. He claimed that he had met members of a surviving witches' coven shortly before World War II, operating under the cover of the Rosicrucian Theatre at Christchurch, Hampshire, and headed by a wealthy widow. He had been accepted into the group, which performed a magical ritual during the summer of 1940 to stop the threatened German invasion of England (thus identifying the Witches with the patriotic soul of Great Britain). In 1954 his nonfiction book Witchcraft Today was published, which he wrote in the voice of a sympathetic outsider describing the modern continuation of an ancient fertility religion. Margaret Murray supplied an approving introduction.

Subsequent research suggests that it is more likely that Gardner and a female companion whose Craft name was Dafo, plus possibly other individuals, actually began the coven. They drew inspiration for their practices from ceremonial magic, from Classical Pagan religions, and from British folklore. What Gardner in 1954 described as "Wica" or cult of the "wise people" contained "no crucifixes, inverted or otherwise, no sermons, mock or otherwise, and no absolution or [eucharistic] hosts save for the cake and wine. . . . There is no praise or homage to the Devil, no liturgy, evil or otherwise, nothing is said backwards, and there are no gestures with the left hand; in fact with the exception that it is a religious service and all religious services resemble one another, the rites are not in any way an imitation of anything I have ever seen."

In other words, Gardner denied the reality of "Burning Times" witchcraft with its pacts with the Devil and parodies of Christian ritual. For this he substituted a Murray-style "Old Religion," in which the "Devil" was merely the ritual leader with his crown of stag's horns—and often a nobleman in disguise. Witchcraft, he alleged, had come down from the Stone Age as a fertility religion that honored the "God of death and what comes after" (in other words, rest and reincarnation) and the Great Mother Goddess of nature, love, and pleasure.

These new Witches celebrated a cycle of eight festivals a year—the solstices and equinoxes and the four cross-quarter days between them: Lugnasadh or Lammas (Loaf-Mass) at the beginning of August, a harvest festival; Samhain (Hallowe'en) a festival honoring the ancestors; Brigid or Oimelc, at the beginning of February, a feast of creativity and new beginnings; and Beltane, at the beginning of May, celebrating the new growing season. New Moons and full Moons were times of magic-working as opposed to the celebration and attunement of the seasonal festivals.

They worshipped in the nude, a practice indeed claimed of medieval witches. Gardner and his first associations were "naturists," people who advocated sunbathing for better health, and he and his first associates purchased land next to a naturist club north of London. While many Neopagan Witches today wear either ritual robes or other clothing, those who continue to meet nude or "skyclad" claim that the practice erases social distinctions, helps them to overcome the fear of aging and death, and makes magic-working easier.

Other common practices include the creation of a temporary sacred space, the circle, usually marked by candles, which may be drawn indoors or out, but which is erased at the conclusion of a ceremony. Most Neopagan Witchcraft rituals involve the use of a sacred knife, the athame, symbolizing the God, and a chalice symbolizing the Goddess.

Coven leadership typically lies with the high priestess ("high" because all experienced Witches are considered to be priests and priestesses themselves) who may or may not have a permanent male partner. This combination of female leadership and a powerful feminine image of deity has drawn many women to the Craft, which they see as a religion that values and sacralizes their bodies, their cycles, their ability to nurture as well as their rage and anger against other male-dominated religions.

Gardner's coven produced a number of offshoots in Britain in the 1950s and 1960s. In addition, other Witches came forth who claimed (sometimes falsely) to have no connection with his coven but rather to represent independent traditions of Witchcraft. These included Alex Sanders (1926–1988), Robert Cochrane (d. 1966) and Sybil Leek, who emigrated to the United States in 1965, where she continued to write books on occult topics and to lecture on Witchcraft.

Two more British Witches of Gardner's lineage, Ray and Rosemary Buckland, moved to Long Island, New York, in the mid-1960s and many American and Canadian "Gardnerian" Witches trace their initiatory lineage to them.

Meanwhile, modern Pagan religions were being developed independently in the United States and elsewhere during the 1960s, including Feraferia in Los Angeles, The Church of All Worlds in St. Louis, and others. However, as more books about Witchcraft were being published, including an edition of the basic Gardnerian ritual manual, the Book of Shadows, in 1973, followers of these new movements tended to adopt many of the key characteristics of Gardner's tradition—or else to define themselves in opposition to it. Those saying that they followed some other form of Witchcraft often cast it in ethnic terms such as Italian or Scottish. Other forms of Witchcraft include women-only groups (often called "Dianic" Witchcraft) and male-only groups, including the Radical Faeries.

By the 1980s, most elders and leaders in Witchcraft began to distance themselves from claims of an unbroken pre-Christian religious tradition, saying instead that their practices were inspired by ancient Paganism but adapted to the present times. Whether known as Wicca or Witchcraft, this new religious movement grew steadily from the 1970s to the present, typically among people in their twenties and thirties. The Cold War expansion of the American military provided one means, as Wiccan personnel shuttled between the United States, Europe, and elsewhere. Neopagan Witchcraft is now found throughout the English-speaking world and parts of Europe, particularly Germany, the Netherlands, and Scandinavia.

The historian Ronald Hutton describes these common characteristics of the "protean and ecclectic" varieties of Neopagan Witchcraft: They "aim to draw out and enhance divinity within human beings, abolish the traditional Western distinction between religion and magic, [are] a mystery religion or a set of mystery religions [and their essence lies] in the creative performance of ritual."

Estimates of total membership in North America range into the low millions, but since covens are fluid and ever-changing (and since not all Witches belong to covens), an accurate count is impossible. While Witchcraft has no sacred scriptures, modern Witches have produced dozens of books on the practice of their religion. Notable authors, besides those named, include Stewart and Janet Farrar, Starhawk, Scott Cunningham, Vivianne Crowley, Marion Weinstein, Margot Adler, Evan John Jones, and Michael Howard.

In the early 1970s, two organizations, the Church and School of Wicca and the Council of American Witches, began holding conventions for their members and other interested people in American hotels. By 1980, outdoor festivals began at campgrounds across the United States, beginning in the Midwest and spreading to both coasts, the South, and the Rocky Mountains. These provide a venue for the exchange of songs, ritual formats, and the merchandising of clothing, jewelry, and other artifacts of the Pagan lifestyle.

Sources:

Adler, Margot. Drawing Down the Moon: Witches, Druids, Goddess-Worshippers, and Other Pagans in America Today. Boston: Beacon, 1979, 1981.

Buckland, Raymond. Buckland's Complete Book of Witchcraft. St. Paul: Llewellyn Publications, 1986.

Crowley, Vivianne. Wicca. London: Thorsons, 1996.

Ewen, C. l'Estrange. Witch Hunting and Witch Trials. London: Kegan Paul, 1929.

Farrar, Stewart. What Witches Do: The Modern Coven Revealed. New York: Coward, McGann, & Geoghegan, 1973..

Gardner, Gerald B. Witchcraft Today. London: Rider & Co., 1954.

Ginzburg, Carlo. Ecstasies: Deciphering the Witches' Sabbath. New York: Penguin Books, 1991.

———. Night Battles: Witchcraft & Agrarian Cults in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries. New York: Penguin, 1983.

Glanvill, Joseph. Sadducismus Triumphatus. London, 1681.

Hutton, Ronald. The Stations of the Sun: A History of the Ritual Year in Britain. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1996.

———. The Triumph of the Moon: A History of Modern Pagan Witchcraft. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1999.

Jones, Evan John and Chas S. Clifton. Sacred Mask, Sacred Dance. St. Paul: Llewellyn, 1997.

Jones, Evan John and Doreen Valiente. Witchcraft: A Tradition Renewed. Custer, Wash.: Phoenix, 1990.

Lea, Henry Charles. Materials Towards a History of Witchcraft. 3 vols. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1939.

Leland, Charles G. Aradia: or the Gospel of the Witches. London: David Nutt, 1899.

Lewis, James R., ed. Magical Religion and Modern Witchcraft. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1996.

Luhrman, T. M. Persuasions of the Witch's Craft. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1989.

Melton, J. Gordon, and Isotta Poggi. Magic, Witchcraft, and Paganism in America: A Bibliography. New York: Garland Publishing, 1992.

Michelet, Jules. The Sorceress: A Study in Middle Age Superstition. Paris, 1904. Reprint, London: Imperial Press, 1905. Reprint as: Satanism and Witchcraft. Wehman, 1939.

Murray, Margaret A. The Witch-Cult in Western Europe. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1921.

Notestein, Wallace. A History of Witchcraft in England from 1558 to 1718. American Historical Association, 1911.

Orion, Loretta. Never Again the Burning Times: Paganism Revived. Prospect Heights, Ill.: Waveland, 1995.

Remy, Nicolas. Demonolatry. 1595. Edited by Montague Summers. London: John Rodker, 1930. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1974.

Rose, Elliot. A Razor for a Goat. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1962.

Scot, Reginald. Discoverie of Witchcraft. London, 1584. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1974.

Sprenger, Jakob, and Heinrich Kramer. Malleus Maleficarum. 1486. Translated and edited by Montague Summers. London: John Rodker, 1928.

Starhawk. The Spiral Dance. San Francisco: Harper, 1979.

Valiente, Doreen. An ABC of Witchcraft Past and Present. London: Robert Hale, 1973. Reprint, New York: St. Martin's Press, 1974.

———. The Rebirth of Witchcraft. London: Robert Hale, 1989.

Witchcraft Digest: Voice of the Old Religion

A short-lived supplement to the WICA Newsletter. It was edited by Leo Louis Martello and published by Witchcraft International Craft Association in New York City in the 1970s. Only a few issued appeared.

Witchcraft International Craft Association (WICA)

An early neopagan witchcraft organization founded in 1970 as the outward expression of the Sicilian Strege Wiccan tradition in America. WICA is led by Dr. Leo Louis Martello, who was a Spiritualist minister in New York City and was also known as a hypnotist and graphologist. Martello stepped into the spotlight within the Wiccan community through his authorship of one of the first widely recognized texts presenting modern post-Gardnerian witchcraft to the public, Witchcraft: The Old Religion (1973). He argued effectively that witches were people from all walks of life "who practice the pre-Judeo-Christian, Pagan religion." They were not Satanists and did not believe in the Devil, he said; their main deities were Mother Goddess and Horned God, and they were nature worshipers.

Martello also founded the Witches Antidefamation League (WADL) "to educate the public, counteract false accusations, take legal steps, obtain IRS recognition, paid legal holidays (such as Halloween) for members, fight distortion and discrimination, sponsor seminars across the country, hold regular festivals." In 1970 WICA and WADL, backed by the American Civil Liberties Union, sued the New York Parks Department for discrimination when refused a permit for their "witch-in," and won, the first such victory for witches in the history of the world.

The teachings of the Strege have never been revealed, though much of their lives and thought were written about by Charles B. Leland in his book Aradia. Diana is recognized as the major deity and the goddess of witches. During the 1970s Martello published the Witchcraft Digest and the WICA Newsletter. Books representative of the Strege are published through Hero Press. Last known address: 153 W. 80 St., Ste. 1B, New York, NY 10024.

Sources:

Martello, Leo Louis. Weird Ways of Witchcraft. New York: HC Publishers, 1969.

———. What It Means to Be a Witch. New York: The Author, 1975.

———. Witchcraft: The Old Religion. Secaucus, N.J.: University Books, 1973.

Witches Anti-Defamation League (WADL)

An early organization in the contemporary neo-pagan witchcraft movement founded by Leo Louis Martello. It was designed ". . . to educate the public, counteract false accusations, take legal steps, obtain IRS recognition, paid legal holidays (such as Halloween) for members, fight distortions, hold regular festivals."

Neo-pagan witches claim that they are descendants of the pagan religions that held sway in Europe prior to the forced conversion of the population to Christianity. They do not believe in the Devil or practice Satanism. This view was presented in Martello's book, Witchcraft: The Old Religion.

WADL functioned through the 1970s and was superseded by other similar organizations including the Aquarian Anti-Defamation League (1980s) and the presently existing Witches' League for Public Awareness.

Witches' Cradle

During the witchcraft persecutions in Europe, inquisitors were said to have sometimes put an accused witch in a bag, which was then strung up over the limb of a tree and set swinging. When witches learned about this punishment they experimented with it themselves and found that the sensory deprivation or confusion of senses it caused induced hallucinatory experiences. A similar technique has long been used by shamans and dervishes and is sometimes known as "dervish dangling." It involves being suspended by a rope tied around the waist.

Modern researchers have followed up on this insight and developed, among other devices, the ASCID (Altered States of Consciousness Induction Device). The ASCID was devised by Robert Masters and Jean Houston of the Foundation for Mind Research. This technological-age witches' cradle is a metal swing in which the subject stands while blindfolded and wearing earplugs. The motion of the swing exaggerates the slightest movement of the occupant. Profoundly altered states of consciousness involving hallucinatory visions and sensations often take place within 20 minutes.

Witte, Alfred (1878–1941)

German astrologer and founder of the Hamburg school of astrological interpretation. Witte was born in Hamburg, Germany, on March 2, 1878. As a young man, he worked for the city of Hamburg and then served in the German army during World War I. By the time the war started he had become interested in astrology and pursued his speculations while soldiering. He discovered a certain moving point in the zodiac that he found helpful in interpreting charts and he hypothesized the existence of a trans-Neptunian planet which he call Cupido. Such a planet would be discovered in 1930 and named Pluto.

After the War, Witte gathered a group of astrologers, especially Friedrich Sieggrün (1877–1951), to assist in developing his insights. The results were an innovative system of astrology that came to be known as Uranian Astrology or the Hamburg School, after Witte's hometown. As the system developed, Witte postulated first three additional planets, named Hades, Zeus, and Kronos, and then four additional imaginary planets. Criticism of the additional planets, unknown to anyone except Witte and his associates, was balanced by the good reports of satisfied clients.

Witte also introduced the idea of midpoints, another imaginary addition to the horoscope. As the name implies, a midpoint is a point halfway between any two planets in the chart. The combined influences of the two planets are evident at the midpoint. This combined influence is activated by planets in the present transiting the midpoint. The two planets and their midpoint together made a planetary picture and the various planetary pictures become an important element in chart interpretation.

The Hamburg School, as the Witte-Sieggrün system of interpretation was called, created a controversy in Germany for its challenge to traditional methods of astrological interpretation. Witte defended the system, for which he claimed outstanding results not provided by more traditional charts in several books, beginning with Regelwerk für Planetenbilder (1928).

Witte's system never gained support outside Germany and did not reemerge from the Nazi suppression of astrology in the late 1930s. It is remembered today primarily through cosmobiology, the system developed by Reinhold Ebertin, one of Witte's students. The Hamburg school was championed by Hermann Lefeldt after the war. Lefeldt published both a revised German edition of Witte's book and an English translation.

The progress of Uranian astrology stopped by Witte's suicide in Hamburg on August 2, 1941, a death possibly related to the rise of Nazism and the resulting suppression of astrology in Germany.

Sources:

Brau, Jean-Louis, Helean Weaver, and Allan Edwards. Larousse Encyclopedia of Astrology. New York: New American Library, 1982.

Holden, James H., and Robert A. Hughes. Astrological Pioneers of America. Tempe, Ariz.: American Federation of Astrologers, 1988.

Witte, Alfred. Regelwerk für Planetbilder. 3d ed. Hamburg: Witte Verlag, 1935. Translated by Richard Svehla as Rules for Planetary Pictures. Hamburg: Witte Verlag, 1939.

Witte, Alfred, and Herman Lefeldt. Rules for Planetary Pictures. Translated by Kurt Knupfer. Hamburg: L. Rudolph (Witte Verlag), 1974.

The Wolf

Among the ancient Romans, there were many tales in which the wolf figured as a good or evil omen. A wolf running to the right with his mouth full was a sign of great joy. If a wolf escaped unhurt after he had entered a Roman camp, it was regarded as a sign of the army's defeat, and the terrible result of the second Punic war was said to have been foretold when a wolf carried off the sword of a sentinel.

Plutarch related the story of a wolf who ate the landmarks of a proposed new settlement in Libya and thus stopped its colonization, but later another wolf, which had stolen a burnt sacrifice, led his pursuers to the place where they later settled. It is said that a wolf ran off with Hiero's slate when he was a schoolboy, and this was regarded as a sign of his future greatness.

The peasants of Sweden used to avoid speaking of a wolf by name but called it "grey one" or "old grey"; speaking its name was seen as unlucky.

The wolf is featured in Roman mythology in the story of Romulus and Remus, and throughout history there have been stories of feral children—orphans reared by wolves. For a modern case, see Charles Maclean, The Wolf Children (1978). As the werewolf the wolf was the most popular animal mentioned in accounts of lycanthropy.

Wolfsohn, Alfred (1896–1962)

German singing teacher who ran a school of psychophysical vocal development in England during the 1940s and 1950s and revived legends of the occult power of sound. During World War I he served in the trenches and suffered a breakdown; he was haunted by the sound of a voice calling for help. When the Nazis came to power, he was deeply impressed by the evil power associated with the voice of Adolf Hitler, which was amplified over street corners and the great square at Nuremberg and moved people to destructive acts of folly, hatred, ambition, and unspeakable cruelty.

Wolfsohn played a significant role in the life of artist Charlotte Salomon, and he features in her posthumous autobiography Leben oder Theater (1981). Wolfsohn had been engaged by Salomon's stepmother, opera singer Paula Lindberg. Salomon, a German Jew, was murdered in the Auschwitz extermination camp by the Nazis, but her paintings and prose had been left with a doctor in France before she was arrested. Salomon's book has been compared with The Diary of Anne Frank, and it was the basis of the film Charlotte by Dutch director Frans Weisz.

Before he escaped from Germany to serve with the British forces, Wolfsohn had the idea that it must be possible for the voice to have positive power. He also believed that ordinary men and women have potentialities seldom seen, but when placed under stress, they could achieve feats of physical endurance, run faster, see further, shout louder, or bear pain in a way they had not believed possible. Wolfsohn became a kind of voice doctor, working to restore fine and beautiful tones to singers suffering from fear or overstrain and also developing a kind of psychotherapy around the vocal possibilities of ordinary individuals.

In his studio in London, England, he experimented to prove that the conventional musical classifications of male and female voices from bass to soprano were artificial divisions, and that any normal human male or female could develop the whole range in a single voice and in the process discover heightened consciousness. Wolfsohn demonstrated a range of eight octaves in male and female voices, old and young. His pupils figured in the Guinness Book of Records after demonstrating phenomenal vocal range.

Wolfsohn's work has been described as a spontaneous revival of what is known as surat shabd yoga (the yoga of sound vibration), as taught by the Radhasoami Sat Sang and other spiritual teachers such as Swami Nadabrahmananda of Swami Sivananda's Divine Life Society. After Wolfsohn's death, some members of his group carried on under his pupil Roy Hart, and a film was made of their remarkable sprechstimme performances. The group tended to concentrate on a new application of extended vocal range in theater rather than in musical sound. Roy Hart also died soon afterward, in 1975, but the members of his group have carried on his work.

The only extant record of the work of Wolfsohn's pupils is the album Vox Humana issued by Folkways Records, New York, in 1956. Former pupils of Wolfsohn who adapted his techniques to theater under Roy Hart as the Roy Hart Theatre Group can be reached at Chateau de Malerargues, Thoiras, Aduze 30140, France. The therapeutic aspect of Wolfsohn's work has been carried on by Derek Gale at the Gale Centre for Creative Therapy.

Wood, C. E. (1854– ?)

British materialization medium. She was born in October 1854. In 1873, at the age of 18, she was employed, with Annie Fairlamb, as an official medium by the Newcastle Spiritual Evidence Society. Fairlamb was a year younger. Both mediums apparently demonstrated telekinesis. Wood had shown the first signs of psychic power a year before at a meeting of the society to which she had been taken by her father, a mechanic. She stayed with the society for three years.

In 1874, partial materializations were obtained. Over the next few years there were some outstanding phenomena reported. For example, T. B. Barkas, a prominent Newcastle investigator, wrote in the Medium and Daybreak (May 4, 1877):

"I have seen, through the mediumship of Miss Wood, in a private house, living forms walk from the curtained recess, which it was utterly impossible for her to simulate. I have seen children, women and men of various ages, walk forth under her mediumship. I have seen a materialised form and the medium at the same time. I have had through her mediumship a childlike form standing beside me for about half an hour together; the child has placed its arms around my neck and permitted me at the same time to place my arm around her neck, and has laid its cheek against mine, breathed upon my face, and, in fact, caressed me precisely as a child would do its parent or guardian. This was not in darkness but in light, and in the presence of professors and fellows of one of the leading universities in the kingdom. I have, under these conditions, and after having handled the psychic form, seen it gradually vanish or dematerialise and become invisible in the middle of the room."

Barkas also remarked that "she is subject to strange controls, which there is some difficulty in banishing."

Alfred Smedley, in Some Reminiscences (1900), also reported on séances with Wood. While the medium was enclosed in a wire cage her phantom "Bennie" left excellent paraffin wax molds of his foot. In front of the sitters, he dipped his foot into the hot dish of paraffin and cold water, then put his left leg across his right knee, tapped the mold, dematerialized his leg, and, when the mold was free, handed it to Mr. Adshead. In the same séance, another left leg mold was obtained from "Maggie," Wood's deceased sister. On measurement it was found to be one inch less in length and one and three quarter inches less in breadth than Wood's foot.

In 1878, Henry Sidgwick engaged her for séances at Cambridge University and at the house of Arthur Balfour. F. W. H. Myers and Edmund Gurney were among the investigators. Alfred Russel Wallace wrote in his book My Life (2 vols., 1905) that Myers showed him several books full of notes on these séances and described to him the test that they applied. They tied the wrists of the medium securely with tape, leaving two long ends that they tacked down to the floor, covered with sealing wax, and sealed. As the medium lay on a mattress on the bare floor, the light was sufficient to see phantom figures of children and adults issuing from the cabinet. The tapes, knots, and seals were found afterward to be untampered with.

On the chance objection that the medium might provide herself with tape, tacks, wax, and seal, they varied the color of the sealing wax and the pattern of the seal and also employed a hammock that, by means of pulleys, was put on a weighing machine. Nevertheless, the phenomena occurred as before. Myers had never published these experiences.

Morell Theobald (at one time involved in a massive fraudulent mediumship scandal) in his book Spirit Workers in the Home Circle (1887) had some moving if nonevidential observations of Wood. "Pocka," a "vivacious coloured little sprite about three feet high" not only came out of the cabinet, but "went to my wife who was sitting 4 or 5 feet from the cabinet, took her hand, and as my wife leaned downwards she put her tiny arms round her neck and kissed her. Crossing over the room she took my hands, then my daughter's and afterwards my daughter-in-law's hands, fondled them a bit, and retired to the cabinet."

However, like most materialization mediums who operated for any length of time, Wood was caught in fraud. In the mid-1870s, for example, the materialized form was seized and found to be the medium, after which Wood opined "that she was an unconscious instrument temporarily in the hands of an evil power." In 1882 Wood was exposed in Peterborough by spirit grabbing. "Pocka," her Indian child control, was found to be the medium on her knees, partially undressed and covered with muslin, which she attempted to conceal about her person.

Sources:

Smedley, Alfred, and T. P. Barkas. Some Reminiscences of Alfred Smedley . . . also an Account of Miss Wood's Mediumship. London: "Light," 1900.

Woodhull, Victoria Claflin (1838–1927)

American Spiritualist, social reformer, and feminist. Born September 23, 1838, in Homer, Licking County, Ohio, she traveled with a medicine show when only a child, giving demonstrations of fortune-telling and Spiritualist séances together with her younger sister Tennessee (1846–1923). Victoria married Canning Woodhull, a physician, before she was 16, was divorced in 1864, and later remarried twice.

In 1868 the sisters moved to New York City where they met Cornelius Vanderbilt, who was interested in Spiritualism. Vanderbilt installed them in a stock-brokerage office as Woodhull, Claflin & Company, where the "Lady Brokers" made considerable profits. From this enterprise they founded the journal Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly in 1870. This publication advocated equal rights for women, free love, and other feminist issues.

In 1871, Victoria Woodhull spoke on women's rights before the House Judiciary Committee and became a prominent leader in the cause of women's suffrage. In 1872 she was the first woman to be nominated for the presidency, sponsored by the Equal Rights Party. Although she did not expect to be elected, she and her sister publicized their cause and attracted much attention by attempting to vote.

The February 2, 1872, issue of their Weekly contained a sensational story alleging intimacy between Henry Ward Beecher and the wife of Theodore Tilton. This scandal was reported largely to discredit Beecher's sisters, who had attacked the Weekly's stand on free love. In the event, Beecher went on a trial for adultery, but was exonerated. Interestingly enough the Weekly was the first periodical in the United States to publish the Communist Manifesto.

In 1877, the sisters moved to England, where they continued to publicize women's rights. Victoria Woodhull married a wealthy London banker and became well known for charitable work. With her daughter, Zula Maud Woodhull, Woodhull published Humanitarian magazine from 1892 to 1910. She died in England June 10, 1927.

Sources:

Brough, James. The Vixens. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1980.

Melton, J. Gordon. Religious Leaders of America. Detroit: Gale Research, 1991.

Woodhull, Victoria. Garden of Eden: Allegorical Meaning Revealed. London: The author, 1889.

———. Humanitarian Government. London: The author, 1892.

———. Stirpiculture; or, the Scientific Propagation of the Human Race. London: The author, 1888.

Woodhull, Victoria, and Tennessee Claflin. The Human Body the Temple of God. London, 1890.

Woodman, William Robert (1828–1891)

British physician. Woodman was a member of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia and one of the founders (with W. W. Westcott and S. L. M. Mathers) of the magic society the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn.

Woodman was a student of Kabala, Egyptian antiquities, Gnosticism, and Platonism. In 1867 he became secretary of the Rosicrucian Society and in 1878 was supreme magus. His magic motto in the Golden Dawn was "Vincit Omnia Veritas" (Truth rules all).

Sources:

King, Francis. The Rites of Modern Occult Magic. New York: Macmillan, 1970.

Woodroffe, Sir John (1865–1936)

The pioneering scholar of the beliefs and practices of the Tantra, a group of religious and occult Hindu scriptures emphasizing the female energy known as kundalini. He was born December 15, 1865, the eldest son of J. T. Woodroffe, advocate general of Bengal, India. He was educated at Woburn Park School and Oxford University, England, where he took classes in jurisprudence.

He was called to the bar in 1889, and a year later he was enrolled as an advocate of the Calcutta High Court. He became a fellow of Calcutta University and was appointed Tagore Law Professor. In collaboration with Ameer Ali he published the widely used textbook Civil Procedure in British India.

In 1902 he became standing counsel to the government of India, and in 1904 he was raised to the High Court bench, where he served for a number of years before being appointed chief justice in 1915. Upon his retirement he became a reader in Indian law at Oxford University. He died at Beausoleil (Alpes Maritimes) on January 16, 1936, at the age of 70.

In addition to his official duties, he spent many years translating some then little-known Hindu scriptures and in the study of Hindu culture. These were published under the pseudonym "Arthur Avalon." They provided many Western scholars with their initial entre into a major, if minority, perspective in Indian religion. Even under a pseudonym, however, he had to cover the discussion of the Tantrics' sexual practices with indirect allusions. He also published several volumes of Tantrik Texts.

Sources:

Avalon, Arthur [Sir John Woodroffe]. The Garland of Letters: Studies in the Mantra Shastra. 1922. Reprint, Madras: Ganesh, 1963.

———. The Great Liberation (Mahanirvana Tantra). Madras: Ganesh, 1927.

———. Hymns to the Goddess. London: Luzac, 1913.

———. The Serpent Power. 1918. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1974.

Woodruff, Joseph L(eroy) (1913–1988)

Professor of psychology active in the field of parapsychology. He was born October 8, 1913, in Galesburg, Illinois. He studied at Tarkio College, Missouri (B.A., 1936) and Duke University (M.A., 1939; Ph.D., 1941). While at Duke, Woodruff, in conjunction with Joseph G. Pratt, conducted one of the most famous ESP tests, still generally considered one of the best ever carried out in parapsychology.

In 1946 he began a lengthy tenure teaching psychology at the City College of New York. For some years Woodruff conducted quantitative research in extrasensory perception, with particular reference to the relationship between certain subjective aspects of card-calling and success in calling. In 1959 he became the secretary of the board of trustees of the American Society for Psychical Research. He was also a charter member of the Parapsychological Association. He died July 23, 1988.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Woodruff, J. L. "Some Basic Problems for Parapsychological Research." Journal of Parapsychology 12 (1948).

Woodruff, J. L., and Laura A. Dale. "ESP Function and the Psychogalvanic Response." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 46 (1952).

———. "The Psychokinetic Effect: Further ASPR Experiments." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 41 (1947).

———. "Subject and Experimenter Attitudes in Relation to ESP Scoring." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 44 (1950).

Woodruff, J. L., and J. G. Pratt. "Size of Stimulus Symbols in Extrasensory Perception." Journal of Parapsychology 3 (1939).

Woodruff, Maurice (1916–1973)

Famous clairvoyant whose American television shows attracted a large audience. His syndicated column reached nearly fifty million people and at the height of his career he was receiving 5,000 letters a week from individuals seeking advice. He had a reputation for highly accurate predictions made under any conditions, without special atmosphere or restrictions. He forecast the end of the Vietnam War, the death of President John F. Kennedy, and many other important world events. He died from a heart attack January 28, 1973, while in Singapore.

Worcester, Constance Rulison (1896–1986)

Daughter of Episcopal minister and psychical researcher Elwood Worcester. She was born July 25, 1896, in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. She attended Bryn Mawr College (1915–17) and Radcliffe College, Cambridge, Massachusetts (B.A., 1921). She worked with James H. Hyslop and Walter Franklin Prince on the study of spontaneous parapsychological phenomena during the 1920s and 1930s and later with Gardner Murphy and J. B. Rhine. She died in August of 1986.

Worcester, Elwood (1862–1940)

Episcopal clergyman, psychical researcher, and founder of the Emmanuel movement, which pioneered medicine and psychotherapy in conjunction with spiritual guidance for individuals with physical, mental, and nervous problems. Through James H. Hyslop he became interested in psychical research, and he was a founder of the Boston Society for Psychic Research, of which he was president from 1925 until his death.

Worcester was born on May 16, 1862, in Massillon, Ohio. He studied at Columbia College, New York (B.A., 1886), General Theological Seminary, New York (1887), and Leipzig University (Ph.D., 1889). He was ordained in 1891. He served as rector at St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia (1896–1904) prior to his quarter of a century at Emmanuel Episcopal Church in Boston (1904–29). While at Emmanuel he began to work with a group of pioneering psychotherapists, including Joseph H. Pratt, Richard C. Cabot, and Isador H. Ciriat. Out of their collaboration emerged the Emmanuel movement, one of the early spiritual healing movements in mainline Protestantism (later superseded by the Order of St. Luke).

In the mid 1920s, Worcester became associated with the group within the American Society for Psychical Research (ASPR) that believed that medium Mina Crandon was a fake. They left the organization and founded the Boston Society for Psychic Research in 1925. Worcester retired a few years later but continued to serve as the society's president almost until the time it was reincorporated into the ASPR.

Worcester wrote a number of books, including several titles with Samuel McComb, who was for many years the associate rector at Emmanuel. He died July 19, 1940, at Kennebunkport, Maine.

Sources:

Melton, J. Gordon. Religious Leaders of America. Detroit: Gale Research, 1991.

Worcester, Elwood. Allies of Religion. Boston: Marshall Jones, 1929.

———. The Christian Religion as a Healing Power. New York: Moffat, Yard, 1909.

———. Life's Adventure. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1932.

Worcester, Elwood, and Samuel McComb. Body, Mind and Spirit. Boston: Marshall Jones, 1931.

Worcester, Elwood, Samuel McComb, and Isador Ciriat. Religion and Medicine. New York: Moffat, Yard, 1908.

World Congress of Faiths

Interfaith organization founded in 1936 by British explorer, soldier, and mystic Sir Francis Younghusband (1863–1942). The congress is dedicated to the work of reconciliation between different world faiths and the removal of intolerance and exclusivism, to ". . . instill a spirit of fellowship among mankind through religion, and . . . to revitalise all that is highest in man's spiritual being."

The congress combines dissemination of knowledge of world religions with the building of friendly relationships between them. It encourages interreligious understanding through personal contacts and frank dialogue and believes that all great religions have much to learn from each other.

The congress arranges lectures, debates, visits to religious centers, "All Faith Services," and annual conferences. Speakers from different faiths give talks at schools and colleges. A journal, World Faiths Encounter, includes news of activities, book reviews, and articles of religious interest, and a newsletter, One Family, is published regularly. Although there are branches in Kent, Bath, and Bristol, the congress headquarters are located at 2 Market St., Oxford OX1 3EF England. Website: http://www.interfaith-center.org/wcf/.

Sources:

World Congress of Faiths. http://www.interfaith-center.org/wcf/. March 8, 2000.

World Goodwill

An organization founded in 1932 to apply the teachings of former Theosophist Alice A. Bailey (1880–1949) in the social context, specifically to improve human relations in the world. Bailey founded the Arcane School to propagate the theosophical teachings that came through her channelings from the Tibetan Master. World Goodwill extends the work of the Arcane School by mobilizing the constructive power of goodwill in society to dealing with problems throughout the world.

The organization supports the work of the United Nations and is recognized as an accredited nongovernmental organization. As such, it provides advice and assistance to individuals and groups concerned with world service projects. One of its activities has been the formation of triangles, a linkage of individuals who employ constructive thought in a daily meditation of groups of three, invoking "the energies of light and goodwill" in a "network of light."

The energies are visualized as circulating through three points of a triangle, connecting with other triangles. This network carries the "great invocation" or universal prayer, forming "a channel for the downpouring of light and love into the body of humanity."

World Goodwill is associated with Lucis Trust, which is located at 120 Wall St., 24th Fl., New York, NY 10005. It also has subsidiary offices at 3 Whitehall Ct., Ste. 54, London SW1A 2EF, England, and also in Geneva. Website: http://www.lucistrust.org/.

Sources:

Sinclair, John E. The Alice Bailey Inheritance. Wellingborough, England: Turnstone Press, 1984.

World Goodwill. http://www.lucistrust.org/. March 8, 2000.

World League of Illuminati

In 1880, Theodor Reuss, a druggist, singer, and student of the esoteric, launched an attempt to reactivate the Illuminati, the order originally founded by Adam Weishaupt (1748–1830) in 1776 and destroyed in 1785. The first lodge was opened in Munich, Germany. The Berlin lodge opened in 1895, and soon afterwards Reuss met an actor named Leopold Engel (1858–1931). They became involved in several activities, including the founding of the German section of the Theosophical Society. Engel was interested in all things psychic, and practiced mesmerism and naturopathic healing. Like Reuss, he also had the idea of reviving the Illuminati and had himself founded the World League of Illuminati in 1893. In 1896 he joined Ruess' Order of Illuminati and in 1899, they formally merged the two organizations.

On March 12, 1901, Reuss, Engel, and a group of their order members met and drafted a document that was backdated to the first day of the new century, January 1, 1900. It reestablished the then-dormant Munich lodge and asserted the order's authority to found Masonic lodges. Reuss was affirmed as the order's master. The founding of the new Munich lodge was duly announced as a regular Masonic lodge open to master Masons. Masons objected that it was merely an offshoot of the Illuminati and not Masonic. Reuss simply severed its connection with the Order of Illuminati. As a result, he and Engel quarreled. They patched up their relationship for a while, but in 1902 went their separate ways.

Actually, Reuss was losing his interest in the Illuminati. He renewed a relationship with Karl Kellner and began the process that would lead to the founding of the Ordo Templi Orientis (OTO). In the meantime, Engel reestablished the World League of the Illuminati and issued a new set of regulations at the beginning of 1903. Three years later, he issued a manifesto in the form of a history of the order. He took extra pains to separate his position from that of Reuss, now operating under the OTO banner.

The World League survived through the 1930s and drew on a variety of Masonic and Rosicrucian sources. Engel died on October 8, 1931. He was succeeded by Julius Meyer. Then on September 22, 1934, the League was closed down by the Gestapo, and much of its material confiscated. Work of the order was immediately transferred to the regional groups. As early as 1896, Engel had opened a group in Austria and a Swiss group was founded in 1929. A Polish group opened in 1937, but as with the Austrian group, it was closed after the Nazi takeover of the country. Only the Swiss group under Karl Brodbeck operated through World War II (1939–45).

Meyer was able to revive what was now known as the Illuminaten Orden (IO) after the war. He charged Maximillian Haitz with the task of reassembling the archive that the Gestapo seized, which he was partially able to accomplish. Eduard Korbel revived the IO in Austria. Following Brodbeck's death in 1955, Hermann Joseph Metzger (1919–1990) assumed leadership of the Swiss IO. That same year, P. Kirchvogel emerged as the new international leader of the World League, Julius Meyer having died in 1953. In 1963 Kirchvogel passed that office to Metzger.

Metzger had already begun work on a master vision that included the uniting of a various Magical/occult lineages/activities in his person. In 1947 he had taken over a publishing house, Psychosophische Gesellschaft, following the death of its owner. In 1957 he had become a bishop, and then in 1960, the patriarch of the Gnostic Catholic Church, a church that traces its history to the apparition of the Virgin Mary and subsequent consecration to the bishopric of Jules-Benoit Doinel (1842–1902). Metzger had also joined the Ordo Templi Orientis, the order cofounded by Reuss and passed to magician Aleister Crowley. In 1963, Crowley's successor as Outer Head of the Order, Karl Johannes Germer (1885–1962), died. Metzger held an election of the German-speaking leadership and in 1963 proclaimed himself the new Outer Head.

The World League was merged into what Metzger called the Ordo Illuminatorum (OI). The work of the new OI includes 13 degrees that borrow material from all of the different organizations over which Metzger had attained control. The 13th degree was the administrative degree for the international leaders, including the Aeropagus of the Illuminati.

Sources:

Anson, Peter. Bishops at Large. London: Faber and Faber, 1964.

Koenig, Peter R. "Illuminati and Templars." http://cyberlink.ch/koenig/illumin.htm. April 21, 2000.

Worlds Beyond (Fund)

A special appeal fund of the National Spiritualist Association of Churches to promote knowledge of Spiritualism on radio and television. Formerly titled "Satellite Séances," this fund is based upon the idea that mass media provides:

". . . an opportunity to show to the world the true facts about 'life after death' and 'communication.' Even now, many outside organizations are stimulating their forces to counter-censor or attempt to head off these facts. . . . Those in spirit are anxious for us to open wide the door between the two worlds of life. All we have to do is present the facts in the true light. . . . The time is now for unification of world Spiritualism. The time is now for Spiritualists to step forward confidently and face the 21st century. The time is now for Worlds Beyond. Once these programs are on the air they can attract the support they need to continue through direct appeals to viewers."

The NSAC Worlds Beyond fund can be contacted at P.O. Box 128, Cassadaga, FL 32706.

Worlds, Planes, or Spheres (in Theosophy)

According to the teachings of Theosophy, deriving in part from esoteric Hinduism, the universe is divided into seven planes. Beginning with the one closest to God, they are referred to as the divine, adi; monadic, anutadaka; spiritual, nirvana; intuitional, buddhi; mental, manas; astral, kama; and physical, sthula. These worlds are not physically separate in the manner that planets appear to be, but interpenetrate, and their differences depend on the relative density of the matter that composes them and the consequent difference in the rates at which the matter of each world vibrates.

Except for the physical world (the densest), our knowledge of them, so far as it extends, is dependent on clairvoyance. The more exalted the vision of the clairvoyant, the higher the world his or her vision can pierce. Each world has its appropriate inhabitants, clothed in appropriate bodies, and possessing appropriate states of consciousness.

According to theosophical belief, the two highest worlds, the divine and the monadic, are at present incapable of attainment by human powers, and the remaining five are attainable in greater or lesser degree. The monad (soul), for the purpose of gathering experience, finds it necessary to pass downward into the material sphere. When it has taken possession of the spiritual, intuitional, and higher mental worlds, it may be looked on as a soul embodying will, intuition, and intellect, continuing eternally the same entity, never altering except by reason of increasing development, and hence being immortal.

These worlds, however, do not afford sufficient scope to the monad and it presses still further down into matter, through the lower mental, and into the astral and physical worlds. The bodies with which it is there clothed form its personality and this personality suffers death and is renewed at each fresh incarnation, a process generally called reincarnation. At the death of the physical body, the ego has merely cast aside a garment and continues to live in the next higher world, the astral.

At the death of the astral body another garment is cast aside, the ego is cleared of all appendages and is as it was before its descent into denser matter, having returned to the mental, the heavenly world. The ego finds itself somewhat strange in this situation, owing to insufficient development, and it again descends into matter as before. This round is completed again and again, and each time the ego returns with a fresh store of experience and knowledge, which strengthens and perfects the mental body.

When at last this process is complete, this body in turn is cast aside and the ego is clothed with its causal body. Again it finds itself strange and the cycle of descent into matter begins again and continues until the causal body has been fully developed. The two remaining worlds are imperfectly known, but the intuitional, as its name indicates, is that where the ego's vision is quickened to see things as they really are, and in the spiritual world the divine and the human become unified and the divine purpose is fulfilled. (See also Evolution of Life; Logos; Spheres)

World Union Journal

Bimonthly journal of the World Union Community propagating the teachings of Sri Aurobindo and the ideal of human unity. Last known address: World Union International, Pondicherry 2, India 605002.

Worrall, Ambrose Alexander (1899–1972)

Engineer and spiritual healer. He was born on January 18, 1899, at Barrow-in-Furness, Lancashire, England. He studied mechanical engineering. In 1928 he married Olga Nathalie Ripich Worrall. For 30 years (1924–64) he was employed by the Martin Company, Baltimore, Maryland, and worked as a consultant for various firms in the years after his retirement.

He and his wife worked quietly as spiritual healers for many years, but their work gained a wider audience after the founding of the Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship (now the International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship) in the 1950s. They became leaders in the organization. They also contributed to the annual seminars on spiritual healing held by the Laymen's Movement, Wainwright House, Rye, New York. Worrall's interests included clairvoyance, clairaudience, clairsentience, psychokinesis, psychometry, and theories of survival. He lectured widely on ESP and spiritual healing at colleges, churches, and other associations and published several pamphlets on spiritual healing and related subjects. He died on February 2, 1972.

Sources:

Worrall, Ambrose A. The Gift of Healing. Baltimore, Md.: The Author, 1961.

———. The Philosophy and Methodology of Healing. Baltimore, Md.: The Author, 1961.

Worrall, Ambrose A. and Olga Worrall. Basic Principles of Spiritual Healing. Evanston, Ill.: Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship, 1969.

———. Explore Your Psychic World. New York: Harper & Row, 1970.

———. The Gift of Healing: A Personal Story of Spiritual Therapy. New York: Harper & Row, 1965.

Worrall, Olga Nathalie Ripich (1906–1985)

Spiritual healer and associate director of New Life Clinic, Mount Washington Methodist Church, Baltimore, Maryland. She was born on November 30, 1906, in Cleveland, Ohio. In 1928 she married Ambrose Alexander Worrall and the two of them worked together for many years as healers. For many years prior to their marriage she healed the sick through a psychic talent that had manifested itself when she was eight. In addition to human beings, she healed cats, dogs, horses, chickens, and plants. In the 1950s, the Worralls associated with the newly-founded Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship (now the International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship), and for many years they were among the fellowship's leading speakers and resource people.

Her special gift was of great interest to physicians, some of whom were her patients. One physician who sought her aid was John Cerutti, who had suffered from severe back pain for many years. Cerutti's experience with the healer was so profound that his wife Edwina, originally a skeptic, was won over and eventually published a book about the healer: Olga Worrall, Mystic with the Healing Hands (1975). Following her husband's death in 1972, Worrall continued to be active within the new wave of interest in alternative healing and during the 1970s became one of the most famous healers in the United States. In spite of her fame, she continued to focus her healing work in daily prayer sessions and with the New Life Clinic.

Worrall was also interested in the work of parapsychologists and on one occasion noted, "Since I am gifted in psychic abilities such as clairvoyance, etc. and spiritual healing, I am interested in the scientific research approach into parapsychological demonstrations motivated by personal experiences, especially in the areas of proving immortality and spiritual healing."

Worrall wrote a number of pamphlets explaining her methods of prayer and healing and coauthored several books with her husband. She died January 9, 1985, in Baltimore, Maryland.

Sources:

Cerutti, Edwina. Olga Worrall, Mystic with the Healing Hands. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

Worrall, Ambrose, and Olga Worrall. Basic Principles of Spiritual Healing. Evanston, Ill.: Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship, 1969.

———. Explore Your Psychic World. New York: Harper & Row, 1970.

———. The Gift of Healing: A Personal Story of Spiritual Therapy. New York: Harper & Row, 1965.

Worrall, Olga. How to Start a Healing Service. Chicago, Ill.: Inner Creations, 1947.

Wortcunning

Anglo-Saxon term for knowledge of the medical and occult properties of plants. (See also Cunning)

Wraith

The apparition or double of a living person, generally supposed to be an omen of death. The wraith closely resembles its prototype in the flesh, even to details of dress. There are accounts of people seeing their own wraith, and among those who were warned of approaching death in this way are said to be Queen Elizabeth I, the poet Percy Bysshe Shelley, and Catherine of Russia. The latter, seeing her double seated upon the throne, ordered her guards to fire upon it.

But wraiths of others may appear to one or more persons. Lord Balcarres of Scotland saw the wraith of his friend "Bonnie Dundee" at the moment when the latter fell at the Battle of Killiecrankie, and the poet Ben Jonson saw his eldest son's double when the original was dying of the plague.

The belief in the wraith flourishes in Europe, and in different parts of Britain it goes under different names, such as "waff," "swarth," "task," and "fye." Variants are the Irish "fetch," and the Welsh "lledrith."

In Scotland it was believed that the wraith of one about to die might be seen wrapped in a shroud. The higher the shroud reached, the nearer was the approach of death.

Something analogous to wraith-seeing comes within the scope of modern psychical science, and the apparition is explained in various ways, as an astral projection or an emanation from the person of its living prototype.

A well-known case is that of the Birkbeck Ghost, when three children witnessed the apparition of their mother shortly before her death. This instance, reported in Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 1, 1882, pp. 121–122), is noteworthy because Mrs. Birkbeck was conscious before she died of having spent the time with her children. (See also J. W. Goethe; Vardøgr)

Wrekin Trust

British based New Age organization, "concerned with the spiritual nature of Man and the Universe. It was not affiliated to any particular doctrine or dogma, did not offer any one way to 'the truth' and helps people find the disciplines most suited to them. After more than 12 years of pioneering courses and conferences on the holistic world view and introductory approaches to various disciplines, the Trust offered in addition, a curriculum for ongoing spiritual training. The inspiration was derived from the medieval concept of the University, which was concerned to find and orchestrate methods and systems of knowledge leading to union with the One, as the term 'Universus,' turned to the One, reveals."

The trust was founded by Sir George Trevelyan in 1971 and was especially concerned with dissolving the barriers between science and religion. The trust had been honored with the Right Livelihood Award, known as the "Alternative Nobel Prize," given in Stockholm for "Work forming an essential contribution to making life more whole, healing the planet, and uplifting humanity."

The trust organized important conferences on science and mysticism, with papers from Glen W. Schaefer, Joscelyn Godwin, and Pir Vilayat Inayat Khan. Last known address: Runnings Park, Croft Bank, West Malvern, Worcestershire WR14 4BP, England.

Sources:

Trevelyan, George A. A Vision of the Aquarian Age. London: Stillpoint, 1984.

Wriedt, Etta (ca. 1859–1942)

American professional direct voice medium who charged a nominal fee of one dollar for a successful séance. She never sat in a cabinet, did not pass into trance, and often joined in the conversation of the voices with the visitors.

Admiral Usborne Moore, author of The Voices (1913), heard three voices talking at once, one in each ear, and one through the trumpet. Wriedt only spoke English, but the voices knew no linguistic limitation. On occasion Dutch, French, Spanish, Norwegian, and Arabic were heard.

Wriedt's spirit control was an entity called "Dr. John Sharp," who claimed that he was born in Glasgow, Scotland, in the eighteenth century, lived most of his life in the United States as an apothecary farmer, and died in Evansville, Indiana. He took great care of the medium—often at the nervous or psychic expense of the sitters. Moore found the strain on his system so great while sitting with the medium in Detroit that he did not recover his normal health until more than six weeks later.

Wriedt paid five visits to England. She came the first time in 1911, at the age of 51, on the invitation of W. T. Stead, and held séances at Julia's Bureau. In 1912 and 1913, the arrangements for her visits were made by Moore, and in 1915 and 1919 she sat chiefly in Rothesay, Scotland.

E. K. Harper, W. T. Stead's secretary, recorded nearly 200 sittings with Wriedt. She often heard the direct voice in daylight. There were other features to the séance, such as luminous forms gliding about the room in the darkness. Sometimes dogs materialized and barked.

The spirit control "John King" claimed responsibility for the physical phenomena in England. Flowers were taken from vases and placed in the hands of sitters in the dark in different parts of the room. Invisible fingers touched the sitters and rapped by the trumpet to urge a hesitating person to answer promptly when spoken to. Luminous discs were seen to move inside the circle. The sitters were often sprinkled with drops of water, felt wafts of cool air, and saw heavy objects displaced.

From the spirit world, "W. T. Stead," who died in the Titantic tragedy, frequently communicated and gave many particulars of his passing over. He said that he was struck on the head when the Titanic sank and never felt the actual sensation of drowning.

Wriedt could clairvoyantly read names "written up," as she put it, in the dark. Once a name met with no recognition. Suddenly "John King's" voice broke the silence: "You had better clear out, my friend, nobody knows you." Moore was greeted by the voice of "Grayfeather," the Native American control of the medium J. B. Jonson of Detroit, who had never manifested before through Wriedt.

The psychical researcher William F. Barrett heard voices simultaneously with Wriedt. "Professor Henry Sidgwick" came through. Barrett stated:

"Mrs. Wriedt doubtless had heard his name, but he died before she visited England, and I doubt if she, or many others who knew him by name, were aware that he stammered badly. So I asked the voice 'Are you all right now?' not referring to his stammering. Immediately the voice replied 'You mean the impediment in my speech, but I do not stutter now' . . . I went to Mrs. Wriedt's séances in a somewhat skeptical spirit, but I came to the conclusion that she is a genuine and remarkable medium, and has given abundant proof to others besides myself that the voices and the contents of the messages given are wholly beyond the range of trickery or collusion."

Chedo Miyatovich, a Serbian diplomat and member of several learned societies, sat with Wriedt in the company of a Croatian lawyer friend, H. Hinkovitch, who had just arrived in London. Voices of deceased friends and relatives spoke to them in Serbian, Croatian, and at a later séance in German when Margarette Selenka of Germany was present.

An attempt to discredit Wriedt's phenomena was made in Christiania in August 1912, by one Professor Birkenhead and state chemist L. Schmelck. They averred that the noises in the trumpet were caused by lycopodium, a mildly inflammable powder used by druggists to coat pills. Other chemists held the report up to ridicule, and it became known that Birkenhead was extremely deaf and could not judge voices at all.

Wriedt died in Detroit, Michigan, September 13, 1942.

Wyllie, Edward (1848–1911)

Spirit photographer. He was psychic from his childhood, which was spent in Calcutta. He served in the Maori War in New Zealand with the rank of captain and settled in California in 1886 as a photographer. Spots and lights threatened to ruin his business until a lady, who had heard of spirit photography, examined his plates and suggested this explanation.

The Pasadena [California] Society for Psychical Research investigated the case on November 27, 1900, in Los Angeles. Their report stated: "As a committee we have no theory, and testify only to that which we do know. Individually we differ as to probable causes, but unanimously agree concerning the palpable facts." The committee promised $25 to any Los Angeles photographer who by trick or skill could produce similar results under similar conditions.

The early scene of Wyllie's psychic photography was Sycamore Grove, near Los Angeles. He had to move from there as the psychic "extras" obtained were dissolute-looking men and women. It was suggested as an explanation that about 50 years earlier the place had been the scene of wild orgies. The authorities stamped them out, but the evil influences apparently clung to the place.

Wyllie was accused by P. A. Jensen in The Progressive Thinker of producing his spirit faces by superimposing a prepared negative. The basis of the charge was that a suspicious negative had been found in a house where Wyllie had been. But according to James Coates in Photographing the Invisible (1911), Jensen had not been able to produce a single case where the negative in question had been used.

Another charge was raised by a Dr. Woillard. He said that Wyllie, for a fee, taught him how to take spirit pictures. His method was to hold in the hollow of his arched hand a photo prepared with luminous paint, and to keep it over plates in the darkroom previous to exposure. He said that he found two such miniatures prepared with India ink and luminous paint and also that Wyllie had confessed.

As well as being a spirit photographer, Wyllie was credited with powers of psychometry. He could obtain photographic "extras" through the influence of objects. James Coates sent him locks of his and his wife's hair. Two human heads were obtained on a photograph and one was recognized as Mrs. Coates' grandmother. It was as a result of this experiment that Wyllie was invited to England. Coates gave the following summary of his experiments:

"About 60 percent of the photographs taken exhibited psychic extras, and 25 percent of these were identified as those of departed persons. To all the subjects Mr. Wyllie was a complete stranger, and of the origins of the psychic extras or portraits he could have no knowledge; and except in the cases where flowers—roses and lilies—were produced there was a marked absence of symbolism in the photographs taken."

X

Xavier, Francisco Candido (1910–   )

Famous Brazilian Spiritist medium. (Spiritism, the Brazilian form of Spiritualism, stems from the teachings of French Spiritist Allan Kardec.) Known throughout Brazil as "Chico Xavier" (pronounced Sheeko Shaveer), he was born April 2, 1910, in the town of Pedro Leopoldo in the central state of Minas Gerais. He was one of a family of nine children. His mother died when he was only five, but Chico saw her materialize after her death, and during his period at primary school three years later, he became accustomed to hearing voices and sensing spirit presences.

He won an honorable mention for an essay contest with an entry that appeared to be dictated to him by a spirit form. On being challenged to produce another "spirit essay," he went straight to the blackboard and started writing a profound statement on the theme suggested, after which the teacher recommended he stop talking about spirit voices and pray on conventional Catholic lines.

He became a practicing medium in 1927 soon after one of his sisters was cured of apparent possession through the efforts of a healing medium. The whole Xavier family became Spiritists, and the medium's wife, Carmen Perácio, founded an evangelical Spiritist center, where Xavier manifested an ability for automatic writing. At one of these sessions, Perácio had a vision of a priestly spirit, "Emmanuel," who became Xavier's spirit guide thereafter. Xavier's mediumship continued in the form of automatic writing from spirit dictation.

Although nearly blind in one eye through most of his life and with only a rudimentary primary education, Xavier produced a prodigious number of books recognizably in the style of hundreds of deceased Brazilian and Portuguese authors whose works he had never had the opportunity to study.

In addition, he visited invalids in the district and undertook voluntary social work at his Pedro Leopoldo Spiritist Center at Uberaba. Hundreds of visitors came to this center for a personal message delivered by Xavier in trance, with instructions on individual problems, whether spiritual or medical. He has written some 130 books, of which over 3,000,000 copies have been sold in 415 editions. Some of these books have been translated into Spanish, French, Japanese, Esperanto, and English.

His book Evolucão em dois mundos (Evolution in Two Worlds, 1959) was written in collaboration with Dr. Waldo Vieira, who lived 250 miles away. The chapters were written alternately in uniform style and continuity, and the work took only forty days. It contained scientific concepts beyond the medium's understanding, suggesting to many that such information does not come from the medium's subconscious. Brazilian Spiritists follow Allan Kardec in clearly distinguishing between escrita automatica (automatic writing involving the medium's subconscious) and psiografia (involving a spirit entity).

In spite of the enormous popularity of his prodigious literary output, Xavier never accepted payment for any of his books and even disclaimed personal credit by the phrase "dictated by the spirit of–" on the title page.

He left Brazil only on two occasions. In 1965 and 1966 he made brief trips to Spiritualist centers abroad and a pilgrimage to the tomb of Allan Kardec in Paris, France. He appeared on Brazilian television programs, but remained a modest, sincere individual who devoted his psychic gift to the service of mankind. He was made an honorary citizen of São Paulo in 1973, and was similarly honored by other cities and towns in Brazil, including Rio de Janeiro, Uberada, Campinas, and São Bernardo. In 1977, the government of Brazil endorsed Xavier's half century as a medium by issuing a postage stamp in his honor. This official recognition of Spiritism is unique to Brazil; the government has also issued postage stamps honoring Allan Kardec and his teachings.

Sources:

Xavier, Francisco Candido. Christian Agenda. London: Regency Press, 1970.

———. The World of the Spirit. New York: Philosophical Library, n.d.

Xenoglossy

Speaking in a language unknown to the speaker in the normal waking state. It is different from what is commonly called glossolalia, or speaking in tongues, a form of vocalized religious experience characteristic of some religious movements, such as Pentecostalism. It has been compared with automatic writing, writing in a language unknown to the writer.

Speaking in an unknown language is perhaps a far more impressive phenomenon than writing in it. Subconscious visual memory may account for occasional reproduction of foreign sentences, but the explanation becomes more difficult if the problem of intonation is added, since it necessitates an auditive memory, the subconscious retention of fragments of strange languages actually heard somewhere at some time.

In medieval times speaking in foreign languages was one of the four principal signs of the presence of a demon. The belief was bound to have its subconscious effect. The Ursuline nuns of Loudon (according to their earliest historian in La Véritable Histoire des Diables de Loudun, par un Témoin, â Poitiers, 1634) spoke Latin, Greek, Turkish, Spanish, and a Native American tongue and confessed to having been obsessed by the devil.

In later religious revivals, the outbreak was a sign of celestial inspiration. The recitals of the refugees from the Cévennes, reported in Le Théâtre Sacré des Cevennes, by M. Misson (London, 1707) contains numerous accounts of the gift among unlettered Camisard (French Protestant) adults and infants, who spoke French in the purest diction (see also Tremblers of the Cevennes). The phenomenon was also noted among the Convulsionaries of St. Medard in 1730.

It is interesting to note that the psychical researcher F. W. H. Myers did not believe in the phenomenon. He said that he knew of only a few instances when a few words, fragments of a language, came through the medium—some Italian and Hawaiian words in Leonora Piper's utterances and a few Kaffir and Chinese words through another medium, a Ms. Browne. "We have no modern case, no case later than the half-mythical Miracles of the Cevennes, where such utterance has proved to be other than gibberish."

Apparently Myers ruled out or was unaware of many early cases, among them the testimony of Judge John W. Edmonds. His daughter, Laura Edmonds, was the first medium in modern Spiritualism reportedly with a gift for xenoglossy. Supposedly, foreign sitters could converse through her with spirits in their native language, even if it was a country as remote as Greece or Poland. Judge Edmonds wrote in a letter dated October 27, 1857:

"One evening when some 12 or 15 persons were in my parlor, Mr. E. D. Green, an artist of this city, was shown in, accompanied by a gentleman whom he introduced as Mr. Evangelides, of Greece. He spoke broken English, but Greek fluently. Ere long, a spirit spoke to him through Laura, in English, and said so many things to him that he identified him as a friend who had died at his house a few years before but of whom none of us had ever heard. Occasionally, through Laura, the spirit would speak a word or a sentence in Greek, until Mr. E. inquired if he could be understood if he spoke in Greek. The residue of the conversation, for more than an hour, was, on his part, entirely in Greek, and on hers sometimes in Greek and sometimes in English. At times Laura would not understand what was the idea conveyed, either by her or him. At other times she would understand him, though he spoke in Greek, and herself when uttering Greek words. . . .

"One day my daughter and niece came into my library and began a conversation with me in Spanish, one speaking a part of a sentence and the other the residue. They were influenced, as I found, by a spirit of a person whom I had known when in Central America, and reference was made to many things which had occurred to me there, of which I knew they were as ignorant as they were of Spanish. . . . Laura has spoken to me in Indian, in the Chippewa and Menomonie tongues. I knew the language, because I had been two years in the Indian country."

According to the book Modern American Spiritualism, by Emma Hardinge Britten (1870), in addition to Laura Edmonds, the gift was demonstrated at an early period by Jenny Keyes, who sang in trance in Italian and Spanish, and by a Mrs. Shepherd, Mrs. Gilbert Sweet, a Miss Inman, a Mrs. Tucker, Susan Hoyt, A. D. Ruggles, and several others whose names she was not permitted to make public. They frequently spoke in Spanish, Danish, Italian, Hebrew, Greek, Malay, Chinese, and Indian.

In 1859, 19 people testified in the Banner of Light to 34 cases of persons who occasionally spoke or wrote in tongues. J. J. Mapes and Governor Nathaniel P. Tallmadge bore witness to numerous instances in which uneducated mediums conversed with strangers in the streets in various foreign languages.

A decade later, a Mr. Lowenthal testified in England before the Committee of the London Dialectical Society: "I am frequently made to speak the language of another nation. I believe it to be an Indian language. My mouth utters sounds that I do not understand and which have no meaning to me. I think it is the language of some North American tribe. It is a soliloquy, and I get an impression on the brain, an idea that it means so and so. A voice articulate but not audible conveys a meaning to me. I have been among the Indians a great deal, and it sounds to me like their language."

Archdeacon Thomas Colley wrote of having heard the "Mahedi," a materialized Egyptian in the mediumship of Francis W. Monck (who knew no English), speak in that language under the control of Monck's regular guide, "Samuel." This appears to be the only instance on record where a claimed materialized individual was used as an automatic instrument by another spirit.

The Italian medium Alfredo Pansini, who, with his brother Paolo, was the subject of reported bodily transportation (see teleportation) by mediumistic power, spoke in a sort of hypnotic trance at the age of seven, in French, Latin, and Greek, and recited several cantos of the Divina Commedia. On one occasion, according to accounts, he spoke successively in twelve different voices. Frederik van Eeden recorded in the Proceedings of the Society of Psychical Research (vol. 17, 1901, pp. 59, 75) a Dutch conversation with a deceased friend through the medium Rosina Thompson:

"During a few minutes . . . I felt absolutely as if I were speaking to my friend myself. I spoke Dutch and got immediate and correct answers. The expression of satisfaction and gratification in face and gesture, when we seem to understand one another was too vivid to be acted. Quite unexpected Dutch words were pronounced, details were given which were far from my mind, some of which, as that about my father's uncle in a former sitting, I had never known, and found to be true only on inquiry afterwards."

Many German Orientalists testified that when the stigmatic subject Thérèse Neumann relived the Passion of Christ, she spoke in ancient Aramaic. The weakness of the case is that the phrases she used exist in print with translations in modern languages.

The New York Evening Post reported on November 10, 1930, the case of a four-year-old girl at Warsaw. Although the parents of Marie Skotnicki spoke only Polish, she developed the extraordinary habit of talking to herself in a foreign tongue that no one about her could understand but was later established to be pure Gaelic. It is important to add that her great-grandfather came from the Island of Lewis in the Scottish Hebrides.

In The Two Worlds (March 31, 1933), F. H. Wood wrote of the medium Rosemary and "Lady Nona," her ancient Egyptian control: "The fact is now established beyond disproof that over 140 Egyptian word-phrases which were in common use when the great Temple of Luxor in Egypt was built, have been spoken fluently through an English girl who normally knows nothing about the ancient tongue." Howard Hulme of Brighton, Sussex, the translator of the Egyptian phrases, after a preliminary test by mail which resulted in an unexpected but correct Egyptian answer, had also heard Lady Nona speak. After an amazing dialogue in the dead tongue of the pyramid builders, "Nona cleared up many points of pronunciation, gave her own earth name and explained the full meaning of some of her previous language tests."

In the early 1980s, Dr. William H. Kautz also announced a computer-based project at the Research Center for Applied Intuition (of which he is founder and director) involving the preparation of a translation and lexicon of the Rosemary Egyptian language text, to be studied in conjunction with all relevant publications relating to Egyptian language of the Eighteenth Dynasty, and a reconstitution of vocal Egyptian of the same period. The lexicon was to be compared with written Egyptian language and also with the reconstitution of the spoken form.

The medium Etta Wriedt reportedly spoke in many unknown tongues, and no stranger inflection could be imagined than the archaic Chinese that the voice of "Confucius" used in speaking through the medium George Valiantine to Neville Whymant, the renowned Oriental scholar. Whymant heard 14 languages spoken in 12 séances, and the strangest of all was the speech that came to him in fluent classical Chinese: "Greetings, O son of learning, and reader of strange books," and gave a complete new reading of poems and of the analects of Confucius, over which learned scholars have differed for centuries. Whymant's book Psychic Adventures in New York (1931) is among the most convincing twentieth-century records of xenoglossia.

Spirit Languages—The Primeval Tongue

The appearance of xenoglossy is not restricted to languages known to the people present when the words are spoken. On occasion, such vocalizations may turn out to be pure gibberish, or possibly attempts at a subconscious creation of a new language. Often they seem to be instances of glossolalia. An example of the latter was reported by William James in an article, "A Case of Psychic Automation . . .," published in the Proceedings of the Society of Psychical Research, vol. 12, 1896. Albert Le Baron (a pseudonym), an American journalist at a Spiritualist camp, spoke automatically in an unknown tongue. Fragments of the discourse were written down by himself, others were spoken into a phonograph in the presence of both James and Richard Hodgson. The following is a specimen: "Te rumete tau. Ilee lete leele luto scele. Impe re scele lee luto. Onko keere scete tere lute. Ombo te scele to bere te kure. Sinte lute sinte Kuru. Orumo imbo impe rute scelete. Singe, singe, singe eru. Imba, Imba, Imba."

The medium went on to supply the translation, "The old word! I love the old word of the heavens! The love of the heavens is emperor. The love of the darkness is slavery. The heavens are wise, the heavens are true, the heavens are sure. The love of the earth is past. The King now rules in the heavens."

Some spirit languages were allegedly extremely condensed. Psychical researcher Frank Podmore, for instance, reported that the phrase "Ki-e-lou-cou-ze-ta" required no less than 45 words to furnish an adequate translation in English. This relative difference in the number of words spoken and translation is again typical of glossolalia.

A Primeval Language?

The primeval language and the claimed "Martian" languages (see Hélène Smith) present the most interesting problems. The primeval or nature language has been described as the inner language of the soul, the universal tongue of men before the Fall, of which Hebrew is a corrupted form. In origin it is the language of the angels, of which the seer Emanuel Swedenborg writes in his book The True Christian Religion as follows:

"There is a universal language, proper to all angels and spirits, which has nothing in common with any language spoken in the world. Every man, after death, uses this language, for it is implanted in every one from creation; and therefore throughout the whole spiritual world all can understand one another. I have frequently heard this language and, having compared it with languages in the world, have found that it has not the slightest resemblance to any of them; it differs from them in this fundamental respect, that every letter of every word has a particular meaning."

In his book Heaven and Hell, Swedenborg further states: "Writing in the inmost heaven consists of various inflected and circumflected forms and the inflections and circumflections are according to the form of heaven. By these the angels express the arcana of their wisdom, many of which cannot be uttered by words; and, what is wonderful, the angels are skilled in such writing without being taught, for it is implanted in them like their speech . . . and therefore this writing is heavenly writing, which is not taught, but inherent, because all extensions of the thoughts and affections of the angels, and thus all communication of their intelligence and wisdom, proceeds according to the form of heaven, and hence their writing also flows into that form. I have been told that the most ancient people on this earth wrote in the same manner before the invention of letters, and that it was transferred into the letters of the Hebrew language which in ancient times were all inflected. Not one of them had the square form in use at this day; and hence it is that the very dots, iotas and minutest parts of the word contain heavenly arcana and things Divine."

The first record of the existence of a primeval language seems to be in the experiments of Elizabethan magician John Dee (1527–1608). The next, apart from Swedenborg's insights, was in the visions of the Seeress of Prevorst (Frederica Hauffe), which were confirmed by a somnambule patient of Heinrich Werner's a few years later and cited in Werner's book Die Schutzgeister, oder Merkwürdige Blicke zweier Seherinnen in die Geisterwelt (Stuttgart, 1839).

In Dee's notes, the invocation of the spirits was given in the "primeval language." It was accompanied by a word-for-word translation. The properties of this ancient tongue, claimed to be that which Adam employed and the angels speak, are singular, according to Dee: "Every letter signifieth the member of the substance whereof is speaketh: every word signifieth the quiddity of the substance . . . signifying substantially the thing that is spoken of in the centre of his Creator, whereby even as the mind of man moveth at an ordered speech, and is easily persuaded in things that are true, so are the creatures of God stirred up in themselves, when they hear the words wherewithal they were nursed and brought forth . . . the creatures of God understand you not. You are not of their Cities: you are become enemies, because you are separated from Him that governeth the City, by ignorance. . . . Men in his Creation, being made innocent was also authorised and made partaker of the Power and Spirit of God, whereby he did know all things under his Creation, and spoke of them properly, naming them as they were."

In plain language, this apparently means that the original speech bore an organic relation to the outer world, that each name expressed the properties of the thing spoken of, and that the utterances of that name had a compelling power over that creature. This has analogues in the mystical traditions of the Hebrew shemhamphorash, the secret name of God, and the mystical traditions connected with Hindu mantras.

In his book The Seeress of Prevorst (1845), Justinus Kerner writes:

"In her sleep-walking state, Mrs. H. frequently spoke in a language unknown to us, which seemed to bear some resemblance to the Eastern tongues. She said that this language was the one which Jacob spoke, and that it was natural to her and to all men. It was very sonorous, and as she was perfectly consistent in her use of it, those who were much about her gradually grew to understand it. She said, by it only could she fully express her innermost feelings; and that, when she had to express these in German, she was obliged first to translate them from this language. It was not from her head, but from her epigastric region that it proceeded. She knew nothing of it when she was awake. The names of things in this language, she told us, expressed their properties and quality. Philologists discovered in it a resemblance to the Coptic Arabic and Hebrew: for example, the word 'Elschaddai,' which she often used for God, signifies, in Hebrew, the self-sufficient, or all-powerful. The word 'dalmachan' appears to be Arabic, and 'Bianachli' signifies in Hebrew: I am sighing, or in sighs.

"Here follow a few of the words of this inner language, and their interpretations: 'Handacadi,' physician: 'alentana,' lady; 'chlann,' glass; 'schmado,' moon; 'nohin,' no; 'mochiane,' nightingale; 'bianna fina,' many coloured flowers; 'moy', how; 'toi,' what; 'optini poga,' thou must sleep; 'mo li arato,' I rest, etc.

"The written characters of this language were always connected with numbers. She said that words with numbers had a much deeper and more comprehensive signification than without. She often said, in her sleep-walking state, that the ghosts spoke this language; for although spirits could read the thoughts, the soul, to which this language belonged, took it with it when it went above; because the soul formed an ethereal body for the spirit."

Further on Kerner adds:

"With respect to the inner language, the Seherin [Seeress] said, that one word of it frequently expressed more than whole lines of ordinary language; and that, after death, in one single symbol or character of it, man would read his whole life. It is constantly observed that persons in a sleep-walking state, and those who are deep in the inner-life, find it impossible to express what they feel in ordinary language. Another somnambule used often to say to me, when she could not express herself 'Can no one speak to me in the language of nature?'

"The Seherin observed by Mayers said, that to man, in the magnetic state, all nature was disclosed, spiritual and material; but that there were certain things which could not be well expressed in words, and thus arose apparent inconsistencies and errors. In the archives of animal magnetism, an example is given of this peculiar speech; the resemblance of which to the eastern languages doubtless arises from its being a remnant of the early language of mankind. Thus, sleep-walkers cannot easily recall the names of persons and things, and they cast away all conventionalities of speech. Mayers' Seherin says, that as the eyes and ears of man are deteriorated by the fall, so he has lost in a great degree the language of his sensations; but it still exists in us, and would be found, more or less, if sought for. Every sensation or perception has its proper figure or sign and this we can no longer express.

"In order to describe these perceptions, Mrs. H. constructed figures which she called her 'sun sphere,' her 'life sphere' and so forth.

"Many instances proved how perfect her memory for this inner language was. On bringing her the lithograph of what she had written a year before, she objected that there was a dot too much over one of the signs; and on referring to the copy which I had by me, I found she was right. She had no copy herself."

Heinrich Werner in his book Die Schutzgeister oder Merkwürdige Blicke Zweier Seherinen in die Geisterwelt (1839), gave a dissertation on the inner language, traces of which he found in the babbling of children, and stated that in rare states of exaltation the inner spirit can recover the lost vocabulary.

With the advent of modern Spiritualism, the idea of the primeval tongue faded out. Nor did spirit languages hold out for long. Camilla Crosland was one of the last of its recorders in Britain. In her book Light in the Valley (1857) she writes:

"Three years ago a young lady, a medium whom I shall designate The Rose was taught by spirits, directly communicating with her, three spirit languages; that is to say, she was taught the meaning of certain characters and inflections, which are quite distinct, so far as I have been able to ascertain, from any known languages ancient or modern. . . . Introduced last autumn to another medium, a young lady whom we have been instructed to call Comfort, The Rose discovered that her new acquaintance wrote by spirit power the first-taught of these mystic languages. . . . Subsequently five other mediums, all personally known to me, have developed as writers of the first spirit language; and one of them, an author of repute and M.A. of the University of Oxford, has also on two or three occasions written in the second of the spirit languages, the characters of which seem mainly composed of dots."

The universal language of Swedenborg, according to Crosland, developed dialects. Unfortunately the sample of spirit writing in Light in the Valley is the plainest scribble and no evidence whatever was introduced to show how the identity, if any, was established among the strange ornaments of spiral and shell forms, with dots and scroll-like ciphers adorning the spirit drawing illustrations.

Writing in Tongues

Writing xenoglossic script is a comparatively frequent phenomenon. According to Richard Hodgson, "the chief difficulty, apparently, in getting another language written by the hand is that strange words tend to be written phonetically unless they are thought out slowly letter by letter. The medium William Eglinton, caught in fraudulent activity on several occasions, produced messages in a séance with the statesman Gladstone in Spanish, French, and Greek in direct writing. He did not know Spanish or Greek. An apparition at a séance held by Elizabeth d'Esperance, calling herself "Nepenthes," wrote in classic Greek in Professor L.'s notebook, "I am Nepenthes, thy friend. When thy soul is oppressed by overmuch pain, call on me, Nepenthes, and I will speedily come to assuage thy trouble."

According to Charles Richet, Mrs. X. (Laura Finch), a young woman of thirty, "wrote long sentences in Greek, with some errors, that clearly show mental vision of one or more Greek books. After much research . . . I was able to discover the book from which Mrs. X. had drawn most of the long Greek sentences that she had written in my presence. The book is not to be found in Paris except in the National Library—the Greco-French and Franco-Greek dictionary by Byzantios and Coromelas. As it is a dictionary of modern Greek, it is not in use in any school."

Richet further stated that Mrs. X. wrote some twenty lines of Greek with about 8 percent of small errors, that she was looking into space as if she were copying from the text of a language unknown to her of which she saw the characters without knowing their meaning, and that Mrs. X. knew no Greek at all and could not understand the sentences that appeared before her mental vision.

Several other examples of this phenomenon are to be found in Florizel von Reuter's books, Psychic Experiences of a Musician (1928) and The Consoling Angel (1930). The Chinese cross-correspondences of Mina Crandon (known as "Margery" in the literature) furnish especially striking instances.

Recent Research

The emergence of the charismatic movement in the 1970s led to a revival of claims that the glossolalia commonly experienced in Pentecostal services was in fact xenoglossy. To bolster this argument anecdotal accounts of xenoglossy in church services and on the mission field were reprinted. However, rather thorough research largely laid these claims to rest.

The most impressive reported incidents of xenoglossy were collected in Unlearned Language: New Studies in Xenoglossy, by psychical researcher Ian Stevenson, more known for his research on cases of reincarnation. Additionally, through the 1970s and into the 1980s, he supposedly recorded some cases of speaking an unlearned language that he had witnessed. He also noted that the publication of his first book on the subject brought numerous reports that, while interesting, were poorly documented.

Sources:

Bozzano, Ernesto. Polyglot Mediumship (Xenoglossy). London: Rider, 1932.

Flournoy, Theodor. From India to the Planet Mars. New York: Harper, 1900.

Kautz, William H. "The Rosemary Case of Alleged Egyptian Xenoglossy." Theta 10, 2 (summer 1982).

Lombard, Emile. De la Glossolalie chez les Premiers Chrétiens et des Phénomènes Similaires. Lausanne, Switzerland: Bridel, 1910.

Stevenson, Ian. Unlearned Language: New Studies in Xenoglossy. Charlottesville: University of Virginia Press, 1984.

———. Xenoglossy: A Review and Report of a Case. Charlottesville: University of Virginia Press, 1974.

Wood, F. H. After Thirty Centuries. London: Rider, 1935.

———. This Egyptian Miracle. London: Rider, 1940. Rev. ed. London: J. M. Watkins, 1955.

Xibalba

The Hades of the Kiche (or Quiché) Indians of Central America. (See Mexico and Central America)

Xylomancy

Divination by means of wood, practiced particularly in Slavonia. It was the art of reading omens from the position of small pieces of dry wood found in one's path. Presages of future events were also drawn from the arrangement of logs in the fireplace and from the manner in which they burned.

Y

Yadachi

A Mongolian weather changer. (See also Siberia)

Yadageri

The science of inducing rain and snow by means of enchantment. (See also Siberia)

Yaksha (or Jak)

A kind of Hindu supernatural being, usually inoffensive, but sometimes troublesome. Yakshas seem to have been somewhat analogous to the fairies of other countries.

According to W. Crooke, author of Religion and Folklore of Northern India (1926),

"The Jak is the modern representative of the Yaksha, who in better times was the attendant of Kuvera, the god of wealth, in which duty he was assisted by the Guhyaka. The character of the Yaksha is not very certain. He was called Punay-janas, 'the good people,' but he sometimes appears as an imp of evil. In the folk-tales, it must be admitted, the Yakshas have an equivocal reputation. In one story the female, or Yakshini, bewilders travellers at night, makes horns grow on their foreheads, and finally devours them; in another the Yakshas have, like the Churel, feet turned the wrong way and squinting eyes; in a third they separate the hero from the heroine because he failed to make due offerings to them on his wedding day. On the other hand, in a fourth tale the Yakshini is described as possessed of heavenly beauty; she appears again when a sacrifice is made in a cemetery to get her into the hero's power, as a heavenly maiden beautifully adorned, seated in a chariot of gold surrounded by lovely girls; and lastly, a Brahman meets some Buddhist ascetics, performs the Uposhana vow, and would have become a god, had it not been that a wicked man compelled him by force to take food in the evening, and so he was reborn as a Guhyaka.

"In the modern folk-lore of Kashmir, the Yaksha has turned into the Yech or Yach, a humorous, though powerful, sprite in the shape of a civet cat of a dark colour, with a white cap on his head. This small cap is one of the marks of the Irish fairies, and the Incubones of Italy wear caps, 'the symbols of their hidden, secret natures.' The feet of the Yech are so small as to be almost invisible, and it squeaks in a feline way. It can assume any shape, and if its white cap can be secured, it becomes the servant of the possessor, and the white cap makes him invisible.

"In the Vishnu Purana we read that Vishnu created the Yakshas as beings emaciate with hunger, of hideous aspect, and with big beards, and that from their habit of crying for food they were so named. By the Buddhists they were regarded as benignant spirits. One of them acts as sort of chorus in the Meghaduta or 'Cloud of Messenger' of Kalidasa. Yet we read of the Yaka Alawaka, who, according to the Buddhist legend, used to live in a Banyan tree, and slay any one who approached it; while in Ceylon they are represented as demons whom Buddha destroyed. In later Hinduism they are generally of fair repute, and one of them was appointed by Indra to be the attendant of the Jaina Saint Mahavira."

Sources:

Crooke, William. Religion and Folklore of Northern India. Humphrey Milford: Oxford University Press, 1926.

Yantra

Hindu mystical diagram, often inscribed on copper. Divine energy is invoked into the yantra by special prayers. The yantra is clearly a precursor of the magic diagrams of Western occultists, although in India it was used in a religious rather than an occult context.

Yarker, John (1833–1913)

British Freemason and occultist, active in Manchester, England. He was initiated as a Mason at the age of 21 in the Lodge of Integrity, Manchester, October 25, 1854, becoming master of this lodge in 1857. He became the first worshipful master of the Fidelity Lodge of Mark Masters. At the age of 23, he was installed a Knight Templar in the Jerusalem Conclave on July 11, 1856. There followed various Masonic honors, and in 1864 he was appointed Masonic Grand Constable of England. He also traveled extensively, visiting the United States, the West Indies, and Cuba. At a time of Masonic renaissance, he revived many rites and promoted a number of rites on his own, probably more for vanity than profit. These included the Rites of Sat B'Hai, Swedenborg, Mizraim, and the Ancient and Primitive Rite. The latter was later associated with magicians Theodor Reuss and Aleister Crowley.

Yarker was thus associated with the fringe Masonic secret orders that preceded the establishment of the OTO and the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn. The OTO originated in a charter from Yarker to the German occultists Joshua Klein, Franz Hartmann, and Theodore Reuss, licensing them to set up in Berlin a Grand Lodge of the Masonic rite of Mizraim and Memphis. By 1904, occultist Karl Kellner was also involved. The August Order of Light, developed by Maurice Portman, was passed to Yarker circa 1890, who amalgamated it with rituals from his Sat B'Hai Rite.

Yarker published a number of Masonic works and also an abridged translation of Louis-Alphonse Cahagnet's Magie Magnétique under the title Magnetic Magic (1898). His most well-known work is The Arcane Schools; A Review of Their Origin and Antiquity; with a General History of Freemasonry (1909). He also edited a periodical, The Kneph (1881–95), concerned with Masonic matters. He died on March 30, 1913.

Yasodhara Ashram

A spiritual retreat and study center founded in Canada in 1962 by German-born Swami Sivananda Radha, a disciple of the late Swami Sivananda Saraswati of Rishikesh, Himalayas, India. The Yasodhara Ashram is situated in a picturesque rural location and includes residential buildings, a guest lodge, prayer rooms, bookstore, office, and a Temple of Divine Light.

In addition to the ashram residents, facilities are offered for temporary residents to follow teaching programs in courses and workshops dealing with Eastern spiritual teachings and Western techniques for self-development. A yoga teachers course is also organized. The ashram publishes the journal Ascent four times a year and issues tape and disc recordings concerned with meditation, mantras and kundalini yoga. Address: Yasodhara Ashram, Box 9, Kootenay Bay, British Columbia, Canada VOB 1XO. Website: http://www.yasodhara.org.

Yauhahu

A spirit believed to cause diseases among Indians of British Guiana.

Yeats, W(illiam) B(utler) (1865–1939)

Famous Irish poet, playwright, and mystic. He was born at Sandymount, near Dublin, Ireland, on June 13, 1865. His father John Yeats was a talented portrait painter. William's brother Jack Butler Yeats was also an artist, and his sisters Elizabeth and Lily assisted in the establishment of the Dun Emer (later Cuala) Press.

Much of Yeat's childhood was spent in London, where he attended the Godolphin School, Hammersmith, but he also spent time in Dublin and County Sligo, in Western Ireland. At the age of fifteen, he attended Erasmus Smith School, Dublin, then studied art for three years, turning to literature at the age of 21. His first book, a play titled Mosada, was published in 1886. It was followed by two books of poems, The Wanderings of Oisin (1889) and The Wind Among the Reeds (1899). In 1888, he edited a collection titled Fairy and Folk Tales of the Irish Peasantry, which included some of his fairy verse. He became one of the leading figures in the Irish literary renaissance.

In London he was a founder of the Rhymers' Club and friend of Ernest Rhys, Ernest Dowson, Lionel Johnson, William Morris, W. E. Henley, and Arthur Symons. In Ireland, he was associated with J. M. Synge, "AE" (George W. Russell), Douglas Hyde, George Moore, and Lady Gregory. He helped to establish the Irish Literary Theatre in 1899 (later the Abbey Theatre). His poems and plays have become world famous. He was a member of the Irish Senate from 1922 to 1928 and received the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1923.

The occult and mystical side of his life and work received less publicity than his literary work, yet he believed that his poetry owed much to his occult studies. In 1892, he wrote: "If I had not made magic my constant study I could not have written a single word of my Blake book, nor would The Countess Kathleen have ever come to exist. The mystical life is the centre of all that I do and all that I think and all that I write."

His interest in the writings of Theosophists led to the formation of the Hermetic Society, Dublin, and he presided over its first meeting on June 16, 1885. While in London at the end of 1888, he joined the Esoteric Section of the Theosophical Society. In 1890, he joined the pioneering magical society, the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, taking the magical motto "Demon Est Deus Inversus," (DEDI) and continued to be associated with the Golden Dawn over some thirty years. In April 1900, he clashed with Aleister Crowley, also an order member, in a leadership crisis.

Yeats' book Ideas of Good and Evil (1903) contains studies of the mystic element in Blake and Shelley and another essay is titled "The Body of the Father Christian Rosencrux." Another essay titled "Magic" commences: "I believe in the practice and philosophy of what we have agreed to call magic, and what I must call the evocation of spirits, though I do not know what they are, in the power of creating magic illusions, in the visions of truth in the depths of the minds when the eyes are closed."

After his declaration, he related how once an acquaintance of his, gathering together a small party in a darkened room, held a mace over "a tablet of many coloured squares," at the time repeating "a form of words," and immediately Yeats found that his "imagination began to move itself and to bring before me vivid images. . . ." It was S. L. MacGregor Mathers of the Golden Dawn, states Yeats, "who convinced me that images well up before the mind's eye from a deeper source than conscious or subconscious memory."

In a lecture on "Psychic Phenomena" before the Dublin Society for Psychical Research (reported in the Dublin Daily Express, November 1913), he spoke of most amazing experiences during his investigation, which lasted for many years, and declared that so far as he was concerned, the controversy about the meaning of psychic phenomena was closed. But he was not "converted," in the true sense of the word, since he was a born believer, and he had never seriously doubted the existence of the soul or of God.

Yeats and Spiritualism

Lecturing on "Ghosts and Dreams" before the London Spiritualist Alliance in April 1914, he gave another clear account of his beliefs and experiences. In his book Per Amica Silentia Lunae (1918), he spoke as a poet and mystic in dealing with some of the deeper issues of Spiritualism.

In 1917, he married Georgia Hyde Lees and discovered that his wife was a medium and capable of automatic writing. In 1934, Yeats wrote a one-act play "The Words Upon the Window-Pane" built around a Spiritualist séance at which the spirit of Jonathan Swift communicated.

He showed considerable courage in making known some of his occult beliefs, although he did not publicize his Golden Dawn connections.

His mystical inclinations, stimulated by the Hindu religious philosophy of the Theosophical Society that had also attracted fellow poet "AE," continued to develop. When in his sixties, he became friendly with the Hindu monk Swami Shri Purohit and wrote introductions to the Swami's autobiography An Indian Monk (Macmillan, London, 1932) and his translation of the book by the Swami's guru titled The Holy Mountain (Faber, London, 1934). In 1935, the Swami published a translation of the Bhagaved-Gita under the title The Geeta; The Gospel of the Lord Shri Krishna (Faber, London), which he dedicated "To my friend William Butler Yeats" on the poet's seventieth birthday. In the same year, the Swami also published a translation of the Mandukya Upanishad, for which Yeats provided a perceptive introduction. He had planned to travel to India to assist the Swami in translating the ten principal Upanishads, but eventually the work was completed by the two friends at Majorca in 1936.

Yeats died January 28, 1939, in the town of Roquebrune, overlooking Monaco, and was buried in the cemetery there until nine years later, when his remains were transferred to the churchyard of Drumcliffe, near Sligo.

Sources:

Harper, George Mills. Yeats and the Occult. London: Macmillan, 1975.

———. Yeats' Golden Dawn. London: Macmillan, 1974. Reprint, Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1979.

Yeats, William Butler. Autobiography. New York: Macmillan, 1938.

———. Memoirs. New York: Macmillan, 1973.

———. Mythologies. New York: Macmillan, 1959.

Yeats-Brown, Francis (Charles Clayton) (1886–1944)

British soldier, author, and early popularizer of yoga in Western countries. He was born at Genoa, Italy, August 15, 1886, the son of the British consul-general in that city. He was educated at Harrow-on-the-Hill and Sandhurst, England. He was second lieutenant in the king's Royal Rifle Corps at Bareilly, India, in 1906; posted to 17th Cavalry, Indian Army in 1907; and adjutant in 1913. He served in France with 5th Lancers and in Mesopotamia with the Royal Flying Corps (DFC). He was imprisoned in Turkey in November 1915 but escaped in 1918. He retired on pension in 1925. From 1926 to 1928 he was editor of the British journal The Spectator.

He published several books, the most famous of which was Bengal Lancer (1930), based on his nineteen years in India and his intense interest in yoga. The book became a best-seller and was translated into Italian, Spanish, German, Danish, Norwegian, Swedish, and Romanian. It attracted worldwide interest in the subject of yoga. A film version of the book under the title "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" was produced in 1935, starring Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, and Richard Cromwell.

Yeats-Brown also published Yoga Explained (1937), a pioneering yoga text. In spite of his great interest in yoga philosophy he remained a Christian throughout his life. His other books include Caught by the Turks (1919), Golden Horn (1932), Escape: A Book of Escapes of All Kinds (1933), Dogs of War (1934), Lancer at Large (1937), European Jungle (1939), Indian Pageant (1942), and Martial India (1945).

During the 1930s, Yeats-Brown was a news correspondent in Germany and expressed admiration for Hitler, whom he compared with Gandhi and T. E. Lawrence. It seems likely that this unfortunate judgment stemmed from Yeats-Brown's enthusiasm for German physical fitness and military precision and that he never really understood the real implications of Nazi philosophy and ambitions.

From 1943 to 1944 Yeats-Brown served in the British Army, touring the Indian and Burmese war fronts.

He died in London, December 19, 1944.

Yerger, Eloise Barrangon (1915–)

American writer who also conducted parapsychology experiments to investigate teacher-pupil attitudes and clairvoyance test results among students in fifth, sixth, and seventh-grade levels. She was born on January 16, 1915, at Northampton, Massachusetts. She studied at Smith College (B.A.) and in 1935 became a freelance writer. She was a member of the Parapsychological Association and the American Society for Psychical Research.

Yes! Bookshop

A New Age bookstore founded in Washington, D.C., in 1972 by Cris Popenhoe. The bookshop covers every aspect of New Age concern, spiritual development, and positive occult teachings. Popenhoe is convinced of the basic New Age belief that positive social and political change is desirable and such change necessitates individual transformation. She published an excellent annotated bibliography (which doubled as a bookshop catalog): Books for Inner Development (1976), revised as Inner Development; the Yes! Bookshop Guide (1979), with eleven supplements in the early 1980s. In 1977 she also did a similar work on healing books, entitled simply Wellness.

Sources:

Popenhoe, Cris. Books for Inner Development/The Yes! Guide. Washington, D.C.: Yes! Bookshop, 1976. Revised as Inner Development; the Yes! Bookshop Guide. Washington, D.C.: Yes! Bookshop, 1979. Supplements 1–11. 1982–83.

———. Wellness. Washington, D.C.: Yes! Bookshop, 1977.

Yeti

Also known as the "abominable snowman," the yeti is the mysterious humanoid creature reported by Western sources as early as 1832 as living in the Himalayan Mountains. It became well known following several expeditions to the area in the 1950s. In 1960 Sir Edmund Hillary, who conquered Everest, called further attention to the yeti in his attempts to debunk them. The Soviet Ministry of Culture established a group of "cryptozoologists" to locate the yeti, according to a report of January 9, 1988, by Tass, the Soviet press agency. The agency stated that nearly one hundred sightings had been collated by Zhanna Kofman of Moscow.

Sources:

Clark, Jerome. Encyclopedia of Strange and Unexplained Phenomena. Detroit: Gale Research, 1993.

Sanderson, Ivan. Abominable Snowmen: Legend Come to Life. Philadelphia, Pa: Chilton Books, 1961.

Yezidis

A dualistic religious group operating among the Kurds in northern Iraq and the neighboring lands of Syria, Turkey, and Iran. Their religion probably goes back to the Manicheans but has borrowed heavily from the Shiite Muslims. The Yezidis call themselves the Dawasin or Dasnayye. The term Yezidi was originally probably a name of derision. It refers to a Caliph Yezid who in 680 C.E. ordered the death of al-Husayn, the grandson of the Prophet Mohammed. The Shiite hold al-Husayn in special reverence, for they claim to derive their authority from him. Others have suggested that the word is derived from the Persian word ized (for angel, deity), and would mean "worshippers of God." They are also derogatorily referred to by their neighbors as "devil-worshippers." The Yezidi community is centered upon the tomb of Shaykh Adi ibn Musafir at Llish in the district of Mosul.

The Yezidi faith is quite eclectic, drawing upon Christian (baptism, breaking of bread, drinking of wine), Jewish (dietary restrictions), Muslim (fasts, circumcision, pilgrimages), Sufi (reverence for Shaykhs, secrecy, ecstatic experiences), and Sabeansist (reincarnation) traditions. They believe that they were children of the seed of Adam (but not of Eve). Thus, they believe themselves different from the rest of humanity, who are derived from both Adam and Eve. They try to remain separate and no outsider may join them. One must be born a Yezidi.

A dominant symbol among them is the peacock, a symbol of the seven angels who cooperated in the creation of the world. The peacock angel is their euphemism for evil. They believe evil is a part of the divinity, along with good. Thus they are more properly seen as dualists rather than devil worshippers. The Yezidis also consider Christ an angel in human form, and Mohammed as a prophet with Abraham and others.

Sources:

Drower, E. S. Peacock Angel. London: John Murray, 1941.

Empson, R. H. The Cult of the Peacock Angel. N.p., 1928.

Guest, John S. Survival Among the Kurds: A History of the Yezidis. London: Kegan Paul International, 1993.

———. The Yezidis. London: KPI, 1987.

Nau, Abbé F. "Recueil de textes et de documents sur les Yézidis." ROC 2, no. 10 (1915–17).

Seabrook, William B. Adventures in Arabia among the Bedouins Druses Whirling Dervishes & Yezidee Devil-worshipers. New York, 1927.

Yin and Yang

According to ancient Chinese philosophy, the dual principles of nature. Yin signifies earth, passive, negative, female, yielding, weak, or dark; yang signifies heaven, active, positive, male, strong, or light. These principles are manifest throughout nature and in the human body. They relate to mental, physical, and spiritual structure and are affected by food, drink, action, and inaction. The balance of yin and yang in the individual, nature, and the cosmos is symbolized by a circle separated by an "S" shape, one half of the circle dark and the other light. This has something in common with the ancient Greek alchemical symbol of a serpent or dragon eating its tail, known as Ouroboros.

The yin-yang symbol represents unity and duality, a universal dual monism. It is also inherent in the ancient Chinese system of divination of the I Ching (Book of Changes). It is basic to the teachings of Taoism, as embodied in the classic work Tao-te-Ching (Book of the Right Way) of the philosopher Lao Tzu.

In modern times, the yin and yang principles are a vital part of the revived system of diet known as macrobiotics, where health and mental and spiritual balance are developed by the correct proportions of yin and yang foods, properly prepared. (See also China; Tao)

Sources:

Legge, James, trans. The I Ching. New York: Dover Publications, 1963.

Y-Kim (or I Ching), Book of

A Chinese mystical book attributed to the Emperor Fo-Hi and ascribed to the year 3468 B.C.E. It consists of ten chapters and was stated by Éliphas Lévi in his History of Magic to be a complement and an appendix to the Kabalistic Zohar, the record of the utterances of Rabbi Simeon Ben Jochai. The Zohar, according to Lévi, explains universal equilibrium, and the Y-Kim is the hieroglyphic and ciphered demonstration thereof.

The key to the Y-Kim is the pentacle known as the Trigrams of Fo-Hi. In the Vay-Ky of Leon-Tao-Yuen, composed in the Som Dynasty (about eleventh century), it was recounted that the Emperor Fo-Hi was one day seated on the banks of a river, deep in meditation, when to him there appeared an animal having the parts of both a horse and a dragon.

Its back was covered with scales, on each of which shone the mystic Trigrammic symbol. The animal initiated the just and righteous Fo-Hi into universal science. Numbering its scales, he combined the Trigrams in such a manner that there arose in his mind a synthesis of sciences compared and united with one another through the harmonies of nature. From this synthesis sprang the tables of the Y-Kim.

According to Éliphas Lévi, the numbers of Fo-Hi are identical with those of the Kabala, and his pentacle is similar to that of Solomon. His tables are in correspondence with the subject matter of the Sephir Yesirah and the Zohar. The whole is a commentary upon the Absolute that is concealed from the profane, concluded Lévi.

Since Lévi's time, much scholarship has been expended on the symbolism and mystical significance of this important work under its more generally expressed title of I Ching.

Sources:

Legge, James, trans. The I Ching. New York: Dover Publications, 1963.

Lévi, Éliphas. The History of Magic. London: W. Rider & Son, 1913. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1970.

Yoga

General term for various spiritual disciplines in Hinduism. The word "yoga" implies "yoking" (as with oxen to the ox-cart) or "union," expressing the linking of man with divine reality. This union is a transcendental experience beyond the plane of words and ideas and has to be achieved by release from the limiting fields of physical, emotional, mental, and intellectual experience. This requires purification at all levels and according to Hindu belief might take many lifetimes, but sincere exertions in one birth should bear fruit in the next.

Yoga's widespread introduction to the West is thought to have begun with Swami Vivekananda's yoga presentation at the Parliament of Religions in Chicago, 1893. Influential twentieth century yogis since then have included Ramana Maharshi, Indra Devi, Selvarajan Yesudian, Swami Sivananda, Sri Yogendra, and Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, of the Transcendental Meditation movement. In the 1960s and 1970s, Richard Hittleman and Lilias Folan (of Lilias, Yoga, and You) brought yoga to the American mainstream through television. Yoga's popularity is also due to endorsements from celebrities such as Sting and Madonna. Yoga's allure as a stress reliever has also helped the practice to gain popularity with Americans who try to regain control over their hectic lifestyles. It is estimated that more than two million people throughout the world practice some discipline of yoga.

The existence of many spiritual disciplines and practices in India allowed for a multitude of forms and beliefs. Most religious systems are aligned to one or more forms of yoga, though most commonly they will emphasize one of the traditional spiritual paths. Some would judge the adoption of a particular spiritual path to be linked to age, occupation, personality, or a particular interest in life.

The six principle branches of yoga are:

Bhakti Yoga

Bhakti yoga is the path of love and devotion. An individual with an emotional temperament can transform those emotions, to be absorbed in spiritual service instead of being attached to physical or sensory gratification. Love can be centered on a familiar form of God, a great saint, or some great task in life. In bhakti yoga, the whole universe, whether animate or inanimate, is seen as permeated by divinity. Bhakti (meaning loving devotion) is the practice of self-surrender for the purpose of identifying with the source of love, the higher self.

The Hare Krishna, which became notable in the West in the last generation, follow a form of Hinduism that emphasizes this type of yoga.

Hatha Yoga

Hatha yoga is known as the path of inner power. It is the science of physical exercises most familiar to Westerners. In hatha yoga the mind, body, and spirit are linked, and the purification of the body is intended to enhance mental and spiritual development, balance, and harmony. Good physical health, however, is an essential prerequisite to the strenuous disciplines of this yoga system.

Hatha yoga consists of a number of asanas, or physical postures, that develop flexibility in associated muscle groups throughout the body, and favorably affect the tone of veins and arteries. They are also believed to improve the function of the ductless glands through persistent gentle pressure. In Patanjali's system, asana was chiefly directed to the achievement of a firm cross-legged sitting position for meditation. Other yoga authorities, however, have elaborated the stages of Patanjali yoga to meet the requirements of different temperaments, so that they may be harmonized.

The asanas differ from Western gymnastics in that they feature static postures instead of active movements, though some asanas are linked sequentially. There are theoretically some 8,400,000 asanas, of which 84 are said to be the best and 32 the most useful for good health. These are named after animals, geometic structures, mountains, or plants. An asana is considered to be mastered when the yogi can maintain the position without strain for three hours. Asanas may be supplemented by special symbolic gestures and positions called mudras.

Various cleansing techniques, called kriyas, of the nasal passages, throat, stomach, and bowels can be practiced in conjunction with asanas. Pranayama, breathing exercises, are also employed to arouse kundalini or vital energy. Some systems focus upon the arousal of kundalini as the central spiritual discipline.

Hatha yoga had largely died out in India but was revived in the nineteenth century in Maharashtra, western India, from whence it radiated out into the world during the twentieth century.

Jnana or Sankya Yoga

Jnana yoga is the path of knowledge, science, and wisdom. This begins with fine distinctions that may be evolved from careful observation; study and experiment; combining knowledge with the ability to reflect, meditate, and develop intuition. It is the way of transcendent knowledge, and is geared for those prone to intellectual curiosity, reason, and analysis.

Karma Yoga

Karma yoga is the science of karma or selfless action. Karma yoga teaches the student that all actions have inescapable consequences, some producing immediate results, others delayed results, and some bearing fruit in future lives. Emphasis is placed on altruistic actions that purify the individual soul and release it from petty desires. In karma yoga, actions are spiritualized by dedicating them to selfless service and divine will. Karma yoga calls for union with God through right action, and service for service sake, without regard for accomplishment or glory or attribution.

Mantra Yoga

Mantra yoga is the path of sacred sound. It is the science of sound vibration, prayer, and hermetic utterance. According to Hindu mystical belief, the world evolved from the essence of sound, through the diversity and intricacy of vibration and utterance.

One of the most sacred mantras is the three-syllabled OM or AUM, origin of the universe, comparable with the Hebrew Shemhamphorash and the creative Word of God in the Gospel of John. The reading of Hindu scriptures is both begun and ended with the sacred sound AUM.

Raja Yoga

Raja Yoga is the path of stillness, whose goal is to quiet the mind through meditation to create a state of focused, unbroken concentration. It is also known as the path of spiritual science, particularly suitable for those of a more abstract or metaphysical temperament. This path combines religious study with refinement of all levels of the individual, culminating in transcendental awareness. Raja yoga is the summation of all other yogas. Ancient textbooks of hatha yoga emphasize that it should only be practiced in conjunction with raja yoga.

Other yoga paths are usually derivatives of the principle six. They include:

Asparsha Yoga

This is the yoga of non-contact. A form of jnana yoga, asparsha seeks reintegration through non-touching, avoiding all forms of contact with others.

Astanga Yoga

Astanga yoga is often known as the path of Patanjali. The sage Patanjali (ca. 200 B.C.E.) taught a comprehensive yoga system that became a spiritual school unto itself. According to Patanjali, in order to experience true reality one must transcend the body and mind. In his Yoga Sutras he outlined the following special stages:

yama and niyama–ethical restraints and moral observations.
asana–physical postures.
pranayama–breathing exercises. This uses various cleansing techniques of the nasal passages, throat, stomach, and bowels; it is used to enhance the pranayama.
pratyahara–sense withdrawal.
dharana–concentration.
dhyana–meditation.
samadhi–superconsciousness.

Japa Yoga

A branch of mantra yoga, japa (meaning recitation) yoga emphasizes repetition of prayers, hymns and sacred syllables.

Kundalini Yoga

Utilizing hatha yoga and mantra yoga techniques to arouse kundalini, or divine creative energy. This path focuses on the arousal of kundalini as the central focus of spiritual exercise. Whether kundalini rising occurs because of the exercises or on its own accord remains a matter of debate.

Kriya Yoga

Based on teachings of Paramhansa Yogananda, author of Autobiography of a Yogi. Kriya yoga stresses the path to Eternal Tranquility, emphasizing the stillness of sensory input.

Laya Yoga

Laya yoga is the yoga of absorption. It underscores absorption in meditation, merging the mind and breath in the divine. In this practice the yogi immerses himself in the universe, becoming a part of the universal body.

Siddha Yoga

This path is based on the teachings of Swami Muktananda. Siddha (meaning guru) yoga emphasizes the intervention and guidance of a teacher to raise kundalini.

Tantric Yoga

A derivative of karma and bhakti yogas, tantric yoga is associated with arousal of sexual energy and its conversion into kundalini, or creative energy. It is the human reflection of the divine union between the male (shiva) and female (shakti) as aspects of the divine. It is concerned with techniques and disciplines intended to transform the sexual act into a kundalini-raising experience.

Tantric yoga has often been implicated as an arena for sexual abuses in the West. Less-than-enlightened yogis have been entangled in clandestine affairs with students, later forced to step down from the position of spiritual leader.

Yantra Yoga

Yantra yoga is a form of jnana yoga, in which meditation is accomplished through contemplation of a geometric figure.

No single pathway of yoga is regarded as an alternative to another, and many of the paths intertwine and intersect, as a means of purifying and harmonizing individual temperaments. An intellectual person might profitably concentrate on bhakti yoga or karma yoga; an emotional temperamented one might benefit from jnana yoga and hatha yoga. Likewise, the practice of hatha yoga without proper actions, devotion, and ethical codes might be harmful or result simply in gymnastics without spiritual development.

Sources:

Bernard, Theos. Hatha Yoga. London: Rider, 1950. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1970.

Bhagavadgita of The Song Divine. Gorakhpur, India: Gita Press, 1943.

Danielou, Alain. Yoga: The Method of Re-Integration. London: Christopher Johnson, 1949. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1956.

Dvivedi, M. N., trans. The Yoga-Sutras of Patanjali. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1890.

Feuerstein, Georg. The Shambala Guide to Yoga. Boston: Shambala Publications, Inc., 1996.

———. "A Short History of Yoga." Yoga Research and Education Center 1999. http://www.yrec.org/.

Giri, Swami Satyeswarananda. "Original Kriya Yoga at a Glance." SpiritWeb 1992. http://www.spiritweb.org/. April 20, 2000.

Gopi Krishna. The Awakening of Kundalini. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1975.
The Secret of Yoga. New York: Harper & Row, 1972.
Grupta, Yogi. Yoga and Long Life. New York: Dodd, Mead and Co., 1958.
Isherwood, Christopher, and Swami Prabhavananda, trans. The Bhagavad Gita: The Song of God. Hollywood, Calif.: Marcel Road, 1944.
Iyengar, B. K. S. Light of Yoga. New York: Schrocken Books, 1966.
Keutzer, Kurt and Narayan Prakash. "The Lineage of Swami Shivom Tirth." SpiritWeb 1996. http://www.spiritweb.org/. April 20, 2000.
Majumdar, S. M. Introduction to Yoga Principles and Practices. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1964. Reprint, Secacus, N.J.: Citadel Press, 1976.
Melton, J. Gordon. New Age Encyclopedia. Detroit: Gale Research, 1990.
Mishra, Rammurti. Fundamentals of Yoga. New York: Lancer Books, 1969.
Radhakrishnan, S., trans. Bhagavad Gita. London: Allen & Unwin, 1948.
Radha, Swami Sivananda. Hatha Yoga: the Hidden Language. Boston: Timeless Books, 1989.
Rosen, Richard, "Georg Feuerstein on Reviving Yoga Research." Yoga International (July 1999): 36–43.
The Sounds of Yoga-Vedanta; Documentary of Life in an Indian Ashram. New York: Folkways Records, Long-playing record album FR 8970.
Vishnudevananda, Swami. The Complete Illustrated Book of Yoga. New York: Bell Publishing, 1960. Reprint, New York: Pocket Books, 1971.
Wood, Ernest. Yoga. London, 1959. Reprint, Baltimore, Md.: Penguin, 1962.
"Yoga Paths." SpiritWeb 2000. http://www.spiritweb.org/. April 20, 2000.
Yogananda, Paramhansa. Autobiography of a Yogi. Los Angeles: Self-Realization Fellowship Publishers, 1972.

Yoga International

Quarterly magazine devoted to yoga, meditation, philosophy, psychology, and holistic living. Formerly called Dawn, Yoga International is the official organ of the Himalayan International Institute of Yoga Science and Philosophy. Address: R.R. 1, Box 400, Honesdale, PA 18431.

Yoga Journal

Monthly journal of California Yoga Teachers Association, dealing with various aspects of (primarily hatha) yoga, nutrition, and health. Lists annually an international directory of yoga teachers and centers. Address: P.O. Box 469088, Escondido, CA 92046-9088. Website: http://www.yogajournal.com/.

Sources:

Yoga Journal. http://www.yogajournal.com/. March 8, 2000.

Yoga Life (Magazine)

Illustrated magazine and organ of the International Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Centers, with articles on hatha yoga, meditation, and related topics. It includes information on branch activities of the affiliated centers. It is issued from the group's headquarters at 673 8th Ave., Val Morin, Quebec, Canada J0T 2R0. Website: http://www.sivananda.org/.

Sources:

Sivananda Yoga "Om" Page. http://www.sivananda.org/. March 27, 2000.

Yoga-Mimamsa Journal

Indian journal founded in 1935 devoted to the serious study of hatha yoga and pranayama, with papers describing medical and scientific researches as well as popular aspects. Edited by Swami Kaivalyadhama, a noted authority on yoga. The journal commenced publication in 1935 and describes activities at the Kaivalyadhama SMYM Samiti, India. It is issued from the Yoga-Mimamsa Office, 117 Valvan, Lonavla 410 403, India.

Yogananda, Paramahansa (1893–1952)

An early Indian spiritual teacher who visited and taught in Western countries and who founded the Self-Realization Fellowship. Yogananda was born Mukunda Lal Ghosh in Gorakpur, near Calcutta, on January 5, 1893. He manifested psychic powers as a child. As a youth he was fascinated by the holy men of India and visited many of them. Shortly after graduating from high school, he was initiated by Swami Yukteswar in the spiritual lineage of Swami Babaji, a legendary Himalayan master. He graduated from college in 1914. While in college he took the vows of a sannyasin, to live the renounced life, and was given his religious name, Yogananda, meaning the bliss (ananda) of yoga.

Yukteswar encouraged Yogananda to come to the West, and he traveled to Boston in 1920, ostensibly to speak at a conference, where he taught a system of yoga deriving basically from the classic text Yoga Sutras of Patanjali. He also developed his own variety of kriya yoga, involving withdrawal of life energy from outward affairs to inner spiritual centers (basically a form of kundalini yoga).

Yogananda remained in the United States after the 1920 conference and several years later founded the Yogoda Satsang, which was incorporated in 1935 as the Self-Realization Fellowship. He wrote books and a correspondence course that attracted a number of pupils to him. He laid great emphasis on the reconciliation of Hinduism with Christian teachings and established the "Church of All Religions."

Yogananda passed into mahasamadhi (the great sleep of death) in 1952, but his body is said to have remained free from decay for 20 years afterward. Among his last accomplishments was the writing of his Autobiography of a Yogi (1946), which was widely influential in attracting Americans to Eastern religion. He was also the teacher of Donald Walters, founder of the Ananda Church of Self-Realization, and Roy Eugene Davis, now head of the Church of the Christian Spiritual Alliance.

Sources:

Yogananda, Swami Paramahansa. Autobiography of a Yogi. New York: Philosophical Library, 1946.
———. The Divine Romance. Los Angeles: Self-Realization Fellowship, 1986.
———. Metaphysical Meditation. Los Angeles: Self-Realization Fellowship, 1960.
———. The Science of Religion. Los Angeles: Yogoda Sat-Sanga Society of America, 1928.
———. Whispers of Eternity. Los Angeles: Self-Realization Publishing House, 1944.

Yoga Research Foundation, Inc.

Founded in 1962 as the Sanatan Dharma Mandir in Puerto Rico by Swami Jyotirmayananda. The headquarters moved to suburban Miami in 1969 as the International Yoga Society. It adopted its present name in the 1980s. Swami Jyotirmayananda is a disciple of Swami Sivananda Saraswati. He has been assisted by Swami Lalitananda (Leonora Rego), vice president of the foundation.

The foundation publishes books, cassettes, and study courses on yoga and Hindu philosophy, and a monthly magazine called International Yoga Guide. Swami Jyotirmayananda is an authority on the little-known Hindu scripture Yoga-Vasishtha Maharamayana, upon which he comments regularly in the magazine. He has lectured widely, participated in Spanish/English radio programs, and appeared on television.

Branches of the Yoga Research Foundation exist throughout the world. Swami Jyotirmayananda's ashram in Loni, near New Delhi, India, publishes the Hindi Journal Yogajali, as well as numerous Hindi translations of Swami Jyotirmayananda's books. Ashram members assist those in need through a medical clinic, and also further the education of children through the Bal Divya Jyoti Public School.

Devotees of Swami Jyotirmayananda have turned his ancestral home of Ananda Bhavan in Dumari (Bihar, India) into a spiritual center. The project provides the village of Dumari Buzurg with a school for children, library, satsang hall, and technical workshop. Women are taught hygiene, nutrition, and home economics. The project is designed to affect the economic, ethical, cultural, and spiritual life of the village.

The foundation is an international organization, dedicated to "elevating the consciousness, alleviating suffering and enriching the lives of all humanity" through integral yoga (Sivananda's system integrating hatha yoga with the four major traditional yogas: raja, bhakti, karma, and jnana), providing "a basis for upgrading the cultural growth of humanity while bringing about a worldwide level of social and religious harmony." Regular classes teaching yoga, Vedanta, and Indian philosophy are conducted from the center. A Yoga Research Foundation catalog of books and cassettes, and subscriptions to the International Yoga Guide can be obtained by writing to 6111 SW 74th Ave., South Miami, FL 33143. Website: http://www.yrf.org/.

Sources:

Yoga Research Foundation Home Page. http://www.yrf.org/. March 8, 2000.

Yoga Society of San Francisco

Organization founded in 1972 by Shri Brahmananda Sarasvati that offers classes in yoga, meditation, massage therapy, and teacher training courses. Its headquarters are located at 2872 Folsom St., San Francisco, CA 94110. Website: http://www.artnetwork.com/healing/yoga/.

Sources:

Yoga Society of San Francisco. http://www.artnetwork.com/healing/yoga/. March 8, 2000.

Yoga Today (Magazine)

Comprehensive monthly magazine dealing with all aspects of yoga as seen from a British and European viewpoint. Typical articles covered interviews with yogis, sidelights on yoga teaching and practitioners, and health and diet. Special features included book reviews and worldwide news coverage. Last known address: Yoga Today Ltd., 21 Caburn Crescent, Lewes, East Sussex, BN7 INR, England.

"Yolande"

The spirit of a young Arabian girl of 15, materialized through the mediumship of Elizabeth d'Esperance (1885–1919). Yolande appeared to manifest as an independent entity and was photographed, like the equally famous "Katie King" of the medium Florence Cook.

'You' and ESP (Newsletter)

Monthly newsletter issued by the Temple of the Inner Flame, headed by Carol Ann Liaros, concerned with such psychic activities as Fingertip Vision (also known as eyeless sight) and alternative medical treatments. Last known address: 3329 Niagara Falls Blvd., North Tonawanda, NY 14120

Younghusband, Sir Francis (Edward) (1863–1942)

British explorer, soldier, author, and mystic. Born at Murree, India, May 31, 1863, he was educated at Clifton and Sandhurst, England. He joined the British army in 1882.

From 1886 to 1887 he traveled across central Asia from Peking to Yarkand and on to India, crossing the Karakoram Range by the Muztagh Pass. He discovered the Aghil Mountains and showed that the Great Karakoram was the water divide between India and Turkistan. On later explorations beyond the Karakoram he was able to trace the river Shaksgam to its junction with the Yarkand, and explored the Pamirs. During his period in the 1st Dragoon Guards, Younghusband held the rank of captain.

In 1890 he transferred to the Indian political department and served in northwest frontier stations. He visited South Africa in 1896. He was a special correspondent for The Times newspaper, London, in the Chitral Expedition in 1895 and a political agent in Haraoti and Tonk in 1898. While residing in India, he was the British Commissioner to Tibet (1902–04). He led the British mission to Lhasa, culminating in the Anglo-Tibetan Treaty of September 7, 1904. For this he was honored by the decoration of Knight Commander of the Indian Empire. He was one of the first modern British explorers to investigate the almost legendary territory of Tibet and enter the mysterious city of Lhasa, long fabled by Theosophists and others as the center of mysterious adepts and Masters. While he discovered no secret occult forces, he did develop a sympathetic consideration of Eastern religions and an appreciation of their spirituality.

In 1905 he returned to England, where he became Rede lecturer at Cambridge University before traveling to Kashmir as Resident. He was honored as Knight Commander of the Star of India in 1917. After his retirement in 1919, he became chairman of the Royal Geographical Society, who had awarded him their gold medal in 1891. He also formed and was chairman of the Mount Everest Committee.

Younghusband typified the best of the old-style British patriots of the British Empire period. He was an excellent and courageous soldier and explorer, yet deeply sympathetic to the aspirations and spiritual ideals of other peoples. He recognized the need for self-government in India. His book Modern Mystics (1935; reissued University Books, 1970) expressed his sympathy with the spirituality of different religions and his belief in an underlying unity. In 1936 he founded the World Congress of Faiths. His books include: But in Our Lives (1926), The Heart of Nature (1921), India and Tibet (1910), Within (1912), The World Congress of Faith (1938), and World Fellowship of Faiths (1935).

He died at Lytchett Minster, near Poole, Britain, on July 31, 1942.

Sources:

Samuel, Herbert L. Man of the Spirit: Sir Francis Younghusband. London, 1953.

Seaver, George F. Francis Younghusband: Explorer and Mystic. London, 1952.

Your Astrology (Journal)

Quarterly journal that includes monthly and daily guides for all signs, with articles on astrology for lay readers. Last known address: Charlton Publications, Inc., Charlton Building, Derby, CT 06418.

Yowie

Australian equivalent of the yeti, or "Abominable Snowman." The first account of the yowie appeared in 1835 when a Mr. Holman said of his trip to the subcontinent, "The natives are greatly terrified by the sight of a person in a mask calling him 'devil' or Yah-hoo, which signifies evil spirit." By 1840, Australian scientists were debating whether or not the yahoo was an imaginary being or a real, but rare, species. By the 1880s European settlers began to report seeing something that resembled a huge monkey or baboon. Through the first half of the twentieth century occasional reports appeared, almost all from New South Wales and Queensland. Along the way, "yahoo" became "yowie."

A new set of reports arose in the 1970s following the sighting of some large (too large to be a human), humanlike tracks by an Australian Air Force surveying team on Sentinel Mountain. In the late 1970s Rex Gilroy founded the Yowie Research Center and now claims over 3,000 sightings.

The yowie has been integrated into the field of cryptozoology, but remains one of the more doubtful creatures under consideration. Australia has no naturally occurring primates other than humans. The major champion of the yowie's existence is Graham C. Joyner, who has argued that it is a bear-like marsupial.

Sources:

Clark, Jerome. Encyclopedia of Strange and Unexplained Phenomena. Detroit: Gale Research, 1993.

Joyner, Graham. The Hairy Man of Southeastern Australia. Canberra: National Library of Australia, 1977.

———. "Scientific Discovery and the Place of the Yahoo in Australian Zoological History." Cryptozoology 9 (1990): 41–51.

"Yram" (1884–1917)

Pseudonym of Dr. Marcel Louis Forhan, pioneer French experimenter and writer on astral projection, i.e., out-of-the-body travel. Forhan was born on November 17, 1884, at Corbell, France. About 1911 he became a member of the Theosophical Society and investigated psychic phenomena and hypnotism.

About this time he had his first experience of astral projection and developed an awareness of higher worlds. It is claimed that he was able to travel astrally from China, where he lived for some years, to France, where he had friends and relatives. His experience of invisible worlds is related in his book L'Evolution dans les mondes supérieures. He died in China on October 1, 1917.

Sources:

Yram [Marcel Louis Forhan]. Le Medecine de l'Ame. English edition as Practical Astral Projection. London, 1935. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1966.

Z

Zabulon

Name of a demon said to have possessed a lay sister among the community of nuns at Loudun, France, in 1633.

Zacaire, Denis (b. 1510)

This French alchemist is chiefly remembered for his book, Opuscule Tres-Excellent de la Philosophie naturelle des Metaux (published 1567). This includes a preface written by Zacaire in his lifetime, giving some account of his life.

As a young man Zacaire studied at Bordeaux under an alchemist and subsequently at Toulouse, intending to become a lawyer. He soon became more interested in alchemy than in legal affairs. In 1535, on his father's death, he came into possession of some money. He thereupon decided to try and multiply it by artificial means. Associating himself with an abbé who was considered a great adept in gold-making, Zacaire had soon disposed of the bulk of his patrimony, but far from the charlatan's futile experiments disillusioning him, they encouraged him.

In 1539, he went to Paris, where he made the acquaintance of many renowned alchemists. From one of them, he learned the precious secret, and thereupon he hastened to the court of Antoine d'Albert, the king of Navarre, offering to make gold if the requisite materials were supplied.

The king was deeply interested and promised a reward of no less than four thousand crowns in the event of the researches proving fruitful, but unfortunately Zacaire's vaunted skill failed him, and he retired discomfited to Toulouse. Here he became friendly with a certain priest, who advised him strongly to renounce his quest and study natural science instead. Zacaire went off to Paris once more, intending to act in accordance with his counsel. But after a little while, he was deep in the study of alchemy again, running experiments and studying closely the writings of Raymond Lully and Arnold de Villanova.

According to his own account, on Easter day of 1550, he succeeded in converting a large quantity of quicksilver into gold. Then, some time after this alleged triumph, he left France to travel in Switzerland and lived for a while at Lausanne. Later on he wandered to Germany, and there he died.

There is a story that he married before setting out to travel through Germany, but on reaching Cologne, he was murdered in his sleep by his servant, who escaped with his wife and his store of transmuting powder. The story of Zacaire's life was told in verse by De Delle, court poet of Emperor Rudolph II (1552–1622), who took a great interest in alchemy, chemistry, and astrology.

Zacaire's Opuscule was published originally at Antwerp and repeatedly reprinted. It won the honor of being translated into Latin.

Sources:

Davis, T. L. "The Autobiography of Denis Zacaire: An Account of an Alchemist's Life in the Sixteenth Century." Isis 8, 2 (1926).

Zacornu

A tree in the Islamic hell that has for fruit the heads of devils.

Zadkiel

Pseudonym of Richard James Morrison (1795–1874), one of the pioneer British astrologers of the nineteenth century. He was born in London, England, on June 15, 1795. He joined the navy when only eleven and eventually rose to the rank of lieutenant by the time of his retirement in 1817. He developed an interest in astrology in the 1820s and became a friend of Robert Cross Smith ("Raphael") who published Raphael's Astronomical Ephemeris. Morrison modeled his own successful Zadkiel's Almanac, begun in 1836, on Smith's work. Morrison calculated horoscopes for the Prince Consort and the Princess Royal that were gratefully accepted, but Queen Victoria later expressed concern about predictions for the Prince Consort, possibly because they were so accurate as to cause some disquiet.

Morrison's name made reference to one of the angels in the Jewish rabbinical legend of the celestial hierarchies. He was the ruler of Jupiter. Through him pass grace, goodness, mercy, piety, and munificence, and he bestows clemency, benevolence, and justice on all.

Sources:

Lewis, James R. Astrology Encyclopedia. Detroit: Visible Ink Press, 1994.

Morrison, R. J. An Introduction to Astrology by William Lilly. 1835. Reprint, Hollywood, Calif.: Newcastle, 1972.

Zaebos

Said to be grand count of the infernal regions. He appears in the shape of a handsome soldier mounted on a crocodile. His head is adorned with a ducal coronet. He is of a gentle disposition.

Zagam

Said to be grand king and president of the infernal regions. He appears as a bull with the wings of a griffin. He changes water into wine, blood into oil, the fool into a wise man, lead into silver, and copper into gold. Thirty legions obey him.

Zahuris (or Zahories)

French people who had traveled in Spain frequently had curious tales to tell concerning the Zahuris—people who were so keen-sighted that they could see streams of water and veins of metal hidden in the earth and could indicate the whereabouts of buried treasure and the bodies of murdered persons.

Explanations were offered on natural lines. It was said that these men knew where water was to be found by the vapors arising at such spots, and that they were able to trace mines of gold, silver, and copper by the particular herbs growing in their neighborhood. But to the Spaniards, such explanations were unsatisfactory; they persisted in believing that the Zahuris were gifted with supernatural faculties, that they were in rapport with demons, and that, if they wished, they could, without any physical aid, read thoughts and discover secrets that were as a sealed book to the grosser senses of ordinary mortals. The Zahuris were said to have red eyes, and in order to be a Zahuri it was necessary to have been born on a Good Friday.

Zain, C. C.

Pseudonym of Elbert Benjamine (1882–1951), astrologer and occultist. He was born December 12, 1882, in Iowa. As a young man he became associated with an occult organization, the Hermetic Brotherhood of Luxor, which presented itself as the outer court of the Brotherhood of Light, a group of spiritual masters equivalent to the Great White Brotherhood. In 1907 Benjamine became one of the Hermetic Brotherhood's three leaders. He was asked by the other two leaders to write a series of lessons in occult wisdom. He began to write in 1914. The lessons, published under the pen name C. C. Zain, appeared in 21 volumes, each dealing with one area of occult knowledge.

While Benjamine was writing, the Hermetic Brotherhood was discontinued, and in 1932 Benjamine founded the Church of Light as a new outer court for the Brotherhood of Light. Benjamine died November 18, 1951, and was succeeded by Edward Doane as president of the church.

Sources:

"The Founders of the Church of Light." Church of Light Quarterly 45, no. 1 (February 1970): 1–2.

Zain, C. C. [Elbert Benjamine]. Brotherhood of Light Lessons. 21 vols. Los Angeles: Church of Light, 1922–1932.

Zancig, Julius (1857–1929) and Agnes

Famous Danish thought-reading couple, whose mentalist demonstrations at the London Alhambra in Britain fooled many people, caused much public excitement, and led to a minor scientific controversy. Mrs. Zancig could correctly name any article, number, or word at which her husband cast a glance. The Daily Mail arranged a series of tests in their offices on November 30, 1906, and published the conclusion that the performance was the result of true telepathy. The Daily Chronicle differed and considered a clever code system sufficient explanation. The questions and answers were registered by a phonograph record. Nothing was discovered.

The psychical researcher W. W. Baggally conducted some experiments. He concluded that although the alleged transmission of thought might possibly depend on a code or codes that he was unable to unravel, the performance was of such a nature that it was worthy of serious scientific examination.

The Society for Psychical Research, London, investigated on January 18, 1907. The result was not published. However, it appeared sufficiently favorable for some of the members present to subsequently form an official committee to carry on further tests. The report stated:

"While we are of opinion that the records of experiments in telepathy made by the SPR and others raise a presumption for the existence of such a faculty at least strong enough to entitle it to serious scientific attention, the most hopeful results hitherto obtained have not been in any way comparable as regards accuracy and precision with those produced by Mr. and Madame Zancig. . . . Those who have only witnessed the public theatre performances, clever and perplexing as these are, will not appreciate how hard it is to offer any plausible explanation of their modus operandi."

The Zancigs claimed telepathy as an explanation, and Mrs. Zancig had well-developed clairvoyant faculties. At the Spiritualist British College of Psychic Science, London, she successfully passed book-reading tests.

Magician Will Goldston was among the first to publicize the Zancigs' method of operation. His book Sensational Tales of Mystery Men (1929) spoke of their mentalism from the inside knowledge of a practitioner of stage magic:

"The pair worked on a very complicated and intricate code. There was never any question of thought transference in the act. By framing his question in a certain manner Julius was able to convey to his wife exactly what sort of object or design had been handed to him. Long and continual practice had brought their scheme as near perfection as is humanly possible. On several occasions confederates were placed in the audience and at such times the effects seemed nothing short of miraculous. All their various tests were cunningly faked and their methods were so thorough that detection was an absolute impossibility to the layman."

In his book Rudi Schneider (1930), the psychical researcher Harry Price expanded upon Goldston's observations: "The Zancigs' performance took years of study to perfect, and several hours practice daily were needed to keep the performers in good form. I have the Zancigs' codes in my library and know the hard work that both Mr. Julius Zancig and his wife put into their 'act,' a matter which I have discussed with Mr. Zancig himself."

Just when the Zancigs were at the pinnacle of their career Agnes died in 1916. Julius tried to continue the act with several other people, but never to the same effect.

"Zanoni"

Title of an occult novel by Bulwer Lytton. (See also Fiction, English Occult)

Zapan

According to demonologist Johan Weyer, one of the kings of Hell.

Sources:

Weyer, Johannes. Witches, Devils and Doctors in the Renaissance: Johann Weyer, De Praestigiis. Ed. George Mora. Binghamton, N.Y.: Medieval & Renaissance Texts & Studies, 1991.

Zazen

Term used in Zen Buddhism to indicate the sitting position for meditation, which usually takes place in the Zen-do or meditation hall in Zen monasteries. The meditation position is known as dhyanasana. It resembles the "lotus" position of hatha yoga known as padmasana, but the hands have a precise positioning integral to the very different method and goal of Zen meditation.

ZCLA Journal

Former periodical concerned with past and present writings of Zen masters on the subject of Zen Buddhism. Some of the contents include material not previously translated into Western languages. It was published three times a year by the Zen Center of Los Angeles and has in recent years been superseded by a new periodical, The Ten Directions.

Zedekias (fl. ninth century C.E.)

Said to have been a Jewish physician of the ninth century who was in great favor with the Emperor Charles the Bald. Zedekias had a reputation as a Kabbalist and wizard and was said to have eaten a whole load of hay, together with the driver and horses, in the presence of the emperor's court. On another occasion he supposedly flew around in the air.

Zedekias was mentioned by the Abbé de Montfaucon de Villars in his book Comte de Gabalis (1670). According to de Villars, Zedekias was anxious to show the world that elementary spirits really existed and advised the sylphs to show themselves in the air to everyone:

"These beings were seen in the Air in human form, sometimes in battle array marching in good order, halting under arms, or encamped beneath magnificent tents. Sometimes on wonderfully constructed aerial ships, whose flying squadrons roved at the will of the Zephyrs. What happened? . . . The people straightway believed that sorcerers had taken possession of the Air for the purpose of raising tempests and bringing hail upon their crops. . . . The Emperors believed it as well; and this ridiculous chimera went so far that the wise Charlemagne, and after him Louis the Débonnaire, imposed grievous penalties upon all these supposed Tyrants of the Air. You may see an account of this in the first chapter of the Capitularies of these two Emperors."

Zeernebooch

A dark god, monarch of the empire of the dead among the ancient Germans.

Zeitoun

Zeitoun, a suburb of Cairo, Egypt, was the site from 1968 to 1971 of some of the most spectacular sets of apparitions of the Virgin Mary. She was seen not just by a few children as in most of the reported apparitions in the last two centuries, but by thousands of Christians, Jews, and Muslims alike. However, it is also the case that the sightings appeared at a Coptic church, rather than a Roman Catholic one, and that very little interest in the apparitions has been demonstrated by Catholic authorities.

The apparitions began on the evening of April 2, 1968. Two men, both Muslims, working in a garage across from the Coptic Church of St. Mary in Zeitoun, saw what they first thought was a nun standing on top of the central dome of the church's roof. Their initial thought was that she was about to commit suicide by leaping off the dome. One went to get the priest and one an emergency squad. Others began to gather, attracted by the confusion. The woman on the dome rose to her feet and was revealed as a being encompassed in brilliant light. A woman in the crowd shouted out that it was the Virgin. Several objects that appeared to be luminous birds fluttered around the lady. One of the workmen who had originally seen the figure had a wounded hand and was scheduled for surgery the next morning. When he reported to the hospital, the doctors discovered his hand had been healed.

The object on the church roof, soon believed by many to be the Virgin, faded from sight after a while. It would be another week before it reappeared. After that, the appearances varied. For periods they would occur every night. Sometimes they would be brief, and on occasion last as long as six or seven hours. Most of the time she was alone. On occasion she had a child in her arms or appeared with figures believed to be St. Joseph and Jesus as a lad of 12. As many as 250,000 people crowded the streets around the church and witnessed the Virgin's appearances. Eventually, a number of pictures of the phenomena were taken. The last apparition occurred on May 29, 1971, at which pictures were taken.

The Coptic Church has made much of the apparitions and of the many healings reported because of them. Stories of healing have continued to the present. Because of the context, no inquiry by the Roman Catholic Church of the kind that has accompanied reported apparitions in Europe has been made. However, the Coptic patriarch did order an inquiry and the general information and complaints department of the Egyptian government made an inquiry and report. During the apparitions, Fr. Jerome Palmer, an American Benedictine monk, went to Egypt and wrote one of the first accounts of the phenomena by a Westerner. They have also become the subject of ecumenical discussions between the Coptic patriarch and the pope.

To date, no critical studies of the phenomena have appeared. These sightings differ greatly from the more traditional reported encounters with the Virgin that have been limited to only a few people. They also involve the sighting of an object that had enough solidity that it could be seen and photographed. While no hint of fraud has appeared in the literature about the phenomena, one must not rule out the possibility that the sightings were staged, though the hows and whys are unknown.

Sources:

Johnson, Francis. When Millions Saw Mary. Chulmleigh, Devon, UK: Augustine Publishing, 1980.

Palmer, Jerome. Our Lady Returns to Egypt. San Bernardino, Calif.: Culligan Book Co., 1969.

Zeitschrift für Metapsychische Forschung

Monthly psychical research magazine, established in 1930, and published through the decade in connection with the Institute für Metapsychische Forschung, by Dr. Christop Schroeder, in Berlin, Germany.

Zeitschrift für Parapsichologie

A monthly German periodical of psychical research, originally founded by Alexander Aksakof in 1874 under the title Psychische Studien. The new title was assumed in 1925 and continued through 1934. Aksakof had originally hoped to publish a Spiritualist journal in his native tongue of Russian, but was prevented by the power of the Orthodox Church. His journal was issued in German from Leipzig.

Zeitschrift für Parapsychologie und Grenzgebiete der Psychologie (Journal)

Journal of Parapsychology and Border Areas of Psychology, published by the Institut für Grenzgebiete der Psychologie (Institute for Border Areas of Psychology). Articles in the journal frequently are accompanied with summaries in English. Address: Eichhalde 12, D-7800 Freiburg in Br., Germany.

Zen (or Ch'an)

One of the few traditional forms of instant enlightenment in Oriental religions. However, Zen normally demands a long preliminary period of monastic life and spiritual discipline culminating in the somewhat surrealist techniques that give instant satori, or enlightenment.

Zen is a special branch of Mahayana Buddhist school (which dominates Buddhism in China, Korea, and Japan), dating from 520 C.E. when Bodhi-Dharma (d. 534 C.E.) went from India to China with a mission later codified in the maxims: "a special transmission outside the scriptures; no dependence upon words and letters; direct pointing at the soul of man; seeing into one's nature; and the attainment of Buddhahood." Zen was later divided into two main schools, called Rinzai and Soto in Japan.

Rinzai Zen depends very much upon sudden or startling paradoxes, embodied in koans, mystical riddles such as "Empty-handed I come, carrying a spade." Modern interest in Zen often misunderstands the nature of such riddles, where the verbal factor is merely a trigger to intensify stress in the pupil, and as a result many Westerners tend to treat Zen as a kind of intellectual exercise. In practice, however, such paradoxes were the culmination of a more formal monastic training emphasizing traditional spiritual values. The disciple would be fully extended on all levels of his nature—physically, in the everyday hard work of the monastery; mentally, in the assimilation of spiritual teaching; and emotionally, in the sudden clash of unconventional techniques used in Zen.

The koans merely accentuated an intolerable pressure at all levels, culminating in the sudden flash of enlightenment by transcendence on a higher, spiritual plane. (See also ZCLA Journal; Zazen; Zen Studies Society)

Sources:

Humphreys, Christmas. Zen Buddhism. London: Heinemann, 1949. Reprint, New York: Macmillan, 1967.

Suzuki, D. T. Manual of Zen Buddhism. New York: Grove Press, 1960.

———. Zen Buddhism: Selected Writings of D. T. Suzuki. Edited by William Barrett. New York: Doubleday/Anchor, 1956.

Zener Cards

A pack of twenty-five cards bearing simple symbols in groups of five of a kind: star, circle, square, cross, and waves, used in parapsychology in testing extrasensory faculty under laboratory conditions. The use of the Zener card pack dates from the work of J. B. Rhine in the Department of Psychology at Duke University, North Carolina, from 1927 onward, first reported in Rhine's Extrasensory Perception, published 1934 by the Boston Society for Psychic Research.

Prior to the work of Rhine, ordinary playing cards had been used in testing telepathy, notably by Margaret Verrall between 1890 and 1895. Significant tests were carried out in Britain by Ina Jephson and other members of the Society for Psychical Research beginning in 1924.

The Zener card pack was devised by Karl Zener (1903–1963) of the psychology faculty at Duke University as a means of avoiding preferences for individual playing cards during tests and in order to facilitate evaluation of test scores. Having concluded that parapsychology as pursued by Rhine was a threat to the psychology department, Zener later turned against Rhine and joined with some colleagues in an attempt to have him removed from his faculty position.

Two problems developed with the Zener cards. First, while they were designed to be more emotionally neutral than traditional playing cards, in fact, they used some highly charged emotional symbols, such as the star, a prominent symbol in many religions. Second, in the early printings, the ink bled through and the symbol was clearly visible on the back of the card. This later problem was immediately corrected when discovered.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Jephson, Ina. "Evidence for Clairvoyance in Card-Guessing: A Report on Some Recent Experiments." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 38: 223–271, and 39: 375–414.

Jephson, Ina, S. G. Soal, and Theodore Besterman. "Report on a Series of Experiments in Clairvoyance (conducted at a distance)." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 39 (1928).

Sanger, C. P. "Analysis of Mrs. Verrall's Card Experiments." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 2, no. 28 (1895).

Zen Studies Society

American lay organization for the study of traditional Zen meditation inspired by the presence of D. T. Suzuki in New York City in 1956. Upon the death of its founder Clifton Cane in 1962, it became inactive for a few years but was reactivated when some of the students met Eido Tai Shimano, a Zen master who agreed to move to New York and lead the work. Emphasis in the reorganized society shifted from study to practice, and branches soon developed in Philadelphia and Washington, D.C.

Associated with the society is the Dai Bosatsu Zendo Kongo-ji, in the Catskill Mountains, that is open to lay people for full-time Zen practice with daily meditation, study, work, and community life. The society publishes The Newsletter of the Zen Studies Society, a semi-annual newsletter and writings of Shimano. The society can be contacted at HCR 1 Box 171, Livingston Manor, NY 12758-9402. Website: http://www.zenstudies.org/.

Sources:

Shimano, Eido. Golden Wind. Tokyo: Japan Publications, 1979.

Shimano, Eido, ed. Like a Dream, Like a Fantasy. Tokyo: Japan Publications, 1978.

The Zen Studies Society. http://www.zenstudies.org/. March 8, 2000.

Zepar

Said to be the grand duke of the infernal empire, possibly identical with Vepar, or Separ. Nevertheless, under the name of Zepar he had the form of a warrior. He cast men into evil passions. Twenty-eight legions obeyed him.

Zeroid

Term used by some ufologists to denote creatures or animals that may exist and live in space. As yet, no positive evidence exists for their reality. To date reports are limited to the likes of the account in the Weekly World News, for October 1, 1985, that "a herd of space animals, the size and shape of the Goodyear blimp, grazed for three hours on cattle pastures near the remote Argentine ranching settlement of Villa Iruya."

Zetetic Scholar

A journal of academic research into occultism, cryptozoology, and related fields founded by Marcello Truzzi of the Department of Sociology at Eastern Michigan University. Originally titled Explorations, the title was changed after the second volume to avoid confusion with the Explorations Institute in Berkeley, California.

"Zetetic" derives from the Greek philosophical school of Pyrrho (365–275 B.C.E.) and indicates extreme skepticism. Zetetic Journal circulated to serious academics researching occultism and to organizations and individuals in the field. It contained critical notes and news of current events and personalities in occultism, a who's who in occult research, and valuable lists of books and articles in the fields of occultism and parapsychology. The Zetetic was given to the Committee for the Scientific Investigation of the Claims of the Paranormal. However, in 1977 Truzzi had a disagreement with the committee leadership over their handling of a research project in which false data was published in an attempt to refute astrology.

Truzzi disassociated himself from the committee and announced publication of Zetetic Scholar as an independent scientific review. The first issue appeared in 1978. In the meantime, beginning with the Fall/Winter issue, the committee continued its journal under a new name, The Skeptical Inquirer. Truzzi continued the Zetetic Scholar through the 1980s, some 15 issues appearing. The Skeptical Inquirer continues as the organ of the Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal.

Zhong Gong

Zhong Gong, founded in China in 1988, is one of the most popular of the qigong groups operating in the Peoples Republic of China through the 1990s. By the end of the decade it was estimated to have 20 million followers. However, in 1999, in the wake of the crackdown on the Falun Gong group, it was also singled out for repressive measures. The Chinese government declared that the meditation-exercise sect was an "evil cult."

Zhong Gong, the China Health Care and Wisdom Enhancement Gong, was founded by Zhang Hongbao (b. 1955) during the heyday of government support for qigong. In spite of its operating apart from the officially sanctioned National Qigong Association, Zhong Gong speedily spread across the country. It was also favorably mentioned in the official press. Its training school in Shaanxi Province had over 2,000 students. Reportedly, the country's president, Jiang Zemin, had sought out a Zhong Gong Master to treat his arthritis and back pain.

Zhang Hongbao taught a traditional form of qigong that emphasized the use of exercises and meditation as a means of stimulating qi energy. Such energy, once properly flowing through the body, would bring health and enhanced mental functioning.

Through the 1990s, the group had some minor run-ins with authorities and became known as an independent organization apart from government control, though no ideological elements appeared to contradict government authority (as with Falun Gong). However, in December of 1999, police closed the Zhong Gong training facility in Shaanxi. Then in January of 2000, the leader of the group in Zhejiang Province was sentenced to two years for the Chinese equivalent of practicing medicine without a license, a charge potentially placing all qigong groups at risk. The government has charged that following qigong has been accompanied with admonitions to stop seeing medical doctors.

In the wake of the move against Zhong Gong, the government announced broad changes in regulations dealing with qigong groups specifying how they must be organized and what teachings they may espouse. The ongoing issues concerning Zhong Gong and other qigong groups are being covered in the press and monitored by various human rights groups.

Sources:

Eckholm, Erik. "China Imprisons a Leader of Healing-by-Meditation Society." New York Times (January 20, 2000).

Ziazaa

A mysterious fabled black and white stone. It was said to render its possessor litigious and cause terrible visions.

Zierold, Maria Reyes

A Mexican sensitive who was the subject of experiments by Gustav Pagenstecher (1855–1942) from about 1919 onward. Zierold was a housewife whom Pagenstecher treated for insomnia by means of hypnosis. To his surprise, Zierold manifested psychometric ability while in hypnotic trance.

A medical committee in Mexico City also examined Zierold's abilities and reported that the phenomena seemed genuinely paranormal. In 1921 Walter Franklin Prince, then principal research officer of the American Society for Psychical Research visited Mexico to observe Pagenstecher's experiments and to conduct his own. He reached similar conclusions.

Sources:

Pagenstecher, Gustav. Die Geheimnisse der Psychometrie oder Hellsehen in die Vergangenheit (Secrets of Psychometry or Clairvoyance into the Past). N.p., 1928.

———. "Notable Psychometrist." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 14 (1920).

———. "Past Events Seership." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 16 (January 1922).

Prince, Walter Franklin. "Psychometric Experiments with Maria Reyes de Z." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 16 (January 1922).

———. "Psychometric Experiments with Maria Reyes de Z." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 15 (1921).

Tyrell, G. N. M. The Personality of Man: New Facts and Their Significance. U.K.: Penguin Books, 1947.

Ziito (fl. fourteenth century)

One of the most remarkable magicians that history has left record of. He was a sorcerer at the court of King Wenceslaus of Bohemia (afterward emperor of Germany) toward the end of the fourteenth century. Among his more famous exploits was one chronicled by Janus Dubravius, bishop of Olmutz, in his Historiae Regni Boiemiae (History of Bohemia, 1552). On the occasion of the marriage of Wenceslaus with Sophia, daughter of the elector Palatine of Bavaria, the elector, knowing his son-in-law's liking for juggling and magical exhibitions, brought a number of morris dancers, jugglers, and other entertainers. When they came forward to give their exhibition Ziito remained unobtrusively among the spectators. He was not entirely unnoticed, however, for his remarkable appearance drew the attention of those about him. His oddest feature was his mouth, which reportedly stretched from ear to ear.

After watching the magicians for some time in silence, Ziito appeared to become exasperated at the halting way in which the tricks were carried through, and going up to the principal magician, he taunted him with incompetency. The rival professor hotly defended his performance, and a discussion ensued that was ended at last when Ziito allegedly swallowed his opponent, just as he stood, leaving only his shoes, which he said were dirty and unfit for consumption.

After this extraordinary feat, he retired for a little while to a closet, from which he shortly emerged, leading the rival magician by the hand. He then gave a performance of his own which put the former exhibition entirely to shame. He changed himself into many different shapes, taking the form of first one person and then another, none of whom bore any resemblance either to himself or to each other.

In a car drawn by barn-door fowls, he kept pace with the king's carriage. When the guests were assembled at dinner, he played a multitude of elfish tricks on them.

Indeed, he was at all times an exceedingly mischievous creature, as is shown by another story told of him. Pretending to be in want of money, and apparently casting about anxiously for the means of obtaining some, he at length took a handful of corn and made it look like thirty fat hogs. These he took to Michael, a rich but very mean dealer. The latter purchased them after some haggling, but was warned not to let them drink at the river. The warning was disregarded, the hogs drank, and they were turned into grains of corn.

The enraged dealer went in search of Ziito, whom he found in a vintner's shop. In vain Michael shouted and stamped. The magician took no notice, but seemed to be in a fit of abstraction. Eventually the dealer, beside himself, seized Ziito's foot and pulled it as hard as he could. To his dismay, the foot and leg came right off, while Ziito screamed lustily and hauled Michael before the judge, where the two presented their complaints. What the decision was, history does not relate, but it is unlikely that the ingenious Ziito came off worse.

Zikr

A Sufi term meaning "remembrance," indicating the constant awareness of divine consciousness in humanity. In Sufism,

Zikr takes the form of a specific ritual to bring individuals into a higher state of consciousness. The practice of zikr varies considerably from group to group, but its most famous form, as practiced by some Turkish Sufis, involves circular movements of the group members who came to be known as whirling dervishes.

Zitko, John Howard (1911–)

John Howard Zitko, New Age lecturer and founder of the World University, a center for alternative education, was born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on October 26, 1911. He attended the University of Wisconsin in Milwaukee and the University of California in Los Angeles, and received a Doctor of Divinity degree from Golden State University.

Zitko was cofounder of the Lemurian Fellowship established in Chicago, Illinois, in 1936 and edited its early book, The Earth Dweller Returns (1940), reputedly a sequel to the nineteenth-century channeled text, A Dweller on Two Planets (1899), by Phylos the Tibetan (through Frederick William Oliver). The movement of the fellowship to rural California in 1941 encouraged Zitko's move to the West Coast. He served as the minister of the Temple of the Jeweled Cross in Hollywood for four years (1942–46). During this time he conceived of the idea of a World University, and on December 21, 1946, founded the World University Roundtable as a parent corporation to develop the idea and raise funds. He later served a brief tenure as pastor of the Church of the Abundant Life in Huntington Park, California (1956–59).

Over the years the concept of the World University was undergirded with the idea of promoting world peace through world education. Finally, in 1967, the World University was founded in Tucson, Arizona, to offer nontraditional, experiential, and tutorial learning with an emphasis on world order studies, environmental concerns, and human potential knowledge. It is headquartered from its campus, now located in Benson, Arizona, but functions primarily through its many small affiliated schools located around the world. It has pulled together a faculty of independent scholars who are intellectually aligned with the nontraditional curriculum supported by the university. Among its American affiliates is the Aum Esoteric Study Center headed by Robert Hieronimous in Baltimore, Maryland.

Though concentrating on the university's development, through the years Zitko has remained active with the Lemurian Fellowship and in 1981 was named its vice president. His 1947 book, Streamers of Light from the New World, had heralded many New Age themes, and as the New Age Movement emerged, he authored several books that embodied the alternative perspective on education and life represented by the university: New Age Tantra Yoga (1974) and World University Insights with the Future in Mind (1980). These books resonated with the movement of the 1980s and Zitko became a popular New Age lecturer and teacher.

Sources:

Zitko, Howard J. New Age Tantra Yoga. Benson, Ariz.: World University, 1974.

———. World University Insights with the Future in Mind. Benson, Ariz.: World University, 1980.

Zizaa

A fabulous precious stone, said to produce marvelous dreams for those who looked at it before sleeping. An illustration of it appears in Hortus Sanitatis by Johannis de Cuba, Strasbourg (ca. 1483).

Zizis

The name that modern Jews give to their phylacteries.

Zlokobinca

Among the Slavs, name for a witch, meaning "evil dealer."

Zoaphite

According to the seventeenth-century traveler Jan Struys, a zoaphite was a species of cucumber that fed on neighboring plants. Its fruit had the form of a lamb, with the head, feet, and tail of that animal distinctly apparent, and it is thus called, in the language of the country, Canaret, or Conarer, signifying a lamb. Struys described this plant in his book Drie aanmerkelijke en seer rampspoedige (1676), translated as The Voyages and Travels of Jan Struys (1684).

Its skin was covered with a white down. The ancient Tartars thought a great deal of it and most of them kept it carefully in their houses, where Jan Struys says he saw it several times.

It grew on a stalk about three feet in height, to which it was attached by a sort of tendril. On this tendril it could move about and turn and bend toward the herbs on which it fed, and without which it soon dried up and withered. Wolves loved it, devouring it with avidity, because, reportedly, it tasted like the flesh of a lamb. The author added that he had been assured that it had bones, flesh, and blood, thus being known in its native country as zoaphite, or animal plant.

Zodiac

The zodiac, literally the circle of animals, is constituted by the 12 stellar constellations through which the Sun appears to pass in its annual movement through the heavens. The 12 constellations form a belt across the night sky some 8 to 9 degrees on either side of the solar orbit. The Moon and the planets of this solar system also move within that belt. The path of the Sun is called the ecliptic as eclipses occur when the Moon's orbit crosses the Sun's path.

The idea of a zodiac is relatively complex, and long-term observation of planetary motion is quite possible without it. The idea of naming the various constellations in the sky for gods and animals is ancient; the singling out of the 12 constellations that constitute the zodiac goes back at least to the second millennium B.C.E. in ancient Mesopotamia. The zodiac as it appears in modern astrology was certainly in use by the sixth century B.C.E. Each culture gave the constellations of the zodiac different names, the modern Western zodiac being derived from the Greeks. The designation of 12 constellations, a worldwide phenomenon, relates to the division of the year by the Moon's 12 complete orbits through the zodiac in each solar year.

In modern astrology, two different zodiacs are popularly recognized. The sidereal zodiac reflects the actual location of the constellations in the night sky. Practitioners of Vedic astrology use this zodiac. The position of the constellations relative to the beginning of the years shifts slightly each year due to the phenomenon known as the procession of the equinoxes. Most Western astrologers use the tropical zodiac as defined by Ptolemy in the second century C.E. According to Ptolemy, the astrological year would begin each spring equinox and it would assume that the sun was at 0 degrees Aries. Due to the progression of the equinoxes, the sun at the spring equinox is close to 0 degrees Pisces. Much of the symbolism of the signs of the zodiac in Western astrology is tied to the seasons of the year. That symbolism would be lost with the acceptance of the sidereal zodiac.

The 12 signs of the zodiac are: Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricorn, Aquarius, and Pisces. (See also Astrological Houses; Astrological Planets; Astrological Signs; Astrology)

Sources:

Brau, Jean Louis, Helen Weaver, and Allen Edwards. Laurouse Encyclopedia of Astrology. New York: New American Library, 1980.

Cirlot, J. E. A Dictionary of Symbols. New York: Philosophical Library, 1971.

McCaffery, Ellen. Astrology: Its History and Influence in the Western World. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1942.

The Zoist (Journal)

The journal of medical mesmerists in Britain during the mid-nineteenth century. It was under the direction of Dr. John Elliotson and was published from 1843 to 1856. The popular side of mesmerism was represented by The Phreno-Magnet, another periodical started at the same time and edited by Spencer T. Hall.

"Zolar"

Pseudonym of successful astrologer Bruce King.

Zöllner, Johann C. F. (1834–1882)

Professor of physics and astronomy at the University of Leipzig, remembered most for his speculative work, The Nature of the Comets, which attracted the attention of the intellectual world in view of the many original ideas he advanced. He also engaged in psychical research beginning with an investigation of the phenomena of the medium Henry Slade. His subsequent book, Transcendental Physics (1880), rendered his name famous in the annals of psychical research and subjected him to persecution, contempt, and ridicule from the scientific fraternity. He is considered a somewhat naive investigator unable to detect the fraud perpetuated on him by a series of physical mediums.

His experiments began in December 1877. He was assisted by William Edward Weber, a professor of physics; W. Scheibner, a professor of mathematics; and Gustave Theodore Fechner, a professor of physics who, to quote Zöllner's words, became "perfectly convinced of the reality of the observed facts, altogether excluding imposture or prestidigation." Professor Fichte, of Stuttgart, and Professor Ulrici, of Halle, also endorsed the experiments that were further supported by an affidavit of Bellachine, the conjurer at the court of Berlin.

The evidential value of the investigation was somewhat weakened by Zöllner's insistence on the theory of fourth dimension as an explanation. Of the theory itself, the astronomer G. V. Schiaparelli wrote in a letter to Camille Flammarion:

"It is the most ingenious and probable that can be imagined. According to this theory, mediumistic phenomena would lose their mystic or mystifying character and would pass into the domain of ordinary physics and physiology. They would lead to a very considerable extension of the sciences, an extension such that their author would deserve to be placed side by side with Galileo and Newton. Unfortunately, these experiments of Zöllner were made with a medium of poor reputation."

Zöllner, after his sittings with Slade, had further interesting experiences with Elizabeth d'Esperance. In March 1880, Baron von Hoffmann engaged the medium William Eglinton to give twenty-five sittings to Zöllner. He was very satisfied with the result and intended to write another book on his experiences. He died before he could do it.

The report of the skeptical Seybert Commission quoted testimonies from Scheibner, Fechner, and some others that Zöllner, at the time of his experiments, was of unsound mind. As he filled his chair up to the moment of his sudden death, this charge cannot be seriously supported. In his book Birth and Death as a Change of Form of Perception (1886), Baron Lazar De Baczolay Hellenbach wrote that Zöllner "was in his last days deeply wounded and embittered by the treatment of his colleagues, whose assaults he took too much to heart. Zöllner, however, was in perfect possession of his intellect till his last breath."

When the report of the Seybert Commission was made public, anti-Spiritualists, like popular atheist writer Joseph McCabe, seized upon the remarks about Zöllner and wrote of him as "elderly and purblind." Dr. Isaac Kauffmann Funk, the New York publisher and psychical investigator, wrote to Leipzig and received from Dr. Karl Bücher, the Rector Magnificus of the University of Leipzig, a letter, dated November 7, 1903, that "information received from Zöllner's colleagues states that during his entire studies at the university here, until his death, he was of sound mind; moreover, in the best of health. The cause of his death was a hemorrhage of the brain on the morning of April 26, 1882, while he was at breakfast with his mother, and from which he died shortly after."

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Inglis, Brian. The Paranormal: An Encyclopedia of Psychic Phenomena. London: Granada, 1985.

Zöllner, Johann C. F. Transcendental Physics. Trans. C. C. Massey. London: W. H. Harrison, 1882.

Zombies

In Haitian voudou superstition, a zombie is a dead body revived by magic to act as a soulless robot. In recent years stories of zombies have spread throughout Western countries in Hollywood horror films about the walking dead. According to the folk tradition, the houngans, or voudou priests, are said to dig up corpses and reanimate them by magic rituals. Another way of creating a zombie is to feed the victim a preparation that stupefies the soul, leaving the body a living corpse.

To cure a zombie, it is said one should give it saltwater to drink. Special burial techniques are sometimes used to prevent corpses from being used as zombies. The corpse may be buried face down and its mouth filled with earth; sometimes the lips are sewn together, presumably to prevent the soul from leaving by the mouth. A somewhat naive custom is to strew handfuls of sesame seed on the grave (a common practice in eastern Europe to entertain vampires), so that the spirit of the deceased will always be occupied in counting the seeds.

Firsthand accounts of zombies have continued into the late twentieth century. Author Alfred Métraux stated that six months after the death of a friend he saw that friend as a zombie at the house of a houngan. Harvard ethnobiologist Wade Davis, who visited Haiti in 1982, succeeded in penetrating the secret societies and understanding and documenting the voudoo culture. He has suggested that certain powerful drugs might be capable of influencing centers in the brain concerned with conscious control. A person given such drugs would appear dead, would be buried alive, and revived several days later. They would then be given hallucinogens and forced into a new life as an unpaid laborer.

Davis' theories were recently validated by an expedition to Haiti that was the subject of a remarkable BBC television program presented by John Tusa in 1984. In interviews with houngans, the secret of creating zombies was disclosed. A poisonous substance from the puffer fish (Diodon hystrix) is carefully prepared by the houngan and administered to the victim, who thereafter appears dead and is buried. He is exhumed by the houngan and used as a zombie. The poison stupefies certain brain centers.

The poison was analyzed by Leon Roizy, professor of neurobiology at Columbia University, and identified as tetrodotoxin, found in the puffer fish, the exquisitely dangerous gourmet dish of Japanese Fugu, requiring skillful preparation by experienced chefs in order to avoid poisoning the diner.

When eaten sliced raw (sashimi), the flesh is relatively safe, but among eaters of the partly cooked dish known as chiri, which includes toxic cooked livers, there are over a hundred deaths annually.

Sources:

Davis, Wade. The Serpent and the Rainbow. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1985.

Zoomancy

A system of divination based on the appearances and behavior of animals.

Zorab, George A(vetoom) M(arterus) (1898–1990)

Author and parapsychologist. He was born on January 11, 1898, at Surabaya, Java. His family sent him to the Netherlands for his education. He encountered Spiritualism when only twelve years old and was interested in psychic phenomena from then on. He was also grateful to Spiritualists for relieving him of his fear of death. He became an active Spiritualist as a young man and edited several Spiritualist periodicals. He joined the Studieverening voor Psychical Research (Dutch Society for Psychical Research) and beginning in 1932, he experimented in parapsychology with a concentration on spontaneous paranormal phenomena and quantitative experiments in extrasensory perception with psychotics. In 1938 he joined the Society for Psychical Research, London. He published his first book in 1940, by which time he had concluded that the spirit hypothesis was only weakly supported and the evidence for survival questionable.

After the war Zorab emerged as an active parapsychologist. He chaired the International Committee for the Study of Spontaneous Paranormal Phenomena, The Hague; was a secretary for the First International Conference on Parapsychological Studies in Utrecht, the Netherlands, in 1953; and participated in the Conference on Spontaneous Paranormal Phenomena at Cambridge, England, in 1955, and the International Conference on Psychology and Parapsychology at Royaumont, France, in 1956.

He was named honorary secretary of the Dutch Society for Psychical Research (1945–57) and directed the Parapsychology Foundation's European Research Center at St. Paul de Vence, France. In 1960 he was selected to become a member of the Council of the Parapsychology Association, a position which he refused. He did accept, however, the Perrott-Warwick Studentship in Psychical Research for 1968/1969. He was the European review editor of the Indian Journal of Parapsychology, contributed many articles to Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie and other parapsychological journals, and wrote a number of books. Zorab remained active in the field of parapsychology until 1987, due to failing health. He died July 4, 1990.

Sources:

Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Snel, F. W. J. J., ed. In Honour of G. A. M. Zorab. Amsterdam: Verenining voor Parapsychologie, 1986.

Zorab, George A. M. Bibliography of Parapsychology. Parapsychology Foundation, 1957.

———. "A Case for Survival." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 31 (1946).

———. D. D. Home, il Medium. Milan, 1976.

———. "ESP Experiments with Psychotics." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 39 (1957).

———. "A Further Comparative Analysis of Some Poltergeist Phenomena Cases from Continental Europe." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 58 (1964).

———. De Jacht op het Spiritistisch Bewijs (In Quest of Proof for Survival). The Hague: Boucher, 1940.

———. Katie King: Donna o Fantasma. Milan: Armenia Editore, 1980.

———. Magnetiseurs en Wondergenezers (Magnetism and Miracle Healers). N.p., 1952.

———. De Opstandingsverhalen in het Licht de Parapsychologie (The Resurrection Narratives in the Light of Parapsychology). N.p., 1949.

———. Parapsychologie (Parapsychology). N.p., 1958.

———. Proscopie, Het Raadsel der Toekomst (Precognition, the Riddle of the Future). N.p., 1953.

———. Wichelroede en Aardstralen (The Divining Rod and Earthrays). N.p., 1950.

———. Wonderen der Parapsychologie (Wonders of Parapsychology). N.p., 1954.

Zorab, George A. M., P. A. Dietz, and K. H. E. de Jong. Parapsychologische Woordentolk (A parapsychological dictionary). N.p., 1956.

Zos Kia Cultus

The system of magic developed by occult artist Austin Osmond Spare, involving a complete symbolism of form, sound, desire, and will, deriving from sexual energy. Zos was not only Spare's magic name but also a symbol of the body as a whole, which could project desires and modify the world of matter. The primary practitioner of the system in the United States is Michael Bertiaux, head of the Monastery of the Seven Rays.

Sources:

Grant, Kenneth. Cults of the Shadow. New York: Samuel Wiser, 1976.

Zschokke, (Johannes) Heinrich (Daniel) (1771–1848)

German-Swiss writer, actor, and pastor, born at Magdeburg, March 22, 1771. He was educated at Frankfurt-on-Oder, where he studied theology, philosophy, and jurisprudence. He encountered difficulties with authorities on account of his pronounced political opinions, but eventually concentrated on writing plays and Gothic romances influenced by Sir Walter Scott. His romance Abaeillino, der grosse Bandit was produced in 1794 and had an enormous success, being dramatized the following year. It was adapted by the English writer Matthew Gregory Lewis as The Bravo of Venice in 1804 and greatly influenced themes in Gothic romance. Zschokke died at Aarau June 27, 1848.

Zuccarini, Amedee (ca. 1907)

Italian, non-professional medium of Bologna who exhibited the ability to perform levitation, which was studied in great detail by Dr. L. Patrizi, professor of physiology at the University of Modena, and Professor Creste Murani of the Milan Polytechnic. (Annales des Sciences Psychiques, vol. 17, pp. 528–549). For an English language account, see Annals of Psychical Science (vol. 6, no. 34, 1907, pp. 303–306). Flashlight photographs showed him up in the air without support. Zuccarini had two trance personalities, a deceased brother and a doctor who had died in 1600.

Zügun, Eleonore (1914–)

A Romanian peasant girl, born in 1914 at Talpa, Romania, the subject of poltergeist persecution and the phenomena of stigmata. Her experiences filled her neighbors with dread. When the phenomena appeared, about 1925, the peasants attributed them to Dracu, the devil, an idea the girl accepted. She was incarcerated in an asylum.

The Countess Wassilko-Serecki and her friends heard of the strange case, rescued the girl, and took her to Vienna. The countess published an article and a book about the young girl. The British psychical researcher Harry Price visited Vienna in May 1926 and reported on the phenomena surrounding Zügun in the Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (August 1926). He found the phenomena genuine. On Price's invitation, the countess and her protégée then came to London for an investigation at the National Laboratory of Psychical Research. The case was reported in the NLPR Proceedings (vol. 1, part 1, January 1927) and widely discussed in the press.

Capt. Seton-Karr testified on October 19, 1926: "I was present on October 5, when the so-called stigmatic markings appeared on the face, arms and forehead of Eleonore Zügun under conditions which absolutely precluded the possibility of Eleonore producing them by scratching or other normal means. The marks were photographed in my presence."

The report of the National Laboratory of Psychical Research, after describing various telekinetic and apport phenomena, concluded on the stigmata as follows:

"There is not the slightest doubt that our careful experiments, made under ideal scientific conditions, have proved that:

"(a) Stigmatic markings appeared spontaneously in various parts of Eleonore's body;

"(b) That Eleonore was not consciously responsible for the production of the marks;

"(c) That under scientific test conditions movements of small objects without physical contact undoubtedly took place. The experimenters, unless they are bereft of all human perceptions, cannot possibly come to any other conclusions.

"What has happened to Eleonore is apparently this: During her early childhood when the so-called 'poltergeist' phenomena became first apparent, the simple peasants threatened her so often with Dracu (the Devil) and what he would do to her that her subconscious mind became obsessed with the idea of whippings, bitings, etc., which the ignorant peasants said would be her lot at the hands—or teeth—of Dracu. Remove the Dracu complex and the girl would probably be troubled no further with stigmatic markings.

"If we have discovered the cause of the 'stigmata' I am afraid we cannot lay claim to having unraveled the mystery of the telekinetic movements of the coins, etc. We have merely proved that they happen."

Toward the end of her fourteenth year, at the approach of the menses, Zügun completely lost her psychic powers.

Sources:

Price, Harry. "Some Account of the Poltergeist Phenomena of Eleonore Zügun." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (August 1926).

Wassilko-Serecki, The Countess. "Observations on Eleonore Zügun." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (September/October 1925).

———. Der Spuk von Talpa. München, 1926.

Zwaan Rays

An hypothesized energy field demonstrated by N. Zwaan, Dutch delegate to the International Spiritualist Federation Congress in London in 1948. The Zwaan Rays were supposed to be capable of stimulating the psychic senses into activity. Subsequently the Spirit Electronic Communication Society was founded in Manchester, England, on September 10, 1949, and an apparatus was developed that claimed to improve the Zwaan effect. (See also Ashkir-Jobson Trianion)

Sources:

Dyne, Mark. Electronic Communication for the Spiritual Emancipation of the People. Rev. ed., Manchester, England: The Spirit Electronic Communication Society, 1954.

Internet Resources

This section, organized by subject, contains information on organizations specializing in occultism, parapsychology, New Age, Theosophy, holistic healing, etc. Every effort has been made to provide the most current sites available. All sites were active at the time this edition went to press.

ACUPRESSURE

Acupressure.org
http://www.acupressure.org/
British Columbia Acupressure Therapist's Association http://www.islandnet.com/~bcata/

ACUPUNCTURE

Acupuncture Canada
http://www.acupuncture.ca/
Acupuncture.com
http://www.Acupuncture.com/
American Association of Oriental Medicine
http://www.aaom.org/
The British Medical Acupuncture Society
http://www.medical-acupuncture.co.uk/
National Certification Commission for Acupuncture and Oriental Medicine http://www.nccaom.org/

ADAMSKI FOUNDATION

GAF International/Adamski Foundation
http://www.gafintl-adamski.com/html/GAFpg1.htm

THE AETHERIUS SOCIETY

The Aetherius Society
http://www.aetherius.org/

ALCHEMY

Alchemy Lab
http://www.alchemylab.com/
The Alchemy Web Site and Virtual Library
http://www.levity.com/alchemy/
The Hermetic Alchemical Order of the QBLH
http://www.qblh.org/
Hermetic Alchemy
http://www.mension.com/pikealcm.htm
Mensionization Complimentation
http://www.mension.com/#math
White Order of Thule
http://www.thulean.org/

AMERICAN MUSEUM OF MAGIC

American Museum of Magic http://www.marshallmi.org/tours/virtual/magic.html

AMERICAN SOCIETY FOR PSYCHICAL RESEARCH

American Society for Psychical Research
http://www.aspr.com/

AMULETS

Arabic Folk Medicine and Magic: 20th Century Amulets from the Kelsey Museum of Archaeology http://www.si.umich.edu/CHICO/Archives/amulets/home.html

ANCIENT ASTRONAUT SOCIETY

Ancient Astronaut Society (German) http://home.t-online.de/home/astronautik/aas.htm

ANCIENT MYSTERIES

Ancient Mysteries
http://www.ancientweb.com/
Atlantis Rising Online
http://atlantisrising.com/
Mysterious Places
http://www.mysteriousplaces.com/

ANCIENT MYSTICAL ORDER ROSAE CRUCIS (AMORC)

Ancient Mystical Order Rosae Crucis
http://www.amorc.org/
Rosicrucian Park
http://www.rosicrucian.org/

ANCIENT WISDOM

Lemurian Fellowship
http://www.lemurian.org/
Universal Life–The Inner Religion
http://www.universelles-leben.org/

ANGELS

Angel Therapy
http://www.angeltherapy.com/

ANTHROPOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

Anthroposophic Press
http://www.anthropress.org/
Anthroposophical Society in America
http://www.anthroposophy.org/

AROMATHERAPY

Aromatherapy
http://www.naturalland.com/pcv/ar/arom.htm
Aromatherapy Center Home Page
http://www.madison-avenue.com/aroma/aroma01.htm
International Federation of Aromatherapists http://www.ifa.org.au/index.htm
National Association for Holistic Aromatherapy http://www.naha.org/

ARTHURIAN STUDIES

Arthuriana
http://dc.smu.edu/Arthuriana/
Arthurian Legends
http://www.ncsa.uiuc.edu/Edu/RSE/RSEblue/arthur/artidu.html
Arthurian Resources
http://www.users.globalnet.co.uk/~tomgreen/Arthuriana.htm
The Camelot Project
http://www.kingarthur.co.uk/
The Cardiff Arthurian Society
http://www.cf.ac.uk/uwcc/archi/howshall/arthurm/
The Oxford Arthurian Society
http://users.ox.ac.uk/~arthsoc/
Pendragon Society
http://www.pendragon.mcmail.com/index.htm

ASTROLOGY

American Federation of Astrologers http://www.astrologers.com/
Astro Communications Services
http://www.astrocom.com/
The Astrological Journal
http://www.astrologer.com/aanet/journal.html
Astrological Magazine
http://www.personal.vsnl.com/astromag/
Astrology and Numerology (The Basics)
http://astrology-numerology.com/astrology.html
Astrotalk
http://www.astrologysoftware.com/
Free Online Chart Calculation
http://alabe.com/freechart/

Friends of Astrology
http://www.toonland.com/astro/index.html
Online College of Astrology
http://www.astrocollege.com/library/index.html
Project Hindsight (Origins of Ancient Astrology) http://www.projecthindsight%2Dtghp.com/
Sabian Assembly
http:// www.sabian.org/

AUROVILLE

Auroville Homepage
http://www.auroville.org/

AYURVEDA

Ayurvedic Foundations
http://www.ayur.com/
Ayurvedic Health Center
http://www.ayurvedic.org/
Ayurvedic Institute
http://www.ayurveda.com/

BACH CENTRE

Bachových kvìtových esencích (Czech Republic)
http://www.bachovy-esence.cz/
Dr. Edward Bach Centre
http://www.bachcentre.com/
Instituto Dr. Edward Bach (Brazil)
http://www.institutobach.com.br/

BERMUDA TRIANGLE

Bermuda Triangle Information (Navy)
http://www.history.navy.mil/faqs/faq8-1.htm
Bermuda Triangle Theories/Stories http://www.gms.ocps.k12.fl.us/student/bt/bt/home.html

BIG FOOT

Big Foot Central
http://www.suresite.com/wa/b/bigfoot/
Big Foot Fact or Fantasy
http://www.netcomuk.co.uk/~rfthomas/bigfoot.html
The Bigfoot Field Researchers Organization
http://www.moneymaker.org/BFRR/
Big Foot Sightings
http://www.suresite.com/oh/b/buckeyebigfo/
Big Foot Sounds
http://www.angelfire.com/wa/sasquatchsearch/page7.html
North America's Great Ape: Sasquatch http://www.island.net/~johnb/
Sasquatch Society
http://members.aol.com/ParaPsi/OSSS.htm
Shadowland's Big Foot Page
http://www.serve.com/shadows/bf.htm

BIOFEEDBACK

Association for Applied Psychophysiology and Biofeedback
http://www.aapb.org/
Biofeedback Foundation of Europe
http://www.bfe.org/
Biofeedback Network
http://www.biofeedback.net/
Feedback Institute, Ltd. and EEG-Biofeedback Institute
http://www.eeg-bfb-i.cz Society for Neuronal Regulation http://www.snr-jnt.org/

BLAVATSKY, HELENA PETROVNA

Die Theosophische Gesellschaft http://www.theosophie.de/
Blavatsky Net
http://www.blavatsky.net/
Helena Blavatsky
http://www.helena-blavatsky.de/
The Theosophical Society International
http://www.theosociety.org/
Theosophical Society in America
http://www.theosophical.org/
The Theosophical Society in Australia
http://www.austheos.org.au/

BODY WORK

American Chiropractic Association
http://www.amerchiro.org/
American Massage Therapy Association
http://www.amtamassage.org/
Feldenkrais Guild of North America
http://www.feldenkrais.com/
Massage Magazine
http://www.massagemag.com/index.html
Ortho-Bionomy
http://www.ortho-bionomy.org/
Reflexology: A Better Way to Health
http://www.ozemail.com.au/~sharonc/index.html
Reflexology Association of America http://www.reflexology-usa.org/

BUCKLAND, RAYMOND

Ray Buckland's Home Page
http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Workshop/6650/

BUDDHISM, TIBETAN

Kagyu Dharma
http://www.kagyu.com
Tibetan Government in Exile's Official Web Site http://www.tibet.com/

CAO DAI

Cao Dai
http://www.caodai.org/

CHANNELING

Society of Novus Spiritus http://www.sylvia.org/novusdoc.htm

CLAIRVOYANCE

Berkeley Psychic Institute
http://www.berkeleypsychic.com/
The Spiritual Development Resource http://www.gettingthru.org/ascend.html

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

A Course in Miracles
http://www.miraclecenter.org/
Foundation for A Course in Miracles http://facim.org/
Joseph Plan Foundation
http://www.josephplan.org/

CROP CIRCLES

Centre for Crop Circles Studies
http://www.cropcircleconnector.com/anasazi/cccs97.html
The Cereologist
http://www.abel.net.uk/~sayer Crop Circle Central
http://www.paradigmshift.com/
The Crop Circle Connector
http://www.cropcircleconnector.com/anasazi/connect.html
Crop Circle Researchers
http://www.cropcircleresearch.com/resources/

CRYPTOZOOLOGY

The British Columbia Scientific Cryptozoology Club
http://www.ultranet.ca/bcscc/
Centre for Fortean Zoology http://www.eclipse.co.uk/cfz/International Society of Cryptozoology http://www.izoo.org/isc/Loren Coleman's Cryptozoology Page
http://www.lorencoleman.com/
Virtual Institute of Cryptozoology (English Version) http://perso.wanadoo.fr/cryptozoo/welcome.htm

DEMONOLOGY

Demonology
http://www.djmcadam.com/demons.htm

DIVINATION

ANAM (divining)
http://homepage.tinet.ie/~diviner/
Glossary of Divination http://home.rmci.net/idahopyro/2000.htm

DOWSING

American Society of Dowsers http://dowsers.new-hampshire.net/
British Society of Dowsers http://www.dowsers.demon.co.uk/
Canadian Society of Dowsers
http://www.angelfire.com/on/dowsers/
Canadian Society of Dowsing
http://users.uniserve.com/~questers/

DREAMS, STUDY OF

Association for the Study of Dreams http://www.asdreams.org/
Dream Dictionary
http://www.dreamloverinc.com/Dictionary2.htm
DreamGate
http://www.dreamgate.com/
Lucidity Association
http://www.sawka.com/spiritwatch
The Lucidity Institute (Dream Control)
http://www.lucidity.com/
The Quantitative Study of Dreams http://psych.ucsc.edu/dreams/

DRUIDISM

The British Druid Order
http://www.druidorder.demon.co.uk/index.htm

Henge of Keltria
http://www.keltria.org/
The Insular Order of Druids http://www.insular.demon.co.uk/druids.htm
Introduction to Druids
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/2519/druids.html
The Order of Bard, Ovates and Druids http://www.druidry.org/index.shtml

ECKANKAR

ECKANKAR
http://www.eckankar.org/
ECKANKAR i Norge og Danmark
http://www.eckankar.no/
Eckankar in Australia
http://www.eckankar.org.au/
ECKANKAR Netherlands
http://www.eckankar.nl/
ECKANKAR Oesterich
http://members.eunet.at/eckankar/
ECKANKAR in Ontario
http://www.eckankar-ont.org/

ELECTRONIC VOICE PHENOMENON (EVP)

Alphaland Biographies
http://www.alphaland.com/biogs.htm
The American Association of Electronic Voice Phenomena
http://www.hibrichan.com/evpfiles/AAEVP.html
Electronic Voice Phenomenon Internet Center
http://www.hibrichan.com/evpfiles/evp.html
International Ghost Hunters Society
http://www.ghostweb.com/evp.html
Reincarnation Electronic Voice Phenomenon
http://home.earthlink.net/~iwonder/evp.htm
World ITC
http://www.worlditc.org/
Verein für Tonbandstimmenforschung (VfT) e.V.
http://www.vtf.de/

EXORCISM

Exorcism-links
http://alapadre.net/exorcism.html
New Definitions for Exorcisms in the Catholic Church http://www.smh.com.au/news/9901/28/text/national4.html
A Simple Exorcism for Priests and Laity http://www.truecatholic.org/exorcismsimple.htm

FAIRIES

The Cottingley Fairies
http://www.lhup.edu/~dsimanek/cooper.htm
Fairy Encyclopedia
http://www2.cybercities.com/c/cattis/
Fairy Legends (Cornish)
http://www.gandolf.com/cornwall/fairies/index.shtml
Guide to Irish Fairies
http://www.irelandseye.com/animation/intro.html

FALSE MEMORY SYNDROME

False Memory Syndrome Foundation
http://www.fmsfonline.org/

FENG SHUI

American Feng Shui Institute
http://www.amfengshui.com/
Feng Shui Institute of America
http://www.windwater.com/
Feng Shui Institute of New Zealand
http://www.fengshui.co.nz/
Feng Shui Society (England)
http://www.fengshuisociety.org.uk/

FOLKLORE AND MYTHS

American Folklore Society
http://afsnet.org/
Baltic Institute of Folklore
http://haldjas.folklore.ee/BIF/bhome.htm
Lilith Myth
http://ccat.sas.upenn.edu/~humm/Topics/Lilith/

FORTEAN PHENOMENA

Fortean Times
http://www.forteantimes.com/
International Fortean Organization http://research.umbc.edu/~frizzell/info

GEOMANCY

Geomancy-Online
http://www.3dglobe.com/on/Geopathic Information Site Project
http://www.geo.org/
Labyrinthina
http://www.flinet.com/~labyrinthina/index.htm
Mid-Atlantic Geomancy
http://www.geomancy.org/

GHOSTS

The Anomolist
http://www.anomalist.com/
Fate Magazine
http://www.fatemag.com/
Ghost Research Society
http://www.ghostresearch.org

GLOSSOLALIA

Glossolalia and I Corinthians 14 (Lecture)
http://www.apologetique.org/en/rticles/neomontanism/BDG_glossolalia_en.htm
Speaking in Tongues (Religious View) http://www.religioustolerance.org/tongues.htm

GOLDEN DAWN

Alchemy: The Black Art
http://members.aol.com/frateral/alchemy.html
Builders of Adytum
http://www.bota.org
Hermatic Order of the Golden Dawn
http://www.hermeticgoldendawn.org/index.shtml
Hermetic Order of the Morning Star International http://www.Golden-Dawn.org/
London Lodge of the Oxford Golden Dawn Occult Society
http://www.lawbright.com/logdos/
The Order of the Thelemic Golden Dawn http://www.tgd.org/
Ra-Hoor-Khuit Network
http://www.rahoorkhuit.net/
Sovereign and Military Order of the Temple of Jerusalem (International) http://www.osmth.org/index.html

GNOMES

Encyclopedia Mythica
http://www.pantheon.org/
Gnome Encyclopedia
http://www2.cybercities.com/c/cattis/
Gnomes
http://users.erols.com/michaelmyrick/index.html

GNOSTIC STUDIES

Gnostic Alachemical Church of Typhon-Christ
http://www.geocities.com/Area51/Stargate/7770/.
Gnostic Network
http://trufax.org/menu/gnostic.html
Gnostic Order of Christ
http://www.gnostic.net/
The Gnostic Society
http://home.sol.no/~noetic/hotlist/gnosis.htm
Immaculate Heart Servants of Mary http://www.Gnostic.net/ihsm/
The Path of Gnostic Light
http://www.mnsi.net/~miskovic/pglvx.htm

GRAPHOLOGY

The British Academy of Graphology http://www.graphology.co.uk/
The British Institute of Graphologists http://www.britishgraphology.org/

GRIMOIRES

The Grimoires Page
http://www.magitech.com/~grimoires/

HAUNTINGS

H.O.P.E.
http://www.haunt.net/
L.I.F.E. Foundation
http://www.paranormalhelp.com/paranormalhelp/story.htm
Stories of Ghosts and Hauntings http://theshadowlands.net/ghost/

HINDUISM

Hinduism Today Online
http://www.hinduism-today.com/

HOLISTIC

Alphabiotics
http://www.alphabiotics.com/

HOMEOPATHY

British Institute of Homeopathy (Canada)
http://www.homeopathy.com/
Homeopathy: Modern Medicine
http://www.indiaspace.com/homeopathy

Institute for Traditional Medicine
http://www.itmonline.org/
National Center for Homeopathy http://www.healthy.net/nch

HYPNOTISM

Alchemy Institute of Healing
http://www.alchemyinstitute.com/
Holistic World: Hypnotism
http://www.holisticworld.com/Health_and_Wellness/Hypnoforum
http://www.hypnoforum.com/Hypnotherapy
http://www.hypnotherapy.com/

I CHING

Bio-Ching
http://www.teleport.com/~bioching/
Mensionization Complimentation
http://www.mension.com/#ching

KABBALAH

Hermetic Kabbalah
http://www.digital-brilliance.com/kab/Kabbalah Home Page
http://kabbalah-web.org/
Mensionization Complimentation
http://www.mension.com/#kabb
The Online Qabalah
http://www.brokentoy.com/qabalah/
Soul Songs
http://www.soulcongs.com/

KUNDALINI

3HO Organization
http://www.3ho.org/
International Kundalini Yoga Teachers Association http://www.kundaliniyoga.com/
Kundalini Resource Center
http://hmt.com/kundalini/index1.html
SpiritWeb
http://www.spiritweb.org/Spirit/kundalini.html

LOCH NESS MONSTER

Legend of Nessie
http://www.myspace.co.uk/nessie/
Loch Ness Exhibition
http://www.lochness.co.uk/centre/index.html
Loch Ness Fan Club
http://www.lochness.co.uk/fan_club/index.html
Loch Ness Information
http://www.ochaye.co.uk/
Loch Ness Investigation http://www.dickraynor.co.uk/
Loch Ness Mystery
http://ourworld.compuserve.com/homepages/lesj/ness.htm
Loch Ness Politics
http://parascope.com/articles/slips/fs26_1.htm
Nessie on the Net: Official Website http://www.lochness.co.uk/

MAGICAL ORDERS

Servants of the Light
http://servantsofthelight.org/
Servants of the Star and the Snake http://www.wild.au/sss/index.html

MEGALITHS

Andy Burnham's Page
http://easyweb.easynet.co.uk/~aburnham/
The Center for Archaeoastrology http://www.wam.umd.edu/~tlaloc/archastro/cfaindex.html
Gungywamp Society
http://www.goudsward.com/gungywamp/
Megalithic Pages
http://members.aol.com/janbily/index.htm

METAPHYSICAL STUDIES

The Australian College of Metaphysical Studies http://www.ica.org.au/4.html
Banyen Books & Sound
http://www.banyen.com/
College of Metaphysical Studies
http://www.cms.edu/faq.html
The Institute for Advanced Metaphysical Studies http://www.psychicstudy.com/home.html
International Association of Metaphysicians http://www.iammall.com/

MOUNT SHASTA

The Official Website of Mount Shasta http://www.mtshasta.com/homepage.html

MYSTICISM

D.O.M.E., the Inner Guide Meditation Center
http://www.dome-igm.com/
Kabbalah and Jewish Mysticism
http://www.jewfaq.org/kabbalah.htm
The Mysticism Resources Page
http://www.clas.ufl.edu/users/gthursby/mys/
Mysticism in World Religions http://www.digiserve.com/mystic/Temple of the Holy Grail http://www.hometemple.org/

NEAR-DEATH STUDIES

International Association for Near-Death Studies http://www.iands.org/

NECROMANCY

Necromancy Institute
http://www.diginomicon.org/

NEW AGE

Affiliated New Thought Network
http://www.newthought.org/
Altered States of Consciousness
http://www.ascc.org/
Association for Holotropic Breathwork International http://www.breathwork.com/
Association for the Alignment of Past Life Experience http://www.aaple.com/Astral Projection Home Page
http://www.tanega.com/astral/astral.html
Bodhi Tree
http://www.bodhitree.com/
Children of Light
http://www.childrenoflight.com/
Crystals (Healing power)
http://www.netcomuk.co.uk/~asclepus/HealingCrystalsMenu.htm
ESP Test
http://www.sterba.com/esp/
Heaven's Gate
http://www5.zdnet.com/yil/higher/heavensgate/index.html
Horizon Magazine
http://www.horizonsmagazine.com/
I AM America
http://www.iamamerica.com/
In Light Times
http://www.inlighttimes.com/
Martinus Institute of Spiritual Science
http://www.martinus.dk/
The Messenger
http://www.themessenger.cc/
Mind Travel Plus
http://www.execpc.com/~mholmes/index.html
New Age OnLine Australia
http://www.newage.com.au/
New Age Web Works
http://www.newageinfo.com/res/welcome.htm
New Age World Religious and Scientific Research Foundation
http://www.joshuatreevillage.com/
New Dimensions Broadcasting Network http://www.newdimensions.org/
NewHeavenNewEarth
http://www.nhne.com/
The New Times
http://www.newtimes.org/
Nexus
http://www.nexusmagazine.com/
Psi Explorer-Telepathy
http://www.psiexplorer.com/TELEPTH3.HTM
Royal Priest Research
http://www.royalpriest.com/
Synchronicity Foundation
http://www.synchronicity.org/
World Wide Mind Network
http://www.ozemail.com.au/~lisadev/ctsite.htm

OUIJA BOARDS

Online Ouija Board
http://www.math.unh.edu/~black/cgi-bin/spirit.cgi Museum of Talking Boards
http://members.tripod.com/~Ouija_/index.html

PAGANISM

American Vinland Association
http://www.freyasfolk.org/
Angelseaxisce Ealdriht Webpage
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Delphi/6909/
Ar nDraiocht Fein
http://www.adf.org/homepage.shtml
Artemisian Order
http://www.artemisian.org/sanct.html
Asatru Alliance
http://eagle.webpipe.net
Asatru Folk Assembly
http://www.runestone.org/
The Baltic Romuva
http://www.romuva.lt/

The Celtic Traditionalist Order of Druids http://www.goodnet.com/~merlyn/ctodmain.htm
Church of All Worlds
http://www.caw.org/
Church of the Iron Oak http://www.ironoak.org/
Circle Sancturary
http://www.circlesanctuary.org/
Covenant of Unitarian Universalist Pagans http://www.cuups.org/html/intro.html
Covenant of the Goddess
http://www.cog.org/
Crossroads Lyceum/Fellowship of Isis http://members.aol.com/isislyceum/file.html
Green Egg
http://www.greenegg.org/IMBAS
http://www.imbas.org/
The "New" Paganism.org
http://www.paganism.org/
Nova Roma
http://novaroma.org/
The Order of the Crystal Moon
http://members.aol.com/CrystalOrd/CrystalO.htm
Pagan Community Council of Ohio http://www.netwalk.com/~pcco/
Pagan Educational Network
http://www.bloomington.in.us/~pen/welcome.html
The Pagan Federation (Europe)
http://www.paganfed.demon.co.uk/
Rainbow Wind
http://users.aol.com/RainboWind/rbwintr.htm
Ring of Thoth
http://asatru.knotwork.com/troth/index.html
The Stele Home Page of The Omphalos http://www.cs.utk.edu/~mclennan/OM/
White Dove's Message
http://www.whitedovemsg.com/
Widdershins
http://www.widdershins.org/

PALMISTRY

The Palmistry Center
http://www.palmistry.com/

PARAPSYCHOLOGY

Anomalous Cognition Section, University of Amsterdam http://www.psy.uva.nl/pn/res/ANOMALOUSCOGNITION/anamol.shtml
Atlantis Rising
http://www.atlantisrising.com/
Borderland Sciences Research Foundation
http://www.borderlands.com/
Exceptional Human Experience Network
http://www.ehe.org/
Explore Parapsychology
http://www.mdani.demon.co.uk/para/parapsy.htm
Instituto de Estudios Parapsichologicos http://www.healthclub.fortunecity.com/hockey/91/mainieri.html
International Society for the Study of Subtle Energies and Energy Medicine http://www.issseem.org/
International Society of Life Information Science http://wwwsoc.nacsis.ac.jp/islis/
Japanese Society for Parapsychology http://wwwsoc.nacsis.ac.jp/jspp2/
Journal of Scientific Exploration
http://www.jse.com/
Koestler Parapsychology Unit
http://moebius.psy.ed.ac.uk/
MetaScience Foundation
http://www.metascience.com/
The Monroe Institute
http://www.monroeinstitute.org/
Occultopedia
http://members.tripod.com/occultopedia/Paranormal_Psychic.htm
Occult Sciences and Parapsychology http://www.nypl.org/research/chss/grd/resguides/occult.html
Office of Paranormal Investigations http://www.mindreader.com/
Ordo Stellae et Serpente http://members.aol.com/Yechidah37/ossintro.html.
Paranormal Page
http://www.cisnet.com/jimlilko/paranorm.htm
Parapsychology Foundation
http://www.parapsychology.org/
Parapsychology Index (Planet Click)
http://www.planetclick.com/navcat.mpl?categoryID=1000000000008090
Parapsychology Support Group
http://www2.southwind.net/~rmoon/psg/psg.html
The Perrott-Warrick Research Unit
http://phoenix.herts.ac.uk/PWRU/hmpage.html
Princeton Engineering Anomalies Research
http://www.princeton.edu/~pear/index.html
Psychokinesis (PK)
http://www.themystica.com/mystica/articles/p/psychokinesis_pk.html
Rhine Research Center
http://www.rhine.org/
Student Parapsychology Society
http://www.chelt.ac.uk/su/sps/

PSYCHIC RESEARCH

Association for Research and Enlightenment
http://www.are-cayce.com/
Australasian Society for Psychical Research
http://www.ozemail.com.au/~amilani/ufo.html
Barbara Brennan School of Healing http://www.barbarabrennan.com/
Central Premonitions Registry
http://clever.net/yaron/precog/
College of Psychic Studies
http://www.psychic-studies.org.uk/
Consciousness Research Laboratory
http://www.psiresearch.org/
Foundation for Inner Peace
http://www.acim.org/
Mind-Matter Unification Project
http://www.tcm.phy.cam.ac.uk/~bdj10/mm/top.html
Society for Psychical Research http://moebius.psy.ed.ac.uk/~spr/

PSYCHOKINESIS

The RetroPsychoKinesis Project (Experiments Online)
http://www.fourmilab.ch/rpkp/

PYRAMIDS

Egypt State Information Service
http://www.sis.gov.eg/
Nova Online–Pyramids
http://www.pbs.org/wgbh/nova/pyramid/
Pyramids Index
http://www.crystalinks.com/pyramids.html

RANDI, JAMES

James Randi Educational Foundation
http://www.randi.org/

REIKI

American Reiki Master Associtation
http://www.atlantic.net/~arma/
The Canadian Reiki Association
http://www.cordscanada.com/cra/homepage.htm
The International Center for Reiki Training http://www.reiki.org/
The Radiance Technique International Association, Inc. (TRTIA)
http://www.trtia.org
Reiki Pages by Light and Adonea http://www.angelfire.com/az/SpiritMatters/

RELIGIOUS TOLERANCE

Religious Tolerance Organization
http://www.religioustolerance.org/

SANTO DAIME

The Eclectic Center of the Universal Flowing Light http://www.santodaime.org/

SATANISM

The Anton Szandor LaVey Page
http://hem.passagen.se/baphomet/
Australian Satanic Council
http://www.satanic.org.au/
The Church of Satan
http://www.churchofsatan.com/
The First Satanic Church
http://www.satanicchurch.com/
The Official Temple of Set World Wide Web Page http://www.xeper.org/
The Satanic Society
http://www.thesatanicsociety.net/
Stella Tenebrarum
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Parthenon/2026/stella.html
Temple of Set Australia
http://www.viper.net.au/~lwild/infernus.html

SCIENTOLOGY

Church of Scientology
http://www.scientology.org/scn_home.htm

SECRET SOCIETIES

DeMolay International
http://www.demolay.org/home/index.shtml
The Freemasonry Network
http://www.freemasonry.net/
The Grand Lodge of Minnesota Ancient and Accepted Free Masons http://www.mn-mason.org/
Knights Templar
http://www.knightstemplar.org/
Lectorium Rosicrucianum
http:///www.lectoriumrosicrucianum.org/
Official Website of the Ancient and Mystical Order Rosae Crucis
http://www.amorc.org/
The Rosicrucian Archive
http://www.crcsite.org/

SHAMANISM

Ayahuasca Home Page
http://www.ayahuasca.com/
Center for Shamanism and Consciousness Studies
http://www.csacs.org/
Council on Spiritual Practices
http://www.csp.org/
Dance of the Deer Foundation http://www.shamanism.com/
Drugs and Shamanism
http://www.drugtext.org/psychedelics/inglis.htm
The Foundation for Shamanic Studies
http://www.shamanism.org/
The Institute for Contemporary Shamanic Studies http://www.icss.org/
Sacha Runa
http://www.sacharuna.com/
Shamanic Dimensions Network
http://www.shamanicdimensions.net/
Student Pagan Association
http://www.uark.edu/studorg/stpa/index2.html
Where the Eagles Fly http://www.siberianshamanism.com/

SHINTO

International Shinto Foundation
http://shinto.org/menu.html

SKEPTICS

PhiladelphiaAssociation for Critical Thinking http://www.voicenet.com/~eric/phact/Skeptic Dictionary
http://dcn.davis.ca.us/~btcarrol/skeptic/
Skeptics Society
http://www.skeptic.com/

SPIRITUALISM

The Attunement Guild
http://www.attunement.org/
Beneficent Spiritual Center Uniao do Vegetel http://www.udv.org.br/udvpag01-ing.htm
Center for Studies on New Religions (CESNUR)
http://www.cesnur.org/
Church of Revelation
http://www.astralphysicsschool.com/
Community of the Beloved Disciple http://www.emissaryoflight.com/
Ecclesia Gnostica Alba. http://www.newciv.org/ncn/ega.html.
The Emissaries of Divine Light
http://www.emissaries.org/
First Spiritual Temple
http://www.fst.org/
Foundation Church of the New Birth http://www.divinelove.org/
Great School of Natural Science http://school-of-natsci.org/
Greater World Christian Spiritualist Association http://www.greaterworld.com/
Gurdjieff Studies Group
http://www3.mistral.co.uk/gsg/index.html
Harmony Grove Spiritualist Association
http://www2.4dcomm.com/hgchurch/indexm.htm
The Institute of Spiritualist Mediums http://www.ism.org.uk/
Morris Pratt Institute
http://www.morrispratt.org/
National Spiritualist Association of Churches http://www.nsac.org/
New Age On-Line Australia
http://www.newage.com.au./library/spiritualism.html
Noah's Ark Society for Physical Mediumship http://home.clara.net/noahsark/
Society of the Inner Light http://www.innerlight.org.uk/
Spiritualists' National Union
http://www.snu.org.uk/
The Swedenborgian Church
http://www.swedenborg.org/
Universal Spiritualist Association
http://www.spiritualism.org/
White Eagle Lodge
http://www.saintjohns.org/

STIGMATA

The Catholic Encyclopedia: Stigmata
http://www.knight.org/advent/cathen/14294b.htm
Mystical World Wide Web: Stigmata
http://www.mystical-www.co.uk/stigmata.htm
Padre Pio's Stigmata
http://www.padrepio.com/pp-stig.html

SWEDENBORG

General Church of the New Jerusalem
http://www.newchurch.org/
The Swedenborg Association
http://www.swedenborg.net/
Swedenborg Foundation
http://www.swedenborg.com/
The Swedenborg Lending Library And Enquiry Centre Sydney, Australia http://www.swedenborg.com.au/~sllandec/sllandec.html
Swedenborg Society
http://www.swedenborg.org.uk/
Swedenborg Society (Hawaii)
http://www.soc.hawaii.edu/~leonj/leonj/leonpsy/instructor/swedenborg.html

TAOISM

Center for Traditional Taoist Studies
http://www.tao.org/
Confucianism and Taoism Digital Text Resources http://www.human.toyogakuen-u.ac.jp/~acmuller/contaolink.htm
Foundation of Tao http://www.padrak.com/tao/
The Taoist Restoration Society (TRS)
http://www.taorestore.org/
Translation of Lao-tze's "Tao Te Ching" http://www.utm.edu/research/iep/text/tao/tao.htm
Universal Society of the Integral Way http://www.usiw.org/

TAROT

American Tarot Association
http://www.ata-tarot.com/
International Tarot Society
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Ithaca/3772/

THEOSOPHY

Blavatsky Net
http://www.blavatsky.net/
Logia Unidad de la Sección Mexicana de la Sociedad Teosófica http://planet.com.mx/~unidad/index.htm
Magyar Teozófiai Társulat
http://globenet.globenet.hu/teozofia/
Order of Napunsakäs in the West
http://www.wild.au/sss/index.html
Sadra Islamic Philosophy Research Institute (SIPRIn)
http://www.mullasadra.org/
Theosophische Loge "Hermes Trismegistos" http://members.aol.com/HermesTris/index.htm
Theosophy
http://www.spiritweb.org/Spirit/theosophy.html
Theosophical History
http://idt.net/~pdeveney/
Theosophy Library Online
http://theosophy.org/home.htm
Theosophy(Magazine)
http://theosophycompany.org/febcon.html
The Theosophical Society in Iceland (Adyar)
http://www.itn.is/~theosoph/english/index.html
Theosophical Society (International Headquarters)
http://www.theosociety.org/
Theosophical Society-Denmark
http://home6.inet.tele.dk/hansens/TSmenu_index_uk.htm
Theosophical Society in America
http://www.theosophical.org/
Theosophical Society in Australia
http://www.austheos.org.au/
Theosophical Society in New Zealand
http://www.theosophy.org.nz/
The Theosophical Society in Norway
http://www.theosophical.org/norway.html
Theosophical Society in the Philippines http://www.sequel.net/peace/tspweb.htm
Theosophy World
http://www.theosophy.net/tw.html

The United Lodge of Theosophists http://www.ult.org/

THOUGHTFORMS

Healing Thoughtforms
http://www.tsl.org/teachings/h_thoughtforms/thoughtforms.html
Thoughtforms and Spirits
http://www3.sympatico.ca/morgaine/magick6.html

T'AI CHI CH'UAN

Chinese Tai Chi Chuan Association of Canada
http://www.wuji.com/ChineseTaiChiAssociation/International Taoist Tai Chi Society
http://www.taoist.org/
Taoist Tai Chi Society of Western Australia
www.taoist.org.au/

UFOS

The Association for the Study of Anomalous Phenomena http://dialspace.dial.pipex.com/town/square/ee65/research/info6.htm
The Black Vault-Freedom of Information Act Documents
http://www.blackvault.com/Main/Sector_1/sector_1.html
Citizens Against UFO Secrecy
http://caus.org/
Computer UFO Newsletter
http://www.ufo.it/
Fortean Times Online
http://www.forteantimes.com/
Fund for UFO Research
http://www.fufor.org/
International Society for UFO Research http://www.isur.com/
Lia Light
http://www.lialight.com/
The Mutual UFO Network
http://www.rutgers.edu/~mcgrew/MUFON/
National Investigations Committee on UFOs http://www.nicufo.org/
Saucer Smear
http://www.martiansgohome.com/smear/
Scandinavian UFO Information
http://www.ufo.dk/
Turkish UfO and Paranormal Org http://members.tripod.com/~ufolojist/default.html
UFO Cases
http://ourworld.compuserve.com:80/homepages/AndyPage/famousuf.htm
UFO Magazine
http://www.ufomag.com/
UFO Net Global
http://www.v-j-enterprises.com/ufointro.html
UFO Online
http://www.ufo.it/english/ufo1.htm
UFO Text Files
http://www.textfiles.com/ufo/

VAMPIRES

Bram Sroker's Dracula Online (Book)
http://www.literature.org/authors/stoker-bram/dracula/index.html
The Dracula Society
http://www.cix.co.uk/~blackie/the_dracula_soc.html
Highgate Vampire Society
http://home.wxs.nl/~intrvamp/hvsoc.htm
London Vampire Group
http://www.vein-europe.demon.co.uk/welcomep/lvg/lvg.htm
Lord Ruthven Assembly
http://ebbs.english.vt.edu/LRA/
New Jersey Association of Real Vampires http://www.angelfire.com/nj/njarv/main.html
Temple of the Vampire
http://pw1.netcom.com/~temple/home.html
Transylvanian Society of Dracula (Canadian Chapter)
http://www.chebucto.ns.ca/Recreation/TSD/tsdhompg.html
Vampire Directory
http://www.sanguinarius.org/cgi-bin/links/pages/

VOUDOU

Caribbean Religion Center
http://www.nando.net/prof/caribe/caribbean.religions.html
The Temple of Yehwe
http://www.vodou.org/
Voudou (Voodoo) Encyclopedia
http://www.arcana.com/voodoo/
African Dahomean Vodoun
http://www.mamiwata.com/index.html
World History Archives
http://www.hartford-hwp.com/archives/43a/index-i.html

WEREWOLVES

Legend of the Werewolf (Lycanthropy)
http://www.crystalinks.com/werewolves.html
Lycanthrope Resources by and for Lycanthropes http://www.lycanthrope.org:4242/
The Werewolf Page
http://www.rscreations.com/werewolf/#
Werewolf Terms
http://www.geocities.com/RainForest/Vines/1801/glossary.htm

WICCAN (WITCHCRAFT, WHITE MAGICK. . .)

Alliance of Solitary Practitioners http://www.witchcraft.net/ASP/
The Aquarian Tabernacle Church
http://www.AquaTabCh.org/
Burning Times
http://www.amasterpiece.com/BurningTimes/
The Burning Times by Catala
http://www.silvermoon.net/catala/burning/times.htm
Covenant of the Goddess
http://www.cog.org/
Modern Witchcraft
http://www.bloomington.in.us/~pen/mwcraft.html
Religious Rights
http://www.landmarknet.net/wicca/rights.htm
Sword of Dyrnwyn
http://www.tylwythteg.com
The Total Wiccan Resources
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Delphi/5452/
Trinity Magick
http://www.vermontel.net/~trinity/trinity/
Wiccan Church of Canada
http://www.wcc.on.ca/Wiccan Magic
http://www.wiccanmagic.com/
WiccaNet
http://www.wiccanet.com/
Wiccan/Pagan Resources
http://www.pagansunite.com/index.shtml
The Wiccan Pagan Times
http://www.twpt.com/home.htm
The Witches' League for Public Awareness http://www.celticcrow.com/
The Witches' Voice
http://www.witchvox.com/

YETI

Ancient Myths
http://www.otherplane.com/am/amyeti.htm
Yeti
http://www.serve.com/shadows/yeti.htm
Yeti Information
http://home.istar.ca/~yeti/yeti%20info.html

YOGA

Ananda Ashram
http://www.anandaashram.org/
Ananda Church of Self-Realization http://www.ananda.org/
American Yoga Association
http://members.aol.com/amyogaassn/Dhyanyoga Centers
http://www.dyc.org/
Himalayan International Institute of Yoga Science and Philosophy of the U.S.A
http://www.himalayaninstitute.org/
The Institute for Consciousness Research
http://www.stn.net/icr/icr.html
Integral Yoga International http://www.yogaville.org/International Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Centers
http://www.sivananda.org/
International Society for Krishna Consciousness http://www.iskcon.com/Online Yoga Resource
http://www.santosha.com/
Overview of Different Yoga Paths
http://www.spiritweb.org/Spirit/yoga.html
Self-Realization Fellowship
http://www.yogananda-srf.org/
Self-Realization Meditation Healing Centres
http://www.selfrealizationcentres.org.
Sivananda Yoga "Om" Page
http://www.sivananda.org/
Vendanta Society of Southern California
http://www.vedanta.org/
Yasodhara Ashram
http://www.yasodhara.org/
Yoga Research and Education Center
http://www.yrec.org/
Yogananda Self-Realization Fellowship
http://www.yogananda-srf.org/

ZEN BUDDHISM

Zen Buddhism Virtual Library

General Bibliography

A. Square [E. A. Abbott]. Flatland: A Romance of Many Dimensions. 1884. 6th ed. New York: Dover Publications, 1953.

Abayakoon, Cyrus D. F. Astro-Palmistry: Signs and Seals of the Hand. New York: ASI Publishers, 1975.

———. Rahu Pimma [and] Yama Kalaya. Delhi, India, ca. 1957.

Abbott, David P. Behind the Scenes with the Mediums. Chicago: Open Court; London: Kegan Paul, 1909.

———. Spirit Portrait Mystery . . . Its Final Solution. Chicago: Open Court Publishing, 1913.

———. The History of a Strange Case. Chicago: Open Court Publishing, 1908.

———. The Revelations of a Spirit Medium. St. Paul, Minn.: Farrington, 1891. Rev. ed., edited by Harry Price and E. J. Dingwall. London: Kegan Paul, 1922.

Abbott, G. F. Macedonian Folklore. Chicago: Argonaut, Inc., 1909.

Abbott, John. The Keys of Power: A Study of Indian Ritual and Belief. London: Methuen, 1932. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1974.

Abd-ru-shin [Oskar E. Bernhardt]. Awake! Selected Lectures. Vomperberg, Austria: Maria Bernhardt Publishing, n.d.

———. In the Light of Truth. 3 vols. Vomperberg, Austria: Maria Bernhardt Publishing, 1954.

Abelson, Joshua. Jewish Mysticism: An Introduction to Kabbalah. New York: Sepher-Hermon Press, 1981.

Abercromby, John. The Pre- and Proto-historic Finns. 2 vols. N.p., 1898.

Abhedananda, Swami. Doctrine of Karma: A Study in the Philosophy and Practice of Work. Calcutta: Ramakrishna Vedanta Math, 1965.

Abrams, Albert. Human Energy. San Francisco: The Author, 1914.

———. New Concepts in Diagnosis and Treatment. San Francisco: Physico-Clinical, 1922.

Academy of Parapsychology and Medicine. The Dimensions of Healing: A Symposium. Palo Alto, Calif.: The Author, 1972.

Academy of Traditional Chinese Medicine. An Outline of Chinese Acupuncture. New York: Pergamon Press, 1975; Peking: Foreign Language Press, 1975.

Achad, Frater. Ancient Mystical White Brotherhood. 4th edition revised. Great Seal Press Publisher, 1991.

Achad, Frater. XXXI Hymns to the Star Goddess. Chicago: Will Ransom, 1923. Reprint, Kenilworth, Ill.: Ordo Adeptorum Invisiblum, 1983.

Achad, Frater [Charles Stansfeld Jones]. The Anatomy of the Body of God: Being the Supreme Revelation of Cosmic Consciousness. Chicago: Collegium ad Spiritum Sanctum, 1925. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1969.

———. Chalice of Ecstacy. Chicago: Yogi Publication Society, 1923.

———. Liber 31. San Francisco: Level Press, 1974.

———. Q.B.L. or the Bride's Reception. N.p.: The Author, 1922.

Achad, Frater [George Graham Price]. Ancient Mystical White Brotherhood. Lakemont, Ga.: CSA Press, 1971.

———. Melchizedek Truth Principles. Phoenix, Ariz.: Lockhart Research Foundation, 1963.

Achterberg, Jeanne. Imagery in Healing: Shamanism and Modern Medicine. Boston: Shambhala, 1985.

Ackernecht, Erwin H. "Psychopathology, Primitive Medicine and Primitive Culture," Bulletin of the History of Medicine 14, no. 1 (1943): 30–67.

Adams, Evangeline. Astrology for Everyone: What It Is and How It Works. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1931.

———. Astrology: Your Place among the Stars. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1930.

———. Astrology: Your Place in the Sun. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1928.

———. The Bowl of Heaven. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1926.

Adams, Rovert. New Times Network: Groups Centers for Personal Growth. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1982.

Adams, W. H. Davenport. Witch, Warlock, and Magician: Historical Sketches of Magic and Witchcraft in England and Scotland. London and New York, 1889. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1973.

Adamski, George. Cosmic Philosophy. Freeman, S.D.: Pine Hill Press, 1961.

———. Flying Saucer Farewell. 1961. Reprint, Behind the Flying Saucer Mystery. New York: Paperback Library, 1967.

———. Inside the Space Ships. 1955. Reprint, Inside the Flying Saucers. New York: Paperback Library, 1967.

———. Wisdom of the Masters of the Far East. N.p.: Royal Order of Tibet, 1936.

Adare, Viscount. Experiences in Spiritualism with D. D. Home. UK: Privately printed, 1869. Reprint, London: Society for Psychical Research, 1924.

Addey, John. Astrology Reborn. Tempe, Ariz.: American Federation of Astrologers, 1972.

———. Harmonic Anthology. Tempe, Ariz.: American Federation of Astrologers, 1976.

———. Harmonics in Astrology. Romford: L. N. Fowler, 1976.

———. Selected Writings. Tempe, Ariz.: American Federation of Astrologers, 1976.

Adkin, Clare E. Brother Benjamin: A History of the Israelite House of David. Berrien Springs, Mich.: Andrews University Press, 1990.

Adler, Janet. "Arching Backward, and, a Cross-cultural Study of Mysticism as the Context for a Phenomenological Study: Arching Backward," Dissertation Abstracts International 53, no. 9-A (March 1993): 3246.

Adler, Lory, and Richard Dalby. The Dervish of Windsor Castle. London: Bachman & Turner, 1979.

Adler, Margo. Buckland's Complete Book of Witchcraft. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1986.

———. Doors to Other Worlds. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Books, 1993.

———. Drawing Down the Moon: Witches, Druids, Goddess-Worshippers, and Other Pagans in America Today. 2nd ed. Boston: Beacon Press, 1986.

Advances in Parapsychological Research. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland & Co. Inc. Publishers, 1997.

AE [George Russell]. The Candle of Vision. London: Macmillan, 1919. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1965.

———. The Interpreters. New York: Macmillian, 1922.

———]. Homeward: Songs of the Way. Portland, Maine: T. B. Mosher, 1895.

———. Song and Its Foundations. New York: Macmillian, 1932.

Agrippa, Henry. Three Books of Occult Philosophy. London: Chthonois Books, n.d.

Agrippa, Henry Cornelius. The Philosophy of Natural Magic. London, 1651. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1974.

Agrippa von Nettesheim, H. C. Three Books of Occult Philosophy or Magic. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1971.

Aima. Ritual Book of Herbal Spell. Los Angeles: Hermetic Science Center, 1970.

Ainsworth, William Harrison. The Lancashire Witches: A Romance of Pendle Forest. London: George Routledge, 1878.

Akiba ben Joseph Rabbi. The Book of Formation. (Sepher Yetzirah). London: William Rider, 1923.

Akins, W. R., and George Nurnberg. How to Meditate Without Attending a TM Class. New York: Crown, 1976.

Aksakof, A. N. Animisme et Spiritisme. Reprint, Paris, 1985. English ed. as: Animism and Spiritism. Leipzig: Oswald Meats, 1890.

Aksakof, Alexander. A Case of Partial Dematerialization of the Body of a Medium. Boston, 1898.

Al-Arabi, Ibn. Sufis of Andalucia. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1971.

Al-Biruni. The Book of Instruction in the Elements of the Art of Astrology. Translated by R. Ramsey Wright. London: Luzac, 1934.

———. The Chronologies of Ancient Nations. Translated by Edward Sachau. London: W. H. Allen, 1879.

Albertson, Charles C. Death & Afterwards. N.p., 1906. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

Albertus, Frater. The Alchemist of the Rocky Mountains. Salt Lake City, Utah: Paracelsus Research Society, 1976.

———. The Alchemist's Handbook: Manual for Practical Laboratory Alchemy. Rev. ed. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1974.

Albertus Magnus. The Book of Secrets of Albertus Magnus: Also, A Book of the Marvels of the World. Edited by M. R. Best and F. H. Brightman. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1973.

Alcock, James E. Science and Supernature: A Critical Appraisal of Parapsychology. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1990.

Alexander, Marc. Haunted Houses You May Visit. London: Sphere Books, 1982.

Alexander, Patrick P. Spiritualism: A Narrative with a Discussion. Edinburgh, Scotland, 1871.

Alexander, Rolf. The Power of the Mind: The System of Creative Realism. London, 1955.

"Alleged Mediumship of F. Herne." Proceedings of the Society for Psyhical Research 7; Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 10.

"Alleged Mediumship of W. Haxby." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 4.

"Alleged 'Physical Phenomena' in the Family of Morell Theobald." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 2 (1886).

Allegro, John M. The Sacred Mushroom and the Cross. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1970; Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1970.

Allen, A. A. Bound to Lose, Bound to Win. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1970.

Allen, Christopher, and Steuart Campbell. "Flying Saucer from Moore's?" Magonia, 23 (July 1986): 15–18.

Allen, Garth [Donald Bradley]. Taking the Kid Gloves Off Astrology. Tucson, Ariz.: Clancy Publications, 1975.

Allen, James. As a Man Thinketh. 1890. Reprint, Philadelphia: David O. McKay, n.d.

———. By-Ways of Blessedness. Libertyville, Ill.: Sheldon University Press, 1909.

———. From Poverty to Power. New York: R. F. Fenno, 1907.

———. The Life Triumphant. Libertyville, Ill.: Sheldon University Press, 1908.

Allen, M. R. Male Cults and Secret Initiation in Melanesia. Melbourne, Australia: Melbourne University Press, 1967.

Allen, Paul M. A Christian Rosenkreutz Anthology. Blauvelt, N.Y.: Rudolf Steiner Publications, 1968.

Alli, Antero, et al. All Rites Reversed: Ritual Technology for Self-Initiation. Boulder, Colo.: Vigilantero Press, 1987.

Allingham, Cedric [Patrick Moore]. Flying Saucer from Mars. London: Frederick Muller, 1954.

Allison, L. W. "In Memory of Waldemar B. Kaempffert." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 51 (1957).

———. "Obituary: The Reverend C. Drayton Thomas." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 48 (1953).

Allison, Lydia W. "The American Society for Psychical Research: a Brief History." SPR Proceedings 52, no. 1 (1958).

———. Leonard and Soule Experiments in Psychical Research. Boston: Boston Society for Psychical Research, 1929.

———. "Proxy Sittings with Mrs. Leonard." SPR Proceedings 42 (1934).

———. "Telepathy or Association." SPR Proceedings 35 (1941).

Almarez, Anita Ford. Simple Introduction to the Ancient Science of Gnosis. Chicago: Gnostic Association, n.d.

Alper, Frank. Exploring Atlantis. 3 vols. Farmingdale, N.Y.: Coleman Publishing, 1982.

Alvarado, Carlos S. "ESP and Altered States of Consciousness: An Overview of Conceptual and Research Trends," Journal of Parapsychology 62, no. 1 (March 1998): 27–63.

Alvarado, C. S. "The Life and Work of an Italian Psychical Researcher; A Review of Ernesto Bozzano: La Vite a l'Opera by Giovanni Iannuzzo." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 81 (1987): 37.

Aly, Lucile Folse. John G. Neihardt: A Critical Biography. Amsterdam: Radopi, 1977.

Amadou, Robert. La Parapsychologie: Essai historique et critique. Paris: Editions Denoel, 1954.

———. Les Grands Mediums. Paris: Editions Denoel, 1957.

Amber, Reuben. Color Therapy. New York: ASI Publishers, 1980.

Ambrose, G., and G. Newbold. A Handbook of Medical Hypnosis. 4th ed. New York: Macmillan, 1980.

American Rosae Crucis. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

Anandamayi, Ma Sri. Matri Vani. 2 vols. Varnasi, India: Shree Shree Anandamayee Charitable Society, 1977.

———. Sad Vani. Calcutta, India: Shree Shree Anandamayi Charitable Society, 1981.

Anandamurti, Shrii Shrii. The Great Universe: Discourses on Society. Los Altos, Calif.: Ananda Marga Publishers, 1971.

Anandamurti, Shrii [P.R. Sarkar]. The Spiritual Philosophy of Shrii Anandamurti. Denver: Ananda Marga Publications, 1981.

Ananthanarayan, N. From Man to God-Man. New Delhi: The Author, 1970.

Anderson, Margaret L. "The Use of Fantasy in Testing for Extrasensory Perception." Journal of the ASPR, 60 (1966): 150.

Anderson, Margaret L., and R. A. McConnell. "Fantasy Testing for ESP in a Fourth and Fifth Grade Class." Journal of Psychology 52 (1961): 491.

Anderson, Mary. Palmistry—Your Destiny In Your Hands. London: Aquarian Press, 1973.

Anderson, R. I. "The Mediumship of Geraldine Cummins." Theta 11, no. 3 (Autumn 1983).

Anderson, Roger I. "Cahagnet's Contribution to Psychical Research." Theta 12, no. 4 (1983): 74.

———. "Channeling." Journal of Religion and Psychical Research 19 (1988): 5.

———. "Contemporary Survival Research: A Critical Review." Parapsychology Review 12 (1981): 5.

———. "Reincarnation: Can Christianity Accommodate It?" Journal of Religion and Psychical Research 9 (1985): 189.

———. "Swedenborg on the Modus Operandi of Spirit Communication." Parapsychology Review 13 (1982): 6.

Anderson, Walter Truett. The Upstart Spring: Esalen & the American Awakening. Reading, Mass.: Addison-Wesley, 1983.

Anderson, Roger I. "The Watseka Wonder: A Critical Re-evaluation." Theta, 8, no. 4 (1980).

Andrade, Hernani Guimàraes. A material psi. Matao: Clarim, 1972.

———. Novos rumos à experimentacao espiritica. São Paulo: Livraria Batuira, 1960.

———. Parapsicologia experimental. São Paulo: Calvario, 1967.

———. A teorià corpuscular do espirito. São Paulo: The Author, 1958.

Andrews, Edward Deming. The People Called Shakers: A Search for the Perfect Society. New York: Oxford University Press, 1953.

Andrews, H. T. An Introduction to the Apocryphal Books of the Old and New Testament. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Baker Book House, 1964.

Andrews, Lynn V. Star Woman. New York: Warner Books, 1986.

Andrews, Richard. The Truth behind the Legends of Mount Shasta. New York: Carlton Press, 1976.

Anesaki, Masaharu. History of Japanese Religion. London: Kegan Paul, 1930.

Angeles, Peter A. The Problem of God; A Short Introduction. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1981.

Angoff, Allan. Eileen Garrett and the World Beyond the Senses. New York: William Morrow, 1974.

Angoff, Allan, ed. Parapsychology and the Sciences. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1972.

———. Parapsychology Today: A Geographic View. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1971.

———. The Psychic Force: Essays in Modern Psychical Research from the International Journal of Parapsychology. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1970.

Angoff, Allan, and Betty Shapin, eds. Proceedings of an International Conference: A Century of Psychical Research. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1971.

Angoff, Allan, and Diana Barth, eds. Parapsychology and Anthropology. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1973.

Angstadt, L. Jean, and Rhea White. "Student Performance in Two Classroom GESP Experiment with Two Students-Agents Acting Simultaneously." Journal of the ASPR 57 (1963): 32.

Angus, Samuel. The Mystery Religions and Christianity. London: John Murray, 1928. Reprint, New York: Dover, 1975.

Anisimov, A. F. "Cosmological Concept of the Peoples of the North." In Studies in Siberian Shamanism. Edited by Henry N. Michael. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1963.

———. "The Shaman's Tent of the Evenks and the Origin of the Shamanistic Rite." In Studies in Siberian Shamanism. Edited by Henry N. Michael. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1963.

Anson, Jay. The Amityville Horror: A True Story. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice Hall, 1977. Reprint, New York: Pocket Books, 1991.

Anson, Peter F. Bishops at Large. London: Faber & Faber, 1965.

Anthony, Dick, Bruce Ecker, and Ken Wilber. Spiritual Choices: The Problem of Recognizing Authentic Paths to Inner Transformation. New York: Paragon House Publishers, 1987.

Apostol, Andrei. "Dowsing and Earthquake Prediction," PSI Research 4, no. 3–4 (September–December 1985): 212–218.

———. "Dowsing in Geology: An Experience from Romania," PSI Research 4, no. 3–4 (September–December 1985): 199–211.

Apuleius. The Golden Ass. Translated by Adlington. London: William Heineman, 1935.

Aquino, Michael A. The Crystal Tablet of Set. San Francisco: Temple of Set, 1985.

———. Temple of Set Reading List XIX. San Francisco: Temple of Set, 1984.

Aranza, Jacob. Backward Masking Unmasked. Shreveport, La.: Huntington House, 1983.

Arden, Harvey. Dreamkeepers: A Spirit-Journey into Australia. New York: HarperCollins, 1994.

Arden, Nickey. The Spirits Speak: One Woman's Journey into the African Spirit World of the Sangomas. New York: Henry Holt, 1996.

Armitage, Harold. The Haunted and the Haunters by Lord Lytton, With an Introduction; and an Account of the Haunted House at Willington. London: Simpkin, Marshall, 1925.

Armor, Reginald C. Ernest Holmes: The Man. Los Angeles: Science of Mind Publications, 1977.

Arnold, Kenneth, and Ray Palmer. The Coming of the Saucers: A Documentary Report on Sky Objects that Have Mystified the World. Boise, Idaho; Amherst, Wisc.: The Authors, 1952.

Arnold, Larry, and Sandy Nevius. The Reiki Handbook. Harrisburg, Pa.: PSI Press, 1982.

Arnold, Paul. Histoire des Rose-Crois. Paris, 1934.

Arrowsmith, Nancy, and George Moorse. A Field Guide to the Little People. New York: Wallaby Books, 1977.

Artemidorus. The Interpretation of Dreams: Oneirocritica. Translated by Robert White. Park Ridge, N.J.: Noyes Press, 1975.

Arundale, Francesca. Idea of Rebirth Including a Translation of an Essay on Reincarnation by Karl Heckl. N.p., 1890. Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

Arundale, George S. Fragment of Autobiography. Adyar, Madras, India: Kalaksetra, 1940.

———. Kundalini: An Occult Experience. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1938.

———. Lotus Fire. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1939.

———. Thoughts on "At the Feet of the Master." Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1919.

———. You. Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1938. Reprint, Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1973.

Arya, Ushbarbudh. God. Honesdale, Pa.: Himalayan International Institute, 1979.

Ashburner, John. Philosophy of Animal Magnetism and Spiritualism. London, 1867.

Ashcroft-Nowicki, Dolores. Building a Temple. Quigleys of Jersey, UK: SOL Publications, 1974.

———. First Steps in Ritual. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1982.

———. Highways of the Mind. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1987.

———. The Shining Paths. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1983.

———. The Tree of Ecstacy: An Advanced Manual of Sexual Magic. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1991.

Ashdown, A. J. "The Communigraph and Other Early Psychic Aids for Communications." The Psychic Researcher supplements 2 and 3 (1975).

Ashe, Geoffrey. The Quest for Arthur's Britain. London, 1968.

Asher, Maxine. Ancient Energy: Key to the Universe. New York: Harper & Row, 1979.

Ashley, Leonard R. The Complete Book of the Devil's Disciples. New York: Barricade Books, Inc., 1996.

Ashley, Mike. Who's Who in Horror and Fantasy Fiction. London: Elm Tree Books, 1977.

Ashton, John. The Devil in Britain and America. London, 1896. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1974.

Assagioli, Roberto. The Act of Will. New York: Viking Penguin, 1973.

———. Parapsychological Faculties and Psychological Disturbances. London: Medical Society for Study of Radiesthesia, 1958.

———. Psychosynthesis: A Manual of Principles and Techniques. Rev. ed. New York: Viking/Penguin, 1971.

Astrological Research & Reference Encyclopedia. 2 vols. Los Angeles: Church of Light, 1972.

Astronomy and Elementary Philosophy, Translated from the Latin of Placidus de Titus. London: W. Justins, 1789.

Atack, Jon. A Piece of Blue Sky: Scientology, Dianetics, and L. Ron Hubbard Exposed. New York: Lyle Stuart, 1990.

Atkins, John. Arthur Koestler. N.p., 1956.

Atkins, Susan, with Bob Slosser. Child of Satan, Child of God. Plainfield, N.J.: Logos International, 1977. Reprint, London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1978.

Atkinson, Jane Monnig. The Art and Politics of Wana Shamanship. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1989.

Atkinson, R. C. J. Stonehenge. London: Pelican Books, 1960.

Atkinson, William Walker. The Law of New Thought: A Study of Fundamental Principles and Their Application. Chicago: Psychic Research, 1902.

———. The New Thought: Its History and Principles; or, the Message of New Thought. Holyoke, Mass.: Elizabeth Towne, 1915.

———. Thought Force: In Business and Everyday Life. 1900. 18th ed. New York: Sydney Flower, 1903.

Atreya, B. L. An Introduction to Parapsychology. Banaras, India: International Standard Publications, 1957.

Attar, Farid al-Din. Muslim Saints and Mystics. Translated by A. J. Arberry. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1966.

Atwater, P. M. H. Coming Back to Life: The After Effects of the Near-death Experience. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1988.

———. "The Magic of Perelandra." East–West (August 1986).

Atwood, Mary Anne. A Suggestive Inquiry Into the Hermetic Mystery. London, 1850. Rev. ed. Belfast, 1918. Reprint, New York: Julian Press, 1960; New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1976.

Aubourg, Michel. Haiti prehistorique. Port-au-Prince, Haiti: Editiones Panorama, n.d. [1966?].

———. Le Mouvement folklorique en Haiti. Port-au-Prince, Haiti: Imprimerie de l'Etat, 1952.

Aubrun, R. G. Péladan. Paris: Sansot, 1904.

Augustine of Hippo. Confessions of St. Augustine. Edited by Francis J. Sheed. New York: Sheed, 1943.

Augustine, Saint. Immortality of the Soul. Reprinted in the Fathers of the Church series, vol. 4. Washington, D.C.: Catholic University of America Press, 1973.

Augustine, St. Confessions. N.p., n.d.

Aurobindo, Sri. Sri Aurobindo Centenary Library. 50 vols. Pondicherry, India: Sri Aurobindo Library Press, 1970–72.

Auroville. Pondicherry, India: Sri Auroville Society, n.d.

Austin, Mary. Acupuncture Therapy. 2nd ed. New York: ASI Publishers, 1972.

Autobiography of Mr. Bradlaugh: A Page of His Life. London: Watts, 1873.

Automobile Association of Great Britain. Haunts and Hauntings. Basingstoke, England: Publications Division of the Association, 1974.

Avalon, Arthur [Sir John Woodroffe]. The Garland of Letters: Studies in the Mantra Shastra. 1922. Reprint, Madras: Ganesh, 1963.

———. The Great Liberation (Mahanirvana Tantra). Madras, India: Ganesh, 1927.

———. Hymns to the Goddess. London: Luzac, 1913.

———. The Serpent Power. 1918. Reprint, Madras, India: Ganesh, 1924; 1950; New York: Dover Publications, 1974.

Avalon, Arthur. Shakti and Shakta. 3d ed. Madras, India: Ganesh, 1929.

———. Tantra of the Great Liberation (Mahanirvana Tantra). London: Luzac, 1913. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1972.

Aylesworth, Thomas. Astrology and Foretelling the Future; A Concise Guide. Danbury, Conn.: Watts, 1973.

Baba, Meher. Discourses. Myrtle Beach, S.C.: Sheriar Press, 1987.

———. God Speaks. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1973.

Bach, Edward. Heal Thyself. London: C. W. Daniel, 1931.

———. The Twelve Healers and Other Remedies: A Simple Herbal Treatment. 3d ed. London: C. W. Daniel, 1936.

———. Illusions: The Adventures of a Reluctant Messiah. New York: Delacorte Press, 1977.

———. Jonathan Livingston Seagull. New York: Macmillan, 1970.

———. One: A Novel. New York: William Morrow, 1988.

Bach, Edward, and F. J. Wheeler. The Bach Flower Remedies. New Canaan, Conn.: Keats, 1977.

Bäckman, Louise, and Äke Hultkrantz. Studies in Lapp Shamanism. Stockholm Studies in Comparative Religion, vol. 16. Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell International, 1978.

Backster, Cleve. "Evidence of a Primary Perception in Plant Life." International Journal of Parapsychology 10 (1968): 329–48.

Bacon, Roger. Roger Bacon's Philosophy of Nature: A Critical Edition. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1983.

———. The Mirror of Alchemy. London, 1597. Reprint, Los Angeles: Press of the Pegacycle Lady, 1975.

———. The Opus Majus of Roger Bacon. 2 vols. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1928.

Baer, Hans A. The Black Spiritual Movement: A Religious Response to Racism. Knoxville, Tenn.: University of Tennessee Press, 1984.

———. "Black Spiritual Israelites in a Small Southern City." Southern Quarterly 23, no. 3 (1985): 103–24.

Baer, Randall, and Vicki Baer. The Crystal Connection: A Guidebook for Personal and Planetary Ascension. New York: Harper & Row, 1986.

Baggally, W. W. "Some Sittings with Carancini." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 14 (June 1910). Reprinted in Everard Feilding, Sittings with Eusapio Palladino and Other Studies. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1963.

Baggally, W. W., Everard Fielding, and Hereward Carrington. "Report on a Series of Sittings with Eusapia Palladino." Proceedingsof the Society for Psychical Research, 23 (1909): 309.

Bagger, E. S. Psycho-Graphology. London; New York: G. P. Putnam's & Sons, 1924.

Bagnall, Oscar. The Origin and Properties of the Human Aura. London, 1937. Rev. ed. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1970.

Bahadur, Krishna Prakash. The Wisdom of Saankhya. New Delhi, India: Sterling, 1978.

Bahr, Donald M., Juan Gregorio, et al. Piman Shamanism and Staying Sickness (Kácim Múmkidag). Tucson, Ariz.: University of Arizona Press, 1974.

Bailey, Alice A. The Unfinished Autobiography of Alice A. Bailey. New York: Lucis Publishing, 1951.

———. Works. New York: Lucis Publishing, New York, various dates.

Bailey, D. E. Thoughts from the Inner Life. Boston: Colby & Rich, 1886.

Bailey, Wilson G. No, Not Dead, They Live. Camden, N.J.: I. F. Huntzinger, 1923.

Bainbridge, William S. "Biorhythms: Evaluating a Pseudoscience." Skeptical Inquirer (spring/summer 1978): 41–56.

Bainbridge, William Sims, and Daniel H. Jackson. "The Rise and Fall of Transcendental Meditation." In The Future of Religion. Edited by Rodney Stark and William Sims Bainbridge. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1985.

Baird, A. T. Richard Hodgson: The Story of a Psychical Researcher and His Times. London: Psychic Press, 1949.

Baird, Alexander T. One Hundred Cases for Survival After Death. New York: Bernard Ackerman, 1944.

Baird, George W. Great American Masons. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing, 1992.

Baker, John R. "The Old Woman and Her Gifts: Pharmacological Bases of the Chumash Use of Datura," Curare 17, no. 2 (1994): 253–276.

Baldrick, Chris. In Frankenstein's Shadow: Myth, Monstrosity, and Nineteenth-Century Writing. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1987.

Balfour, Arthur James. Chapters of Autobiography. London: Cassell, 1930.

———. The Foundations of Belief. 8th ed. London: Longmans, Green, 1906.

———. Science, Religions, and Reality. London: Sheldon Press, 1925.

———. Theism and Humanism. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1915.

Balfour, G. W. "A Study of the Psychological Aspects of Mrs. Willett's Mediumship." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 43 (1935): 43.

Balfour, Gerald W. "The Ear of Dionysius: Further Scripts Affording Evidence of Personal Survival." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 29, no. 74 (1916–18).

———. "Some Recent Scripts Affording Evidence of Personal Survival." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 27, no. 69 (1915).

Balick, Michael J., Elaine Elisabetsky, and Sarah A. Laird, eds. Medicinal Resources of the Tropical Forest. Biodiversity and its Importance to Human Health. New York: Columbia University Press, 1996.

Balleline, G. R. Past Finding Out: The Tragic Story of Joanna Southcott and Her Successors. New York: Macmillan, 1957.

Ballou, Adin. Autobiography of Adin Ballou, 1803–1890. Lowell, Mass.: Vox Populi Press, 1896. Reprint, Philadelphia: Porcupine Press, 1975.

———. Practical Christian Socialism. New York: Fowler and Wells, 1854. Reprint, New York: AMS Press, 1974.

———. Primitive Christianity and its Corruptions. 3 vols. 1870–1900.

Balyoz, Harold. Three Remarkable Women. Flagstaff, Ariz.: Altai Publishers, 1986.

Balyuzi, H. M. The Bab: The Herald of the Day of Days. Oxford: G. Ronald, 1973.

Balzer, Marjorie Mandelstam. "Doctors or Deceivers? The Siberian Khanty Shaman and Soviet Medicine." In The Anthropology of Medicine. From Culture to Method. Edited by Lola Romanucci-Ross, Daniel Moerman, and Laurence Tancredi. South Hadley, Mass.: Bergin & Garvey Publishers, 1983.

Balzer, Marjorie Mandelstam, ed. Shamanic Worlds. Rituals and Lore of Siberia and Central Asia. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharp, 1997.

———. Shamanism: Soviet Studies of Traditional Religion in Siberia and Central Asia. Translated from Russian. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, 1990.

Bander, Peter. Carry On Talking: How Dead are the Voices? Colin Smythe, 1972. Reprinted as Voices from the Tapes: Recordings from the Other World. New York: Drake Publishers, 1973.

———. The Prophecies of St. Malachy. Gerrards Cross, England: Colin Smythe, 1969.

Banerjee, H. N., and W. C. Oursler. Lives Unlimited: Reincarnation East and West. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1974.

[Bangs Sisters]. The Bangs Sisters' Manifesto to the World. Chicago, 1909.

Baraduc, Hippolyte. L'Âme humaine. (The Human Soul). Paris, 1896.

———. Les Vibrations de la Vitalité Humaine. Paris, 1904.

Barbanell, Maurice. Across the Gulf. N.p., 1940.

———. He Walks in Two Worlds: The Story of John Myers, Psychic Photographer, Healer and Philanthropist. London: n.p., 1964.

———. Parish the Healer. London: Psychic Book Club, 1938.

———. Spiritualism Today. London: Herbert Jenkins, 1969.

———. This Is Spiritualism. London: Herbert Jenkins, 1959.

———. The Trumpet Shall Sound. London, Psychic Press, 1933.

———. Where There is a Will. N.p., 1962.

Barbanell, Sylvia, ed. Silver Birch Speak. . . . London: Psychic Book Club, 1949.

Barbault, Armand. Gold of a Thousand Mornings. London: Neville Spearman, 1975.

Barbault, André. De la Psychanalyses de l'Astrologie. Paris: Editions du Seuil, 1961.

———. Les Astres et l'historie. Paris: J.-J. Pauvert, 1967.

———. Traité pratique d'Astrologie. Paris, 1961.

Barber, Paul. Vampires, Burial, & Death: Folklore & Reality. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1988.

Barber, Richard, and Anne Riches. A Dictionary of Fabulous Beasts. New York: Walker, 1971.

Barber, Theodore Zenophon. Hypnosis: A Scientific Approach. New York: Psychological Dimensions, 1976.

Barclay, Glen St. John. Anatomy of Horror: The Masters of Occult Fiction. London: Weidenfeld & Nicolson, 1978.

Barclay, Glen. Mind over Matter: Beyond the Bounds of Nature. London: Arthur Barker, 1973. Reprint, London: Pan, 1975.

Barett, Francis. The Magus. London: Lackington, Allen, 1801. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1967.

Barrett, S. A. "Pomo Bear Doctors," University of California Publications in American Archaeology and Ethnology, Vol. 12, no. 11. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1917.

———. "Ceremonies of the Pomo Indians." University of California Publications in American Archaeology and Ethnology. Vol. 12. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1917.

Barham, A. "Dr. W. J. Crawford: His Work and Legacy in Psychokinesis." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 55 (1988): 113.

Baring-Gould, S. A Book of Folk-Lore. London, [1913].

———. Curiosities of Olden Times. London: J. T. Hayes, 1869.

———. Devonshire Characters and Strange Events. Rev. ed., London: John Lane, 1926.

———. "The Terrestrial Paradise." In Curious Myths of the Middle Ages. 1872. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1967.

Baring-Gould, Sabine. The Book of Were-Wolves. London, 1865. Reprint, New York: Causeway Books, 1973; Detroit: Omnigraphics, Inc., 1989.

Barkas, Thomas P. Outlines of Ten Years' Investigations into the Phenomena of Modern Spiritualism. London, 1862.

Barker, A. T. Collected Writings. 14 vols. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1950–87.

Barker, A. Trevor, ed. The Mahatma Letters to A. P. Sennett from the Mahatams M. & K.H. London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1923. 3rd rev. ed. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1962.

Barker, Eileen. The Making of a Moonie. Oxford, England: Basil Blackwell, 1984.

———. New Religious Movements: A Practical Introduction. London: HMSO, 1989.

Barker, Elsa. War Letters from the Living Dead Man. London: W. Rider & Son, 1915.

Barker, Gray. The Book of Adamski. Clarksburg, W. Va.: Saucerian Publications, 1965.

———. Gray Barker at Giant Rock. Clarksburg, W. Va.: Saucerian Publications, 1976.

———. The Silver Bridge. Clarksburg, W. Va.: Saucerian Books, 1970.

———. The Strange Case of Dr. M. K. Jessup. Clarksburg, W. Va.: Saucerian Books, 1962.

———. They Knew Too Much About Flying Saucers. New York: University Books, 1956.

Barker, Gray, ed. Bender Mystery Confirmed. Clarksburg, W. Va.: Saucerian Books, 1962.

———. MIB: The Secret Terror Among Us. Jane Lew, W. Va.: New Age Press, 1983.

———. They Knew Too Much about Flying Saucers. Clarksburg, W. Va.: Saucerian Press, 1962. Reprint, New York: Tower, 1967.

Barker, J. C. Scared to Death; An Examination of Fear, Its Causes and Effects. London: Muller, 1958. Reprint, New York: Dell, 1969.

Barlow, Fred, and W. Rampling Rose. "Report on an Investigation into Spirit-Photography." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 41 (1933): 121–38.

Barlow, Sita, et al. Sri Swami Satchidananda: Apostle of Peace. Yogaville, Va.: Integral Yoga Publications, 1986.

Barnard, G. William. "William James and the Origins of Mystical Experience." In The Innate Capacity: Mysticism, Psychology, and Philosophy. New York: Oxford University Press, 1998.

Barnes, Arthur Stapylton. The Holy Shroud of Turin. London: Burns Oates & Washbourne, 1934.

Barnes, Michael. Draumkvaede. Oslo, 1974.

Baroja, Julio Caro. The World of the Witches. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1961.

Barr, Sir James. Abrams' Methods of Diagnosis and Treatment. London, 1925.

Barrat, Rodford. Elements of Numerology. UK: Element Books, Inc., 1997.

Barrett, Francis. The Lives of the Alchemystical Philosophers. 1815. Rev. ed. as Alchemists Through the Ages. Blauvelt, N.Y.: Rudolf Steiner Publications, 1970.

———. The Magus: A Complete System of Occult Philosophy. London, 1801. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1967.

Barrett, Harrison D. The Life and Work of Cora L. V. Richmond. Chicago: Hack & Anderson Printers, 1895.

Barrett, J. O. The Spiritual Pilgrim: A Biography of James M. Peebles. Boston: William White, 1872.

Barrett, Sir William F. Death-Bed Visions. London: Methuen, 1926. Reprint, Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1986.

———. The Divining Rod. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1968.

———. On the Threshold of a New World. London: Kegan Paul, 1908. Revised as On the Threshold of the Unseen: An Examination of the Phenomena of Spiritualism and of the Evidence for Survival After Death. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1971.

———. On the Threshold of the Unseen (1917). Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co. 1998.

———. "Poltergeists, Old and New." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 25, no. 64 (August 1911).

———. Psychical Research. New York: H. Holt, [1911].

———. "Some Reminiscences of Fifty Years of Psychical Research," Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 34 (1924).

Barrett, William, and Theodore Besterman. The Divining Rod: An Experimental and Psychological Investigation. London, 1926. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1968.

Barring-Gould, Sabine. Curiosities of Olden Times. London, J. T. Hayes, 1895.

———. Curious Myths of the Middle Ages. 1866–68. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1967.

Barrington, Mary Rose. "The Kluski Hands," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 59, no. 834 (January 1994): 347-351.

Barrows, David Prescott. The Ethno-Botany of the Coahuilla Indians of Southern California. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1900.

Barruel, Augustin. Memoirs Illustrating the History of Jacobinism. 4 vols., London, 1797.

Barstow, Anne Llewellyn. Joan of Arc: Heretic, Mystic, Shaman. Lewiston, N.Y.: Edwin Mellen Press, 1986.

Barter, J. P. Towards Subud. London, 1967.

Bartholin, Thomas. Acta Medica & Philosophical Hafniensia Ann. 1671 & 1672. Copenhagen, 1673.

Bartlett, George C. The Salem Seer. New York, 1891.

Bartlett, Robert. Trial by Fire and Water: The Medieval Judicial Order. Oxford: Clarendon, 1988.

Bartley, William Warren. Werner Erhard: The Transformation of a Man, the Founding of est. New York: C. N. Potter, 1978.

Barton, Blanche. The Church of Satan. Hell's Kitchen Productions, Inc., 1990.

Barton, Blanche. The Secret Life of a Satanist: The Authorized Biography of Anton LaVey. Los Angeles: Feral House, 1990.

Barton, Michael X. Rainbow City and The Inner Earth Story. Los Angeles: Futura Press, 1960. Reprint, Clarksburg, W. Va.: Saucerian Press, 1969.

Barzini, Luigi. Nel mondo dei Misteri con Eusapia Palladino. Milan, 1907.

Basgöz, Ilhan. "Dream Motif in Turkish Folk Stories and Shamanistic Initiation," Asian Folklore Studies, no. 1 (1966): 1–18.

Basham, Don. A Manual for Spiritual Warfare. Greensburg, Pa.: Manna Books, 1974.

Bashir, Mir. Your Past, Your Present, and Your Future Through the Art of Hand Analysis. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1974.

Basil, Robert, ed. Not Necessarily the New Age. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1988.

Baskin, Wade. Dictionary of Satanism. New York: Philosophical Library, 1972.

Basset, W. Wanderships. Chicago, 1917.

Bassett, F. S. Legends and Traditions of the Sea and Sailors. Chicago & New York: Belford, Clarke, 1886.

Bastide, Roger. The African Religions of Brazil. Baltimore, Md.: Johns Hopkins Press, 1978.

Bataille, Dr. [Gabriel Jogand-Pagès]. Le Diable du XIXe Siècle. Paris, 1892.

———. Memoire à l' Adresse des Members du Congrès de Trent. N.p., 1897.

Bataille, Georges. Procès de Gilles de Rais. Paris, 1959.

Batcheldor, Kenneth. "Contributions to the Theory of PK Induction from Sitter-Group Work." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 78 (1984).

———. "Notes on the Elusiveness Problem in Relation to a Radical View of Paranormality." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 88 (April 1994).

———. "Report on a Case of Table-Levitation and Associated Phenomena." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 43 (1966).

Batcheldor, Kenneth, and D. W. Hunt. "Some Experiments in Psychokinesis." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 43 (1966).

Bates, Paul A., ed. Faust: Sources, Works, Criticism. New York: Harcourt, Brace, and World, 1968.

Battersby, H. F. Prevost. Man Outside Himself. London, 1942. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1969.

Baudelaire, Charles. Artificial Paradise: On Hashish & Wine as Means of Expanding Individuality. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1971.

Bauer, Eberhard. "Criticism and Controversies in Parapsychology." European Journal of Parapsychology 5 (1984): 141.

Baugnet, Michael. Introduction to Primum Mobile. . . . by Placidus de Titis. Translated by John Cooper. London: Davis and Dickson, 1814.

Baumann, Elwood David. Bigfoot: America's Abominable Snowman. New York: Franklin Watts, 1976. Reprint, New York: Dell, 1976.

Baumard, Claire. Leon Denis intime. N.p., n.d.

Baumbach, Emily. Michael's Cast of Characters. Orinda, Calif.: Affinity Press, 1989.

Baur, F. N. A Short and Faithful Description of the Remarkable Occurrences and . . . Conduct of . . . Prince Alexander of Hohenlohe. N.p., 1822.

Bauval, Robert, and Adrian Gilbert. The Orion Mystery. London: Heinemann, 1994.

Baxter, Robert. A Narrative of Facts Characterising the Supernatural Manifestations in the Members of Mr. Irving's Congregation, and Other Individuals in England and Scotland, and formerly in the Writer Himself. London, 1833.

Bayless, Raymond. Voices From Beyond. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1975.

Baynes, C. F., and R. Wilhelm, trans. The I Ching or Book of Changes. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1967.

Beal, James B. "The Formerly 'Supernatural': Electrical and Psi Fields in Medical Anthropology." In Extrasensory Ecology: Parapsychology & Anthropology, edited by E. K. Long. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1977.

Beard, Charles R. Lucks and Talismans: A Chapter of Popular Superstition. London: Sampson, Low, 1934. Reprint, New York: Blom, 1972.

Beard, George Miller. The Study of Trance, Muscle Reading and Allied Nervous Phenomena. New York: n.p., 1882.

Beard, Paul. Survival of Death: For and Against. London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1966. Reprint, London: Psychic Press, 1972.

Beasley, Norman. The Cross and the Crown. Boston: Little, Brown, 1952.

Beasse, Pierre. A New and Rational Treatise of Dowsing according to the methods of Physical Radiesthesia. France, 1941.

Beaumont, John. An Historical, Physiological & Theological Treatise of Spirits, Apparitions, Witchcraft & Other Magical Practices. London, 1750.

Becker, Carl B. "Extrasensory Perception, Near-Death Experiences, and the Limits of Scientific Knowledge," Journal of Near-Death Studies 9, no. 1 (Fall 1990): 11–20.

Becker, Robert O. Cross Currents. New York: Quill, 1985.

———. The Body Electric. Los Angeles: J. P. Tarcher, 1990. Distributed by St. Martin's Press.

Bedell, Clyde. Concordex to the URANTIA Book. Leguna Hills, Calif.: The Author, 1980.

Beebe, Tom. Who's Who in New Thought. Lakemount, Ga.: CSA Press, 1977.

Begg, Paul. Into Thin Air: People Who Disappear. North Pomfret, Vt.: David & Charles, 1979.

"Behind the Scenes of Oki Yoga." East West Journal 15, no. 9 (September 1985).

Behringer, Wolfgang. Witchcraft Persecutions in Bavaria. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1998.

Belden, L. W. Somnambulism: The Extraordinary Case of J. C. Rider, the Springfield Somnambulist. London, 1834.

Belfage, Sally. Flowers of Emptiness. New York: Dial Press, 1981.

Bell, Charles Bailey, and Harriet Parks Miller. Bell Witch of Tennessee. Reprint, Nashville, Tenn.: C. Elder, 1972.

Bell, H. Idris. Cults and Creeds in Graeco-Roman Egypt. Liverpool, England: Liverpool University Press, 1957.

Bell, Hesketh J. Obeah: Witchcraft in the West Indies. London: Sampson, Low & Co., 1889.

Bellamy, Hans Schindler. Moons, Myths, and Man. London: Faber & Faber, 1949.

Bellot, Hugh H. L. Temple of the Inner Temple. N.p., 1914. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1999.

Beloff, John. The Existence of Mind. London: MacGibbon, 1962. Reprint, New York: Citadel, 1965.

———. The Importance of Psychical Research. London: Society for Psychical Research, 1988.

———. Parapsychology: The Way Ahead. Turnbridge Wells, UK: Institute for Cultural Research, 1974.

———. Psychological Sciences: A Review of Modern Psychology. New York: Barnes & Noble, 1974.

Beloff, John, ed. New Directions in Parapsychology. London: Paul Elek (Scientific Books), 1974. Reprint, Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1975.

Bem, D. J. and Honorton, C. "Does psi exist? Replicable evidence for an anomalous process of information transfer," Psychological Bulletin, 115 (1994): 4–18.

Bender, Hans. "Modern Poltergeist Research—A Plea for an Unprejudiced Approach." In New Directions in Parapsychology, edited by John Beloff. London: Paul Elek (Scientific Books), 1974. Reprint, Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1975.

Bender, Hans. "New Developments in Poltergeist Research." Proceedings of the Parapsychological Association 6 (1969): 81.

Bender, Hans. Unser sechster Sinn. Stuttgart: Wilhelm Goldmann Verlag, 1982.

Bendit, L. J., and Phoebe Bendit. Living Together Again. London, Gramol Publications, 1946.

Bendit, Laurence J. The Mirror of Life and Death. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1965.

———. Self Knowledge: A Yoga for the West. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1967.

Bendit, Laurence J., and Phoebe D. Bendit. Man Incarnate. N.p., 1957. Reprinted as The Etheric Body of Man. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1977.

———. This Transforming Mind. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1970.

Bendit, Phoebe. Man's Latent Powers. London, Faber and Faber, 1938.

Bendit, Phoebe. The Psychic Child or Oversensitive Child. N.p., 1955.

Bendit, Phoebe, and Laurence J. Bendit. The Psychic Sense. London: Faber and Faber, 1943.

———. This World and That. London: Faber and Faber, 1950.

Benedikt, M. Ruten- und Pendel-lehre. Vienna; Leipzig, 1917.

Benham, W. G. Laws of Scientific Hand Reading. Rev. ed. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1928. Reprinted as The Benham Book of Palmistry. North Hollywood, Calif.: Newcastle, 1988.

Benitez, Fernando. In the Magic Land of Peyote. Austin: University of Texas Press, 1975. Reprint, New York: Warner Books, 1975.

Benjamine, Elbert. Astrological Lore of All Ages. Chicago: Aries Press, 1945.

———. Beginner's Horoscope Maker. Chicago: Aries Press, 1940.

———. Stellar Dietetics. Chicago: Aries Press, 1942.

Bennett, Allan. The Wisdom of the Aryas. London, 1923.

Bennett, E. T. Apparitions and Haunted Houses: A Survey of Evidence. London: Faber & Faber, 1939. Ann Arbor, Mich.: Gryphon Books, 1971.

Bennett, Ernest. Apollonius; or, The Future of Psychical Research. N.p., 1927.

———. Apparitions and Haunted Houses. London: Faber and Faber, 1939.

———. Christianity and Paganism in the Fourth and Fifth Centuries. London: Rivingtons, 1900.

———. The Downfall of the Dervishes. New York: Negro University Press, 1969.

Bennett, J. G. Gurdjieff: Making a New World. New York: Harper & Row, 1974.

———. Gurdjieff, A Very Great Enigma: Three Lectures. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1973.

———. Concerning Subud. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1959.

Bennett, John. Creative Thinking. Sherbourne, UK: Coombe Springs Press, 1964.

———. Enneagram Studies. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1983.

———. Spiritual Psychology. Lakemont, Ga.: CSA Press, 1974.

———. Witness. New York: Dharma Book Co., 1962.

Bennett, John G., with Thakur Lal Manandhar. Long Pilgrimage: The Life and Teaching of Sri Govinananda Bharati known as the Shivapuri Baba. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1965.

Bennett, John Godolphin. Gurdjieff: Making a New World. New York: Harper & Row, 1974.

———. Is There Life on Earth?—An Introduction to Gurdjieff. New York: Stonehill, 1973. 1st Bennett Books ed., Santa Fe, N.Mex.: Bennett Books, 1989.

Bension, Ariel. The Zohar in Moslem and Christian Spain. New York: Sepher-Hermon Press, 1932.

Benson, E. F. The Horror Horn, and Other Stories. Edited by Alexis Lykiard. London: Panther, 1974.

———. More Spook Stories. London: Hutchinson, 1934.

———. The Room in the Tower, and Other Stories. London: Mills & Boon, 1912.

———. Spook Stories. London: Hutchinson, 1928.

———. Visible and Invisible. London: Hutchinson, 1923.

Bentley, Edmund. Far Horizon: A Biography of Hester Dowden, Medium and Psychic Investigator. London: Rider & Co., 1951.

Benwell, G., and A. Waugh. The Sea Enchantress: The Tale of the Mermaid and Her Kin. London: Hutchinson, 1961.

Beowulf. Edited by F. Klaeber. Boston, 1950.

Beowulf. Translated by John R. Clarke. Rev. ed. New York: C. L. Wrenn, 1954.

Bercovici, Konrad. The Story of the Gypsies. Cosmopolitan Book Corp., 1928. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1974.

Berdecio, R., and S. Appelbaum, eds. Posada's Popular Mexican Prints. New York: Dover, 1972.

Berendt, Heinz C. "A New Israeli Metal-Bender (with Film)." In Research in Parapsychology, 1982. Edited by William Roll, John Beloff, and Rhea W. White. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1983.

———. Parapsychology: The World beyond Our Five Senses. N.p., 1966.

Berg, Charles. The Unconscious Significance of Hair. London: Allen & Unwin, 1951.

Berger, Arthur S. Aristocracy of the Dead. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1987.

Berger, Arthur S. Evidence of Life after Death: A Casebook for the Tough-Minded. Springfield, Ill.: Charles C. Thomas, 1988.

———. Lives and Letters in American Parapsychology: A Biographical History, 1850–1987. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1988.

Berger, Arthur S. and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon House, 1991.

———. Encyclopedia of Parapsychology & Psychical Research. New York: Marlowe & Co., 1994.

Berger, Arthur S., F. E. Gurney, and F. W. H. Myers. Phantasms of the Living. 2 vols. London: Trubner, 1986.

Berger, H. A. Nordische Mythologie. Zittau & Leipzig, Germany, 1834.

Berger, Helen A. Witchcraft and the Domination of Women: A Reexamination of the English Witch Trials. New York: New York University Press, 1983.

Berger, Ruth. The Secret Is in the Rainbow: Aura Interrelationships. Clearwater, Fla.: Beau Geste, 1979.

Bergier, Jacques. Extraterrestrial Visitations from Prehistoric Times to the Present. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1973. Reprinted as Mysteries of the Earth: The Hidden World of the Extra-Terrestrials. London: Sidgwick and Jackson, 1974.

Bergier, Jacques. Secret Doors of the Earth. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1975.

Bergier, Jacques, and INFO editors. Extraterrestrial Intervention: The Evidence. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1974.

Bergman, Jerry. Can the Living Talk with the Dead? A Clear Explanation of Spiritism. Brooklyn, N.Y.: International Bible Students, 1920.

———. Jehovah's Witnesses and Kindred Groups: A Historical Compendium and Bibliography. New York: Garland Publishing, 1984.

Bergson, Henri. Creative Evolution. New York: Modern Library, 1944.

———. The World of Dreams. New York: Philosophical Library, 1958.

Berke, Joseph H. "Psychoanalysis and Kabbalah," Psychoanalytic Review 83, no. 6 (December 1996): 849–863.

Berlitz, Charles. Mysteries from Forgotten Worlds. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1972.

———. World of Strange Phenomena. New York: Wynwood Press, 1988.

Berlitz, Charles F. The Dragon's Triangle. New York: Wynwood Press, 1989.

Berlitz, Charles, and J. M. Valentine. Without a Trace: New Information from the Triangle. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1977.

Berlitz, Charles, and J. Manson Valentine. The Bermuda Triangle. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1974.

———. Doomsday 1999 A.D. Garden City, N.Y. Doubleday, 1981.

Berlitz, Charles, and William L. Moore. The Roswell Incident. New York: Grosset & Dunlap, 1980.

Berlitz, Charles, and William Moore. The Philadelphia Experiment: Project Invisibility. N.p., 1979.

Berman, David. "Papal Visit Resurrects Ireland's Knock Legend." The Freethinker (October 1979). Reprinted in The British and Irish Skeptic 1, no. 1 (January/February 1987).

The Bermuda Triangle: An Annotated Bibliography. Buffalo, N.Y.: Buffalo and Erie County Public Library Librarians Association and Buffalo and Erie County Library, 1975.

Bernard, Pierre. In Re Fifth Veda. International Journal of the Tantrik Order. New York: Tantrik Order in America, [1909].

Bernard, Theos. Hatha Yoga. New York: Columbia University Press, 1944. Reprint, London, 1950; New York: Samuel Weiser, 1970.

———. Heaven Lies Within Us. New York: Scribner's Sons, Ltd., 1939.

———. Hindu Philosophy. New York: Philosophical Library, 1947.

———. Land of a Thousand Buddhas. London: Rider, 1952.

———. Philosophical Foundations of India. London: Rider, 1945.

———. A Simplified Grammar of the Literary Tibetan Language. Santa Barbara, Calif.: Tibetan Text Society, 1946.

Bernheim, H. Hypnosis and Suggestion in Psychotherapy: A Treatise on the Nature and Uses of Hypnotism. London, 1888. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1964.

Bernstein, Alan E. The Formation of Hell: Death and Retribution in the Ancient and Early Christian Worlds. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1993.

Bernstein, Jay H. Spirits Captured in Stone. Shamanism and Traditional Medicine among the Taman of Borneo. Boulder, Colo.; London: Lynne Reinner, 1997.

Bernstein, Morey. The Search for Bridey Murphy. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1956.

Berry, Catherine. Experiences in Spiritualism. London, 1876.

Bersterman, Theodore, and Sir William Barrett. The Divining Rod: An Experimental and Psychological Investigation. 1926. Reprint. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1968.

Bertrand, A. Traité du Somnambulisme. Paris, 1824.

Besant Annie. The Ancient Wisdom. 1897. Reprint, Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Press, 1928.

———. Annie Besant: An Autobiography. London, 1893.

———. Autobiographical Sketches. London: Freethought Publishing, 1885.

———. Charles Bradlaugh: A Character Sketch. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1941.

———. H. P. Blavatsky and the Masters of Wisdom. London, 1907.

———. My Path to Atheism. London, 1877.

———. The Seven Principles of Man. 1892. Reprint, New York: London & Bernes; Theosophical Publishing Society, 1904.

———. The Theosophical Society and H. P. Blavatsky. London, 1891.

———. Why I became a Theosophist. London: Theosphical Publishing Society, 1891.

Besant, Annie, and Charles W. Leadbeater. Thought-Forms: A Record of Clairvoyant Investigations. Adyar, Madras, India: London Theosophical Publishing House, 1901.

Besterman, Theodore. A Bibliography of Annie Besant. London: Theosophical Society in England, 1924.

———. Collected Papers on the Paranormal. New York, Garrett Publications, 1968.

———. Crystal Gazing: A Study in the History, Distribution, Theory and Practice of Scrying. London: William Rider, 1924. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1965.

———. Dictionary of Theosophy. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1927.

———. The Mind of Annie Besant. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1927.

———. Mrs. Annie Besant: A Modern Prophet. London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, 1934.

———. Water Divining: New Facts & Theories. London: Methuen, 1938.

Beth, Rae. The Wiccan Path. Freedom, Calif.: The Crossing Press Inc., 1995.

Betty, L. Stafford. "The Kern City Poltergeist: A Case Severely Straining the Living Agent Hypothesis," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 52, no. 798 (October 1984): 345–364.

Bevan, Edwyn Robert. Holy Images; An Inquiry Into Idolatry and Image—Worship in Ancient Paganism and in Christianity. London: George Allen, 1940.

Beyerl, Paul V. Wiccan Reader. Palm Springs, Calif.: International Guild of Advanced Sciences Research Society, 1994.

Bhagavadgita of The Song Divine. Gorakhpur, India: Gita Press, 1943.

Bharati, Agehananda. The Light at the Center: Context and Pretext of Modern Mysticism. Santa Barbara, Calif.: Ross-Erickson, 1976.

———. The Ochre Robe. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1970.

———. "Separate Realities: Sense and (Mostly) Nonsense in Parapsychology." In Extrasensory Ecology: Parapsychology and Anthropology. Edited by Joseph K. Long. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1977.

———. The Tantric Tradition. London: Rider, 1965.

Bias, Clifford. The Way Back. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1985.

Bierce, Ambrose. Devils Dictionary. N.p., 1841, 1913. Reprint, New York: Oxford University Press, Inc., 1999.

Biermans, John T. The Odyssey of New Religious Movements. New York: Edwin Mellon, 1986.

Bigelow, John. Mystery of Sleep. London: Unwin; New York: Harper, 1903. N.p., 1905. Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

Binet, Alfred, and Charles Féré. Animal Magnetism. London: Kegan Paul, 1887.

Binns, Ronald. The Loch Ness Mystery Solved. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books; London: Star (W. H. Allen),, 1984.

Biographical Sketch of Gabriel Green. Northridge, Calif.: Amalgamated Flying Saucer Clubs of America, 1974.

Bird, Christopher. The Diving Hand: The 500 Year-Old Mystery of Dowsing. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1979.

Bird, J. Malcolm. Margery the Medium. Boston: Small, Maynard, 1925.

———. My Psychic Adventures. New York: Scientific American Publishing, 1924.

———. 'Margery' the Medium. New York: Maynard, 1925.

Birkhead, Edith. The Tale of Terror: A Study of the Gothic Romance. London: Constable, 1921.

Birks, Walter. The Treasure of Montsagur: A Study of the Cathar Heresy and the Nature of the Cathar Secret. UK: Crucible, 1987.

Bisnauth, Dale. History of Religion in the Caribbean. Kingston, Jamaica: Kingston Publishers, 1989.

Bisson, Juliette A. Les Phénomènes dits de Matérialisations. Paris, 1914.

Bittle, William G. James Nayler, 1618–1660: The Quaker Indicted by Parliament. Richmond, Ind.: Friends United Press, 1986.

Black Hawk. Autobiography. St. Louis, Mo.: The Author, 1882.

Black, David. Ekstasy: Out-of-the-Body Experiences. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill; Macmillan Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

Black, George F. A Calendar of Cases of Witchcraft in Scotland 1510–1727. New York: New York Public Library, 1938.

———. A Gypsy Bibliography. London: Gypsy Lore Society, 1914. Reprint, Ann Arbor, Mich.: Gryphon Books, 1971.

The Black Pullet: Science of Talismanic Magic. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1972.

Blackmore, Susan J. Adventures of a Parapsychologist. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1986.

———. Beyond the Body: An Investigation of Out-of-the-Body Experiences. London: Heineman, 1981.

———. "Down the Tunnel." British and Irish Skeptic 3, no. 3 (May/June 1989).

———. "The Elusive Open Mind: Ten Years of Negative Research in Parapsychology." The Skeptical Inquirer 9, no. 3 (spring 1987).

———. Parapsychology and Out-of-the-Body Experience. London: Society for Psychical Research; Hove, England: Transpersonal Books, 1978.

———. "A Psychological Theory of the OBE." In Research in Parapsychology 1984. Edited by Rhea A. White and Jerry Solfvin. N.p., 1985.

———. "A Report of a Visit to Carl Sargent's Laboratory." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 54, no. 808 (July 1987).

Blackmore, Susan J. and Frances Chamberlain. "ESP and Thought Concordance in Twins: A Method of Comparison," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 59, no. 831 (April 1993): 89–96.

Blackmore, Susan J., and John Harris. "OBEs and Perceptual Distortions in Schizophrenic Patients and Students." In Research in Parapsychology 1982. Edited by William G. Roll, John Beloff, and Rhea A. White. 1983.

Blackwood, Algernon. Best Ghost Stories of Algernon Blackwood. Edited by E. F. Bleiler. New York: Dover Publications, 1973.

———. Episodes before Thirty. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1924.

———. The Human Chord. London: Macmillan, 1910.

———. Tales of the Supernatural. Woodbridge, England: Boydell Press, 1983.

———. Tales of Terror and Darkness. London; New York: Spring Books, 1977. Distributed by Transatlantic Arts.

———. The Willows, and Other Queer Tales. 1934.

Blakney, Raymond B. Meister Eckhart: A Modern Translation. New York: Harper, 1941.

Blanchard, Robert. Ancient Grimoire of Dark Magick. Palm Springs, Calif.: International Guild of Advanced Sciences Research Society, 1993.

———. Witchcraft Grimoire. Palm Springs, Calif.: International Guild of Advanced Sciences Research Society, 1993.

Blatty, William Peter. The Exorcist. New York: Harper & Row, 1971.

Blavatsky, Helena P. From the Caves and Jungles of Hindustan. London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1892.

———. Isis Unveiled. 2 vols. New York: J. W. Bouton, 1877.

———. The Key to Theosophy. Pasadena, Calif.: Theosophical University Press, 1972.

———. Letters of H. P. Blavatsky to A. P. Sinnett. Edited by A. T. Barker. London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1925.

———. "Psychic and Noetic Action." In Studies in Occultism. Boston: New England Theosophical Corp., 1895.

———. The Secret Doctrine. 2 vols. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1889. Reprint, London: Thesophical Publishing House, 1928.

———. Theosophical Glossary. New York: Theosophical Publishing House, 1892.

Bleibtreu-ehrenberg, G. "Homosexualität und Transvestition im Schamanismus," Anthropos, Vol. 65 (1970).

Bleksley, A. E. H. "An Experiment of Long-Distance ESP During Sleep." Journal of Parapsychology 27 (1963): 1.

Bliss, Douglas Percy, ed. The Devil in Scotland. London: Alexander MacLehose, 1937.

Bloch, Chayim. Der Prager Golem. Translated by Harry Schneiderman as The Golem: Legends of the Ghetto of Prague. Vienna, 1925.

Block, Marguerite Beck. The New Church in the New World. New York: Henry Holt, 1932.

Blofeld, John. Beyond the Gods. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1974.

———. Bodhisattva of Compassion: The Mystical Tradition of KuaYin. Boulder, Colo.: Shambhala, 1977.

———. The Jewel in the Lotus: An Outline of Present-Day Buddhism in China. London: Sidgwick & Jackson, 1948.

———. Mahayana Buddhism in Southeast Asia. Singapore: Asia Pacific Press, 1971.

———. Mantras: Sacred Words of Power. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1977.

———. The Secret and Sublime. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1973.

———. Tantric Mysticism of Tibet: A Practical Guide. New York: Dutton, 1970. Reprinted as The Way of Power. London: Allen & Unwin, 1970.

———. The Wheel of Life. London: Rider, 1959. Rev. ed. Boulder, Colo.: Shambhala, 1972.

Blofeld, John, trans. I Ching: The Book of Changes. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1968.

Bloomfield, Harold M., Michael Peter Cain, and Dennis T. Jaffe. TM: Discovering Inner Energy and Overcoming Stress. New York: Delacorte Press, 1975.

Blum, Ralph. The Book of Runes. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1984.

———. Rune Play. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1985.

Blythe, Henry. The Three Lives of Naomi Henry. London: Frederick Muller, 1956.

Boadella, David. Wilhelm Reich: the Evolution of His Work. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1973.

Bodin, Jean. De la démonomania des sorciers. Paris, 1580.

Bock, Carl. The Head-Hunters of Borneo. A Narrative of Travel up the Mahakkam and down the Barito; also, Journeyings in Sumatra. London: Sampson Low, Marston, Searle & Rivington, 1881. Reprint, Singapore; Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1985.

The Bodhisattva Doctrine in Buddhism. Waterloo, ON, Canada: Canadian Corporation for Studies in Religion, Wilfrid Laurier University Press, 1981.

Boehme, J. Aurora. London: John M. Watkins, 1960.

———. The Confession of Jacob Boehme. New York: Harper, 1954.

———. The Life and Doctrines of Jacob Boehme. New York: McCoy Publishing, 1929.

———. Mysterium Magnum. London: John M. Watkins, 1965.

———. The Signature of All Things. London: James Clarke, 1969.

———. Six Theosophic Points. Lansing: University of Michigan State Press, 1970.

———. The Three Principles of the Divine Essence. Jacksonville, Fla.: Yoga Publication Society, 1909.

———. The Way to Christ. New York: Paulist Press, 1978.

Bogoraz, Waldemar G. "The Chukchee." Memoirs of the American Museum of Natural History. Vol. 16. New York: G. E. Stechert, 1904.

Boguet, Henri. Discours des sorciers. Translated as Examen of Witches. New York: Barnes & Noble, 1971.

Bohn, Erich. Der Fall Rothe. Breslau, 1901.

Boirac, Emile. L'Avenir des sciences psychiques. Paris, 1917. Translated as The Psychology of the Future. London, 1918.

———. La Psychologie Inconnue; Introduction et contribution à l'étude expérimentale des sciences psychiques. Paris, 1908. English edition as Psychic Science: An Introduction and Contribution to the Experimental Study of Psychical Phenomena. London, 1918.

Bois, Jules. Le Petites Religions de Paris. Paris, 1894.

———. Le Satanisme et la Magie. Paris, 1895.

Boisserie, P. J. Lourdes. Paris, 1891.

Bolen, J. G. "Interview: Shafica Karagulla." Psychic 4, no. 6 (1973).

Bolshakoff, Serge. Russian Nonconformity. Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1950. Reprint, New York: AMS Press, 1973.

Bolton, Brett, ed. Edgar Cayce Speaks. New York: Avon, 1969.

Bolton, Brett L. The Secret Powers of Plants. New York: Berkley, 1974. Reprint, London: Abacus, 1974.

Bolton, Gambier. A Book of Beasts and Birds. London: G. Newnes, Ltd., 1903.

———. Ghosts in Solid Form. London: W. Rider and Son, Ltd., 1919.

———. Psychic Force: An Experimental Investigation. London, 1904.

Bond, Frederick Bligh. "Athanasia." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (January–May 1929).

———. The Company of Avalon. Oxford: B. H. Blackwell, 1924.

———. The Glastonbury Scripts. 9 vols. Glastonbury, England: Abbot's Leigh, n.d.

———. Gate of Remembrance (1918). Oxford: B. H. Blackwell, 1918. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1999.

Bond, Frederick Bligh, and Thomas Simcox Lea. Gematria: A Preliminary Investigation of the Cabala. Wellingborough, England: Thorsons, 1977.

Bonewits, P. E. I. Authentic Thaumaturgy. Albany, Calif.: The CHAOSium, 1978.

———. Druid Chronicles (Evolved). Berkeley, Calif.: Berkeley Drunemetron Press, 1976.

———. Real Magic. Coward, McCann & Geoghegan, 1971. Rev. ed. Berkeley, Calif.: Creative Arts Book Co., 1979.

Bonewitz, Ra. Cosmic Crystals: Crystal Consciousness and the New Age. Van Nuys, Calif: Newcastle Publishing, 1983.

Bonner, Hypatia Bradlaugh, and J. M. Robertson. Charles Bradlaugh: His Life and Work. London, 1898.

Bonner, Saniel. The Divine Emergence of the World: Teacher: The Realization, the Revelation and the Revealing Ordeal of Heart Master Da Love-Ananda. Clearlake, Calif.: Dawn Horse Press, 1990.

The Bonseigneur Rituals a Collection of 18th Century Ecossais Rituals. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

The Book of Shadows and Substance. Owlexandrian Multimedia/Hermetic Educational Institute, n.d.

The Book of the Dead. Translated by E. A. Wallis Budge. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1960.

The Book of the Sacred Magic of Abra-Melin the Mage. Translated by S. L. MacGregor-Mathers. 1898. Reprint, Chicago: de Laurence, 1932. Reprint, New York: Causeway Books, 1974.

"Books and Reports on Leonard Mediumship." Psychic Science 16, no. 4 (January 1938).

Boone, J. Allen. Kinship with All Life. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1954.

Bord, J. Astral Projection. New York: Samuel Weiser Inc., 1981.

Bord, Janet. Ghosts. Newton Abbot, England: David & Charles, 1974.

Bord, Janet, and Colin Bord. Alien Animals. Harrisburg, Pa.: Stackpole Books, 1981.

———. The Bigfoot Casebook. Harrisburg, Pa.: Stackpole Books, 1982.

Borges, Jorge Luis, with Margarita Guerrero. The Book of Imaginary Beings. Translated by Norman Thomas de Giovanni. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1970.

Borrow, George. Lavengro; the Scholar, the Gypsy, the Priest. 3 vols. London, 1851.

———. The Romany Rye. London, 1957.

Bose, J. C. Growth and Tropic Movements of Plants. London/New York: Longmans, Green and Co., 1929.

———. Motor Mechanisms of Plants. London/New York: Longmans, Green and Co., 1928.

———. The Nervous Mechanism of Plants. London/New York: Longmans, Green and Co., 1926.

———. The Physiology of the Ascent of Sap. London/New York: Longmans, Green and Co., 1923.

———. The Physiology of Photosynthesis. London/New York: Longmans, Green and Co., 1924.

———. Plant Autographs & Their Revelations. Washington, 1915. Reprint, London: Longmans Green, 1927.

———. Plant Response as a Means of Physiological Investigation. London/New York: Longmans, Green and Co., 1906.

———. Researches in Irritability of Plants. London/New York: Longmans Green and Co., 1913.

———. Response in the Living and Non-Living. London/New York: Longmans, Green and Co., 1902.

Bosman, Leonard. The Meaning and Philosophy of Numbers. 1932. Reprint, London: Rider, 1974.

Boswell, Charles. "The Great Fume and Fuss over the Omnipotent Oom." True (January 1965): 31–33, 86–91.

Bottazi, F. Nelle regioni inesplorate della Biologia Umana. Rome, 1907.

Bouché-Leclercq, A. Histoire de la divination dans l'antiquité. Paris, 1879. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

Bouissou, Michaël. The Life of a Sensitive. London: Sidgwick & Jackson, 1955.

Bounds, E. M. Power Through Prayer. London, 1912. Reprint, Chicago: Moody Press, 1979.

Boutet, Frederic. Dictionnaire des Sciences Occultes. New York: French & European Publications, Inc., 1993.

Bowen, Sandra, F. R. Nick Nocerino, and Joshua Shapiro. Mysteries of the Crystal Skulls Revealed. Pacifica, Calif.: Aquarian Networking, 1887. Revised edition, 1988.

Boyd, Doug. Swami. New York: Random House, 1976.

Boyer, Paul and Stephen Nissenbaum. Salem-Village Witchcraft. Belmont, Calif.: Wadsworth Publishing, 1972. Boston: Northeastern University Press, 1993.

Boyer, Paul, and Stephen Nissenbaum. Salem Possessed. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1974.

Boyle, Robert. Works. 5 vols. London, 1744. Rev. ed. 6 vols. London, 1772.

Bozzano, Ernesto. "Animals and Psychic Perceptions." Annals of Psychic Science (August 1905).

———. Dei Fenomeni d'Infestazione. Rome, 1919.

———. Phénomènes Psychiques au Moment de la Mort. Paris, 1923.

———. Polyglot Mediumship (Xenoglossy). London: Rider, 1932.

———. Popoli Primitivi e Manifestazioni Supernormali. Milan: Armenia Editore, 1974.

Bracelin, L. L. Gerald Gardner: Witch. London: Octagon Press, 1960.

Brackett, E. A. Materialized Apparitions. Boston: Colby & Rich, 1886; William Rider, n.d.

Braddon, Russell. The Piddingtons. London: T. Werner Laurie, 1950.

Braden, Charles S. Spirits in Rebellion. Dallas, Tex.: Southern Methodist University Press, 1963.

———. These Also Believe. New York: Macmillan, 1949.

Bradford, David T. "Neuropsychology of Swedenborg's Visions," Perceptual & Motor Skills 88, no. 2 (April 1999): 377–383.

Bradley, Don. Freemasonry in the Twenty-First Century. Phoenix, Ariz.: Native Planet Publishing, 1995.

———. Picking Winners. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1954.

———. Profession and Birthdate. Los Angeles: Llewellyn Publications, 1950.

———. Stock Market Predictions. Los Angeles: Llewellyn Foundation for Astrological Research, 1950.

Bradley, H. Dennis. . . . And After. London: T. Werner Laurie, 1931.

———. Towards the Stars. London: T. Werner Laurie, 1924.

———. The Wisdom of the Gods. London: T. Werner Laurie, 1925.

Braid, James. Magic, Witchcraft, Animal Magnetism, Hypnotism, and Electro-Biology. London: John Churchill, 1852.

———. Neurpnology; Or, The Rationale of Nervous Sleep. London, 1843. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

———. Neurypnology. 1843. Reprinted as Braid on Hypnotism: The Beginnings of Modern Hypnosis. New York: Julian Press, 1960.

———. Observations on J. C. Colquhoun's History of "Magic, Witchcraft, and Animal Magnetism." Manchester, England: J. T. Parkes, 1852.

———. Observations on the Nature and Treatment of Certain Forms of Paralysis. London: T. Richards, 1855.

———. Observations on Trance; or, Human Hibernation. London: J. Churchill 1850.

———. The Physiology of Fascination, and the Critics Criticised. Manchester, England: Grant and Co., 1855.

———. The Power of the Mind Over the Body. 1846.

Brailsford, Mabel Richmond. A Quaker from Cromwell's Army: James Nayler. London: Swathmore Press, 1927.

Bramwell, J. M. Hypnotism: Its History, Practice, and Theory. London, 1903.

Bramwell, J. Milne. Hypnotism and Treatment by Suggestion. London: Cassell, 1909. Reprint, New York: Da Capo Press, Inc., 1982.

Branch, Ramus. Harry Edwards: The Life Story of the Great Healer. Burrows Lea, Guildford, Surrey, UK: Healer Publishing, 1982.

Brand, John. Observations on Popular Antiquities. 2 vols. London, 1813.

———. Popular Antiquities. 1849. Reprint, London: J. R. Smith, 1870.

Brandon, Ruth. The Spiritualists: The Passion for the Occult in the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries. New York: Alfred A. Knopf; London: Weidenfeld & Nicolson, 1983.

Branston, Brian. Gods of the North. London: Thames & Hudson, 1955.

Brau, Jean-Louis, Helen Weaver, and Allan Edmands, eds. Larousse Encyclopedia of Astrology. New York: New American Library, 1982.

Braun, Kirk. The Unwelcome Society. West Linn, Ore.: Scout Creek Press, 1984.

Breasted, J. H. Religion and Thought in Ancient Egypt. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1912.

Breasted, James. A History of Egypt: From the Earliest Times to the Persian Conquest. New York: Charles S. Scribner's Sons, 1919.

Brehier, Emile. The Philosophy of Plotinus. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1958.

Brett, William H. The Indian Tribes of Guiana. London, 1868.

Bridges, John Henry. The Life and Work of Roger Bacon. 1914. Reprint, Merrick, N.Y.: Richwood, 1976.

"Bridey Murphy—Fact, Fraud, or Fancy?" Special issue of Tomorrow 4, no. 4 (summer 1956).

A Brief account of Mr. Valentine Greatrakes, and divers of the strange cures by him lately Performed; written by himself in a letter addressed to the Honourable Robert Boyle Esq. London, 1666. Reprint, Dublin: Samuel Dancer, 1688.

A Brief History of the Fund for UFO Research. Washington, D.C.: Fund for UFO Research, n.d.

Brier, Robert. Precognition and the Philosophy of Science; An Essay on Backward Causation. New York: Humanities Press, 1973.

Briggs, Katharine M. The Anatomy of Puck: An Examination of Fairy Beliefs Among Shakespeare's Contemporaries and Successors. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1959.

———. A Dictionary of British Folktales in the English Language. 4 vols. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1970–71.

———. A Dictionary of Fairies. London: Penguin Books, 1976. Reprinted as An Encyclopedia of Fairies, Hobgoblins, Brownies, Bogies, and Other Supernatural Creatures. New York: Pantheon Books, 1976.

———. The Fairies in English Tradition and Literature. 1967. Reprinted as The Fairies in Tradition and Literature. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1967.

———. Folktales of England. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1965.

———. The Personnel of Fairyland: A Short Account of the Fairy People of Great Britain for Those Who Tell Stories to Children. 1953. Reprint, Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1971; Detroit: Gale Research, Inc., 1971.

———. The Vanishing People: A Study of Traditional Fairy Beliefs. London: B. T. Batsford, 1978.

Brightman, Edgar S. The Problem of God. New York: Abingdon Press, 1930.

Brinton, Daniel G. The Myths of the New World. Leypoldt and Holt, 1868.

Brinton, Howard H. The Mystic Will: Based on a Study of the Philosophy of Jacob Boehme. New York: Macmillan, 1930.

[Britten, Emma Hardinge.] Art Magic. Boston, 1875. Reprint, Chicago: Progressive Thinker Publishing House, 1898.

———. Ghost Land; or, Researches into the Mysteries of Occultism. Chicago: Progressive Thinker Publishing House, 1897.

Britten, Emma Hardinge. Modern American Spiritualism: A Twenty Years' Record of the Communion Between Earth and the World of Spirits. London, 1869. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1970.

———. Nineteenth Century Miracles; or, Spirits and Their Works in Every Country of the Earth. London and Manchester: John Heywood, 1884. Reprint, North Stratford, N.H.: Ayer Publishers, Inc., 1976.

Bro, Harmon Hartzell. Begin a New Life: The Approach of Edgar Cayce. New York: Harper & Row, 1971.

———. Dreams in a Life of Prayer: The Approach of Edgar Cayce. New York: Paperback Library, 1970.

———. Edgar Cayce on Dreams. New York: Castle Books, 1968.

———. Edgar Cayce on Religion and Psychic Experience. New York: Paperback Library, 1970.

———. High Play; Turning on Without Drugs. New York: Coward-McCann, 1970.

———. A Seer Out of Season: The Life of Edgar Cayce. New York: New American Library, 1989.

Broad, C. D. "Immanuel Kant and Psychical Research." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 49 (1950).

———. Lectures on Psychical Research, Incorporating the Perrott Lectures Given in Cambridge University in 1939 and 1960. New York: Humanities Press, 1962.

———.The Mind and Its Place in Nature. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1925.

———. Perception, Physics, and Reality: An Inquiry into the Information that Physical Science Can Supply about the Real. 1914.

———. Personal Identity and Survival. London: Society for Psychical Research, 1968.

———. Religion, Philosophy, and Psychical Research. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1953.

Broch, Harald B. " 'Crazy Women are Performing in Sombali: A Possession-Trance Ritual on Bonerate, Indonesia," Ethos 13, no. 3 (Fall 1985): 262–282.

Brodie-Innes, J. W. Scottish Witchcraft Trials. London: Chiswick Press, 1891.

Broekman, Marcel. The Complete Encyclopaedia of Practical Palmistry. Englewood, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1972. Reprint, London: Mayflower, 1975.

Brofferio, Angelo. Per Lo Spiritismo. 3d ed. Turin, 1903.

Bromage, Bernard. Tibetan Yoga. London: Aquarian Press, 1952.

Bromley, David G., and Larry D. Shinn, eds. Krishna Consciousness in the West. Lewisburg: Bucknell University Press, 1989.

Bronson, Bertrand Harris. The Traditional Tunes of the Child Ballads. 4 vols. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1959–72.

Bronson, Matthew. "When As-If Becomes As-Is: the Spontaneous Initiation of a Brazilian Spiritist Medium," Anthropology of Consciousness, 3, nos. 1–2 (1992): 9–16.

Brooked-Smith, Coin. "Data-tape Recorded Experimental PK Phenomena." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 47 (1973).

Brooks, C. Harry. The Practice of Autosuggestion by the Method of Emile Coué. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1922.

Brooks, Louise McNamara. Early History of Divine Science. Denver: First Divine Science Church, 1963.

Brooks, Nona L. Mysteries. Denver: The Author, 1924.

———. The Prayer that Never Fails. Denver: The Author, 1935.

———. Short Lessons in Divine Science. Denver: The Author, 1928.

Brooks, Pat. Out! In the Name of Jesus. Carol Stream, Ill.: Creation House, 1972.

Brother Francis [Ralph F. Raymond]. The Universal Link Concept. Los Angeles: Universal Link Heart Center, 1968.

Brough, James. The Vixens. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1980.

Brown, Diana DeGroat. Umbanda: Religion and Politics in Urban Brazil. Ann Arbor, Mich.: UMI Press, 1986.

Brown, John P. The Darvishes; or Oriental Spiritualism. London, 1927. Rev. ed., London: Frank Cass, 1968.

Brown, Michael F. "Dark Side of the Shaman," Natural History (November, 1989): 8–10.

Brown, Raymond Lemment. The Phantom Soldiers. New York: Drake, 1975.

Brown, Rosemary. Immortals at My Elbow. London: Bachman & Turner, 1974. Reprinted as Immortals by My Side. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1975.

———. Unfinished Symphonies: Voices from the Beyond. London, 1971. Reprint, New York: William Morrow, 1971.

Brown, Slater. The Heyday of Spiritualism. New York: Hawthorn Books, 1970.

Brown, William. Mind and Personality. College Park, Md.: McGrath, 1927.

———. Mind, Medicine, and Metaphysics; The Philosophy of a Physician. London: Oxford University Press, 1936.

———. Psychological Methods of Healing; An Introduction to Psychotherapy. London: University of London Press, Ltd., 1938.

———. Science and Personality. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1929. Reprint, College Park, Md.: McGrath, 1972.

———. Suggestion and Mental Analysis. New York: Doran, 1922.

Brown, William A. The Life of Prayer in a World of Science. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1927.

Browning, Elizabeth Barrett. Letters to her Sister, 1846–1859. Edited by Laura Huxley. London: John Murray, 1929. Reprint, New York: E. P. Dutton, 1930.

Browning, Norma Lee. The Psychic World of Peter Hurkos. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1970.

Browning, Robert. Dramatis Personae. London: Chapman and Hall, 1864.

Browning, Vivienne. My Browning Family Album. London: Springwood Books, 1979.

Brownson, Orestes Augustus. The Spirit-Rapper. Boston: Little, Brown, 1854.

Brudal, Paul J. "PSI-forskning og psykologi som vitenskap. En oversiktsartikkel om de seneste 20 ars utvikling innen PSI-forskning" (PSI Research and Psychology as a Science), Tidsskrift for Norsk Psykologforening 21, no. 6 (June 1984): 302–309.

Bruce, Henry Addington Bayley. Historic Ghosts and Ghost Hunters. New York: Moffat, Yard, 1908.

———. Riddle of Personality. New York: Moffat, Yard, 1915.

———. Scientific Mental Healing. Boston, Little, Brown, 1911.

Bruce, James Douglas. The Evolution of Arthurian Romance, From the Beginnings Down to the Year 1300. Baltimore, Md.: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1923.

Brugger, Peter and Alfred T. Baumann. "Repetition Avoidance in Responses to Imaginary Questions: The Effect of Respondents' Belief in ESP," Psychological Reports 75, no. 2 (October 1994): 883–893.

Brugmans, H. J. F. W., G. Heymans, and A. Weinberg. "Some Experiments in Telepathy Performed in the Psychological Institute of the University of Groningen." Compte-Rendu du Premier Congrés International de Recherches Phychiques. 1921.

Brundage, James A. Law, Sex and Christian Society in the Medieval Europe. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1987.

Bruner, Carlos A. "Otra nota sobre parapsicologia: sobre el significado del termino" (Another Note on Parapsychology: Concerning the Meaning of the Term), Revista Mexicana de Psicologia 2, no. 2 (July-December 1985): 165–167.

Brunner, S. Aus dem Nachlasse des Furstein Aloysius von Hehenlohe. Regensburg: G. J. Manz, 1851.

Brunton, Paul. A Message from Arunchala. 1936. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1971.

———. A Search in Secret Egypt. London, 1935. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1970.

Brunton, Ron. The Abandoned Narcotic: Kava and Cultural Instability in Melanesia. Cambridge; New York: Cambridge University Press, 1989.

Bry, Adelaide. est, Erhard Seminars Training: 60 Hours That Transform Your Life. New York: Avon, 1976.

Bryant, Jacob. A New System; or an Analysis of Ancient Mythology. 3 vols. 1776. Reprint, New York: Garland, 1979.

Brynes, Steven. Wicca Course. Palm Springs, Calif.: International Guild of Advanced Sciences Research Society, 1994.

Bubba Free John [Franklin Jones]. No Remedy. Lower Lake, Calif.: Dawn Horse Press, 1976.

Buber, Martin. Tales of the Hasidim: The Early Masters. London: Thames & Hudson, 1956. Reprint, New York: Schocken, 1961.

———. The Legend of the Baal-Shem. New York: Schocken Books, 1955.

Buchanan, J. Rhodes. Manual of Psychometry: The Dawn of a New Civilization. Boston: Dudley M. Holman, 1885.

Bucke, Richard Maurice. Cosmic Consciousness: A Study in the Evolution of the Human Mind. Innes & Sons, 1910. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1961; New York: Citadel Press, 1970.

———. Richard Maurice Bucke, Medical Mystic: Letters of Dr. Bucke to Walt Whitman and His Friends. Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 1977.

Buckland, Ray. Ray Buckland's Magic Cauldron. Lakeville, Minn.: Galde Press, Inc., 1995.

———. Scottish Witchcraft. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1999.

———. Witchcraft: Ancient and Modern. New York: H. C. Publishers, 1970.

———. Witchcraft from the Inside. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1999.

Budapest, Zsuzsanna E. The Feminist Book of Lights and Shadows. Venice, Calif.: Luna Publications, 1976.

———. The Grandmother of Time. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1989.

———. The Holy Book of Women's Mysteries. Los Angeles: Susan B. Anthony Coven Number One, 1979.

Budge, E. A. Wallis. Amulets and Superstitions. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1930. Reprinted as Amulets and Talismans. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1961.

———. The Book of the Dead. London, 1898. Reprint, New York: Dover, 1967; New York: Causeway, 1974.

———. Egyptian Magic. London: Kegan Paul, 1899.

———. The Gods of the Egyptians. 2 vols. London, 1898.

———. A History of Egypt. 8 vols. London, 1902. 4 vols. Reprint, The Netherlands: Anthropological Publications, n.d.

———. The Mummy. London, 1925.

———. Tutankhamen: Amenism, Atenism and Egyptian Monotheism. London: M. Hopkinson, 1923. Reprint, New York: Bell Publishing, 1979.

Buess, Lynn M. Numerology for the New Age. Marina del Rey, Calif.: DeVorss, 1978.

Bugge, E. S. The Home of the Eddic Poems. London: David Nutt, 1899.

Bugliosi, Vincent, with Curt Gentry. Helter Skelter. New York: W. W. Norton, 1972. Reprint, New York: Bantam, 1975.

Bulkeley, Kelly. Visions of the Night: Dreams, Religion, and Psychology. Albany.: State University of New York Press, 1999.

Bulkley, Patricia. "Pre-Death Dreams and Visions: A Study of Their Religious Significance," Dissertation Abstracts International Section A: Humanities & Social Sciences 56, no. 11-A (May 1996): 4434.

Bull, K. T. "Mrs. Piper—A Study." Harper's Bazaar 33 (1900).

Bull, Titus. "Mental Obsession and the Latent Faculty." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 32 (1938): 260.

———. "Resistance to Metaphysical Science." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 17 (1927): 645.

Bullard, Thomas E. "Fresh Air, or Air Castles in Folklore Theories?" Journal of UFO Studies, 4 (1992): 165–73.

———. On Stolen Time: A Summary of a Comparative Study of the UFO Abduction Mystery. Bloomington, Ind.: The Author, 1987.

Bunger, Fred S., and Hans N. Von Koerber. A New Light Shines Out of the Present Darkness. Philadelphia: Dorrance, 1971.

Bunker, Dusty. Numerology and Your Future. Rockport, Mass.: Para Research, 1980.

Bunson, Matthew E. The Vampire Encyclopedia. New York: Crown Publishing Group, Inc., 1993.

Burgoyne, Thomas H. Celestial Dynamics. Denver: Astro-Philosophical Publishing, 1896.

———. The Language of the Stars. Denver: Astro-Philosophical Publishing, 1892.

———. Light of Egypt: The Science of the Soul and the Stars. Albuquerque, N.Mex.: Sun Publishing, 1980.

Burkan, Tolly. Guiding Yourself into a Spiritual Reality. Twin Harte, Calif.: Reunion Press, 1983.

Burke, O. M. Among the Dervishes. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1973.

Burkert, Walter. Ancient Mystery Cults. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1987.

Burl, Aubrey. Prehistoric Astronomy and Ritual. Aylesbury, Bucks, England: Shire Publications, 1983.

———. The Stone Circles of the British Isles. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1976.

Burland, C. A. The Arts of the Alchemists. London, 1967.

Burleson, Donald R. Lovecraft: Disturbing the Universe. Lexington: University Press of Kentucky, 1990.

Burman, Edward. The Assassins. Wellingborough, UK: Crucible, 1987.

Burnham, Kenneth E. God Comes to America. Boston: Lambeth Press, 1979.

Burr, Chauncey. Knocks for the Knockings. New York: Burr Brothers, 1851.

Burr, Harold S. The Fields of Life. New York: Ballantine, 1973.

Burridge, Kennelm. Mambu. New York: Harper Torchbook, 1978.

Burt, Cyril. Psychology and Psychical Research. London: Society for Psychical Research, 1968.

Burton, Jean. Heyday of a Wizard: Daniel Home the Medium. London: George G. Harrap, 1948.

Burton, Maurice. The Sixth Sense of Animals. New York: Taplinger, 1973; London: Dent, 1973.

Burton, Sir Richard. Vikram and the Vampire, or Tales of Hindu Devilry. London: Tilston & Edwards, 1832. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1969.

Butler, Bill. Dictionary of the Tarot. New York: Schocken Books, 1975.

Butler, Christopher. Number Symbolism. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1970.

Butler, Walter E. Apprenticed to Magic. 1962. Reprint. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1990.

———. How to Develop Clairvoyance. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1971.

———. How to Develop Psychometry. London: Aquarian Press; New York: Samuel Weiser, 1971.

———. How to Read the Aura, Practice Psychometry, Telepathy, and Clairvoyance. New York: Warner Destiny Books, 1978. Rochester, Vt.: Inner Traditions International, Limited, 1998.

———. An Introduction to Telepathy. 1975.

———. Magic: Its Ritual, Power, and Purpose. London: Aquarian Press, 1952.

———. The Magician: His Training and Work. London: The Aquarian Press, 1959. Reprint, North Hollywood, Calif.: Wilshire Book, 1959.

Butt, Audrey. "The Shaman's Legal Role," Revista do Museu Paulista, Nova Série, Vol. 16 (1965–66).

Butt, G. Baseden. Life of Madame Blavatsky. London: Rider, 1926.

Bynner, Witter, trans. The Way of Life According to Lao Tzu. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1944.

Byrd, Anita. Handwriting Analysis: A Guide to Personality. New York: Arco, 1982.

Byrne, Peter. The Search for Big Foot: Monster, Myth or Man? Washington, D.C.: Acropolis Books, 1975. Reprint, New York: Pocket Books, 1976.

Cabaniss, Allen. Charlemagne. New York: Twayne Publishers, 1972.

Cadbury, H. J. George Fox's "Book of Miracles." Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge University Press, 1948.

Caddy, Eileen. The Dawn of Change. Forres, Scotland: Findhorn Publications, 1979.

———. The Spirit of Findhorn. New York: Harper & Row, 1976. Reprint, London: L. N. Fowler, 1977.

Cadoret, Remi J. "An Exploratory Experiment: Continuous EEG Recoding During Clairvoyant Card Tests." Journal of Parapsychology 28 (1964).

———. "Effect of Novelty in Test Conditions on ESP Performance." Journal of Parapsychology 16 (1952).

Cadoret, Remi J., and J. Fahler. "ESP Card Tests of College Students With and Without Hypnosis." Journal of Parapsychology 22 (1958).

Cadoret, Remi J., and J. G. Pratt. "The Consistent Missing Effect in ESP." Journal of Parapsychology 14 (1950).

Cadwallader, M. E. Hydesville in History. Chicago: Progressive Thinker Publishing House, 1922.

Cahagnet, Louis-Alphonse. The Celestial Telegraph; Or, Secrets of the Life to Come Revealed Through Magnetism. London, 1850. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1976.

———. Magnátisme arcanes de la vie future devoile. Paris, 1848. Translated as The Celestial Telegraph. 2 vols. New York, 1851.

———. Magnátisme: Encyclopédie magnétique spiritualiste. N.p., 1861.

———. Sanctuaire au Spiritualisme. Paris, 1850. Translated as The Sanctuary of Spiritualism: A Study of the Human Soul and of Its Relation with the Universe through Somnambulism and Ecstasy. N.p., 1851.

———. Thérapeutique du magnétisme et du Somnambulisme appropriée aux maladies les plus communes. N.p., 1883.

Cain, Nellie B. Exploring the Mysteries of Life. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Spiritual Research Society, 1972.

———. Gems of Truth from the Masters. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Spiritual Research Society, 1965.

Caine, Mary. The Glastonbury Zodiac: Key to the Mysteries of Britain. Torquay, England: Grael Communications, 1978.

Calder-Marshall, Arthur. The Magic of My Youth. N.p., 1951.

Calef, Robert. More Wonders of the Invisible World; or, The Wonders of the Invisible World Display'd in Five Parts. London, 1700.

Calmet, Augustine. Dissertations Upon the Apparitions of Angels, Demons, and Ghosts, and Concerning . . . Vampires. Paris: De Burel'aine, 1746. Reprint, London, 1759.

———. The Phantom World; or, The History and Philosophy of Spirits, Apparitions, & Co. 2 vols. London: Richard Bentley, 1850; Philadelphia: A. Hart, 1850.

———. Dissertations sur les apparitions, des anges, des démons et des esprits, et sur les revenants et vampires de Hongrie, de Boheme, de Moravie et de Silésie. Rev. ed. Paris, 1751. Reprinted as The Phantom World. 2 vols. London: Richard Bentley, 1850.

———. Treatise on Vampires & Revenants: The Phantom World. Brighton, Sussex, England: Desert Island Books, 1995. Digot, A. Notice biographique et littéraire sur Dom Augustin Calmet. Nancy, France, 1860.

Cambridge Buddhist Association. Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge Buddhist Association, 1960.

Cameron, Charles. Who Is Guru Maharaj Ji? New York: Bantam Books, 1973.

Cameron, David. Who Is Guru Maharaj Ji? New York: Ballantine Books, 1973.

Cameron, Verne L. Aquavideo; Locating Underground Water. Santa Barbara, Calif.: El Cariso, 1970.

———. Map Dowsing. Santa Barbara, Calif.: El Cariso, 1971.

———. Oil Locating. Santa Barbara, Calif.: El Cariso, 1971.

Campbell, Alan Tornmaid. To Square with Genesis. Causal Statements and Shamanic Ideas in Wayapi. Iowa City: University of Iowa Press, 1989.

Campbell, Bruce F. A History of the Theosophical Movement. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1980.

Campbell, Elizabeth Montgomery, and David Solomon. The Search for Morag. London: Tom Stacey, 1972.

Campbell, G. The Knights Templars, Their Rise and Fall. London: Duckworth; New York: McBride, 1937.

Campbell, J. G. Witchcraft and Second Sight in Scottish Highlands and Islands. Glasgow: Alex, MacLehose, 1902.

Campbell, John F. Popular Tales of the West Highlands, Orally Collected. 4 vols. Edinburgh, 1860–62. Rev. ed.: London and Paisley: Alexander Gardner, 1890–93. Reprint, Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1969.

Campbell, John L., and Trevor H. Hall. Strange Things: The Story of Fr. Allan McDonald, Ada Goodrich Freer, and the Society for Psychical Research's Enquiry into Highland Second Sight. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1968.

Campbell, John W., Jr. "Psionic Machine-Type One." Astounding Science Fiction (June 1956).

Campbell, Joseph. The Hero With a Thousand Faces. New York: Pantheon, 1949.

———. Historical Atlas of World Mythologies. 2 vols. New York: Harper, 1983–88.

———. The Masks of God. 6 vols. New York: Viking, 1959–68.

———. Myths to Live By. New York: Viking, 1972.

Campbell, Steuart Campbell. The Loch Ness Monster: The Evidence. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1986.

Canada, Steve. Crop Circles: The Theory That Works. The Author, 1998.

———. Crop Circles: A Vocabulary of the Symbols. The Author, 1998.

———. Crop Circles: Interplanetary Communication Begins. The Author, 1997.

———. Crop Circles: Returning Rulers from Biblical Planet Olam. The Author, 1998.

———. Crop Circles & Isis, "Mistress of the Great Pyramid" at Giza. The Author, 1997.

———. Crop Circles. . .The End of Time. The Author, 1996.

Candragomin. Difficult Beginnings: Three Works on the Bodhisattva Path. Boston: Shambhala, 1985.

Cannell, J. C. The Secrets of Houdini. London, 1931. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1976.

Cannon, Alexander. Hypnotism, Suggestion & Faith-Healing. 1932.

———. The Invisible Influence. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1934.

———. The Power of Karma. N.p., 1936.

———. Powers That Be. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1935.

———. The Science of Hypnotism. N.p., 1936.

———. Sleeping Through Space. N.p., 1938.

———. "Some Hypnotic Secrets." The British Journal of Medical Hypnotism 1, 1 (1949).

Cannon, Walter B. "Voodoo Death," American Anthropologist, 44 (1942): 169–181.

Capp, Bernard. Astrology and the Popular Press: English Almanacs 1500–1800. London: Faber & Faber, 1979.

Capron, E. W. Modern Spiritualism: Its Facts and Fanaticisms, Its Consistencies and Contradictions. Boston: B. Marsh, 1855. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1976.

Capron, E. W., and H. D. Barron. Singular Revelations: Explanation and History of the Mysterious Communion with Spirits. Auburn, N.Y., 1850.

Carden, Karen W., and Robert W. Pelton. The Persecuted Prophets: The Story of the Frenzied Snake Handlers. New York: A. S. Barnes; London: Thomas Yoseloff, 1976.

Carey, Ken. Notes to My Children: A Simplified Metaphysics. Kansas City, Mo.: Uni-Sun, 1984.

———. Return of the Bird Tribes. Kansas City, Mo.: Uni-Sun, 1988.

———. Terra Christa: The Global Spiritual Awakening. Kansas City, Mo.: Uni-Sun, 1985.

———. Vision. Kansas City, Mo.: Uni-Sun, 1985.

Carey, Ken [Raphael]. The Starseed Transmissions: An Extraterrestrial Report. Kansas City, Mo.: Uni-Sun, 1982.

Carington, Walter Whately. The Death of Materialism. N.p., 1932.

———. The Foundations of Spiritualism. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1920.

———. Matter, Mind and Meaning. Completed by H. H. Price. London: Methuen, 1949.

———. "The Quantitative Study of Trance Personalities." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research. Part 1, 42 (1934): 173. Part 2, 43 (1935): 319. Part 3, 44 (1937): 189.

———. Telepathy: An Outline of its Fact, Theory and Implications. London: Methuen, 1945. Reprint, New York: Gordon Press, 1972.

———. A Theory of the Mechanism of Survival. N.p., 1920.

Carmichael, Alexander. Carmina Gadelica, Hymns and Incantations. 2 vols. 1900. 2nd ed. 5 vols. Edinburgh & London, 1928–54.

Carmona, Michel. Les Diables de Loudun: Sorcellerie et politique sous Richelieu. Paris: Fayard, 1988.

Caron, M., and Serge Hutin. Les Alchimistes. 1959. Translated as The Alchemists. New York: Grove Press, 1961.

Carpenter, James C. "The Early Parapsychological Contributions," Journal of Parapsychology 57, no. 1 (March 1993): 25–37.

Carr, John Dickson. The Life of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. London: John Murray, 1949.

Carrel, Alexis. Man the Unknown. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1935.

———. Reflections on Life. New York: Hawthorn, 1953.

———. Voyage to Lourdes. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1950.

Carrié, Abbé. L'hydroscopographie et métalloscopogragie, ou l'art de découvrir les sources et les gisement metallifers au moyen de l'é lectromagnétisme. Saintes, France, 1863.

Carrington, Hereward. The American Séances with Eusapia Palladino. New York: Helix Press, 1954.

———. The Case for Psychic Survival. New York: Citadel Press, 1957.

———. Eusapia Palladino and Her Phenomena. New York: B. E. Dodge, London: T. Werner Laurie, 1909.

———. "An Examination and Analysis of the Evidence for 'Dematerialization' as Demonstrated in Mons. Aksakof's Book." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research (March 1907).

———. Higher Psychical Development. London: Kegan Paul, 1920. Reprint, New York: Dodd, Mead, 1924.

———. The Invisible World. New York: The Beechhurst Press; B. Ackerman Inc., 1946.

———. Loaves and Fishes. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1935.

———. Modern Psychic Phenomena. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1919.

———. The Physical Phenomena of Spiritualism: Fraudulent and Genuine. Boston, Small; London: T. Werner Laurie, 1907. Reprint, New York: Dodd, Mead, 1920.

———. Problems of Psychical Research & Theories in the Realm of the Supernormal. N.p., 1921. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

———. "Psychical Phenomena Among Primitive Peoples." Psychic Research (October 1930).

———. Psychic Science and Survival. Manchester, England: Two Worlds Publishing; New York: American Psychical Institute, 1939.

———. The Story of Psychic Science. London: Rider, 1930. Reprint, New York: Ives Washburn, 1931.

———. True Ghost Stories. London, [1933].

———. Vitality, Fasting and Nutrition. New York: Rebman, 1908.

———. Your Psychic Powers and How to Develop Them. New York: American Universities Publishing, 1920. Reprint, New York: Causeway, 1973.

Carrington, Hereward, and J. Meader. Death, Its Causes & Phenomena. London, 1911.

Carrington, Hereward, and Nandor Fodor. Haunted People: Story of the Poltergeist Down the Centuries. New York: E. P. Dutton, New American Library, 1951. Reprinted as The Story of the Poltergeist Down the Centuries. London: Rider, 1953.

Carrington, Hereward, and Sylvan J. Muldoon. The Phenomena of Astral Projection. London: Rider, 1951.

———. The Projection of the Astral Body. 1929. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1970.

Carrithers, Walter A., Jr. "Madam Blavatsky: One of the World's Great Jokers." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 56 (July 1962).

———. The Truth about Madame Blavatsky: An Open Letter to the Author of the Priestess of the Occult. Covina, Calif.: Theosophical University Press, 1947.

Carrol, F. The Prayer of the Early Christians. London: Burns & Oates, 1930.

Carter, C. E. O. An Introduction to Political Astrology. London: L. N. Fowler, 1951.

———. Astrological Aspects. London: L. N. Fowler, 1930.

———. The Encyclopedia of Astrology. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1924.

———. The Principles of Astrology. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1925.

———. The Zodiac and the Soul. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1928.

Carter, Howard. The Tomb of Tut-ankh-Amen. 3 vols. London: Cassell, 1923–33. Reprint, New York: Cooper Square Publishers, 1963.

Carter, Huntley, ed. Spiritualism: Its Present-day Meaning. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott, 1920.

Carter, Lin. Lovecraft: A Look Behind the Cthulhu Mythos. New York: Ballantine Books, 1972.

Carter, Mary Ellen, and William McGarey. Edgar Cayce on Healing. New York: Warner, 1972.

Cartwright, Rosalind D. Night Life: Explorations in Dreaming. Englewood, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1977.

Carty, Charles M. The Two Stigmatists: Padre Pio & Therese Neumann. Dublin: Veritas, 1956.

Carus, Paul. Chinese Astrology. LaSalle, Ill.: Open Court, 1907.

———. History of the Devil and the Idea of Evil. LaSalle, Ill.: Open Court Publishing, 1974. Reprint, Bell Publishing, 1974.

———. Karma: A Study of Buddhist Ethics. La Salle, Ill.: Open Court, 1894.

———. The Soul of Man. Chicago: Open Court, 1900.

"The Cases of Mr. Moss and Mr. Munnings." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 23 (1926).

Casewit, Curtis. Graphology Handbook. Rockport, Mass.: Para Research, 1980.

Cassirer, Manfred. "ESP in Post-Medieval Witchcraft," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 55, no. 815 (April 1989): 350–359.

———. "Helen Victoria Duncan: A Reassessment." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 53, 801 (October 1985).

Cassoli, Piero. "Parapsychology in Italy Today." In Parapsychology Today: A Geographical View. Edited by Allan Angoff and Betty Shapin. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1971.

Castaneda, Carlos. The Eagle's Gift. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1981.

———. Journey to Ixtlan: The Lessons of Don Juan. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1972.

———. The Power of Silence: Further Lessons of Don Juan. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1987.

———. The Second Ring of Power. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1977.

———. A Separate Reality: Further Conversations with Don Juan. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1971. Reprint, New York: Pocket Books, 1991.

———. Tales of Power. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1974.

———. The Teachings of Don Juan: A Yaqui Way of Knowledge. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1998.

Cauzons, Theodore de. La Magie et la Sorcellerie en France. 4 vols. Paris, 1900.

Cavanna, Roberto, and Emilio Servadio. ESP Experiments with LSD 25 and Psilocybin. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1964.

Cavanna, Roberto, and Montague Ullman, eds. Psi and Altered States of Consciousness. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1968.

Cavanna, Roberto, ed. Psi Favorable States of Consciousness. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1970.

Cavendish, Richard. The Black Arts. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1967.

Cayce, Edgar. Atlantis: Fact or Fiction. Virginia Beach, Va.: ARE Press, 1962.

———. Auras. Virginia Beach, Va.: ARE Press, 1970.

———. Edgar Cayce on Atlantis. New York: Paperback Library, 1968. New York: Warner Books, Inc., 1999.

———. The Edgar Cayce Reader. 2 vols. New York: Paperback Library, 1969.

Cayce, Hugh Lynn. Earth Changes Update. Virginia Beach, Va.: ARE Press, 1980.

———. Faces of Fear. New York: Berkeley Books, 1980.

———. The Jesus I Knew. Virginia Beach, Va.: ARE Press, 1984.

———. Venture Inward. New York: Paperback Library, 1966.

Cazotte, Jacques. Le Diable. Paris: B. Grasset, 1921. Translated as The Devil in Love. London: Consortium, 1993.

Cellini, Benvenuto. Autobiography. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1961.

Centennial Book of Modern Spiritualism in America. Chicago: The National Spiritualist Association of the United States of America, 1948.

The Centennial Memorial of Modern Spiritualism Records, 1848–1948. Lily Dale, N.Y.: National Spiritualist Association of the U.S.A., 1988.

Cerney, J. V. Acupressure: Acupuncture without Needles. West Nyack, N.Y.: Parker Publishing, 1974. Reprint, Upper Saddle River, N.J.: Prentice Hall Press, 1998.

Cerutti, Edwina. Olga Worrall, Mystic with the Healing Hands. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

Cerve, Wishar S. [H. Spencer Lewis]. Lemuria: The Lost Continent of the Pacific. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge, AMORC, 1931.

Ch'u Ta-Kao, trans. Tao Te Ching. London: Allen & Unwin; New York: Samuel Weiser, 1937.

Chakravarti, Chintaharan. Tantras: Studies on Their Religion and Literature. Calcutta, India: Punthi Pustak, 1963.

Chamberlin, E. R. Antichrist and the Millennium. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1975.

Chambers, Howard V. Dowsing, Water Witches & Divining Rods for the Millions. Los Angeles: Sherbourne Press, 1969.

———. Phrenology. Sherbourne, 1968.

Chambers, Robert. Domestic Annals of Scotland from the Reformation to the Revolution. 2 vols. Edinburgh, 1858.

———. Testimony: Its Posture in the Scientific World. N.p., 1959.

———. Traditions of Edinburgh. N.p., 1825.

Chan, Chen Chi. "Tibetan Phantasies." Tomorrow 6, 2 (spring 1958).

Chan, Pedro. Finger Acupressure. New York: Ballantine Books, 1975.

Chancellor, P. Handbook of the Bach Flower Remedies. London: C. W. Daniel, 1971.

Chandrasekhar, Sripati. "A Dirty Filthy Book." Berkeley: University of California Press, 1981.

Chaney, Earlyne. Beyond Tomorrow. Upland, Calif.: Astara, 1985.

———. Remembering. Los Angeles: Astara's Library of Mystical Classics, 1974.

———. Revelations of Things to Come. Upland, Calif.: Astara, 1982.

———. Secrets from Mount Shasta. Anaheim, Calif.: Stockton Trade Press, 1953.

Chaney, Earlyne, and William L. Messick. Kundalini and the Third Eye. Upland, Calif.: Astara's Library of Mystical Classics, 1980.

Chaney, Robert. Mysticism: The Journey Within. Upland, Calif.: Astara's Library of Mystical Classics, 1979.

———. The Inner Way. Los Angeles: De Vorss, 1962.

Chaney, Robert G. "Hear My Prayer." Eaton Rapids, Mich.: Library, Spiritualist Episcopal Church, 1942.

Chaney, Robert Galen. Mediums and the Development of Mediumship. Michigan: Psychic Books, 1946. Reprint, Freeport, N.Y.: Books for Libraries, 1972.

Chang, Chung-Yuan. Tao: A New Way of Thinking. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

Chang, Garma Chen-Chi. Esoteric Teachings of the Tibetan Tantra. Lausanne, Switzerland: Falcon's Wing Press, 1961.

———. Teachings of Tibetan Yoga. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1963.

———. "Tibetan Phantasies." Tomorrow 6, 2 (Spring 1958): 13–16.

Chang, Garma Chen-Chi, ed. The Hundred Thousand Songs of Milarepa. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1962. Reprint, Boulder, Colo: Shambhala, 1977.

Chapman, Janine. Quest for Dion Fortune. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1993.

Chapman, Robert. Unidentified Flying Objects. London: Arthur Barker, 1969.

Charcot, Jean Martin. Lectures on the Diseases of the Nervous System. London, 1881. Reprint, New York: Hafner, 1962.

———. Les demoniaques dans l'art. Paris, 1887. Reprint, Amsterdam: B. M. Israel, 1972.

Charet, F. X. Spiritualism and the Foundations of C. G. Jung's Psychology. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1993.

Chari, C. T. K. "The Challenge of Psi; New Horizons of Scientific Research." Journal of Parapsychology 38 (1974).

———. "Regurgitation, Mediumship, and Yoga." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 47 (1973).

Charles, R. H. A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life in Israel, in Judaism and in Christianity. London, 1899. Reprinted as Eschatology, The Doctrine of a Future Life in Israel, in Judaism, and in Christianity: A Critical History. New York: Schocken Books, 1963.

Charles, R. H., ed. The Book of Enoch [Ethiopic text]. London: Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1917.

Charlton, I. W. The Revival in Wales. London, 1905. (Pamphlet)

Charpentier, John. L'Ordre des Templiers. Paris: La Colombe, 1945.

Charpentier, Louis. The Mysteries of Chartres Cathedral. London: Research into Lost Knowledge Organization, 1972. Reprint, New York: Avon, 1972.

Charroux, Robert. The Mysteries of the Andes. New York: Avon, 1977.

Chase, Warren. Forty Years on the Spiritual Rostrum. Boston, 1888.

———. The Life Line of the Lone One, an Autobiography of the World's Child. Boston: B. Marsh, 1857.

Chee Soo. Chinese Yoga: The Chinese Art of K'ai Men. London: Gordon & Cremonesi, 1977.

Cheek, David B. "Pre- & Peri-Natal: Are Telepathy, Clairvoyance and "Hearing" Possible in Utero? Suggestive Evidence as Revealed During Hypnotic Age-Regression Studies of Prenatal Memory," Psychology Journal 7, no. 2: Winter 1992: 125–137.

Cheek, David B., and Leslie M. LeCron. Clinical Hypnotherapy. New York: Grine & Stratton, 1968.

Cheetham, Erika. The Prophecies of Nostradamus. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1972. Reprint, London: Neville Spearman, 1973; London: Corgi, 1975.

Cheiro [Count Louis Hamon]. The Book of Numbers. London, 1926. Revised as Cheiro's Book of Numbers. London: Barrie & Jenkins, 1978.

———. Cheiro's Complete Palmistry. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1968. Reprint, New York: Dell, 1969.

———. Cheiro's Guide to the Hand. London: Nichols, 1900. Reprint, London: Corgi, 1975.

———. Cheiro's Language of the Hand; A Complete Practical Work on the Science of Cheirognomy and Cheiromancy. 28th ed. London: H. Jenkins, 1949. Reprint, London: Corgi, 1975.

———. Cheiro's Memoirs: The Reminiscences of a Society Palmist. London: William Rider, 1912.

———. Cheiro's Year Book. Rev. ed., London: London Publishing, 1930.

———. Mysteries and Romances of the World's Greatest Occultists. London: Herbert Jenkins, 1935.

———. You and Your Hand. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, Doran, 1931.

———. You and Your Star. Los Angeles: London Publishing; London: Herbert Jenkins, 1926.

Cheney, Sheldon. Men Who Have Walked with God. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1968. Reprint, New York: Dell, 1974.

Cheng, Man-ching. Tai-Chi. Berkeley, Calif.: North Atlantic, 1981.

Cherryh, C. J. Rusalka. New York: Ballantine Books, 1989.

Chesi, Gert. Faith Healers in the Philippines. Austria: Perlinger Verlag, 1981.

Chesneaux, Jean. Secret Societies in China in the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries. Ann Arbor, Mich.: University of Michigan Press, 1971.

Chestnut, V. K. "Plants Used by the Indians of Mendocino County, California." Contributions of U.S. National Herbarium, Vol. 7, no. 3. Washington (D.C.), 1902.

Chevalier, J. C. Experiments in Spiritualism; or, The Adjuration of Spirits, by a late member of Mr. Home's Spiritual Athenaeum. London, 1867.

Chevreul, M. E. De la baguette divinatoire, du puendule dit explorateur et des tables tournantes, au point de vue du l'histoire, de la critique et de la méthode expérimentale. Paris, 1854.

Chia, Mantak. Awaken Healing Energy Through the Tao: The Taoist Secret of Circulating Internal Power. New York: Aurora Press, 1983.

———. Awaken Healing Energy through the Tao. New York: Aurora Press, 1983.

———. Iron Shirt Chi Kung I. Huntington, N.Y.: Healing Tao Books, 1986.

Chia, Mantak, and Maneewan Chia. Healing Love Through the Tao: Cultivating Female Sexual Energy. Huntington, N.Y.: Healing Tao Books, 1986.

Chia, Mantak, and Michael Winn. Taoist Secrets of Love: Cultivating Male Sexual Energy. New York: Aurora Press, 1984.

Chidananda, Swami. Destiny of Man. Shivanandanagar, India: Divine Life Society, 1989.

———. Forest Academy Lectures on Yoga. Rishikish, India: The Author, 1960.

———. Path to Blessedness. Shivanandanagar, India: Divine Life Society, 1975.

———. The Philosophy, Psychology, and Practice of Yoga. Shivanandanagar, India: Divine Life Society, 1984.

———. Truth that Liberates. Shivanandanagar, India: Divine Life Society, 1993.

A Child at School [Samuel Guppy]. Mary Jane: or Spiritualism Chemically Explained. London: John King, 1863.

Child, Francis J. The English and Scottish Popular Ballads. 5 vols. Boston, 1882–98. Reprint, Folklore Press; Pageant Book, 1957.

Child, I. L. "Psychology and anomalous observations: The question of ESP in dreams." American Psychologist, 40, (1985): 1219–30.

Ching-nan, Lee, and R. Figueroa. Techniques of Self-Defense. New York: A. S. Barnes, 1963.

Chinmoy, Sri. Arise! Awake! Thoughts of a Yogi. New York: F. Fell, 1972.

———. Astrology: The Supernatural and the Beyond. Hollis, N.Y.: Vishma Press,1973.

———. Death and Reincarnation: Eternity's Voyage. Jamaica, N.Y.: Agni Press, 1974.

———. Mother India's Light-house. San Francisco: Shi Chinmoy Center, n.d.

———. The Seeker's Mind. Jamaica, N.Y.: Agni Press, 1978.

Chippendale, Christopher. Stonehenge Complete. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1983.

Chkashige, Masumi. Oriental Alchemy. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1936.

Chnaiderman, Miriam. "O processo psicanalitico: A experiencia mistica e mitica na passagem do sagrado ao tragico" (The Psychoanalytic Process: The Mystical and Mythical Experiences in the Passage from the Sacred to the Tragic Dimension), Percurso: Revista de Psicanalise 6, 11[2] (1993): 19–24.

Cholmondely-Pennell, H. "Bringing it to Book": Facts of Slate-Writing through Mr. W. Eglinton. London, 1884.

Chorvinsky, Mark. "The Mary F. Morgawr Photographs Investigation." Strange Magazine 8 (Fall 1991): 8–9, 11, 46–48.

———. "The Shiels-Related Fairy Photos." Strange Magazine 9 (spring/summer 1992): 24–25, 60.

Chrétien de Troyes. Le Conte del Graal (Perceval). Edited by Félix Lecoy. Paris: Champion, 1973.

Christensen, Alice, and David Rankin. The Light of Yoga Society Beginner's Manual. Cleveland Heights, Ohio: Om Ram Productions, 1972. Revised edition as: Christensen, Alice. The American Yoga Association Beginner's Manual. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1987.

Christian Literature Society. Theosophy Exposed; or, Mrs. Besant and Her Guru: Appeal to Educated Hindus. Madras, India: SPCK Press, 1893.

The Christian Mystery School. Pelham, N.H.: Homebringing Mission of Jesus Christ, 1983.

Christian Science: A Sourcebook of Contemporary Materials. Boston: Christian Science Publishing Society, 1990.

Christian, Paul [Jean Baptiste Pitois]. Historie de la Magie, du monde Surnaturel et de la fatalité a travers les Temps et les Peuples. 1870. Translated by Ross Nichols as The History and Practice of Magic. New York: Citadel Press, 1969. Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing, 1994.

The Christic Teachings. Quakertown, Pa.: Church of Illumination, 1955.

Christie-Murray, David. Voices from the Gods: Speaking in Tongues. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1978.

Christmas, Henry. The Cradle of the Twin Giants, Science and History. 2 vols. London, 1849.

Christopher, Milbourne. ESP, Seers and Psychics. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1970.

———. Houdini: The Untold Story. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1969. Reprint, New York: Pocket Books, 1970.

———. The Illustrated History of Magic. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1973. Reprint, London: Robert Hale, 1975.

———. Mediums, Mystics & The Occult. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1975.

———. Panorama of Magic. New York: Dover Publications, 1962.

———. Search for the Soul: An Insider's Report on the Continuing Quest by Psychics and Scientists for Evidence of Life After Death. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1979.

Ch'u, Yuan. The Nine Songs: A Study of Shamanism in Ancient China. London: George Allen and Unwin, 1955.

Churchward, James. Children of Mu. New York: Ives Washburn, 1931.

———. Cosmic Forces of Mu. New York: Ives Washburn, 1935.

———. The Lost Continent of Mu: The Motherland of Man. New York: Ives Washburn, 1926.

———. The Sacred Symbols of Mu. New York: Ives Washburn, 1933.

Cirlot, J. E. A Dictionary of Symbols. New York: Dorset Press, 1991.

A Citizen of the United States [James McBride]. Symmes' Theory of Concentric Spheres; Demonstrating that the Earth is Hollow, Habitable Within, and Widely Open About the Poles. Cincinnati, Ohio: Morgan, Lodge, and Fisher, 1826.

Clarie, Thomas C. Occult Bibliography: An Annotated List of Books Published in English, 1971 through 1975. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1978.

———. Occult/Paranormal Bibliography: An Annotated List of Books Published in English, 1976 through 1981. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1984.

Clark, Doug. Earthquake—1982: When the Planets Align—(Syzygy). Garden Grove, Calif.: Lyfe Production Publications, 1976.

Clark, Jerome. Encyclopedia of Strange and Unexplained Phenomena. Detroit: Gale Research, 1993.

———. The Emergence of a Phenomenon: UFOs from the Beginning through 1959. The UFO Encyclopedia. Volume 2. Detroit: Omnigraphics, 1992.

———. "Life in a Pyramid." Fate 36, no. 6 (June 1983): 38–44.

———. "The Thickets of Magonia." International UFO Reporter 15, 1 (January/February 1990): 4–11.

———. The UFO Encyclopedia. I, UFOs in the 1980s. Detroit: Apogee Books, 1990.

———. UFOs in the 1980s. The UFO Encyclopedia. Volume 1. Detroit: Apogee Books, 1990.

———. "Wagging the Dog." International UFO Reporter 19, 1 (January/February 1994): 3, 22–24.

Clark, Jerome, and J. Gordon Melton. "The Crusade Against the Paranormal." Parts 1 and 2. Fate 32, 9 (September 1979): 70–76; 32, 10 (October 1979): 87–94.

Clark, Linda. The Ancient Art of Color Therapy. Old Greenwich, Conn.: Devin-Adair, 1975.

Clark, Richard J., S.J. The Holy Coat of Treves. London, 1892.

Clark, Tom. The Great Naropa Poetry Wars. Santa Barbara, Calif.: Cadmus Editions, 1980.

Clark, Walter Houston. The Oxford Group; Its History and Significance. New York: Bookman Associates, 1951.

———. The Psychology of Religion; An Introduction to Religious Experience and Behavior. New York: Macmillan, 1958.

———. Religious Experience; Its Nature and Functioning in the Human Psyche. Springfield, Ill.: Charles Thomas, 1973.

Clark, Walter Houston, and M. H. Malony, J. Daane, and A. R. Tippett. Chemical Ecstasy; Psychedelic Drugs and Religion. New York: Sheed and Ward, 1969.

Clarke, Ada. Memoirs of the Wesley Family. 4th ed. London: W. Tegg, 1860.

Clarke, Arthur C. Ascent to Orbit: A Scientific Autobiography. New York: John Wiley, 1984.

———. The Ghost from the Great Banks. London: V. Gollancz, 1990.

———. Profiles of the Future: An Inquiry into the Limits of the Possible. New York: Holt Rinehart, and Winston, 1984.

Clarke, Edward H. Visions: A Study of False Sight. Boston, 1878.

Clayton, Rev. George. Angelology; Agency & Ministry of Holy Angels. New York, 1851.

Cleather, Alice L. H. P. Blavatsky: A Great Betrayal. Calcutta: Thacker, Spink, 1922.

Clébert, Jean-Paul. The Gypsies. London: Vista Books, 1963. Reprint, Harmondsworth, Middlesex, UK: Penguin Books, 1967.

Clemens, Samuel Langhorne. The Writings of Mark Twain. New York: Harpers, 1907.

Clifford, Hugh. In Court and Kampong. London: Grant Richards, 1897.

———. Studies in Brown Humanity. London: Grant Richards, 1898.

Clissold, Augustus. The Prophetic Spirit in its Relation to Wisdom and Madness. London, 1870.

Clodd, Clara M. The Ageless Wisdom of Life. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1956.

Close, F. The Tester Tested; or Table Moving, Turning, Talking, Not Diabolical: A Review of the Publications of the Rev. Messrs. Godfrey, Gillson, Vincent, and Dibdin. London and Cheltenham, 1853.

Clulee, Nicholas H. John Dee's Natural Philosophy: Between Science and Religion. New York: Routledge, 1988.

Clymer, R. Swinburne. The Age of Treason. Quakertown, Pa.: Humanitarian Society, 1959.

Clymer, R. Swinburne. The Book of Rosicrucie. 3 Vols. Quakertown, Penn: Philosophical Publishing, 1946–49.

———. Christisis. Quakertown, Pa.: Philosophical Publishing, 1945.

———. A Compendium of Occult Law. Quakertown, Pa.: Philosophical Publishing, 1938.

———. Diet: A Key to Health. Quakertown, Pa.: Humanitarian Society, 1930.

———. The Fraternitas Rosae Crucis. Quakertown, Pa.: Philosophical Publishing, 1929.

———. The Interpretation of St. John. Quakertown, Pa.: Philosophical Publishing, 1953.

———. The Rose Cross Order. Allentown, Pa.: Philosophical Publishing, 1916.

———. The Rosicrucian Fraternity in America. 2 vols. Quakertown, Pa.: Rosicrucian Foundation, 1935.

———. The Rosy Cross: Its Teachings. Quakertown, Pa.: Beverly Hall, 1965.

———. The Way to Happiness. Quakertown, Pa.: Humanitarian Society, 1920.

Coates, Austin. Numerology. London: Frederick Muller, 1974. Reprint, London: Mayflower, 1978.

Coates, James. Has W. T. Stead Returned? London: L. N. Fowler, 1913.

———. Photographing the Invisible: Practical Studies in Supernormal Photography, Script, and Other Allied Phenomena. London: L. N. Fowler, 1911. Reprint, North Stratford, N.H.: Ayer Publishing, 1973.

Cobbe, Frances Power. The Peak in Darien. London, 1882.

Cockayne, T. O. Leechdoms, Wortcunning, and Starcraft. 2 vols. London, 1864–1866. Reprint, London: Holland Press, 1968.

Codrington, R. H. The Melanesians: Studies in Their Anthropology and Folk-lore. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1891.

Cohen, D. Sleep and Dreaming: Origins, Nature and Functions. New York: Pergamon Press, 1981.

Cohen, Daniel. Curses, Hexes and Spells. Philadelphia: Lippincott, 1974.

———. The Encyclopedia of Ghosts. New York: Avon Books, 1991.

———. The Encyclopedia of Monsters. New York: Avon Books, 1991.

———. Encyclopedia of the Strange. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1985.

Cohen, Shaye J. D. From the Maccabees to the Mishnah. Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1987.

Cohn, Norman. Europe's Inner Demons. New York: Basic Books, Inc., 1975.

Cohn, Shari A. "A Survey on Scottish Second Sight." In Research in Parapsychology, 1993: Abstracts and Papers from the Thirty-sixth Annual Convention of the Parapsychological Association, 1993. Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, Inc., 1998.

Coil, Henry. Coil's Masonic Encyclopedia. Richmond, Va.: Macoy Publishing, 1961.

———. Freemasonry Through Six Centuries. 2 vols. Richmond, Va.: Macoy Publishing, 1961.

Colby, Benjamin N., and Lore M. Colby. The Daykeeper. The Life and Discourse of an Ixil Diviner. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1981.

Cole, J. A. Abayomi. Astrological Geomancy in Africa. London, 1898.

Coleridge, Samuel Taylor. Selected Poems. London: Oxford University Press, 1965.

Colinon, Maurice. Faux prophètes et sectes d'aujourd'hui. N.p., 1953.

———. Guide de la France religieuse et mystique. Paris: Tchou, 1969.

———. Le Phénomène des sectes au 20ème siècle. N.p., 1959.

———. Les Guérisseurs. N.p., 1957.

Colley, Thomas. Confessions of a Medium. London, 1882.

———. Sermons of Spiritualism. London, 1907.

Collin-Smith, Joyce. "A Precognitive Dream: James Webb." Light (summer 1982).

Collins, Doris. A Woman of Spirit. London: Panther Books, 1983.

Collins, Mabel. The Awakening. London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1906.

———. The Blossom and the Fruit: The True Story of a Black Magician. New York: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1888.

———. A Cry from Afar. London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1905.

———. The Idyll of the White Lotus. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1885.

———. Light on the Path. Boston: Occult Publishing, 1884.

———. Through the Gates of Gold. London: J. M. Watkins, 1887.

Collins, Rodney. The Theory of Celestial Influence. London: Stuart & Watkins, 1955.

Colombo, John Robert. Abracadabra. Toronto: McClelland and Stewart, 1967.

———. Colombo's Book of Marvels. N.p., 1979.

———. Extraordinary Experiences: Personal Accounts of the Paranormal in Canada. Willowdale, ON, Canada: Hounslow Press, 1989.

———. Mysterious Canada. N.p., 1988.

Colombo, John Robert, ed. Windigo: An Anthology of Facts and Fantastic Fiction. Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 1982.

Colquhoun, Ithell. The Sword of Wisdom: MacGregor Mathers and The Golden Dawn. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1975.

Colquhoun, John C. An History of Magic, Witchcraft & Animal Magnetism. 2 vols. N.p., 1851.

———. Report of the Experiments on Animal Magnetism; Made By a Committee of the Medical Section of the French Royal Academy of Sciences . . . 1831. Edinburgh, 1833. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

Colville, Frederick V. "Notes on the Plants Used by the Klamath Indians of Oregon." Contributions of U.S. National Herbarium, Vol. 5, no. 2. Washington (D.C.), 1897.

Coly, Lisette, and Rhea A.White, eds. Women and Parapsychology. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, Inc., 1994.

Comenius, John A. Orbis Pictus. N.p., 1887. Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co. 1999.

Comstock, Christine Mason. "Selected Rorschach Scores in Spiritualist Mediums," Dissertation Abstracts International: Section B: The Sciences & Engineering 57, no. 10-B (April 1997): 6563.

Condon, Edward U. Scientific Study of Unidentified Flying Objects. Springfield, Va.: National Technical Information Service, 1968. Reprint, New York: E. P. Dutton, 1970.

———. "UFOs I Have Loved and Lost." Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists (December 1969).

Condron, Barbara. Kundalini Rising: Mastering Creative Energies. Windyville, Mo.: SOM, 1992.

Congdon, M. H., J. Hain, and Ian Stevenson. "A Case of Multiple Personality Illustrating the Transition from Role-Playing." Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease 132 (1961).

Conlan, Barnett D. Nicholas Roerich: A Master of the Mountains. Liberty, Ind.: Flamma, Association for Advancement of Culture, 1938.

Connell, R., and Geraldine Cummins. Perceptive Healing. London: Psychic Book Club, 1945.

Connor, W. R. Roman Augury and Etruscan Divination. New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1976.

Conroy, Ed. Report on "Communion": An Independent Investigation of and Commentary on Whitley Strieber's "Communion." New York: William Morrow, 1989.

Constable, T. J. "Orgone Energy Engineering through the Cloudbuster." In John White and Stanley Krippner, eds. Future Science. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1977.

Conway, Moncure D. Demonology and Devil-Lore. 2 vols. London: Chatto & Windus, 1879.

Conybeare, F. C., ed. The Key of Truth. London, 1898.

Cooke, Grace. The Illumined Ones. Liss, Hampshire, England: White Eagle Publishing Trust, 1966.

———. The New Mediumship. Liss, Hampshire, England: White Eagle Publishing Trust, 1965.

———. Sun-Men of the Americas. Liss, Hampshire, England: White Eagle Publishing Trust, 1975.

Cooke, Ivan, ed. The Return of Arthur Conan Doyle. Liss, England: White Eagle Publishing Trust, 1956.

Cooper, Basil. The Werewolf in Legend, Fact and Art. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1977.

Cooper, Irving Steiger. Ceremonies of the Liberal Catholic Church. Los Angeles: St. Alban Press, 1924.

———. Methods of Psychic Development. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1912.

———. The Secret of Happiness. Chicago: Theosophical Publishing House, 1925.

———. Theosophy Simplified. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1928.

Cooper, Irving Steiger, and Willi Kowa. The Pendulum: Operational Practice and Theory. Haywards Heath, UK: Academic Publications, 1978.

Cooper, Joe. The Case of the Cottingley Fairies. London: Robert Hale, 1990.

Cooper, Robert. Spiritual Experiences, Including Seven Months with the Brothers Davenport. London: Heywood & Co., 1867.

Cooper, Wendy. Hair: Sex Society Symbolism. London: Aldus Book, 1971.

Cooper, William M. [James Glass Bertram]. Flagellation and the Flagellants: A History of the Rod in All Continents from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. London, 1868. Rev. ed. Paris: C. Carrington, 1900.

Cooper-Oakley, Isabel. The Compte St. Germain. Milan, Italy: Liberia Editrice del Dr. G. Sulli-Rao, 1912.

———. The Comte de Saint-Germain. New York: S. Weiser, 1970.

———. Mystical Traditions. Milan, Italy: Liberia Editrice del Dr. G. Sulli-Rao, 1909.

———. Traces of a Hidden Tradition in Masonry and Medieval Mysticism. London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1900.

Coopland, G. W. Nicole Oresme and the Astrologers; A Study of His "Livre de Divinacions." Liverpool, UK: University Press of Liverpool, 1952.

Coover, J. E. Experiments in Psychical Research at Leland Stanford Junior University. Palo Alto, Calif.: Stanford University, 1917. Reprint, North Stratford, N.H.: Ayer Publishing, 1975.

Copestake, David R. and H. Newton Malony. "Adverse Effects of Charismatic Experiences: A Reconsideration," Journal of Psychology & Christianity 12, no. 3 (Fall 1993): 236–244.

Corbett, Cynthia L. Power Trips. Santa Fe, N.Mex.: Timewindow Publications, 1988.

Cordovero, Moses ben Jacob. Moses Cordovero's Introduction to Kabbalah: An Annotated Translation of His Or na'errav. New York: Michael Sharaf Publishing Trust of the Yeshiva University Press, 1994. (Originally published sixteenth century.)

Corey, Kathleen. Rev. Amanda C. Flower. Holly, Mich.: The Author, n.d.

Corliss, William R., ed. Handbook of Unusual Natural Phenomena. Glen Arm, Md.: Sourcebook Project, 1977.

———. Tornados, Dark Days, Anomalous Precipitation, and Related Weather Phenomena: A Catalog of Geophysical Anomalies. Glen Arm, Md.: The Sourcebook Project, 1983.

Cornell, A. D. "An Experiment in Apparitional Observation and Findings." Journal of the Society for Pyschical Research 40 (1959): 120.

Cornell, James C., Jr., and John Surowiecki. The Pulse of the Planet: A State of the Earth Report from the Smithsonian Institution Center for Short-lived Phenomena. Harmony Books, 1972.

Corradi Musi, C. "Shamanism from East to West." Bibliotheca Shamanistica. Vol. 4. Budapest: Akadémiai Kiadó, 1997.

Corydon, Bent, and L. Ron Hubbard, Jr. L. Ron Hubbard: Messiah or Madman? New York: Lyle Stuart, 1987.

Cosmic Awareness Speaks. Vol. 1. Olympia, Wash.: Servants of Awareness, n.d. Vols. 2–3. Olympia, Wash.: Cosmic Awareness Communications, 1977, 1983.

Cosmic Law and the World Today. London: Atlanteans, 1967.

Costello, Peter. In Search of Lake Monsters. New York: Coward, McCann & Geohegan, 1974. Reprint, London: Panther, 1975.

Cott-MacPhail, Carolyn. Choices and Connections: The First Catalog of the Global Family. Boulder, Colo.: Human Potential Resources, 1987.

Cottrell, Alan P., ed. Goethe's Faust: Seven Essays. Chapel Hill, N.C.: University of North Carolina Press, 1976.

Coué, Emile. My Method, Including American Impressions. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, Page, 1923.

———. Self Mastery through Conscious Autosuggestion. New York: American Library Service, 1922.

Coulomb, Madame E. Some Account of My Intercourse with Madame Blavatsky from 1872 to 1884. London: Elliot Stock, 1885.

The Count Dracula Fan Club Handbook. New York: Count Dracula Fan Club, 1992.

Courmes, D. A. A Theosophical Question Book. Translated from the French by Elin Salzer and Harry Banbery. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophist Office, 1898.

Covell, Alan Carter. Ecstasy: Shamanism in Korea. Elizabeth, N.J.: Hollym International, 1983.

———. Folk Art and Magic: Shamanism in Korea. Seoul: Hollym Corp., 1986.

Coville, W. J. Light and Color. New York: McCoy Publishing and Masonic Supplies, 1914.

———. Spiritual Science of Health and Healing. Chicago: Garden City Publishing, 1888.

———. Spiritual Therapeutics; or, Divine Science. Chicago: Educator Publishing, 1914.

———. Studies in Theosophy. Boston: Colby & Rich, 1890.

———. Universal Spiritualism. New York: R. F. Fenno, 1906.

Cowan, Charles. Thoughts on Satanic Influence, or Modern Spiritualism Considered. London, 1854.

Cox, Edward W. The Mechanism of Man: An Answer to the Question "What Am I?" London: Longman, 1876.

———. Spiritualism Answered by Science. London, 1871.

———. What Am I?: A Popular Introduction to Mental Philosophy and Psychology. London: Longman, 1974.

Cox, Katharine. Haunted Royalties. London: W. Rider, 1916.

Cox, William E. "The Effects of PK on the Placement of Falling Objects." Journal of Parapsychology 15 (1951): 40–48.

———. Mentalis and Magicians: Some Conclusive Arguments about a Modern Problem. Singapore: Stamford College Press, 1972.

———. "Precognition and Intervention." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 50 (1956): 47–58.

———. "Some Extremely Significant Scores Produced by Recurrent PK (RPK)," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 58, no. 829 (October 1992): 353–362.

Cox, William S. "An Experiment in Extra-Sensory Perception." Journal of Experimental Psychology 19 (1936): 429–37.

Coyne, William D. Our Lady of Knock. New York: Catholic Book Publishing, 1948.

Crabb, Riley Hansard. An Attempt at Cosmic Fellowship. Vista, Calif.: Borderland Science Research Foundation, 1964.

Crabtree, Adam. Animal Magnetism, Early Hypnotism, and Psychical Research, 1766–1925: An Annotated Bibliography. White Plains, N.Y.: Kraus International Publications, 1988.

Crasilneck, Harold B. Clinical Hypnosis: Principles and Applications. Orlando: Grune & Stratton, 1985.

Cravalho, Mark Andrew. "An Invisible Universe of Evil: Supernatural Malevolence and Personal Experience Among Amazon Peasants," Dissertation Abstracts International Section A: Humanities & Social Sciences 55, no. 3-A (1994): 622.

Crawford, E. F. Experiment in Psychic Science. N.p., 1919.

———. The Psychic Structures in the Goligher Circle. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., 1921.

———. The Reality of Psychic Phenomena. London: J. M. Watkins, 1919.

Crawford, W. J. Experiments in Psychic Science. London: John M. Watkins, 1919. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1919.

———. Experiments in Psychical Science: Levitation, "Contact," and the "Direct Voice." London: John M. Watkins, 1919.

———. The Psychic Structures at the Goligher Circle. London: John M. Watkins, 1921.

———. The Reality of Psychic Phenomena: Raps, Levitations, etc. 2nd ed. London: John M. Watkins, 1919.

Crawley, A. E. The Idea of the Soul. New York: Macmillan, 1909.

Crehan, J. Father Thurston. London: Sheed and Ward, 1952.

Crehore, John D. Mental Telepathy: Radiesthesia or Radesia, Our Sixth Sense. Cleveland, Ohio: J. E. Johnson, 1956.

Creme, Benjamin. Maitreya's Mission. Amsterdam, The Netherlands: Share International, 1986.

———. Messages from Maitreya the Christ. 2 Vols. London: Tara Press, 1980.

———. The Reappearance of the Christ and the Masters of Wisdom. London: Tara Press, 1980.

———. Transmission: A Meditation for the New Age. North Hollywood, Calif.: Tara Center, 1983.

Crenshaw, James. Telephone between Two Worlds. Los Angeles: DeVorss, 1950.

Crile, George. The Phenomena of Life: A Radio-Electric Interpretation. London: William Heinemann, 1936.

Crombie, I. M. Plato: The Midwife's Apprentice. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1964.

Crookall, Robert. Case-Book of Astral Projection, 545–746. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1972.

———. During Sleep: The Possibility of "Co-Operation" Between the Living and the Dead. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1974.

———. During Sleep: the Possibility of "Cooperation." London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1964.

———. Ecstasy: The Release of the Soul from the Body. Moradabad, India: Darshand International, 1975.

———. Interpretation of Cosmic & Mystical Experiences. London: James Clarke, 1969.

———. More Astral Projections. London: Aquarian Press, 1964.

———. Out-of-the-Body Experiences and Survival. UK: World Fellowship Press, 1970.

———. Out-of-the-Body Experiences: A Fourth Analysis. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1970. Secaucus, N.J.: Carol Publishing Group, 1992.

———. The Study and Practice of Astral Projection. London: Aquarian Press, 1961. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1966.

———. The Supreme Adventure: Analyses of Psychic Communications. UK: J. Clarke for Churches' Fellowship for Psychical Study, 1961.

———. The Techniques of Astral Projection: Denouement After Fifty Years. London: Aquarian Press, 1964.

Crooke, William. The Popular Religion and Folk-Lore of Northern India. Allahabad, India: Government Press, 1894. Reprint, 2 vols. London: A. Constable, 1896.

———. Religion and Folklore of Northern India. Humphrey Milford: Oxford University Press, 1926.

———. "Address by the President." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 12 (1896): 338.

———. "Notes of an Enquiry into the Phenomena Called Spiritual." Quarterly Journal of Science (January 1874).

———. Research in the Phenomena of Spiritualism. London: J. Burns, 1874. Reprint, London and Manchester, 1926.

———. "Some Further Experiments on Psychic Force." Quarterly Journal of Science (October 1, 1871).

———. "Spiritualism Viewed by the Light of Modern Science." Quarterly Journal of Science 7 (July 1870).

Crop Circles: Harbingers of World Change. Santa Rosa, Calif.: Atrium Publishers Group, 1995.

Crosbie, Robert. Answers to Questions on the Ocean of Theosophy. Los Angeles: Theosophy, 1937.

———. The Friendly Philosopher. Los Angeles: Theosophy, 1934.

Crosland, Newton. Apparitions. London, 1873. N.p., 1957.

Cross, Frank Moore. The Ancient Library of Qumran. Minneapolis, Minn.: Fortress Press, 1995.

[Crosse, Cornelia A. H.] Memorials, Scientific and Literary, of Andrew Crosse, the Electrician. London: Longman, 1857.

Crossley, Alan Ernest. The Story of Helen Duncan, Materialization Medium. UK: Stockwell, 1975.

Crow, W. B. A History of Magic, Witchcraft & Occultism. London: Aquarian Press, 1968. Reprint, London: Abacus, 1972.

Crow, W. B. Precious Stones. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1968.

Crowe, Catherine. Ghosts and Family Legends. London, 1859.

———. The Night Side of Nature; or, Ghosts and Ghost Seers. N.p., 1848. Reprint, Folcroft, Pa., 1976; Philadelphia: R. West, 1978.

Crowell, Eugene. Identity of Primitive Christianity and Modern Spiritualism. 2 vols. 1875–79.

Crowley, Aleister. "The Book of the High Magick that as Worked by Frater O.S.V. 6-5 and Frater L. T. 2-9: The Paris Working." The Equinox (Nashville, Tenn.) 5, 4 (1981): 171–228.

———. The Book of Thoth: A Short Essay on the Tarot of the Egyptians. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1974.

———. The Confessions of Aleister Crowley. Edited by John Symnonds and Kenneth Grant. New York: Hill and Wang, 1969. Reprint, New York: Viking Penguin, 1989.

———. De Arte Magica. San Francisco: Level Press, [1974].

———. Eight Lectures on Yoga. 1938. Reprint, Phoenix, Ariz.: Falcon Press, 1985.

———. The Holy Books of Thelema. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1983.

———. The Law Is for All. Edited by Israel Regardie. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1975.

———. Magical Diaries of Aleister Crowley. Edited by John Symonds and Kenneth Grant. Montreal: Next Step Publications, 1972.

———. The Magical Record of the Beast 666. Edited by John Symonds and Kenneth Grant. Montreal: Next Step Publications, 1972.

———. Magick in Theory and Practice. 4 vols. Paris, 1929. Reprint, New York: Castle Books, 1965; St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1989.

———. Magick without Tears. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1973.

———. The Secret Rituals of the O.T.O. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1973.

———. 777. London: Walter Scott Publishing, 1909. Revised as 777 Revised. London: Neptune Press, 1952.

———. The Vision and the Voice. Dallas, Tex.: Sangreal Foundation, 1972.

[Crowley, Aleister] The Master Therion. Magick in Theory and Practice. Paris, 1929. Reprint, New York: Castle Books, n.d. Rev. ed. Magick. Edited by John Symonds and Kenneth Grant. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1973. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1974.

Crumbaugh, James C. "A Scientific Critique of Parapsychology." Behavior Psychology 2 (September–October 1966).

"CSAR: Statement of Goals." Zetetic Scholar 12/13 (1987): 205–06.

Cuddon, Eric. Hypnosis: its Meaning and Practice. N.p., 1938.

Culling, Louis, ed. A Manual of Sex Magick. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1971.

Culpepper, Nicolas. Culpepper's English Physician and Herbal Remedies. North Hollywood, Calif.: Wilshire, 1971.

Cumberland, Stuart [Charles Garner]. Thought-Reader's Thoughts: Being the Impressions and Confessions of Stuart Cumberland. London: S. Low, Marston, Searle & Rivington, 1888. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

Cummings, Richard. Alchemists: Fathers of Practical Chemistry. New York: David O. McKay, 1966.

Cummins, Geraldine. Beyond Human Personality. London: Psychic Press, 1935. Revised edition, 1952.

———. The Fate of Colonel Fawett. London, 1955.

———. The Road to Immortality. London: Ivor Nicholson & Watson, 1933.

———. Swan on a Black Sea: A Study in Automatic Writing: The Cummins-Willett Scripts. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1965. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1970.

———. Travelers in Eternity. Compiled by E. B. Gibbs. London: Psychic Press, 1984.

———. Unseen Adventures. London: Rider, 1951.

Cumont, F. V. M. Mysteries of Mithra. London: Kegan Paul; Chicago: Open Court, 1910.

Cumont, Franz. The Mysteries of Mithra. LaSalle, Ill.: Open Court Publishing, 1903. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1956.

Cunningham, Janet B. "A Phenomenological Study of Post-Modern Transpersonal and Spiritual Experiences with Quantitative survey and Case Study Interviews," Dissertation Abstracts International: Section B: The Sciences & Engineering, 58, no. 8-B (February 1998): 4481.

Cunningham, Scott. Cunningham's Encyclopedia of Magical Herbs. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1985.

Cunninghame, Graham R. B. A Brazilian Mystic: Being the Life and Miracles of Antonio Conselheiro. London: Heineman, 1920. Reprint, Freeport, N.Y.: Books for Libraries Press, 1971.

Cupron, E. W. Modern Spiritualism: Its Facts and Fanaticisms. Boston: B. Marsh; New York: Partridge and Brittan, 1855.

Curnow, W. Leslie. "Spirits in the Flesh." Psychic Science (January 1927).

Currie, Ian. You Cannot Die: The Incredible Findings of a Century of Research on Death. New York: Methuen; London: Hamlyn, 1978.

Curry, Patrick. "Research on the Mars Effect." Zetetic Scholar 9 (1982): 34–52.

Curtin, Jeremiah. Tales of the Fairies and of the Ghost World, Collected from Oral Tradition in Southwest Munster. London: D. Nutt, 1895. Reprint, Dublin: Talbot Press, 1974.

Curtis, James. Rustlings in the Golden City. Ballard, 1894.

Curtis, James T. and John P. Wilson. "Sensation-Seeking and ESP Test Performance: A Preliminary Investigation," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 62, no. 848 (July 1997): 1–21.

Curtiss, Harriette Augusta, and Homer Curtiss. The Key of Destiny. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1991.

———. Letters from the Teacher. 2 vols. Hollywood, Calif.: Curtiss Philosophic, 1918.

———. The Message of Aquaria. San Francisco: Curtiss Philosophic, 1921.

———. The Voice of Isis. Washington, D.C.: Curtiss Philosophic, 1935.

Cuthbert, Arthur A. The Life and World Work of Thomas Lake Harris, Written from Direct Personal Knowledge. Glasgow, Scotland, 1908.

Cutten, George B. Speaking With Tongues: Historically and Psychologically Considered. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1927.

Czaplicka, Maria Antonina. Aboriginal Siberia: A Study in Social Anthropology. London: Oxford University Press, 1914.

D'Albe, E. E. Fournier. The Goligher Circle: May to August, 1921. London: John M. Watkins, 1922.

———. The Life of Sir William Crookes. London: T. F. Unwin Ltd., 1923.

D'Andrade, Hugh. Charles Fillmore: Herald of the New Age. New York: Harper & Row, 1974.

D'Esperance, Elizabeth. Shadow Land or Light From the Other Side. London: George Redway, 1897.

Da Free John [Franklin Jones]. The Dawn Horse Testament. San Rafael, Calif.: Dawn Horse Press, 1985.

Da Liu. T'ai Chi Ch'uan and I Ching. New York: Harper & Row, 1972. Reprint, Toronto: HarperCollins Publishers, 1978.

Da Love-Ananda. The Holy Jumping Off Place. San Rafael, Calif.: Dawn Horse Press, 1986.

Dalton, Kathy and Paul Stevens. "Geomagnetism and the Edinburgh Automated Ganzfeld," European Journal of Parapsychology 12 (1996): 23–34.

Daim, W. Der Mann, der Hitler die Ideen gab (The man who gave Hitler the ideas). München: Isar Verlag, 1958.

Dalby, Richard. Bram Stoker: A Bibliography of First Editions. London, 1983.

Dale, Laura A., and Gardner Murphy. Challenge of Psychical Research: A Primer of Parapsychology. New York: Harper & Row, 1966.

Dale, Laura A., and Rhea A. White. Parapsychology: Sources of Information. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1973.

Dallas, Helen A. Across the Barrier. N.p., 1913.

———. Human Survival and Its Implications. N.p., 1930.

———. Leaves from a Psychic Notebook. N.p., 1927.

———. Mors Janus Vitae? A Discussion of Certain Communications Purporting to be from Frederic W. H. Myers. London: William Rider and Son, 1910.

———. The Nurseries of Heaven. N.p., 1920.

———. Objections to Spiritualism Answered. Manchester, England: Two Worlds Publishing, 1916.

———. The Victory that Overcometh. N.p., 1901.

Dallimore, Arnold A. Forerunner of the Charismatic Movement: The Life of Edward Irving. Chicago: Moody Press, 1983.

Dallway, James. Constantinople Ancient and Modern. N.p., 1797.

Dalton, J. G. The Boston Ephemeris. Boston: Occult Publishing, 1898.

———. The Sixteen Principal Stars. Boston: Occult Publishing, 1898.

———. The Spherical Basis of Astrology. Boston: Arena Publishing, 1893.

Dane, Victor. Naked Ascetic. N.p., 1933.

Danemarie, J. The Mystery of Stigmata from Catherine Emmerich to Theresa Neumann. N.p., 1934.

Danforth, Loring M. Firewalking and Religious Healing: The Anastenaria of Greece and the American Firewalking Movement. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1989.

Danielou, Alain. The Ragas of Northern Indian Music. London: Barrie & Rockliff, 1968.

———. Yoga: The Method of Re-Integration. London: Christopher Johnson, 1949. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1955.

Daraul, Arbon. A History of Secret Societies. New York: Citadel Press, 1962.

———. Secret Societies, Yesterday and Today. London: Fernhill Housen, 1961. Reprinted as A History of Secret Societies. New York: Citadel, 1961.

Darget, Commandant. Exposé des différentes methodes pour l'obtention des photographies fluido-magnétiques et spirites. Paris, 1909.

Darnton, Robert. Mesmerism and the End of the Enlightenment in France. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1968.

Das, Ghagavan. The Science of Social Organisation; or, The Laws of Manu in the Light of Atma-Vidya. 2 vols. Rev. ed. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1932.

Dass, Baba Ram. Be Here Now. San Cristobal, N.Mex.: Lama Foundation, 1971.

Dave, H. T. Life and Philosophy of Shree Swaminarayan, 1781–1830. London: Allen & Unwin, 1974.

Davenport, Reuben Briggs. The Death Blow to Spiritualism. New York: G. W. Dillingham, 1888.

Davey, John, ed. Work Arising from the Life of Rudolf Steiner. London: R. Steiner Press, 1975.

Davey, S. T. "Spurious Mediumship." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 3 (1888): 199–207.

David, Wade. The Serpent and the Rainbow. New York: Warner, 1985.

David-Neel, Alexandra. Buddhism: Its Doctrines and Its Methods. New York: St. Martin's, 1939. Reprint, London: Bodley Head, 1977.

———. Initiations and Initiates in Tibet. London, 1932. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1959.

———. Magic and Mystery in Tibet. Rev. ed., New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1956. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1971.

———. My Journey to Lhasa. London: William Heinemann, 1927.

———. The Secret Oral Tradition in Tibetan Buddhist Sects. San Francisco: City Lights, 1964. Reprint, Calcutta: Maha Bodhi Society of India, 1971.

———. With Mystics and Magicians in Tibet. London: John Lane, 1931. Reprinted as Magic & Mystery in Tibet. New York: Claude H. Kendall, 1932. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1956.

David-Neel, Alexandra, and Lama Yongden. The Secret Oral Teachings in Tibetan Buddhist Sects. Calcutta, India: Maha Bodhi Society of India, n.d.

Davidson, David. The Great Pyramid: Its Divine Message. London, 1924.

Davidson, Gustav. A Dictionary of Angels: Including the Fallen Angels. New York: Free Press, 1967.

Davidson, Thomas. Philosophy of Goethe's Faust. Boston, 1906. Reprint, Haskell, 1969.

———. Rowan Tree and Red Thread. Edinburgh: Oliver and Boyd, 1949.

Davies, John D. Phrenology, Fad and Science: A Nineteenth Century American Crusade. Archon, 1955. Reprint, Shoe String, 1971.

Davies, Lady Eleanor. Great Britains Visitation. London, 1645.

———. Of Times and Seasons, Their Mystery. London, 1651.

———. The Revelation Interpreted. London, 1645.

Davis, Andrew Jackson. Answers to Ever-Recurring Questions from People: A Sequel to the Penetralia. Boston: Banner of Light Publishing, 1862.

———. Beyond the Valley; A Sequel to the Magic Staff: An Autobiography. Boston: Colby & Rich, 1885.

———. The Diakka, and Earthly Victims. Boston: Colby & Rich, 1880. Reprint. New York, 1873; Las Vegas, Nev., 1996.

———. The Great Harmonia. New York: J. S. Redfield, Fowler & Wells, 1853.

———. The Harmonial Philosophy: A Compendium and Digest of the Works of Andrew Jackson Davis. London: Rider, 1917.

———. The Magic Staff: An Autobiography of Andrew Jackson Davis. New York, 1857.

———. Penetralia: Being Harmonial Answers to Important Questions. Boston: Bela Marsh, 1858.

Davis, Charles [Dorothy Flexer]. A New Way of Life. Sarasota, Fla.: Church of Metaphysical Christianity, 1989.

———. Spirit Speaks. Sarasota, Fla.: Church of Metaphysical Christianity, 1988.

Davis, Eugene Roy. An Easy Guide to Meditation. Lakemont, Ga.: CSA Press, 1978.

———. God Has Given Us Every Good Thing. Lakemont, Ga.: CSA Press, 1986.

Davis, Eugene Roy. The Path of Soul Liberation. Lakemont, Ga.: CSA Press, 1975.

———. The Teachings of the Masters of Perfection. Lakemont, Ga.: CSA Press, 1979.

Davis, F. Hadland. Myths and Legends of Japan. London: Harrap, 1912.

Davis, James. "Comments on the Levy Affair." In Research in Parapsychology 1974. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1975.

Davis, Mikol, and Earle Lune. Rainbows of Life: The Promise of Kirlian Photography. New York: Harper & Row, 1978.

Davis, T. L. "The Autobiography of Denis Zacaire: An Account of an Alchemist's Life in the Sixteenth Century." Isis 8, 2 (1926).

Davis, Wade. The Serpent and the Rainbow. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1985.

Davy, Kitty. Love Alone Prevails. Myrtle Beach, S.C.: Sheriar Press, 1981.

Day, Langston & G. De la Warr. New Worlds Beyond the Atom. London, 1956.

Dayal, Har. The Bodhisattva Doctrine in Buddhist Sanskrit Literature. Delhi, India: Motilal Banarsidass, 1970.

De Becker, R. The Meaning of Dreams. London, 1968.

De Camp, L. Sprague. The Ancient Engineers. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1960. Reprint, New York: Ballantine Books, 1974.

———. Lovecraft: A Biography. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1975.

De Camp, L. Sprague, ed. Al Azif (The Necronomicon). Philadelphia: Owlswoch, 1973.

de Carvalho, Andre Percia. "Purported Spontaneous Psi Events and Psychodynamics: The Emergence of the 'System of Integrated Factors.' " Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 60, no. 839 (April 1995): 229–239.

De Charms, George. The Distinctiveness of the New Church. Bryn Athyn, Pa.: Academy Book Room, 1962.

De Cressac Bachelerie, Bertrande. Démonstrations experimentales de la télépathie (Experimental demonstrations of telepathy). N.p., 1946.

———. Etudes sur la télépathie des sensations (Studies on the telepathy of sensations). N.p., 1954.

———. Etudes sur la voyance (Studies in clairvoyance). N.p., 1942.

———. La Métapsychique devant la science (Parapsychology in relation to science). N.p., 1948.

———. Le Miracle, illusion ou réalite (The miracle, illusion or reality). N.p., 1961.

———. Mise en évidence de l'effet psychocinétique (Revelation of the psychokinetic effect). N.p., 1960.

De Cressac Bachelerie, Bertrande, and Marige George Chevalier. La Métapsychique—probleme crucial (Parapsychology: a crucial problem). N.p., 1960.

De Fontenay, Guillaume. Apropos d'Eusapia Palladino. Paris, 1898.

De France, Henry. The Elements of Dowsing. London: G. Bell, 1971. Reprint, Albuquerque, N.Mex.: Transatlantic Arts, Inc., 1979.

De Gasparin, Comte Agenor. Des table tournantes, de surnaturel en général, et des esprits. Paris, 1854.

De Giustino, David. Conquest of Mind: Phrenology and Victorian Social Thought. London: Croom Helm; Totowa, N.J.: Rowman & Littlefield, 1975.

De Givry, Grillot. Witchcraft, Magic & Alchemy. London, 1931. Reprinted as Illustrated Anthology of Sorcery, Magic & Alchemy. New York: Causeway, 1973.

De Hartmann, Thomas. Our Life with Gurdjieff. New York: Penguin, 1972. Rev. ed. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1983.

De Jubainville, H. d'Arbois. Les Droides et les dieux celtiques à forme d'animaux. Paris, 1906.

De Laurence, L. W. Clairvoyance & Thought-Transference, Auto Trance & Spiritualism, Psychometry & Telepathy. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1994.

De la Warr, George, with Langston Day. New Worlds Beyond the Atom. London: Vincent Stewart Publishers, 1956.

De Martino, Ernesto. La Terra del Rimorso (The land of remorse). N.p., 1961.

———. Morte e Pianto rituale nel Mondo antico (Death and ritual dirge in the ancient world). N.p., 1958.

———. Sud e Magia (South Italy and magic). 2nd ed. Milan: Feltrinelli, 1971.

De Mille, Richard. Castaneda's Journey: The Power and the Allegory. Santa Barbara, Calif.: Capra Press, 1976.

———. The Don Juan Papers. Santa Barbara, Calif.: Ross-Erikson, 1980.

De Mirville, Marquis J. E. Pneumatologie: Des Esprits et de leurs manifestations fluidique devant la science modern. Paris, 1853.

De Morgan, Augustus. A Budget of Paradoxes. Chicago: Open Court Publishing, 1915. Reprinted as The Encyclopedia of Eccentrics. La Salle, Ill.: Open Court Publishing, 1974.

De Morgan, Sophia Elizabeth. Three Score Years and Ten; Reminiscences of the Late Sophia Elizabeth De Morgan. London: R. Bentley, 1895.

De Morogues, Baron. Observations sur le fluide organo-électrique. Paris, 1854.

De Pascale, Marc. The Book of Spells. New York: Taplinger, 1971.

De Rola, Stanislaw K. Alchemy: The Secret Art. Bounty Books/Crown, 1973. Reprint, London: Thames & Hudson, 1973.

De Saint Pierre, Michel. The Remarkable Cure of Ars: The Life and Achievement of St. John Marie Vianney. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1963.

De Schertz, Charles F. Magia Posthuma. Olmutz, 1706.

De Szapary, Comte F. G. Les tables tournantes. Paris, 1854.

De Tonquedec, Joseph. Introduction a l'étude du merveilleux et du miracle (Introduction to the study of the marvelous and the miracle). N.p., n.d.

———. La Critique de la connaissance (Criticism of knowledge). N.p., n.d.

———. La Notion de Verite dans la "Philosophie Nouvelle" (The concept of truth in the "new philosophy"). N.p., n.d.

———. La Philosophie de la natur (Philosophy of nature). N.p., n.d.

———. Maladies neuveuses ou mentales et manifestations diaboliques (Nervous or mental diseases and diabolical manifestations). N.p., n.d.

———. Merveilleux métapsychique et miracle Chrétien (The marvelous in parapsychology and the Christian miracle). N.p., n.d.

De Troyes, Chrétien. Arthurian Romances (Erec and Enide; Cligés; Yvain; Lancelot). London, 1914.

De Vallemont, Abbe. La physique occulte, ou Traité de la baguette divinatoire. Paris, 1693.

De Vesme, Caesar. A History of Experimental Spiritualism. 2 vols. London: Rider, 1931.

De Villars, l'Abbé de Montfaucon. Comte de Gabalis. London: Printed for B. M., Printer to the Cabalistical Society of the Sages, at the Sign of the Rosy-Crucian, 1670. Reprint, Paris, 1670; London: Old Bourne Press, 1913; New York: Macoy Publishing and Masonic Supply, 1922; London: Methuen, 1941.

De Zirkoff, Boris, comp. "General Bibliography with Selected Biographical Notes." In Collected Writings. Vol XII. by H. P. Blavatsky. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1980.

Deacon, R. John Dee: Scientist, Astrologer & Secret Agent to Elizabeth. London: Frederick Muller, 1968.

Dean, E. Douglas, John Mihalasky, Sheila Ostrander, and Lynn Schroeder. Executive ESP. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1974.

———. The Mystery of Healing: Still a Mystery after 60,000 Years. New York: Search, 1987.

Dean, G. Recent Advances in Natal Astrology. Cowes, England: The Author, 1977.

Dearden, Harold. Devilish But True: The Doctor Looks at Spiritualism. London: Hutchinson, 1936. Reprint, Boston: Rowan & Littlefield, 1975.

Decker, Larry R. "Beliefs, Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder, and Mysticism," Journal of Humanistic Psychology 33, no. 4 (1993): 15–32.

Decuypere, J. M. "Channelling—Sick or Scientific?," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 63, no. 856 (July 1999): 193–202.

Dee, John. The Hieroglyphic Monad. Translated by J. W. Hamilton Jones. London, 1847.

———. A True and Faithful Relation of What Passed for Many Years Between Dr. John Dee . . . and Some Spirits. . . . London, 1659. Reprint, Askin, 1974.

Defano, M. M. The Living Prophets. New York: Dell, 1972.

[Defoe, Daniel]. An Essay on the History & Reality of Apparitions. London, 1727.

Deguchi, Onisaburo. Memoirs. Japan: Kameoka, 1957.

Del Rio, Martin Antoine. Disquisitionum Magicarum Libri Sex. Moguntiae: Typis Joannis Albini, 1600.

Delacour, J. B. [Hanns Kurth]. Glimpses of the Beyond. New York: Delacorte Press, 1974.

Delanne, Gabriel. Evidence for a Future Life. London: Philip Wellby/New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1904.

———. L' Ame est Immortelle. N.p., 1904.

———. L'Evolution Animique. N.p., 1897.

———. Le Phenom Agene Spirite. N.p., 1894.

———. Le Spiritisme devant la Science. N.p., 1895.

———. Les Apparitions Materialisées des Vivants et des Morts. Paris, 1911.

———. Récherches sur la Mediumnité. N.p., 1896.

Deleuze, Jean P. F. Défense du Magnétisme. N.p., 1819.

———. Histoire Critique du Magnétisme. N.p., 1813–19.

———. Mémoire sur la Faculté de Prevision. N.p., 1836.

———. Practical Instruction in Animal Magnetism. Providence, R.I.: B. Cranston, 1837. Rev. ed. New York: Samuel R. Wells, 1846. Reprint, New York: Da Capo Press, Inc., 1982.

Delfano, M. M. The Living Prophets. New York: Dell, 1972.

Delgado, Pat, and Colin Andrews. Circular Evidence: A Detailed Investigation of the Flattened Swirled Crop Phenomenon. London: Bloomsbury Publications, 1989.

Delgado, Pat, and Colin Andrews. Crop Circles: The Latest Evidence. London: Bloomsbury Publications, 1990.

DeLouise, Joseph, and Tom Valentine. Psychic Mission. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1971.

Demarest, Donald, and Coley Taylor. The Dark Virgin: The Book of Our Lady of Guadalupe. Freeport, Maine: Coley Taylor, 1956.

Dement, William C. Some Must Watch While Some Must Sleep: Exploring the World of Sleep. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford Alumni Association, 1972. Reprint, San Francisco: San Francisco Book, 1976; New York: Norton, 1978.

DeMille, Richard. Castaneda's Journey; The Power and the Allegory. Santa Barbara, Calif.: Capra Press, 1976.

DeMille, Richard, ed. Don Juan Papers: Further Castaneda Controversies. Santa Barbara, Calif.: Ross-Erickson, 1980. Reprint, Belmont, Calif.: Wadsworth, 1990.

Demos, John Putnam. Entertaining Satan: Witchcraft and the Culture of Early New England. New York: Oxford University Press, 1982.

Dempsey, T. The Delphic Oracles. Oxford: B. H. Blackwell, 1918.

Dendy, W. C. Philosophy of Mystery. London, 1841.

Denis, Leon. d'Apres la Mort. N.p., n.d.

———. Dans l'Invisible (Spiritisme et Mediumnité). N.p., n.d.

———. Genie Celtique, et le Monde Invisible. N.p., n.d.

———. Jeanne d'Arc Medium: L'Au-delà et la Survivance de l'Etré, La Grande Énigme. Translated as The Mystery of Joan of Arc. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1925.

Denning, Melita, and Osborne Phillips. The Magical Philosophy. 5 vols. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1974–81.

Denning, Melita, and Osborne Phillips. The Magick of Sex. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1982.

———. The Magick of Tarot. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1983.

———. Voudou Fire: The Living Reality of Mystical Religion. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1979.

Dennon, Jim. Newbrough and Oahspe. Kingman, Ariz.: Faithist Journal, 1975.

———. The Oahspe Story. Kingman, Ariz.: Faithist Journal, 1975.

Denovan, W. C. D. Evidences of Spiritualism. Melbourne, 1882.

Denson, Alan. Printed writings of George W. Russell (AE): A Bibliography. London: Northwestern University Press, 1961.

Dentan, Robert. The Samai: A Non-Violent People of Malaya. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1968.

Denton, Jim. Dr. Newbrough and Oahspe. Kingman, Ariz.: Faithist Journal, 1975.

———. The Oahspe Story. Kingman, Ariz.: Faithist Journal, 1975.

Denton, William. Our Planet, Its Past and Future; or, Lectures on Geology. Wellesley, Mass.: Denton Publishing, 1868.

Denton, William. The Soul of Things: Psychometric Experiments for Re-living History. 1863. Reprint, Wellingborough, Northampton, England: Aquarian Press, 1988.

Denton, William, and Elizabeth Denton. Nature's Secrets, or Psychometric Researches. London: Houston & Wright, 1863.

Deren, Maya. Divine Horsemen: The Voodoo Gods of Haiti. New York: Chelsea House, 1970.

Derleth, August. H.P.L.: A Memoir. Ben Abramson, 1945.

Derrey, Francois. The Earth is Alive. London: Arlington Books, 1968.

Desbarolles, A. Les Mysteres de la Main. Paris, 1860.

Desjarlais, Robert R. Body and Emotion: The Aesthetics of Illness and Healing in the Nepal Himalayas. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1992.

Desmond, Shaw. Healing: Psychic and Divine. London: Rider, 1956. Reprinted as The Power of Faith Healing. New York: Award Books, 1969.

———. Ragnarok. N.p., 1926.

———. Reincarnation for Everyman. N.p., 1939.

———. Spiritualism? N.p., 1941.

———. We Do Not Die. N.p., 1934.

———. You Can Speak With Your Dead. N.p., 1941.

Desroche, Henri. The American Shakers. Amherst, Mass.: University of Massachusetts Press, 1971.

Dessoir, Max. Aesthetics and the Theory of Art. Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 1970.

———. Das Ich, der Traum, der Tod. N.p., 1947.

———. "Die Parapsychologie, Eine Entgegnung auf den Artikel 'Der Prophet.'&43" Sphinx (June 1889): 341–44. Reprinted as "Parapsychology, A Response to the Article 'The Prophet.'&43" Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 53, 802 (January 1986).

———. Die Rede als Kunst. N.p., 1948.

———. Einleitung in die Philosophie. N.p., 1946.

———. "Experiments in Muscle Reading and Thought-Transference." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 4, 10 (1886–87).

———. Psychologische Briefe. N.p., 1948.

Deutsch, Richard. Exorcism: Possession or Obsession? Foreword by Christopher Neil-Smith. London: Bachman & Turner, 1975.

Deutch, Yvonne, ed., and F. Strachan, comp. Fortune Tellers. London, 1976. Reprint, New York: Black Watch, 1974.

Development of Mediumship. Dimondale, Mich.: Spiritual Episcopal Church, n.d.

Devereux, George. "Bridey Murphy, a Psychoanalytic View." Tomorrow (Summer 1956).

———. "Primitive Psychiatry." Bulletin of the History of Medicine, 8 (1940–1942): 1194–1213; 11 (1940–1942): 522–542.

Devereux, George, ed. Psychoanalysis and the Occult. New York: International Universities Press, 1953.

Devi, Indra. Forever Young, Forever Healthy. New York: Prentice-Hall, 1954.

———. Renew Your Life through Yoga. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1963.

———.Yoga for Americans. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1959.

———. Yoga—the Technique of Health and Happiness. Kitabistan, India, 1948.

Devotional Somnium; or a Collection of Prayers and Exhortations Uttered by Rachel Baker . . . During her Abstracted and Unconscious State. New York, 1815.

Dewey, D. M. History of the Strange Sounds or Rappings Heard in Rochester and Western New York. Rochester, 1850.

Dexter, T. F. Fire Worship in Britain. Edmonds, Wash.: Holmes Publishing Group, 1995.

Diamond, E. The Science of Dreams. London, 1962.

Dickhoff, Robert Ernest. Agharta. Boston: Bruce Humphries, 1951. Reprint, Mokelumne Hill, Calif.: Health Research, 1964.

———. Behold . . . the Venus Garuda. New York: The Author, 1968.

———. The Eternal Fountain. Boston: Bruce Humphries, 1947.

Didi-Huberman, Georges, and J. M. Charcot. Invention de l'hysterie: Charcot et l'iconographia photographiqe de la Salpetriere. Paris: Macula, 1982.

Digby, George. Symbol and Image in William Blake. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1957.

The Dimensions of Healing: A Symposium. Los Altos, Calif.: Academy of Parapsychology and Medicine, 1972.

Dingle, Edwin John. Abnormal Hypnotic Phenomena. 4 vols. London: Churchill, 1967–68.

———. Borderlands of Eternity. Los Angeles: Institute of Mentalphysics, 1939.

———. Breathing Your Way to Youth. Los Angeles: Institute of Mentalphysics, [1931].

———. The Critic's Dilemma: Further Comments on Some Nineteenth Century Investigations. Dewsbury, England: The Author, 1966.

———. "An Experiment with Polish Medium Stefan Ossowiecki." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 21 (1924).

———. "The Need for Responsibility in Parapsychology." In A Skeptic's Handbook of Parapsychology, edited by Paul Kurtz. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1985.

———. Some Human Oddities. London: Home & Van Thal, 1947. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1962.

———. The Voice of the Logos. Los Angeles: Econolith Press, 1951.

Dingwall, E. J., K. M. Goldney, and Trevor H. Hall. The Haunting of Borley Rectory. London: Duckworth, 1955.

———. "The Haunting of Borley Rectory; A Critical Survey of the Evidence." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 51 (1956).

Dingwall, Eric J. Ghosts and Spirits of the Ancient World. London: Kegan, Paul, 1930.

———. Some Human Oddities. London, 1947. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1962.

———. Very Peculiar People: Portrait Studies in the Queer, the Abnormal and the Uncanny. London: Rider, 1950. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1962.

Dingwall, E. J. and Harry Price, eds. Revelations of a Spirit Medium. London: Kegan Paul, 1925.

Dingwall, Eric J., and John Langdon-Davies. The Unknown—Is It Nearer? New York: New American Library, 1956.

Dingwall, Eric J., and Trevor H. Hall. Four Modern Ghosts. London, 1958.

Dinsdale, Tim. Loch Ness Monster. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1961.

———. The Story of the Loch Ness Monster. London, 1973.

Diószegi, Vilmos "The Origin of the Evenki Shamanic Instruments (Stick, Knout) of Transbaikalia," Acta Ethnographica, 17, nos. 3–4 (1968): 265–311.

———. "Problems of Mongolian Shamanism," Acta Ethnographica. 10 nos. 1–2 (1961): 195–206.

Diószegi, Vilmos, and Mihály Hoppál, eds. "Folk Beliefs and Shamanistic Traditions in Siberia." In Bibliotheca Shamanistica. Vol. 3. Budapest: Akadémiai Kiadó, 1996.

———. "Shamanism in Siberia." In Bibliotheca Shamanistica Vol. 2. Budapest: Akadémiai Kiadó, 1996.

Directory of Activities and Services. New York: Rudolf Steiner Information Center, n.d.

DiStasi, Lawrence. Mal Occhio (Evil Eye): The Underside Vision. San Francisco: North Point Press, 1981.

The Divine Mystical Method of Instruction of the Homebringing Mission of Jesus Christ. Pelham, N.H.: Homebringing Mission of Jesus Christ, 1980.

Divine Life Society. An Apostle of India's Spiritual Culture: Souvenir Released on the Auspices of the Sixtieth Birthday Anniversary of H.H. Sri Swami Chidaananda. Shivanandanagar, India: Divine Life Society, 1976.

Divine Principle. New York: Holy Spirit Association for the Unification of World Christianity, 1973.

Divine, Mother. The Peace Mission Movement. Philadelphia: Imperial Press, 1982.

Dixon, Roland B. "Some Shamans of Northern California," Journal of American Folklore. 17 (1904): 23–27.

DK [through Alice A. Bailey]. Serving Humanity. New York: Lucis Trust, 1972.

———. The Soul, The Quality of Life: From the Writings of the Tibetan Teacher (Djwhal Khul). New York: Lucis Trust, 1972.

Doane, Doris Chase. Astrological Rulerships. Redondo Beach, Calif.: Foundation for Scientific Spiritual Understanding, 1970.

———. Astrology as a Business. Tempe, Ariz.: American Federation of Astrologers, 1986.

———. Astrology: Thirty Years of Research. Los Angeles: Church of Light, 1956.

———. Horoscopes of the Presidents. Hollywood, Calif.: Professional Astrologers, 1971.

Doane, T. W. "The Creation and Fall of Man." In Bible Myths and Their Parallels in Other Religions. 1884. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1971.

Dobbs, Betty Jo T. Foundations of Newton's Alchemy; or, The Hunting of the Greene Lyon. Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge University Press, 1975.

Doberer, Kurt K. The Goldmakers: Ten Thousand Years of Alchemy. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood, 1948.

Dobinson, George. "The Gurdjieff Enigma," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 61, no. 844 (July 1996): 152–155.

Dobkin De Rios, Marlene. Hallucinogens: Cross-Cultural Perspectives. Albuquerque: University of New Mexico Press, 1984. Reprint, Garden City Park, N.Y.: Avery Publishing Group, 1990.

———. Amazon Healer: The Life and Times of an Urban Shaman. Bridport, Dorset: Prism Press/Garden City Park, N.Y.: Avery Publishing Group, 1992.

Dobkin De Rios, Marlene, ed. "Special issue on Shamanism and Altered States of Consciousness," Journal of Psychoactive Drugs. 21, no. 1 (1989).

Dodds, Eric R. The Greeks and the Irrational. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1951.

———. Missing Persons: An Autobiography. Oxford: Clearendon Press, 1977.

———. "Supernormal Phenomena in Classical Antiquity." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 55 (1971): 189.

———. "Why I Do Not Believe in Survival." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 42 (1934): 147.

Dole, Arthur A. and Michael D. Langone. "Strongly Held Views about the New Age: Critics Versus Experts," Cultic Studies Journal 11, no. 1 (1994): 1–28.

Dommeyer, Frederick C. Body, Mind and Death. N.p., 1965.

Dommeyer, Frederick C., ed. Current Philosophical Issues: Essays in Honor of Curt John Ducasse. N.p., 1966.

———. "Some Ostensibly Precognitive Dreams." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (July 1955).

Donnelly, Ignatius. Atlantis: The Antediluvian World. New York: Harper's, 1882. Rev. ed., edited by Egerton Sykes. New York: Gramercy, 1949.

———. The Great Cryptogram: Francis Bacon's Cipher in the So-called Shakespeare Plays. Chicago: R. S. Peale, 1888.

———. Ragnarok: The Age of Fire and Gravel. New York: Harper's, 1883. Reprinted as The Destruction of Atlantis: Ragnarok. Blauvelt, N.Y.: Rudolf Steiner Publications, 1971.

Donnelly, Morwinna. Founding the Life Divine. Lower Lake, Calif.: Dawn Horse Press, 1976.

Donovan, James M. "Charisma, Empathy, and the Experience of Telepathy," Journal of Indian Psychology 10, no. 1-2 (January-July 1992): 11–26.

Dooley, Anne. Every Wall a Door. London: Abelard-Schuman, 1973. Reprint, Bergenfield, N.J.: E. P. Dutton, 1974.

Doore, Gary, ed. Shaman's Path: Healing, Personal Growth, and Empowerment. Boston: Shamabala, 1988.

Dorato, M. Gli ultimi papi e la fine del mondo nelle grandi profezie. Rome: n.p., 1950.

Doreal, Maurice. Maitreya: Lord of the World. Sedalia, Colo.: Brotherhood of the White Temple, n.d.

———. Man and the Mystic Universe. Denver: Brotherhood of the White Temple, n.d.

———. Personal Experiences among the Masters and Great Adepts in Tibet. Sedalia, Colo.: Brotherhood of the White Temple, n.d.

———. Secret Teachings of the Himalayan Gurus. Denver: Brotherhood of the White Temple, n.d.

Doresse, Jean. The Secret Books of the Egyptian Gnostics. London: Hollis and Carter, 1960. Reprint, New York: AMS Press, 1972.

Doten, Elizabeth. Poems of Progress. Boston: White & Co., 1871.

Doughty, Oswald. Perturbed Spirit: The Life and Personality of Samuel Taylor Coleridge. Rutherford, N.J.: Fairleigh Dickinson University Press, 1981.

Douglas, Adam. The Beast Within: Man, Myths and Werewolves. London: Chapmans, 1992. Reprint. London: Orion, 1993.

Douglas, Alfred. Extra Sensory Powers: A Century of Psychical Research. Woodstock, N.Y.: Overlook Press, 1977.

———. The Tarot: The Origins, Meaning and Uses of the Cards. New York: Taplinger; London: Gollancz, 1972. Reprint, London: Penguin, 1974.

Doumato, Lamia. Imhotep. Monticello, Ill.: Vance Bibliographies, 1981.

Dourley, John. "The Innate Capacity: Jung and the Mystical Imperative." In The Innate Capacity: Mysticism, Psychology, and Philosophy. New York: Oxford University Press, 1998.

Dow, James. The Shaman's Touch : Otomí Indian symbolic healing. Salt Lake City: University of Utah Press, 1986.

Dowden, Hester. Psychic Messages from Oscar Wilde. London: T. Werner Laurie, 1923.

———. Voices from the Void. London: Rider & Co., 1919.

Dowding, Lady Muriel. Beauty—not the Beast. St. Helier, Jersey: Neville Spearman, 1980. Reprinted as The Psychic Life of Muriel, The Lady Dowding: An Autobiography. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1981.

Dowling, Levi. The Aquarian Gospel of Jesus the Christ. Los Angeles: Leo W. Dowling, 1925.

Dowling, Lord. The Dark Star. London: Museum Press, 1951.

———. Lychgate: The Entrance to the Path. N.p., 1945.

———. Many Mansions. London: Rider, 1943.

"Dowsing in the Soviet Union." PSI Research 5, no. 1-2 (March-June 1986): 34–38.

Doyle, Arthur Conan. The Case for Spirit Photography. London: Hutchinson, 1922. Reprint, New York: George H. Doran, 1923.

———. The Coming of the Fairies. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1922. 2nd ed., rev. and enl. London: Psychic Press, 1928. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1972.

———. The Edge of the Unknown. N.p., 1930.

———. The History of Spiritualism. New York: Charles H. Doran; London: Cassele, 1926. Reprint, Stratford, N. H.: Ayer Co. Publishing, Inc., 1979.

———. Letters to the Press. Edited by John M. Gibson and Richard L. Green. Iowa City: University of Iowa Press, 1986.

———. Wanderings of a Spiritualist. New York: G. H. Doran;London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1921. Reprint, Berkeley, Calif.: Ronin Publishing, 1988.

Doyle, J. Miracles Said to Have Been Wrought by the Prince Hohenlohe. N.p., 1823.

Dresner, Samuel H. The Zaddik. New York: Schrocken Books, 1974.

Dresser, Horatio W. History of the New Thought Movement. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1919.

———. The Spirit of New Thought. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1917.

Dresser, Norine. American Vampires: Fans, Victims & Practitioners. New York: W. W. Norton, 1989.

Driburg, Tom. "Swaff": The Life and Times of Hannen Swaffer. London: Macdonald, 1974.

Driesch, Hans A. E. Alltagraetsel des Seelenlebens Psychical Research (Everyday Enigmas of the Mind). N.p., 1938.

———. The Crisis in Psychology. N.p., 1925.

———. History and Theory of Vitalism. New York: Macmillan, 1914.

———. Leib und Seele. (Body and Mind). N.p., 1916.

———. Parapsychologie, die Wissenschaft von den "occulten" Erscheingen (Parapsychology, Science of "Occult" Phenomena). N.p., 1932.

———. Psychical Research: The Science of the Supernormal. London: G. Bell, 1933. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

Driscoll, J. Walter. Gurdjieff: An Annotated Bibliography. New York: Garland Publishing, 1985.

Drouet, Bessie C. Station Astral. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1932.

Drower, E. S. Peacock Angel. London: John Murray, 1941.

Drown, Ruth, ed. The Forty-Nine Degrees: The Road to Divine Truth. New York: Greenwich Book Publishers, 1957.

Drummond, Andrew L. Edward Irving and His Circle. London: J. Clarke, 1937.

Drury, Nevill. The Elements of Shamanism. Dorset: Elements Books, 1989. UK: Element Books, Inc., 1997.

Drury, Nevill, and Gregory Tillett. Other Temples/Other Gods: The Occult in Australia. Sydney: Hodder & Stoughton, 1982.

Drury, Nevill, and Stephen Skinner. The Search for Abraxas. London: Neville Spearman, 1972.

Du Potet de Sennevoy, Baron. Cours de magnétisme animal. N.p., 1834. 1840.

———. Discours sur le magnétisme animal. N.p., 1833.

———. Essai sur l'enseignement philosophique du magnétisme. N.p., 1845.

———. Exposé des expériences sur le magnétisme animal. N.p., 1821.

———. La Magie dévoilée ou principes des sciences occultes. 1852. Translated as Magnetism and Magic. Edited by A. H. E. Lee. London, 1927.

———. Le magnétisme animal opposéà la médecine, mémoire pour servir a l'histoire du magnétisme en France et en Angleterre. N.p., 1840.

———. Manuel de l'é tudiant magnétiseur ou nouvelle instruction pratique du magnétisme fondée sur 30 anné es d'observations. N.p., 1846.

———. Traité complet de magnétisme animal. Paris, 1856.

Du Prel, Carl. Die Magie als Naturwissenschaft. Leipzig: M. Altmann, 1912.

Du Vignois, Elisée. Notre histoire racontée à l'avance par Nostradamus. Paris, 1910.

Dubrin, Stanley, and J. Keenan. Acupuncture and Your Health. Chatsworth, Calif.: Books for Better Living, 1974.

Ducasse, C. J. A Critical Examination of the Belief in a Life After Death. Springfield, Ill.: Charles C. Thomas, 1961, 1974.

———. Nature, Mind and Death. LaSalle, Ill.: Open Court Publishing, 1951.

———. Paranormal Phenomena, Science, and Life After Death. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1969.

Duce, Ivy Oneida. How a Master Works. Walnut Creek, Calif.: Sufism Reoriented, 1971.

Duchesneau, Louise. The Voice of the Muse. Frankfurt, Germany: P. Lang, 1986.

Duguid, David. Hafed, Prince of Persia; his Experiences in Earth Life, being Spirit Communications Received Through Mr. David Duguid, the Glasgow Trance Speaking Medium, with an Appendix, containing Communications from the Spirit Artists Ruisdael and Steen, illustrated by Facsimiles of Forty-Five Drawings and Writings, the Direct Work of the Spirits. London: James Burn, Glasgow: Nisbet, 1876.

Duke, H. H. The Holy Angels: Their Nature & Employments. London, 1875.

Dukes, Eugene D. Magic & Witchcraft in the Dark Ages. Lanham, Md.: University Press of America, 1996.

Dukes, Paul. Come Hammer, Come Sickle. N.p., 1947.

———. Red Dusk and the Morrow. N.p., 1922.

———. The Unending Quest. London, 1950.

———. The Yoga of Health, Youth and Joy. N.p., 1960.

———. Yoga for the Western World. N.p., 1953.

Duncan, Malcolm C. Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. New York: McKay, 1976.

Dunn, Charles W. The Foundling and the Werewolf: A Literary-Historical Study of Guillaume de Palerne. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1960.

Dunne, J. W. An Experiment with Time. London: A. & C. Black; New York: Macmillan, 1927. Reprint, New York: Hillary, 1958.

Dunne, John J. Haunted Ireland: Her Romantic and Mysterious Ghosts. Belfast: Appletree Press, 1977.

Dunninger, Joseph. Inside the Medium's Cabinet. New York: David Kemp, 1924.

Dunraven, Windham Thomas Wyndham-Quin. Experiences in Spiritualism with Mr. D. D. Home. N.p., 1871. Reprint, Glasgow: R. Maclehose & Co. Ltd., 1924; New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1976.

Dunwich, Gerina. Everyday Wicca. Secaucus, N.J.: Carol Publishing Group, 1997.

———. Wiccan Prophecy. Secaucus, N.J.: Carol Publishing Group, 1997.

Duplessis, Yvonne. "Dermo-optical Sensitivity and Perception." International Journal of Biosocial Research 7, no. 2 (1985).

DuPlessis, Yvonne. "Differences between ESP of the Blind and Dermo-Optical Perception." International Journal of Paraphysics 10, no. 3 (1976): 51–60.

DuPoteat, Jules. Magnetism and Magic. New York: F. Stokes, n.d.

Durdin-Robertson. The Goddesses of Chaldea, Syria and Egypt. Enniscorthy, Eire: Cesara Publications, 1975.

Durkheim, Emile. The Elementary Forms of the Religious Life. New York: Collier, 1961.

Durville, (Marie-François) Hector. Almanach spirite et magnétique illustre pour 1893. N.p., 1893.

———. Bibliographie du Magnétisme et des Sciences Occultes. N.p., 1895.

———. Le Fantôme des Vivants, Anatomie et physiologie de l'àme; Recherches expérimentales sur le dé doublement du corps de l'homme. N.p., 1909.

———. Le Magnétisme considéré comme agent lumineux. N.p., 1896.

———. Le magnétisme des animaux; Zootherapie (Polarité des animaux morts et vivants; Zoothérapie, Biothérapie, etc.). N.p., 1896.

———. Le Magnétisme humain considéré comme agent physique. N.p., 1890.

———. Le massage et le magnétisme menacés par les médecins; le proces Moureux à Angers; necessite d'un amendement a la loi du 30 Nov. 1892, sur l'exercice de la médecine. N.p., 1897.

———. Le Massage et le magnétisme sous l'empire de la loi du 30 Nov. 1892, sur l'exercice de la médecine; Règlement statutaire de l'Ecole pratique de Magnétisme et de Massage: statuts du syndicate des Masseurs et Magnétiseurs de Paris. N.p., 1894.

———. Lois physiques du magnétisme; Polarité humaine; Traité expérimental et thérapeutique de magnetisme. N.p., 1886.

———. Magnétisme personnel; Education de la Pensée—Développement de la Volonté—Pourêtre heureux, fort, bien portant et réussir en tout. N.p., 1905.

———. Pour combattre la surdité, les bourdonnements, l'otite, etc. . . . par le magnétisme. N.p., 1906.

———. Pour combattre les maladies par suggestion et auto-suggestion, se débarrasser de ses mauvaises habitudes, prendre de l'Energie et de la Confiance en soi, dominer les autres, et éviter leurs suggestions. N.p., 1896.

———. Pour combattres les maladies par l'application del'aimant. N.p., 1906.

Durville, Henri, and Andre Durville, eds. Les Trucs de la Prestidigitation dévoilés. A series of 17 titles reprinted from Revue du Psychisme expérimental and Journal du Magnétisme 1911–1914.

Durville, Henri, ed. Cours de magnétisme personnel. N.p., 1933.

———. La Magie divine. N.p., 1930.

———. Mystères initatiques. N.p., 1929.

———. 1er Congres international de Psychologie expérimentale. N.p., 1910.

———. 2e Congres international de Psychologie expérimentale, La Science secrete. N.p., 1923.

Duvall, Piere [Rémy Chauvin], and E. Montredon [Jean Mayer]. "A PK Experiment with Mice." Journal of Parapsychology 32 (1968): 153.

———. "Further Psi Experiments with Mice." Journal of Parapsychology 32 (1968): 260.

Dvivedi, M. N., trans. The Yoga-Sutras of Patanjali. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1890.

———. The Yoga-Sutras of Patanjali. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1890.

Dwyer, Walter W. The Churches' Handbook for Spiritual Healing. 9th ed. New York: Ascension Press, 1965.

Dyer, T. F. Thiselton. The Ghost World. London: Ward & Downey, 1893.

Dykshoorn, M. B. My Passport Says Clairvoyant. New York: Hawthorn, 1974. N.p.: Jove Publications, Inc., 1978.

Dyne, Mark. Electronic Communication for the Spiritual Emancipation of the People. Rev. ed., Manchester, England: The Spirit Electronic Communication Society, 1954.

Earll, Tony [Raymond Buckland]. Mu Revealed. New York: Paperback Library, 1970.

Easlea, Brian. Witch-hunting, Magic and the New Philosophy 1450–1750. Atlantic Highlands, N.J.: Humanities, 1980.

Easton, Steward C. The Era of Charlemagne. New York: Van Nostrand, 1961.

———. Roger Bacon and His Search for a Universal Science. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1970.

———. Rudolf Steiner: Herald of a New Epoch. Spring Valley, N.Y.: Anthroposophical Press, 1980.

Easwaran, Eknath. The Mantram Handbook. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1978.

Ebertine, Reinhold. Applied Cosmobiology. Aalen, Germany: Ebertin Verlag, 1972.

———. Combination of Solar Influences. Aalen, Germany: Ebertin Verlag, 1972.

Ebon, Martin. Communicating with the Dead. New York: New American Library, 1968.

———. The Evidence for Life After Death. New York: New American Library, 1977.

———. Prophecy in Our Time. New York: New American Library, 1969. Reprint, London: Alhambra, 1971.

———. Psychic Discoveries by the Russians. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1963. Reprint, New York: New American Library, 1971.

———. Psychic Warfare: Threat or Illusion? New York: McGraw-Hill, 1983.

———. The Signet Handbook of Parapsychology. New York: New American Library, 1978.

———. The Soviet Propaganda Machine. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1987.

———. They Knew the Unknown. New York: New American Library, 1971.

———. True Experiences in Exotic ESP. New York: New American Library, 1968.

.———. True Experiences with Ghosts. New York: New American Llibrary, 1968.

———. True Experiences in Prophecy. New York: New American Library, 1967.

———. True Experiences in Telepathy. New York: New American Library, 1967.

———. What's New in ESP. New York: New American Library, 1976.

Ebon, Martin, ed. Exorcism: Fact Not Fiction. New York: New American Library, 1974.

———. Miracles. New York: New American Library, 1981.

———. Psychic Discoveries by the Russians. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1963; New York: New American Library, 1971.

Eckartshausen, Karl von. The Cloud upon the Sanctuary. Translated by Isabel de Steiger. Introduction by Arthur E. Waite. London: Philip Wellby, 1903.

Ecroyd, H. R. "A Strange Adventure in Switzerland." The Quest 21, 1 (October 1939).

Eddison, E. R. The Worm Ouroboros. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1952.

Eddy, Mary Baker. Church Manual of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass. Boston: Trustees Under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy, 1908.

———. Poetical Works. Boston: Trustees Under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy, 1936.

———. Prose Works. Boston: Trustees Under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy, 1925.

———. Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures. Boston: Trustees Under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy, 1906.

Edelstein, Emma Jeanette Levy. Asclepius: a Collection and Interpretation of the Testimonies. New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

Eden, Jerome. Animal Magnetism and the Life Energy. Hicksville, N.Y.: Exposition Press, 1974.

———. The Desert Makers: A Study of the Creation of Deserts in Man, His Atmosphere and Planet. N.p.: PPCC, 1981.

———. Do Not Disturb: The Emotional Plague in Education. Valdez, Ala.: Eden Press, 1959.

———. Orgone Energy—The Answer to Atomic Suicide. N.p., 1972.

———. Planet in Trouble—The UFO Assault on Earth. Hicksville, N.Y.: Exposition Press, 1973.

———. Suffer the Children. New York, 1959.

———. View From Eden—Talks to Students of Orgonomy. N.p., 1976.

Eden, Jerome, trans. Memoir of F. A. Mesmer, Doctor of Medicine, on His Discoveries, 1799. Mount Vernon, N.Y.: Eden Press, 1957.

Edge, H. L., J. Morris, J. Palmer, and J. H. Rush. Foundations of Parapsychology: Exploring the Boundaries of Human Capabilities. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1986.

Editors of Psychic Magazine. Psychics. New York: Harper & Row, 1972.

Edmonds, Simeon. ESP: Extrasensory Perception. London: Aquarian Press, 1965. Reprint, North Hollywood, Calif.: Wilshire Book, 1972.

———. Hypnosis: Key to Psychic Powers. London: Aquarian Press, 1968.

———. Hypnotism and Psychic Phenomena. Hollywood, Calif.: Wilshire, n.d.

———. Hypnotism and the Supernormal. Hollywood, Calif.: Wilshire Book Co., 1968.

———. The Psychic Power of Hypnosis. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1968.

———. Spiritualism: a Critical Survey. London: Aquarian Press, 1966.

Edwards, David. Dare to Make Magic. London: Regal Press, 1971.

Edwards, Frank. Flying Saucers Here and Now. New York: Lyle Stuart, 1967.

———. Flying Saucers—Serious Business. New York: Lyle Stuart, 1966.

———. My First Ten Million Sponsors. New York: Ballantine Books, 1956.

———. Strange World. New York: Lyle Stuart, 1964.

———. Stranger Than Science. New York: Lyle Stuart, 1959.

———. Strangest of All. Secaucus, N.J.: Citadel Press, 1958.

Edwards, Gillian. Hobgoblin and Sweet Puck: Fairy Names and Natures. London: Geoffrey Bles, 1974.

Edwards, Harry. The Evidence for Spirit Healing. London: Spiritualist Press, 1952.

———. The Healing Intelligence. New York: Taplinger, 1971.

———. A Guide to the Understanding and Practice of Spiritual Healing. Surrey, England: Spiritual Healing Sanctuary, 1974.

———. The Science of Spirit Healing. London: Rider and Co., 1945.

———. Spirit Healing. London: Herbert Jenkins, 1960.

———. Thirty Years a Spiritual Healer. London: Herbert Jenkins; Surrey, England: Spiritual Healing Sanctuary, 1968.

———. The Truth about Spiritual Healing. London: Spiritualist Press, 1956.

Edwards, Owen Dudley. The Quest for Sherlock Holmes, A Biographical Study of Arthur Conan Doyle. Edinburgh: Mainstream Publishing, 1983.

Eek, Sven, and Boris de Zirkoff. William Quan Judge: Theosophical Pioneer. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1969.

Eells, Charles P. Life and Times of Apollonius of Tyana, Rendered into English from the Greek of Philostratus the Elder. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1923.

Eglinton, John. A Memoir of AE: George William Russell. London: Macmillian, 1937.

Ehrenwald, Jan. Anatomy of Genius: Split Brains and Global Minds. New York: Human Sciences Press, 1984.

———. "An Autobiographical Fragment." In Men and Women of Parapsychology, edited by R. Pilkington. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1987.

———. The ESP Experience: A Psychiatric Validation. New York: Basic Books, 1978.

———. The History of Psychotherapy: From Healing Magic to Encounter. New York: J. Aronson, 1976.

———. New Dimensions of Deep Analysis; A Study of Telepathy in Interpersonal Relationships. New York: Grune & Stratton, 1954. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

———. Psychotherapy, Myth and Method. New York: Grune & Stratton, 1966.

———. Telepathy and Medical Psychology. New York: W. W. Norton, 1948.

Eigen, Michael. The Psychoanalytic Mystic. Binghamton, N.Y.: ESF Publishers, 1998.

Eikerenkoetter, Frederick. Reverend Ike's Secrets of Health, Happiness, and Prosperity—For You. New York: Reverend Ike Prayer Tower, n.d.

Eisen, William. Agasha, Master of Wisdom. Marina del Rey, Calif.: DeVorss, 1977.

———. The English Cabala. 2 vols. Marina del Rey, Calif.: DeVorss, 1980–82.

Eisen, William, ed. The Agashan Discourse. Marina del Rey, Calif.: DeVorss, 1978.

Eisenbud, Jule. "On Ted Serios' Alleged 'Confession.'" Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 69 (1975).

Eisenbud, Jule. Paranormal Foreknowledge: Problems and Perplexities. New York: Human Sciences Press, 1982.

———. "Paranormal Photography." In Handbook of Parapsychology, edited by B. B. Wolman. New York: Van Nostrand Reinhold, 1977.

Eisenbud, Jule. Psi and Psychoanalysis. New York: Grune & Stratton, 1970.

———. "Psychic Photography and Thoughtography." In Psychic Exploration: A Challenge for Science, edited by Edgar D. Mitchell and John White. New York: Putnam, 1974.

———. "Some Investigations of Claims of PK Effects on Metal: The Denver Experiments." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 76 (1982).

———. The World of Ted Serios: "Thoughtographic" Studies of an Extraordinary Mind. 2d ed. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1989.

Eisler, Robert. Man into Wolf: An Anthropological Interpretation of Sadism, Masochism, and Lycanthropy. Santa Barbara, Calif.: Ross Erikson, 1978.

Eisler, Robert. The Royal Art of Astrology. London: Herbert Joseph, 1946.

Eitel, E. J. Feng-shui: The Rudiments of Natural Science in China. Bristol, England: Pentacle Books, 1979.

El Morya [through Mark L. Prophet]. Light From Heavenly Lanterns. Colorado Springs, Colo.: Summit Lighthouse, 1973.

———. [through Mark L. Prophet and Elizabeth Clare Prophet]. Morya the Darjeeling Masters Speaks to His Chelas on the Quest for the Holy Grail. Los Angeles: Summit University, 1973.

Elbe, Louis. Future Life in the Light of Ancient Wisdom & Modern Science. N.p., 1906. Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co. 1998.

Eliade, Mircea. De Zalmoxis à Genghis Khan. 1970. Translated as Zalmoxis, the Vanishing God. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1972.

———. The Forge and the Crucible; The Origins and Structures of Alchemy. New York: Harper & Row, 1956. London, 1962.

———. Forgerons et Alchimistes. Flammarion, 1956. Translated as The Forge and the Crucible. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1962. Reprint. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1979.

———. Le Yoga: Immortalité et liberté. 1954. Translated as Yoga: Immortality and Freedom. New York: Pantheon Books, 1958.

———. "1907 to 1937: Journey East, Journey West." In Autobiography. Vol. 1. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1981.

———. Occultism, Witchcraft and Cultural Fashion: Essays in Comparative Religion. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1976.

———. Patanjali et le Yoga. 1962. Translated as Patanjali and Yoga. New York: Funk and Wagnall's, 1969.

———. Rites and Symbols of Initiation: The Mysteries of Birth & Rebirth. New York: Harper Torchbooks, 1968.

———. "Shamanism: An Overview." Encyclopedia of Religion. Vol. 13. New York: Macmillan Publishing Co./London: Collier Macmillan, 1987.

———. "Shamanism." In Ancient Religions. Edited by Vergilius Ferm. New York: Citadel Press, 1965.

———. Shamanism: Archaic Techniques of Ecstasy. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1964.

———. Two Tales of the Occult. New York: Herder and Herder, 1970.

Eliade, Mircea., ed. Encyclopedia of Religion. 16 vols. New York: Macmillian, 1987.

Elkin, A. P. Aboriginal Men of High Degree. 2nd edition. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1978. Rochester, Vt.: Inner Traditions International, Ltd.,1993.

Elliotson, John. Human Physiology. London, 1840.

Elliott, Charles W. Mysteries, or Glimpses of the Supernatural. New York: Harper, 1852.

Elliott, G. Maurice. The Psychic Life of Jesus. 1938. Reprint, New York: London Press, 1974.

———. Spiritualism in the Old Testament. London: The Psychic Book Club, 1940.

Elliott, Ralph W. Runes: An Introduction. New York: Barnes & Noble, 1971. Reprint, Greenwood Press, 1981.

Ellis, Arthur J. The Divining Rod: A History of Water Witching, with a Bibliography. Washington, 1917; 1938.

Ellis, D. J. The Mediumship of the Tape Recorder. Pulborough, England: The Author, 1978.

Ellis, Havelock. The World of Dreams. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co., 1922. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1976.

Ellis, Ida. Planchette and Automatic Writing. Blackpool, UK, 1904.

———. Thoughts on Psychometry. Blackpool, UK, 1899.

Ellis, Keith. Prediction and Prophecy. London: Wayland, 1973.

Ellwood, Gracia Fay. Psychic Visits to the Past: An Exploration of Retrocognition. New York: New American Library, 1971.

Ellwood, Robert S., Jr. Alternative Altars: Unconventional and Eastern Spirituality in America. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1979.

———. Religious and Spiritual Groups in Modern America. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1973.

———. Theosophy. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1986.

Elworthy, F. T. The Evil Eye. London, 1894. Reprint, New York: Julian Press, 1958.

Emboden, William A. "The Sacred Journey in Dynastic Egypt: Shamanistic Trance in the Context of the Narcotic Water Lily and the Mandrake," Journal of Psychoactive Drugs. 21 (1989): 61–75.

———. "Transcultural Use of Narcotic Water Lilies in Ancient Egyptian and Maya Drug Ritual," Journal of Ethnopharmacology. 3, no. 1 (1981): 39–83.

Emboden, William A., and Marlene Dobkin De Rios. "Mayan-Egyptian Uses of Water Lilies (Nymphaceae) in Shamanic Ritual Drug Use." In Folk Medicine and Herbal Healing. Edited by George G. Meyer, Kenneth Blum, and John G. Cull. Springfield, Ill.: Charles C. Thomas, 1981.

Emerick, Abraham J. Obeah and Duppyism in Jamaica. Woodstock, N.Y.: privately printed, 1915.

Emmerich, Anne Catherine. The Dolorous Passion of Our Lord Jesus Christ. Springfield, Ill.: Templegate, 1951.

———. Leben der Heil, Jungfrau Maria. Munich: Literarisch-artistische Anstalt, 1852. Translated as The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary by Michael Paliret. Springfield, Ill.: Templegate, 1954.

Emmons, Nuel. Manson in His Own Words. New York: Grove Press, 1986.

Empson, R. H. The Cult of the Peacock Angel. N.p., 1928.

Endersby, Victor. Hall of Magic Mirrors. New York: Carlton Press, 1969.

Endicott, Kirk. Batek. Negrito Religion. The World View of a Hunting and Gathering People of Peninsular Malaysia. Oxford: The Clarendon Press, 1979.

Endore, Guy. King of Paris. New York: Pocket Books, 1958.

Engelbrecht, Johann. The Divine Visions of Johann Engelbrecht. 2 vols. Northampton, England, 1780.

Eniatos. Mirabilis Annus; or, The Year of Prodigies and Wonders; Being a Collection of Several Signs That Have Been Seen in the Heavens, in the Earth, and in the Waters, Together with Many Remarkable Accidents and Judgments . . . Within the Space of One Year Last Past. London, 1661.

Ennemoser, Joseph. The History of Magic. 2 vols., 1854. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1960.

———. The History of the Supernatural. Translated by William Howitt. 2 vols. 1854. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1970.

The Equinox. 5, nos. 10–4. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1975–1981.

The Equinox. 1, nos. 1–10. London, 1909–1913. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1972.

The Equinox. 3, no. 1. Detroit: Universal Publishing, 1919. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1972.

The Equinox of the God. London: Ordo Templi Orientis, 1936.

Erdman, David, ed. The Illuminated Blake. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1974.

Ericson, Eric. The World, The Flesh, and the Devil: A Biographical Dictionary of Witches. New York: Mayflower Books, 1981.

Ermacora, Giovanni B. I fatti spiritici e le ipotesi affrettate (Spiritistic facts and hasty hypotheses). Padua, Italy, 1892.

Erman, Adolf. Life in Ancient Egypt. London, 1894. Reprint, New York: Dover, 1971.

Ernst, Bernard M. L., and Hereward Carrington. Houdini and Conan Doyle: The Story of a Strange Friendship. Albert and Charles Boni, 1932. London: Hutchinson, 1933.

Erskine, Alex. A Hypnotist's Casebook. London: Rider, 1932.

Erskine, Steuart Memoirs of Edward, Eighth Earl of Sandwich, 1839–1916. London, N.p., 1919.

Esdaile, James. Mesmerism in India and its Practical Application to Surgery and Medicine. 1846. Reprint, Chicago: Psychic Research, 1902.

———. Mesmerism in India. 1850. Reprinted as Hypnosis in Medicine and Surgery. New York: Institute for Research in Hypnosis Publication Press, 1957.

———. Natural and Mesmeric Clairvoyance; With the Practical Application of Mesmerism in Surgery and Medicine. London: H. Bailliere, 1852. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

Essays in Honor of Gilbert Murray. Freeport, N.Y.: Books for Libraries Press, 1972.

Estabrooks, George H. Hypnosis: Current Problems. New York: Harper, 1962.

———. Hypnotism. New York: Dutton, 1957.

———. Man, Mechanical Misfit. New York: Macmillan, 1941.

———. Spiritism. New York: Dutton, 1947.

Estabrooks, George H., and Nancy Gross. The Future of the Human Mind. New York: Dutton, 1961.

Estabrooks, George H., and Richard Lockbridge. Death in the Mind. New York: Dutton, 1947.

Estes, J. Worth. Dictionary of Protopharmacology: Therapeutic Practices, 1700–1850. Canton, Mass.: Science History Publications, 1990.

Estrade, J. B. The Appearances of the Blessed Virgin Mary at the Grotto of Lourdes: Personal Souvenirs of an Eyewitness. London: Art & Book Co., 1912.

Evans, Christopher. Cults of Unreason. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1973. Reprint, London: Harrap, 1974; New York: Dell, 1975.

———. Cybernetics. Baltimore, Md.: University Park Press, 1968.

———. The Mighty Micro. London: Gollancz, 1979.

———. Psychology: A Dictionary of the Mind, Brain, and Behavior. London: Arrow Books, 1978.

———. Understanding Yourself. New York: A & W Visual Library, 1977.

Evans, Colin. The New Waite's Compendium of Natal Astrology. 1917. Revised by Brain E. F. Gardener. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1971.

[Evans, Frederick W.]. Autobiography of a Shaker. Mount Lebanon, N.Y., 1869.

Evans, Frederick W. Shakers and Shakerism. New York, 1859.

Evans, Henry Ridgeley. The Old and New Magic. Chicago: Open Court Publishing, 1909.

Evans, Hilary. Alternate States of Consciousness: Unself, Otherself, and Superself. Wellingborough, Northampton, England: Aquarian Press, 1989.

———. Gods, Spirits, Cosmic Guardians. Wellingborough, Northampton, England: Aquarian Press, 1987.

———. Intrusions: Society and the Paranormal. London and Boston: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1982.

———. UFO's 1947–1987: The 40-year Search for an Explanation. London: Fortean Times, 1987.

———. Visions, Apparitions, Alien Visitors. Wellingborough, Northampton, England: Aquarian Press, 1984.

Evans, Hilary, and John Spencer, eds. Phenomena: Forty Years of Flying Saucers. New York: Avon Books, 1989.

Evans, I. H. N. The Religion of the Tempasuk Dusuns of North Borneo. Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge University Press, 1953.

Evans, J. W. The Life and Work of Robin John Tillyard, 1881–1937. St. Lucia: University of Queensland Press, 1963.

Evans, John W. "Conan Doyle Still Lives." American Weekly, November 2, 1952.

———. "Haunted by the Ghost of Bernard Shaw." American Weekly, June 7, 1953.

———. "Patrice Munsel's Neon Ghost." American Weekly, November 8, 1953.

———. "The Phantom Model." American Weekly, April 4, 1954.

———. "When the Clocks Stood Still." American Weekly, June 13, 1954.

Evans-Pritchard, E. E. Witchcraft, Oracles, and Magic among the Azande. Oxford: The Clarendon Press, 1937.

Evans, W. H. Constructive Spiritualism. Manchester, England: Two Worlds, 1917.

———. Modern Spiritualism. Rochdale, England: British Spiritualists' Lyceum Union, 1923.

Evans, Warren Felt. The Divine Law of Cure. Boston: H. H. Carter, 1881.

———. Esoteric Christianity and Mental Therapeutics. Boston: H. H. Carter & Karick, 1886.

———. The Mental Cure. Boston: Colby & Rich, 1869.

———. Mental Medicine. Boston: H. H. Carter, 1873.

———. The Primitive Mind Cure. Boston: H. H. Carter & Karrick, 1885.

———. Soul and Body. Boston: H. H. Carter, 1876.

Evans-Wentz, W. Y. The Fairy-Faith in Celtic Countries. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1911. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1966; New York: Lemma, 1973.

———. The Tibetan Book of the Dead. 1927. Reprint, London: Oxford University Press, 1957.

———. The Tibetan Book of the Great Liberation. New York: Oxford University Press, 1954.

———. Tibet's Great Yogi . . . Milarepa. 2d ed. London: Oxford University Press, 1969.

———. Tibetan Yoga and Secret Doctrines; or, Seven Books of Wisdom of the Great Path. 2d ed. London: Oxford University Press, 1958.

Ewen, Cecil L'Estrange. Witch Hunting and Witch Trials. London, 1929.

———. Witchcraft and Demonism. London, 1933.

"Exposure of Mr. Eldred." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 12: 242–52.

"Exposures of Mr. Craddock." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 12.

Eyries, Jean Baptiste. Fantasmagoriana, or Collection of the Histories of Apparitions, Spectres, Ghosts, etc. Paris: F. Schoell, 1812.

Eysenck, Hans J. Astrology: Science or Superstition? London: Maurice Temple Smith, 1982.

———. Handbook of Abnormal Psychology: An Experimental Approach. New York: Basic Books, 1961.

———. "Personality and Extrasensory Perception." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 44 (1967).

———. Sense and Nonsense in Psychology. London: Penguin, 1957.

Eysenck, Hans J., and C. Sargent. Explaining the Unexplained. London: Weidenfield and Nicholson, 1982.

———. Know Your Own PSI-IQ. New York: World Almanac Publications, 1983.

Fagan, Cyril. Astrological Origins. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1971.

———. Fixed Zodiac Ephemeris for 1948. Washington, D.C.: National Astrological Library, 1948.

———. Zodiacs Old and New. Los Angeles: Llewellyn Publications, 1950.

Fagan, Myron. A Brief History of the Illuminati. Lansing, Ill.: H.B.C., 1978.

Fahler, Jarl I. "ESP Card Tests With and Without Hypnosis." Journal of Parapsychology 21 (1957).

Fahler, Jarl I., and H. H. J. Keil. "Nina S. Kulagina: A Strong Case for PK Involving Directly Observable Movements of Objects Recorded on Cine Film." Research in Parapsychology, 1974. Edited by J. D. Morris, William G. Roll, and R. L. Morris. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1975.

Fahler, Jarl I., and Karlis Osis. "Checking for Awareness of Hits in a Precognition Experiment with Hypnotized Subjects." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 60 (1966).

Fahler, Jarl I., and R. J. Cadoret. "ESP Card Tests of College Students With and Without Hypnosis." Journal of Parapsychology 22 (1958).

Fahnestock, W. B. Statuvolism: Artificial Somnambulism. Chicago: Religio-Philosophical Publishing House, 1871.

Fahsel, K. Konnersreuth: Le mystère des stigmatisés. N.p., 1933.

Fairbanks, K. "Le Cas Spirite de Dickens." Arch. de Psychol. T.I. (June 1892).

Fairfax, Edward. Daemonologia: A Discourse on Witchcraft. Harrogate, England: R. Ackrill, 1882. Reprint, New York: Barnes & Noble, 1971.

Fairley, John. Arthur Clarks' World of Strange Powers. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1984.

Faizi, Gloria. The Baha'i Faith: An Introduction. New Delhi, India: Baha'i Publishing Trust, 1988.

Falcomer, Marco T. An Introduction to Modern Spiritualism. [Venice], 1895.

———. Phenomenography. Paris, 1903.

Falconnier, R. Les lames hermétiques du tarot divinatoire. Paris, 1896.

Fanthorpe, Patricia, and Lionel Fanthorpe. The Holy Grail Revealed: The Real Secret of Rennes-le-Château. North Hollywood, Calif.: Newcastle Pub. Co., 1982.

Faraday, Ann. Dream Power. New York: Coward, McCann & Geoghegan, 1972. Reprint, New York: Berkeley, 1973.

Farmer, John S. 'Twixt Two Worlds: A Narrative of the Life and Work of William Eglinton. London: The Psychological Press, 1886.

Farrar, Janet, and Stewart Farrar. Eight Sabbats for Witches. London: Robert Hale, 1981.

Farrar, Stewart. What Witches Do. New York: Coward, McCann & Geoghegan; London: Peter Davies, 1971. Reprint. Custer, Wash.: Phoenix Publishing, Inc., 1983.

Farson, Daniel. The Man Who Wrote Dracula: A Biography of Bram Stoker. New York: St. Martin's, 1976.

Farson, Daniel, and Angus Hall. Mysterious Monsters. London: Aldus Books, 1978.

Farzan, Massud. The Tale of the Reed Pipe. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1974.

Fassbender, Pantaleon. "Parapsychology and the Neurosciences: A Computer-based Content Analysis of Abstracts in the Database 'Medline' from 1975 to 1995," Perceptual & Motor Skills 84, no. 2 (April 1997): 452–454.

Fast, Francis R. The Houdini Messages: The Facts Concerning the Messages Received Through the Mediumship of Arthur Ford. New York: The Author, 1929.

Faw, Duane L., comp. The Paramony. Malibu, Calif.: The Author, 1986.

Fawcett, Lawrence, and Barry J. Greenwood. Clear Intent: The Government Coverup of the UFO Experience. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1984.

Fay, Charles Eden. Mary Celeste: The Odyssey of an Abandoned Ship. Salem, Mass.: Peabody Museum, 1942.

Federman, Reinhold. The Royal Road of Alchemy. New York: Chilton, 1969.

Feilding, Evarard. "Note on the English Sittings with Miss Tomczyk." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 17 (1915).

———. Sittings with Eusapia Palladino and Other Studies. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1963.

Feilding, F. E., W. W. Baggally, and Hereward Carrington. "Report on a Series of Sittings with Eusapia Palladino." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 23, no. 59 (1909); 25, no. 62 (1911).

Feldenkrais, Moshe. Higher Judo. New York: Warner, 1952.

Fenwick, Sherida. Getting It: The Psychology of est. Philadelphia: J. P. Lippencott, 1976.

Ferguson, Ian. Philosophy of Witchcraft. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

Ferguson, J. Bibliotheca Chemica; a Bibliography of Books on Alchemy, Chemistry and Pharmaceutics. 2 vols. London, 1954.

Ferguson, J. B. Supramundane Facts of the Life of Rev. J. B. Ferguson. London, 1865.

Ferguson, Jesse Babcock. Spirit Communion: A Record of Communications from the Spirit Spheres. Nashville, Tenn., 1854.

Ferguson, John. An Illustrated Encyclopaedia of Mysticism and The Mystery Religions. London: Thames & Hudson, 1976.

———. Witchcraft Literature of Scotland. Edinburgh: Edinburgh Bibliographical Society Papers, 1899.

Ferguson, Marilyn. The Aquarian Conspiracy: Personal and Social Transformation in Our Time. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1980. Los Angeles: J. P. Tarcher/Houghton Mifflin; New York: Putnam Publishing Group, 1987.

———. The Frontiers of Mind Research. New York: Taplinger, 1973.

Fernandez, James W. Bwiti. An Ethnography of the Religious Imagination in Africa. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1982.

Fernández, José S. Application of the Statistical Method to the Study of Cryptesthetic Phenomena. N.p., 1942.

———. Clairvoyance and Probability. N.p., 1941.

———. Experimental Parapsychology. N.p., 1953.

———. A Mathematical Preface to the Study of ESP. N.p., 1949.

———. Parapsychology and the Existence of the Soul. N.p., 1959.

———. Philosophical and Scientific Bases for Survival and Reincarnation. N.p., 1957.

———. The Photoelectric Cell and Perception of the Spiritual World. N.p., 1932.

Ferreiro, Alberto and Jeffrey B. Russell. The Devil, Heresy, & Witchcraft in the Middle Ages. Boston: Brill Academic Publishers, Inc., 1998.

Ferro, Robert, and Michael Gromley. Atlantis: The Autobiography of a Search. New York: Bell Publishing, 1970.

Ferry, David. Gilgamesh: a New Rendering into English Verse. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1992.

Festinger, Leon, Henry W. Riecken, and Stanley Schachter. When Prophecy Fails. New York: Harper & Row, 1956.

Feuchtwanger, E. J. Gladstone. Blasingtoke, UK: Macmillan, 1989.

Field, Geoffrey G. Evangelist of Race: The Germanic Vision of Houston Stewart Chamberlain. New York: Columbia University Press, 1981.

Field, Sidney. Krishnamurti: The Reluctant Messiah. New York: Paragon House, 1989.

Fielding, Charles, and Clark Collins. The Story of Dion Fortune. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1985.

Fielding, H. The Soul of a People. London: n.p., 1902.

Fielding-Ould, Fielding. The Wonders of the Saints in the Light of Spiritualism. London: John M. Watkins, 1919.

Fields, Rick. How the Swans Came to the Lake: A Narrative History of Buddhism in America. Boulder, Colo.: Shambhala, 1981.

Figuier, Louis. L'Alchimie et les Achimistes. Paris, 1856.

———. The Day After Death, or, Our Future Life, According to Science. London: R. Bentley, 1874.

Fillmore, Charles S. Christian Healing: Science of Being. Kansas City, Mo.: Unity School of Christianity, 1909.

———. Jesus Christ Heals. Kansas City, Mo.: Unity School of Christianity, 1931.

———. Metaphysical Bible Dictionary. Kansas City, Mo.: Unity School of Christianity, 1931.

———. Prosperity. Kansas City, Mo.: Unity School of Christianity, 1936.

———. The Twelve Powers of Man. Lee's Summit, Mo.: Unity School of Christianity, 1930, 1955.

Fillmore, Charles, and Cora Fillmore. Teach Us to Pray. New York: Seabury Press, 1976.

Fillmore, Myrtle. How to Let God Help You. Lee's Summit, Mo.: Unity School of Christianity, 1956.

———. The Letters of Myrtle Fillmore. Kansas City, Mo.: Unity School of Christianity, 1936.

Fincher, Susanne F. Creating Mandalas. Boston: Shambhala Publications, Inc., 1991.

Findhorn Community. Faces of Findhorn. Forres, Scotland: Findhorn Publications, 1980.

———. The Findhorn Garden. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

Findlay, Arthur J. On the Edge of the Etheric; or, Survival After Death Scientifically Explained. London: Psychic Press, 1931. Reprint, Corgi, 1971.

———. The Curse of Ignorance. 2 vols. London, 1947.

———. An Investigation of Psychic Phenomena. London, 1924.

———. Looking Back: the Autobiography of a Spiritualist. London: Psychic Press, 1955.

———. On the Edge of the Etheric. London: Psychic Press, 1931.

———. The Psychic Stream. London, 1939.

———. The Rock of Truth, or Spiritualism, the Coming World Religion. London: Rider, 1933.

———. The Unfolding Universe. London, 1935.

———. The Way of Life London, 1953.

Fiore, Edith. You Have Been Here Before: A Psychologist Looks at Past Lives. New York: Coward, McCann & Geoghegan, 1978.

Firebrace, R. C., and Lucien Landau. "The Delawarr Camera." Light: A Journal of Psychic Science 77, no. 3430 (March 1937).

Fischer, Oskar. Experimente mit Raffael Schermann. Ein Beitrag zum Problem der Graphologie, Telepathie und des Hellsehens. N.p., 1924.

Fisher, B. Aubrey. "Leadership as Medium: Treating Complexity in Group Communication Research," Small Group Behavior 16, no. 2 (May 1985): 167–196. Fisher, Joe. The Case for Reincarnation. New York: Bantam, 1985.

Fisk, George W. "How Primitive is ESP?" Tomorrow (spring 1957).

———. "We Card-Guessers." Tomorrow (winter 1957).

Fisk, George W., and Donald J. West. "Psychokinetic Experiments with a Single Subject." Parapsychology Newsletter. November–December 1957.

Fitzgerald, B. J. A New Text of Spiritual Philosophy and Religion. San Jose, Calif.: Universal Church of the Master, 1954.

Fitzgerald, Randall. The Complete Book of Extraterrestrial Encounters. New York: Collier, 1979.

Fitzsimons, Raymund. Death and the Magician: The Mystery of Houdini. London: Hamish Hamilton, 1980.

Flaherty, Gloria. Shamanism and the Eighteenth Century. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1992.

Flambert, Paul [Paul Choisnard]. Etude nouvelle sur l'héré dité. Paris, 1903.

———. Influence astrale. Paris, 1901.

———. Langage astral. Paris, 1903.

Flammarion, Camille. Death and Its Mystery. 3 vols. London: Century, 1921–23.

———. Haunted Houses. Paris, 1924. Reprint, New York: Appleton, 1924. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1971.

———. Mysterious Psychic Forces. Boston: Small, Maynard, London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1907.

———. "The Unknown of Yesterday and the Truth of Tomorrow." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 29 (1935).

Flammarion, Cesar. After Death—What? London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1909.

Flammonde, Paris. The Mystic Healers. New York: Stein & Day, 1974.

Fleckles, Elliott V. Willie Speaks Out: The Psychic World of Abraham Lincoln. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1974.

Flew, Antony, G. N., ed. Body, Mind and Death. New York: Macmillan, 1964.

———. There a Case for Disembodied Spirit?" Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 66 (1972).

———. Logic of Mortality. Oxford: Blackwell, 1987.

———. A New Approach to Psychical Research. London: C. A. Watts, 1953.

Flier, Len. "Demystifying Mysticism: Finding a Developmental Relationship Between Different Ways of Knowing," Journal of Transpersonal Psychology 27, no. 2 (1995): 131–152.

Flinn, H. C. Spiritualism Among the Shakers. East Canterbury, N.H., 1899.

Flint, Leslie. Voices in the Dark: My Life as a Medium. New York: Bobbs-Merrill, 1971.

Florescu, Radu & Raymond T. McNally. Dracula: A Biography of Vlad the Impaler 1391–1476. New York: Hawthorn Books, 1973.

Florescu, Radu. In Search of Frankenstein. New York: New York Graphic Society, 1975.

Flournoy, Theodore. From India to the Planet Mars. New York: Harper, 1900. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1963. Reprint, New Jersey: Princeton University Press, 1994.

———. Des Indes à la Planète Mars. English ed. as From India to the Planet Mars: A Study of a Case of Somnambulism with Glossolalia. New York: Harper, 1900. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1963.

———. Esprits et Médiums, Mélanges de Métapsychique et de Psychologie. Geneva: Libraire Kundig, 1911. Translated by Hereward Carrington and abridged as Spiritism and Psychology. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1911.

———. The Philosophy of William James. Freeport, N.Y.: Books for Libraries Press, 1969.

Flowers, S. Edred. Fire and Ice: Magical Teachings of Germany's Greatest Secret Occult Order. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1990.

Flowers, Stephen E. Runes and Magic: Magical Formulaic Elements in the Older Runic Tradition. New York: Kang, 1986.

Fludd, Robert. Medicina Catholica. Frankfurt: William Fitzer, 1629.

———. Monochordum Mundi Symphoniacum. Frankfurt, 1622.

———. Philosophia Mosaica, in quâ sapientia et scientia Creationis explicantur. Gouda: Peter Rammazen, 1638. Translated as Mosaicall Philosophy. London: Humphrey Moseley, 1659.

———. Tractatus Apologeticus integritatem Societatis de Rosae Cruce defendans. Leiden: Gottfried Basson, 1617.

———. Veritatis Proscenium. Frankfurt: Johann Theodore de Bry, 1621.

Fodor, Nandor. Between Two Worlds. New York: Paperback Library, 1964.

———. Encyclopedia of Psychic Science. London: Arthurs Press, 1934.

———. Freud, Jung, and Occultism. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1971.

———. The Haunted Mind: A Psychoanalyst Looks at the Supernatural. Helix Press, New York, 1959.

———. Mind Over Space. New York: Citadel Press, 1962.

———. New Approaches to Dream Interpretation. New York, 1951. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1951.

———. On the Trail of the Poltergeist. New York: Citadel, 1958. Reprint, London: Arco Publications, 1959.

———. These Mysterious People. London: Rider, 1936.

———. The Unaccountable. New York: Award Books, 1968.

Fodor, Nandor, and Hereward Carrington. Haunted People. New York: Dutton, 1951.

———. The Story of the Poltergeist down the Centuries. London: Rider, 1953.

Fontaine, Jean de la. La Fontaine des Amoureux de Science. Paris, 1561.

———. La Fontaine Perilleuse. Paris, 1572.

Fontana, Marjorie A. Cup of Fortune: A Guide to Tea Leaf Reading. Wisc.: Fantastic, 1979.

Fontenrose, Joseph. Python: A Study of Delphic Myth and Its Origins. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1959.

Ford, Arthur. The Life Beyond Death. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1971.

———. Nothing So Strange. New York: Harper, 1958.

———. Spiritual Vibrations. New York: H.P.B. Publishers, 1926.

———. Unknown But Known. New York: Harper, 1968.

Ford, Arthur, and Margueritte Harmon Bro. Nothing So Strange. New York: Harper & Row, 1958.

Ford, J. Massyngberde. The Pentecostal Experience. Paramus, N.J.: Paulist Press, 1970.

Forem, Jack. Transcendental Meditation. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1974.

Forman, Robert K. C. "What does mysticism have to teach us about consciousness?" Journal of Consciousness Studies 5, no. 2 (1998): 185–201.

A Formerly Spiritually Unknown Person on the Path to God: The Course of Life of the Prophetess in the Homebringing Mission of Jesus Christ. Pelham, N.H.: Homebringing Mission of Jesus Christ, 1980.

Fornell, Earl. The Unhappy Medium: Spiritualism and the Life of Margaret Fox. Austin, Tex., 1964.

Forry, Steven Earl. Hideous Progenies: Dramatizations of Frankenstein from Mary Shelley to the Present. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1990.

Fort, Charles. The Books of Charles Fort. New York: Henry Holt, 1941. Reprinted as The Complete Books of Charles Fort. New York: Dover Publications, 1974.

———. The Outcast Manufacturers. B. W. Dodge, 1909.

Fortune, Dion. Applied Magic. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1962.

———. The Esoteric Orders and Their Work. London: Rider, 1929. Reprint, St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1971.

———. The Mystical Qabalah. London: Ernest Benn, 1935.

———. Psychic Self-Defence. London: Rider, 1930.

Fortune, Dion. Sane Occultism. London: Rider, 1929.

———. The Secrets of Dr. Traverner. London: Noel Douglas, 1926.

———. The Training and Work of an Initiate. London: Rider, 1930. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1972.

———. The Winged Bull. London: Williams & Norgate, 1935.

Forwald, Haakon G. "An Approach to Instrumental Investigation of Psychokinesis." Journal of Parapsychology (1954).

———. "Experiments with Alternating PK Placement and Control Tests." Journal of Parapsychology (1955).

———. "A Further Study of the PK Placement Effect." Journal of Parapsychology 16 (1952).

———. Mind, Matter, and Gravitation: a Theoretical and Experimental Study. New York: Parapsychological Foundation, 1969.

———. "A Study of Psychokinesis in its Relation to Physical Conditions." Journal of Parapsychology 19 (1955).

Forwald, Haakon G., and Joseph G. Pratt. "Confirmation of the PK Placement Effect." Journal of Parapsychology 22 (March 1958).

Fosbrook, Thomas D. Encyclopedia of Antiquities. 2 vols. N.p., 1825, 1840.

Fosdick, Sara. Nicholas Roerich. New York: Nicholas Roerich Museum, 1964.

Foster, Esther B. "General Extrasensory Perception with a Group of Fourth and Fifth Grade Retarded Children." Journal of Parapsychology 2 (1937).

———. "A Re-examination of Dr. Soal's Clairvoyance Data." Journal of Parapsychology 20 (1956).

Foster, Esther B., and J. G. Pratt. "Displacement in ESP Card Tests in Relation to Hits and Misses." Journal of Parapsychology 14 (1950).

Foster, Esther B., and Karlis Osis. "Multiple Aspect Targets in Tests of ESP." Journal of Parapsychology 16 (1952).

———. "A Test of ESP in Cats." Journal of Parapsychology 17 (1953).

Foundation for Research on the Nature of Man. "Joseph A. Greenwood, 1906–1988." Foundation for Research on the Nature of Man Bulletin 37 (Spring 1988).

"The Founders of the Church of Light.' " Church of Light Quarterly 45, no. 1 (February 1970): 1–2.

Fournier d'Albe, E. E. The Life of Sir William Crookes, O.M., F.R.S. London: T. F. Unwin, 1923.

Fournier, D'Albe. New Light on Immortality. London, 1908.

Fourrey, René. The Curé D'Ars. London: Burns & Oates, 1959.

Fowler, Raymond. MUFON Field Investigator's Manual. 3d ed. Seguin, Tex.: Mutual UFO Network, 1983.

———. UFOs, Interplanetary Visitors. New York: Exposition, 1974.

Fox, George. Journal. Edited by John L. Nickalls. Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge University Press, 1952.

Fox, Marietta N., and Kenneth Bates. "An Experimental Study of ESP Capacity in Mental Patients." Journal of Parapsychology (December 1951).

Fox, Oliver [Hugh G. Callaway]. Astral Projection. London, 1939. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1962. Reprint, Secaucus, N.J.: Carol Publishing Group, 1974.

Fox, Samuel J. Hell in Jewish Literature. Wheeling, Ill.: Whitehall, 1969.

Franck, Adolphe. The Kabbalah. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1967. Reprint, New York: Citadel, 1979.

Franck, Sebastian. Paradoxa. Jena, Germany: E. Diederichs, 1909.

Frank, Eduard. Gustav Meyrink. Budingen-Gettenbach, Germany: Avalun Verlag, 1957.

Frank, Frederick S. Montague Summers: A Bibliographical Portrait. Methuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1988.

Frank, Henry. Psychic Phenomena Science & Immortality. N.p., 1916.

Frankau, Gilbert, ed. Mesmerism by Doctor Mesmer (1779): Being the First Translation of Mesmer's Historic "Mémoire sur la dé couverte du Magnétisme Animal" to appear in English. London: Macdonald, 1948.

Franklin, Benjamin, and others. Animal Magnetism: Report of Dr. Franklin and Other Commissioners. Philadelphia: H. Perkins, 1837.

Franklin, J. H. The Rebuilding of King Solomon's Temple. N.p., 1910. Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

Franklin, T. Bedford. Radiations. London, 1949.

Franklyn, Julian. A Survey of the Occult. London, 1935. Reprinted as A Dictionary of the Occult. New York: Causeway Books, 1973.

———. Death by Enchantment. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1971.

Franz, Marie-Louise von. On Divination and Synchronicity: The Psychology of Meaningful Chance. Toronto: Inner City Books, 1980.

Fraser-Harris, David. The Great Design: Order and Progress in Nature. New York: Macmillan, 1934.

Frater Achad [Charles Stansfeld Jones]. Crystal Vision Through Crystal Gazing. Chicago: Yogi Publication Society, 1923.

Frayling, Christopher. Vampyres: From Lord Byron to Count Dracula. London: Faber and Faber, 1991.

Frazer, James G. "The Golden Bough." In Taboo and the Perils of the Soul. Vol. 3. New York: Macmillan, 1935.

———. Totemism and Exogamy. 4 vols. N.p., 1910.

Freedland, Nat. The Occult Explosion. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1972. Reprint, London: Michael Joseph, 1972.

Freeland, L. S. "Pomo Doctors and Poisoners." University of California Publications in American Archaeology and Ethnology, Vol. 20, no. 4. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1923.

Freeman, Paul. "A festival for the Dead in Japan," Transcultural Psychiatry 35, no. 4 (December 1998): 551–555.

Frei, Gebhard. "Die Heutige Situation in der Parapsychologie" (The Present Situation of Parapsychology). Neue Wissenchaft. N.p., n.d.

———. "Psychologie, Parapsychologie and Weltanschauung." Schweizer Rundschau. N.p., 1946.

Freidel, David, Linda Schele, and Joy Parker. Maya Cosmos: Three Thousand Years on the Shaman's Path. New York: William Morrow, 1993.

French, Peter J. John Dee: The World of an Elizabethan Magus. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1972.

Freud, Sigmund. The Interpretation of Dreams. London, 1942.

———. Studies in Parapsychology. Edited by Philip Rieff. New York: Collier Books, 1963.

Freudenberg, Gideon G. Robert Owen: Educator of the People. Tel Aviv, Israel: Dvir, 1970.

Freudenberg, Karl. Natural Weapons: A Manual of Karate, Judo, and Jujitsu Techniques. New York: A. S. Barnes, 1962.

Frick, Harvey Lee. Apostate Physician. New York: House of Field, 1937.

Friedenhain, Paula. Write and Reveal: Interpretation of Handwriting. London, 1959.

Friedlander, Ira. The Whirling Dervishes. New York: Macmillan, 1975.

Fripp, Peter. The Mystic Philosophy of Sant Mat. London: Neville Spearman, 1964.

Fritscher, John. Popular Witchcraft: Straight from the Witch's Mouth. Bowling Green, Ohio: Bowling Green University Popular Press, 1972.

"Fritz." Where Are the Dead? London, 1873.

Froud, Brian, and Alan Lee. Faeries. London: Souvenir Press, 1978. Reprint, New York: Bantam Books, 1979. Reprint, London: Pan Books, 1979.

Fry, Daniel. Alan's Message: To Men of Earth. Los Angeles: New Age Publishing, 1954.

———. Atoms, Galaxies, and Understanding. El Monte, Calif.: Understanding Publishing, 1960.

———. Can God Fill Teeth? The Real Facts Behind the Miracle Ministry of Evangelist Willard Fuller. Lakemont, Ga.: CSA, 1970.

———. The Curve of Development. Lakemont, Ga.: CSA, 1965.

———. White Sands Incident. Los Angeles: New Age Publishing, 1954.

Fu, Chung. Evolution of Man. San Francisco: Circle of Inner Truth, 1973.

Fujimoto, Rindo. The Way of Zazen. Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge Buddhist Association, 1969.

Fukurai, T. Clairvoyance and Thoughtography. London: Rider, 1931. Reprint, North Stratford, N.H.: Ayer Co. Publishers, Inc., 1975.

Fuller, Jean Overton. Blavatsky and Her Teachers: An Investigative Biography. London: East-West Publications/Theosophical Publishing House, 1988.

———. Madeleine: The Story of Noor Inayat Kahn. London: Gollancz, 1952. Reprinted as Noor-un-nisa Inayat Kahn (Madeleine). Rotterdam: East-West Publications, 1971.

———. The Magical Dilemma of Victor Neuburg. London: W. H. Allen, 1965.

Fuller, John F. The Secret Wisdom of the Qabalah. London, 1937.

———. The Star in the West. London: Walter Scott Publishing, 1907. Reprint, Mokelumne Hill, Calif.: Health Research, 1969.

———. Yoga: A Study of the Mystical Philosophy of the Brahmins and Buddhists. London, 1925.

Fuller, John G. Arigó, Surgeon of the Rusty Knife. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1972. Reprint, London: Panther, 1975.

———. The Great Soul Trial. New York: Macmillan, 1969.

Fuller, John R. Arigó: Surgeon of the Rusty Knife. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1974.

Fuller, Robert C. Mesmerism and the American Cure of Souls. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1982.

Fülop-Miller, René. Rasputin; The Holy Devil. New York: Viking Press, 1928.

Funck-Brentano, Frantz. Cagliostro and Company. London, 1900.

Funk, Isaac K. The Next Step in Evolution; The Present Step. London/New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1902.

———. The Psychic Riddle. London/New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1907.

———. The Widow's Mite and other Psychic Phenomena. London/New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1904.

Furnivall, F. J., ed. The History of the Holy Grail . . . from the French Prose of Sires R. de Borron. London: Early English Text Society, 1874.

Furst, Peter T. (editor) Flesh of the Gods: The Ritual Use of Hallucinogens. New York: Praeger, 1972.

———. Hallucinogens and Culture. Navato, Calif.: Chandler & Sharp, 1976. 1982.

Fytche, A. Burma, Past & Present. 2 vols. London: n.p., 1878.

G'Zell, Otter. Gaia: A New Look at Life on Earth. London: Oxford University Press, 1979.

———. "Theogenesis: The Birth of the Goddess." Green Egg 21, 81 (May 1, 1988): 4–7, 27.

Gabory, Emile. Alias Bluebeard. New York: Brewer & Warren, 1930.

Gach, Michael Reed. Acu-yoga: Self Help Techniques. Tokyo: Japan Publications, 1981.

Gaddis, Vincent H. Mysterious Fires and Lights. New York: McKay, 1967.

Gaddis, Vincent, and Margaret Gaddis. The Strange World of Animals and Pets. 1970. Reprint, New York: Pocket Books, 1971.

Gaillard, Lady Zoe. A New Conception of Love. London, 1934.

———. Sir Vincent Caillard Speaks from the Spirit World. London, 1932.

Galanopoulos, A. G., and E. Bacon. Atlantis. London: Nelson, 1969.

Galbreath, Robert C. "Arthur Edward Waite, Occult Scholar and Christian Mystic: A Chronological Bibliography." Bulletin of Bibliography 30, no. 2 (April–June 1973).

———. "History of Modern Occultism: A Bibliographical Survey." Journal of Popular Culture 5, no. 3 (winter 1971).

Galbreath, Robert C., ed. The Occult: Studies and Evaluations. Bowling Green, Ohio: Bowling Green University Popular Press, 1972.

Gall, Edward. Mysticism Throughout the Ages. London: Rider, 1934.

Gall, Franz J. On the Functions of the Brain and of Each of Its Parts: with Observations on the Possibility of Determining the Instincts, Propensities and Talents, or the Moral and Intellectual Dispositions of Men and Animals, by the Configuration of the Brain and Head. 6 vols. Boston, 1835.

Gallup, George, Jr., with William Proctor. Adventures in Immortality. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1982. London: Souvenir Press, 1983.

Galston, Arthur W., and Clifford L. Slayman. "Plant Sensitivity and Sensation." In Science and the Paranormal: Probing the Evidence of the Supernatural. Edited by George O. Abell and Barry Singer. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1981.

Galton, Francis. Hereditary Genius. London, 1869. Reprint, London: Watts, 1950.

Gambhrananda, Swami. History of the Ramakrishna Math and Mission. Calcutta, India: Advaita Ashraam, 1957.

Ganzfried, Rabbi Solomon. Code of Jewish Law (Kitzur Schulchan Aruch). New York: Hebrew Publishing, 1927.

Gardner, F. Leigh. Bibliotheca Rosicruciana. Edmonds, Wash.: Holmes Publishing Group, 1992.

———. A Catalogue Raisonne of Works on the Occult Sciences. Vol. 1 of the Rosicrucian Books. Privately printed, 1923.

Gardiner, John. The New Age Cult in South Africa. Cape Town: Stuikhof, 1991.

Gardner, Edward L. Fairies: The Cottingley Photographs and Their Sequel. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1945.

Gardner, Gerald. A Goddess Arrives. London: A. W. Stockwell, 1948.

———. Meaning of Witchcraft. London: Aquarian Press, 1959.

Gardner, Gerald. Witchcraft Today. London: Rider, 1954.

Gardner, Hugh. The Children of Prosperity. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1978.

Gardner, Marshall B. A Journey to the Earth's Interior; or, Have the Poles Really Been Discovered? Aurora, Ill.: The Author, 1913.

Gardner, Martin. Fads and Fallacies in the Name of Science. New York: Dover Publications, 1957.

———."The Great URANTIA Mystery." The Skeptical Inquirer 14, no. 2 (winter 1990).

———. How Not to Test a Psychic: Ten Years of Remarkable Experiments with Renowned Psychic Pavel Stepanek. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1989.

———.In the Name of Science. New York: George Putnam's Sons, 1952. Reprinted as Fads and Fallacies in the Name of Science. New York: Dover Publications, 1957.

———. New Age Notes of a Fringe Watcher. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1988.

———. "Notes of a Fringe-Watcher: The False Memory Syndrome." Skeptical Inquirer 17 (summer 1993).

———. Science, God, Bad, and Bogus. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1981.

———. "The Tragedies of False Memories: The Accused Are Striking Back, But Grave Injustices Have Been Done." Skeptical Inquirer 18 (fall 1994).

Garfield, Patricia L. Creative Dreaming. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1974.

Garinet, Jules. Histoire de la Magie en France. Paris, 1818.

Garland, Hamlin. Forty Years of Psychic Research. New York: Macmillan, 1936.

———. The Shadow World. New York, 1908.

Garrett, Clarke. Spirit Possession and Popular Religion: From the Camisards to the Shakers. Baltimore, Md.: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1987.

Garrett, Eileen J. Adventures in the Supernormal: A Personal Memoir. New York: Garrett/Helix, 1949. Reprint, New York: Paperback Library, 1968.

———. Awareness. New York: Creative Age Press, 1941.

———. Does Man Survive Death? New York: Helix Press, 1957.

———. Life is the Healer. Philadelphia: Dorrance, 1957.

———. Many Voices: The Autobiography of a Medium. 1968. Reprint, New York: Dell, 1969.

———. My Life As a Search for the Meaning of Mediumship. New York: Oquaga Press, 1938. Reprint, London: Rider, 1939. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

———. The Sense and Nonsense of Prophecy. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1950. Reprint, New York: Berkley, 1968.

———. Telepathy: In Search of a Lost Faculty. New York: Creative Age Press, 1945.

Garrett, Eileen J., ed. Beyond the Five Senses. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott, 1957.

———. Does Man Survive Death?: A Symposium. New York: Helix Press, 1957.

Garrison, Omar V. Encyclopedia of Prophecy. New York: Citadel, 1979.

———. Tantra—The Yoga of Sex. New York: Causeway, 1973. Reprint, London: Academy Editions, 1974.

Garver, Will. Brother of the Third Degree. Halcyon, Calif.: Halcyon Temple Press, 1929.

Garvin, Richard. The Crystal Skull. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1973. Reprint, New York: Pocket Books, 1974.

Gaster, M. Conjurations & the Ancient Mysteries. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1999.

Gaster, Moses. The Origin of the Kabbala. New York: Gordon Press Publishers, 1976.

Gates, Robert J. The Awntyrs off Arthure at the Terne Wathelyne: A Critical Edition. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1969.

Gauld, Alan. The Founder of Psychical Research. New York: Schrocken Books/London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1968. Reprint, New York: Schocken Books, 1973.

———. Mediumship and Survival: A Century of Investigations. London: Heinemann, 1982.

Gauld, Alan, and A. D. Cornell. Poltergeists. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1979.

Gauld, Alan, and J. D. Shotter. Human Action and its Psychological Investigation. Boston and London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1977.

Gauquelin, Michel. The Cosmic Clocks: From Astrology to a Modern Science. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1967. Reprint, New York: Avon, 1969.

———. Cosmic Influences on Human Behavior; the Planetary Factors in Personality. New York: Stein & Day, 1973. Rev. ed. New York: ASI Publishers, 1978.

———. Dreams and Illusions of Astrology. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1979. Reprint, London: Glover & Blair, 1980.

———. How Atmospheric Conditions Affect Your Health. New York: Stein and Day, 1971.

———. Scientific Basis of Astrology: Myth or Reality? New York: Stein and Day, 1969. London: P. Davies; Lanham, Md.: Madison Books, Inc., 1970.

Gauquelin, Michel, and Françoise Guaquelin. The Mars Effect and Sports Champions: A New Replication. Paris: Laboratorie d'études des relations entre rhythmes cosmiques et psychophysiologiques, 1979.

Gay, Susan E. John William Fletcher, Clairvoyant. London, 1883.

Geddes, Patrick. The Life and Work of Sir Jagadis C. Bose. London/New York: Longmans, Green and Co., 1920.

Gelberg, Steven, ed. Hare Krishna, Hare Krishna. New York: Grove Press, 1983.

Geley, Gustave. Clairvoyance & Materialisation. London: T. F. Unwin Ltd./New York: George Doran, 1927. North Stratford, N. H.: Ayer Co. Publishers, Inc., 1975.

———. De l'Inconscient au Conscient. Paris: F. Alcan, 1919. Translated as From the Unconscious to the Conscious. New York and London: Harper & Brothers, 1921.

———. L'Etre Subconscient. Paris: Editions Pygmalion, 1899.

———. From the Unconscious to the Conscious. London: William Collins, 1920.

———. Materialisation and Clairvoyance. London, 1927.

———. "Une sensationelle expérience de M. Stephan Ossowiecki au Congrès de Varsovie." Revue Métapsychique (September-October 1923).

Geller, Uri. My Story. New York: Praeger, 1975.

Geller, Uri, and Guy Lyon Playfair. The Geller Effect. London: Jonathan Cape, 1986.

Gems and Stones: Based on the Edgar Cayce Readings. Virginia Beach, Va.: Association for Research and Enlightenment, 1960.

General Assembly of Spiritualists, State of New York. New York: Flying Saucer News, n.d.

General Church of the New Jerusalem. The General Church of the New Jerusalem: A Handbook of General Information. Bryn Athyn, Pa.: General Church Publication Committee, 1965.

———. Liturgy and Hymnal. Bryn Athyn, Pa.: General Church Publication Committee, 1966.

Gennep, Arnold Van. "De l'emploi du mot 'chamanisme.' " Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, Vol 47, no. 1 (24e année 1903): 51–57.

George, Llewellyn. The A to Z Horoscope Delineator. Portland, Ore.: Portland School of Astrology, 1910.

———. Astrology: What It Is and What It Is Not. Los Angeles: Llewellyn Publishing, 1931.

———. How Planets Affect People. Los Angeles: Llewellyn Publishing, 1921.

———. The New A to Z Horoscope Maker and Delineator. Rev. ed. St. Paul, Minn.: Llwellyn Publications, 1987.

———. Practical Astrology for Everyone. Portland, Ore.: Portland School of Astrology Bulletina Publishing, 1911.

———. The Student's Chart Reader. Portland, Ore.: Portland School of Astrology Bulletina Press, 1912.

Gerber, H. Léo Taxil's Palladismus-Roman. Oder Die "Enthüllungen" Dr. Battaille's, Margiotta's and "Miss Vaughan's" Über Freimaureri kritisch beleuchtet. Berlin, 1897.

Gerhardie, William A. Memoirs of a Polyglot. London: Macdonald, 1973.

———. The Memoirs of Satan. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, Doran, 1933.

———. Resurrection. London: Macdonald, 1973.

Gerling, Helene. Healthy Intuitive Development. New York: Exposition Press, 1971.

Gerloff, Hans. The Crisis in Parapsychology: Stagnation or Progress? Tittmoning, Obb., Germany: W. Pustet, 1965.

———. Das Medium Carlos Mirabelli: Eine kirtische Untersuchung (The Medium Carlos Mirabelli: An Investigation.) N.p., 1960.

Gerloff, Hans. Die Heilungen von Lourdes im Lichte der Parapsychologie (The Healings at Lourdes in the Light of Parapsychology). Budingen-Geltenbach: Verlag Welt und Wissen, 1959.

———. Materialisation: Die Phantome von Kopenhagen (Materialization: The Phantoms of Copenhagen). N.p., 1956.

Germain, Saint, through Guy W. Ballard. The "I AM" Discourses. Chicago: Saint Germain Press, 1935.

Germain, Walter. The Magic Power of Your Mind. New York: Hawthorn Books, 1956.

Gerson, Lloyd P. Plotinus. London: Routledge, 1994.

Gervaso, Roberto. Cagliostro: A Biography. London, 1974.

Gervis, Pearce. Naked They Pray. London: Cassell, 1956.

Gesell, Arnold. Wolf-Child and Human Child. London: Harper/Methuen, 1941.

Gestefeld, Ursula N. The Builder and the Plan. Chicago: Exodus Publishing, 1901.

———. Jesuitism in Christian Science. Chicago: The Author, 1888.

———. The Science of the Christ. Chicago: The Author, 1889.

———. A Statement of Christian Science. Chicago The Author, 1888.

Gettings, Fred. Dictionary of Occult, Hermetic and Alchemical Sigils. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1981.

———. The Book of Tarot. London: Paul Hamlyn, 1973.

Ghadiali, Dinshah P. Spectro-Chrome Metry Encyclopedia. 3 vols. Malaga, N.J.: Spectro-Chrome Institute, 1933.

Ghalioungui, Paul. The House of Life: Magic and Medical Sciences in Ancient Egypt. Rev. ed., New York: Wittenborn, 1975.

Ghirardelli, Cornelio. Cefalogia fisonomica divisa in dieci Doche, dove conforme a'documenti d'Aristotile, e d'altri filosofi naturali. . . . Bologna, Italy, 1630.

Ghirardelli, Cornelio. Compendio della cefalogia fisonomica; nella quale si contiene cento sonetti di diversi eccellenti posti sopra cento teste humane. Bologna, Italy, 1673.

Gibbons, M. E., and A. O. Gibbons. The Trianon Adventure. London: Museum Press, 1958.

Gibbons, Walter. The Tragedy of the Heavens. N.p., 1930.

Gibier, Paul. Le Spiritisme (Fakirisme occidental). Paris: C. Doin, 1887.

———. Physiologie transcendentale: Analyse des choses. 1890. Translated as Psychism: Analysis of Things Existing. N.p., 1890.

Gibran, Kahlil. A. E. Waite: Magician of Many Parts. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1987.

———. Beloved Prophet: The Love Letters of Kahhil Gibran and Mary Haskell and her Private Journal. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1972.

———. Earth Gods. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1931.

———. Gibran: A Self-Portrait. New York: Citadel, 1959.

———. The Golden Dawn Companion. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1986.

———. The Golden Dawn: Twilight of the Magicians. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1983.

———. Jesus the Son of Man. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1956.

———. The Prophet. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1923.

———. Sand and Foam. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1926.

———. Wisdom of Kahlil Gibran. New York: Philosophical Library, 1966.

Gibran, Kahlil. [Edward Dunning]. Selected Masonic Writings of A. E. Waite. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1988.

Gibran, Kahlil., ed. The Sorcerer and His Apprentice: Hermetic Writings of S. L. McGregor Mathers & J. W. Brodie Innes. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1983.

Gibson, Edmond P. "The Ethel Thomas Case." Tomorrow (summer 1954).

Gibson, Ian. The English Vice: Beating, Sex, and Shame in Victorian England and After. London: Duckworth, 1978.

Gibson, John. Monsters of the Sea: Legendary and Authentic. London: T. Nelson & Sons, 1887.

Gibson, W. B., and L. K. Gibson. The Complete Illustrated Book of Divination and Prophecy. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1973. Reprint, London: Souvenir Press, 1974.

Gibson, Walter B. The Georgia Magnet. St. Louis, 1922.

Gilber, Katherine S., with Joan K. Holt and Sara Hudson, eds. Treasures of Tutankhamen. Catalog of an Exhibition between 1976 and 1979. New York: Ballantine Books; New York: Metropolitan Museum of Art, 1976.

Gilberg, R. "How to Recognize a Shaman among Other Religious Specialists," In Shamanism in Eurasia. Edited by Mihály Hoppál. Göttingen, 1984.

Gilbert, Mostyn. "J. Fraser Nicol: An Appreciation of His Dedication to Psychical Research." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 56, no. 818 (January 1990).

Gilbert, Robert A. A. E. Waite: A Bibliography. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1983.

———. A. E. Waite: Magician of Many Parts. Wellingborough, Northamptonshire, England: Crucible, Thorsons, 1987.

———. The Golden Dawn: Twilight of the Magicians. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1983.

———. The Sorcerer and His Apprentice: Unknown Hermetic Writings of S. L. MacGregor Mathers and J. W. Brodie-Innes. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1983.

Gilbert, R. A., ed. The Magical Mason: Forgotten Hermetic Writings of William Wynn Westcott. Wellingborough, Northamptonshire, England: Aquarian Press, 1983.

Gilbert, Robert A., and Michael A. Cox, eds. The Oxford Book of English Ghost Stories. Oxford: Oxford University Press; New York: Oxford University Press, 1989.

Gilbert, Robert A., and W. N. Birks. The Treasure of Montsegur. Crucible, 1987.

Gill, Derek L. T. Quest: The Life of Elisabeth Kübler-Ross. New York: Harper & Row, 1980.

Gillespie, William H. "Extrasensory Elements in Dream Interpretation." Psychoanalysis and the Occult. Edited by George Devereaux. New York: International Universities Press, 1953.

Ginsburg, Christian D. The Essenes: Their History and Doctrines. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1863.

———. The Kabbalah (with The Essenes). London: Routledge, 1863. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1970.

Giraldus Cambrensis. The Historical Works of Giraldus Cambrensis, Containing the Topography of Ireland, and The History of the Conquest of Ireland. Translated by R. C. Hoare. London: Bohn's Antiquarian Library, 1847.

Gissurarson, Loftur R., and Erlendur Haraldsson. "The Icelandic Physical Medium Indridi Indridason." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 57, 214 (January 1989).

Gittelson, Bernard. Bio-Rhythms: A Personal Science. New York: Warner Books, 1977.

Glanvill, Joseph. Sadicismus Triumphatus. London: Printed for J. Collins and S. Lownds, 1681.

Glasenapp, Helmuth von. The Doctrine of Kerman in Jain Philosophy. Bombay: Bai Vojibai Jivanial Panalal Charity Fund, 1942.

Glaskin, G. M. A Door to Eternity: Proving the Christos Experience. London: Wildwood House, 1979.

———. Windows of the Mind; Discovering Your Past and Future Lives Through Massage and Mental Exercise. New York: Delacorte Press, New York, 1974. Reprinted as Windows of the Mind: The Christos Experiment. London: Wildwood House, 1974.

———. Worlds Within: Probing The Christos Experience. London: Wildwood House, 1976. Reprint, London: Arrow, 1978.

Gleadow, Rupert. Magic and Divination. London: Ryerson Press, 1941. Reprint, Wakefield, England: EP Publishing, 1976

Glendinning, Andrew. The Veil Lifted: Modern Developments of Spirit Photography. London: Whittaker, 1894.

Glenn, Jerome Clayton. Linking the Future: Findhorn, Auroville, Arcosanti. Cambridge, Mass.: Center on Technology and Society, 1979.

Glut, Donald F. The Dracula Book. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1975.

———. The Frankenstein Catalog. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1984.

Goblet D'Alviella, E. F. Lectures on the Origin and Growth of the Conception of God. London, 1892. Reprint, New York: AMS Press, 1982.

Globus, Gordon, Ken Wilber, Fritjof Capra, Charles D. Laughlin, Jr., John McManus; Jon Shearer, and Kenneth Ring. "Science, Technology, and Transcendence." In Paths Beyond Ego: The Transpersonal Vision. Los Angeles: Perigee Books/Jeremy P. Tarcher, Inc., 1993.

Godfrey, Nathaniel S. Table Turning the Devil's Modern Masterpiece; Being the Result of a Course of Experiments. UK: Thames Ditton, 1853.

Godwin, John. Occult America. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1972.

Godwin, Joscelyn, Christian Chanel, and John P. Deveney. The Hermetic Brotherhood of Luxor. New York: Samuel Weiser Inc., 1995.

Godwin, Joscelyn. Robert Fludd: Hermetic Philosopher and Surveyor of Two Worlds. Boulder, Colo.: Shambhala, 1979.

Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von. The Autobiography of Johann Wolfgang von Goethe. 2 vols. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1975.

Gold, Gari. Crystal Energy. Chicago: Contemporary Books, 1987.

Gol'dberg, I. M. "On Whether Tactile Sensitivity Can Be Improved by Exercise." Soviet Psychology and Psychiatry 2, no. 1 (1963).

Goldenstubbe, Baron Ludwig von, and J. von Guldenstubbe. La Morale Universelle. 1863.

Goldfarb, Russell M., and Clare R. Goldfarb. Spiritualism and Nineteenth-Century Letters. New Brunswick, N.J.: Associated University Presses, 1978.

Goldney, Mrs. A. P., Mrs. H. Richard, and others. "Photographs of Jumping Model Imitating Levitation." Proceedings of the Society for Psychic Research 45, no. 158.

Goldsmith, Margaret L. Franz Anton Mesmer: The History of an Idea. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1934. Reprint, London: Arthur Barker, 1934.

Goldston, Will. Secrets of Famous Illusionists. London: Long, 1933.

Golson, K. K. Presidents Are People. New York: Carlton Press, 1964.

Golther, W. Religion und Mythus der Germanen. Leipzig, 1909.

Gomes, Michael. The Dawning of the Theosophical Movement. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1987.

———. Theosophy in the Nineteenth Century: An Annotated Bibliography. New York: Garland Publishing, 1994.

Gomme, G. L. Ethnology in Folklore. New York: D. Appleton, 1892.

Gonzalez, Conchita, and Harry Daley. Miracle at Garabandal: The Story of Mysterious Apparitions in Spain and a Message for the Whole World. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1983.

Gonzalez-Quevado, Oscar. A Face Oculta da Mente. São Paulo, Brazil: Edicos Loyola, 1967.

———. As Forcas Fisicas da Mente. São Paulo, Brazil: Edicos Loyola, 1968.

Gonzàlez-Wippler, Migene. The Complete Book of Spells, Ceremonies, and Magic. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1978.

Goodavage, Joseph F. Astrology: The Space Age Science. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1965. Reprint, New York: New American Library, 1966.

———. The Comet Kohoutek. New York: Pinnacle Books, 1974.

———. Our Threatened Planet. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1978.

———. Seven by Seven. New York: New American Library, 1978.

———. Storm on the Sun. New York: New American Library, 1979.

———. Write Your Own Horoscope. New York: New American Library, 1969.

Goodman, Felicitas D. Ecstasy, Ritual, and Alternate Reality. Religion in a Pluralistic World. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1988.

———. Speaking in Tongues: A Cross-Cultural Survey of Glossolalia. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1972.

———. Where the Spirits Ride the Wind: Trance Journeys and Other Ecstatic Experiences. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1990.

Goodman, Felicitas D., Jeannette H. Henney, and Esther Pressel. Trance, Healing, and Hallucination: Three Field Studies in Religious Experience. New York: John Wiley & Sons, 1974.

Goodman, Jeffrey. Psychic Archeology: Time Machine to the Past. New York: Berkley Publishing, 1977.

Goodman, Jordan, Paul Lovejoy, and Andrew Sherratt, eds. Consuming Habits: Drugs in History and Anthropology. London: Routledge, 1995.

Goodman, Linda. Linda Goodman's Love Signs: A New Approach to the Human Heart. New York: Harper, 1978.

———. Sun Signs. New York: Taplinger, 1968. Reprinted as Linda Goodman's Sun Signs. New York: Bantam Books, 1971.

———. Venus Trines at Midnight. New York: Taplinger, 1970.

Goodrich-Freer, Ada. Arabs in Tent and Town. London: Seeley, Service, & Co. Int., 1924.

———. Essays in Psychical Research. 2nd ed., London: G. Redway, 1899.

———. Inner Jerusalem. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1904.

———. Outer Isles. London: A. Constable, 1902.

Goodrich-Freer, Ada, and John, Marquess of Bute. The Alleged Haunting of B. House. London: G. Redway, 1899.

Goodrick-Clarke, Nicholas. The Occult Roots of Nazism. New York: New York University Press, 1992.

Goodwin, Jean, Sally Hill, and Reina Attias. "Historical and Folk Techniques of Exorcism: Applications to the Treatment of Dissociative Disorders," Dissociation: Progress in the Dissociative Disorders 3, no. 2 (June 1990): 94–101.

Gopalacharlu, S. E. An Introduction to the Mantra Sastra. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1934.

Gopi Krishna, Pandit. The Biological Basis of Religion and Genius. New York: Harper & Row, 1972.

Gopi Krishna. Biblical Prophecy for the 20th Century. Toronto: Kundalini Research Institute of Canada, 1979.

———. Kundalini for the New Age: Selected Writings. Edited by Gene Kieffer. New York: Bantam, 1988.

———. Kundalini: The Evolutionary Energy in Man. New Dehli: Ramadhar and Hopman, 1967. Reprint, Boulder, Colo.: Shambala, 1970.

———. Living with Kundalini: The Autobiography of Gopi Krishna. Boston: Shambhala, 1993.

———. The Secret of Yoga. New York: Harper & Row, 1972.

———. The Shape of Events to Come. New Delhi: Kundalini Research and Publication Trust, 1979.

Gordon, James S. The Golden Guru. Lexington, Mass.: Stephen Greene Press, 1986.

Gordon, Mrs. M. M. The Home Life of Sir David Brewster. Edinburgh, Scotland, 1869, 1870.

Goswami, Satsvarupa dasa. Srila Prabhupadalilamrta. 6 vols. Los Angeles: Bhaktivedanta Book Trust, 1980–83.

Gottshalk, Stephen. The Emergence of Christian Science in American Religious Life. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1973.

Gould, Charles. Mythical Monsters. London, 1886. Reprint, Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1969.

Gould, R. F. History of Freemasonry. 5 vols. Rev. ed. London: Caxton, 1931.

Gould, Rupert T. The Case for the Sea-Serpent. London: Philip Allan, 1930. Reprint, Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1969.

———. The Loch Ness Monster. London, 1934. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1969.

———. The Loch Ness Monster and Others. London: Geoffrey Bles; New York: Citadel Press, 1976.

———. Oddities: A Book of Unexplained Facts. London, 1928. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1965

———. The Stargazer Talks. London, 1944. Reprinted as More Oddities and Enigmas. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1973.

The Government UFO Collection: A Collection of UFO Documents from the Government of the USA and Canada. Mount Rainier, Md.: Fund for UFO Research, 1981–85.

Grad, Bernard. "Healing by the Laying on of Hands: Review of Experiments and Implications." Pastoral Psychology 21 (September 1970): 206.

———. "Paranormal Healing and Life Energy." American Society for Psychical Research Newsletter 7 (1981).

Grad, Bernard. "Some Biological Effects of the 'Laying on of Hands': A Review of Experiments with Animals and Plants." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 59 (1965).

———. "A Telekinetic Effect on Plant Growth." International Journal of Parapsychology 3 (1961); 5 (1963).

Grad, Bernard, Remi J. Cadoret, and G. I. Paul. "The Influence of an Unorthodox Method of Treatment on Wound Healing in Mice." International Journal of Parapsychology 3, no. 2 (1961).

Grady, Brian and Kate Miriam Loewenthal. "Features Associated with Speaking in Tongues (Glossolalia)," British Journal of Medical Psychology 70, no. 2 (June 1997): 185–191. Graef, Hilda. The Case of Thé rèse Neumann. Westminister, Md.: Newman Press, 1951.

Grand Orient [A. E. Waite]. Complete Manual of Occult Divination. 2 vols. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1972.

Grant, Douglas. The Cock Lane Ghost. New York: Macmillan; St. Martin's Press, 1965.

Grant, Ernest. Astrological America. Washington, D.C.: National Astrological Library, 1949.

———. Ephemeris for the Year 1776. Washington, D.C.: National Astrological Library, 1944.

———. Tables of Diurnal Planetary Motion. Washington, D.C.: National Astrological Library, 1948.

Grant, Ernest, and Catherine T. Grant. Grant Textbook Series. 4 vols. Washington, D.C.: National Astrological Library, n.d.

Grant, Joan. Eyes of Horus. London: Methuen, 1942. New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1980.

———. Far Memory. Reprinted as Time Out of Mind, A Lot to Remember. New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1980.

———. Life as Carola. London: Methuen & Co. Ltd., 1939; New York & London: Harper & Brothers, 1940; New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1980.

———. Lord of the Horizon. London: Methuen & Co. Ltd., 1943.

———. Return to Elysium. New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1980.

———. So Moses Was Born. London: Methuen, 1952; New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1980.

———. Winged Pharaoh. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1938.

Grant, Kenneth. Aleister Crowley and the Hidden God. London: Muller, 1973.

———. Cults of the Shadow. London: Frederick Muller, 1975. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1976.

———. Images of Austin Osman Spare. London: Frederick Muller, 1975.

———. The Magical Revival. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1972.

———. Nightside of Eden. London: Frederick Muller, 1977.

———. Outside the Circles of Time. London: Frederick Muller, 1980.

Gratton-Guinness, Ivor. Psychical Research: A Guide to Its History, Principles & Practices. London: Aquarian Press, 1982.

Graves, Kersey. The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors. Boston, Mass., 1875. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1971.

Graves, Robert. The White Goddess. London: Faber & Faber, 1948.

Graves, Robert, and Raphael Patai. Hebrew Myths: The Book of Genesis. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1964.

Graves, Samuel R. [Osirus]. Potions and Spells of Witchcraft. San Francisco: JBT Marketing, 1970.

Graves, Tom. Elements of Pendulum Dowsing. UK: Element Books, Inc., 1997.

Gray, Isa. From Materialisation to Healing. London: Regency Press, 1973.

Gray, Ronald D. Goethe, the Alchemist: A Study of Alchemical Symbolism in Goethe's Literary & Scientific Works. Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge University Press, 1952. Reprint, New York: AMS Press, 1979.

Gray, William G. Qabalistic Concepts. New York: Samuel Weiser Inc., 1997.

Great White Brotherhood. The Books of Azrael: Teachings. Santa Barbara, Calif.: J. F. Rowney Press, n.d.

The Greater Key of Solomon. Translated by S. L. MacGregor Mathers. London: George Redway, 1888. Reprint, Chicago: De Laurence, 1914. Reprint, London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1972.

Greatrakes, Valintine. A Brief Account of Mr. V. Greatrakes and Divers of the Strange Cures by Him Performed, Written by Himself. London, 1666.

———. Val. Greatrakes, Esq., of Waterford, in the Kingdom of Ireland, Famous for Curing Several Diseases and Distempers by the Stroak of His Hand Only. London: The Author, 1660.

Greed, John A. Glastonbury Tales. Bristol, England: St. Trillo Publications, 1975.

Green, Andrew M. Ghost Hunting: A Practical Guide. London: Garnstone Press, 1973.

Green, Celia E. The Decline and Fall of Science. London: Hamilton, 1976.

———. The Human Evasion. London: Hamilton, 1969.

Green, Celia E. Lucid Dreams. London: Hamish Hamilton; Oxford: Institute of Psychophysical Research, 1968.

———. Out-of-the-Body Experiences. Oxford: Institute of Psychophysical Research, 1968. Reprint, New York: Ballantine Books, 1973.

———. "Report on the Spontaneous Cases Enquiry." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 53, no. 191 (November 1960).

Green, Celia, and Charles McGreery. Apparitions. London: Hamish Hamilton; New York: State Mutual Book, 1977.

Green, Edward C. "Mystical Black Power: The Calling to Diviner-Mediumship in Southern Africa." In Women as Healers: Cross-Cultural Perspectives. New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press, 1989.

Green, Elmer. "Biofeedback for Mind-Body Self-Regulation: Healing and Creativity." In The Varieties of Healing Experience: Exploring Psychic Phenomena and Healing. Los Altos, Calif.: Academy of Parapsychology and Medicine, 1971.

———. "How to Make Use of the Field of Mind Theory." In The Dimensions of Healing: A Symposium. Los Altos, Calif.: Academy of Parapsychology and Medicine, 1972.

Green, Gabriel, and Warren Smith. Let's Face the Facts about Flying Saucers. New York: Popular Library, 1967.

Green, Landis Knight. The Astrologer's Manual: Modern Insights into an Ancient Art. Sebastopol, Calif.: CRCS Publications, 1975.

Green, Marian, ed. Quest List of Esoteric Sources. London: Quest, 1984.

Green, Miranda J. Dictionary of Celtic Myth and Legend. London: Thames and Hudson, 1992.

Green, Peter. Heal, My Son! The Amazing Story of John Cain. London: Van Duren, 1977.

Greenbank, Richard K. "Allegedly Prophetic Dreams in Psychotherapeutic Treatment." International Journal of Parapsychology (Summer 1960).

———. "Communication of Suicidal Thoughts." Canadian Psychiatric Association Journal (July 1957).

———. "My Wolf." Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology (May 1957).

———. "Unexplained Mental Phenomena Regarding Suicide." Journal of Nervous and Mental Diseases (January 1957).

Greenberg, David, Eliezer Witztum, and Jacob T. Buchbinder. "Mysticism and Psychosis: The Fate of Ben Zoma," British Journal of Medical Psychology 65, no. 3 (September 1992): 223–235.

Greene, Barbara, and W. Gollancz. God of a Hundred Names. London: Gollancz, 1962.

Greenfield, Robert. The Spiritual Supermarket. New York: Saturday Review Press/E. P. Dutton, 1975.

Greenfield, Sidney M. "Legacies from the Past and Transitions to a "Healed" Future in Brazilian Spiritist Therapy," Anthropologica 35, no. 1 (1993): 23–38.

Greenhouse, Herbert B. Astral Journey: Evidence for Out-of-the-Body Experiences from Socrates to the ESP Laboratory. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1975.

Greenhouse, Herbert B. Premonitions: A Leap Into the Future. London: Turnstone Press, 1972. Reprint, London: Pan, 1975.

Greenwalt, Emmett A. California Utopia: Point Loma, 1897–1942. San Diego, Calif., 1978.

Greenwood, Joseph A. "Analysis of a Large Chance Control Series of ESP Data." Journal of Parapsychology 2 (1938).

———. "A Co-Variation Statistic." Journal of Parapsychology 3 (1939).

———. "An Empirical Investigation of Some Sampling Problems." Journal of Parapsychology 2 (1938).

———. "Mathematical Techniques Used in ESP Research." Journal of Parapsychology 1 (1937).

———. "A Reply to Dr. Feller's Critique." Journal of Parapsychology 4 (1940).

———. "Some Mathematical Problems for Future Consideration Suggested by ESP Research." Journal of Parapsychology 3 (1939).

———. "Variance of the ESP Call Series." Journal of Parapsychology 2 (1938).

Greenwood, Joseph A., and C. E. Stuart. "Review of Criticisms of the Mathematical Evaluation of ESP Data." Journal of Parapsychology 1 (1937).

Gregory, Anita. "London Experiments with Matthew Manning." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 56 (1982).

———. "Psychical Research as a Social Activity." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 51 (1981).

———. The Strange Case of Rudi Schneider. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1985.

Gregory, Lady. Visions and Beliefs in the West of Ireland. 2 vols. New York: George Putnam's Sons, 1920. Reprint, UK: Colin Smythe, 1970.

Gregory, William. Animal Magnetism: Mesmerism and its Phenomena. 2d rev. ed. London: Nichols, 1877. London, 1884, 1909. Reprint, New Stratford, N.H.: Ayer Co. Publishing Inc., 1975.

Greville, T. N. E. "Exact Probabilities for the Matching Hypothesis." Journal of Parapsychology 2 (1938).

———. "A Method of Evaluating the Reinforcement Effect." Journal of Parapsychology 15 (1951).

———. "On Multiple Matching with One Variable Deck." Annals of Mathematical Statistics 15 (1944): 432–34.

———. "A Reappraisal of the Mathematical Evaluation of the Reinforcement Effect." Journal of Parapsychology 18 (1954).

———. "A Summary of Mathematical Advances Bearing on ESP." Journal of Parapsychology 3 (1939).

———.. "A Survey and Appraisal of the Statistical Methods Used in Parapsychological Research." Journal of Parapsychology 13 (1949).

Grey, E. Howard. Visions, Previsions and Miracles in Modern Times. London: L. N. Fowler, 1915.

Gribbin, John R. Beyond the Jupiter Effect. London: MacDonald, 1983.

———. The Jupiter Effect. New York: Walker, 1974. Revised as The Jupiter Effect Reconsidered. New York: Vintage, 1982.

Gribbin, John R., and Stephen H. Plageman. The Jupiter Effect. New York: Vintage Books, 1975.

Grierson, Francis [Jesse Shepard]. Abraham Lincoln: The Practical Mystic. New York: John Lane, 1918.

———. The Celtic Temperament and Other Essays. London: John Lane, 1913.

———. Modern Mysticism and Other Essays. London: G. Allen, 1899.

Griffin, David Ray. Parapsychology, Philosophy, and Spirituality: A Postmodern Exploration. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1997.

Griffin, William, ed. Endtime: The Doomsday Catalog. New York: Macmillan, 1979.

Grillet, Claudius. Victor Hugo Spirite. Paris, 1929.

Grim, John A. The Shaman: Patterns of Siberian and Ojibway Healing. Norman: University of Oklahoma Press, 1983.

Grim, William E. The Faust Legend in Music and Literature. Lewiston, N.Y.: Edwin Mellen Press, 1988.

Grimassi, Raven. The Wiccan Mysteries. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1999.

———. Ways of the Strega–Italian Witchcraft. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1999.

Grimm, Jacob. Teutonic Mythology. 4 vols. London: G. Bell, 1880–1919.

The Grimoire of Raphael. Edited by Fra. Zarathustra [Nelson White]. Pasadena, Calif.: The Technology Group, 1987.

Gross, Don H. The Case for Spiritual Healing. New York: T. Nelson, 1958.

———. "Kathryn Kuhlman: Another Point of View." The Pittsburgher (October–December 1954).

———. "Prayer That Heals." Religion in Life (Spring 1955).

———. "Spiritual Healing and the Archbishop's Commission." International Journal of Parapsychology (Autumn 1959).

Gross, Loren E. Charles Fort, the Fortean Society, and Unidentified Flying Objects. Fremont, Calif.: The Author, 1976.

Grossi, Ralph. Reliving Reincarnation Through Hypnosis. Smithtown, N.Y.: Exposition Press, 1975.

Grosso, Michael. Frontiers of the Soul: Exploring Psychic Evolution. Wheaton, Ill.: Quest Books, 1992.

———. "Padre Pio and the Paranormal." Christian Parapsychologist 4, no. 7 (1982).

Grubb, W. Barbrook. An Unknown People in an Unknown Land. London, 1911.

Gruber, Karl. Okkultismus und Biologie. Munich, 1930.

———. Parapsychologische Erkenntnisse. Munich, 1925.

Gruess, Edmond G. The Ouija Board: Doorway to the Occult. Chicago: Moody Press, 1975.

Grüber, Karl. Parapsychologische Erkenntnisse. München: Drei Masken Verlag, 1925.

Grumbine, J. C. F. Clairaudience. Boston: Order of the White Rose, 1911.

———. Melchizedek; or, The Secret Doctrine of the Bible. Boston: Order of the White Rose, 1919.

Grünewald, Fritz. Physikalisch-Mediumis-tische Untersuchungen. N.p., 1920.

Grupta, Yogi. Yoga and Long Life. New York: Dodd, Mead and Co., 1958.

Guaita, Stanislas de. Essais des sciences maudites. Paris: Carré, 1885.

———. La Serpent de la genese. 2 Vols. Paris: Chamuel, 1891, 1897.

Guest, John S. Survival Among the Kurds: A History of the Yezidis. London: Kegan Paul International, 1993.

———. The Yezidis. London: KPI, 1987.

Guest, Lady Charlotte, trans. The Mabinogion: From the Llyfr Coch o Hergest. 3 vols. London, 1948.

Guiley, Rosemary Ellen. The Encyclopedia of Witches and Witchcraft. New York: Facts on File, 1989. 2nd ed., New York: Facts on File, 1999.

Guirdham, Arthur. The Cathars & Reincarnation. London: Neville Spearman, 1960. Reprint, London, 1970. Reprint, Theosophical Publishing House, 1978. Reprint, Wellingborough, England: Turnstone Press, 1982.

———. Christ and Freud. London: Allen & Unwin, 1959.

———. Cosmic Factors in Disease. London: Duckworth, 1963.

———. A Foot in Both Worlds: A Doctor's Autobiography of Psychic Experience. [St. Helier] Jersey, Spearman, 1973.

———. The Great Heresy. St. Helier: Neville Spearman, 1977.

———. Obsession: Psychic Forces and Evil in the Causation of Disease. London: Neville Spearman, 1972.

Gulat-Wellenburg, W. von et al. Der Physikalische Mediumismus. Berlin: Ullstein, 1925.

Guldenstubbe, Baron L. de. Pneumatologie positive et expérimentale; La réalité des Espirits et le phenom ene merveilleux de leur écriture directe demontrés. Paris, 1857.

———. Pensés d'Outre-Tombe. 1858.

Guppy, Samuel. Mary Jane; or Spiritualism chemically explained, with Spirit Drawings. London, 1863.

Gurdjieff, G. I. All and Everything. New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1950. Reprint, New York: E. P. Dutton, 1963.

———. Meetings With Remarkable Men. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1964.

———. Views From the Real World: Early Talks in Moscow, Essentuku, Tiflis, Berlin, London, Paris, New York, Chicago as Recollected by His Pupils. New York: Triangle Editions; London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1973.

Gurney, Edmund. "Account of Some Experiments in Mesmerism." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 2, no. 6 (1884).

———. "Hallucinations." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 3, no. 8 (1885).

———. "Hypnotism and Telepathy." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 5, no. 12 (1888–89).

———. "Peculiarities of Certain Post-Hypnotic States." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 4, no. 11 (1886–87).

———. The Power of Sound. London: Smith, Elder, 1880. Reprint, New York: Basic Books, 1966.

———. "The Problems of Hypnotism." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 2, no. 7 (1884).

———. "Recent Experiments in Hypnotism." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 5, no. 12 (1888–89).

———. "Some Higher Aspects of Mesmerism." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 3, no. 10 (1885).

———. "Stages of Hypnotic Memory." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 4, no. 11 (1886–87).

———. "The Stages of Hypnotism." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 2 (1884).

———. Tertium Quid: Chapters on Various Disputed Questions. London, K. Paul, Trench & Co., 1887.

Gurney, Edmund, F. W. H. Myers, and Frank Podmore. Phantasms of the Living. 2 vols. London, 1886. Rev. ed. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1962. Reprint, Delmar, N.Y.: Scholars Facsimiles and Reprints, 1970.

Gurudas. Flower Essences. Albuquerque, N.Mex.: Brotherhood of Life, 1983.

Gurudas. Gem Elixirs and Vibrational Healing. 2 vols. Boulder, Colo.: Cassandra Press, 1985–86.

Guyon, Jeanne Marie. Autobiography of Madame Guyon. St. Louis, Mo.: B. Herder, 1897.

A Gypsy Queen. Zingara Fortune Teller. Philadelphia: David McKay, 1901.

Haas, George C. O. The Key to Enrichment of Life. N.p., 1949.

———. "The New Orientation of Science." IS 23 (1960).

Hack, Gwendolyn Kelley. Modern Psychic Mysteries at Millesimo Castle Italy. London: Rider, 1929.

———. Venetian Voices. London, 1937.

Hackethorn, Charles William. The Secret Societies of All Ages and Countries. 2 vols. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1965.

———. The Secret Societies of All Ages and Countries. London: Redway, 1897. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1966.

Hackett, Rosalind I. J. "New Age Trends in Nigeria: Ancestral and or Alien Religion?" In Perspectives on the New Age, edited by James R. Lewis and J. Gordon Melton. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1992.

———. Religion in Calabar: The Religious Life and History of a Nigerian Town. Berlin: Mouton de Gruyter, 1989.

Hackforth, R., trans. Plato's Phaedo. Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge University Press, 1955.

Haddock, Joseph W. Somnolism and Psycheism; Or, The Science of the Soul and the Phenomena of Nervation as Revealed by Vital Magnetism or Mesmerism. London, 1851. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

Hadot, Pierre. Plotinus; or, The Simplicity of Vision. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1993.

Hagio, Shigeki. "An Experiment to Explore Psi in the Human Associative Process." In Research in Parapsychology, 1993: Abstracts and Papers from the Thirty-sixth Annual Convention of the Parapsychological Association, 1993. Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, Inc., 1998.

Haines, Frederick H. The Book of Spiritual Wisdom. N.p., 1928.

———. A Lamp to the Feet. N.p., 1928.

———. Locusts and Wild Honey. N.p., 1928.

———. Thus Saith Celphra. N.p., 1928.

———. A Voice from Heaven. Watford, England: Pure Thought Press, [1932].

Haining, Peter. Ghosts: The Illustrated History. London: Sidgwick & Jackson, 1974. Reprint, New York: Macmillan, 1975.

———. The Legend and Bizarre Crimes of Springheeled Jack. London: Frederick Muller, 1977.

———. The Leprechaun's Kingdom. London: Souvenir Press, 1979.

———. The Man Who Was Frankenstein. London: Frederick Muller, 1979.

Hale, Anthony S. and Narsimha R. Pinninti. "Exorcism-Resistant Ghost Possession Treated with Clopenthixol. British Journal of Psychiatry 165, no. 3 (September 1994): 386–388.

Halevi, Z'ev Ben Shimon. Adam and the Kabbalistic Tree. London: Rider, 1974.

———. An Introduction to the Cabala—Tree of Life. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1972. New York: Samuel Weiser Inc., 1991.

———. A Kabbalistic Universe. New York: Samuel Weiser Inc., 1999.

Halifax, Joan. Shaman: The Wounded Healer. New York: Thames and Hudson, 1982.

———. Shamanic Voices: A Survey of Visionary Narratives. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1979.

Hall, Elizabeth. Possible Impossibilities: A Look at Parapsychology. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1977.

Hall, James. Sangoma: My Odyssey into the Spirit World of Africa. New York: Tarcher/Putnam, 1994.

Hall, James A. Hypnosis: A Jungian Perspective. New York: Guilford Press, 1989.

———. "The Works of J. B. Rhine: Implications for Religion." Journal of Parapsychology (1981).

Hall, James A., and H. B. Crasilneck. "Physiological Changes Associated with Hypnosis." International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis 7, no. 1 (January 1959).

Hall, John R. Gone from the Promised Land: Jonestown in American Cultural History. New Brunswick, N.J.: Transaction, 1987.

Hall, Manly P. An Encyclopedic Outline of Masonic, Hermetic, Qabbalistic and Rosicrucian Symbolical Philosophy. Los Angeles: Philosophical Research Society, 1928.

———. Astrological Keywords. 1958. Reprint, Savage, Md.: Littlefield Adams Quality Paperbacks, 1975.

———. Lost Keys of Freemasonry. Richmond, Va.: Macoy Publishing, 1923.

———. Growing Up with Grandmother. Los Angeles: Philosophical Research Society, 1985.

———. The Little World of PRS. Los Angeles: Philosophical Research Society, 1982.

———. Reincarnation: The Cycle of Necessity. Los Angeles: Philosophical Research Society, 1942.

———. The Search for Harry Price. Dallas: Southwest Book Services, 1978.

———. Secret Teachings of All Ages. Hollywood, Calif.: Philosophical Research Society, 1962. Rev. ed. 1977.

———. Self-Unfoldment by Disciplines of Realization. Los Angeles: Philosophical Research Society, 1945.

———. The Spiritualists. 1962. Reprinted as The Medium and the Scientist. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1984.

———. The Strange Case of Edmund Gurney. London: Duckworth, 1964.

———. Visions and Metaphysical Experiences. Los Angeles: Philosophical Research Society, n.d.

Hall, Manly Palmer, ed. "The Harrison Case." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 13 (1919).

Hall, Prescott F. "Experiments with Mrs. Caton." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 8 (1914).

Hall, Radcliffe, and (Una) Lady Troubridge. "On a series of Sittings with Mrs. Osborne Leonard." Proceedings of the Society for Psychic Research 30.

Hall, Richard. "Major Donald E. Keyhoe: An Appreciation." MUFON UFO Journal (February 1989): 12–13.

———. The UFO Evidence. Washington, D.C.: National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena, 1964.

Hall, Trevor. Florence Cook & William Crookes: A Footnote to an Enquiry. London: Tomorrow Publications, 1963.

———. The Enigma of Daniel Home. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1984.

———. Florence Cook & William Crookes: A Footnote to an Enquiry. London: Tomorrow Publications Ltd., 1963.

———. New Light on Old Ghosts. London: G. Duckworth, 1965.

———. The Spiritualist: The Story of Florence Cook and William Crookes. London: Duckworth, 1962. New York: Helix Press, 1963. Reprinted as The Medium and the Scientist: The Story of Florence Cook and William Crookes. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1984.

———. The Strange Case of Edmund Gurney. London: Duckworth, 1964.

Hall, Trevor H., and E. J. Dingwall. Four Modern Ghosts. London: Duckworth, 1958.

Hall, Trevor H., E. J. Dingwall, and K. M. Goldney. The Haunting of Borley Rectory. London: Duckworth, 1956.

Hall, Trevor H., and J. L. Campbell. Strange Things. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1968.

Hallam, Jack. The Ghost Tour: A Guidebook to Haunted Houses Within Easy Reach of London. London: Wolfe Publishing, 1967.

Halliday, W. R. Greek Divination: A Study of Methods and Principles. London: Macmillan, 1913. Reprint, Chicago: Argonaut, 1967.

Halliwell, J. O., ed. The Private Diary of Dr. John Dee, and the Catalogue of His Library of Manuscripts. London: Camden Society, 1842.

Halliwell-Phillipps, J. O. Nursery Rhymes and Nursery Tales of England. London, 1853.

Halloween and Other Festivals of Death and Life. Knoxville: University of Tennessee Press, 1994.

Halperin, Daniel Tzvi. "Dancing at the edge of Chaos: An Ethnography of Wildness and Ceremony in an Afro-Brazilian Possession Religion," Dissertation Abstracts International Section A: Humanities & Social Sciences 56, no. 9-A (March 1996): 3632.

Halperin, David A. "The Appeal of the Impossible and the Efflorescence of the Unbelievable: A Psychoanalytic Perspective on Cults and Occultism," Cultic Studies Journal 9, no. 2 (1992): 190–205.

Halpin, Marjorie, and Michael M. Ames, eds. Manlike Monsters on Trial: Early Records and Modern Evidence. Vancouver, B.C.: University of British Columbia Press, 1980.

Hamel, Frank. Human Animals. London, 1915. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1969.

Hamilton, Margaret L. Is Survival a Fact? Studies of Deep-Trance Automatic Scripts. London, 1969.

Hamilton, T. Glen. Intention and Survival: Psychical Research Studies and Bearing of Intentional Acts by Trance Personalities on the Problem of Human Survival. Toronto: Macmillan, 1942. Rev. ed. London: Regency Press, 1977.

———. "A Lecture to the British Medical Association." Psychic Science 9, no. 4 (January 1931).

———. "The Mary M. Teleplasm of Oct. 27, 1929." Psychic Science 10, no. 4 (January 1932).

———. "Teleplasmic Phenomena in Winnipeg." Psychic Science 8, no. 3 (1929); 8, no. 4 (January 1930); 9, no. 2 (July 1930).

Hammond, Sally. We Are All Healers. New York: Harper & Row, 1973. Reprint, New York: Ballantine, 1974.

Hand, Robert. Essays on Astrology. Rockport, Mass.: Para Research, 1982.

———. Horoscope Symbols. Rockport, Mass.: Para Research, 1981.

———. Planets in Composite. Rockport, Mass.: Para Research, 1975.

———. Planets in Transit. Rockport, Mass.: Para Research, 1976.

———. Planets in Youth. Rockport, Mass.: Para Research, 1977.

Handbook of the Lord's New Church Which Is Nova Hierosolyma. Bryn Athyn, Pa.: Lord's New Church Which Is Nova Hierosolyma, 1985.

Hanish, O. Z. A. Health and Breath Culture. Chicago: Sun Worshipper Publishing, 1902.

———. Inner Studies. Mokelumne Hill, Calif.: Health Research, 1963.

———. Mazdaznan: What It Teaches. Los Angeles: Mazdaznan Press, 1969.

———. The Philosophy of Mazdaznan. Los Angeles: Mazdaznan Press, 1960.

Hankey, Muriel A. James Hewat McKenzie, Pioneer of Psychical Research. London: Aquarian Press, 1963.

Hanna, Ralph. The Awntyrs off Arthure: An Edition Based on Bodleian Library MS. Douce 324. Manchester, UK: Manchester University Press, 1974.

Hansel, C. E. M. ESP: A Scientific Evaluation. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1966. Rev. ed. as ESP and Parapsychology: A Critical Re-evaluation. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus, 1980.

———. "A Critical Analysis of the Pearce-Pratt Experiment." Journal of Parapsychology (June 1961).

———. "A Critical Analysis of the Pratt-Woodruff Experiment." Journal of Parapsychology (June 1961).

———. "A Critical Review of the Experiments on Mr. Basil Shackleton and Mrs. Gloria Stewart." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (May 1960).

———. "Experimental Evidence for Extrasensory Perception." Nature (1959–60).

———. "Experiments on Telepathy." New Scientist (February 1959).

———. "Experiments on Telepathy in Children: A Reply to Sir Cyril Burt." British Journal of Statistical Psychology (November 1960).

Hansel, C. E. M. and David Loye. "Has Science Discredited ESP?" In Taking Sides: Clashing Views on Controversial Psychological Issues 7th ed. Guilford, Conn.: Dushkin Publishing Group, 1992.

Hansen, Chadwick. Witchcraft at Salem. New York: George Braziller, 1969. Reprint, New York: New American Library, 1970.

Hansen, F. C. C., and Alfred Lehmann. "Über unwilkürliches Flüstern: Eine kritische und experimentelle Untersuchung der sogenannten Gedankenübertragung." Philosophische Studien 11, no. 4 (1895).

Hansen, George P. "CSICOP and the Skeptics: An Overview," Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 86, no. 1 (January 1992): 19–63.

Hansen, Joseph. Zauberwahn, Inquisition und Hexenprozess in Mittalalter und die Entstehung der grossen Hexenverfolgung. Munich/Leipzig: R. Oldenbourg, 1900. Reprint, Aalen: Scientiia, 1983.

Hanson, Virginia, ed. Karma: The Universal Law of Harmony. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1975.

Hanussen, Erik Jan. Meine Lebenslinie. Berlin, 1930.

Haraldsson, Erlendur. "Are Religiosity and Belief in an Afterlife Better Predictors of ESP Performance than Belief in Psychic Phenomena?," Journal of Parapsychology 57, no. 3 (September 1993): 259–273.

———. Miracles Are My Visiting Cards: An Investigative Report on Psychic Phenomena Associated with Sri Sathya Sai Baba. 1978. Reprinted as Modern Miracles. New York: Fawcett Columbine, 1988.

———. "Representative National Surveys of Psychic Phenomena: Iceland, Great Britain, Sweden, USA and Gallup's Multinational Survey." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 53, no. 801.

———. "The Sai Baba Enigma." In Miracles, edited by Martin Ebon. New York: New American Library, 1981.

Haraldsson, Erlendur, and L. R. Gissurarson. "The Icelandic Medium Indridi Indridason." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 57 (1989).

Harary, Keith, and Patricia Weintraub. The Creative Sleep Program. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1989.

———. The Erotic Fulfillment Program. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1990.

———. The Free Flight Program. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1989.

———. Have an Out-of-Body Experience in 30 Days. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1990.

Harary, Stuart Blue [Keith Harary]. "A Personal Perspective on Out-of-Body Experiences." In Mind Beyond the Body: The Mystery of ESP Projection, edited by D. Scott Rogo. New York: Penguin Books, 1978.

Harder, Michael. Way of the Shaman: A Guide to Power and Healing. New York: Bantam Books, 1982.

Harding, Douglas E. On Having No Head. 1971. Reprint, Boston: Arkana, 1986.

———. The Hierarchy of Heaven and Earth. Gainesville, Fla.: University of Florida Press, 1979.

Hardy, Alister C., Arthur Koestler, and Robert Harvie. The Challenge of Chance: A Mass Experiment in Telepathy and Its Outcome. New York: Random House, 1974.

Hardy, Sir Alister. "Biology and Psychical Research." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 50, no. 183 (1953).

———. The Biology of God. London: Jonathan Cape, 1975.

———. The Divine Flame. London: Collins, 1966.

———. The Living Stream: A Restatement of Evolution Theory and its Relation to the Spirit of Man. London: Collins, 1965.

———. The Spiritual Nature of Man. Oxford: Clarendon, 1979.

———. "Telepathy and Evolutionary Theory." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 35 (1950).

Hardy, Sir Alister, R. Harvie, and Arthur Koestler. The Challenge of Chance: Experiments and Speculations. London: Hutchinson, 1973. Reprint, New York: Random House, 1974. Reprint, New York: Vintage Books, 1975.

Hare, H. E., and W. L. Hare. Who Wrote the Mahatma Letters? London: Williams & Norgate, 1936.

Hare, Robert. Experimental Investigation of the Spirit Manifestations. New York: Partridge & Britten, 1855. Reprint, Elk Grove, Wisc.: Sycamore Press, 1963.

Harenburg, Johann C. Von Vampyren. N.p., 1739.

Hargrove, Robert A. est: Making Life Work. New York: Delacorte Press, 1976.

Hark, Ann. Hex Marks the Spot in Pennsylvania Dutch Country. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott, 1938.

Harland, Marion. Where Ghosts Walk (1913). Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

Harley, Gail. "Emma Curtis Hopkins: 'Forgotten Founder' of New Thought." Ph.D. diss., Florida State University, 1991.

Harley, Trevor A. "Psi Missing in a Dream Clairvoyance Experiment," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 56, no. 817 (October 1989): 1–7.

Harley, Trevor, and Gerald Matthews. "Cheating, Psi, and the Appliance of Science: A Reply to Blackmore." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 54, no. 808 (July 1987).

Harner, Michael J. The Way of the Shaman. 3rd edition. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1990.

Harner, Micheal J., ed. Hallucinogens and Shamanism. London: Oxford University Press, 1981.

Harper, Charles G. Haunted Houses: Tales of the Supernatural with Some Account of Hereditary Curses and Family Legends. London: Cecil Palmer, 1927. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1971.

Harper, Edith K. Stead, the Man. London: W. Rider & Son, 1914.

Harper, George Mills. Yeats' Golden Dawn. London: Macmillan; Wellingsborough, Northamptonshire, UK: Aquarian Press, 1974. Reprint, Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1979. Reprinted as Yeats' Golden Dawn: The Influence of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn on the Life and Art of W. B. Yeats. San Bernadino, Calif.: Borgo Press, 1988.

Harrell, David Edwin, Jr. All Things Are Possible With God. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1975.

Harrer, Heinrich. Return to Tibet. London: Weinfeld & Nicholson, 1984.

Harrer, Heinrich. Seven Years in Tibet. London: Rupert Hart-Davis; New York: E. P. Dutton, 1953.

Harriman, Sarah. The Book of Ginseng. New York: Pyramid Books, 1975.

Harris, Errol E. The Foundations of Metaphysics in Science. Atlantic Highlands, N.J.: Humanities Press International, Inc., 1992.

Harris, John W. Inferences from Haunted Houses and Haunted Men. London, 1901.

Harris, Melvin. Jack the Ripper: The Bloody Truth. London: Columbus Books, 1987.

———. Sorry, You've Been Duped! London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1986.

Harris, Thomas Lake. Arcana of Christianity: Celestial Sense of the Divine Word. 2 vols. New York, 1858.

———. Brotherhood of the New Life: Its Fact, Law, Method, and Purpose. Fountain Grove, Calif.: Fountain Grove Press, 1891.

———. An Epic of the Starry Heaven. New York: Partridge & Britten, 1854.

———. A Lyric of the Golden Age. New York: Partridge & Britten, 1856.

———. The New Republic. Santa Rosa, Calif.: Fountain Grove Press, 1891.

Harrison, Jane E. Prolegmena to the Study of Greek Religion. Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge University Press, 1922.

Harrison, John F. C. Quest for the New World. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1969.

Harrison, Michael. Fire From Heaven. London, 1976. Reprint, New York: Methuen, 1977. Rev. ed. London: Pan, 1977.

———. Vanishings. London: New English Library, 1981.

Harrison, Vernon. H. P. Blavatsky & the SPR. Pasadena, Calif.: Theosophical University Press, 1997

———. " 'J'Accuse: An Examination of the Hodgson Report of 1885." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 53 (April 1986).

Harrison, William H. Mother Shipton Investigated. Reprint, London: The Author, 1881.

Hart, Hornell N. "ESP Projection: Spontaneous Cases and the Experimental Method." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (1954).

———. Living Religion. New York: Abingdon Press, 1937.

———. "The Psychic Fifth Dimension." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (1953).

———. "Psychical Research and the Methods of Science." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (1957).

———. "Six Theories About Apparitions." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (May 1956).

———. Skeptic's Quest. New York: Macmillan, 1938.

———. Toward a New Philosophical Basis for Parapsychological Phenomena. New York: Parapsychological Foundation, 1965.

Hart, Hornell. The Enigma of Survival: The Case For and Against an After Life. Springfield, Ill.: Charles Thomas, 1959.

———. "Visions and Apparitions Collectively and Reciprocally Received." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (May 1933).

———. Your Share of God: Spiritual Power for Life Fulfillment. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice Hall, 1958.

Hart, Ralph. Doctors Pronounced Me Dead in Dallas. Detroit: The Author, n.d.

Harte, Richard. Hypnotism and the Doctors. I. Mesmer/De Puységur. London: L. N. Fowler, 1902.

Hartland, Edwin, W. The Science of Fairy Tales: An Enquiry Into Fairy Mythology. London, 1891. Reprint, Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1968.

Hartlaub, Gustav Friedrich. The Inexplicable: Study of the Magic World View. N.p., 1951.

———. Magic of the Mirror. N.p., 1950.

———. The Philosopher's Stone: Character and Image of Alchemy. N.p., 1959.

Hartman, William C. Who's Who in Occultism, New Thought, Psychicism, and Spiritualism. Jamaica, N.Y.: Occult Press, 1927.

Hartmann, Eduard von. Der Spiritismus. Translated by C. C. Massey as Spiritism. London: Psychological Press, 1885.

Hartmann, Franz. An Adventure Among the Rosicrucians. Boston: Occult Publishing, 1887.

———. Geomancy: The Art of Divining by Punctuation According to Cornelius Agrippa and Others. London: William Rider & Son, 1913.

———. In the Pronaos of the Temple of Wisdom. London: Theosophical Society, 1890. Reprint, Chicago: Aries Press, 1941.

———. The Life and Doctrines of Jacob Boehme. New York: McCoy Publishing, 1929.

———. Life and Doctrines of Paracelsus. N.p., 1891.

———. The Life and Teachings of Paracelsus. London: George Redway, 1887. Reprinted with The Prophecies of Paracelsus. Blauvely, N.Y.: Rudolf Steiner, 1973.

———. The Life of Philippus Theophrastus Bombast of Hohenheim Known by the Name of Paracelsus and of the Substance of his Teachings. London: George Redway, 1887; Retd. with: The Prophecies of Paracelsus; Occult Symbols and Magic Figures. Blauvelt, N.Y.: Rudolf Steiner Publications, 1973.

———. Magic White and Black; or, The Science of Finite and Infinite Life. London: George Redway, 1886. Reprint, New York: University Books, 1970.

———. Occult Science in Medicine. N.p., 1893.

———. Premature Burial. London: Swann Sonnenschein, 1896.

———. The Principles of Astrological Geomancy. Boston: Occult Publishing, 1889. Reprint, Mokulumne Hill, Calif.: Health Research, 1965.

———. Report of Observations During a Nine Months' Stay at the Headquarters of the Theosophical Society at Adyar (Madras), India. Madras, India: Scottish Press, 1884.

Harvey, Youngsook Kim. Six Korean Women: The Socialization of Shamans. St. Paul, Minn.: West Publishing Co., 1979.

Hashimoto, M. Japanese Acupuncture. New York: Liveright Publishing, 1968; London: Thursons, 1966.

Hasted, John B. The Metal-benders. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1981.

Hasted, John B., David Bohm, Edward W. Bastin, and Brendan O'Regan. "Experiments on Psychokinetic Phenomena." In The Geller Papers: Scientific Observations on the Paranormal Powers of Uri Geller, edited by Charles Panati. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1976.

Hasted, John B., David Robertson, and Ernesto Spinelli. "Recording of Sudden Paranormal Changes of Body Weight." In Research in Parapsychology 1982. Eds. W. G. Roll, John Beloff, and Rhea A. White. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1983.

Hastings, A. C. "Expectancy Set and 'Poltergeist' Phenomena." ETC 18, no. 3 (October 1961).

Hastings, A. C., and Stanley Krippner. "Poltergeist Phenomena and Expectancy Set." Northwestern Tri-Quarterly 3, no. 3 (Spring 1961).

Hastings, A. C., James Fadiman, and James B. Gordon. Health for the Whole Person. Boulder, Colo.: Westview Press, 1980.

Hastings, Arthur. "Psi and the Phenomena of Channeling." In Research in Parapsychology 1989: Abstracts and Papers from the Thirty-second Annual Convention of the Parapsychological Association, 1989. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, Inc., 1990.

Hastings, James, ed. Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics. 12 vols. Edinburgh: James Clark, 1908.

Hatcher, William S., and J. Douglas Martin. The Baha'i Faith. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1984.

Hawi, Khalil. Kahlil Gibran: His Background, Character, and Works. Beirut, 1963.

Hawken, Paul. The Magic of Findhorn. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

Hawkins, Gerald. Stonehenge Decoded. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1965. Reprint, London: Souvenir Press, 1966.

Hay, George, ed. The Necronomicon: The Book of Dead Names. UK: Neville Spearman, 1978. Reprint, London: Corgi, 1980.

Hayek, Max. Der Schriftdeuter Raffael Schermann. N.p., 1921.

Hayes, Linda J. "Understanding Mysticism," Psychological Record 47, no. 4 (Fall 1970): 573–596.

Haynes, Renée. The Hidden Springs: An Enquiry into Extra-Sensory Perception. London: Hollis and Carter, 1961. Rev. ed. Boston: Little, Brown, 1973.

———. Philosopher King: The Humanist Pope Benedict XIV. London: Weidenfeld & Nicolson, 1970.

———. "Pope Benedict XIV and Parapsychology," Parapsychology Review 20, no. 5 (September-October 1989): 6–8.

———. The Seeing Eye, The Seeing I: Perception, Sensory and Extra-Sensory. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1976.

———. The Society for Psychical Research: A History 1882–1982. London: McDonald, 1982.

Haywood, H. I. The Newly Made Mason. Richmond, Va.: Macoy Publishing, 1948.

Hazard, T. R. Eleven Days in Moravia. N.p., n.d.

Hazelrigg, John. Astrosophia: Being Metaphysical Astrology. New York: The Author, 1915.

———. Astrosophical Principles. New York: Hermetic Publishing, 1917.

———. Fundamentals of Hermetic Science: Being the Bona Fides of Astrology. New York: Hermetic Publishing, 1925.

———. Metaphysical Astrology. New York: Metaphysical Publishing, 1900.

———. The Sun Book; or, the Philosopher's Vade Mecum. New York: Hermetic Publishing, 1916.

Head, Joseph, ed. Reincarnation in World Thought: A Living Study of Reincarnation in All Ages. New York: Julian Press, 1967.

Head, Joseph, and S. L. Cranston, eds. Reincarnation: An East-West Anthology. New York: Julian Press, 1961. Reprint, Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1968. Rev. ed. Reincarnation: The Phoenix Fire Mystery, an East-West Dialogue on Death and Rebirth. New York: Julian Press/Crown Publishers, 1977.

Heard, Gerald. Is Another World Watching? New York: Harpers, 1951.

———. Training for the Life of the Spirit. Hankins, N.Y.: Strength Books, 1975. Distributed by Steiner Books.

Hearn, Lafcadio. Kokoro: Hints & Echoes of Japanese Inner Life. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1906.

Hearne, Keith M. "A Dream-Telepathy Study Using a Home 'Dream Machine'," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 54, no. 807 (April 1987): 139–142.

———. "A Nationwide Mass Dream-Telepathy Experiment," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 55, no. 814 (January 1989): 271–274.

Hearne, Keith M. T. "'Lucid' Dreams and ESP: An Initial Experiment Using One Subject." Journal of the Society for Psychic Research 51, no. 787 (1981).

Hearnshaw, L. S. Cyril Burt, Psychologist. London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1979.

Heath, Frederick W. "The Story of Mr. Isaacs' Life." Occult Review (October 1912).

Heckethorn, Charles. The Secret Societies of all Ages and Countries. 2 vols. 1897. Revised ed., N.p., 1965.

Hedayetullah, Muhammed. Kabir: The Apostle of Hindu Muslim Unity. Delhi, India: Motilal Banarsidass, 1977.

Hedgepath, William, and Dennis Stock. The Alternative. New York: Macmillan, 1970.

Heehs, Peter. "Genius, Mysticism, and Madness," Psychohistory Review 26, no. 1 (Fall 1997): 45–75.

Hefferlin, W. C., and Gladys Hefferlin. A Description of the Rainbow City from the Hefferlin Manuscript. Vista, Calif.: Borderland Sciences Research Foundation, n.d.

Heidrick, Bill. Magick and Qaballah. Berkeley, Calif.: Ordo Templi Orientis, 1980.

Heim, Richard, ed. Incantamenta Magica Graeca Latina. Leipzig: Teubner, 1893.

Heim, Roger, and R. B. Wasson. Les champignons hallucinogens du Mexique. Paris: Editions du Museum National d'Histoire Naturelle, 1958.

———. Les champignons toxiques et hallucinogens. Paris: Boubee, 1978.

Heindel, Augusta Foss. The Birth of the Rosicrucian Fellowship. Oceanside, Calif.: Rosicrucian Fellowship, n.d.

Heindel, Max. Rosicrucian Cosmo-Conception. Oceanside, Calif.: Rosicrucian Fellowship, 1909, 1937.

———. The Rosicrucian Mysteries. Oceanside, Calif.: Rosicrucian Fellowship, 1911.

———. The Rosicrucian Philosophy, Questions and Answers. Oceanside, Calif.: Rosicrucian Fellowship, 1922.

———. Simplified Scientific Astrology. Oceanside, Calif.: Rosicrucian Fellowship, 1928.

Heindel, Mrs. Max [Augusta Foss]. The Birth of the Rosicrucian Fellowship. Oceanside, Calif.: Rosicrucian Fellowship, n.d.

Heinze, Ruth-Inge. "Life Patterns of Women Active in Parapsychology." In Women and Parapsychology. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, Inc., 1994.

Heinze, Ruth-Inge. Trance and Healing in Southeast Asia Today. Bangkok: White Lotus Co./Berkeley: Independent Scholars of Asia, 1988.

Heinze, Ruth-Inge, et al. Shamans of the 20th Century: With Contributions by Charlotte Berney [et al.]. New York: Irvington, 1991.

Heline, Corinne. Color and Music in the New Age. La Canada, Calif.: New Age Press, 1964.

———. Healing and Regeneration through Color. Santa Barbara, Calif.: J. F. Rowney Press, 1943.

———. New Age Bible Interpretation. 7 vols. Los Angeles: New Age Press, 1938–54.

Heline, Theodore. America's Destiny: A New Order of the Ages. Oceanside, Calif.: New Age Press, 1941.

Hellenbach, Baron. Eine Philosophie des Gesunden Menschenverstandes. N.p., 1876.

Heller, John H. Report on the Shroud of Turin. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1983.

Hellström, Eva Backström. "Collection of Spontaneous Cases." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 43.

———. "Precognition of Girls Dancing." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 41; 44.

Hemingway, Patricia D. Transcendental Meditation Primer. Philadelphia: McKay, 1975.

Henderson, William. Notes on the Folk-lore of the Northern Counties, and the Borders. London, 1866. Reprint, London: Folk-Lore Society, 1879.

Hendry, Allan. The UFO Handbook: A Guide to Investigating, Evaluating, and Reporting UFO Sightings. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1979.

Henkel, Linda A. and Gertrude R. Schmeidler, eds. Research in Parapsychology 1990: Abstracts and Papers from the Thirty-third Annual Convention of the Parapsychological Association, 1990. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, Inc., 1992.

Herron, William Joseph. "A Questionnaire Study Comparing Mystical Experience among Zen, Yoga, Christian, and Non-Spiritual Groups," Dissertation Abstracts International 54, no. 4-B (October 1993): 2179.

Henry Stubbe: The Miraculous Conformist; or an account of Several Marvailous Cures performed by Mr. Valentine Greatarick. Oxford, England, 1666.

Henry, T. Shekleton. Spookland: A Record of Research and Experiment in the Much Talked of Realm of Mystery. Chicago, 1902.

Henslow, George. The Proofs of the Truths of Spiritualism. London: K. Paul, Trench, Trubner; New York: E. P. Dutton, 1919.

———. The Religion of the Spirit World. Chicago: Marlow Press, 1920.

Henslow, George, and D. J. D'Aute Hooper. Spirit Psychometry. London: W. Rider, 1914.

Henson, Dale S. Encyclopedia Magica. Lake Geneva, Wisc.: T S R, Inc., 1995.

Herbelot, Barthélemy d'. Bibliotheque Oriental. Paris, 1697.

Herbert, G. E. S. M. (5th Earl of Carnarvon), and Howard Carter. Five Years' Explorations at Thebes, 1907–1911. London: H. Frowde, 1912.

Hermannsson, H. Catalogue of Runic Literature Forming Part of the Icelandic Collection at Cornell University. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1918.

Hermes, Trismegistus. The Divine Pymander. Translated by Dr. Everard. London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1894.

The Hermetic and Alchemical Writings of Aureolus Philippus Theophrastus Bombast, of Hohenheim, called Paracelsus the Great. 2 vols. Edited by Arthur E. Waite. London: James Elliott, 1894. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1967.

———. Hermetica. Edited by Brian Copenhaver. Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge University Press, 1992.

———. Hermetica. Edited by Walter Scott. Vol. 1. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1924. Reprint, Boston: Shambhala, 1985.

Hermes, Trismegistus. Theological and Philosophical Works. Edited by J. D. Chambers. 2 vols. Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark, 1882.

Herodotus. The Histories of Herodotus of Halicarnassus. London: Oxford University Press, 1962.

Hertz, Wilhelm. Der Werwolf. Stuttgart, 1862.

Hess, David J. "Parapsychology in Brazil: Relations with Non-Brazilian Researchers and the Context of Brazilian Culture," European Journal of Parapsychology 8 (1990–1991): 51–56.

———. Samba in the Night: Spiritism in Brazil. New York: Columbia University Press, 1994.

Hesse, Herman. Siddhartha. New York: New Directions, 1951.

Hettinger, John. Exploring the Ultra-Perceptive Faculty. London: Rider, 1941.

———. Telepathy and Spiritualism. London: Rider, 1952.

———. The Ultra-Perceptive Faculty. London: Rider, 1938.

Heuvelmans, Bernard. "The Birth and Early History of Cryptozoology." Cryptozoology 3 (1984): 1–30.

———. On the Track of Unknown Animals. New York: Hill and Wang, 1958. Rev. ed. 1965. Reprint, London: Paladin Books, 1970.

———. In the Wake of the Sea Serpents. London: Rupert Hart-Davis/New York: Hill and Wang, 1968.

———. "What Is Cryptozoology?" Cryptozoology 1 (Winter 1982): 1–12.

Hewit, S. C. Messages from the Superior State. Boston: B. Marsh, 1853.

Heydon, John. Eugenius Theodidactus. London, 1655.

Heymans, Gerardus. "Psychische Monismus und 'Psychical Research.'" In Zeitschrift für Psychologie. Leipzig: J. A. Barth, 1912.

Heymans, Gerardus, Henry J. F. W. Brugmans, and A. Weinberg. "Une communication sur des expériences télépathiques au laboratorie de psychologie a Groningue." In Compte Rendu Officiel du Primier Congres International des Recherches Psychiques. Copenhagen, 1922.

Heysinger, Isaac. Spirit and Matter Before the Bar of Modern Science. London: T. Werner Laurie, 1910.

Heywood, Rosalind. Beyond the Reach of Sense: An Inquiry into Extra-Sensory Perception. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1961.

———. ESP: A Personal Memoir. London: Chatto & Windus, 1964. Reprint, New York: E. P. Dutton, 1964.

———. "G. W. Fisk and ESP." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 47 (1973).

———. The Infinite Hive. London: Chatto & Windus, 1964. Reprinted as ESP: A Personal Memoir. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1972.

———. "Mrs. Gladys Osborne Leonard: A Biographical Tribute." Journal of the Society for Psychic Research 45 (1969).

———. "Notes on the Mediumship of Geraldine Cummins." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 45, 746 (December 1970).

———. The Sixth Sense: An Enquiry into Extrasensory Perception. London: Chatto & Windus, 1959. Reprint, London: Pan Books, 1971. Reprinted as Beyond the Reach of Sense. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1974.

Hibbert, Samuel. Sketches of the Philosophy of Apparitions. Edinburgh, 1825.

Hickman, Irene. I Knew Patience Worth. Sacramento, Calif., The Author, 1971.

Higgins, Godfrey. Anacalypsis, An Attempt to Draw Aside the Veil of the Saitic Isis; or An Inquiry into the Origin of Languages, Nations and Religions. 2 vols. London, 1933, 1936. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1965.

Higgins, Paul Lambourne, ed. Frontiers of the Spirit. Minneapolis: T. S. Denison, 1976.

Hilarion, Master [through Maurice B. Cooke]. The Nature of Reality. Toronto: Marcus Books, 1978.

Hill, Douglas. Fortune Telling. London: Hamlyn, 1972.

Hill, J. Arthur. Emerson and His Philosophy. 1919. Reprint, Folcroft, Pa.: Folcroft Library Editions, 1971.

———. From Agnosticism to Belief. London: Methuen, 1924.

———. Man Is a Spirit. New York: George H. Doran, 1918.

———. New Evidences in Psychical Research. London: W. Rider and Son, 1911.

———. Psychical Investigations. New York: George H. Doran, 1917.

———. Psychical Miscellanea. New York: Harcourt, Brace and Howe, 1919.

———. Psychical Science and Religious Belief. London: Rider, 1929.

———. Religion and Modern Psychology. N.p., 1911.

———. Spiritualism and Psychical Research. London: T. C. and E. C. Jack; New York: Dodge Publishing, 1913.

———. Spiritualism: Its History, Phenomena and Doctrine. London: Cassell; New York: George H. Doran, 1919.

Hill, J. Arthur, ed. Letters from Sir Oliver Lodge. London: Cassell, 1932.

Hillman, James. A Blue Fire: Selected Writings. New York: Harper & Row, 1989.

———. The Dream and the Underworld. New York: Harper & Row, 1979.

———. Emotion: A Comprehensive Phenomenology of Theories and their Meanings for Therapy. 1960. Reprint, Evanston, Ill.: Northwestern University Press, 1961.

———. The Feeling of Function. N.p., 1971.

———. Insearch: Psychology and Religion. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1967.

———. Loose Ends. Dallas: Springhill Publications, 1975.

———. The Myth of Analysis. Evanston, Ill.: Northwestern University Press, 1972.

———. Pan and The Nightmare. New York: Spring Publications, 1972.

———. Re-visioning Psychology. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

———. Suicide and The Soul. New York: Harper and Row, 1964.

Hills, Christopher. The Christ Book. Boulder Creek, Calif.: University of the Trees, 1980.

———. Christ Yoga of Peace: Proposal for a World Peace Center. 1970. Rev. ed. as Universal Government by Nature's Laws. N.p., 1978.

———. Creative Conflict. Boulder Creek, Calif: University of the Trees, 1980.

———. Exploring Inner Space. Boulder Creek, Calif.: University of the Trees, 1978.

———. The Golden Egg. Boulder Creek, Calif.: University of the Trees, 1979.

———. Nuclear Evolution: A Guide to Cosmic Enlightenment. London: Centre Community Publications; n.d.: Dr. Hills Technologies, 1968.

———. Rays from the Capstone. Boulder Creek, Calif.: University of the Trees, 1976.

———. Rejuvenating the Body Through Fasting With Spirulina Plankton. Boulder Creek, Calif.: University of the Trees, 1980.

———. The Secrets of Spirulina. Boulder Creek, Calif.: University of the Trees, 1980.

Hilsenrad, Zalman Aryeh, comp. The Baal Shem Tov: His Birth and Early Manhood. Brooklyn, N.Y.: Kehot Publication Society, 1967.

Hindley, Charles. Curiosities of Street Literature. 1871. London: The Broadsheet King, 1966.

Hine, Robert V. California's Utopian Colonies. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1966.

Hines, Donald M. Magic in the Mountains: The Yakima Shaman Power and Practice. Issaquah, Wash.: Great Eagle Publishing, 1993.

Hinton, C. H. The Fourth Dimension. London: G. Allen & Unwin, 1934.

———. Scientific Romances. London, 1886.

Hints on Sitting With Mediums. London: Society for Psychical Research, 1965.

Hippisley-Coxe, A. D. Haunted Britain: A Guide to Supernatural Sites Frequented by Ghosts, Witches, Poltergeists & Other Mysterious Beings. London: Hutchinson; New York: McGraw Hill, 1973. Reprint, London: Pan, 1975.

Hipskind, Judith. Palmistry: The Whole View. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1977.

Historie des diables de Loudun. N.p., 1839.

Histoire nouvelle et remarquable de l'esprit d'une femme qui c'est apparue au Faubourg Saint-Marcel après qu'elle a demeué cinq ans entiers ensevelie; elle a parlé a son mari, lui a commandé de faire prier pour elle, ayant commencé de parler le mardi II Decembre, 1618. Paris, 1618.

History of Flagellation Among All Nations. New York: Medical Publishing, 1903.

Hitchcock, C. A. Remarks Upon Alchemy and the Alchemists. Boston: Crosby, Nichols, 1857. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1976.

Hitching, Francis. Earth Magic. London: Cassell, 1976.

———. Pendulum: The Psi Connection. London: Fontana, 1977.

Hittleman, Richard L. Richard Hittleman's Yoga for Total Fitness. New York: Bantam Books, 1983.

Hobana, Ion, and J. Weverbergh. Unidentified Flying Objects from Behind the Iron Curtain. London: Souvenir Press, 1974. Reprint, London: Corgi, 1975.

Hocart, A. M. Kingship. London: Humphrey Milford, 1927.

Hockley, Frederick. The Rosicrucian Seer: Magical Writings of Frederick Hockley. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1986.

Hodges, Edward Lewi. Be Healed. . . A Remedy That Never Fails. San Diego, Calif.: Christian Fellowship Organization, 1949.

Hodges, Edward Lewi. Teachings of the Secret Order of the Christian Brotherhood. Santa Barbara, Calif.: J. F. Rowney Press, 1938.

———. Wealth and Riches by Divine Right. San Diego, Calif.: Christian Fellowship Organization, 1945.

Hodgson, B. H. "On the Mammalia of Nepal." Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal 1 (1832).

Hodgson, Richard. "An Account of Personal Investigations in India, and Discussion of the Authorship of the 'Koot Hoomi' Letters." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 3 (1885).

———. "Mr. Davey's Imitations by Conjuring of Phenomena Sometimes Attributed to Spirit Agency." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 8, 22 (1892): 253–310.

———. "Personal Investigations, in India, of Theosophical Phenomena." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 3 (1885); Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 1–2 (1884–1886).

———. "Report on Phenomena Connected with Theosophy." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 3 (1885).

Hodgson, Richard, and S. J. Davey. "The Possibilities of Malobservation and Lapse of Memory from a Practical Point of View." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 4 (1887).

Hodson, Geoffrey. The Kingdom of Faerie. London, 1927.

———. The Science of Seership. London, 1920.

Hoebens, Piet Hein. "Croiset and Professor Tenhaeff: Discrepancies in Claims of Clairvoyance." Zetetic Scholar 6, no. 2 (Winter 1981–82): 32–40.

———. "Gerard Croiset and Professor Tenhaeff." In Science Confronts the Paranormal. Edited by Kenneth Frazier. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1986.

———. "Investigation of the Mozart of 'Psychic Sleuths.' " In Science Confronts the Paranormal, edited by Kenneth Frazier. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1986.

———. "The Mystery Men From Holland." Zetetic Scholar 8 (July 1981); 9 (March 1982); 10 (December 1982).

———. "The Mystery Men From Holland, I: Peter Hurkos' Dutch Cases." Zetetic Scholar 8 (July 1981).

———. "The Mystery Men From Holland, III: The Man Whose Passport Says Clairvoyant." Zetetic Scholar 10 (December 1982).

Hoene-Wronski, Jozef Maria. Hoene-Wronski: Une philosopie de la creation. Paris: Seghers, 1970.

Hoerschelmann, Dorothee von. "Religious Meaning of the Samoan Kava Ceremony," Anthropos, Vol. 90 (1995): 193–195.

Hoffer, Abram, and Humphrey Osmond. Megavitamin Therapy: In Reply to the American Psychiatric Association Task Force Report on Megavitamins and Orthomolecular Psychiatry. Regina, Sask., Canada: Canadian Schizophrenia Foundation, 1976.

Hoffman, Enid. Huna, A Beginner's Guide. Rockport, Mass.: ParaResearch, 1976.

Hogarth, Hyun-Key Kim. "Kut: Happiness through Reciprocity." In Bibliotheca Shamanistica. Vol. 7. Budapest: Akadémiai Kiadó, 1998.

Hogue, John. Nostradamus and the Millennium. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1987.

Hohenwarter, Peter. "The Experiments of Astro-Physicist Dr. Alois Gatterer, S. J., with Maria Silbert." Vergorgene Welt 2, no. 3 (1957).

———. "Germany's Leading Parapsychologist: The 100th Anniversary of Schrenck-Notzing's Birth." Vergorgene Welt. 3–5 (1959).

———. "Hauntings at Schwarzach in the Voralberg Region." Neue Wissenschaft (July 1954).

———. "Our Experiments with Maria Silbert." Schweizer Rundschau (February 1954).

———. "Should We Study Parapsychology?" Der Seelsorger (March 1958).

Hohman, Johann George. Der lange vernorgene Freund. Reading, Pa., 1819. English edition as The Long Lost Friend. N.p., 1820. Reprint, Harrisburg, Pa., 1850.

Holden, James H., and Robert A. Hughes. Astrological Pioneers of America. Tempe, Ariz.: American Federation of Astrologers, 1988.

Holden, Ralph William. The Elements of House Division. Essex, UK: L. N. Fowler, 1977.

Hole, Christina. Witchcraft in England. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1947.

Holiday, F. W. The Dragon and the DiS.C.: An Investigation Into the Totally Fantastic. New York: W. W. Norton, 1973.

Holistic Health Directory and Resource Guide, 1994–1995. Watertown, Mass.: New Age Journal, 1994.

Hollander, Bernard. In Search of the Soul and the Mechanism of Thought, Emotion, and Conduct. 2 vols. London: Kegan Paul; New York: E. P. Dutton, 1920.

Hollen, Henry. Clairaudient Transmission. Hollywood, Calif.: Keats Publications, 1931.

Hollenback, Jess B. Mysticism. University Park, Pa.: Pennsylvania State University Press, 1996.

Holloway, Emory. "Walt Whitman's Visit to the Shakers; With Whitman's Notebook Containing his Description and Observations of the Shaker Group at Mt. Lebanon." The Colophon 1 (spring 1930).

Holloway, Gilbert N. Let the Heart Speak. Los Angeles: DeVorss, 1951.

———. New Ways of Unfoldment. Deming, N.Mex.: New Age Truth Publications, n.d.

———. The Way Up. Deming, N.Mex.: New Age Church of Truth, 1975.

Holloway, Jean. Hamlin Garland, a Biography. Austin, Tex.: University of Texas Press, 1960.

Holloway, Mark. Heavens on Earth: Utopian Communities in America, 1680–1880. London: Turnstile Press, 1951.

Holm, Nils G. "Sunden's Role Theory and Glossolalia," Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion 26, no. 3 (September 1987): 383–389.

Holm, Nils G., ed. "Religious Ecstasy: Based on Papers read at the Symposium on Religious Ecstasy held at Abo, Finland, on the 26th–28th of August, 1981," In Scripta Instituti Donneriani Aboensis, Vol. 11. Stockholm: Distributed by Almqvist & Wiksell International, 1982.

Holmberg, Uno. Finno-Ugric, Siberian Mythology. (The Mythology of All Races, Vol. IV). New York: Cooper Square, 1964.

Holmes, Donald. The Illuminati Conspiracy. Los Angeles: Falcon Press, 1987.

Holmes, E. G. A. Albigensian or Catharist Heresy. London: William & Norgate, 1925.

Holmes, Ernest S. How to Use the Science of Mind. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1948.

———. The Science of Mind. 1925. Rev. ed. New York: R. M. McBride, 1938.

———. This Thing Called Life. Los Angeles: Institute of Religious Science and Philosophy, 1943.

———. What Religious Science Teaches. Los Angeles: Church of Religious Science, 1944.

Holmes, Fenwicke L. Ernest Holmes: His Life and Times. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1970.

Holms, A. Campbell. The Facts of Psychic Science and Philosophy Collated and Discussed. London, 1925. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1969.

———. The Fundamental Facts of Spiritualism. Indianapolis: Stow Memorial Foundation, n.d.

Hoppál, Mihály, ed. Shamanism in Eurasia. Göttingen, 1984.

———. "Shamanism. Selected Writings of Vilmos Diószegi." In Bibliotheca Shamanistica. Vol. 6. Budapest: Akadémiai Kiadó, 1998.

Hoppál, Mihály, and Keith D. Howard, eds. "Shamans and Cultures." In ISTOR Books. Vol. 5. Budapest: Akadémiai Kiadó, 1993.

Hoppál, Mihály and Otto J. von Sadovszky, eds. "Shamanism: Past and Present." In. ISTOR Books. 2 vols. Budapest: Akadémiai Kiadó, 1989.

Holroyd, Stuart. Magic, Words, and Numbers. London: Aldus Books; Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1975.

Holt, Henry. Calmire. New York: Macmillan, 1892.

———. Garrulities of an Octogenarian Editor. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1923.

———. Man and Man. N.p., 1892. Reprint, 1905.

———. On the Cosmic Relations. 1914. Rev. ed. as The Cosmic Relations and Immortality. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1919.

Holzer, Hans. Applied Astrology. London: L. N. Fowler, 1953.

———. Born Again: The Truth about Reincarnation. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1970. Reprint, London: Bailey Bros. & Swinfen, 1975.

———. The Directory of the Occult. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1974.

———. Elvis Speaks from the Beyond and other Celebrity Ghost Stories. New York: Dorset Press, 1993.

———. The Great British Ghost Hunt. Boston: G. K. Hall, 1975.

———. Hans Holzer's Haunted Houses: A Pictorial Register of the World's Most Interesting Ghost Houses. New York: Crown, 1971.

———. The Modern Textbook of Astrology. Rev. ed., London: L. N. Fowler, 1967.

———. The New Pagans. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1972.

———. Pagans and Witches. New York: Manor Books, 1979.

———. The Prophets Speak. Indianapolis, Ind.: Bobbs-Merrill, 1971.

———. The Truth about Witchcraft. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1969.

———. Wicca: The Way of the Witches. New York: Manor Books, 1979.

Home, D. D. Incidents in My Life. London: Longman, Green, 1863. 2nd series. New York: A. K. Butts, 1874. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1972.

Homes, Ronald. Witchcraft in British History. London: Muller, 1974.

Hone, Margaret. Modern Textbook of Astrology. London: Fowler, 1951.

Honorton, Charles. "Has Science Developed the Competence to Confront Claims of the Paranormal?" In Research in Parapsychology 1975, edited by J. D. Morris, W. G. Roll, and R. L. Morris. New York: Parapsychological Association, 1976.

———. "Meta-Analysis of Psi Ganzfeld Research: A Response to Hyman." Journal of Parapsychology 49 (1985): 59.

———. "Psi-Mediated Imagery and Ideation in an Experimental Procedure for Regulating Perceptual Input." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 68 (1974).

———. "Separation of High- and Low-Scoring ESP Subjects Through Hypnotic Preparation." Journal of Parapsychology 28 (1964).

———. "Significant Factors in Hypnotically-Induced Clairvoyant Dreams." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 66 (1972).

———. "State of Awareness Factors in Psi Activation." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 68 (1974).

Honorton, Charles, Diane C. Ferrari, and Daryl J. Bem. "Extraversion and ESP Performance: A Meta-Analysis and a New Confirmation," Journal of Parapsychology 62, no. 3 (September 1998): 255–276.

Hood, Ralph W., Jr. "The Empirical Study of Mysticism." In The Psychology of Religion: Theoretical Approaches. Boulder, Colo.: Westview Press, 1997.

Hood, Ralph W., Ronald J. Morris, and P. J. Watson. "Further Factor Analysis of Hood's Mysticism Scale," Psychological Reports 73, no. 3, Pt. 2 (December 1993): 1176–1178.

Hooper, Judith, and Dick Teresi. Would a Buddha Wear a Walkman? New York: Simon & Schuster, 1990.

[Hooper, T. D'Aute]. Spirit Psychometry and Trance Communications by Unseen Agencies. London: Rider, 1914.

Hopkins, Budd. Intruders: The Incredible Visitations at Copley Woods. New York: Random House, 1987.

———. Missing Time: A Documented Study of UFO Abductions. New York: Richard Marek, 1981.

Hopkins, Emma Curtis. Class Lessons, 1888. Marina del Rey, Calif.: DeVorss, 1977.

———. High Mysticism. Cornwall Bridge, Conn.: High Watch Fellowship, n.d.

———. Scientific Christian Mental Practice. Cornwall Bridge, Conn.: High Watch Fellowship, 1958.

Hopkinson, Tom, and Dorothy Hopkinson. Much Silence. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1975.

Hörbiger, Hans. Glazial-Kosmogonie. N.p., 1912.

Hövelman, G. H. "Neglected Figures in the History of Parapsychology. I. Some General Reflections." In Liber Amicorum in Honoue of G. A. M. Zorab, edited by F. W. J. J. Snel. Amsterdam: Nederlander Vereniging voor Parapsychologie, 1986.

Hornung, D. Neue Geheimnisse des Tages durch Geistes Magnetismus. Leipzig, 1857.

Hornung, Erik. Conceptions of God in Ancient Egypt. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1982.

Hose, Charles, and William McDougall. The Pagan Tribes of Borneo. 2 vols. London: Macmillan, 1912.

Houdini, Harry. A Magician Among the Spirits. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1924. Reprinted as Houdini: A Magician Among the Spirits. New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1972.

———. The Right Way to Do Wrong. Boston: H. Houdini, 1906.

———. The Unmasking of Robert Houdin. New York: Publishers Printing, 1908.

Houghton, Miss [Georgiana]. Chronicles of the Photographs of Spiritual Beings and Phenomena Invisible to the Material Eye. London: E. W. Allen, 1882.

Hounam, Peter, and Andrew Hogg. Secret Cult. London: Lion, 1984.

Houston, Jean. Lifeforce: The Psycho-historical Recovery of the Self. New York: Delacorte Press, 1989.

———. The Search for the Beloved: Journeys in Sacred Psychology. Los Angeles: Jeremy P. Tarcher, 1987.

Houston, Jean, and Robert E. L. Masters. Listening to the Body. New York: Delacorte Press, 1978.

———. Mind Games: The Guide to Inner Space. New York: Viking, 1972.

———. The Varieties of Psychedelic Experience. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1966.

Hoving, Thomas. Tutankhamen: The Untold Story. New York: Simon & Schuster; London: Hamish Hamilton, 1978.

Howard, Michael. The Magic of Runes. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1980.

Howard-Gordon, Francis. Glastonbury: Maker of Myths. Glastonbury, England: Gothic Image, 1982.

Howe, Ellic. The Magicians of the Golden Dawn. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1972.

———. Urania's Children: The Strange World of the Astrologers. London: William Kimber, 1967. Rev. ed. as Astrology and Psychological Warfare During World War II. London, 1972. Reprinted as Astrology: A Recent History Including the Untold Story of Its Role in World War II. New York: Walker, 1968.

Howe, Ellic, ed. The Alchemist of the Golden Dawn: The Letters of the Revd W. A. Ayton to F. L. Gardner and Others, 1886–1905. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1985.

Howitt, William. The History of the Supernatural in All Ages and Nations and in All Churches, Christian and Pagan, Demonstrating a Universal Faith. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott, 1863. Reprinted as The History of Magic. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1970.

———. Homes and Haunts of the Most Eminent British Poets. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1847.

Howitt-Watts, Mrs. Pioneers of the Spiritual Reform. London: Psychological Press Association, 1883.

Hua-Ching Ni. Internal Alchemy. Santa Monica, Calif.: SevenStar Communications Group, 1993.

Huard, Pierre, and Ming Wong. Oriental Methods of Mental & Physical Fitness: The Complete Book of Meditation, Kinesiotherapy & Martial Arts in China, India & Japan. New York: Funk & Wagnall, 1971.

Hubbard, L. Ron. The Book Introducing the E-meter. Los Angeles: Church of Scientology of California, 1975.

———. The Book of E-meter Drills. Compiled by Mary Sue Hubbard. Los Angeles: Church of Scientology of California, 1965.

———. Dianetics 55! Los Angeles: Publications Organization, 1954.

———. Dianetics: The Modern Science of Mental Health. New York: Hermitage House, 1950.

———. E-Meter Essentials. Los Angeles: Church of Scientology of California, 1975.

———. Handbook for Preclears. Los Angeles: Publications Organization, 1951.

———. Science of Survival. Los Angeles: Publications Organization, 1951.

———. Scientology: A New Slant on Life. Los Angeles: Publications Organization, United States, 1965.

———. Scientology: The Fundamentals of Thought. Los Angeles: Publications Organization, 1956.

———. Self-Analysis. Los Angeles: Publications Organization, 1951.

———. Understanding the E-Meter. Los Angeles: Bridge Publications, 1981.

———. You Have Lived Before This life? Los Angeles: Publications Organization, 1977.

Hubbell, Walter. The Great Amherst Mystery. New York, 1888.

Huber, Peter Alfred. Arthur Koestler, Das Literarische Werk. Zürich: Fretz & Wasmuth, 1962.

Huby, Pamela M. C. "Case of Xenoglossy." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 44.

———. "Effects of Centrally Acting Drugs on ESP Ability." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 41.

———. "New Evidence About 'Rose Morton.'&43" Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 45.

Huck, Gwendolyn K. Modern Psychic Mysteries: Millesimo Castle, Italy. London, 1929.

Hudson, Thomson Jay. Divine Pedigree of Man. Chicago: A. C. McClure, 1900.

———. Evolution of the Soul and Other Essays. Chicago: A. C. McClure, 1904.

———. The Law of Psychic Phenomena: A Working Hypothesis for the Systematic Study of the Vast Potential of Man's Mind. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1894. Reprint, Chicago: Hudson-Cohan, 1970. Reprint, New York: Weiser, 1972.

———. Scientific Demonstration of the Future Life. Chicago: A. C. McClure, 1896.

Huebner, Louise. Magic Sleep. Kansas City, Mo.: Springbok Editions, 1972.

———. Magical Creatures. Kansas City, Mo.: Springbok Editions, 1972.

———. Never Strike a Happy Medium. Los Angeles: Nash Publishing, 1971.

———. Power through Witchcraft. Los Angeles: Nash Publishing, 1969. Reprint, New York: Bantam Books, 1972.

———. Your Lucky Numbers. Kansas City, Mo.: Springbok Editions, 1972.

Hughes, E. R., ed. and trans. Chinese Philosophy in Classical Times. London: J. M. Dent; New York: E. P. Dutton, 1942.

Hughes, Irene. ESPecially Irene: A Guide to Psychic Awareness. Blauvelt, N.Y.: Rudolph Steiner Publications, 1972.

———. Know Your Future Today. New York: Paperback Library, 1970.

Huhm, Halla Pai. Kut: Korean Shamanist Rituals. Elizabeth, N.J.: Hollym International, n.d.

Hull, C. L. Hypnosis and Suggestibility: An Experimental Approach. New York: Century Psychology Service, 1933.

Hull, Daniel. Moses Hull. Wellesley, Mass.: Maugus Printing, 1907.

Hultkrantz, ¤'c5ke. "A Definition of Shamanism," Temenos. 9 (1973): 25–37.

———. "Ecological and Phenomenological Aspects of Shamanism." In Shamanism in Siberia. Edited by Vilmos Diószegi and Mihály Hoppál. Budapest, 1978.

———. "The Meaning of Ecstasy in Shamanism." Tribal Epistemologies Aldershot: Avebury/Ashgate Publishing, 1998.

———. "The Shaman and the Medicine-Man," Social Science & Medicine. 20, no. 5 (1985): 511–515.

———. Shamanic Healing and Ritual Drama. Health and Medicine in Native North American Religious Tradition. New York: Crossroads, 1992.

———. The Religions of the American Indians. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1979.

Humbard, Rex. Prayer With Power. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Baker Books, n.d.

Humble, Floyd. Bible Lessons. Gardena, Calif.: United Spiritualist Church, 1969.

Hume, Lyn. *Witchcraft & Paganism in Australia.*Melbourne, Austrailia: Melbourne University Press, 1997.

Humpfner, Winfried G. L'Interpretazione di Fenomeni Metapsichici; ovvero, L'Anima in Metapsichica, in Psicologia, ecc. (The Interpretation of Metapsychical Phenomena; or, The Soul in Metapsychics, Psychology, etc.). N.p., 1951.

Humphrey, Caroline, and Urgunge Onon. "Shamans and Elders: Experience, Knowledge, and Power among the Daur Mongols." In Oxford Studies in Social and Cultural Anthropology. New York: Oxford University Press, 1996.

Humphrey, Elizabeth. Handbook of Tests in Parapsychology. Durham, N.C.: Parapsychology Laboratory, 1948.

———. "Simultaneous High and Low Aim in PK Tests." Journal of Parapsychology 11 (1947).

Humphreys, Christmas. Zen Buddhism. London: Heinemann, 1949. Reprint, New York: Macmillan, 1967.

———. An Outline of Buddhism. Honolulu: Hongwanji Buddhist Temple, 1929.

Hunt, H. Ernest. A Book of Auto-Suggestion. N.p., 1923.

———. Essentials and Symbols of the Buddhist Faith. Honolulu: The Author, 1955.

———. Gleanings from Soto-Zen. Honolulu: The Author, 1953.

———. Hidden Self and Its Mental Processes. London: W. Rider and Son, 1921.

———. Manual of Hypnotism. London: W. Rider, 1917.

———. Nerve Control. N.p., 1923.

———. Self Training. Philadelphia: D. McKay, 1918.

———. Spirit and Music. N.p., 1922.

———. Spiritualism For the Enquirer. N.p., 1931.

———. Why We Survive. N.p., 1928.

Hunt, Roland. The Seven Keys to Colour Healing. Ashington, England: C. W. Daniel, 1954.

Hunter, Jennifer. 21st Century Wicca. Secaucus, N.J.: Carol Publishing Group,1997.

Hunter, Louise. Buddhism in Hawaii. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press, 1971.

Hurkos, Peter. Psychic. London: Arthur Baker, 1962.

———. Psychic: The Story of Peter Hurkos. London: Arthur Barker, 1961.

Hurst, Lulu. Lulu Hurst Writes Her Autobiography. Rome, Ga., 1897.

Huson, Paul. The Devil's Picture Book: The Compleat Guide to Tarot Cards; Their Origins and Their Usage. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1971. Reprint, London: Abacus, 1972.

Hutchins, Jane. Discovering Mermaids and Monsters. Shire Publications, 1968.

Hutchinson, H. Dreams and their Meanings. London, 1901.

Hutin, Serge. A History of Alchemy. New York: Walker, 1963. Reprint, New York: Tower Books, n.d.

———. Histoire des Rose-Croix (History of the Rosicrucians). Paris: G. Nizet, 1955.

———. Histoire mondiale des sociétés secrétes (World History of Secret Societies). N.p., 1959.

———. Les Civilisations inconnues (Unknown Civilizations). N.p., 1961.

———. Les Disciples anglais de Jacob Boehme. Paris; n.p., 1960.

———. Les Francs-Macons (The Freemasons). Paris: Editions du Seuil, 1960.

———. Voyages vers Ailleurs (Travels to Elsewhere). Paris: Fayard, 1962.

Hutton, Alice. The Cards Can't Lie: Prophetic, Educational and Playing-Cards. London: Jupiter Books, 1979.

Hutton, Bernard. Healing Hands. London: W. H. Allen, 1966.

Hutton, Christopher M. and John E. Joseph. "Back to Blavatsky: The Impact of Theosophy on Modern Linguistics," Language & Communication 18, no. 3 (July 1998): 181–204.

Huxley, Aldous. Aldous Huxley's Hearst Essays. New York: Garland Publishing, 1994.

———. The Devils of Loudon. London: Chatto & Windus, 1952. Reprint, New York: Harper & Row, 1971.

———. The Doors of Perception. London: Chatto & Windus, 1954. Reprint, New York: Harper & Row, 1970.

———. Heaven and Hell. New York: Harper/London: Chatto & Windus, 1956.

———. Island. London: Chatto & Windus, 1962.

———. Moksha: Writings on Psychedelics and the Visionary Experience. New York: Stonehill, 1977.

Huxley, Francis. The Way of the Sacred. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1974. Reprint, New York: Dell, 1976.

Huysmans, J. K. Là-Bas. 1891. Translated as Down There: A Study in Satanism. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1958.

———. Down There (La-Bas): A Study in Satanism. Translated by Keene Willis. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1958.

Hyatt, Christopher and James Wasserman. Inside Secret Societies. Glendale, Ariz.: New Falcon Publications, 1997.

Hyman, Ray. "Evaluation of the Program on Anomalous Mental Phenomena," Journal of Parapsychology 59, no. 4 (December 1995): 321–351.

Hyman, Ray. "The Ganzfeld Psi Experiment: A Critical Appraisal." Journal of Parapsychology 49 (1985): 3.

Hymenaeus Beta, Caliph [Grady McMurtry]. "Introduction: Culture vs. Cult." Equinox 3, 10 (1986): 9–12.

———. Tao Teh King. London: Askin Publishers; New York: Samuel Weiser, 1976.

Hymenaeus Beta, comp. The Equinox 3, no. 10. New York: Thelema Publications, 1986.

Hynek, J. Allen. The Hynek UFO Report. New York: Dell, 1977.

———. The UFO Experience: A Scientific Inquiry. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1972. N.p.:Marlowe and Co., 1999.

Hynek, J. Allen, and Jacques Vallee. The Edge of Reality: A Progress Report on Unidentified Flying Objects. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1975.

Hynek, R. W. Konnersreuth: A Medical and Psychological Study of the Case of Teresa Neumann. N.p., 1932.

Hyslop, George H. "An Instance of Apparent Spontaneous Telepathy." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (April 1948).

Hyslop, George H. "The Biological Approach to Psychic Phenomena." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (April 1942).

———. "Certain Problems of Psychic Research." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (August 1930).

———. "James H. Hyslop: His Contribution to Psychical Research." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (October 1950).

———. "Report of the Questionnaire Committee." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (November 1930).

Hyslop, James H. Borderland of Psychical Research. London: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1906.

———. Contact With the Other World: The Latest Evidence as to Communication with the Dead. New York: Century, 1919. Reprint, Finch Press, 1972.

———. Enigmas of Psychical Research. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons/Boston: H. B. Turner, 1906.

———. Life After Death: Problems of the Future Life and Its Nature. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1918.

———. "Professor Newcomb and Occultism." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 5 (1909).

———. Psychical Research and Survival. London: G. Bell and Sons, 1913.

———. Psychical Research and the Nature of Life After Death. Albuquerque, N.Mex.: American Institute for Psychological Research, 1980.

———. Psychical Research and the Resurrection. Boston: Small, Maynard, 1908.

———. "Replies to Mr. Carrington's Criticism of M. Aksakof." Proceedings of the American Society Psychical Research N.d.

———. Science and a Future Life. London: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1906.

"I Was Cured by Ghost of Elvis." Sun (January 24, 1995).

Ichazo, Oscar. The Human Process for Enlightenment and Freedom. New York: Arica Institute, 1976.

Imoda, Enrico. "The Action of Eusapia Palladino on the Electroscope." Annals of Psychical Science 7, 44/45, (August–September 1908).

———. Fotographie di fantasma. Turin, 1912.

"In Memoriam: Professor C. D. Broad, 1887–1971." Journal of the SPR 46 (1971): 107.

Ince, R. B. Franz Anton Mesmer. London: William Rider, 1920.

Inengar, B. K. S. Light on Yoga. New York: Schocken Books, 1966.

Inge, William Ralph. Christian Mysticism. London: Methuen, 1899.

Ingenito, Marcia Gervase, ed. National New Age Yellow Pages. Fullerton, Calif.: National New Age Yellow Pages, 1987. Rev. ed. Fullerton, Calif.: Highgate House, 1988.

Inglis, Brian. Fringe Medicine. 1964. Reprinted as The Case for Unorthodox Medicine. New York: Berkeley, 1969.

———. The Hidden Power. London: Jonathan Cape, 1986.

———. Natural and Supernatural: A History of the Paranormal from Earliest Times to 1914. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1977.

———. Natural Medicine. London: Collins, 1979.

———. The Paranormal: An Encyclopedia of Psychic Phenomena. London: Granada, 1985.

———. Science and Parascience: A History of the Paranormal, 1914–1939. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1984.

———. "Sir William Barrett (1844–1925)." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 55 (1988): 16.

———. Trance: A Natural History of Altered States of Mind. London: Grafton, 1989.

Inglis, Brian, and Ruth West. The Alternative Health Guide. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1983.

Ingoldsby, Thomas. The Ingoldsby Legends or Mirth and Marvels. London: R. Bentley, 1840.

Ingram, John H. Haunted Houses and Family Traditions of Great Britain. London, 1884.

Ingram, M. V. An Authenticated History of the Famous Bell Witch. Clarksville, Tenn.: W. P. Titus, 1894.

The International Psychic Register. Edited by Donald McQuaid. 3 vols. Erie, Pa.: Ornion Press, 1977, 1978, and 1979.

"Interview: Penny Torres on Mafu." Life Times 1, no. 2 (winter 1986–87): 74–79.

"Interview: Thelma S. Moss." Psychic 1, no. 1 (1970).

Interviews with Oscar Ichazo. New York: Arica Institute Press, 1982.

Introductory Study Course in Theosophy. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Society of America, 1967.

Iremonger, Lucille. The Ghosts of Versailles. London: Faber & Faber, 1957.

Irvine, Doreen. From Witchcraft to Christ. London: Concordia Press, 1973.

Irwin, Harvey J. "Charles Bailey: A Biographical Study of the Australian Apport Medium." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 54 (1987): 97.

———. Flight of Mind: A Psychological Study of the Out-of-Body Experience. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1985.

———. An Introduction to Parapsychology. Pittsburgh: R. A. McConnell, 1983.

———. "Parapsychology in Australia," Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 82, no. 4 (October 1988): 319–338. Irwin, H. J. Psi and the Mind: An Information Processing Approach. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1979.

———. "A Study of Paranormal Belief, Psychological Adjustment, and Fantasy Proneness," Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 85, no. 4 (October 1991): 317–331.

Isherwood, Christopher. Ramakrishna and His Disciples, New York: Simon & Schuster, 1965.

Isherwood, Christopher, and Swami Prabhavananda, trans. The Bhagavad Gita: The Song of God. Hollywood, Calif.: Marcel Road, 1944.

Ivanova, Barbara. The Golden Chalice. Edited by M. Mir and L. Vilenskaya. San Francisco: H. S. Dakin, 1986.

———. "Reincarnation and Healing." Psi Research 5, 1,2 (March/June 1986).

———. "Some Experiments on Healing Processes." International Journal of Paraphysics 19, 5,6 (1985).

Iverson, Jeffrey. More Lives Than One? London: Souvenir Press, 1976. Reprint, London: Pan, 1967.

Iyangar, Yogi Srinivasa. Hatha-Yoga-Pradipika of Svatmarama Svamin. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1933.

Iyengar, B. K. S. Light of Yoga. New York: Schrocken Books, 1966.

Jabir ibn Hayyan. The Works of Geber. London: Printed for William Cooper, 1686.

Jack, Alex. The New Age Dictionary. Brookline Village, Mass.: Kanthaka Press, 1976.

Jacks, L. P. All Men Are Ghosts. London: Williams & Norgate, 1913.

———. The Confessions of an Octogenarian. N.p., 1942.

———. The Inner Sentinel. New York; London: Harper & Brothers, 1930.

———. "Dramatic Dreams, an Unexplored Field for Psychical Research." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 17 (1915).

———. Elemental Religion. New York: Harper, 1934.

———. My American Friends. London: Constable & Co. Ltd, 1933; New York: Macmillian, 1933.

———. My Neighbour the Universe. N.p., 1928.

———. Near the Brink. London: Allen & Unwin, 1955.

———. "Presidential Address: The Theory of Survival in the Light of Its Context." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 29 (1918).

Jackson, Herbert G., Jr. The Spirit Rappers. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1972.

Jackson, Nigel. The Compleat Vampyre. Edmonds, Wash.: Holmes Publishing Group, 1995.

Jacob, August Henri. L'Hygiène naturelle, ou l'art de consevèr sa santé et de se gué rir soi-même. Paris, 1868.

Jacob, August Henri. Les Pensées du Zouave Jacob. Paris, 1868.

———. Poisons et contre-Poisons dévoilés. Paris, 1874.

Jacobi, Jolande S. Case Studies in Counselling and Psychotherapy. N.p., 1959.

———. Die Psychologie von C. G. Jung. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1943.

———. Komplex, Archetypus, Symbol in der Psychologie von C. G. Jung. Zürich: Rascher, 1957; London: Routledge & Paul, 1959.

———. Paracelsus. Wien: P. Neff, 1951.

———. Vom Bilderreich der Seele. Zürich: Rascher, 1940.

———. The Way of Individuation. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1967.

Jacobi, Jolande S., ed. Man and His Symbols. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1964.

Jacobs, Claude F., and Andrew J. Kaslow. The Spiritual Churches of New Orleans: Origins, Beliefs, and Rituals of an African American Religion. Knoxville: University of Tennessee Press, 1991.

Jacobs, David M. The UFO Controversy in America. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1975. Reprint, New York: New American Library, 1976.

———. "J. Allen Hynek and the UFO Phenomenon." International UFO Reporter 11, no. 3 (May/June 1986): 4–8, 23.

Jacobs, Jeff C. "Psi-Guided Awakening from Sleep 1: The Original Experiments of W. Van Vuurde." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 53 (1985): 159.

Jacobson, Nils Olof. Life Without Death? On Parapsychology, Mysticism and the Question of Survival. New York: Delacorte Press, 1973. Reprint, London: Turnstone Books, 1974.

———. Life Without Death? On Parapsychology, Mysticism and the Question of Survival. New York: Delacorte Press, 1973. Reprint, London: Turnstone Books, 1974. Reprint, New York: Dell, 1974.

Jacobson, Nils Olof and Jens A. Tellefsen. "Dowsing Along the Psi Track: A Novel Procedure for Studying Unusual Perception," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 59, no. 834 (January 1994): 321–339.

Jacobson, Wendy S. The Companion to "The Mystery of Edwin Drood." London: Allen & Unwin, 1986.

Jacoby, H. J. Analysis of Handwriting. London: Allen & Unwin, 1929.

Jacoby, Mario. The Longing for Paradise: Psychological Perspectives on an Archetype. Boston: Sigo Press, 1985.

Jacolliot, Louis. Occult Science in India and Among the Ancients. London: William Rider, 1919.

Jaffé, Aniela. Apparitions and Precognition: A Study From the Point of View of C. G. Jung's Analytical Psychology. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1963. Reprint, New York: Harper & Row, 1971.

———. From the Life and Work of C. G. Jung. New York: Harper & Row, 1971.

———. The Myth of Meaning. New York: Putnam, 1971.

———. "The Psychic World of C. G. Jung." Tomorrow (spring 1961).

Jahagirdar, Keshav Tatacharya, and Edwin C. May. "From Where Does the Kum-Kum Come? A Materialization Attempt." In Research in Parapsychology 1975, edited by J. D. Morris, W. G. Roll, and R. L. Morris. New York: Parapsychological Association, 1976.

Jahn, R. G. "The Persistent Paradox of Psychic Phenomena: An Engineering Perspective," Proceedings of the IEEE. 70 (1982):136–170.

Jahn, R. G. and Dunne, B. J. "On the Quantum Mechanics of Consciousness, With Application to Anomalous Phenomena," Foundations of Physics. 16, (1986): 721–772.

Jahoda, G. The Psychology of Superstition. London, 1969. Reprint, Baltimore, Md.: Penguin, 1971. Reprint, New York: J. Aronson, 1974.

Jahoda, Gustav. White Man: A Study of the Attitudes of Africans to Europeans Before Independence. London; New York: Oxford University Press, 1961.

Jal, A. Scènes de la vie maritime. Paris, 1830.

James, I. Daemonologie. Edinburgh, 1597. Reprint, London, 1603. Reprint, London: John Lane/New York: E. P. Dutton, 1924. New York: De Capo Press, 1969. Macdougall, Norman. James IV. Edinburgh: John Donald Publishers, 1989.

James, Paul. California Superquake, 1975–77: Scientists, Cayce, Psychics Speak. New York: Exposition Press, 1974.

James, R. L. L. The Church and Bodily Healing. Essex, England: C. W. Daniel, 1929.

James, William. Essays in Psychical Research. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1986.

———. Letters of William James and Theodore Flournoy. Edited by R. C. Le Clair. Madison, Wisc.: University of Wisconsin Press, 1966.

———. "Report on Mrs. Piper's Hodgson Control." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 23 (1909).

———. The Varieties of Religious Experience. London: Longmans Green, 1902. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1963.

———. The Will to Believe and Human Immortality. New York: Dover Publications, n.d.

———. William James on Psychical Research. Edited by Gardner Murphy and Robert O. Ballou. New York: Viking Press, 1960.

Janet, Pierre. "La psychologie de la croyance et le mysticisme" (The Psychology of Belief and Mysticism), Bulletin de Psychologie 47, no. 414 (January-February 1993–94): 143–155.

Jaquin, Noel. The Hand and Disease. N.p., 1926.

———. The Hand of Man: A Practical Treatise of the Science of Hand Reading. London: Faber & Faber, 1933.

———. Hand-reading Made Easy. N.p., 1928.

———. The Human Hand. London: Rockliff, 1956.

———. It's in Your Hands: The Secrets of the Human Hand. New York: R. M. McBride & Co., 1941.

———. Man's Revealing Hand. London: Routledge, 1934.

———. Scientific Palmistry. London: C. Palmer, 1925.

———. The Signature of Time. London: Faber & Faber Ltd., 1940.

———. The Theory of Metaphysical Influence: A Study of Human Attunements, Perception, Intelligence and Motivation. N.p., 1958.

Jarman, Archie. "High Jinks on a Low Level." Tomorrow 2, no. 2. Reprinted in Spiritualism: A Critical Survey, by Simeon Edmunds. London: Aquarian Press, 1966.

———. "Physical Phenomena: Fraud or Frontier?" Tomorrow (autumn 1960).

———. "Unsolved Animal Mysteries." Tomorrow (spring 1960).

Jarricot, Jean. Pendule et Médecine (Pendulum and Medicine). Paris: G. Doin, 1949.

———. Radiesthesie (Radiesthesia). N.p., 1958.

Jast, L. Stanley. Reincarnation and Karma. Secaucus, N.J.: Castle Books, 1955.

Jastrow, Joseph. Error and Eccentricity in Human Belief. New York: Dover Publications, 1962.

———. Fact and Fable in Psychology. Boston; New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1900.

———. Freud, His Dream and Sex Theories. Cleveland, Ohio; New York: The World Publishing Co., 1943.

———. The House That Freud Built. New York: Greenberg, 1932.

———. The Psychology of Conviction. Boston; New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1918.

———. Time Relations of Mental Phenomena. N.p., 1890.

———. Wish and Wisdom. New York; London: D. Appleton-Century Co. Inc., 1935.

Jastrow, Joseph., ed. The Story of Error. N.p., 1936.

Jastrow, Morris. Aspects of Religious Belief and Practice in Babylonia & Assyria. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1911.

Jayakar, Pupul. Krishnamurti: A Biography. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1986.

Jayne, Charles. A New Dimension in Astrology. New York: Astrological Bureau, 1975.

———. The Technique of Rectification. New York: Astrological Bureau, 1972.

———. The Unknown Planets. New York: Astrological Bureau, 1974.

Jefferson, William. The Story of Maharishi. New York: Pocket Books, 1976.

Jenkins, Elizabeth. The Shadow and the Light: A Defence of Daniel Dunglas Home, the Medium. London: Hamish Hamilton, 1982.

Jennings, Hargrave. The Rosicrucians: Their Rites and Mysteries. 3rd ed. 2 vols. London: J. Nimmo, 1887.

Jensen, Bernard. Tony: The Miraculous Spiritual Healer at Work. Escondido, Calif.: The Author, [1966].

Jensen, K. Frank. "A Decade with Tarot!" Tarot Network News 12 (spring 1994): 24–32.

Jephson, Ina. "A Behaviourist Experiment in Clairvoyance." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 128, no. 41 (January 1933).

———. "Evidence for Clairvoyance in Card-Guessing: A Report on Some Recent Experiments." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (December 1928): 38: 223–271, and 39: 375–414.

Jephson, Ina, S. G. Soal, and Theodore Besterman. "Report on a Series of Experiments in Clairvoyance." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 118, no. 39 (April 1931).

Jerome, Joseph. Montague Summers: A Memoir. London: Cecil and Amerila Woolf, 1965.

Jessen-Schardebøl, E. J. Afhandling om de Norske Finners og Lappers Hedenske Religion. N.p., 1765.

Jinarajadasa, C. The Early Teachings of the Masters, 1881–1883. Chicago: Theosophical Press, 1925. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1996.

Jinarajadasa, C., ed. The K. H. Letters to C. W. Leadbeater. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1941.

———. Letters from the Masters of Wisdom. 2 vols. Adyar, Madras India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1919.

———. The Story of the Mahatma Letters. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1946.

Joan and Darby. Our Unseen Guest. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1920.

John of Ruysbroeck. Adornment of the Spiritual Marriage. Translated by P. Synschenk. London, 1916.

Johns, June. King of the Witches: The World of Alex Sanders. London, 1969. Reprint, London: Pan, 1971.

Johnson, Alice. "Mrs. Henry Sidgwick's Work in Psychical Research." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1936–37).

———. "The Education of the Sitter." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1908–09).

———. "On the Automatic Writing of Mrs. Holland." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 21 (1908).

———. "Report of Some Recent Sittings for Physical Phenomena in America." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1908–09).

———. "Second Report on Mrs. Holland's Script." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 24 (1910).

———. "Supplementary Notes on Mrs. Holland's Scripts." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 22 (1909).

———. "Third Report on Mrs. Holland's Scripts." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 25 (1911).

Johnson, Fred H. The Anatomy of Hallucinations. Chicago: Nelson Hall, 1978.

Johnson, K. Paul. The Masters Revealed: Madam Blavatsky and the Myth of the Great White Lodge. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1994.

Johnson, Kendall. The Living Aura: Radiation Field Photography and the Kirlian Effect. New York: Hawthorn Books, 1976.

Johnson, Kenneth. Slavic Sorcery. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1999.

Johnson, Paul. In Search of the Masters: Behind the Occult Myth. South Boston: The Author, 1990.

Johnson, Raynor C. The Imprisoned Splendour. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1953.

———. Nurslings of Immortality. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1957.

———. Psychical Research. New York: Philosophical Library, 1955.

———. The Spiritual Path. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1971.

———. Watcher on the Hills. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1959.

Johnston, Francis M. The Wonder of Guadalupe. Rockford, Ill.: TAN, 1981.

Joire, Paul. Précis historique et pratique de Neuro-Hypnologie. Paris, 1892.

———. Psychical and Supernormal Phenomena. London: William Rider & Son/New York: F. A. Stokes, 1916.

———. Traité de Graphologie scientifique. N.p., 1906.

———. Traité de l'Hypnotisme expérimental et thérapeutique. N.p., 1908.

Jolly, W. P. Sir Oliver Lodge. New Jersey: Fairleigh Dickinson University Press, 1975.

Jones, David. Visions of Time. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House (Quest), 1979.

Jones, E. Michael. Medjugorje: The Untold Story. South Bend, Ind.: Fidelity Press, 1988.

Jones, Edmund. A Relation of Ghosts and Apparitions Which Commonly Appear in the Principality of Wales. Bristol, England: 1767.

Jones, Ernest. On the Nightmare. New York: Liveright Publishing, 1951.

Jones, Franklin. The Method of the Siddhas. Los Angeles: Dawn Horse Press, 1973.

Jones, Franklin [Heart Master Da Love Ananda]. Dawn Horse Testament. San Rafael, Calif.: Dawn Horse Press, 1985.

———. The Heart's Shout. Clearlake, Calif.: Dawn Horse Press, 1993.

———. The Knee of Listening. Los Angeles: Dawn Horse Press, 1972.

Jones, Franklin [Heart Master Da Love Ananda]. [Da Avabhasa]. Free Daism: The Eternal, Ancient, and New Religion of God-Realization. Clearlake, Calif.: Dawn Horse Press, 1992.

Jones, Kelvin I. Conan Doyle and the Spirits: The Spiritualist Career of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1989.

Jones, Marc Edmund. Essentials of Astrological Analysis. Stanwood, Wash.: Sabian Publishing Society, 1970.

———. How to Live With the Stars. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1976.

———. Key Truths of Occult Philosophy. Los Angeles: J. F. Rowney Press, 1925.

———. Occult Philosophy: An Introduction. Stanwood, Wash.: Sabian Publishing Society, 1971.

———. The Ritual of Living. Los Angeles: J. F. Rowney Press, 1930. Rev. ed. The Sabian Manual: A Ritual for Living. New York: Sabian Publishing Society, 1957.

———. The Sabian Book. Stanwood, Wash.: Sabian Publishing Society, 1973.

———. Scope of Astrological Prediction. Stanwood, Wash.: Sabian Publishing Society, 1969.

Jones, Richard H. Mysticism Examined: Philosophical Inquiries into Mysticism. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1993.

Jones, Richard M. The New Psychology of Dreaming. New York: Grune & Stratton, 1970.

Jones, Rufus Matthew. Studies in Mystical Religion. N.p., 1909. Reprint, New York: Russell & Russell, 1970.

Jones, T. Gwynn. Welsh Folklore and Folk Customs. London: Methuen, 1930.

Jones, William. Credulities Past and Present. London: Chatto & Windus, 1880. Reprint, Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1967.

Jong, K. H. "The Trumpet Medium Mrs. Harris." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 16 (1914).

Jonte-Pace, Diane. "The Swami and the Rorschach: Spiritual Practice, Religious Experience, and Perception." The Innate Capacity: Mysticism, Psychology, and Philosophy. New York: Oxford University Press, 1998.

Jordan, Pacual. Verdrängung and Komplementarität (Repression and Complementarity). N.p., 1951.

———. "New Trends in Physics and Their Relation to Parapsychology." Parapsychology Foundation Newsletter (July–August 1955).

Jourdan, Jean-Pierre. "Near-Death and Transcendental Experiences: Neurophysiological Correlates of Mystical Traditions," Journal of Near-Death Studies 12, no. 3 (Spring 1994): 177–200.

Journal of the Alchemical Society 3 vols., London, 1913–15.

Journal of Ethnopharmacology: An Interdisciplinary Journal Devoted to Bioscientific Research on Indigenous Drugs. 1, (1947).

Joyner, Graham. The Hairy Man of Southeastern Australia. Canberra: National Library of Australia, 1977.

———. "Scientific Discovery and the Place of the Yahoo in Australian Zoological History." Cryptozoology 9 (1990): 41–51.

Judah, J. Stillson. The History and Philosophy of the Metaphysical Movement in America. Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1967.

Judge, William Q. Echoes of the Orient. 2 vols. San Diego, Calif.: Point Loma Publications, 1975, 1980.

———. The Ocean of Theosophy. Reprint, Point Loma, Calif.: Theosophical University Press, 1974.

Judith, Anodea. Neo-Paganism. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1999.

———. Wheels of Life: A User's Guide to the Chakra System. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1987.

Judy, Dwight H. "Transpersonal Psychology: Roots in Christian Mysticism." In Textbook of Transpersonal Psychiatry and Psychology. New York: Basicbooks, Inc., 1996.

Jules-Bois, A. H. "Charles Richet: Father of Metaphysics." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 30 (1936).

Jung, Carl G. Alchemical Studies. Vol. 13. Collected Works. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1967.

———. Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. Vol. 9. Collected Works. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1959.

———. Flying Saucers: A Modern Myth of Things Seen in the Skies. New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1959.

———. Jung on Synchronicity & the Paranormal. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1875. Reprint, 1961, 1998.

———. Psychology and Alchemy. Volume 12 of the Collected Works. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1968.

———. Sychronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle. London: Ark Paperbacks, 1985.

Jung, Carl G., and W. Pauli. The Interpretation of Nature and the Psyche. London, 1955.

Jung, Johann Heinrich. Heinrich Stilling. Translated by S. Jackson. 1835–36. 2nd ed. 1843. Abridged ed., edited by R. O. Moon. N.p., 1886.

Jung on Synchronicity & the Paranormal. New York: Routledge, 1998.

Jürgenson, Friedrich. Rösterna från Rymden (Voices From Space). Sweden, 1964. German edition as Sprechfunk mit Verstorbenen. Freiburg i. Br.: Herman Bauer, 1967.

Juste, Michael [Michael Houghton]. Escape, and Other Verse. Leeds, 1924.

———. Many Brightnesses, and Other Verse. London, 1954.

———. Shoot—and Be Damned. London, 1935.

———. The White Brother. London, 1927.

Jyotir Maya Nanda, Swami. The Way to Liberation. Miami, Fla.: Swami Lalitananda, 1976.

———. Waking, Dream, and Sleep. Miami, Fla.: Yoga Research Foundation, 1974.

———. Yoga Can Change Your Life. Miami, Fla.: International Yoga Society, 1975.

———. Yoga in Life. Miami, Fla.: The Author, 1973.

———. Yoga Vasistha. Miami, Fla.: Yoga Research Society, 1977.

The Kabbala Unveiled. New York: Krishna Press, 1973.

Kabir. One Hundred Poems of Kabir. Translated by Rabinadrath Tagore. London, 1915.

Kaempffert, Waldemar B. Explorations in Science. N.p., 1953.

———. Invention and Society. Chicago: American Library Association, 1930.

———. Science Today and Tomorrow. New York: Viking Press, 1945.

Kagan, Paul. New World Utopias. Baltimore, Md.: Penguin Books, 1975.

Kahn, S. David. "Ave Atque Vale: Gardner Murphy." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 74 (1980).

———. "The Enigma of Psi: A Challenge for Scientific Method." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (July 1962).

———. "Extrasensory Perception and Friendly Interpersonal Relations." In Explorations in Altruistic Love and Behavior, edited by Pitirim A. Sorokin. N.p., 1950.

———. "A Mechanical Scoring Technique for Testing GESP [General Extrasensory Perception]." Journal of Parapsychology 13, no. 3 (1949).

———. "Studies in Extrasensory Perception: Experiments Utilizing an Electronic Scoring Device."Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 25 (October 1952).

Kaigh, Frederick. Witchcraft and Magic of Africa. London: Richard Lesley, 1947.

Kakar, Sudhir. "Ramakrishna and the Mystical Experience," Annual of Psychoanalysis 20 (1992): 215–234.

———. Shamans, Mystics, and Doctors: A Psychological Inquiry into India and Its Healing Traditions. New York: Knopf, 1982.

Kalé, Shrikrishna Vasudeo. "Parapsychology and Science." Indian Journal of Parapsychology 1, no. 2 (1959).

———. "Parapsychology and Science." Indian Journal of Parapsychology 2, no. 1 (1961).

Kalisch, Isidor, trans. Sepher Yezirah. New York, 1877. Reprint, San Jose, Calif.: Rosicrucian Press, 1950. Reprint, N. Hollywood, Calif.: Symbols and Signs, n.d.

Kalweit, Holger. Dreamtime & Inner Space: The World of the Shaman. (Translated from German). Boston: Shambhala, 1988.

———. Shamans, Healers, and Medicine Men. (Translated from German). Boston: Shambhala, 1992.

Kamiya, Joe. "Conscious Control of Brain Waves." Psychology Today 1, no. 11 (April 1968).

Kane, Beverley, Jean Millay, and Dean Harold Brown, eds. Silver Threads: 25 Years of Parapsychology Research. Westport, Conn.: Praeger Publishers/Greenwood Publishing Group, Inc., 1993.

Kane, Elisha. Arctic Explorations in Search of Sir John Franklin. London: T. Nelson, 1885.

Kane, Margaret Fox. The Love-Life of Dr. Kane. New York, 1865.

Kanellakos, Demetri P., and Jerome S. Lukas. Psychobiology of Transcendental Meditation: A Literature Review. W. A. Benjamin, 1974.

Kant, Immanuel. Träume eines Geistersehers erläutert durch die Träume der Metaphysik. 1766. Translated as Dreams of a Spirit-Seer. N.p., 1900.

Kao, James. Chinese Divination. Smithtown, N.Y.: Exposition Press, 1980.

Kaplan, Aryeh. Chassidic Masters: History, Biography, and Thought. New York: Maznaim Publishing, 1984.

Kaplan, Fred. Dickens and Mesmerism: The Hidden Springs of Fiction. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1975.

Kaplan, R. W. "The Sacred Mushroom in Scandinavia," Man 10, no. 1 (1975): 72–79.

Kappers, Jan. "ESP Status in 1966." International Journal of Neuropsychiatry (September–October 1966).

———. "The Investigation of Spontaneous Cases." Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie (1954).

———. "Is It Possible to Induce ESP with Psilocybine? An Exploratory Investigation." International Journal of Neuropsychiatry 2, no. 5 (1966).

Karadja, Mary. Esoteric Meaning of the Seven Sacraments. N.p., 1910.

———. Etincelles (French epigrams). N.p., 1890.

———. King Solomon: A Mystic Drama. N.p., 1912.

———. Towards the Light. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1909.

Karagulla, Shafica. Breakthrough to Creativity: Your Higher Sense Perception. Santa Monica, Calif.: DeVorss, 1967.

Karcher, Janet. The Way to Cassadaga: A Look at Spiritualism, Its Roots, and Beliefs, and Cassadaga, Florida. Daltona, Fla: J. Hutchinson Productions, 1980.

Karcher, Stephen. The Encyclopedia of Divination. UK: Element Books, Inc., 1997.

Kardec, Allan. Collection of Selected Prayers. New York: Stadium, 1975.

———. Experimental Spiritism: The Mediums' Book. London, 1876.

———. Heaven and Hell. Translated by Anna Blackwell. 1878.

———. L'Evangile selon le Spiritisme. 1864. Translated as The Gospel According to Spiritism. London: Headquarters Publishing, 1887.

———. Le Ciel et L'Enfer ou la justice divine selon le Spiritisme. 1865. Translated as Heaven and Hell, or The Divine Justice Vindicated in the Plurality of Existences. N.p., 1878.

———. Le Livre des Esprits. Translated as The Spirits' Book by Anna Blackwell. 1875. Reprint, São Paulo: Lake-Livraria Allan Kardec Editora, 1972.

———. Le Livre des Mediums. Translated as The Book of Mediums by Emma E. Wood. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1970.

———. The Mediums' Book. Translated by Anna Blackwell. London, 1876. Reprint. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1970.

———. Spiritualist Philosophy; The Spirits' Book. London, 1893. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1976.

Kardec, Allan [H. L. D. Rivail]. The Book of Spirits. N.p., 1893.

Karunaratne, K. P. Olcott Commemoration Volume. Ceylon: Olcott Commemoration Society, 1967.

———. Olcott's Contribution to the Buddhist Renaissance. Colombo, Sri Lanka: Publication Division, Ministry of Cultural Affairs, 1980.

Kast, Verena. Joy, Inspiration, and Hope. College Station, Tex.: Texas A & M University Press, 1991.

Kastenbaum, Robert, ed. Between Life and Death. New York: Springer Publishing, 1979.

Katchen, Martin H. and David K. Sakheim. Out of Darkness: Exploring Satanism and Ritual Abuse. New York: Lexington Books/ Macmillan, Inc., 1992.

Katz, Richard. "The Painful Ecstasy of Healing," Psychology Today (December 1976): 81–86.

Katz, Richard, Megan Biesele, and Verna St. Denis. Healing Makes Our Hearts Happy: Spirituality and Cultural Transformation among the Kalahari Jul'hoansi. Rochester, Vt.: Inner Traditions, 1998.

Kauffmann, D. F. Northern Mythology. London: Dent, 1903.

Kautz, William H. "The Rosemary Case of Alleged Egyptian Xenoglossy." Theta 10, 2 (summer 1982).

Kautz, William H., and Melanie Branon. Channeling: The Intuitive Connection. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1987.

Kay, Frank E. Kabir and His Followers. London, 1931.

Keating, Laurence J. The Great Mary Celeste Hoax: A Famous Sea Mystery Exposed. London: Heath-Cranton, 1929.

Keel, John A. Disneyland of the Gods. New York: Amok Press, 1988.

———. The Eighth Tower. New York: New American Library/ New York: Saturday Review Press/E. P. Dutton, 1975.

———. Jadoo. London, 1958.

———. The Mothman Prophecies: An Investigation Into the Mysterious American Visits of the Infamous Feathery Garuda. New York: Saturday Review Press/Dutton, 1975. Reprint, New York: New American Library, 1976. Reprinted as Visitors From Space: The Astonishing True Story of the Mothman Prophecies. St. Albans, England: Panther, 1976.

———. Our Haunted Planet. Greenwich, Conn.: Fawcett Gold Medal, 1977.

———. Strange Creatures from Time and Space. Greenwich, Conn.: Fawcett, 1970. Reprint: London: Neville Spearman, 1975.

———. UFOs: Operation Trojan Horse. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1970.

———. Why UFOs? New York: Manor Books, 1978.

Keene, M. Lamar. The Psychic Mafia. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1976. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1997.

Keil, Jürgen. Gaither Pratt: A Life for Parapsychology. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1987.

Keil, Jürgen, and J. Gaither Pratt. "First Hand Observations of Nina S. Kulagina Suggestive of PK on Static Objects." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 67 (1973).

Keil, Jürgen, Montague Ullman, and J. Gaither Pratt. "Directly Observable Voluntary PK Effects." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 56 (1976).

Keller, Franz. Amazon and Madeira Rivers. London, 1874.

Kellock, Harold. Houdini: His Life-Story. New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1928.

Kelly, Aidan A. Crafting the Art of Magic: A History of Modern Witchcraft, 1939–1964. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1991.

Kelly, Henry Ansgar. The Devil, Demonology, and Witchcraft. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1974.

Kelsey, Denys, and Joan Grant. Many Lifetimes. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1967.

Kelsey, Morton T. God, Dreams, and Revelation: A Christian Interpretation of Dreams. Minneapolis, Minn.: Augsburg Publishing House, 1974.

———. Tongue Speaking: An Experiment in Spiritual Experience. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1968. Reprint, London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1973.

Kelzer, Kenneth. The Sun and the Shadow: My Experiment with Lucid Dreaming. Virginia Beach, Va.: A.R.E. Press, 1987.

Kenawell, William W. The Quest at Glastonbury: A Biographical Study of Frederick Bligh Bond. New York: Helix Press/Garrett Publications, 1965.

Kendall, Laurel. Shamans, Housewives, and Other Restless Spirits: Women in Korean Ritual Life. Honolulu, Hawaii: University of Hawaii Press, 1992.

Kendrick, Tertius T. C. The Kako-daemon or The Cavern of Anti-Paros. London, 1825.

Kenin-Lopsan, M. B.,ed. "Shamanic Songs and Myths of Tuva," In ISTOR Books, vol. 7 (joint publication with the International Society for Trans-Oceanic Research, Los Angeles). Budapest: Akadémiai Kiadó, 1997.

Kenmore, Dallas. The Nature of Genius. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1972.

Kennard, Nina H. Lafcadio Hearn, His Life and Work. New York: D. Appleton and Co., 1912.

Kennedy, Patrick. Legendary Fictions of the Irish Celt. 1866. Reprint, Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1968.

Kennett, Frances. History of Perfume. London: Harrap, 1975.

Kenton, Warren. Astrology: The Celestial Mirror. London: Thames & Hudson, 1974.

Kerins, Deborah, ed. The Spinner of Tales: A Collection of Stories as Told by Ramtha. Yelm, Wash.: New Horizon Publishing, 1991.

Kerner, Justinus. Die Seherin von Prevorst. 1829. Abridged and translated as The Seeress of Prevorst. London, 1845. Reprint, Stuttgart: J. F. Steinkopf, 1963.

———. Die Somnambülen Tische: Zur Geschichte und Erklärungen dieser Erscheinungen. Stuttgart, 1853.

Kerner, Justinus. The Seeress of Prevorst. London, 1845.

Kerr, Howard. Mediums and Spirit-Rappers and Roaring Radicals. Urbana, Ill.: University of Illinois Press, 1972.

Keyes, Ken. The Hundreth Monkey. Coos Bay, Ore.: Vision Books, 1982.

Keyhoe, Donald E. Aliens From Space: The Real Story of Unidentified Flying Objects. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1973.

Keyhoe, Donald E. The Flying Saucer Conspiracy. New York: Henry Holt, 1955.

———. The Flying Saucers Are Real. New York: Fawcett Publications, 1950.

———. Flying Saucers from Outer Space. New York: Henry Holt, 1953.

———. Flying Saucers: Top Secret. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1960.

Keynes, Geoffrey, ed. Blake: Complete Writings. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1974.

Khérumian, Raphaël. "Essai d'interprétation des expériences de Soal et Goldney" (Interpretative Essay on the Experiments of Soal and Goldney). Revue Métapsychique 8 (1949).

———. "Introduction à l'étude de la connaissance parapsychologique" (Introduction to the Study of Parapsychology Knowledge). Revue Métapsychique 1–3 (1948).

———. "Les propriétés groupales des organismes et la parapsychologie" (The Group Properties of Organisms and Parapsychology). Revue Métapsychique 10 (1950).

———. "Procédés mécaniques pour faciliter les transmissions télépathiques" (Mechanical Procedures to Facilitate Telepathic Messages). Revue Métapsychique 26 (1953).

———. "A propos de l'hypothèse cryptesthétique" (Regarding the Cryptesthetic Hypothesis). Revue Métapsychique 1, no. 2 (1955).

———. "Réflexions sur l'état actuel et les perspectives de la parapsychologie" (Remarks on the Present Status and the Future of Parapsychology). Revue Métapsychique 2, nos. 8, 9 (1958–59).

Khalsa, Parmatma Singh, ed. Spiritual Community Guide No. 4, California: Spiritual Community Publications, 1979.

Khan, Pir V. The Message in Our Time: The Life and Teachings of the Sufi Master, Hazrat Inayat Khan. New York: Harper & Row, 1979.

Khilji, Anjum. "Behind the Veil: Muslim Women's Contributions to Parapsychology." In Women and Parapsychology. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, Inc., 1994.

Kieckhefer, Richard. European Witch Trials: Their Foundations in Popular and Learned Culture 1300–1500. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1976.

Kieffer, Gene. "An Appeal for Common Sense." SFF Newsletter [Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship] (October 1988).

———. "It's Not the Soma that the Brahmans Know!" SFF Newsletter [Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship] (September 1988).

———. "ReVision Revisits the Sacred Mushroom." SFF Newsletter [Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship] (August 1988).

Kieffer, Gene, ed. Kundalini for the New Age: Selected Writings of Gopi Krishna. New York: Bantam Books, 1988.

Kiev, Ari, ed. Magic, Faith, and Healing: Studies in Primitive Psychiatry Today. New York: The Free Press, [1964] 1969.

Kildahl, John P. The Psychology of Speaking in Tongues. New York: Harper & Row, 1972.

Kilner, Walter J. The Human Atmosphere. London, 1911. Reprinted as The Human Aura. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1965.

———. The Human Aura. 1911. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1965.

Kilpatrick, Jack F., and Anna G. Kilpatrick. "A Notebook of a Cherokee Shaman." Smithsonian Contributions to Anthropology 2, no. 6 (1970): 83–125.

Kindermann, Henny. Lola; or, The Thought and Speech of Animals. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1923.

Kindersley, Nathaniel E. Specimens of Hindoo Literature. N.p., 1794.

King, F. Astral Projection Magic & Alchemy. New York: Samuel Weiser Inc., 1981.

King, Francis. Astral Projection, Ritual Magic & Alchemy: Being Hitherto Unpublished Gold Dawn Material. London: Neville Spearman, 1971.

———. The Holy Books of Thelema. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1988.

———. Magic: The Western Tradition. London: Thames & Hudson, 1975.

———. The Magical World of Aleister Crowley. New York: Coward, McCann & Geoghegan, 1978.

———. O.T.O. System Outline. San Francisco, Calif.: Stellar Vision, 1981.

———. The Rites of Modern Occult Magic. New York: Macmillan, 1970.

———. Ritual Magic in England: 1887 to the Present Day. London: Neville Spearman, 1970. Reprinted as The Rites of Modern Occult Magic. New York: Macmillan, 1971.

———. Satan and Swastika: The Occult and the Nazi Party. London: Mayflower, 1976.

———. Sexuality, Magic & Perversion. London: Neville Spearman, 1971. Reprint, New York: Citadel Press, 1972.

———. Wisdom From Afar. London: Aldus Books, 1975.

King, Francis, ed. Sexuality, Magic, and Perversion. Secaucus, N.J.: Citadel Press, 1972.

King, Francis, ed. The Secret Rituals of the O.T.O. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1973.

King, Francis, and Isabel Sutherland. The Rebirth of Magic. London: Corgi, 1982.

King, Francis, and Stephen Skinner. Techniques of High Magic. New York: Destiny Books, 1980.

King, George. The Practices of Aetherius. Hollywood, Calif.: Aetherius Society, 1964.

———. The Nine Freedoms. Los Angeles: Aetherius Society, 1963.

———. The Twelve Blessings. London: Aetherius Press, 1958.

———. You Are Responsible. London: Aetherius Press, 1961.

King, Godfre Ray [Guy W. Ballard]. The "I AM" Discourses. Chicago: St. Germain Press, 1935.

———. The Magic Presence. Chicago: St. Germain Press, 1935.

———. Unveiled Mysteries. Chicago: Saint Germain Press, 1982.

King, J. H. The Supernatural. 2 vols. London, 1892.

King, James. William Blake: His Life. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1991.

King, Noel Q. African Cosmos: An Introduction to Religion in Africa. Belmont, Calif.: Wadsworth, 1986.

King, Serge. Kahuna Healing. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1983.

———. Mastering Your Hidden Self. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1983.

———. Urban Shaman. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1990.

Kingsford, Anna B. and Edward Maitland. Clothed with the Sun (1889). London: John M. Watkins, 1889. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1999.

———. The Perfect Way; or, The Finding of Christ. London, 1882. Rev. ed. London, 1887. Reprint, Mokelumne Hill, Calif.: Health Research, 1972. Reprint, Boston: Esoteric Book Co., 1988.

———. The Story of Anna Kingsford and Edward Maitland and of the New Gospel of Interpretation. Birmingham, England: Ruskin Press, 1905.

———. The Virgin of the World. 1885. Reprint, Minneapolis, Minn.: Wizard's Bookshelf, 1977.

Kingsland, William. The Real H. P. Blavatsky. London: John M. Watkins/ Theosophical Publishing House, 1928.

Kingsley, Charles. The Heroes. 1856. Reprint, New York: Dutton, 1963.

Kirban, Salem. 666. Huntingdon Valley, Pa.: Salem Kirban, 1970.

Kirk, Ella Boyce. My Pilgrimage to Coué. New York: American Library Service, 1922.

Kirk, Robert. The Secret Commonwealth of Elves, Fauns, and Fairies. 1691. Reprint, Edinburgh, 1815. Reprint, London: D. Nutt, 1893. Reprint, Stirling, Scotland: Eaneas Mackay, 1933.

Kister, D. A. "Korean Shamanistic Ritual," Bibliotheca Shamanistica, vol. 5. Budapest: Akadémiai Kiadó, 1998.

Kittredge, George Lyman. Witchcraft in Old and New England. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1929. Reprint, New York: Atheneum, 1972.

Klemp, Harold. The Book of ECK Wisdom. Illuminated Way Publishing, Inc., 1986. Reprint, Minneapolis, Minn.: Ecankar, 1987.

———. Soul Travelers of the Far Country. Minneapolis, Minn.: ECKANKAR, 1987.

Kleps, Art. Millbrook: The True Story of the Early Years of the Psychedelic Revolution. Oakland, Calif.: Bench Press, 1977.

Klibanv. A. I. History of Religious Sectarianism in Russia (1860s–1917). Oxford: Pergamon Press, 1982.

Klimo, Jon. Channeling: Investigations on Receiving Information from Paranormal Sources. Los Angeles: Jeremy P. Tarcher, 1967.

Klinckowstroem, Graf Carl von. Bibliographie der Wünschelrute (Bibliography of the Divining Rod). N.p., 1911.

———. Die Zauberkunst (The Art of Magic). N.p., 1954.

———. Virgula divina. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Wünschelrute. Berlin, 1910.

———. Yogi-Künste (Yogic Arts). N.p., 1922.

Klinckowstroem, Graf Carl von, and Rudolph von Maltzahn. Handbuch der Wünschelrute (Handbook of the Divining Rod). München; Berlin: R. Oldenbourg, 1931.

Klinckowstroem, Graf Carl von, W. von Gulat-Wellenburg, and Hans Rosenbusch. Der Physikalische Mediumismus (Physical Mediumship). N.p., 1925.

Klineman, George, and Sherman Butler. The Cult That Died. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1980.

Klonsky, Milton. William Blake: The Seer and His Visions. New York: Crown Publishers, 1977.

Kloppenburg, Boaventura. A Maçonario no Brasil (Masonry in Brazil). 4th ed. N.p., 1961.

———. Nossas Superstiçoes (Our Superstitions). N.p., 1959.

———. O Espiritismo no Brasil (Spiritism in Brazil). Petropolis: Editoria Vozes, 1964.

———. O Reencarnacionismo no Brasil (Reincarnationism in Brazil). Petropolis: Editoria Vozes, 1961.

———. Pastoral Practice and the Paranormal. Translated by Paul Burns. Chicago: Franciscan Herald Press, 1979.

Kneale, Martha Hurst. "Is Psychical Research Relevant to Philosophy?" Proceedings, Aristotelian Society. Supplementary volume 24 (1950).

———. "Time and Psychical Research." Proceedings of Four Conferences of Parapsychological Studies (1957).

Knibb, Michael A. The Qumran Community. Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge University Press, 1987.

Knight, Alfred E. Amentet: An Account of the Gods, Amulets and Scarabs of the Ancient Egyptians. London: Longmans, Green, 1915.

Knight, Damon. Charles Fort, Prophet of the Unexplained. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1970.

Knight, David C., ed. The ESP Reader. New York: Grosset & Dunlap, 1969.

Knight, G. Norman, and F. Smyth. The Pocket History of Freemasonry. London: Fred K. Muller, 1977.

Knight, Gareth. The Practice of Ritual Magic. Toddington, England: Helios Book Service, 1969. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1976.

Knight, JZ. A State of Mind: My Story. New York: Warner Books, 1987.

Knight, Richard Payne. A Discourse on the Worship of Priapus. 1786. Reprint, Secaucus, N.J.: University Books, 1974.

Knight, Stephen. The Brotherhood: The Secret World of the Freemasons. New York: Stein & Day, 1984.

Knopf, A. Adolphus. A Reminiscence of and a Promise to Professor James Hervey Hyslop. New York: The Author, 1921.

Knott, Kim. My Sweet Lord. Wellingsborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1986.

Knowles, Elsie A. G. "Report on an Experiment Concerning the Influence of Mind Over Matter." Journal of Parapsychology 13, no. 3 (September 1949).

———. "Report on the Susceptibility of Manually Operated Random Selector to Psi Dexterity." Journal of Parapsychology 16, no. 1 (March 1952).

Knowles, Frederick W. "ESP Today." Corrective Psychiatry and Journal of Special Therapy 12, no. 2 (March 1966).

———. "Psychic Healing in Organic Disease." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 50, no. 3 (July 1956).

———. "Rat Experiments and Mesmerism." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 53, no. 2 (April 1959).

———. "Some Investigations into Psychic Healing." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 48, no. 1 (January 1954).

Knudtson, Peter H. "Flora, Shaman of the Wintu," Natural History 84 (May 1975): 6–17.

Koch, Walter A. Astrologische Farbenlehre (Astrological Science of Colors). N.p., 1930.

———. Deine Farbe—Dein Charakter (Your Color—Your Character). N.p., 1953.

———. Die Seele der Edelsteine (The Psyche of Precious Stones). N.p., 1934.

———. Dr. Korsch und Die Astrologie (Dr. Korsch and Astrology). N.p., 1956.

———. Innenmensch und Außenmensch (Man: Introversion and Extraversion). N.p., 1956.

———. Prophetie und Astrologische Prognose (Prophecy and Astrological Prediction). N.p., 1954.

———. Psychologische Farbenlehre (Psychological Science of Colors). C. Marhold, 1931.

———. Regiomontanus und das Häusersystem des Geburtosortes (Regiomontanus and the System of Houses of Birthplaces). N.p., 1960.

Koestler, Arthur. The Ghost in the Machine. New York: Macmillan, 1968.

———. The Lotus and the Robot. London: Hutchinson, 1960.

———. The Roots of Coincidence. London: Hutchinson, 1972.

———. The Yogi and the Commissar. New York: Macmillan, 1946.

Kohler, Kaufmann. Heaven and Hell in Comparative Literature. Folcroft, Pa., 1923.

Kolakowski, Leszek. Bergson. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1989.

Konraad, Sandor. Numerology: Key to the Tarot. Rockport, Mass.: Para Research, 1983.

Kooy, J. M. J. "Introspectief Onderzoek naar Het Dunne-Effect" (Introspective Investigation of the Dunne-Effect). Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie 6, no. 3 (March 1934).

———. "Paragnosie en Kansrekening" (Extrasensory Perception and the Calculus of Probability). Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie 7, no. 3 (March 1935).

———. "Reply to Dr. Chari." Journal of Parapsychology 22, no. 1 (March 1958).

———. "Space, Time and Consciousness." Journal of Parapsychology 21, no. 4 (December 1957).

———. "Tijd, Ruimte en Paragnosie" (Time, Space and Extrasensory Perception). Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie 15, nos. 3–4, (May–July 1947).

Kors, Alan C. Witchcraft in Europe 1100–1700: A Documentary History. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1972.

Koski, Marie. Personal Talks with Jesus. Washington, D.C.: ESPress, 1979.

Kossy, Donna. Kooks: A Guide to the Outer Limits of Human Belief. Portland, Ore.: Feral House, 1994.

Kotie, Naum. Die Emanation der psychophysichen Energie. Wiesbaden, 1908.

Kovech, F. J., and R. W. Shahan, eds. Albert the Great: Commemorative Essays. Norman, Okla.: University of Oklahoma Press, 1980.

Kozminsky, Isidore. Numbers, Their Meaning and Magic. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1927.

Krader, Lawrence. "Shamanism: Theory and History in Buryat Society." Vilmos Diószegi and Mihály Hoppál, eds., In Shamanism in Siberia. Bibliotheca Uralica 1. Budapest: Akadémiai Kiadó, 1978: 21-45.

Kraft, Robert A., and George W. E. Nickelsburg. Early Judaism and Its Modern Interpreters. Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1986.

Kral, Josef. Das Heisse Eisen: Das Außersinnliche als Wissenschaft und Glaube (The Hot Iron: The Paranormal as Science and Faith). Berlin: Verlag Harmonie, 1962.

———. Der Neue Gottesbeweis: Parapsychologie, Mystik, Unsterblichkeit (New Proof of God: Parapsychology, Mysticism, Immortality). N.p., 1956.

———. Die Irrelehre vom Zufall und Schicksal im Lichte der Wissenschaften und des Glaubens (The Heresy of Coincidence and Fate in the Light of Science and Faith). N.p., 1953.

Kraljevic, Svetozar. Apparitions of Our Lady of Medjugorje (1981–1983). Chicago: Franciscan Herald Press, 1984.

Krall, Karl. Denkende Tiere. Leipzig, 1912.

Kramer, Samuel N. From the Tablets of Sumer. Falcon's Wing, 1956.

———. Gilgamesh and the Huluppu-tree: A Reconstructed Sumerian Text. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1938.

Krammer, Heinrich, and James Sprenger. The Malleus Maleficarum (Witches Hammer). Translated by Montague Summers, 1928. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1971.

Kreskin [George J. Kresge, Jr.]. The Amazing World of Kreskin. New York: Random House, 1973.

Krieger, Delores. "Healing by the Laying-On of Hands as a Facilitator of Bioenergetic Change: The Response of In-Vivo Human Hemoglobin." Psychoenergetic Systems 1 (1976): 121.

———. "Therapeutic Touch: The Imprimatur of Nursing." American Journal of Nursing 75, no. 5 (May 1875): 784–87.

Krippner, Stanley. Dreamworking: How to Use Your Dreams for Creative Problem Solving. Buffalo, N.Y.: Bearly Ltd., 1988.

———. Human Possibilities: Mind Exploration in the USSR and Eastern Europe. Garden City, N.Y.: Anchor Press/Doubleday, 1980.

———. Psychoenergetic Systems: The Interaction of Consciousness, Energy, and Matter. New York: Gordon and Breach Science Publishers, 1979.

———. "The Shaman as Healer and Psychotherapist," Voices (Winter 1992): 12–23.

———. Song of the Siren: A Parapsychological Odyssey. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

———. "The Use of Dreams in Shamanic Traditions," Mihály Hoppál and Otto J. von Sadovszky eds., In Shamanism: Past and Present. 2 vols. ISTOR Books. Budapest: Ethnographic Institute, 198: 381-391.

Krippner, Stanley, and A. Villoldo. The Realms of Healing. Millbrae, Calif.: Celestial Arts, 1976.

Krippner, Stanley, and Daniel Rubin. Galaxies of Life: The Human Aura in Acupuncture and Kirlian Photography. Gordon & Breach, 1973. Reprinted as The Kirlian Aura: Photographing the Galaxies of Life. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday Anchor, 1974. Reprinted as Energies of Consciousness: Exploration in Acupuncture, Auras, and Kirlian Photography. New York: Interface, 1976.

Krippner, Stanley, and Patrick Welch. Spiritual Dimensions of Healing: From Native Shamanism to Contemporary Health Care. New York: Irvington Publishers, 1992.

Krippner, Stanley, and Sidney Cohen. LSD Into the Eighties. N.p., 1981.

Krippner, Stanley, and Susan Marie Powers, eds. Broken Images, Broken Selves: Dissociative Narratives in Clinical Practice. Washington D.C.: Brunner/Mazel, 1997.

Krishnamurti, Jiddu. The Awakening of Intelligence. New York: Harper & Row, 1973.

———. The First and Last Freedom. London: V. Gollancz, 1954.

———. Life Ahead. London: V. Gollancz, 1963.

———. The Only Revolution. London: V. Gollancz, 1970.

Krishnananda, Swami. Swami Sivananda and the Spiritual Renaissance. Sivanandanagar, India: Sivananda Literature Research Institute, 1959.

Kriyananda, Swami. The Book of Bhrigu. San Francisco: Hansa Publications, 1967.

Kroeber, Alfred L. "The Religion of the Indians of California," University of California Publications in American Archaeology and Ethnology (University of California Press) 1907.

Krohn, Sven I., and Ake Tollet. Jälleenlöydetty sielu: Kekusteluja parapsykologiasta (Soul Rediscovered: Dialogues Concerning Parapsychology). N.p., 1936.

Kselman, Thomas A. Miracles and Prophecies in Nineteenth-Century France. New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press, 1983.

Ksenofontov, G. V. Legends of the Siberian Shamans. Munich, 1955.

———. Legiendy i rasskazy o szamanach u Jakutov, Buriat i Tungusov (Legends and Tales of Shamans among the Yakuts, Buryats, and Tungus) Moscow: Izdatel'stwo Bezbozhnik, 1930.

Kübler-Ross, Elisabeth. AIDS: The Ultimate Challenge. New York: Macmillan, 1987.

———. Coping With Death and Dying. Edited by John T. Chirban. Lanham, Md.: University Press of America, 1985.

———. Death: The Final Stage of Growth. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1975.

———. Living with Death and Dying. New York: Macmillan, 1981.

———. On Death and Dying. New York: Macmillan Co., 1969.

———. Questions & Answers on Death & Dying. New York: Macmillan, 1974.

———. To Live Until We Say Good-Bye. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1978.

Kueshana, Eklal [Kieninger, Richard]. The Ultimate Frontier. Chicago: Stelle Group, 1963.

Kuhlig, Kathryn. Spiritualist Lyceum Manual. Milwaukee, Wisc.: National Spiritualist Association of Churches, 1962.

Kuhlman, Kathryn. I Believe in Miracles. New York: Prentice-Hall, 1962.

———. Nothing Is Impossible With God. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1974.

Kulagina, V. V. "Nina S. Kulagina." Journal of Paraphysics 5 (1971).

Kundalini Yoga/Sadhana Guidelines. Pomona, Calif.: KRI Publications, 1978.

Kurdsen, Stephen. Graphology: The New Science. Washington, D.C.: Acropolis Books, 1971.

Kurtz, Paul. The Transcendental Temptation: A Critique of Religion and the Paranormal. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1991.

Kurtz, Paul, ed. A Skeptic's Handbook of Parapsychology. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1985.

Kusche, Lawrence David. The Bermuda Triangle Mystery—Solved. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

———. The Disappearance of Flight 19. New York: Harper & Row, 1980.

Kusche, Lawrence David, and Deborah K. Blouin. Bermuda Triangle Bibliography. Tempe, Ariz.: Arizona State University Library, 1974.

Kutscher, M. L., et al., eds. A Comprehensive Bibliography of the Thanatology Literature. New York: Irvington Publications, 1975.

Kuvalayananda, Swami. Asanas. Lonavla (C.R.), India: Yoga-Mimamsa Office. Reprinted as Popular Yoga Asanas. Rutland, Vt.: C. E. Tuttle, 1972.

———. Popular Yoga Asanas. Rutland, Vt.: C. E. Tuttle, 1972.

———. Pranayama. Lonavla (C.R.), India: Yoga-Mimamsa Office. Reprint, Bombay: Popular Prakashan, 1966.

Kvanvig, Jonathan L. The Problem of Hell. New York: Oxford University Press, 1993.

Kydd, Ronald A. N. Charismatic Gifts in the Early Church. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1984.

———. Dogme de la haute magie. N.p., 1854.

———. Histoire de la magie. Translated as The History of Magic. 1860. Trans. by Arthur Edward Waite. London: W. Rider, 1913. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1971.

———. La Clef des grands mystères. Translated as The Key of the Mysteries. 1861. Trans. by Aleister Crowley. London: Rider, 1959. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1970.

———. The Magical Ritual of the Regnum Sanctum. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1970.

———. The Mysteries of Magic: A Digest of the Writings of Éliphas Lévi. Trans. by Arthur Edward Waite. 1886. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1974.

———. The Paradox of the Highest Science. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House. Reprint, Mokelumne Hill, Calif.: Health Research, 1969. Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1993.

———. Rituel de la haute magie. N.p., 1856.

———. Transcendental Magic. Translation of Dogme de la haute magie and Rituel de la haute magie. Translated by Arthur Edward Waite. London: George Redway, 1896. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1972.

L'Ecuyer, Michele. "Mafu." Life Times 1, no. 2 (winter 1986–87): 80–82.

L'Estrange, Ewen C. Witch Hunting and Witch Trials: The Indictments for Witchcraft from the Records of 1373 Assizes Held for the Home Circuit, A.D. 1559–1736. London: Kegan Paul, 1929.

La Barre, Weston. The Ghost Dance: The Origins of Religion. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1971. London: George Allen & Unwin, 1972.

———. "Hallucinogens and the Shamanic Origins of Religion." In Flesh of the Gods: The Ritual Use of Hallucinogens. Peter T. Furst, ed. (London: George Allen & Unwin, 1972), 261–278.

———. "Old and New World Narcotics: A Statistical Question and an Ethnological Reply," Economic Botany 24 (1970): 368–373.

———. The Peyote Cult. New York: Schocken Books, 1969.

———. They Shall Take up Serpents. New York: Schocken Books, 1969.

LaBerge, Steven. Lucid Dreaming: The Power of Being Awake and Aware in Your Dreams. Los Angeles: Jeremy P. Tarcher, 1987.

Lacarrière, Jacques. The Gnostics. London: Owen, 1977. Reprint, San Francisco: City Lights, 1989.

Lacy, Norris J. The Arthurian Encyclopedia. New York: Garland Publishing, Inc., 1986. Revised ed. The New Arthurian Encyclopedia. New York: Garland Publishing, Inc., 1995.

Laibow, Rima E. "Dual Victims: The Abused and the Abducted." International UFO Reporter 14, 3 (May/June 1989): 4–9.

Laing, David. Select Remains of the Ancient Popular Poetry of Scotland. Edinburgh: Balfour & Clarke, 1822.

Laing, Lloyd Robert. Celtic Britain and Ireland, A.D. 200–800: The Myth of the Dark Ages. Dublin, Ireland: Irish Academic Press, 1990.

Lair, Pierre. Essai sur les combustions humaine, produites par l' abus des liqueurs spiritueses. Paris, 1808.

Lamb, Geoffrey. Discovering Magic Charms and Talismans. UK: Shire Publications, 1974.

Lambert, G. W. "Antoine Richard's Garden." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 37 (July–October 1953, March–April 1954); 41 (June 1962).

———. "The Dieppe Raid Case." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 35 (May–June 1952).

———. "Poltergeists: A Psychical Theory." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 38 (June 1955).

———. "The Quest of Glastonbury." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 43, 728 (June 1966).

Lambert, Ricahrd Stanton. Areil and all His Quality. London: V. Gollancz Ltd., 1940.

———. Exploring the Supernatural. London: A. Barker, 1955.

Lambert, Rudolf. "Dr. Geley's Report on the Medium Eva C." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 37, no. 682 (November 1954).

Lancaster, John B. "A GESP Experiment with a Dual (Color-Symbol) Target." Journal of Parapsychology (December 1959).

Lancelin, Charles. Comment on meurt, comment on nait. Paris: H. Durville, 1912.

———. Histoire mythique de Shatan: de la légende au dogme. N.p., 1903.

———. L'ame hume: etudes expérimentales de psycho-physiologie. Paris: H. Durville, 1921.

———. L'humanité posthume et le monde angélique. N.p., n.d.

———. L'occultisme et la science. Paris: J. Meyer, 1926.

———. L'occultisme et la vie. Paris: Editions Adyar, 1928.

———. La fraude dans la production des phénomès mediumiques. N.p., 1912.

———. La réincarnation. N.p., n.d.

———. La sorcellerie des campagnes. N.p., 1923.

———. La vie posthume. Paris: H. Durville, 1922.

———. Méthode de dédoublement personnel. N.p., 1913.

———. Qu'est-ce l'âme? N.p., n.d.

Landau, Lucian. "Radionics: General Considerations." Journal of the British Society of Dowsers (September 1958).

Landau, Ron. God Is My Adventure. London: Ivor Nicholson & Watson, 1935.

———. The Philosophy of Ibn 'Arabi. London: Allen and Unwin, 1959.

Lane, C. Life and Bibliography of Joanna Southcott. London, 1912.

Lane, David Christopher. Exposing Cults: When the Skeptical Mind Confronts the Mystical. New York: Garland Publishing, 1994.

Lane, David Christopher. Fate (June 1982).

———. The Making of a Spiritual Movement. Del Mar, Calif.: Del Mar Press, 1983.

———. The Radhasoami Tradition: A Critical History of Guru Successorship. New York: Garland Publishing, 1992.

Lang, Andrew. The Book of Dreams & Ghosts. London, 1898. Reprint, New York: Causeway, 1974. Reprint, San Bernardino, Calif.: Borgo Press, 1980.

———. Cock Lane and Common Sense. London: Longmans, Green, 1894. Reprint, New York: AMS Press, 1970.

———. "The Fire Walk." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 15, p. 36.

———. Historical Mysteries. London: Smith, Elder, 1904.

———. Magic and Religion. 1901. Reprint, New York: Greenwood Press, 1969.

———. The Maid of France, Being the Story of the Life and Death of Jeanne d'Arc. London: Longmans, Green, 1908.

———. The Making of Religion. 1898. Reprint, New York: AMS Press, 1968.

———. The Valet's Tragedy and Other Studies. London: Longmans Green, 1903.

Lang, Johannes. Die Hohlwelttheorie. Franfurt am Main, Germany: Goethe Verlag, 1938.

Langdon, Jean Matteson, and Gerhard Baer, eds. Portals of Power: Shamanism in South America. Albuquerque: University of New Mexico Press, 1992.

Langguth, A. J. Macumba: White & Black Magic in Brazil. New York: Harper and Row, 1975.

Lantis, Margaret. Alaskan Eskimo Ceremonialism: Monographs of the American Ethnological Society. New York: J. J. Augustin Publisher, 1947.

Laoux, Gaston. Dictionnaire Hermetique. Paris, 1695.

Lapidus. In Pursuit of Gold: Alchemy in Theory and Practice. London: Neville Spearman, 1976.

Lapponi, Joseph. Hypnotism and Spiritism. New York: Longmans, Green, and Co., 1907.

Larcher, Hubert. "Perspectives parapsychochimiques: La Drogue" (Parapsychochemical Outlook: Narcotics). La Tour St. Jacques 1 (1960).

———. "Prodiges sanguins après la mort' (Wonders of the Blood after Death). Revue Métapsychique (Sept.–Oct. 1953; Nov.–Dec. 1953).

———. "Towards a Science of Healing." Proceedings of Four Conferences on Parapsychological Studies (1957).

———. "Trois cas extraordinaires d'oncorruption de la chair" (Three Remarkable Cases of Lack of Decay of Flesh). Revue Métapsychique (March–April 1954).

Larsen, David. "Society Flatly Denies Global Theory." Los Angeles Times, May 15, 1978.

Laski, Marghanita. Ecstasy. London: Cresset, 1961.

The Last Incarnation. Malibu, Calif.: Lakshmi Publications, 1983.

Latham, M. W. The Elizabethan Fairies. New York: Columbia University Press, 1931.

Latourette, K. C. The Chinese: Their History & Culture. 2 vols. New York: Macmillan, 1934.

Laufer, Berthold. "Origin of the Word Shaman," American Anthropologist, vol. 19 (1917): 361–371.

Laurence, Richard, trans. The Book of Enoch the Prophet . . . from an Ethiopian Manuscript. London: Kegan Paul, Tench, 1883.

Laurentin, René, and Henri Joyeux. Scientific & Medical Studies on the Apparitions at Medjugorje. Dublin: Veritas, 1987.

Laurentin, René, and L. Rupcic. Is the Virgin Mary Appearing at Medjugorje? Washington, D.C.: Word Among Us Press, 1984.

Laurentin, René, L. Rupcic, and René Lejeune. Messages and Teachings of Mary at Medjugorje. Milford, Ohio: The Riehle Foundation, 1988.

Laver, James. Nostradamus, or the Future Foretold. London: Collins, 1942. Reprint, UK: Penguin Books, 1952. Reprint, London: George Mann, 1973.

LaVey, Anton. The Compleat Witch; or, What to Do When Virtue Fails. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1971.

———. The Satanic Bible. Seacaucus, N.J.: University Books, 1969. Reprint. New York: Avon Books, 1976.

———. The Satanic Rituals. Secaucus, N.J.: University Books, 1972. Buccaneer Books, Inc., 1991.

———. The Satanic Witch. Los Angeles: Feral House, 1989.

Law, William. The Absolute Unlawfulness of the Stage Entertainment Fully Demonstrated. Reprint, New York: Garland Publishing, 1973.

———. The Grounds and Reason of Christian Regeneration. Philadelphia: Andrew Bradford, 1741.

———. A Practical Treatise upon Christian Perfection. Newcastle upon Tyne: J. Gooding, 1743.

———. A Serious Call to a Devout and Holy Life, Adapted to the State and Condition of All Orders of Christians. London: W. Innys, 1732.

———. The Spirit of Love. London: W. Innys and J. Richardson, 1752.

———. The Spirit of Prayer. London: W. Innys, 1750.

———. The Works. Brockenhurst: G. Moreton, 1892–93.

Lawrence, Brother. The Practice of the Presence of God. London, 1691.

Lawrence, Jodi. Alpha Brain Waves. New York: Avon, 1972.

Lawrence, Peter. Road Belong Cargo. Melbourne, Australia: Melbourne University Press, 1964.

Lawson, Donna. Brothers and Sisters All Over This Land: America's First Communes. New York: Praeger Publishers, 1972.

Lawson, John Cuthbert. Modern Greek Folklore and Ancient Greek Religion. 1910. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1964.

Lawton, George. The Drama of Life after Death. New York: H. Holt, 1932.

Layne, Meade. The Coming of the Guardians. 5th ed. Vista, Calif.: Borderland Sciences Research Foundation, 1964.

———. The Ether Ship and Its Solution. Vista, Calif.: Borderland Sciences Research Associates, 1950.

Le Bon, Gustave. The Crowd: A Study of the Popular Mind. London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1896.

Le Forestier, René. La Franc-maconnerie occultiste au XVIII siecle et l'ordre des Elus Coens. Paris: Dorbon, 1928.

Le Grand Grimoire, ou l'art de commander les esprits célestes. Paris, 1845.

Le Malefan, Pascal. "Pierre Janet, le spiritisme et les delires spirites" (Pierre Janet: Spiritualism and Spiritualistic Deliria), Evolution Psychiatrique 58, no. 2 (April-June 1993): 445–452.

Le Pelletier, Anatole. Les Oracles de Michel de Nostredame. 2 vols. Paris, 1867.

Le Plongeon, Augustus. Queen Moo and the Egyptian Sphinx. London; New York: The Author, 1896. 2nd ed. Reprint, Las Vegas, Nev.: Health Research, 1996.

Le Probleme de l'Etre et de la Destinée: Christianisme et Spiritisme. Translated as Christianity & Spiritualism. London, [1904].

Le Vert, Liberte E., ed. The Prophecies and Enigmas of Nostradamus. Glen Rock, N.J.: Firebell Books, 1979.

Lea, H. C. Léo Taxil and Diana Vaughan. Paris, 1901.

———. Léo Taxil, Diana Vaughan et l'Eglise romaine. Paris, 1901.

———. Materials Toward a History of Witchcraft. Edited by Arthur C. Howland. 3 vols. Philadelphia, University of Pennsylvania Press,1939. Reprint, New York: T. Yoseloff, 1957.

Lea, Henry Charles. A History of the Inquisition of the Middle Ages. 3 vols. London: Sampson, Low; New York: Harper & Bros., 1888. Reprint, New York: Citadel, 1954.

———. History of the Inquisition in Spain. New York and London, 1906.

Leadbeater, C. W. The Chakras. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1972.

———. Clairvoyance (1903). Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1999.

———. The Hidden Side of Christian Festivals. Los Angeles: St. Alban Press, 1920.

———. The Hidden Side of Things. 1913. Reprint, London: 1968. Abridged reprint, Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1974.

———. The Lives of Alcyone: A Clairvoyant Investigation. 2 vols. N.p., 1924.

———. Man Visible & Invisible. Reprint, London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1920. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

———. Man, Whence, How, and Whither. 1913. Reprint, Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Press, n.d.

———. The Masters and the Path. Chicago: Theosophical Press, 1925. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1985. Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co. Inc. Reprint, Las Vegas, Nev.: Health Research, 1998.

———. Occult Chemistry, Clairvoyant Observations. N.p., 1919.

———. Outline of Theosophy. Chicago: Theosophical Book Concern, 1903.

———. The Science of the Sacraments. Los Angeles: St. Alban Press, 1920.

———. Talks on the Path of Occultism. Vol. 1: At the Feet of the Master. 1926. Vol. 2: The Voice of the Silence. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1947.

———. A Textbook of Theosophy. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1956.

———. Thought-Forms: A Record of Clairvoyant Investigation. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1948.

———. The Astral Plane. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1915.

Leadbeater, C. W., and Annie Besant. Light on the Path. N.p., 1926.

Leaf, Horace. Ahmed's Daughter. N.p., 1933.

———. Death Cannot Kill. N.p., 1967.

———. Psychology and Development of Mediumship. London: Rider, 1923.

———. Under the Southern Cross. N.p., 1923.

———. What is this Spiritualism? New York: G. H. Doran, 1919.

———. What Mediumship Is. London: Psychic Press, 1938. Reprint, London: Spiritualist Press, 1976.

Leary, Timothy. Changing My Mind Among Others: Lifetime Writings. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1982.

———. Flashbacks: An Autobiography. Los Angeles: J. P. Tarcher, 1983.

———. High Priest. New York: World Publishing, 1968.

———. Politics of Ecstasy. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1968.

———. Psychedelic Prayers after the Tao te ching. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1966.

———. The Psychedelic Experience. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1964.

Leary, Timothy, Robert Wilson, and George A. Koopman. Neuropolitics: The Sociobiology of Human Metamorphosis. Los Angeles: Starseed/Peace Press, 1977.

Lebot, Vincent, Mark Merlin, and Lamont Lindstrom. Kava: The Pacific Drug. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1992.

LeClair, R. C. The Letters of William James and Theodore Flournoy. Madison, Wisc.: University of Wisconsin Press, 1966.

Lecour, Paul. Hellénisme et Christianisme (Hellenism and Christianity). Bordeaux: Editions Bierre, 1943.

———. Le Septième sens (The Seventh sense). N.p., n.d.

———. Ma Vie mystique (My mystical life). N.p., n.d.

———. Saint Paul et les mystères Chrétiens (St. Paul and the Christian mysteries). N.p., n.d.

LeCron, Leslie M. Experimental Hypnosis. New York: Macmillan, 1952.

———. "The Paranormal in Hypnosis." Tomorrow magazine (spring 1955).

———. Self-Hypnosis: The Technique and Its Daily Use in Daily Living. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1964.

———. Techniques of Hypnotherapy. New York: Julian Press, 1962.

LeCron, Leslie M., and Jean Bordeaux. Hypnotism Today. New York: Grune & Stratton, 1964.

Ledezma, Eugenio and Ramon Monroig. "Parapsychology in Mexico," Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 91, no. 2 (April 1997): 122–132.

Leduc, Dr. Stéphane. Théorie Physicochimique de la Vie et Générations Spontanées. Translated as The Mechanism of Life. London: William Heinemann, 1911.

Lee, Dal. Dictionary of Astrology. New York: Coronet Communications/Paperback Library, 1968.

———. How to Use and Understand Astrological Predictive Systems. New York: Astro Books, 1939.

———. Understanding the Occult. New York: Paperback Library, 1969.

Lee, Gloria. The Changing Conditions of Your World! Palos Verdes Estates, Calif.: Cosmon Research Foundation, 1962.

———. Why We Are Here! Palos Verdes Estates, Calif.: Cosmon Research Foundation, 1959.

Lee, Jung Young. Korean Shamanistic Rituals. New York: Mouton, 1981.

Leek, Sybil. Astrology and Love. New York: Berkley, 1977.

———. The Best of Sybil Leek. New York: Popular Library, 1974.

———. Book of Curses. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1975.

———. Cast Your Own Spell. New York: Pinnacle Books, 1970.

———. The Complete Art of Witchcraft. New York: World Publishing, 1971.

———. Diary of a Witch. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1968.

———. Reincarnation: The Second Chance. New York: Stein & Day, 1974. Reprint, New York: Bantam, 1975.

———. A Shop in the High Street. New York: David McKay, 1962.

———. Sybil Leek's Book of Curses. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1975.

———. Sybil Leek's Book of Fortune Telling. New York: Collier, 1969.

Lees, B. A. Records of the Templars in England in the Twelfth Century: The Inquest of 1185 with Illustrative Charters and Documents. Vol. 9 of British Academy Records of the Social and Economic History of England and Wales. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1935.

Lees, Robert J. The Car of Phoebus: An Astral Bridegroom. N.p., 1909.

———. The Gate of Heaven. N.p., n.d.

———. The Heretic. N.p., 1901.

———. The Life Elysian. N.p., 1905.

———. "My Books: How They Were Written." Occult Review (December 1931).

———. Through the Mists. London: W. Rider & Sons Ltd., 1910.

Lefebure, Francis. Expériences initiatiques. 3 vols. N.p., 1954, 1956, 1959.

———. Les Homologies; architecture cosmique ou, La Lumière secrète de l'Asie devant la science modern (Homologies; or, The Secret Light of Asia in Relation to Modern Science). Paris: Editions Aryana, 1950.

Lefort, Rafael. The Teachers of Gurdjieff. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1973.

Legge, Francis. Forerunners and Rivals of Christianity from 330 B.C. to 330 A.D. 2 vols. 1915. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1964.

Legge, James, trans. I Ching; Book of Changes. N.p., 1899. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1963. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1964. Reprint, New York: Causeway, 1973.

Legman, G. The Guilt of the Templars. New York: Basic Books, 1966.

Lehner, Ernest, and J. Lehner. Picture Book of Devils, Demons, and Witchcraft. New York: Dover Publications, 1972.

Lehrer, Ernst, and Johanna Ernst. Folklore and Odysseys of Food and Medicinal Plants. New York: Tutor Publishing, 1962.

Leland, Charles Godfrey. The Alternate Sex; or, The Female Intellect in Man, and the Masculine in Woman. London: P. Wellby, 1904.

———. Aradia; or, The Gospel of the Witches. 1899. Reprint, New York: Hero Press, 1971. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1974.

———. A Dictionary of Slang, Jargon, and Cant. London: Ballantyne Press, 1889. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1967.

———. The English Gypsies and their Language. New York: Hurd and Houghton, 1872. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1968.

———. The Gypsies. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin, 1882.

———. Memoirs. 1893. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1968.

———. The Mystic Will. New York: Hero Publishers, 1972.

Leland, Charles Godfrey, and Albert Barrére. Gypsy Sorcery and Fortune-Telling. London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1891. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1963. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1971.

Lellenberg, Jon L. The Quest for Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. Carbondale: Southern Illinois University Press, 1987.

Lemegeton; Clavicula Salomonis: or, The Complete Lesser Key of Solomon the King. Edited by Nelson White and Anne White. Pasadena, Calif.: The Technology Group, 1979.

The Lemurian Scribe. Let It Be Resolved. Milwaukee, Wisc.: Lemurian Press, 1940.

Lenglet, Dufresnoy N. Histoire de la Philosophie Hermetique. 2 vols. Paris, 1792.

Lenormant, Francois. Chaldean Magic: Its Origin & Development. London: Samuel Bagster, [1877].

Lenz, Frederick. Life Times. New York: Fawcett Crest, 1979.

Leo, Alan. Astrology for All. 2 vols. London: Modern Astrology Office, 1921.

———. Casting the Horoscope. London: Modern Astrology Office, 1912. Reprint, London: Fowler, 1969.

———. The Horoscope and How to Read It. N.p., 1902.

———. How to Judge a Nativity. 2 vols. 1904. Reprint, London: Modern Astrology Office, 1928.

———. Practical Astrology. Philadelphia: David McCay, n.d.

Leo, Bessie. The Life and Works of Alan Leo. N.p., 1919.

Leonard, Gladys Osborn. My Life in Two Worlds. London: Cassell, 1931.

Leonard, Maurice. Battling Bertha; The Biography of Bertha Harris. London: Regency Press, 1975.

———. Medium: The Biography of Jessie Nason. London: Regency Press, 1974.

Leonard, William J. The Pioneer Apostle of Mental Science: A Sketch of the Life and Work of Rev. Warren Felt Evans, M.D. N.p.: The Author, n.d.

Leoni, Edgar. Nostradamus and His Prophecies. New York: 1961.

Leroy, Oliver. Les hommes salamandres: Recherches et réflexions sur l'incombustibilité du corps humain. Paris, 1932.

———. Levitation. London: Burns, Oates, 1928.

Leroy, Olivier-Gilbert. "Apparitions de Sainte Thé rèse de Jésus" (Apparitions of Saint Theresa of Jesus). Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique 134 (1958).

———. "Examen des témoignages sur la lévitation extatique chez Sainte Thérèse de Jésus" (Study of the Testimony on Ecstatic Levitation of Saint Theresa). Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique 131 (1937).

———. "La Pénètration des consciences chez Sainte Thérèse de Jésus" (The Penetration of Consciousness in Saint Theresa of Jesus). Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique 136 (1958).

———. La Raison primitive (Primitive Reason). N.p., 1926.

———. Les Hommes-Salamandres (The Salamander Men). N.p., 1931.

———. Sainte Jeanne d'Arc, Les Voix (The Voices of St. Joan of Arc). N.p., 1956.

LeShan, Lawrence. Alternative Realities. New York: M. Evans, 1976.

———. Einstein's Space and Van Gogh's Sky: Physical Reality and Beyond. New York: Macmillan, 1982.

———. From Newton to EAP: Parapsychology and the Challenge of Modern Science. Wellingborough, England: Turnstone Press, 1984.

———. How to Meditate: A Guide to Self-Discovery. New York: Bantam Books, 1975.

———. The Medium, the Mystic, and the Physicist. 1974. Reprint, New York: Viking; London: Turnstone Books, 1974. Reprinted as Clairvoyant Reality: Toward a General Theory of the Paranormal. Wellingborough, England: Turnstone Press, 1980.

———. The Psychology of War: Comprehending Its Mystique and Its Madness. Chicago: Noble Press, 1992.

Leslie, Desmond. The Amazing Mr. Lutterworth: A Novel. London: Allan Wingate, 1958.

———. "Leslie Strikes Back." Nexus 1, nos. 2–5 (May 1955): 7–8; Saucer News 2, nos. 2–6 (June/July 1955): 7–8.

———. "Obituary: George Adamski." Flying Saucer Review 11, no. 4 (July/August 1965): 18–19.

Leslie, Desmond, and George Adamski. Flying Saucers Have Landed. New York: British Book/ London: Werner Laurie, 1953. Rev. London: Neville Spearman, 1970.

The Lesser Key of Solomon/Göetia/The Book of Evil Spirits. Chicago: De Laurence, 1916.

Letbridge, T. C. The Power of the Pendulum. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1976.

Letort, Ellen. "The Frauds of Mediums." Annals of Psychic Science 3, no. 6 (1906).

Leuschner, Wolfgang. "Ueber ein telepathisches Phaenomen" (A Telepathic Phenomenon), Psyche: Zeitschrift fuer Psychoanalyse und ihre Anwendungen 43, no. 5 (May 1989): 415–428.

Levack, Brian P. Possession & Exorcism. New York: Garland Publishing, Inc., 1992.

———. Witchcraft, Women and Society. New York: Garland, 1992.

Levack, Brian, ed. Witchcraft in the Ancient World and the Middle Ages. New York:Garland 1992.

Leventhal, Herbert. In the Shadow of the Enlightenment: Occultism and Renaissance Science in Eighteenth Century America. New York: State University of New York Press, 1976.

Lévi, Éliphas. The Book of Splendors. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1973.

Levin, Ira. Rosemary's Baby. New York: Random House, 1967.

Levin, Jeffrey S. " 'Age Differences in Mystical Experience: Erratum," Gerontologist 33, no. 5: (October 1993).

Levine, Robert M. Vale of Tears: Revisiting the Canudos Massacre in Northeastern Brazil. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1992.

Levy, Walter J., Jr. "Possible PK by Rats to Receive Pleasurable Brain Stimulation." In Research in Parapsychology 1973. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1974.

Levy, Walter J., Jr., and James Davis. "A Potential Animal Model for Parapsychological Interaction between Organisms." Research in Parapsychology 1973. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1974.

Levy, Walter J., Jr., Brian Artley, Al Mayor, and Carol Williams. "The Use of an Activity Wheel Based Testing Cage in Small Rodent Precognition Work." In Research in Parapsychology 1973. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1974.

Lewes, George H. The Life of Goethe. London, 1864. Reprint, Norwood Editions, 1979.

Lewi, Grant. Astrology for the Millions. Garden City, N.Y.: N.p., 1940.

———. Heaven Knows What. New York: Doubleday, 1935.

———. Your Greatest Strength. New York, N.p., 1946.

Lewin, L. Phantastica, Narcotic and Stimulating Drugs. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1964.

Lewis, Arthur H. Hex. New York: Pocket Books, 1972.

Lewis, Bernard. The Assassins: A Radical Sect in Islam. London: Al Saqi, 1985.

Lewis, David. The Life of S. Teresa of Jesus. London, 1970.

Lewis, E. E. A Report of the Mysterious Noises Heard in the House of Mr. John D. Fox. Canandaigua, N.Y.: The Author, 1848.

Lewis, H. Spencer. Mansions of the Soul. San Jose, Calif.: Rosicrucian Press, 1930.

———. Rosicrucian Manual. San Jose, Calif.: Rosicrucian Press, 1941.

———. Rosicrucian Principles for the Home and Business. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of AMORC, 1929.

———. Rosicrucian Questions and Answers with Complete History. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of AMORC, 1929.

———. Rosicrucian Questions and Answers. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of the AMORC, 1969.

———. Self Mastery and Fate with the Cycles of Life. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of AMORC, 1929.

Lewis, I. M. Ecstatic Religion: A Study in Shamanism and Spirit Possession. London: Routledge, 1989.

———. "What is Shaman," Folk vol. 23 (1981): 25–35.

Lewis, James R. The Astrology Encyclopedia. Detroit: Gale Research, 1994.

———. The Dream Encyclopedia. Detroit: Gale Research, Inc., 1995.

Lewis, James R., and J. Gordon Melton, eds. Church Universal and Triumphant in Scholarly Perspective. Stanford, Calif.: Center for Academic Publications, 1994.

———. Perspectives on the New Age. Albany: State University Press of New York, 1992.

———. Sex, Slander, and Salvation. Goleta, Calif.: Center for Academic Publication, 1994.

Lewis, Lionel. St. Joseph of Arimathea at Glastonbury. London: James Clarke, 1955.

Lewis, Matthew Gregory. Journal of a West Indian Proprietor. London: J. Murray, 1861. Reprint, New York: Negro University Press, 1961.

Lewis, Mrs. J. The Awakening in Wales. London: Marshall; New York: Revell, 1905.

Lewis, Ralph M. Behold the Sign. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of the AMORC, 1944.

———. The Conscious Interlude. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of the AMORC, 1957.

———. The Sanctuary of the Self. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of the AMORC, 1948.

———. Yesterday Has Much to Tell. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of the AMORC, 1973.

Lewis-Williams, J. D. and T. A. Dowson. "The Signs of All Times: Entoptic Phenomena in Upper Palaeolithic Art," Current Anthropology vol. 29, no. 2 (1988): 201–245.

Leyburn, James G. The Haitian People. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1966.

Lhermitte, Jacques Jean. Le Cerveau et la pensée (The Brain and Thought). 1951.

———. Le Probléme des miracles. N.p., 1956.

———. Les Hallucinations. N.p., 1951.

———. Les Reves (Dreams). N.p., 1942.

———. Mystiques et faux mystiques (Mystics and False Mystics). N.p., 1952.

———. Psychopathologie de la vision. N.p., 1942.

———. Vrais et faux possédés. (True and False Possession). New York: Hawthorn Books, 1956.

Liébeault, A. A. Du sommeil et des etats analogues. Paris, 1886.

Lietaer, Hugo and Jozef Corveleyn. "Psychoanalytical Interpretation of the Demoniacal Possession and the Mystical Development of Sister Jeanne des Anges from Loudun (1605–1665)," International Journal for the Psychology of Religion 5, no. 4 (1995): 259–276.

The Life of a Karmi-Yogi. Malaga, N.J.: American Vegan Society, 1973.

Lillie, Arthur. Mme. Blavatsky and Her Theosophy. London: Swan Sonnonschein, 1895.

Lilly, J. Man and Dolphin. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1961.

Lilly, William. The History of Lilly's Life and Times. N.p., 1715.

Lincoln, J. S. The Dream in Primitive Cultures. London, 1935. Reprint, Academic Press, 1970.

Lind, Ingrid. The White Eagle Inheritance. Wellingborough, Northamptonshire, England: Turnstone Press, 1984.

Lindsay, Gordon. William Branham, A Man Sent From God. Dallas, Tex.: Voice of Healing Publishing, 1950.

Lipnack, Jessica, and Jeffrey Stamps. The Networking Book: People Connecting with People. New York: Methuen; London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1986.

Lippman, Deborah, and Paul Colin. Amulets, Charms and Talismans: What They Mean and How to Use Them. New York: M. Evans, 1974.

———. How to Make Amulets, Charms, and Talismans. New York: M. Evans, 1974.

Lipski, Alexander. Life and Teachings of Sri Anandamayi Ma. Delhi, India: Motilial Banaridass, 1977.

Little, A. G. Roger Bacon Essays. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1914.

Littlefield, Charles W. "M. M. M."—Man, Minerals and Masters. Los Angeles: DeVorss, 1937.

The Liturgy of the Liberal Catholic Church. London: St. Alban Press, 1983.

Litvag, Irving. Singer in the Shadows: The Strange Story of Patience Worth. Macmillan, 1972; New York: Popular Library, 1973.

Liu, Da. I Ching Coin Prediction. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

Livsey, Clara. The Manson Women: A Family Portrait. New York: Richard Merek Publishers, 1980.

Llorente, J. A. History of the Inquisition of Spain. 1826.

Lobb, John. Talks with the Dead. N.p., 1906.

———. Uncle Tom's Story of His Life. N.p., 1877.

Lockhart, J. G. Curses, Lucks and Talismans. London: Geoffrey Bles, 1938. Reprint, Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1971.

Lockwood, W. M. Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth. N.p., 1902. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co. 1998.

Lodge, Sir Oliver. Christopher: A Study in Human Personality. New York: George H. Doran, 1919.

———. Conviction of Survival. N.p., 1930.

———. Letters from Sir Oliver Lodge. Edited by J. A. Hill. London: Cassell, 1932.

Lodge, Sir Oliver. Past Years. London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1931.

———. Raymond Revised. N.p., 1922.

———. Raymond, or Life and Death; with Examples of the Evidence for Survival of Memory and Affection After Death. London: Methuen; New York: George H. Doran, 1916.

———. The Reality of a Spiritual World. N.p., 1930.

———. The Substance of Faith Allied with Sciences. London: Methuen, 1915.

———. Survival of Man. London: Methuen, 1909.

———. Why I Believe in Personal Immortality. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, Doran, 1929.

Loehr, Franklin. Death with Understanding. Grand Island, Fla.: Religious Research Press, 1987.

———. The Power of Prayer on Plants. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1959. Reprint, New York: New American Library, 1969.

———. Psychography: A Method of Self Discovery. Grand Island, Fla.: Religious Research Press, 1990.

———. Science, Religion, and the Development of Religion as a Science. Grand Island, Fla.: Gnosticours, 1983.

Logan, Daniel. America Bewitched: The Rise of Black Magic and Spiritism. New York: William Morrow, 1973.

———. Do You Have ESP? N.p., 1970.

———. The Reluctant Prophet. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1968.

———. Vibrations. N.p., 1976.

———. Your Eastern Star. N.p., 1972.

Lomaxe, Paul R. What Do Spiritualists Believe? New York: General Assembly of Spiritualists, 1943.

Lombard, Emile. De la Glossolalie chez les Premiers Chrétiens et des Phénomènes Similaires. Lausanne, Switzerland: Bridel, 1910.

Lombroso, Cesare. After Death—What? Boston: Small, Maynard/ Cambridge, Mass.: Small Maynard/ London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1909.

———. The Man of Genius. London: Scott, 1891.

London Dialectical Society. *Report on Spiritualism: Together with the Evidence Oral and Written.*London: Longmans, Green, Reader & Dyer, 1871. Reprint, London: J. Burns, 1873. London: Longmans, Green, Reader & Dyer, 1971. Reprint, North Stratford, N. H.: Ayer Publishing Co. Press, 1976.

Long, Frank Belknap. Howard Phillips Lovecraft: Dreamer on the Nightside. Sauk City, Wisc.: Arkham House, 1975.

Long, Max Freedom. Growing Into Light. Vista, Calif.: Huna Research Publications, 1955.

———. Introduction to Huna. Sedona, Ariz.: Esoteric Publications, 1975.

———. Recovering the Ancient Magic. London, 1936. Reprint, Cape Girardeau, Mo.: Huna Press, 1978.

———. The Secret Science at Work. Vista, Calif.: Huna Research Publications, 1953.

———. The Secret Science Behind Miracles. Kosmon Press, 1948. Reprint, Vista, Calif.: Huna Research Publications, 1954.

Loomis, Roger Sherman. The Grail: From Celtic Myth to Christian Symbol. Cardiff: University of Wales Press, 1963.

Loomis, Roger Sherman, ed. Arthurian Literature in the Middle Ages. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1959.

Lörber, Jakob. The Three-Days-Scene at the Temple of Jerusalem. Bietigheim, Germany: Neu-Salems-Society, 1932.

Lord's New Church Which Is Nova Hierosalyma. Handbook of the Lord's New Church Which Is Nova Hierosolyma. Bryn Athyn, Pa.: The Author, 1985.

Lord-Drake, Maud. Psychic Light: The Continuity of Law and Life. Kansas City, Mo.: Frank T. Riley, 1904.

Lorenz, Konrad. King Solomon's Ring. New York: Time, 1962.

Lorenzen, Coral E. The Great Flying Saucer Hoax: The UFO Facts and Their Interpretation. New York: William Frederick Press, 1962. Rev.: Flying Saucers: The Startling Evidence of Invasion from Outer Space. New York: New American Library, 1966.

Lorenzen, Coral, and Jim Lorenzen. Abducted! Confrontations with Beings from Outer Space. New York: Berkley, 1977.

———. Encounters with UFO Occupants. New York: Berkley, 1976.

———. UFOs: The Whole Story. New York: New American Library, 1969.

———.UFOs Over the Americas. New York: New American Library, 1968.

Lorenzen, David N. Kabir Legendas and Ananta-das's Kabir Parachai. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1991.

Lovecraft, Howard Phillips. At the Mountains and Other Novels. Sauk City, Wisc.: Arkham House, 1964.

———. Collected Poems. Sauk City, Wisc.: Arkham House, 1963.

———. The Dunwich Horror and Others. Sauk City, Wisc.: Arkham House, 1963.

———. Haunter of the Dark, and Other Tales of Horror. London: Gollancz, 1950.

———. Supernatural Horror in Literature. New York: B. Abramson, 1945.

Lovland, Paul. "An Experiment Proposed to Test Exchange of Mental Entropy in Telepathy," Journal of Indian Psychology 15, no. 1-2 (January-July 1997): 31–43.

Lowell, Percival. Occult Japan. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1895.

Loweman, Emily. Egoland. London, 1932.

Lowengard, Manfred. How to Analyze Your Handwriting. London: Marshall Cavendish, 1975.

Lowery, T. L. The End of the World. Cleveland, Tenn.: Lowery Publications, 1969.

Lozowick, Lee. The Alchemy of Transformation. Prescott, Ariz.: Hohm Press, 1996.

Lu K'uan Yü. Taoist Yoga: Alchemy and Immortality. London: Rider & Co., 1970.

Lubeck, Walter. Complete Reiki Handbook. Westerville, Ohio: Lotus Press, 1994.

Lubow, Robert. The War Animals. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1977.

Luce, Gaston. Leon Denis l'apotre du spiritisme, sa vie, son oeuvre. N.p., n.d.

Luce, Gay Gaer. Biological Rhythms in Psychiatry and Medicine. Washington, D.C.: National Institute of Mental Health, 1970. Reprinted as Biological Rhythms in Human and Animal Physiology. New York: Dover Books, 1971.

———. Body Time: Physiological Rhythms and Social Stress. New York: Pantheon Books, 1971.

Luce, Gay Gaer, and J. Segal. Sleep. New York: Coward, McCann, 1966.

Ludlam, Harry. A Biography of Dracula: The Life Story of Bram Stoker. London: Fireside Press, 1962.

Ludwig, J. K., ed. Philosophy and Parapsychology. Buffalo, N.Y.: Promethus Books, 1978.

Luk, Charles. Ch'an and Zen Teachings. Series 1, 2 & 3. London: Rider, 1960–62.

———. Practical Buddhism. London: Rider, 1971.

———. Taoist Yoga, Alchemy, and Immortality. London: Rider, 1970 New York: Samuel Weiser, 1973.

———. The Secrets of Chinese Meditation. London: Rider, 1964.

———. The Vimalakirti Nirdesa Sutra. Berkeley, Calif.: Shambhala, 1972.

Lunan, Duncan. Man and the Stars. London: Souvenir Press, 1974. Reprinted as Interstellar Contact; Communication with Other Intelligences in the Universe. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1975.

Lundahl, Craig R. "Near-Death Visions of Unborn Children: Indications of a Pre-Earth Life," Journal of Near-Death Studies 11, no. 2 (Winter 1992): 123–128.

Lupton, Thomas. A Thousand Notable Things. London, 1660.

"The Lure of Martin V. Riccardo." Special issue of The Vampire Information Exchange Newsletter 53 (April 1991).

Lutoslawski, Wincenty. Pre-Existence and Reincarnation. N.p., 1928.

———. The Knowledge of Reality. N.p., 1930.

———. The World of Souls. N.p., 1924.

Lutyens, Emily. Candles in the Sun. Philadelphia: Lippincott, 1957.

———. Krishnamurti, The Years of Awakening. New York: Farrar, Straus, & Giroux, 1975.

———. Krishnamurti, The Years of Fulfillment. London: J. Murray, 1983.

Luzzatto, Moses. General Principles of the Kabbalah. New York: Research Center of Kabbalah, 1970.

Lyons, Arthur. Satan Wants You: The Cult of Devil Worship in America. New York: Dodd, Mead; London: Rupert Hart-Davies, 1970. London: Hart-Davis, 1971. New York: Mysterious Press, 1988. New York: Warner Books, Inc., 1989.

Lyons, Arthur, and Marcello Truzzi. Blue Sense: Psychic Detectives and Crime. New York: Mysterious Press; New York: Warner Books, 1991.

Lysaght, Patricia. The Banshee. Dublin, 1986.

Lyttelton, Edith. The Faculty of Communion. N.p., 1925.

———. Our Superconscious Mind. London, 1931.

———. Some Cases of Prediction. London: Bell, 1938. Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Lytton, Bulwar. The Coming Race. London: George Routledge & Sons, 1877.

———. Complete Works. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, n.d.

———. A Strange Story. Mobile, Ala.: S. H. Goetzel, 1863. Frequently reprinted.

Lytton, Edward Bulwer. Vril: Power of the Coming Race. Edinburgh; London: W. Blackwood and Sons, 1871.

———. Zanoni. London: Saunders & Otley, 1842. Reprinted as Zanoni: A Rosicrucian Tale. Blauvelt, N.Y.: Rudolf Steiner Publications, 1971.

———. "Proofs for Reincarnation." Psychic News (October/November 1960).

———. Reincarnation Based on Facts. London: Psychic Press, 1970.

———. "Spiritualist Doctrine." Tomorrow. (Autumn 1960).

M. A. (Oxon) [W. Stainton Moses]. More Spirit Teachings. Manchester, England: Two Worlds Publishing, 1942.

———. Spirit Identity. London, 1879.

The Mabinogion. London: J. M. Dent, 1949.

Maby, J. Cecil, and T. B. Franklin. The Physics of the Divining Rod. London: G. Bell and Sons, 1939.

Mac Manus, D. A. The Middle Kingdom: The Faerie World of Ireland. London: Max Parrish, 1959.

MacCullough, John A. The Harrowing of Hell: A Comparative Study of an Early Christian Doctrine. London: T. & T. Clark, 1930. Reprint, New York: AMS Press, 1981.

Macdonald, Malcolm. Borneo People. New York: Alfred P. Knopf, 1958.

MacDowall, M. W. Epics and Romances of the Middle Ages. London: S. Sonnenschein, 1896.

Macedo, Nertan. Antonio Conselheiro. N.p.: Graf Record, 1969.

Macgregor, Alexander. Highland Superstitions Connected with the Druids, Fairies, Witchcraft, Second-Sight, Hallowe'en, Sacred Wells and Lochs. Stirling, Scotland: Eaneas Mackay, 1922.

———. Highland Superstitions. Eneas Mackay, 1901.

———. The Prophecies of the Brahan Seer. Inverness, 1896. Reprint, Stirling, Scotland: Eaneas Mackay, 1935. Reprint, London: Constable, 1977.

MacGregor, Helen, and Margaret V. Underhill. The Psychic Faculties and Their Development. London: LSA Publications, 1930.

MacGregor Mathers, S. L. The Tarot: Its Occult Signification, Use in Fortune-Telling and Method of Play. London: George Redway, 1888. Reprint, New York: Gordon Press, 1973.

Machen, Arthur. The Angel of Mons: The Bowmen and Other Legends of the War. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1915.

———. The Great God Pan. 1894. Reprint, London: M. Secker, 1926.

———. The Great Return. London: Faith Press, 1915.

———. The Hill of Dreams. 1907. Reprint, New York: Dover, 1986.

———. The House of Souls. 1906. Reprint, Freeport, N.Y.: Books for Libraries Press, 1971.

———. The Terror. 1917. Reprint, New York: W. W. Norton, 1965.

Mack, John E. Abduction: Human Encounters with Aliens. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1994.

Mackal, Roy Paul. The Monster of Loch Ness. Chicago: Swallow Press, 1976.

———. Searching for Hidden Animals. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1980.

Mackay, Charles. Memoirs of Extraordinary Popular Delusions. London: Richard Bentley, 1841. Reprint, New York: Farrar, Strauss & Giroux, 1932. Reprinted as Extraordinary Popular Delusions and the Madness of Crowds. Wells, Vt.: Fraser Publishing, 1963.

Mackenzie, Alexander. The Prophecies of the Brahan Seer Doinneach Odhar Fiosaiche. Stirling, Scotland: Eneas Mackay, 1935. Rev. ed., Golspie, Scotland: Sutherland Press, 1970. Reprint, London: Constable, 1977.

MacKenzie, Andrew. Apparitions and Ghosts. London: Barker, 1971. Reprint, New York: Popular Library, 1972.

———. Dracula Country. London: Arthur Barker, 1977.

———. Hauntings and Apparitions. London: Heinemann, 1982.

———. The Riddle of the Future: A Modern Study of Precognition. London: Barker, 1974. Reprint, New York: Taplinger, 1975.

———. The Unexplained; Some Strange Cases of Psychical Research. London, 1966. Reprint, New York: Popular Library, 1970.

Mackenzie, Kenneth. Royal Masonic Cyclopaedia. 1877. Reprint, New York: Sterling Publishing, 1987.

MacKenzie, Norman, ed. Secret Societies. London: Aldus Books; New York: Collier Books, 1967.

Mackenzie, William. "Les Experiences de Genes avec le medium Erto." Revue Métaphysique (November–December 1922).

MacKenzie, William, ed. Gaelic Incantations, Charms and Blessings of the Hebrides. Inverness, Scotland, 1895.

Mackey, Albert Gallatin. Encyclopedia of Freemasonry. 1874. Reprint, Chicago: Masonic History, 1927.

———. Mackey's Revised Encyclopedia of Freemasonry. Richmond, Va.: Macoy Publishing, 1909.

Mackey, Albert G., and Rob Morris. Lights & Shadows of the Mystic Tie N.p., 1889. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1999.

Maclagan, Robert Craig. The Evil Eye in the Western Highlands. London: David Nutt, 1902. Reprint, UK: E. P. Publishing, 1972. Reprint, Norwood, Pa.: Norwood Editions, 1973.

MacLaglan, R. C. The Evil Eye in the Western Highlands. London: David Nutt, 1902.

MacLaine, Shirley. Dancing in the Light. New York: Bantam Books, 1985.

———. Don't Fall Off the Mountain. New York: W. W. Norton, 1970.

———. It's All in the Playing. New York: Bantam Books, 1987.

———. Out on a Limb. New York: Bantam Books, 1983. Reprint, London: Elm Tree Books; Hamish Hamilton, 1983.

———. You Can Get There from Here. New York: W. W. Norton, 1975.

Maclean, Charles. The Wolf Children. Hill & Wang, 1977.

MacLean, Dorothy. To Hear the Angels Sing. Middleton, Wisc.: Lorian Press, 1980.

MacLean, John P. Bibliography of Shaker Literature. 1905. Reprint, Burt Franklin, 1971.

MacLeod, Fiona. The Divine Adventure. Portland, Maine: T. B. Mosher, 1903.

———. The Dominion of Dreams. New York: F. A. Stokes, 1900.

———. Green Fire. N.p., 1896.

———. The Immortal Hour. Portland, Maine: T. B. Mosher, 1907.

———. The Mountain Lovers. N.p., 1895.

———. Pharais. Chicago: Stone & Kimball, 1895.

———. The Sin-Eater. New York: Duffield, 1910.

———. The Washer of the Ford. New York: Stone & Kimball, 1896.

———. Winged Destiny. New York: Dufdfield, 1910.

MacLeod, Nicholas A. Scottish Witchcraft. St. Ives, England: James Pike, 1975.

Macmillan, W. J. The Reluctant Healer. London: Victor Gollancz, 1952.

MacNaghten, Hugh. Emile Coué: the Man and his Work. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1922.

MacPhilpin, John. The Apparitions and Miracles at Knock, also Official Depositons of the Eye-Witnesses. Tuam, Ireland, 1880. 2d ed. Dublin: M. H. Gill & Son, 1894.

Macrae, Norman, ed. Highland Second-Sight: With Prophecies of Conneach Odhar of Petty. Dingwall, Scotland: G. Souter, 1908. Reprint, Norwood, Pa., 1972.

MacRithie, David. Shelta: The Cairds' Language. Transactions of Gaelic Society of Inverness 24 (1904).

MacRobert, Russell G. "Current Attitudes of American Neuropsychiatrists towards Parapsychology." Journal of Parapsychology (November 1948).

———. "Hallucinations of the Sane." Journal of Insurance Medicine 5, no. 3 (1950).

———. "Psychiatry and Intuition." Journal of Insurance Medicine 4, no. 3 (1949).

———. "Science Studies Intuition." Tomorrow (May 1950).

———. "When Is Healing 'Psychic'?" Tomorrow (spring 1955).

———. "Where Is Bridey Murphy?" Tomorrow (spring 1956).

Maeterlinck, Maurice. The Great Secret. London: Methuen, 1922. Reprint, New York: University Books, 1969.

———. L'Ornemant des Noces Spirituelles, de Ruysbroeck l'admirable. English ed. as: Ruysbroeck and the Mystics with Selections fron Ruysbroeck. N.p., 1894.

———. Ruysbroeck and the Mystics. London, 1908.

———. The Unknown Guest. London, 1914. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1975.

Mager, Henri. Water Diviners and Their Methods. London, 1931.

Magre, Maurice. The Return of the Magi. London: P. Allen, 1931.

Mahan, Asa. Modern Mysteries Explained and Exposed. Boston, 1855.

Mahararj Ji, Guru. The Living Master. Denver: Divine Light Mission, 1978.

Maharishi Mahesh Yogi. Meditations of Maharishi Mahesh Yogi. New York: Bantam, 1973.

———. The Science of Being and Art of Living. London: International SRM Publications, 1966.

Maher, Michaeleen, and Gertrude Schmeidler. "Confirmation of a Family's Report of an Apparition." In Research in Parapsychology 1974. Edited by J. D. Morris, W. G. Roll, and R. L. Morris. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1975.

Maisyuk, Alexander. "This Mysterious Clairvoyance: An Experiment in Moscow." PSI Research 5, no. 1-2 (March-June 1986): 4–10.

Maitland, Edward. Anna Kingsford: Her Life, Letters, Diary. London, 1896.

———. The Story of Anna Kingsford and Edward Maitland and of the New Gospel of Interpretation. Birmingham, England: Ruskin Press, 1905.

Majumdar, S. M. Introduction to Yoga Principles and Practices. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1964. Reprint, Secacus, N.J.: Citadel Press, 1976.

Malbrough, Ray T. Charms, Spells, and Formulas. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1987.

Malo, Henry. Life of Delphine Gray. N.p., 1925.

Maloney, Clarence, ed. The Evil Eye. New York: Columbia University Press, 1976.

Malony, H. Newton and A. Adams Lovekin. Glossolalia. New York: Oxford University Press, Inc., 1985.

Maltwood, Katherine E. A Guide to Glastonbury's Temple of the Stars. London, 1929.

Manas, John H. Divination: Ancient and Modern. New York: Pythagoran Society, 1947.

Manchen-Helfen, Otto. The World of the Huns: Studies in Their History and Culture. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1973.

Mangan, Gordon Lavelle. "Evidence of Displacement in a Precognitive Test." Journal of Parapsychology (March 1955).

———. "An ESP Experiment with Dual-Aspect Targets Involving One Trial Day." Journal of Parapsychology (December 1957).

———. "How Legitimate Are the Claims for ESP?" Australian Journal of Psychology (September 1959).

———. "Parapsychology: A Science for Psychical Research?" Queen's Quarterly (spring 1958).

———. "A PK Experiment with Thirty Dice Released for High and Low Face Targets." Journal of Parapsychology (December 1954).

———. A Review of Published Research on the Relationship of Some Personality Variables to ESP Scoring Level. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1958.

Mangan, Gordon Lavelle, and L. C. Wilbur. "The Relation of PK Object and Throwing Surface in Placement Tests." Journal of Parapsychology 20 (1956); 21, (1957).

Maning, F. E. Old New Zealand. London: R. Bentley, 1884. Reprint, Auckland: Whitcombe & Tombs, 1922.

Manisis: The Interpretation of the Divine Law for the Manistic Dispensation. Quakertown, Pa.: Beverley Hall, 1955.

Mann, Felix. Acupuncture. New York: Random House, 1963; London: W. Heinemann Medical Books, 1962.

Mann, William Edward. Orgone, Reich and Eros. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1973.

Mannhardt, W. Über Vampirismus. (see vol. 4 of Zeitschrift für Deutsche Mythologie und Sittenkunde), Göttingen, 1858.

Manning, Alcie G. Helping Yourself with the Power of Gnostic Magic. West Nyack, N.Y.: Parker Publishing, 1979.

———. Helping Yourself with White Witchcraft. West Nyack, N.Y.: Parker Publishing, 1972.

Manning, Matthew. In the Mind of Millions. London: W. H. Allen, 1977.

———. The Link: Matthew Manning's Own Story of His Extraordinary Psychic Gifts. London: Corgi, 1975. Reprint, New York: Holt, Rinehart & Winston, 1975.

———. The Link: The Extraordinary Gifts of a Teenage Psychic. UK: Colin Smythe, 1974. Reprint, New York: Holt, Rinehart, 1975.

———. The Strangers. London: W. H. Allen, 1978.

Mannix, Daniel P. The Hell Fire Club. New York: Ballantine Books, 1959.

Manuel, David. Like a Mighty River. Orleans, Mass: Rock Harbor Press, 1977.

Manvell, Roger. The Trial of Annie Besant and Charles Bradlaugh. London: Elek/Pemberton, 1976.

Maple, Eric. The Complete Book of Witchcraft and Demonology: Witches, Devils, and Ghosts in Western Civilization. South Brunswick, N.J.: A. S. Barnes, 1966.

———. The Dark World of Witches. London: Robert Hale; New York: A. S. Barnes, 1962. Also reprinted with two other Eric Maple books in one volume as The Complete Book of Witchcraft and Demonology. New York: A. S. Barnes, 1964.

———. Deadly Magic. Wellingborough, England: Thursons, 1976.

———. The Domain of Devils. London: R. Hale, 1966.

———. Incantations and Words of Power. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1974.

———. Magic, Medicine, and Quakery. London: R. Hale, 1968.

———. The Realm of Ghosts. New York: A.S. Barnes, 1964.

———. Superstition and the Superstitious. London and New York: W.H. Allen, 1971.

———. Witchcraft: The Story of Man's Quest for Psychic Power. London: Octopus Books, 1973.

Marabini, Enrico. "Esperienze di Telepatia collectiva eseguite nella Citta' di Bologna" (Experiments in Mass Telepathy in Bologna). Metapsichica 1 (1954).

———. "Esperienze trienneli di lettura della mano con una sensitiva Bolognese: Maria Guardini" (Three Years of Experiments in Hand-reading with the Sensitive Maria Guardini of Bologna). Parapsicologia di Minerva Medica (June 1957).

———. "Il Comportamento paranormale in rapporto a stati neuro-endocrini" (Paranormal Behavior in Connection with Neuro-Endocrinological Conditions). Parapsicologia di Minerva Medica (November 1957).

———. "Il Metodo scientifico in parapsicologia" (Scientific Method in Parapsychology). Bulletin of the Italian Society for Parapsychology (July–December 1957).

———. "La Psi e'stata dimonstrata sperimentalmente?" (Has Psi Been Experimentally Demonstrated?). Bulletin of the Italian Society for Parapsychology (July–December 1959).

———. "La Telapatia" (Telepathy). Metapsichica 1–4 (1953).

———. "Problemi parapsicologici e psicosomatica" (Parapsychological Problems and Psychosomatics). Medicina psicosomatics 1, no. 2 (1957).

———. "Proposta di una modifica al test di Stuart per la Chiaroveggenza" (Proposal of a Modification of the Stuart Test for Clairvoyance). Metapsichica 3 (1954).

———. "Sogno paragnosico" (Paragnostic Dreams). Parapsicologia di Minerva Medica (June 1957).

———. "Una Nuova ESP?" Bulletin of the Italian Society for Parapsychology (January–June 1959).

Marbewick, Betty. "The Soal-Goldney Experiments with Basil Shackleton: New Evidence of Data Manipulation." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 56, no. 211 (May 1978).

Marchand, A. The Facts of Lourdes and the Medical Bureau. London: Burns Oates & Wasbourne, 1924.

Marcuse, Irene. The Key to Handwriting Analysis. New York: R. M. McBride, 1959.

Margiotta, D. Souvenirs d'un Trente-Troisieme. Adriano Lemmi, chef supreme des francsmaçons. Paris, 1896.

Marglis, Nadia. Joan of Arc in History, Literature, and Film: A Select Bibliography. New York: Garland Publishing, 1990.

Marion, Frederick. In My Mind's Eye. London: Rider, 1949.

Marks, David F. "Investigating the Paranormal," Nature 320, no. 6058 (March 1986): 119–124.

Marques-Riviere, J. Tantrik Yoga. London: Rider & Co., 1940.

Marricks, William S. Edward Irving: The Forgotten Giant. East Peoria, Ill.: Scribe's Chamber Publications, 1983.

Marryat, Florence. The Spirit World. New York: C. B. Reed, 1894.

———. *There is No Death.*New York: John W. Lovell/ London: K Paul, Trench, Trubner, 1891. Reprint, London: Griffith, Farran, 1893. Reprint, New York: Causeway Books, 1973.

Marryat, Florence, ed. The Clairvoyance of Bessie Williams. Related by Herself. N.p., 1893.

Mars, Louis. The Crisis of Possession in Voudou. Port-au-Prince, Haiti: State Printing, 1946. Rev. ed. Reed, Cannon and Johnson, 1977.

Mars, Louis, and G. Devereux. "Haitian Voudou and the Revitalization of the Nightmare." Psychoanlytic Review 38, no. 4 (1951).

Marshall, Charles. "The Mahatma Letters: A Syntactic Investigation into the Possibility of 'Forgery' by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, a 19th Century Russian Occultist." Viewpoint Aquarius 96 (October 1980).

Martel, Roy. The Mysterious Power of Linda Martel. Guernsey, Channel Islands: Toucan Press, 1973.

Martello, Leo Louis. Curses in Verses. New York: Hero Press, 1971.

———. Weird Ways of Witchcraft. New York: HC Publishers, 1969.

———. What It Means to Be a Witch. New York: The Author, 1975.

———. Witchcraft: The Old Religion. Secaucus, N.J.: University Books, 1973.

Martensen, H. L. Jacob Boehme. Rockliff, 1949.

Martin, Charles Rochelle. "Mystical Experience and Mental Health: Three Perspectives," Dissertation Abstracts International: Section B: The Sciences & Engineering 55, no. 7-B (January 1995): 2999.

Martin, Dorothy R. "An Analysis of a Second Series of 25,000 Trials." Journal of Parapsychology 2 (1938).

———. "Chance and Extra-Chance Results in Card Matching." Journal of Parapsychology 1 (1937).

———. "A Review of All University of Colorado Experiments." Journal of Parapsychology 4 (1940).

Martin, Dorothy R., and F. P. Stribic. The Immortality of Living Beings. Copenhagen, Denmark: Martinus Institute, 1970.

Martin, Dorothy R., and F. P. Stribic. "Studies in Extrasensory Perception: An Analysis of 25,000 Trials." Journal of Parapsychology 2 (1938).

Martin, Edward J. The Trail of the Templars. London: Allen & Unwin, 1928.

Martin, Katherine. "The Voice of Lazaris." New Realities 7, no. 6 (July/August 1987).

Martin, William. "This Man Says He's the Divine Sweetheart of the Universe." Esquire (June 1974): 76–78, 140–43.

Martinez-Taboas, Alfonso. "A Case of Spirit Possession and Glossolalia," Culture, Medicine & Psychiatry 23(3) (September 1999): 333–348.

Martinez-Taboas, Alfonso and Margarita Francia. "The Feilding Report, Wiseman's Critique and Scientific Reporting," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 59, no. 831 (April 1993): 120–129.

Martinus. The Principle of Reincarnation. Copenhagen, Denmark: Martinus Institute, 1938.

———. The Road to Initiation. Copenhagen, Denmark: Martinus Institute, 1957.

Marx, C. W. The Devil's Rights & the Redemption in the Literature of Medieval England. Rochester, N.Y.: Boydell & Brewer, Inc., 1995.

Maryatt, Florence. There Is No Death. London, 1892. Reprint, New York: Causeway Books, 1973.

Maryona [Helen Spitler]. Light of the Universe. 2 vols. Tiffin, Ohio: The Light of the Universe, 1965, 1976.

———. Mini-Manual for Light Bearers. Tiffin, Ohio: Light of the Universe, 1987.

Maskarinec, Gregory Gabriel. The Rulings of the Night: An Ethnography of Nepalese Shaman Oral Texts. Madison: University of Wisconsin Press, 1995.

Maskelyne, John N. The Magnetic Lady; or, a Human Magnet Demagnetised. Bristol, 1892.

———. Modern Spiritualism: A Short Account of Its Rise and Progress, with Some Exposures of So-Called Spirit Media. London: F. Warne, 1876.

———. The Fraud of Modern "Theosophy" Exposed. London: G. Routledge, 1913.

Masks of Dionysus. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1993.

Maspero, G. Les contes populaires de l'Egypte ancienne. Paris, 1881.

Massey, Gerald. Ancient Egypt, the Light of the World. 2 vols. London, 1907. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1974.

———. A Book of the Beginnings. 2 vols. London, 1881. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1974.

———. The Natural Genesis. 2 vols. London: n.p., 1883.

Masters, Anthony. The Natural History of the Vampire. London: Ruper Hart-Davis, 1972; London: Mayflower 1974.

Masters, Robert E. L. Eros and Evil: The Sexual Psychopathology of Witchcraft. New York: Julian Press, 1962.

———. Forbidden Sexual Behavior and Morality. New York: Julian Press, 1962.

———. The Homosexual Revolution: A Challenging Exposé of the Social and Political Directions of a Minority Group. New York: Julian Press, 1962.

Masters, Robert E. L., and Jean Houston. Listening to the Body. New York, Delacorte Press, 1978.

———. Mind Games: The Guide to Inner Space. New York: Viking, 1972.

Masters, Robert V. Complete Book of Karate and Self-Defense. New York: Sterling, 1974.

Masters, R. E. L., and Jean Houston. The Varieties of Psychedelic Experience. New York: Holt, Rinehart & Winston, 1966. Reprint, London: Anthony Blond; New York: Dell, 1967.

Mata, Sri Daya. Only Love. Los Angeles: Self-Realization Fellowship, 1976.

Materialy z Konfernecji Parapsychologó w '94. Warsaw: Polskie Towarzystwo Psychotroniczne, 1994.

Mather, Cotton. Memorable Provinces, Relating to Witchcraft and Possessions. Boston, 1689.

———. Wonders of the Invisible World. Boston: Benjamin Harris, 1693. Reprint, Amherst, Wisc.: Amherst Press, 1980. Reprint, n.p.: Reprint Services Corporation, 1999.

Mather, Increase. Cases of Conscience Concerning Evil Spirits. Boston, 1693.

———. Essay for the Recording of Illustrious Provinces. Boston, 1684.

Mathers, S. L. MacGregor. Astral Projection, Ritual Magic, and Alchemy. Rochester, Vt.: Destiny Books, 1987.

———. The Kabbalah Unveiled. 1907. Reprint, London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1926. 2nd edition reprint. Life Science Institute, 1991.

Mathers, S. L. MacGregor, ed. The Key of Solomon the King. London: George Redway, 1908. Reprint, London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1972. Reprint, York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, Inc., 1985. N.p.: The Book Tree, 1999.

Mathers, S. L. MacGregor, trans. The Book of the Sacred Magic of Abra-Melin the Mage. 1898. Reprint, Chicago: De Laurence, 1932. Reprint, New York: Causeway Books, 1974.

Mathison, Richard. Faiths, Cults, and Sects of America. Indianapolis, Ind.: Bobbs-Merrill, 1960.

Matlock, James G. "Leonor*a* or Leonor*e*? A Note on Mrs. Piper's First Name." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 82, no. 3 (July 1988).

———. "Records of the Parapsychology Laboratory: An Inventory of the Collection in the Duke University Library," Journal of Parapsychology 55, 3 (September 1991): 301–314.

Matsumoto, Teruo. Acupuncture for Physicians. Springfield, Ill.: Thomas, 1974.

Matter, A. J. Saint-Martin, le philosophe inconnu. Paris, 1862.

Matthews, Ronald. English Messiahs. London: Methuen, 1936.

Mattison, Hiram. Spirit Rapping Unveiled! Derby, N.Y., 1853.

Maurina-Raudive, Zenta, ed. Konstantin Raudive zum Gedaechtnis. München: Maximilian Dietrich Verlag, 1975.

Maury, Marguerite. How to Dowse: Experimental and Practical Radiasthesia. London: G. Bell and Sons, 1953.

Maxfield, Melinda. "The Journey of the Drum," ReVision vol. 16, no. 4 (Spring 1994): 157–163.

Maxwell, J. Metapsychical Phenomena: Methods and Observations. London: Duckworth, 1905.

Maxwell, Joseph. La Divination. Paris: E. Flammarion, 1927.

———. La Magie. Paris: E. Flammarion, 1922.

———. Les Phénomènes psychiques (Metapsychical Phenomena). London: Duckworth, 1905.

———. Metaphysical Phenomena. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons; London: Duckworth, 1905.

May, Antoinette. Haunted Ladies. San Francisco: Chronicle Books, 1975.

Mayer, G., V. Neissner, P. Schwarzmayr, and K. Meier-Ewert. "Schlafentzug bei Somnambulismus. Auswirkung auf Arousals, Tiefschlaf und Schlafstadienwechsel" (Sleepwalking in somnambulism. Effect of arousals, deep sleep and sleep-stage shifts), Nervenarzt 69, no. 6 (June 1998): 495–501.

Maynard, Henrietta S. Was Abraham Lincoln a Spiritualist? Philadelphia.: R. C. Hartranft, 1891. Reprint, London: Psychic Book Club, 1917.

Mayne, Alan James. "The Promotion of Research." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 42 (1963).

Mayo, Jeff. The Planets and Human Behavior. 1972. Reprint, Reno, Nev.: CRCS Publications, 1985.

McAnally, D. R., Jr. Irish Wonders: The Ghosts, Giants, Pookas, Demons, Leprechawns, Banshees, Fairies, Witches, Widows, Old Maids and Other Marvels of the Emerald Isle. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1888. Reprint, Detroit: Grand River Books, 1971.

McBirnie, William S. Anti-Christ. Dallas, Tex.: International Prison Ministry, 1978.

McCabe, Joseph. Spiritualism: A Popular History from 1847. London: Fisher Unwin, 1920.

McCarthy, C. W. Rigid Tests of the Occult. Melbourne, Australia: Stephens, 1904.

McCearney, James. Arthur Conan Doyle. Paris: La Table Ronde, 1988.

McClenon, James. "Parapsychology in Japan," Parapsychology Review 20, no. 4 (July 1989): 13–15.

McCloy, J. F., and Ray Miller, Jr. The Jersey Devil. Newark, Del.: Middle Atlantic Press, 1976.

McClure, Kevin. The Evidence for Visions of the Virgin Mary. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1983.

McConnell, Robert A. Encounters with Parapsychology. Pittsburgh, Pa.: The Author, 1982.

———. ESP Curriculum Guide. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1971.

———. An Introduction to Parapsychology in the Context of Science. Pittsburgh, Pa.: The Author, 1983.

———. Parapsychology and Self-Deception in Science. Pittsburgh, Pa.: The Author, 1982.

———. Parapsychology in Retrospect: My Search for the Unicorn. Pittsburgh, Pa.: The Author, 1987.

McConnell, Robert A., and Gertrude Schmeidler. ESP and Personality Patterns. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1958.

McCormick, Donald. The Hell-Fire Club. London: Jarrolds Publishers, 1958. Reprint, London: Sphere Books, 1975.

McCoy, Edain. Inside a Witches' Coven. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1997.

McCreery, Charles. Science, Philosophy, and ESP. London: Faber & Faber, 1967. Reprint, Hamden, Conn.: Archon Books, 1968.

McCulloch, Joseph. The Trumpet Shall Sound. London, M. Joseph, Ltd., 1944.

McDermott, Robert, ed. The Essential Aurobindo. New York: Schrocken Books, 1973.

———. Six Pillars. Chambersburg, Pa.: Wilson Books, 1974.

McDougall, William. Body and Mind: A History and Defense of Animism. London: Methuen, 1911.

———. "The Case of Sally Beauchamp." Proceedings of the Society of Psychical Research 19–20 (1905–07).

———. "Further Observations on the 'Margery' Case." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 19 (1925).

———. "The Margery Mediumship." Psyche 26 (1926).

———. Modern Materialism and Emergent Evolution. New York: D. Van Nostrand, 1929.

———. "The Need for Psychical Research." Harvard Graduate Magazine. Reprinted in ASPR Journal 17 (1923).

———. The Riddle of Life. London: Methuen, 1938.

McEvers, Joan. The Houses: Power Places of the Horoscope. St. Paul, Minn.: Llwellyn Publications, 1991.

———. Planets: The Astrological Tools. St. Paul, Minn.: Llwellyn Publications, 1989.

McGarey, William. Acupuncture and Body Energies. Phoenix, Ariz.: Gabriel Press, 1974.

McGinn, Bernard. The Growth of Mysticism. New York: Crossroad Publishing Co., 1996.

McGregor, Pedro. Jesus of the Spirits. New York: Stein & Day, 1966.

———. Moon and Two Mountains. London, 1966.

McHargue, Georgess. Facts, Frauds, and Phantasms: A Survey of the Spiritualist Movement. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1972.

McIntosh, Christopher. The Astrologers and Their Creed: An Historical Outline. New York: Frederick A. Praeger, 1969.

———. The Devil's Bookshelf. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1985.

———. Éliphas Lévi and the French Occult Revival. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1972.

———. The Rosicrucians. New York: Samuel Weiser Inc., 1997.

———. The Rosy Cross Unveiled: The History, Mythology, and Rituals of an Occult Order. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1980.

McKenna, Terrence. "Hallucinogenic Mushrooms and Evolution," ReVision vol. 10 (1988): 51–57.

McLean, Dorothy. To Hear the Angels Sing. Middleton, Wisc.: Lorian Press, 1980.

McMahan, Elizabeth Anne. "An Experiment in Pure Telepathy." Journal of Parapsychology 10 (1946).

———. "PK Experiments with Two-Sided Objects." Journal of Parapsychology 9 (1945).

McMahan, Elizabeth Anne, and E. K. Bates. "Report of Further Marchesi Experiments." Journal of Parapsychology 18 (1954).

McMahan, Elizabeth Anne, and J. B. Rhine. "Extrasensory Perception of Cards in an Unknown Location." Journal of Parapsychology 12 (1948).

———. "A Review of the Evidence for Dowsing." Journal of Parapsychology 11 (1947).

———. "A Second Zagreb-Durham ESP Experiment." Journal of Parapsychology 11 (1947).

McNally, Raymond T. Dracula Was a Woman. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1983.

McNally, Raymont T., and Radu Florescu. In Search of Dracula: A True History of Dracula and Vampire Legends. New York: New York Graphic Society, 1972. Rev. ed. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1994.

McNutt, Dan J. The Eighteenth-Century Gothic Novel: An Annotated Bibliography of Criticism and Selected Texts. New York: Garland Publishing, 1975.

———. Apollonius of Tyana: The Philosopher-Reformer of the First Century A.D. 1901. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1966.

———. Did Jesus Live 100 B.C.? 1903. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1968.

———. The Doctrine of the Subtle Body. London: John M. Watkins, 1919. Reprint, Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1967.

———. Echoes from the Gnosis. 1907. Reprint, Hastings, E. Sussex, England: Chthonius Books, 1987.

———. Essay Written as a Preface to a New Edition of T. Taylor's "Select Works of Plotinus." London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1895.

———. Fragments of a Faith Forgotten. 1900. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1960.

———. Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death. London: Longmans, Green, 1903. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

———. Pistis Sophia: A Gnostic Miscellany. London, 1921. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1974.

———. Simon Magus. London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1892.

Mead, G. R. S., ed. Thrice-Greatest Hermes. 3 vols. London: J. M. Watkins, 1964.

Mead, Margaret. Inquiry Into the Question of Cultural Stability in Polynesia. New York: Columbia University, 1928. Reprint, New York: AMS Press, 1981.

Meade, Marion. Madame Blavatsky: The Woman Behind the Myth. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1980.

Meaden, George Terence. The Circles Effect and its Mysteries. Bradford-on-Avon, England: Artetech Publishing, 1989.

———. Circles from the Sky. London: Souvenir Press, 1991.

Medeiros, Earl C. The Complete History and Philosophy of Kung Fu. Rutland, Vt.: Charles Tuttle, 1975.

Medhurst, R. G. "On the Origin of the 'Prepared Random Numbers' Used in the Shackleton Experiments." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 46 (March 1971).

Medhurst, R. G., contr. *Crookes and the Spirit World.*Marlboro, N.J.: Taplinger Publishing Co. Inc.; London: Souvenir Press, 1972.

Medhurst, R. G., and K. M. Godney. "William Crookes and the Physical Phenomena of Mediumship." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 54, 195 (March 1964).

A Medium [Ed Lunt]. Mysteries of the Séance. Boston: Lunt Brothers, 1905.

"Mediumship of Mr. C. Bailey." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 12 (1905): 77, 109.

Meehl, Paul E., and M. J. Scriven. "Compatibility of Science and ESP." Science 123 (1956).

Meehl, Paul E., H. R. Klann, and K. H. Breimeter. What, Then, Is Man? N.p., 1958.

Meek, George W., and Bertha Harris. From Séance to Science. London: Regency Press, 1973.

Meerloo, Joost A. M. "The Biology of Time." Tomorrow (winter 1954).

———. Hidden Communion. New York: Garrett Publications, 1964.

———. "Man's Ecstatic Healing." Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie 27 (1959).

———. The Rape of the Mind: The Psychology of Thought Control, Menticide, and Brainwashing. N.p., 1956.

———. "Telepathy and Foreknowledge." In Proceedings of the First International Conference on Parapsychology. Utrecht, 1953.

———. "Telepathy as a Form of Archaic Communication." Psychiatric Quarterly 23 (1949).

———. Unobtrusive Communication. Assen, The Netherlands: Van Gorcum, 1964.

Mehrabian, Albert, Catherine A. Stefl, and Melissa Mullen. "Emotional Thinking in the Adult: Individual Differences in Mysticism and Globality-Differentiation," Imagination, Cognition & Personality 16, no. 4 (1997): 325–355.

———. Ancient Incubation and Modern Psychotherapy. Evanston, Ill.: Northwestern University Press, 1968.

———. "C. G. Jung's Concept of Synchronicity." In Proceedings of the First International Conference of Parapsychological Studies (1955).

———. "Jung's 'Meaningful Coincidence.' " Tomorrow (spring 1954).

———. "Projection, Transference, and Subject-Object Relation." In Proceedings of the International Symposium on Psychology and Parapsychology (1957).

———. "Psychological Background of So-Called Spontaneous Phenomena." In Proceedings of the Conference on Spontaneous Phenomena (1957).

Mellor, Alec. Our Separated Brethren: The Freemasons. London: George G. Harp, 1964.

Melton, J. Gordon. The Betty Book Literature of Stewart Edward White. Evanston, Ill.: The Author, 1971.

———. "Comet Kouhotek: Fizzle of the Century." Fate 27, no. 5 (May 1974): 58–64.

———. "The Contactees: a Survey." In The Spectrum of UFO Research: Proceedings of the Second UFO Conference. Chicago: Center for UFO Studies, 1975.

———. A Directory of Religious Bodies in the United States. New York: Garland Publishing, 1977.

———. Encyclopedia of American Religions. Detroit: Gale Group, 1998.

———. Encyclopedic Handbook of Cults in America. New York: Garland Publishing, 1986. Rev. ed. 1992.

———. "A History of the New Age Movement." In Not Necessarily the New Age. Edited by Robert Basil. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Press, 1988.

———. New Age Encyclopedia. Detroit: Gale Research, 1990.

———. New Thought: A Reader. Santa Barbara, Calif.: Institute for the Study of American Religion, 1990.

———. Paganism, Magic, and Witchcraft. New York: Garland Publishing, 1982.

———. "Pascal Beverly Randolph: America's Pioneer Occultist." In Le Défi Magique, edited by Jean Baptiste Martin and Francois Laplantine. Lyon, France: Presses Universitaires de Lyon, 1994.

———. A Reader's Guide to the Church's Ministry of Healing. Independence, Mo.: Academy of Religion and Psychical Research, 1977.

———. Religious Leaders of America. 2d ed. Detroit: Gale Group, 1999.

———. "The Revival of Astrology in the United States." In Religious Movements: Genesis, Exodus, and Numbers. Edited by Rodney Stark. New York: Paragon House Publishers, 1985.

———. "Toward a History of Magical Religion in the United States." Listening 9, no. 3 (autumn 1974): 112–33.

———. The Vampire Book: An Encyclopedia of the Undead. Detroit: Gale Research, 1994.

———. The Ways of Meditation. Evanston, Ill.: Stellium Press, 1974.

Melton, J. Gordon, and George M. Eberhart. The Flying Saucer Contactee Movement: 1950–1990. Santa Barbara, Calif.: Santa Barbara Centre for Humanistic Studies, 1990.

Melton, J. Gordon, and Isotta Poggi. Magic, Witchcraft, and Paganism in America: A Bibliography. New York: Garland Publishing, 1992.

Melton, J. Gordon, and James R. Lewis, eds. Perspectives on the New Age. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1992.

Melton, J. Gordon, and Robert L. Moore. The Cult Experience. New York: Pilgrim Press, 1982.

Melton, J. Gordon, ed. The Peoples Temple and Jim Jones: Broadening Our Perspectives. New York: Garland, 1990.

Melton, J. Gordon, Jerome Clark, and Aidan A. Kelly. New Age Encyclopedia. Detroit: Gale Research, 1990.

Meltzer, David, ed. The Secret Garden: An Anthology of the Kabbalah. New York: Seabury Press, 1976.

Melville, John. Crystal-Gazing and The Wonders of Clairvoyance. London: Nichols, 1897. Reprinted as Crystal Gazing and Clairvoyance. Wellingborough, England: Aquarium Press, 1979.

Meng-Koehler, Heinrich O. "Parapsychologie, Psychohygiene, and Aerztliche Fortbildung" (Parapsychology, Mental Hygiene and Medical Training). Hippokrates (1954).

———. "Wunderheilungen" (Miracles of Healing). Hippokrates (1954).

Merchant, Francis. A.E.: An Irish Promethean. Columbia, S.C.: Benedict College Press, 1954.

Meredith, Dennis L. Search at Loch Ness: The Expedition of the New York Times and The Academy of Applied Science. New York: Quadrangle/New York Times Book Co., 1977.

Merkur, Daniel. Becoming Half Hidden: Shamanism and Initiation among the Inuit. New York: Garland, 1992.

———. Gnosis: An Esoteric Tradition of Mystical Visions and Unions. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1993.

Mermet, Abbe. Principles & Practice of Radiesthesie. London, 1967.

Merrell-Wolff, Franklin. Pathways through to Space: A Personal Record of Transformation in Consciousness. New York: Warner Books, 1976.

———. The Philosophy of Consciousness without an Object. New York: Julian Press, 1973.

Merry, Eleanor. The Dream Song of Olaf Asteson. England: New Knowledge Books, 1961.

Mesmer, F. A. Memoir of F. A. Mesmer, Doctor of Medicine, On His Discoveries, 1799. Translated by Jerome Eden. Mount Vernon, N.Y.: Eden Press, 1957.

———. Mesmerism by Doctor Mesmer (1779), Being the First Translation of Mesmer's Historic "Memoire sur la découverte du Magnétism Animal" to Appear in English. London: Macdonald, 1948.

Messent, Peter B., ed. Literature of the Occult. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1971.

Messmer, Joseph, and Sigismund Waitz. A Visit to the Stimatized Seer: Therese Neumann. Chicago: John P. Dalriden, 1929.

Metcalf, Peter. A Borneo Journey into Death: Berawan Eschatology from Its Rituals. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1982.

Metzner, Ralph. "Mushrooms and the Mind." In Psychedelics: The Use and Implications of Hallucinogenic Drugs. Edited by B. Aaronson and H. Osmond. London: Hogarth Press, 1971.

Metzner, Ralph, et al. The Well of Remembrance: Rediscovering the Earth Wisdom Myths of Northern Europe. Boston: Shambhala, 1994.

Meurger, Michel, with Claude Gagnon. Lake Monster Traditions: A Cross Cultural Analysis. London: Fortean Tomes, 1988.

Mew, James. Traditional Aspects of Hell. London: Swan, Sonnenschein, 1903. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1971.

Meyer, Donald. The Positive Thinkers. New York: Doubleday, 1965.

Meyer, E. H. Germanische Mythologie. Berlin, 1891.

Meyrink, Gustav [G. Meyer]. The Golem. London, 1928. Reprint, New York, 1964.

Miall, A. M. Complete Fortune Telling. Greenberg, 1950. Reprint, Hackensack, N.J.: Wehman, 1962.

Michael, Henry N., ed. Studies in Siberian Shamanism: Translations from Russian Sources, vol. 4. Arctic Institute of North America, Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1963.

———. Studies in Siberian Ethnogenesis. Anthropology of the North. Trans. from Russian Sources, No. 2. Arctic Institute of North America, Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1962.

Michelet, Jules. Le Procès des Templiers. 2 vols. N.p., 1841–51.

———. The Sorceress. London, 1905. Reprinted as Satanism and Witchcraft: A Study in Medieval Superstition. New York: Dell, 1971. Reprint, New York: Citadel Press, 1973.

Michell, John. New Light on the Ancient Mystery of Glastonbury. Glastonbury, England: Gothic Images Publications, 1990.

———. The View over Atlantis. Rev. ed. London: Abacus, 1976.

Michell, John, and Robert J. M. Rickard. Living Wonders: Mysteries and Curiosities of the Animal World. New York: Thames and Hudson, 1982.

———. Phenomena: A Book of Miracles. London: Thames and Hudson, 1977. Reprint, New York: Pantheon Books, 1977.

———. Phenomena: A Book of Wonders. London: Thames and Hudson, 1977. Reprint, New York: Pantheon Books, 1977.

Mickaharic, Draja. A Century of Spells. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1988.

Mikhailowski, V. M."Shamanism in Siberia and European Russia: Being the Second Part of Shamanstvo." Translated from Russian by Oliver Wardrop. Journal of the Royal Anthropological Institute 24 (1894): 62–100, 126–158.

Mickler, Michael L. The Unification Church in America: A Bibliography and Research Guide. New York: Garland, 1987.

Middleton, Jessie A. The White Ghost Book. London: Cassell, 1918.

Millard, Joseph. Edgar Cayce. Greenwich, Conn.: Fawcett, 1967.

Miller, Albert J., and M. J. Acrí. Death: A Bibliographical Guide. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1977.

Miller, C. Leslie. All About Angels: The Other Side of the Spirit World. Glendale: G/L Regal Books, 1973.

Miller, Don Ethan. Bodymind: The Whole Person Health Book. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1974.

Miller, Hugh. Scenes and Legends in the North of Scotland. Nimmo, 1834.

Miller, Paul. Born to Heal. London: Spiritualist Press, 1948.

Miller, R. Dewitt. The Man Who Lived Forever. N.p., 1956.

———. Reincarnation. N.p., 1956.

Miller, R. DeWitt, and Ellora F. Miller. Forgotten Mysteries. Chicago: Cloud Inc., 1947.

———. You Do Take It with You. New York: Citadel Press, 1955.

Miller, Russell. Bare-Faced Messiah: The True Story of L. Ron Hubbard New York: Henry Holt; London: Michael Joseph, 1987.

Miller, Stuart. Hot Springs. New York: Viking Press, 1971.

Miller, Timothy. American Communes, 1860–1960: A Bibliography. New York: Garland Publishing, 1990.

Mills, Joy. 100 Years of Theosophy: A History of the Theosophical Society in America. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1987.

Mills, Watson E. A Theological-Exegetical Approach to Glossolalia. Lanham, Md.: University Press of America, 1985

Milne, Hugh. Bhagwan: The God That Failed. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1986. Reprint, London: Sphere Books, 1987.

Milne, J. Bramwell. Hypnotism: Its History, Practice, and Theory. London, 1903.

Milovsky, Akexander S. "Tubiakou's Spirit Flight," Natural History (July,1992): 34–41.

Milton, Julie. "A Meta-Analysis of Waking State of Consciousness, Free-Response ESP Studies." In Research in Parapsychology, 1993: Abstracts and Papers from the Thirty-sixth Annual Convention of the Parapsychological Association, 1993. Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, Inc., 1998.

Milton, Julie and Richard Wiseman. Guidelines for Extrasensory Perception Research. Hertfordshire UK: University of Hertfordshire Press, 1997.

The Mind, Meditation, and Healing. London: Atlanteans, 1972.

Miracle Woman's Secrets. Los Angeles: Superet Press, 1949.

Mironov, N. D., and S. M. Shirokogoroff. "Sramana-Shaman: Etymology of the Word 'Shaman,' " Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society (North-China Branch, Shanghai) 55 (1924): 105–130.

Miscellaneous Masonic Documents. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

Misegades, Charles. Know Your Number. Marina Del Rey, Calif.: DeVorss, 1980.

Mishra, Rammurti. Dynamics of Yoga-Mudras and Five Successive Suggestions for Meditation. Pleasant Valley, N.Y.: Kriya Press, 1967.

———. Fundamentals of Yoga. New York: Lancer Books, 1969. Reprint, Yoga Sutras: The Textbook of Yoga Psychology. New York, 1973.

———. Isha Upanishad. Dayton, Ohio: Yoga Society of Dayton, 1962.

Mishra, Shri Ramamurti. Self Analysis and Self Knowledge. Lakemont, Ga.: CSA Press, 1977.

Mitchell, Edgar D., ed. Psychic Exploration: A Challenge for Science. Edited by John White. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1974.

Mitchell, G. W. X + Y = Z; or the Sleeping Preacher of North Alabama. New York, 1876. Reprint, Owens Cross Roads, Ala.: Drake Publications, 1981.

Mitchell, J. Astro-Archaeology. London: Thames & Hudson, 1977.

Mitchell, John, and Robert J. M. Rickard. Phenomena: A Book of Wonders. N.p., 1977.

Mitchell, T. W. "The Appreciation of Time by Somnambules." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1908–09).

———. Medical Psychology and Psychical Research. London: Methuen, 1922.

———. Psychology and the Sciences. Edited by William Brown. London: A & C Black Ltd., 1924.

———. The Psychology of Medicine. New York: R. M. McBride, 1922.

———. "Psychotherapy and Psychoanalysis." Proceedings of the Society for Psychial Research (1912–13).

———. "A Study in Hysteria and Multiple Personality." Proceedings of the Society for Psychial Research (1912–13).

Mitchell-Hedges, F. A. Danger My Ally. Boston: Little-Brown, 1955.

Mitland, Edward. The Story of Anna Kingsford and Edward Maitland and of the New Gospel of Interpretation. Birmingham, England: Ruskin Press, 1905.

Moberly, C. A. E., and E. F. Jourdain. An Adventure. London: Faber & Faber, 1911.

Moll, Albert. Hypnotism. London: Walter Scott Publishing, 1909. Reprint, New York: Da Capo Press, Inc., 1982.

Molloy, J. Fitzgerald. The Romance of Royalty. London, 1904.

Monroe, Robert A. Journeys Out of the Body. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1971.

Montague, Nell St. John. Revelations of a Society Clairvoyante. London, 1926.

Monter, E. William. European Witchcraft. New York: Wiley 1969.

Montgomery, Ruth. Born to Heal. New York: Coward, McCann & Geochegan, 1973.

———. Companions Along the Way. New York: Coward, McCann & Geochegan, 1974.

———. A Gift of Prophecy: The Phenomenal Jeane Dixon. New York: William Morrow, 1965.

———. Here and Hereafter. New York: Coward, McCann & Geochegan, 1966.

———. A Search for the Truth. New York: William Morrow, 1967.

———. Strangers Among Us: Enlightened Beings from a World to Come. New York: Coward, McGann & Geochegan, 1979.

———. Threshold to Tomorrow. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1983.

———. The World Before. New York: Coward, McCann & Geochegan, 1976.

———. A World Beyond. New York: Coward, McCann & Geochegan, 1971.

Moody, Raymond A., Jr. Reflections on Life After Life. Covington, Ga.: Mockingbird Books, 1975. Reprint, Mechanicsburg, Pa.: Stackpole Books, 1977. N.p.: R. Bemis Publishing, Ltd., 1981. New York: Macmillan Library Reference, 1982. New York: Bantam, 1984.

Mookerjee, Ajit. Tantra Art. New York: Random House, 1971.

Mookerjee, Ajit, and M. Khanna. The Tantric Way: Art, Science, Ritual. New York: Graphic, 1977.

Moon, Mary. Ogopogo: The Okanagan Mystery. London: David & Charles, 1977.

Moon, Sun Myung. Christianity in Crisis: New Hope. New York: HSA-UWC, 1974.

———. A Prophet Speaks Today. New York: HSA-UWC, 1975.

Mooney, James. "The Ghost-Dance Religion." In Annual Report of Bureau of American Ethnology. 14, 2, (1893).

———. "The Ghost-Dance Religion," part 2, Fourteenth Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology Washington D.C.: Smithsonian Institution, 1897.

Moore, Clara Sophia Bloomfield. Keely and His Discoveries. London, 1893. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1972.

Moore, Edward. Bealings Bells. Woodbridge, England, 1841.

Moore, Gerun. Numbers Will Tell. London: Barker; New York: Grossett & Dunlap, 1973.

Moore, J. D. "A Medium Appearing in a Materialized Form." Facts 6 (March 1887).

Moore, Mary-Margaret. From the Heart of a Gentle Brother. Taos, N.Mex.: High Mesa Press, 1987.

———. I Come as a Brother: A Remembrance of Illusions. Taos, N.Mex.: High Mesa Publishing, 1984.

Moore, R. Laurence. In Search of White Crows. New York: Oxford University Press, 1977.

Moore, Rebecca, ed. New Religious Movements, Mass Suicide, and Peoples Temple: Scholarly Perspectives on a Tragedy. New York: Edwin Mellen Press, 1989.

Moore, W. Usborne. Glimpses of the Next State (The Education of an Agnostic). London: Watts, 1911.

———. The Voices. London, 1913.

Moore, William L., and Charles Berlitz. The Philadelphia Experiment. New York: Grosset & Dunlap, 1979.

Moretti, Girolamo M. The Saints Through Their Handwriting. New York: Macmillan, 1964.

Morfill, W. R., trans. The Book of the Secrets of Enoch. Oxford, England: Clarendon Press, 1896.

Morgan, Harry T. Chinese Symbols and Superstitions. P. D. and Ione Perkins, 1942. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1972.

Morgan, J. V. The Welsh Religious Revival, 1904–05. London: Chapman & Hall, 1909.

Morgan, R. C. An Inquiry Into Table Miracles. Bath and London, 1853.

Morin, Jean-Baptiste. Astrologia Gallica. The Hague, Netherlands, 1661.

Morley, H. Jerome Cardan. London, 1854.

The Morley-Martin Experiments. BSRA booklet No. 1. San Diego, Calif.: Borderland Sciences Research Associates, 1948.

Morrill, Sibley. Ambrose Bierce, F. A. Mitchell-Hedges and the Crystal Skull. San Francisco: Cadleon Press, 1972.

Morris, R. L., S. B. Harry, J. Janis, J. Hartwell, and William G. Roll. "Studies of Communication during Out-of-body Experiences." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 72 (1978).

Morris, Robert L. "The Amityville Horror." The Skeptical Inquirer Vol. 2, no. 2 (Spring/Summer 1978): 95–102.

———. "Biology and Psychical Research." Edited by Gertrude R. Schmeidler. In Parapsychology: Its Relation to Physics, Biology Psychology, and Psychiatry. N.p., 1976.

———. "Obtaining Non-Random Entry Points: A Complex Psi Process." In Parapsychology Today. Edited by J. B. Rhine and R. Brier. New York: Citadel Press, 1968.

———. "PK on a Bio-Electrical System." In Parapsychology Today. Edited by J. B. Rhine and R. Brier. New York: Citadel Press, 1968.

———. "The Psychobiology of Psi." In Psychic Exploration. Edited by E. D. Mitchell. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1974.

———. "Some New Techniques in Animal Psi Research." Journal of Parapsychology 31 (December 1967).

Morrison, R. J. An Introduction to Astrology by William Lilly, being the whole of that Celebrated Author's Rules for the Practice of Horory Astology . . . London, 1835. Reprint, Hollywood, Calif.: Newcastle Publishing, 1972.

Morrison, Sarah Lyddon. The Modern Witch's Spellbook. New York: David McKay, 1971.

Morrison, Tony. Pathways to the Gods: The Mystery of the Andes Lines. London: Granada Publishing, 1980.

Morrow, Feliz. "The Quest for Montague Summers." In The Vampire: His Kith and Kin, by Montague Summer. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1960.

Morse, J. J. Leaves From My Life: A Narrative of Personal Experiences in the Career of a Servant of the Spirits. N.p., 1877.

Morse, Louise. The Living Water. Richardson, Tex.: Morse Fellowship, 1970.

Morselli, Enrico. I fenomei telepatici e le allucinazioni veridiche. N.p., 1897.

———. Psicologia e 'Spiritismo': Impressioni e note Critiche sui fenomeni medianici di Eusapia Palladino. 2 vols. Turin: Boca, 1908.

Moseley, James W. "Peruvian Desert Map for Saucers?" Fate 8, no. 10 (October 1055): 28–33.

Moses, W. Stainton. Direct Spirit Writing (Psychography). London, 1878. Reprint, London: Psychic Book Club, 1952.

———. Spirit Identity. London: London Spiritualist Alliance, Ltd., 1908.

———. Spirit Teachings. London, 1883. Reprint, North Stratford, N. H.: Ayer Co. Publishers, 1976.

Moss, Peter. Ghost Over Britain. UK: Elm Tree Books, 1977.

Moss, Thelma. The Body Electric: A Personal Journey into the Mysteries of Parapsychological Research, Bioenergy, and Kirlian Photography. London: Granada, 1981.

———. "ESP Effects in 'Artists' Contrasted with Non-Artists." Journal of Parapsychology 33 (1969).

Motoyama, Hiroshi, and Rande Brown. Science and the Evolution of Consciousness: Chakras, Ki, and Psi. Brookline, Mass.: Autumn Press, 1978.

Motta, Marcelo. Letter to a Brazilian Mason. Nashville, Tenn.: Troll Publishing, 1980.

———. Manifesto. Nashville, Tenn.: Society Ordo Templi Orientis in America, 1978.

———. The Political Aims of the O.T.O. Nashville, Tenn.: Ordo Templi Orientis in America, 1980.

———. Thelemic Political Morality. Nashville, Tenn.: Society Ordo Templi Orientis in America, 1978.

Motzki, Harald. "Shamanismus als Problem religionswissenschaftlicher Terminologie". In Arbeitsmaterialien zur Religionsgeschichte vol. 2, Köln, 1977.

Moum, Margaret R. Guidebook to the Aquarian Gospel of Jesus the Christ. Washington, D.C.: ESPress, 1974.

Muhaiyadden, Guru Bawa, Shaikh. God, His Prophets, and His Children. Philadelphia: Fellowship Press, 1978.

———. Guidebook. 2 vols. Philadelphia: Fellowship Press, 1976.

———. Mata Veeram, or the Forces of Illusion. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1982.

———. Truth and Light. Philadelphia: Guru Bawa Fellowship of Philadelphia, 1974.

Muhammad ibn Umail al-Tamini. Three Arabic Treatises on Alchemy. Calcutta: Asiatic Society of Bengal, 1933.

Muhammad-Subuh Sumohadiwidjojo. Susila Budhi Dharma. Subud Publications International, 1975.

Mühl, Anita M. Automatic Writing: An Approach to the Unconscious. Steinkopff, 1930. Reprint, New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Muktananda, Swami. Guru. New York: Harper & Row, 1971.

———. In the Company of a Siddha: Interviews and Conversations with Swami Muktananda. Ganeshpuri, India: Gurudev Siddha Peth, 1981.

———. Kundalini: The Secret of Life. South Fallsburg, N.Y.: SYDA Foundation, 1979.

———. The Perfect Relationship: The Guru and the Disciple. South Fallsburg, N.Y.: SYDA Foundation, 1980.

———. Play of Consciousness. New York: Harper & Row, 1974.

———. Satsang with Baba. Oakland, Calif.: S.T.D.A., 1975.

Mulacz, Peter. "Eleonore Zugun: The Reevaluation of a Historic RSPK Case," Journal of Parapsychology 63, no. 1 (March 1999): 15–45.

Muldoon, Sylvan, and Hereward Carrington. The Case for Astral Projection. 1936. Reprint, Chicago: Aries Press, 1946.

———. The Phenomena of Astral Projection. London, 1951. Santa Fe, N.Mex.: Sun Publishing Co., 1981.

———. The Projection of the Astral Body. London, 1929. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1967.

Mulford, Prentice. Life by Land and Sea. New York: F. J. Needham, 1889.

———. Thought Forces. London: G. Bell & Sons, 1913.

———. Your Forces and How to Use Them. 6 vols. White Cross Library. New York: F. J. Needham, 1887–92.

Mulholland, John. Beware Familiar Spirits. London: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1938. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

Muller, Brigitte and Gunther H. Horst. A Complete Book of Reiki Healing. Mendocino, Calif.: LifeRhythm, 1995.

Müller, Karl E. "Aspects of Astral Projection." Introduction for F. C. Sculthorp. Excursions to the Spirit World. London: n.p., 1962.

Mullin, Albert A. "Some Apologies by a Cyberneticist." Journal of Parapsychology 23, no. 4 (1959).

Mullins, John. The Divining Rod and Its Results in Discovery of Springs. N.p., 1880.

Mumford, John. [Swami Anandakapila]. Sexual Occultism. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1975.

Mumford, Linda Anne. "An Expanded Psychological Understanding of Religious Glossolalia among Women," Dissertation Abstracts International: Section B: The Sciences & Engineering 56, no. 4-B (October 1995): 2386.

Mumford, Stan. Himalayan Dialogue: Tibetan Lamas and Gurung Shamans in Nepal. Madison: University of Wisconsin Press, 1989.

Mumler, William H. Personal Experiences of William H. Mumler in Spirit Photography. Boston, 1875.

Mundle, C. W. K. "The Experimental Evidence for Precognition and Psychokinesis." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 49 (July 1950).

———. "Is Psychical Research Relevant to Philosophy?" Proceedings, Aristotelian Society Supplemental Vol. 24 (1950).

———. "Philosophical Implications of ESP Phenomena." In Encyclopedia of Philosophy. Edited by P. Edwards. N.p. 1967.

———. "Professor Rhine's Views on Psychokinesis." Mind (July 1950).

———. "Selectivity in Extrasensory Perception." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (March 1951).

———. "Some Philosophical Perspectives for Parapsychology." Journal of Parapsychology (December 1952).

Murchison, Carl A., ed. The Case For and Against Psychical Belief. Worcester, Mass.: Clark University, 1927. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

Murphet, Howard. Hammer on the Mountain: Life of Henry Steel Olcott, 1832–1907. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1972.

———. Sai Baba Avatar. London, Frederick Muller, 1979.

———. Sai Baba, Man of Miracles. Levittown, N.Y.: Transatlantic Arts, 1972.

Murphy, Gardner. "Difficulties Confronting the Survival Hypothesis." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 39 (April 1945).

———. Historical Introduction to Modern Psychology. New York: Harcourt, Brace and World, 1925.

———. Human Potentialities. New York: Basic Books, 1958.

———. In the Minds of Men. New York: Basic Books, 1953.

———. Personality. New York: Harper & Row, 1947.

———. "Psychical Research and Personality." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (January 1950).

———. There Is More Beyond: Selected Papers of Gardner Murphy. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1989.

———. Three Papers on the Survival Problem. New York: American Society for Psychical Research, 1945.

———. "Triumphs and Defeats in the Study of Mediumship." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 52 (October 1957).

———. "W. Wately Carington: In Memoriam." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 41 (1947): 123.

Murphy, Gardner, and Rhea White. Challenge of Psychical Research: A Primer of Parapsychology. New York: Harper & Row, 1961.

Murphy, Gardner, and Robert Ballou. William James and Psychical Research. New York: Viking Press, 1960.

Murphy, Larry G., J. Gordon Melton, and Gary L. Ward. Encyclopedia of African American Religions. New York: Garland Publishing, 1993.

Murphy, Michael, and Rhea White. The Psychic Side of Sports. Reading, Mass.: Addison-Wesley, 1978.

Murphy, Robert F. "Mundurucú Religion." In American Archaeology and Ethnology (University of California Press) 49, no. 1 (1958): 1–154.

Murray, Gilbert. Gilbert Murray: An Unfinished Autobiography. London: Allen and Unwin, 1960.

Murray, Margaret A. My First Hundred Years. London: William Kimber, 1963.

———. The Witch-cult in Western Europe: A Study in Anthropology. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1921.

Murray, Muz. Seeking the Master: A Guide to the Ashrams of India. London: Neville Spearman, 1980.

Musès, Charles A. "Aspects of Some Crucial Problems in Biological and Medical Cybernetics." In Norbert Wiener and J. P. Schade, eds. Progress in Bio-Cybernetics. Vol. 2. 1975.

———. East-West Fire; Schopenhauer's Optimism and the Lankavatara Sutra: An Excursion toward the Common Ground between Oriental and Western Religion. London: J. M. Watkins, 1955.

———. Esoteric Teachings of the Tibetan Tantra. Falcon's Wing Press, 1961.

———. An Evaluation of Relativity Theory after a Half-Century. 1953.

———. Illumination of Jacob Boehme: The Work of Dionysius Andreas Freher. 1951.

———. "The Limits of Consciousness." Journal for the Study of Consciousness 1 (1968).

———. Prismatic Voices; An International Anthology of Distinctive New Poets. 1958.

———. "Psychotronic Quantum Theory; A Proposal for Understanding Mass/Space/Time/Consciousness Transductions in Terms of a Radically Extended Quantum Theory." Proceedings of International Association for Psychotronic Research, 1975.

———. "The Politics of Psi: Acculturation and Hypnosis." In Extrasensory Ecology, edited by Joseph K. Long. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1977.

Musès, Charles A., and A. M. Young, eds. Consciousness and Reality; the Human Pivot Point. New York: Outerbridge & Lazard, 1972.

Musso, J. Ricardo. En los Límites de la Psicología: Desde el Espiritismo hasta la Parapsicología (On the Frontiers of Psychology: From Spiritualism to Parapsychology). N.p., 1954.

———. "Il Movimiento Parapsicologico in Argentina" (The Parapsychology Movement in Argentina). International Review of Parapsychology (1956).

———. "Parapsychology in Argentina." Parapsychology Today: A Geographic View. Edited by Allan Angoff and Betty Shapin. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1973.

Musso, J. Ricardo, and M. Granero. "An ESP Drawing Experiment with a High-Scoring Subject." Journal of Parapsychology 37 (1973).

Myerhoff, Barbara G. Peyote Hunt: The Sacred Journey of the Huichol Indians. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1974.

Myers, Arthur Thomas. "Report on a Alleged Physical Phenomenon." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 3, no. 9 (1885).

Myers, Arthur Thomas, and F. W. H. Myers. "Mind-Cure, Faith-Cure, and the Miracles of Lourdes." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 9, no. 24 (1893).

Myers, F. W. H. Human Personality and its Survival of Bodily Death. 2 vols. London: Longmans, Green, 1903. Abridged edition, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1961.

———. "On the Trance Phenomena of Mrs. Thompson." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 17 (1902).

———. Science and a Future Life: With Other Essays. London: Macmillan, 1901.

Myers, F. W. H., Edmund Gurney, and Frank Podmore. Phantasms of the Living. London: Trubner, 1886.

Myers, Martin W. Unity, Not Uniformity. Chicago: URANTIA Foundation, 1973.

Mylonas, George E. Eleusis and the Eleusian Mysteries. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1961.

Mystic Helper, The. The Evolution of the Universe, or, Creation According to Science. Los Angeles: Cosmos Publishing, 1924.

Nada-Yolanda [Pauline Sharper]. Mark-Age Period and Program. MiaMich.: Mark-Age Metacenter, 1970.

Nagorka, Diane S. Spirit as Life Force. Washington, D.C.: ESPress, 1983.

Nakayama, M. Dynamic Karate. Cedar Knolls, N.J. Wehman, 1966.

Namikoshi, Tokujiro. Shiatsu. Tokyo: Japan Publications, 1969.

Nanking Army Ear Acupuncture Team. Ear Acupuncture: A Chinese Medical Report. Emmaus, Pa.: Rodale Press, 1974.

Napier, John. Bigfoot: The Sasquatch and Yeti in Myth and Reality. London: Jonathan Cape, 1972. Reprint, New York: E. P. Dutton, 1973. Reprint, London: Abacus, 1976.

Napier, James. Folklore, or Superstitious Beliefs in the West of Scotland, within this Century. Paisley, Scotland, 1879.

Narayana, Har, trans. The Vedic Philosophy; or, An Exposition of the Sacred and Mysterious Monosyllable AUM; The Mandukya Upanishad. Bombay, 1895.

Narayananda, Swami. The Primal Power in Man of the Kundalini Shakti. Risikesh, India: N. K. Prasad, 1950.

Nash, C. S. "Checking Success and the Relationship of Personality Traits to ESP." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 52 (1958).

———. "Experiments in Plant Growth." International Journal of Parapsychology (autumn 1959).

———. "Report on the Second Annual Convention of the Parapsychological Association." Newsletter, Parapsychology Foundation (September–October 1959).

Nash, C. S. "A Test of Adding Extrasensorially Perceived Digits." Journal of Parapsychology 23 (1959).

Nash, Carroll B. "Can Precognition Occur Diametrically?" Journal of Parapsychology 27 (1963).

———. Parapsychology: The Science of Psiology. Springfield, Ill.: Charles C. Thomas, 1986.

———. "Psi and Probability Theory." Science 120 (1954).

———. "Psychokinesis Reconsidered." Journal of Parapsychology 45 (1951).

———. Science of Psi: ESP and PK. Springfield, Ill.: Charles C. Thomas, 1978.

Nash, Carroll B. "The Unorthodox Science of Parapsychology." International Journal of Parapsychology 1 (1959).

Nash, Carroll B., and C. S. Nash. "An Exploratory Analysis for Displacement in PK." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 50 (1956).

———. "Relation Between ESP Scoring and Minnesota Multiphasic Personality Inventory." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 60 (1960).

Nash, Carrol B., and M. G. Durkin. "Correlation Between ESP and Religious Value." Journal of Parapsychology 22 (1958).

The National Spiritualist Association of United States of America. One Hundredth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism. Chicago: The Author, 1948.

Nau, Abbé F. "Recueil de textes et de documents sur les Yézidis." ROC 2, no. 10 (1915–17).

Nauman, St. Elmo, Jr. Exorcism Through the Ages. New York: Philosophical Library, 1974.

Naylor, P. I. H. Astrology: A Fascinating History. N. Hollywood, Calif.: Wilshire Book Co. 1970.

Naylor, William, ed. Silver Birch Anthology. London: Psychic Book Club, 1955.

Neale, Hazel. Powerful Is the Light. Denver: Divine Science College, 1945.

Neame, Alan. The Happening at Lourdes. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1968.

Needleman, Jacob. The New Religions. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1970.

Neff, H. Richard. Psychic Phenomena and Religion: ESP, Prayer, Healing, Survival. Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1971.

Neihardt, John G. All Is But a Beginning. New York: Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich, 1972.

———. Patterns and Coincidents: A Sequel to All Is but a Beginning. Columbia: University of Missouri Press, 1978.

———. The Sixth Grandfather: Black Elk's Teachings given to John G. Neihardt. Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 1984.

———. When the Tree Flowered: The Fictional Biography of Eagle Voice, a Sioux Indian. Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 1970.

Neil-Smith, Christopher. The Exorcist and the Possessed: The Truth about Exorcism. Cornwall, England: James Pike, 1974. Reprint, New York: Pinnacle Books, 1974.

Neimark, Anne E. With This Gift: The Story of Edgar Cayce. New York: William Morrow, 1978.

Neoplatonism and Gnosticism. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1992.

Nepomnyashchikh, I. A. " 'Biofields,' 'Geofields' and Dowsing," PSI Research 4, no. 3-4 (September-December 1985): 195–199.

Nesfeld-Cookson, Bernard. William Blake: Prophet of Universal Brotherhood. UK: Crucible, 1987.

Nester, Marian L. "New Methods of Parapsychology." Tomorrow 9, no. 4 (1961).

Nethercot, A. H. The First Five Lives of Annie Besant. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1961.

———. The Last Four Lives of Annie Besant. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1963.

———. The Road to Trye: A Study of the History, Background, and Purposes of Coleridge's "Christabel." Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1939. Reprint, New York: Russell & Russell, 1962.

Neuburg, Victor E. Vickybird: A Memoir by His Son. London: The Polytechnic of North London, 1983.

The New Age Resources Directory. Fullerton, Calif.: Goddess Press, 1994.

The New Consciousness Sourcebook, #5. Berkeley, Calif.: Spiritual Community Publications, 1982. Rev. ed. Pomona, Calif.: Arcline, 1985.

New Pilgrims of the Spirit. Boston: Beacon Press, 1921.

Newbold, William R. The Cipher of Roger Bacon. Philadelphia, Pa.: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1928.

———. "Subconscious Reasoning." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 12 (1896).

Newbrough, John Ballou. Oahspe. New York; London: Oahspe Publishing Association, 1882. Reprint, Los Angeles: Essenes of Kosmon, 1950.

Newcomb, Simon. Reminiscences of an Astronomer. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin, 1903.

Newham, C. A. The Astronomical Significance of Stonehenge. UK: John Blackburn, 1972.

Newhouse, Flower A. Natives of Eternity. Vista, Calif.: The Author, 1950.

Ni, Hua-Ching. The Subtle Universal Law and the Integral Way of Life. Malibu, Calif.: Shrine of the Eternal Breath of Tao, 1979.

Niblo. The Complete Palmist. 1900. Reprint, North Hollywood, Calif.: Newcastle, 1982.

Nichol, Francis D. The Midnight Cry. Washington, D.C.: Review & Herald Publishing Association, 1944.

Nicholas Roerich, 1874–1947. New York: Nicholas Roerich Museum, 1974.

Nichols, T. L. A Biography of the Brothers Davenport. London, 1864.

———. Supramundane Facts in the Life of the Rev. J. B. Ferguson. London, 1865.

Nicholson, Shirley, ed. Shamanism: An Expanded View of Reality. Wheaton, Ill: Theosophical Publishing House, 1987.

Nickell, Joe. Inquest on the Shroud of Turin. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Press, 1983.

Nickell, Joe, and John F. Fischer. Secrets of the Supernatural: Investigating the World's Occult Mysteries. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Press, 1988.

Nicol, J. Fraser. "The Founders of the Society for Psychical Research." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 55 (1972).

———. "The Fox Sisters and the Development of Spiritualism." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 34 (1948).

———. "The Silences of Mr. Trevor Hall." International Journal of Parapsychology 1, no. 1 (1966).

Nicola, John T. Diabolical Possession and Exorcism. Rockford, Ill.: TAN Books, 1974.

Nicolai, Christoph Friedrich. "An Account of the Apparition of Several Phantoms." The German Museum (1800).

Nicolas, Jean. La verge de Jacob, ou l'art de trouver les trésors les sources, les limites, les métaux, les mines, les minéraux et autres cachées, par l'usage du baton fourché. Lyons, France, 1693. Translated as Jacob's Rod. London: Thomas Welton, 1875.

Nicoll, Maurice. Dream Psychology. Oxford: Henry Frowde, 1917.

———. Living Time and the Integration of Life. London: Vincent Stuart, 1952.

———. The Mark (On the Symbolism of Various Passages from the Bible). London: Watkins, 1954.

———. The New Man: An Interpretation of Some Parables and Miracles of Christ. London: Start & Richard, 1950.

———. Psychological Commentaries on the Teaching of G. I. Gurdjieff and P. D. Ouspensky. 5 vols. London: Vincent Stuart, 1954, 1964, 1966.

Nielsen, Einer. Solid Proofs of Survival. Translated by Helmi Krohn. London: Psychic Book Club, 1950.

Nielsen, Greg, and Joseph Polansky. Pendulum Power: A Mystery You Can See, A Power you Can Feel. New York: Destiny Books, 1977; Wellingborough, UK: Excalibur, 1981.

Nielsen, Winnifred M. "An Exploratory Study in Precognition." Journal of Parapsychology (March 1956).

———. "Mental States Associated with Precognition." Journal of Parapsychology (June 1956).

Nieuwenhuis, A. W. "Principles of Indian Medicine in American Ethnology and Their Psychological Significance," Janus 28 (1924): 305–356.

Nightingale, Michael. The Healing Power of Acupuncture. New York: Javalin Books, 1986.

Nikhilananda, Swami. The Upanishads. 4 vols. London: Phoenix House, 1951–59; New York: Ramakrishna-Vivekananda Center,1975–1979.

Nikhilananda, Swami, trans. Mandukya Upanishad. Chicago: Vedanta Press, 1972.

Niklewski, Guenter. "Esoterik: Zeitgeist oder Zeitwende?" (Esotericism: Spirit of the Time or a Tendency of the Time?), Analytische Psychologie 22, no. 3 (October 1991): 174–190. Nilsson, Martin P. The Dionysian Mysteries of the Hellenistic and Roman Age. Lund, Sweden: C. W. K. Gleerup, 1957.

Nizida. The Astral Light. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1889. Reprint, Talent, Ore.: Eastern School Press, 1983.

Nolen, William. Healing: A Doctor in Search of a Miracle. New York: Random House, 1975.

Noll, Richard. "Shamanism and Schizophrenia: A State-specific Approach to the Schizophrenia Metaphor of Shamanic States," American Ethnologist 10, no. 3 (1983): 443–459.

———. Vampires, Werewolves, and Demons: Twentieth Century Reports in the Psychiatric Literature. New York: Brunner/Mazel, Inc., 1992.

Nomad, Ali. Cosmic Consciousness. Chicago, 1913.

Nordon, Pierre. Conan Doyle. London: John Murray, 1966.

Nordquist, Ted A. Ananda Cooperative Village. Upsala, Sweden: Borgstroms Tyckeri Ab, 1978.

Norris, David, and Jacquemine Charrott-Lodwidge. The Book of Spells. London: Lorrimer, 1974.

Northage, Ivy. The Mechanics of Mediumship. London: Spiritualist Association of Great Britain, 1973.

Norton, Robert. The Willow in the Tempest: A Brief History of the Liberal Catholic Church in the United States, 1817–1942. Ojai, Calif.: St. Alban Press, 1990.

Notestein, Wallace. A History of Witchcraft in England from 1558 to 1718. Washington, 1911. Reprint, New York: Russel & Russel, 1965.

Noyes, John Humphrey. Strange Cults & Utopias of 19th Century America. 1870. Reprinted as History of American Socialisms. New York: Dover Publications, 1966.

Noyes, Ralph. The Crop Circle Enigma. Santa Rosa, Calif.: Atrium Publishers Group, 1995.

Nu'aymah, Mikha'il. Kahlil Gibran: A Biography. New York: Quartet, 1988.

Nutt, Alfred. Studies on the Legend of the Holy Grail. London: Folklore Society, 1888. Reprint, New York: Cooper Square Publishers, 1965.

"Obituary and Tributes to Mrs. E. W. Allison." Journal of the ASPR vol. 53 (1959): 81.

O'Brien, Elmer. Varieties of Mystical Experience. New York: Holt, Rinehart, and Winston, 1964.

O'Carroll, Michael. Medjugorje: Facts, Documents, Theology. Dublin: Veritas, 1986.

O'Donnell, Elliott. Animal Ghosts. London, 1913.

———. The Banshee. London: Sands, 1920.

———. Byways of Ghostland. London, 1911.

———. Confessions of a Ghost Hunter. London, 1928.

———. Family Ghosts & Ghostly Phenomena. London: Philip Allan, 1933.

———. Ghostly Phenomena. London, n.d.

———. Ghosts Helpful & Harmful. London, 1924.

———. Haunted Places in England. London: Sands, 1919.

———. Strange Disappearances. London, 1927. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1972.

———. Werewolves. London, 1912. Rev. ed. New York: Wholesale Book Corp., 1972.

O'Keefe, Daniel Lawrence. Stolen Lightning: The Social Theory of Magic. New York: Continuum, 1982.

O'Kennedy, Rev. R. Book of the Holy Angels. London, 1887.

O'Neill, John J. Prodigal Genius: The Life of Nikola Tesla. London: Neville Spearman, 1968. Reprint, London: Granada, 1980.

O'Regan, Vivienne. The Pillar of Isis. London: Aquarian Press, 1993.

Ochorowicz, Julien. De la suggestion mentale. Paris, 1887. English edition as *Mental Suggestion.*New York: The Humbolt Publishing, 1891.

———. La Questione della frode negli Experimenti coll' Eusapia Palladino. Milan, 1896.

———. Mediumistic Phenomena. N.p., 1913.

———. Psychology and Medicine. N.p., 1916.

———. Psychology, Pedagogics, and Ethics. N.p., 1917.

Octavia. [Helen Exeter]. Healing for All: The "Joanna Southcott Healing." London: Panacea Society, 1925.

Oesterreich, Maria. Traugott Konstantin Oesterreich—Lebenswerk und Lebensschicksal. N.p., 1954.

Oesterreich, T. K. Die Bessessenheit. English ed. as Possession: Demoniacal and Other among Primitive Races, in Antiquity, the Middle Ages, and Modern Times. Translated by D. Ibberson. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1966.

———. Occultism and Modern Science. New York: McBride, 1923.

———. Occultism of the Present Day. London, 1922.

———. Possession, Demoniacal and Other. London: Kegan Paul; New York: R. R. Smith, 1930. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1966. Reprinted as Possession and Exorcism. New York: Causeway Books, 1974. N.p.: Brown Book Co., 1984.

Offner, C. B., and H. van Straelen. Modern Japanese Religions. Leyden, The Netherlands: E. J. Brill, 1963.

Ogden, Tom. Wizards & Sorcerers. New York: Facts on File, 1998.

Ohashi, Wataru. Do It Yourself Shiatsu. New York: ASI Publishing, 1976.

Ohlmarks, ¤'c5ke. Studien zum Problem des Schamanismus. Lund-Kopenhagen, 1939.

Olcott, Henry Steel. Old Diary Leaves. 4 vols. Reprinted as Inside the Occult: The True Story of Madame H. P. Blavatsky. Philadephia: Running Press, 1995.

———. People from the Other World. Hartford, Conn.: American Publishing Co., 1875. Reprint, Rutland, Vt.: Charles E. Tuttle, 1972.

Old, Walter [Sepahrial]. The Book of Charms and Talismans. N.p., 1974.

———. Book of the Crystal and the Seer. N.p., 1897.

———. Book of the Simple Way of Laotze. N.p., 1904.

———. The Kabala of Numbers. 2 vols. N.p., 1913. Revised ed., 1928.

———. A Manual of Occultism. N.p., 1910.

———. Prognostic Astronomy. N.p., 1901.

———. Second Sight. N.p., 1911.

———. What Is Theosophy? N.p., 1891.

Oliver, Ian P. Buddhism in Britain. London: Rider, 1979.

Oliver, Rev. George. The History of Initiation, in Twelve Lectures; comprising a Detailed Account of the Rites & Ceremonies, Doctrines and Discipline, of all the Secret and Mysterious Institutions of the Ancient World. London: Richard Spencer, 1829. Rev. ed. 1841.

Olivier, Edith. Four Victorian Ladies of Wiltshire. London: Faber & Faber, 1945.

Olson, Alan M., ed. Disguises of the Demonic: Contemporary Perspectives on the Power of Evil. New York: Association Press, 1975.

Olson, Carl. The Book of the Goddess, Past and Present. Philadelphia: J. P. Lippincott, 1983.

Oman, J. Campbell. Cults, Customs & Superstitions of India. London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1908.

———. The Mystics, Ascetics and Saints of India. London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1903.

Omez, Reginald. Psychical Phenomena. Translated by René e Haynes. New York: Hawthorn, 1958.

Omkarananda, Swami. In Sivananda Literature. Rishikesh, India: Sivananda Literature Research Institute, 1960.

"On the Experiments of Brugmans, Heymans, and Weinberg." European Journal of Parapsychology 2 (1978): 247.

Oosthuizen, Gehardus C. "The 'Newness' of the New Age in South Africa and Reactions to It." In Perspectives on the New Age, edited by James R. Lewis and J. Gordon Melton. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1992.

Oram, Arthur T. "An Experiment with Random Numbers." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (1954) 37; (1955) 38.

Ormand, Ron, and Gill Ormond. Into the Strange Unknown. Hollywood, Calif.: Esoteric Foundation, 1959. Reprinted as Religious Mysteries of the Orient. New York: A. S. Barnes, 1976.

Orme-Johnson, David W., and John T. Farrows, eds. Scientific Research on the Transcendental Meditation Program: Collected Papers, I. Seelisberg, Switzerland: Maharishi European Research University Press, 1977.

Ormont, Arthur. Love Cults & Faith Healers. New York: Ballantine Books, 1961.

Osborn, Arthur W. The Axis and the Rim: The Quest for Reality in a Modern Setting. London: V. Stuart, 1963.

———. The Cosmic Womb: An Interpretation of Man's Relationship to the Infinite. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1969.

———. The Expansion of Awareness: One Man's Search for Meaning in Living. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1967.

———. The Future Is Now: The Significance of Precognition. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1962. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1967.

———. The Meaning of Personal Existence in the Light of Paranormal Phenomena: The Doctrine of Reincarnation & Mystical States of Consciousness. London: Sidgwick and Jackson, 1966.

———. Occultism, Christian Science and Healing. 1926.

———. Superphysical: A Review of the Evidence for Continued Existence, Reincarnation, and Mystical States of Consciousness. Rev. ed. New York: Barnes & Noble; London: Frederick Muller, 1974.

———. What Am I Living For? 1974.

Osborn, Edward Collet. "The Woman in Brown, an Investigation of an Apparition." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (1939).

Osborn, Edward Collet, and C. C. Evans. "An Experiment in the Electro-Encephalography of Mediumistic Trance." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (1952).

Osborne, Arthur. The Incredible Sai Baba. New Delhi: Orient Longmans, 1957.

———. Ramana Maharshi and the Path of Self-Knowledge. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1970.

Osborne, Arthur., ed. The Teachings of Ramana Maharshi. 1963. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1978.

Osis, Karlis. "ESP Tests at Long and Short Distances." Journal of Parapsychology 20, 2 (1956).

———. "Out-of-the-Body Research at the ASPR." ASPR Newsletter 22 (1974),

———. "A Test of the Relationship Between ESP and PK." Journal of Parapsychology 17, 4 (1953).

———. "What Did The Dying See?" ASPR Newsletter 24 (1975).

Osis, Karlis, and Erlendur Haraldsson. At the Hour of Death. New York: Avon Books, 1977. Rev. ed.: New York: Hasting House, 1986.

———. "Deathbed Observations by Physicians and Nurses: A Cross-cultural Survey." In Signet Handbook of Parapsychology, edited by Martin Ebon. New York: New American Library, 1978.

Osis, Karlis, and M. E. Turner. "Distance and ESP: A Transcontinental Experiment." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 27 (1968).

Osis, Karlis, M. E. Turner, and M. L. Carlson. "ESP Over Distance: Research on the ESP Channel." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 65 (1971).

Osmond, Humphrey. "A Call for Imaginative Theory." International Journal of Parapsychology (Autumn 1959).

Osmond, Humphrey, and Abram Hoffer. The Chemical Basis of Clinical Psychiatry. Springfield, Ill.: Thomas, 1960.

———. The Hallucinogens. New York: Academic Press, 1967.

Osmond, Humphrey, and Bernard Aaronson. Psychedelics: The Uses and Implications of Hallucinogenic Drugs. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1970. Cambridge, Mass.: Schenkman, 1971.

Osmond, Humphrey, H. Yaker, and F. Cheek. The Future of Time: Man's Temporal Environment. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1971.

Osmont, Anne. Envoutements et exorcisms à travers le ages (Sorcery and Exorcism Through the Ages) N.p., 1954.

———. Le Mouvement Symboliste (The Symbolist Movement). Paris: Maison du livre, 1917.

———. Le Rythme Créateur de forces et de formes (The Creative Rhythm of Forces and Forms). Paris: Les Editions de Champselysees, 1942.

Ossendowski, Ferdinand. Beasts, Men, and Gods. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1922.

Ostrander, Sheila, and Lynn Schroeder. Handbook of Psi Discoveries. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1974. Reprint, New York: Berkeley Publishing, 1975. Reprint, London: Abacus, 1977.

———. Psychic Discoveries Behind the Iron Curtain. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1970. Reprint, New York: Bantam, 1971. Reprinted as Psi: Psychic Discoveries Behind the Iron Curtain. London: Abacus 1973.

Ostow, Mortimer. Ultimate Intimacy: The Psychodynamics of Jewish Mysticism. Madison, Conn.: International Universities Press, Inc., 1995.

Osty, Eugene. "Un Homme doué de connaissance paranormale: M. Ludwig Kahn." Revue Métapsychique (March–April, May–June, 1925).

———. Une Facultéde connaissance Supra-Normal. (Super Normal Faculties in Man). Paris: Felix Alcan, 1926.

———. Supernormal Faculties in Man: An Experimental Study. London: Methuen, 1923.

Osty, Marcel. "Eugene Osty: Pioneer Researcher." Tomorrow. 7, 1 (1959).

Otani, Soji. "The Aim of Parapsychology." Journal of Psychical Research and Spiritualism (1955).

———. "The Method of ESP Card Testing." Journal of Psychical Research and Spiritualism (1951).

———. "Past and Present Situation of Parapsychology in Japan." In Parapsychology Today: A Geographic View. Edited by Allan Angoff and Betty Shapin. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1973.

———. "Relations of Mental Set and Change of Skin Resistance to ESP Scores." Journal of Parapsychology (1955).

———. "Studies on the Influence of Mental and Physiological Conditions Upon ESP Function." Journal of the Department of Liberal Arts (Defense Academy) (1959).

———. "A Survey of Public Opinion on Psychical Phenomena" Journal of Psychical Research and Spiritualism (1951).

Ott, Jonathan. Ayahuasca Analogues: Pangaean Entheogens. Kennewick, Wash.: Natural Products Co., [1994] 1995.

———. Hallucinogenic Plants of North America. Berkeley, Calif.: Wingbow Press, [1976] 1979.

———. The Age of Entheogens & The Angels' Dictionary. Kennewick, Wash.: Natural Products Co., 1995.

———. Pharmacotheon: Entheogenic Drugs, Their Plant Sources and History, 2nd ed. (Kennewick, Wash.: Natural Products Co., 1996).

Oudemans, A. C. The Loch Ness Animal. Leyden, 1934.

Ousby, W. J. A Complete Course of Auto-Hypnosis—Self Hypnotism and Auto-Suggestion. London & Durban, 1950.

———. Methods of Inducing and Using Hypnosis. London, 1951.

———. The Theory and Practice of Hypnotism. London, 1967.

Ouseley, S. G. J. The Science of the Auras. London: L. N. Fowler, 1970.

Ouspensky, P. D. The Fourth Way. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1953.

———. A New Model of the Universe. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1931.

———. In Search of the Miraculous. New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1949.

———. Tertium Organum; the Third Canon of Thought; a Key to the Enigmas of the World. Rochester, N.Y.: Manas Press, 1920.

Outline of the Principle, Level 4. New York: Holy Spirit Association for the Unification of World Christianity, 1980.

Ouvaroff, M. Essay on the Mysteries of Eleusis. London: Rodwell & Martin, 1817.

Oved, Yaacov. Two Hundred Years of American Communes. New Brunswick, N.J.: Transaction Publications, 1993.

Owen, A. R. G. Can We Explain the Poltergeist? New York: Garrett Publications; New York: Helix Press, 1964.

———. Hysteria, Hypnosis, and Healing. 1971.

———. Psychic Mysteries of Canada. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

Owen, A.R.G. and J. Whitton. "Proceedings of the First Canadian Conference on Psychokinesis." New Horizons (1975).

Owen, A. R. G., J. P. Rindge, and W. Cook. "An Investigation of Psychic Photography with the Beilleux Family." New Horizons (1972).

Owen, G. Vale. Problems Which Perplex (Mainly Psychic) Explained by Question & Answer. N.p., 1890. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

Owen, George Vale. Facts and the Future Life. London: Hutchinson & Co., 1922.

———. How Spirits Communicate. N.p., n.d.

———. Jesus the Christ. N.p., 1929.

———. The Life Beyond the Veil. 5 vols. London: Greater World Association, 1926.

———. What Happens After Death. London: Hutchinson & Co., 1924.

Owen, George Vale, and H. A. Dallas. The Nurseries of Heaven. (1920).

Owen, Iris M., and Margaret Sparrow. Conjuring Up Philip; An Adventure in Psychokinesis. New York: Harper and Row, 1976.

Owen, Iris M., and P. Mitchell. "The Alleged Haunting of Borley Rectory." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 50 (1979).

Owen, J. J. Psychography: Marvelous Manifestations of Psychic Power Given Through The Mediumship of Fred P. Evans. San Francisco, 1893.

Owen, Robert Dale. The Debatable Land Between this World and the Next. London: Trubner, 1871.

———. Footfalls on the Boundaries of Another World. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott, 1860.

———. The Life of Robert Owen. 2 vols. Hamden, Conn.: Archon Books, 1966.

———. Threading My Way; Twenty-Seven Years of Autobiography. 1874. Reprint, New York: A. M. Kelley, 1967.

Owens, Ted. Flying Saucer Intelligences Speak: A Message to the American People from the Flying Saucer Intelligences. New Brunswick, N.J.: Interplanetary News Service, [1966].

———. How to Contact Space People. Clarksburg, W.Va.: Saucerian Books, 1969.

Oxley, William. Angelic Revelations. 5 vols. N.p., 1885.

———. Modern Messiahs and Wonder Workers. London: Trubner, 1889.

Oxon, M. A. [Stainton Moses]. Higher Aspects of Spiritualism. N.p., 1880.

———. Psychography; or, A Treatise on the Objective Forms of Psychic or Spiritual Phenomena. N.p., 1878. Reprinted as Direct Spirit Writing. N.p., 1952.

Ozanne, Charles. "A Layman Looks at Psychical Research." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (April 1942).

———. "Significance of "Non-Evidential" Material in Psychical Research." Hibbert Journal (October 1913).

———. La decadence esrhétique. Paris: Dalou, 1888.

———. Le Vice supreme. Paris: Labrairie de la Presse, Laurens, 1886.

Padgett, James E. True Gospel Revealed Anew by Jesus. 4 vols. Washington, D.C.: Foundation Church of the New Birth, 1958–72.

Pagal Baba. Temple of the Phallic King: The Mind of India; Yogis, Swamis, Sufis, and Avataras. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1973.

Page, Charles G. Psychomancy; Spirit Rappings and Tippings Exposed. New York, 1853.

Pagel, Walter. Paracelsus: An Introduction to Philosophical Medicine in the Era of the Renaissance. New York: Karger, 1982.

Pagenstecher, Gustav. Die Geheimnisse der Psychometrie oder Hellsehen in die Vergangenheit (Secrets of Psychometry or Clairvoyance into the Past). N.p., 1928.

———. "A Notable Psychometrist." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 14 (1920).

———. "Past Events Seership." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 16 (January 1922).

Paine, Albert Bigelow. Mark Twain. 3 vols. N.p., 1912.

Paley, John. "Satanist Abuse and Alien Abduction: A Comparative Analysis Theorizing Temporal Lobe Activity as a Possible Connection Between Anomalous Memories," British Journal of Social Work 27, no. 1 (February 1997): 43–70.

Pallas Athena and the Master Hilarion Speak. Part I: The Master Hilarion. Kings Park, N.Y.: Bridge to Freedom, 1975.

Palmer, Edward, "Plants Used by the Indians of the United States," American Naturalist 12 (1878): 593–606, 646–655.

Palmer, John. "Explorations with the Perceptual ESP Test," Journal of Parapsychology 58, no. 2 (June 1994): 115–147.

———. "External Psi Influence on ESP Task Performance," Journal of Parapsychology 60, no. 3 (September 1996): 193–210.

———. The Perceptual ESP Test in a Religious Context. Research in Parapsychology, 1993: Abstracts and Papers from the Thirty-sixth Annual Convention of the Parapsychological Association, 1993. Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, Inc., 1998.

Palmer, Philip M., and Robert P. More. Sources of the Faust Tradition from Simon Magus to Lessing. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1936. Reprint, New York: Haskell House, 1965.

Palmer, Ray. "Invitation to Adventure." The Hidden World A–1 (Spring 1961): 4–14.

Palos, Stephan. The Chinese Art of Healing. New York: Herderand Herder, 1971.

Pan, Shinhwan. "A Psychological Study of Divine and Parental Images of Korean Protestant Glossolalists in Comparison to Nonglossolalists," Dissertation Abstracts International Section A: Humanities & Social Sciences 56, no. 12-A (June 1996): 4816.

Panacea Society. Transactions of the Panacea Society with the Archbishops and Bishops of the Church of England with Reference to Joanna Southcott. London: Panacea Society, 1935.

Panati, Charles, ed. The Geller Papers: Scientific Observations on the Paranormal Powers of Uri Geller. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1976.

Pancoast, S. The Kabbala: or True Science of Light. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1992.

Pandit, Madhav Pundalik. Traditions in Mysticism. New Delhi, India: Sterling, 1987.

Paper, J., "From Shaman to Mystic in Ojibwa Religion," Studies in Religion no. 2 (1980): 185–199.

Papish, Mary, and Daniel Papish. We Are Servants of Master M. Ojai, Calif.: Hanuman Publications, 1973.

Papus. Le tarot divinatoire (The divinatory tarot). 1909. Reprint, Paris: Dangles, 1969.

———. The Qabalah. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1977.

———. Traité élémentaire de science occulte (Elementary treatise on occult science). 10th ed. Paris: A. Michel, 1926.

———. Traité méthodique de magie pratique (Systematic treatise on practical magic). 1924. Reprint, Paris: Dangles, 1969.

Papus [G. Encausse]. Le Diable et l'occultisme. Paris, 1895.

Papusérard Encausse. Le tarot des bohémiens. 1889. Revised edition as The Tarot of the Bohemians. Translated by A. P. Morton. Edited by A. E. Waite. London: Rider & Son, 1910.

Paracelsus. The Archidoxes of Magic. Translated by Robert Turner. London, 1656. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1975.

Paranjpe, A. C. "Parapsychology and Patanjali's Yoga," Journal of Indian Psychology 4, no. 2 (July 1985): 13–20.

Parapsychology, New Age & the Occult: A Source Encyclopedia. Teeswater, ON, Canada: Reference Press International, 1994.

Parchment, S. R. Ancient Operative Masonry. San Francisco: San Francisco Center—Rosicrucian Fellowship, 1930. Life Science Institute, 1991.

———. Astrology, Mundane and Spiritual. San Francisco: Anthroposophical Rosicrucian League, 1933.

———. The Just Law of Compensation. San Francisco: San Francisco Center—Rosicrucian Fellowship, 1932.

———. Steps to Self-Mastery. Oceanside, Calif.: Fellowship Press, 1927.

Parfitt, Will, and A. Drylie. A Crowley Cross-Index. Avon, England: ZRO, 1976.

Parish, Edmund. Hallucinations and Illusions: A Study of the Fallacies of Perception. London: Walter Scott Publishing, 1897.

Parke, Herbert W. Greek Oracles. London: Hutchinson, 1967.

———. Oracles of Zeus. Oxford: Blackwell, 1967.

Parke, Herbert W., and Donals Ernest Wilson Wormell. The Delphic Oracles. Oxford: Blackwell, 1956.

Parker, Gail. Mind Cure in New England. Hanover, N.H.: University Press of New England, 1973.

Parker, Thomas W. The Knights Templars in England. Tucson: University of Arizona Press, 1963.

Parot, Francoise. "Psychology Experiments: Spiritism at the Sorbonne," Journal of the History of the Behavioral Sciences 29, no. 1 (January 1993): 22–28.

Parrinder, Geoffrey. African Traditional Religion. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1962. Reprint, London: Sheldon Press, 1974. Reprint, New York: Harper, 1977.

Parrish-Harra, Carol W. A New Age Handbook on Death and Dying. Marina del Rey, Calif.: DeVorss, 1982.

———. Messengers of Hope. Black Mountain, N.C.: New Age Press; Marina del Rey, Calif.: DeVors; Tahleqhuah, Okla.: Sparrow Hawk Press, 1983.

Parrott, Ian. The Music of "An Adventure." London: Regency Press, 1966.

Parsons, Denys. "Attempts to Detect Clairvoyance and Telepathy with a Mechanical Device." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 48 (1946).

———. "Cloud Busting: A Claim Investigated." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 38, 690 (December 1956).

———. "Experiments on PK with Inclined Plane and Rotating Cage." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 47 (1945).

———. "A Nonexistent Building Located." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 41 (July 1962).

———. "On the Need for Caution in Assessing Mediumistic Material." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 48 (1949).

Parsons, William B. The Enigma of the Oceanic Feeling: Revisioning the Psychoanalytic Theory of Mysticism. New York: Oxford University Press, 1999.

Partanen, Jorma, "A Description of Buriat Shamanism" (translation of Text No. VIII in Pozdneyev's Mongolian Chrestomathy), Journal de la Société Finno-Ougrienne vol. 51 (1941–42).

Partner, Peter. The Murdered Magicians: The Templars and their Myth. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1981. Reprint, N.p.: Crucible, 1987.

Pasche, Francis. "Freud et la mystique" (Freud and mysticism), Revue Francaise de Psychanalyse 59, no. 1 (January-March 1995): 27–39.

Pasqually, Martines de. Traité de la réintegration des etres. Paris: Chacorac, 1899.

Patai, Raphael. The Hebrew Goddess. New York: Ktav Publishing House, n.d.

Patanjali. The Yoga-Sutras of Patanjali. Translated by M. N. Dvidedi. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1890.

Patanjali, Bhagwan Shree. Aphorisms of Yoga. London: Faber, 1938.

Pater, Thomas. Miraculus Abstinence: A Study of the Extraordinary Mystical Phenomena. Washington, D.C.: Catholic University of Medica, 1946.

Pathways to Wholeness: A Healing Guide. Berkeley, Calif.: Clear Light Publications, 1975.

Patrick, C. V. The Case Against Spirit Photography. London: Kegan Paul, 1921.

Patterson, Tom. 100 Years of Spirit Photography. London: Regency Press, 1965.

Patton, William P. Prayer and Its Answers. New York, 1885.

Pauwels, Louis, and Jacques Bergier. Der Planet der unmöglichen Möglichkeiten. Bern: Scherz Verlag, 1968. English edition as Impossible Possibilities. New York: Stein and Day, 1971.

———. The Eternal Man. London: Souvenir, 1972.

———. Impossible Possibilities. New York: Stein and Day, 1971.

———. Le Matin des magiciens. Paris: Editions Gallimard, 1960. Translated as The Dawn of Magic. London: Anthony Gibbs and Phillips, 1963. Reprinted as The Morning of the Magicians. New York: Stein and Day, 1964.

Pauwels, Louis. Gurdjieff. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1972.

Pavitt, William T., and Kate Pavitt. The Book of Talismans, Amulets, and Zodiacal Gems. London: Rider, 1914. Reprint, Detroit: Tower Books, 1971. Reprint, North Hollywood, Calif.: Wilshire Publishing, 1972.

Pealian, Gerhard. Nicholas Roerich. Agoura, Calif.: Aquarian Education Group, 1974.

Pearce-Higgins, John D. Life, Death and Psychical Research: Studies on Behalf of the Churches' Fellowship for Psychical and Spiritual Studies. London: Rider, 1973.

Pearsall, Ronald. Table-Rappers. London: Joseph, 1972. Reprint, New York: St. Martin's Press, 1972.

Pearson, E. Norman. Space, Time and Self. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1957.

Pearson, Hesketh. Conan Doyle, His Life and Art. London: Methuen, 1943.

Peat, David. In Search of Nikola Tesla. Bath, England: Ashgrove Press, 1983.

Peatman, John G., and Eugene L. Hartley, eds. Festschrift for Gardner Murphy. N.p., 1960.

Pechlin, J. N. Observationes Physico-Medicae. Hamburg, Germany, 1691.

Pederson-Krag, Geraldine H. "Telepathy and Repression." Psychoanalytic Quarterly 16 (1947).

Pedlar, Kit. Quest for Gaia. UK: Sovereign Press, 1979.

Peebles, James M. Around the World: or, Travels in Polynesia, China, India, Arabia, Egypt, Syria. Boston: Colby & Rich, 1875.

———. Celebration of the Fiftieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism at Its Birthplace. Battle Creek, Mich.: The Author, 1898.

———. The Demonism of the Ages, Spirit Obsessions So Common in Spiritism, Oriental and Occidental Occultism. Battle Creek, Mich.: Peebles Medical Institute, 1904.

———. Five Journeys around the World: or, Travels in the Pacific Islands, New Zealand, Australia, Ceylon, India, Egypt and Other Oriental Countries. Los Angeles: Peebles Publishing, 1910.

———. Seers of the Ages. 1869. Reprint, Chicago: Progressive Thinker, 1905.

Peebles, James M., Helen Densmore, and W. J. Colville. Reincarnation; or the Doctrine of "Soul's" Successive Embodiment. Battle Creek, Mich.: Peebles Medical Institute, 1904.

Peek, Philip M., ed. African Divination Systems. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1991.

Peel, Edgar. The Trials of the Lancashire Witches: A Study of Seventeenth-Century Witchcraft. Nelson, England: Hendon Publishing, 1985.

Peel, Robert. Mary Baker Eddy. 3 vols. New York: Holt Rinehart & Winston, 1971.

Peiris, William. The Western Contribution to Buddhism. Delhi, India: Motilal Banarsidass, 1953.

Péladan, Joséphin. Comment on devient mage. Paris, 1892.

Pelletier, Joseph A. The Queen of Peace Visits Medjugorje. Worchester, Mass.: Assumption, 1985.

Pelletier, Kenneth R. Mind as Healer/Mind as Slayer: A Holistic Approach to Preventing Stress Disorder. New York: Delta, 1977.

Pelletier, Robert A. God Speaks at Garabandal. Worcester, Mass.: Assumption, 1970.

———. The Sun Dances at Garabandal. Worcester, Mass.: Assumption, 1973.

Pelton, Robert W. Ancient Secrets of Fortune-Telling. South Brunswick, N.J.: A. S. Barnes, 1976.

Penelhum, Terence. Survival and Disembodied Existence. New York: Humanities Press, 1970.

Peng, Therese (Chu-Kiaw). "Meditation and Psycho-Spiritual Transformation: A Phenomenological Study of Ch'an (Zen) Buddhism and Christian Mysticism," Dissertation Abstracts International: Section B: The Sciences & Engineering 54, no. 11-B (1994): 5928.

Pennant, Thomas. A Tour in Scotland and Voyage to the Hebrides, MDCCLXXII. 1774. Reprint, Chester, UK: J. Monk, 1969.

Pennell, Elizabeth. Charles Godfrey Leland. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin, 1906.

Pennick, Nigel. Geomancy. Cambridge, Conn.: Cokayne Publishing, 1973.

———. Oracle of Geomancy. Edmonds, Wash.: Holmes Publishing Group, 1995.

Percival, Harold W. Democracy Is Self-Government. New York: Word Publishing, 1952.

———. Man and Woman and Child. New York: Word Publishing, 1951.

———. Masonry and Its Symbols. New York: Word Publishing, 1952.

———. Thinking of Destiny. New York: Word Publishing, 1946.

Pereira, Jose, ed. Hindu Theology: A Reader. Garden City, N.Y.: Image Books, 1976.

Perkins, Lynn F. The Masters as New Age Mentors. Lakemont, Ga.: CSA Press, 296.

Perkins, Mary, and Philip Hainsworth. The Baha'i Faith. London: Ward Lock Educational, 1980.

Permutt, Cyril. Beyond the Spectrum: A Survey of Supernormal Photography. Cambridge, England: Patrick Stephens, 1983.

Perovsky-Petrovo-Solovovo, Count. "My Experiments with S. F. Sambor." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 30 (1937).

———. "On the Production of Spurious 'Spirit Raps.' " Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 6 (1893).

Perriman, A. E. Broadcasting From Beyond. London, 1952.

Perriman, Florence. Secrets of a Famous Clairvoyante. London, 1936.

Perry, Lewis. "Adin Ballou's Hopedale Community and the Theology of Anti-slavery." Church History 39 (September 1970): 372–389.

Perry, Michael C. Crisis for Confirmation. N.p., 1967.

———. The Eastern Enigma. N.p., 1959.

———. Meet the Prayer Book. N.p., 1963.

———. "A New View of the Resurrection." Tomorrow (Summer 1954).

———. "Parapsychology in Apologetics." Church Quarterly Review (January 1959).

———. The Pattern of Matins & Evensong. N.p., 1961.

———. The Resurrection of Man. N.p., 1975.

———. Sharing in One Bread. N.p., 1980.

Perry, Nicholas, and Loreto Echeverria. Under the Heel of Mary. London: Routledge, 1988.

Persinger, Michael A. "Striking EEG Profiles from Single Episodes of Glossolalia and Transcendental Meditation," Perceptual & Motor Skills 58, no. 1 (February 1984): 127–133.

———. "Subjective Telepathic Experiences, Geomagnetic Activity and the ELF Hypothesis: II. Stimulus Features and Neural Detection," PSI Research 4, no. 2 (June 1985): 4–23.

Persinger, Michael A. and George B. Schaut. "Geomagnetic Factors in Subjective Telepathic, Precognitive, and Postmortem Experiences," Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 82, no. 3 (July 1988): 217–235.

Perty, Maximilien. Die Mystischen Erscheinungen der menschlichen Natur. 2nd ed., Leipzig and Heidelberg, 1872.

Peschel, Lisa. The Runes. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1989.

Peters, Edward. Inquisition. New York: Free Press, 1988.

———. The Magician, the Witch, and the Law. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1978.

Peters, Larry. Ecstasy and Healing in Nepal: An Ethnopsychiatric Study of Tamang Shamanism. Malibu, Calif.: Undena Publications, 1981.

Peters, Larry G. and Douglas Price-Williams. "Towards an Experiential Analysis of Shamanism," American Ethnologist vol. 7: 397–418.

Petitot, Émile. Les Grands Esquimaux. N.p., 1887.

Petitpierre, Dom Robert. Exorcism: The Findings of a Commission Convened by the Bishop of Exeter. London: Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1972.

Pettigrew, T. J. On Superstitions connected with the History and Practice of Medicine and Surgery. N.p., 1844.

———. Superstitions Connected with Medicine or Surgery. N.p., 1844.

Pettiward, Cynthia. The Case for Possession. UK: Colin Smythe, 1975.

Petuchowski, Jacob J., ed. Understanding Jewish Prayer. New York: Ktav Publications, 1972.

Pfeifer, Samuel. "Belief in Demons and Exorcism in Psychiatric Patients in Switzerland," British Journal of Medical Psychology 67, no. 3 (September 1994): 247–258.

Pfungst, Oskar. Clever Hans (The Horse of Mr. Von Osten): A Contribution to Experimental Animal and Human Psychology. New York, 1911. Reprint, New York: Holt, Rinehart & Winston, 1965.

Philalethes, Eirenaeus. Enarratio methodica trium Gebri medicinarum. N.p., 1678.

———. Introitus apertus ad occlusum Regis Palatium. N.p., 1667.

———. The Marrow of Alchemy. N.p., 1654.

———. Ripley Reviv'd; or an Exposition upon Sir George Ripley's Hermetico-Poetical Works. 5 vols. London: T. Ratcliff and N. Thompson, 1677–78.

———. Tractatus tres: (i) Metallorum Metamorphosis; (ii) Brevis Manuductio ad Rubinum Coelestem; (iii) Fons Chymicae Veritatis. N.p., 1678; 1694.

Phillips, G. Ragland. Brigantia: A Mysteriography. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1976.

Philostratus. The Life of Apollonius of Tyana. Translated by F. C. Conybeare. London: Macmillan, 1912.

Philpott, Kent. Manual of Demonology and the Occult. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Zondervan, 1973.

Phylos the Tibetan. An Earth Dweller Returns. Milwaukee, Wisc.: Lemurian Press, 1940.

Pick, Bernhard. The Cabala. LaSalle, Ill.: Open Court Publishing, 1903.

Pickering, Edward Charles. "Possibility of Errors in Scientific Researches, Due to Thought-Transference." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 1 (1885).

Pickering, Edward Charles, and J. M. Peirce. "Discussion of Returns in Response to Circular No. 4." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 1 (July 1885).

Piddington, John George. "Cross Correspondences of a Gallic Type." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 29, 72 (1916).

———. "Presidential Address." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 34, 89 (1924).

———. "A Reply to Sir Oliver Lodge's Note." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 30, 77 (1918).

Piddington, John George. "A Series of Concordant Automatisms." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 22, 57 (1908).

Piddington, John George, and Eleanor Sidgwick. "Note on Mrs. Piper's Hodgson-Control in England." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 23, 58 (1909).

Piedra, Carlos Aguilar. Religión y Magia entre los Indios de Costa Rica de origen sureño, 3rd ed. (La Paz: Editorial de la Universidad de Costa Rica, 1986).

Pienaar, Domenick C., and Karlis Osis. "ESP Over Seventy-Five Hundred Miles." Journal of Parapsychology 20, no. 4 (1956).

Pierce, Henry W. Science Looks at ESP. New York: New American Library, 1970.

Pike, Albert. Morals & Dogma of the Ancient & Accepted Rite of Freemasonry. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1992.

Pike, Richard. Life's Borderland and Beyond. London, n.d.

A Pilgrim's Guide to Planet Earth: A Traveler's Handbook and New Age Directory. San Rafael, Calif.: Spiritual Community Publications, 1981.

Pincock, Jenny O'Hara. Trails of Truth. London, 1930.

Piper, Alta C. The Life and Work of Mrs. Piper. London: Kegan Paul/ K. Paul, Trench, Trubner, & Co. Ltd., 1929.

Pitcairn, Theodore. The Book Sealed with Seven Seals. Bryn Athyn, Pa.: Cathedral Book Room, 1927.

———. My Lord and My God. New York: Exposition Press, 1967.

Placidus de Titus. Astronomy and Elementary Philosophy. Translated by Manoah Sibley. London: W. Justins, 1789.

———. A Collection of Thirty Remarkable Nativities. Translated by Manoah Sibley. London: W. Justins, 1789.

Playfair, Guy Lyon. The Flying Cow: Research Into Paranormal Phenomena in the World's Most Psychic Country. London: Souvenir Press, 1975. Reprinted as The Unknown Power. New York: Pocket Books, 1975. Reprint, London: Panther paperback, 1977.

———. "Identical Twins and Telepathy," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 63, no. 854 (January 1999): 86–98.

———. The Indefinite Boundary. London: Souvenir Press, 1976.

———. This House is Haunted; An Investigation of the Enfield Poltergeist London: Souvenir Press, 1980.

———. The Unknown Power. 1975. Reprinted as The Flying Cow. London: Souvenir Press, 1975.

Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsychology. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Plinth, August. Principles of Levitation. New York: White Sun Prees, 1970.

Plotinus Amid Gnostics and Christians: Papers Presented at a Plotinus Symposium held at the Free University, Amsterdam, on January 25, 1984. Amsterdam: Free University Press, 1984.

Plotkin, Mark J. Tales of a Shaman's Apprentice: An Ethnobotanist Searches for New Medicines in the Amazon Rain Forest. New York: Viking, 1993.

Plummer, George Winslow. The Art of Rosicrucian Healing. New York: Society of Rosicrucians, 1947.

———. Consciously Creating Circumstances. New York: Society of Rosicrucians, 1939.

———. This House is Haunted; An Investigation of the Enfield Poltergeist London: Souvenir Press, 1980. Principles and Practices for Rosicrucians. New York: Society of Rosicrucians, 1947, 1978.

Pococke, Edward. India in Greece. London: J. J. Griffin & Co., 1852.

Podmore, Frank. Apparitions & Thought-Transference: An Examination of the Evidence for Telepathy. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1894. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1895; London: Walter Scott Publishing, 1896.

———. Biography of Robert Owen. London: Hutchinson, 1906.

———. Mesmerism and Christian Science. Philadelphia: G. W. Jacobs; London: Metheun, 1909.

———. Modern Spiritualism. 2 vols. London, 1902. Reprinted as Mediums of the Nineteenth Century. 2 vols. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1963.

———. The Naturalisation of the Supernatural. New York: George Putnam's Sons, 1908.

———. The Newer Spiritualism. London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1910. Reprint, New York: Henry Holt, 1911; New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

———. Studies in Psychical Research. London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Tubner; New York: G. P. Putnam's and Son, 1897. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

———. Telepathic Hallucinations: The New View of Ghosts. London: Milner; New York: Stokes, 1909.

Podolsky, Edward. Music Therapy. New York: Philosophical Library, 1954.

The Poetic Edda. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1969.

Pohl, Hans Ludwig. "Investigation of the PK-Effect." Journal of Parapsychology 24, no. 3 (September 1930).

Polidori, John, et al. The Count Dracula Fan Club Book of Vampire Stories. Chicago: Adams Press, 1980.

Pollack, Jack Harrison. Croiset the Clairvoyant. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1964. Reprint, New York: Bantam Books, 1965.

Pollock, James S. Dead and Gone. London, 1874.

Poloma, Margaret M. The Charismatic Movement: Is There a New Pentecost? Boston, Mass: Twayne Publishers, 1982.

Poncé, Charles. Kabblah: An Introduction and Illumination for the World Today. San Francisco: Straight Arrow Books, 1973.

Pond, Mariam Buckner. Time Is Kind: The Story of the Unfortunate Fox Family. New York: Centennial Press, 1947. Reprinted as The Unwilling Martyrs. London: Psychic Book Club, 1947.

Poortman, J. J. De Grondparadox. N.p., 1961.

———. Drei Vorträge Über Philosophie und Parapsychologie. N.p., 1939.

———. "The Feeling of Being Stared At." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (1959).

———. "Henri Bergson and Parapsychology." Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie N.p., 1941.

———. "Mysterious Words." Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie. N.p., 1939, 1940.

———. Occult Motives in Literature. N.p., 1937.

———. "Psychophysical Parallelism or Interactionism?" Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (1937).

———. Variaties op een en meer Themata (Collected Essays on Philosophy, Parapsychology and Theosophy). N.p., 1947.

Pope, Alexander. The Rape of the Lock. N.p., 1821. Reprint, London: Methuen, 1941.

Pope, Dorothy H. "The Search for ESP in Animals." Tomorrow (Summer 1953).

Pope, Dorothy H., and J. G. Pratt. "The ESP Controversy." Journal of Parapsychology (September 1942).

———. "Five Years of the Journal of Parapsychology." Journal of Parapsychology (March 1942).

Pope, Joya. The World According to Michael. San Mateo, Calif.: Sage Publications, 1987.

Pope-Hennessy, John Wyndham. Cellini. New York: Abbeville Press, 1985.

Pope Jr., Harrison G., "Tabernanthe Iboga: An African Narcotic Plant of Social Importance," Economic Botany vol. 23 (1969): 174–184.

Popenhoe, Cris. Books for Inner Development/ The Yes! Guide. Washington, D.C.: Yes! Bookshop, 1976. Revised as Inner Development; the Yes! Bookshop Guide. Washington, D.C.: Yes! Bookshop, 1979. Supplements 1–11. 1982–83.

———. Wellness. Washington, D.C.: Yes! Bookshop, 1977.

Pordage, John. Truth Appearing Through the Clouds of Undeserved Scandal. N.p., 1655.

Porteous, Alexander. Forest Folklore, Mythology, and Romance. London: George Allen & Unwin, 1928.

Porter, Katherine H. Through a Glass Darkly: Spiritualism in the Browning Circle. Lawrence: University of Kansas Press, 1958.

Post, Eric. Communication with the Beyond: A Practical Handbook of Spiritualism. New York: Atlantic Publishing, 1946.

Potapov, L. P., "O szamanskom jazykie u altaje-sajanskich narodow". In Istoriko-kulturnyje kontakty narodow altajskoj jazykowoj obscznosti. Moscow, 1986: 56–57 [in Russian].

Powell, A. E. The Etheric Double. 1926. Reprint, Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1969.

Powell, Arthur E. The Astral Body and Other Astral Phenomena. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1927. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

Powell, Ellis T. The Essentials of Self-Government. N.p., 1909.

———. The Mechanism of the City. London: P. S. King & Son, 1910.

———. The Practical Affairs of Life. N.p., 1918.

———. The Psychic Element of the New Testament. N.p, n.d.

Powell, Kenneth F., R. A. McConnell, and Ruth J. Snowden. "Wishing With Dice." Journal of Experimental Psychology 50 (1955).

Powell, T. G. E. The Celts. New York: F. A. Praeger, 1958.

Poynton, J. C. "Making Sense of PSI: Whiteman's Multilevel Ontology," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 59, no. 835 (April 1994): 401–412.

Prabhavananda, Swami, with Frederick Manchester. The Spiritual Heritage of India. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1963.

Prabhupada, A. C. Bhaktivedanta Swami. Bhagavad-Gita As It Is. New York: Bhaktivedanta Book Trust, 1972.

———. KRSHA: The Supreme Personality of Godhead. 3 vols. New York: Bhaktivedanta Book Trust, 1970.

———. The Nectar of Devotion. Los Angeles: Bhaktivedanta Book Trust, 1970.

———. Teachings of Lord Chaitanya. Los Angeles: Bhaktivedanta Book Trust, 1974.

———. Teachings of Lord Kapila: The Son of Devahuti. New York: Bhaktivedanta Book Trust, 1977.

Practical Psychomancy & Crystal Gazing. Santa Fe, N.Mex.: Sun Publishing Co., 1997.

Pradhan, Rao Bahadur M. W. Shri Sai Baba of Shirdi: A Glimpse of Indian Spirituality. Bandra, India: R. A. Turkhud, n.d.

Prasad, Rama. The Science of Breath and the Philosophy of the Tattvas . . . Nature's Finer Forces. London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1897.

———. The Science of Breath and the Philosophy of the Tattvas, Translated from the Sanskrit, with Introductory and Explanatory Essays on Nature's Finer Forces. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1887.

Pratt, J. G. "A Decade of Research with a Selected Subject." Proceedings of American Society for Psychical Research (1973).

———. ESP Research Today: A Study of Developments in Parapsychology Since 1960. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1973.

———. On the Evaluation of Verbal Material in Parapsychology. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1969.

———. Parapsychology: An Insider's View of ESP. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1977.

———. The Psychic Realm. New York: Random House, 1975.

———. "A Review of Kahn's 'Studies in Extrasensory Perception.'&43" Journal of Parapsychology 17 (1953).

Pratt, J. G., with Champe Ransom. "Exploratory Observations of the Movement of Static Objects Without the Apparent Use of Known Physical Energies by Nina S. Kulagina." Proceedings of the Parapsychological Association 8 (1971).

———. "Extrasensory Perception or Extraordinary Sensory Perception?" Journal of American Society for Psychical Research 66 (1972).

Preliminary Report of the Commission Appointed by the University of Pennsylvania to Investigate Modern Spiritualism. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott, 1887.

Preliminary Studies of a Vaudeville Telepathist. Bulletin III. London: London Council for Psychical Investigation, 1937.

Presman, A. S. Electromagnetic Fields and Life. New York: Plenum Press, 1970.

Pressing, R. G., comp. Houdini Unmasked. Lily Dale, N.Y.: Dale News, 1947.

Preston, William. Illustrations of Masonry. London, 1775.

Price, E. Alan, Marius Valkhoff, and J. H. Van Der Merwe. Parapsychology and Modern Science. South African Society for Psychical Research, 1958.

Price, George R. "Apology to Rhine and Soal." Science 175 (1972).

———. "Science and the Supernatural." Science 122 (August 26, 1955).

———. "Where Is the Definitive Experiment?" Science (January 6, 1956).

Price, Harry. Confessions of a Ghost Hunter. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1936. Reprint, New York: Causeway Books, 1974.

———. The End of Borley Rectory. London: George G. Harrap, 1946.

———. Fifty Years of Psychical Research: A Critical Study. London: Longmans, Green, 1939. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

———. Leaves From a Psychist's Case-Book. London: Gollancz, 1933.

———. "The Most Haunted House in England": Ten Years' Investigation of Borley Rectory. London: Longmans, Green, 1940.

———. Poltergeist Over England. London: Country Life, 1945.

———. Regurgitation and the Duncan Mediumship. Council at the Rooms of the National Laboratory of Psychical Research, London, 1931.

———. Rudi Schneider; A Scientific Examination of his Mediumship. London: Methuen, 1930.

———. "Same Account of the Poltergeist Phenomena of Eleonore Zügun." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (August 1926).

———. Search for Truth: My Life for Psychical Research. London: Collins, 1942.

———. Stella C.: An Account of Some Original Experiments in Psychical Research. Edited by James Turner. London: Souvenir Press, 1973.

Price, Harry, and R. S. Lambert. The Haunting of Cashen's Gap. London, 1936.

Price, Harry, and E. J. Dingwall, eds. Revelations of a Spirit Medium. London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, 1922; New York: E. P. Dutton, 1922.

Price, Henry H. Belief. Gifford Lectures, 1969.

———. Essays in the Philosophy of Religion. Oxford: Claredon Press, 1972.

———. "Haunting and the 'Psychic Ether' Hypothesis" Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 45, 1939).

———. Hume's Theory of the External World. Oxford: Claredon Press, 1940. Reprint, Greenwood Press, 1981.

———. Perception (1932; 1973).

———. "Psychical Research and Human Personality." Hibbert Journal (January 1949).

———. "Some Philosophical Questions About Telepathy and Clairvoyance." Philosophy (October 1940). Reprint in: J. M. O. Wheatley and H. L. Edge, eds. Philosophical Dimensions of Parapsychology. Springfield, Ill.: Charles C. Thomas, 1976.

———. "Survival and the Idea of Another World." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 50 (January 1953).

———. Thinking and Experience. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press; London; New York: Hutchinsons University Library, 1953.

Price, Vincent, and V. B. Price. Monsters. New York: Grosset & Dunlap, 1981.

Price-Mars, Jean. "Africa in the Americas." Tomorrow (Autumn 1954).

Prichard, John. A Few Sober Words of Table-talk about the Spirits. Leamington, UK, 1853.

Prieditis, Arthur A. Fate of the Nations. London: Neville Spearman; St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1973.

Priestley, J. B. Man and Time. London, 1964. Reprint, New York: Dell, 1971.

Priestley, Joseph. Original Letters by the Rev. John Wesley and his Friends. Birmingham, England, 1791.

Prince, Morton. "A Contribution to the Study of Hysteria." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 14 (1899).

———. "The Development and Genealogy of the Misses Beauchamp." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 15 (1900–01).

———. The Disassociation of a Personality. 1905. Reprint, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1978.

———. The Nature of Mind and Human Automatism. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott, 1885.

Prince, Raymond, ed., "Issue on Shamans and Endorphins," Ethos 10, no. 4 (1982): 299–423.

Prince, Walter F. Noted Witnesses for Psychic Occurrences. Boston: Boston Society for Psychic Research, 1928. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1963.

———. "A Survey of American Slate Writing Mediumship." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 15 (1921).

———. "Supplementary Report on the Keeler-Lee Photographs." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 12 (1919).

———. The Psychic in the House. Boston: Boston Society for Psychical Research, 1926.

———. Two Old Cases Reviewed. Boston: Boston Society for Psychical Research, n.d.

Prince, Walter Franklin. The Case of Patience Worth: A Critical Study of Certain Unusual Phenomena. Boston: Society for Psychical Research, 1927; New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1964.

———. The Enchanted Boundary: Being a Survey of Negative Reactions to Claims of Psychic Phenomena, 1820–1930. Boston: Boston Society for Psychic Research, 1930. Reprint, North Stratford, N. H.: Ayer Co. Publishers, Inc., 1975.

———. Leonard and Soule Experiments. Boston: Boston Society for Psychical Research, 1929.

———. "Psychometric Experiments with Maria Reyes de Z." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 16 (January 1922).

———. "Psychometric Experiments with Maria Reyes de Z." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 15 (1921).

———. "Psychometrical Experiments with Señora Maria Reyes de Z." ASPR Journal 16 (January 1922).

———. "Psychometrical Experiments with Senora Maria Reyes de Z." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 15 (1921).

———. The Sinclair Experiments Demonstrating Telepathy. Boston: Boston Society for Psychic Research, n.d.

Prinz, Armin., "Initiation of Shamans of the Azande," Yearbook for Ethnomedicine and the Study of Consciousness (Jahrbuch für Ethnomedizin und Bewusstseinsforschung) vol. 3 (1994): 133–144.

Pritchett, W. Douglas. The Children of God, Family of Love: An Annotated Bibliography. New York: Garland Publications, 1985.

Probert, Mark. Excerpts from the Mark Probert Séances: 1950 Series. 3 vols. San Diego, Calif.: Inner Circle Press, 1950.

———. The Magic Bag. San Diego, Calif.: Inner Circle Kethra E'Da Foundation, 1963.

The Problem of Pure Consciousness: Mysticism and Philosophy. New York: Oxford University Press, 1990.

Proceedings of the Scientific and Technical Congress of Radionics and Radiesthesia London May 16–18, 1950, London, n.d.

Proctor, Russell F. "The Rhetorical Functions of Christian Glossolalia," Journal of Psychology & Christianity 9, no. 3 (Fall 1990): 27–34.

Progoff, Ira. The Image of an Oracle: A Report on Research into the Mediumship of Eileen Garrett. New York: Helix Press, 1964.

Progroff, Ira, ed. The Cloud of Unknowing. N.p., 1957.

———. Death and Rebirth of Psychology. N.p., 1956.

———. Depth Psychology and Modern Man. N.p., 1959.

———. Jung's Psychology and Its Social Meaning. N.p., 1953.

———. "Parapsychology in Modern Thinking." International Journal of Parapsychology 1, 1 (Summer 1959).

———. The Practice of Process Meditation. N.p., 1980.

———. The Symbolic and the Real. N.p., 1963.

———. "Transformation of Jewish Mysticism." International Journal of Parapsychology 2, 2 (Autumn 1960).

Prophet, Elizabeth Clare. The Great White Brotherhood in the Culture, History and Religion of America. Los Angeles: Summit University Press, 1983.

———. Saint Germain on Prophecy. Livingston, Mont.: Summit University Press, 1986.

Prophet, Mark L., and Elizabeth Clare Prophet. Climb the Highest Mountain. Colorado Springs, Colo.: Summit Lighthouse, 1972.

———. The Lost Teachings of Jesus. 2 vols. Livingston, Mont.: Summit University Press, 1986.

———. Saint Germain on Alchemy. Livingston, N.Y.: Summit University Press, 1962.

Proskauer, Julien J. Spook Crooks! Exposing the Secrets of the Prophet-eers Who Conduct Our Wickedest Industry. New York: A. L. Burt, 1932. Reprint, Ann Arbor, Mich.: Gryphon Books, 1971.

Prosnick, Kevin P. "Claims of Near-Death Experiences, Gestalt Resistance Processes, and Measures of Optimal Functioning," Journal of Near-Death Studies 18, no. 1 (Fall 1999): 27–34.

Pryse, F. N., ed. The Fame and Confession of the Fraternity of R:C: Commonly of the Rosie Cross . . . by Eugenius Philalethes . . . now reprinted in facsimile together with an Introduction, Notes and a Translation of the letter of Adam Haselmeyer. Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia, 1923.

Pryse, James Morgan. The Apocalypse Unsealed. Los Angeles: The Author, 1931.

———. Reincarnation in the New Testament. New York: Theosophical Publishing Co. of New York, 1900.

———. The Restored New Testament. Los Angeles: The Author, 1914.

———. The Sermon on the Mount. New York: Theosophical Society, 1904.

Psychic magazine, editors of. Psychics. New York: Harper & Row, 1972.

"Psychokinetic Metal-bending." Psi News, Bulletin of the Parapsychological Association 4, 1.

Ptolemy, Claudius. The Quadripatite, or Four Books. Translated by J. Whalley. Edited by Manoah Sibley and J. Browne. London, 1786.

Puharich, Andrija. Beyond Telepathy. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1952. Reprint, Garden City, N.Y.: Anchor Press, 1973. Reprint, London: Souvenir Press, 1974. Reprint, London: Pan Books, 1975.

———. The Sacred Mushroom: Key to the Door of Eternity. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1959.

———. Time No Longer. N.p., 1980.

———. Uri: A Journal of the Mystery of Uri Geller. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1974.

Puharich, Andrija, and Harold E. Puthoff. The Iceland Papers. Amherst, Wisc.: Essentia Research Associates, 1979.

Pullar, Philippa. The Shortest Journey. London: Hamish Hamilton, 1981.

Pullen, Philip. Index to the Divine and Spiritual Writings of Joanna Southcott. Ashford, England: Clock House Press, 1921.

Purohit, Swami Shri. The Geeta: The Gospel of the Lord Shri Krishna. London: Faber & Faber, 1935.

Pursel, Jach. Lazaris Interviews. 2 vols. Beverly Hills, Calif.: Concept Synergy, 1988.

———. Lazaris: The Sacred Journey; You and Your Higher Self. Beverly Hills, Calif.: Concept Synergy, 1987.

Purucker, Gottfried de. Dialogues with G. de Purucker. 3 vols. Covina, Calif.: Theosophical University Press, 1948.

———. The Esoteric Tradition. 2 vols. Point Loma, Calif.: Theosophical University Press, 1935.

———. Fundamentals of Esoteric Philosophy. London: Rider, 1932.

———. Questions We All Ask. 4 vols. Covina, Calif.: Theosophical University Press, 1930–31.

Puryear, Herbert B. The Edgar Cayce Primer. New York: Bantam Books, 1982.

———. A Prophet in His Own Country. New York: William Morrow, 1974.

Puthoff, Harold E., and Russell Targ. "ESP Experiments with Uri Geller" In J. D. Morris, W. G. Roll, and R. L. Morris, eds. Research in Parapsychology 1973. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1974.

———. "Information Transmission under Conditions of Sensory Shielding." Nature (October 1974).

———. Mind-Reach: Scientists Look at Psychic Ability. New York: Delacorte Press, 1977.

———. "A Perceptual Channel for Information Transfer over Kilometer Distances: Historical Perspective and Recent Research." Proceedings, Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers 64 (1975).

———. "Physics, Entrophy, and Psychokinesis." In Proceedings of the Conference on Quantum Physics and Parapsychology, Geneva, August 26–27, 1974. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1975.

———. "PK Experiments with Uri Geller and Ingo Swann." In J. D. Morris, W. G. Roll, and R. L. Morris, eds. Research in Parapsychology 1973. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1974.

———. "Remote Viewing of Natural Targets." In J. D. Morris, W. G. Roll, and R. L. Morris, eds. Research in Parapsychology 1974. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1975.

———. "Replication Study on the Remote Viewing of Natural Targets." In J. D. Morris, W. G. Roll, and R. L. Morris, eds. Research in Parapsychology 1975. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1976.

Putnam, Allen. Bible Marvel Workers. Boston, 1876.

Putnam, Allen, comp. Biography of Mrs. J. H. Conant. Boston: W. White and Co., 1873.

———. Flashes of Light from the Spirit-Land. Boston: William White, 1872.

The Q Directory. London: Aquariana, 1978–79. Rev. ed. London: Pallas Aquariana, 1980–81.

Quebedeaux, Richard. The New Charismatics: The Origins, Development and Significance of Neo-Pentecostalism. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1976.

Quigley, Joan. What Does Joan Say? My Seven Years as White House Astrologer to Nancy and Ronald Reagan. New York: Birch Lane Press, 1990.

Quinan, Clarence., "The American Medicine-man and the Asiatic Shaman: A Comparison," Annals of Medical History vol. 10 (1938): 508–533.

Quimby, Phineas P. The Complete Writings. Edited by Ervin Seale. 3 vols. Marina del Rey, Calif.: DeVorss, 1987.

———. The Quimby Manuscripts. Edited by Horatio Dresser. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1919. Reprint, New York: Julian Press, 1961.

Qvarnstrom, S. Birger. Parapskologi Resultat och Perspecktiv (Parapsychology—Results and Perspectives). N.p., 1959.

Ra Un Nefer Amen [R. A. Straughn]. Black Man's Guide to a Spiritual Union. Bronx, N.Y.: Oracle of Thoth, 1981.

———. Meditation Techniques of the Kabalists, Vedantins, and Taoists. Bronx, N.Y.: Maat Publishing, 1976.

———. The Oracle of Thoth: The Kabalistical Tarot. Bronx, N.Y.: Oracle of Thoth, 1977.

———. The Realization of Neter Nu. Brooklyn, N.Y.: Maat Publishing, 1975.

Rabinowitz, H. A Guide to Hassidism. New York: Thomas Yoseloff, 1960.

Radha, Swami Sivananda. Gods Who Walk the Rainbow. Porthill, Idaho: Timeless Books, 1981.

———. Hatha Yoga, Hidden Language. Porthill, Idaho: Timeless Books, 1987.

———. Kundalini Yoga for the West. Spokane, Wash.: Timeless Books, 1978.

———. Mantras, Words of Power. Porthill, Idaho: Timeless Books, 1980.

———. Radha, Diary of a Woman's Search. Porthill, Idaho: Timeless Books, 1981.

Radhakrishnan, S., trans. Bhagavad Gita. London: Allen & Unwin, 1948.

Radhasoami Satsang Beas and its Teachings. Beas, India: Radha Soami Satsang, n.d.

Radin, D. I. "On Complexity and Pragmatism," Journal of Scientific Exploration 8, no. 4 (1994): 523–534.

———. "Searching for "Signatures" in Anomalous Human-Machine Interaction Research: A Neural Network Approach. Journal of Scientific Exploration vol. 3 (1989): 185–200.

Radin, D. I. & Nelson, R. D., "Evidence for Consciousness-Related Anomalies in Random Physical Systems," Foundations of Physics 19 (1989): 1499–1514.

Radionic Therapy (leaflet). Oxford, England: Delawarr Laboratories, 1953.

Rael [Claude Vorilhon]. Sensual Meditation. Tokyo: AOM Corporation, 1986.

———. Space Aliens Took Me to Their Planet. Liechtenstein: Foundation pour l'Accueil des Elohim, 1978.

———. Welcome Our Fathers from Space: They Created Humanity in Their Laboratories. Tokyo: AOM, 1986.

Raffé, W. G. Art and Labour. N.p., 1927.

———. The Control of the Mind. N.p., 1934.

———. Graphic Design. London, Chapman and Hall, Ltd., 1927.

———. Poems in Black & White. N.p., 1922.

Rahn, Otto. Invisible Radiations of Organisms. Berlin, 1936.

Raine, Kathleen. From Blake to "A Vision." Dublin: Dolman Press, 1979.

———. William Blake. Westport, Conn.: Praeger, 1971.

Rajneesh: The Most Dangerous Man Since Jesus Christ. Zürich, Switzerland: Rebel Publishing House, 1983.

Rajneesh, Bhagwan Shree. The Great Challenge: A Rajneesh Reader. New York: Grove Press, 1982.

———. I Am the Gate. New York: Harper & Row, 1977.

———. The Orange Book. Rajneeshpuram, Ore.: Rajneesh Foundation, 1983.

———. Tantra, Spirituality, and Sex. San Francisco, Calif.: Rainbow Bridge, 1977.

Raknes, Ola. Wilhelm Reich and Orgonomy. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1970.

Rakoczi, Basil Ivan. Foreseeing the Future. New York: Harper & Row, 1973.

Ralston, W. R. S. Russian Folk Tales. London: Smith, Elder, 1873. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1977.

———. The Songs of the Russian People. London, 1872. Reprint, New York: Haskell House, 1970.

Ram Dass, Baba [Richard Alpert]. Be Here Now. Christobal, N.Mex.: Lama Foundation, 1972.

———. Grist for the Mill. Santa Cruz, Calif.: Unity Press, 1977.

———. Journey to Awakening. New York: Bantam Books, 1976.

———. The Only Dance There Is. New York: Aronson, 1976.

Rama Prasad. The Science of Breath and the Philosophy of Tattvas . . . Nature's Finer Forces. 3rd rev. ed., Adhyr, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1897.

Rama [Frederic Lenz]. The Wheel of Dharma. Malibu, Calif.: Lakshmi Publications, 1982.

Rama, Swami. Lectures on Yoga. Arlington Heights, Ill.: Himalayan International Institute of Yoga Science and Philosophy, 1972.

———. Living with the Himalayan Masters: Spiritual Experiences of Swami Rama. Edited by Swami Ajaya [Allan Weinstein]. Honesdale, Pa.: Himalayan Institute, 1978.

Rama, Swami. Path of Fire and Light. Honesdale, Pa.: Himalayan International Institute of Yoga Science and Philosophy, 1986.

———. A Practical Guide to Holistic Health. Honesdale, Pa.: Himalayan International Institute of Yoga Science and Philosophy, 1978.

Rama, Swami, Rudolph, and Swami Ajaya. Yoga and Psychotherapy. Glenview, Ill.: Himalayan Institute, 1976.

Ramacharacka, Swami [William Walker Atkinson]. Advanced Course in Yogi Philosophy and Oriental Occultism. Chicago: Yogi Publication Society, 1904.

———. Hatha Yoga. Chicago: Yogi Publication Society, 1932.

———. The Hindu-Yogi System of Breath. Chicago: Yogi Publication Society, 1904.

———. Raja Yoga, or Mental Development. Chicago: Yogi Publication, 1905.

———. The Spirit of the Upanishads; or, The Aphorisms of the Wise. Chicago: Yogi Publication Society, 1936.

Ramakrishna, Sri. The Gospel of Ramakrishna. Boston: Beacon Press, 1947.

Raman, B. V. Astrology and Modern Thought. 5th ed. Bangalore, India: Raman Publications, 1965.

———. Hindu Predictive Astrology. Bangalore: Raman Publications, 1938.

———. A Manual of Hindu Astrology. Bangalore: Raman Publications, 1935.

———. Notable Horoscopes. Bangalore: Raman Publications, 1956.

Ramana Maharshi. The Collected Works of Ramana Maharshi. 20 vols. London: Rider, 1970.

———. Talks with Sri Ramana Maharshi. Vol. 1. Tiruvannamalai, India: Sri Ramanasramam, 1957.

Ramge, Sebastian. An Introduction to the Writings of St. Teresa. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1963.

Rampa, T. Lopsang [Cyril Henry Hoskins]. As It Was! N.p., 1976.

———. Beyond the Tenth. N.p., 1969.

———. Candlelight. N.p., 1974.

———. Cave of the Ancients. N.p., 1963.

———. The Hermit. N.p., 1971.

———. Living With the Lama. N.p., 1964.

———.. My Visit to Venus. N.p., 1966.

———. The Rampa Story. London: Souvenir Press, 1960.

———. The Saffron Robe. N.p., 1964.

———. The Thirteenth Candle. N.p., 1972.

———. Wisdom of the Ancients. N.p., 1965.

———. You—Forever. N.p., 1965.

Ramtha (The White Book). Edited by Steven Lee Weinberg, with Randall Weischedel, Sue Ann Fazio, and Carol Wright. Eastsound, Wash.: Sovereignty, 1986.

Ramtha (as channeled by JZ Knight). The Ancient Schools of Wisdom. Transcribed by Diane Munoz. Yelm, Wash.: Diane Munoz, 1992.

Ramtha (as channeled by JZ Knight). I Am Ramtha. Edited by Cindy Black, Richard Cohn, Greg Simmons, and Wes Walt. Portland, Ore.: Beyond Words Publishing, 1986.

Ramtha's School of Enlightenment: The American Gnostic School. Yelm, Wash.: JZK, 1994.

Ranaghan, Kevin, and Dorothy Ranaghan. Catholic Pentecostals. New York: Paulist Press, 1969.

Randall, Edward Caleb. The Dead Have Never Died. New York: A. A. Knopf, 1917. London, 1918.

———. Frontiers of the After Life. New York: A. A. Knopf, 1922.

———. Future of Man. Buffalo, N.Y.: O. Ulbrich, 1908.

———. Life's Progression. Buffalo, N.Y.: H. B. Brown, 1906.

———. The Living Dead. N.p., 1927.

———. Told In The After Life. N.p., 1925.

Randall, John L. "Biological Aspects of Psi." In John Beloff, ed. New Directions in Parapsychology. London, 1974; Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1975.

———. "A New Science of Life: The Hypothesis of Formative Causation." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 51, 1981.

———. Parapsychology and the Nature of Life. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

———. "Psi Phenomena and Biological Theory." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 46, 1971. Reprint in Rhea A. White's Surveys in Parapsychology. N.p., 1976.

———. Psychokinesis; A Study of Paranormal Forces Through the Ages. N.p., 1982.

———. Tests for Extrasensory Perception & Psychokinesis. N.p., 1980.

Randall, Tom M. "Belief in the Paranormal Declines: 1977–1987," Psychological Reports 66, no. 3, Pt. 2 (June 1990): 1347–1351.

Randi, James. The Faith Healers. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1987.

———. Flim-Flam! Psychics, ESP, Unicorns & Other Delusions. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1982.

———. The Magic of Uri Geller. New York: Ballantine Books, 1975. Reprinted as The Truth About Uri Geller. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1982.

———. The Mask of Nostradamus. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1993.

———. "Project Alpha Experiment." In Kenneth Frazier, ed. Science Confronts the Paranormal. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1986.

———. The Truth about Uri Geller. Buffalo, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1982.

Randles, Jenny. Abduction: Over 200 Documented UFO Kidnappings Investigated. London: Robert Hale, 1988.

———. The UFO Conspiracy: The First Forty Years. Poole, England: Blandford Press, 1987.

———. UFO Reality: A Critical Look at the Physical Evidence. London: Robert Hale, 1983.

Randles, Jenny and Peter Hough. The Complete Book of UFOs. New York: Sterling Publishing Co. Inc., 1996.

Randles, Jenny, and Paul Fuller. Crop Circles: A Mystery Solved. London: Robert Hale, 1990.

———. The Controversy of the Circles. London: British UFO Research Association, 1989.

Randles, Jenny, and Peter Warrington. UFOs; A British Viewpoint. N.p., 1979.

Randolph, Paschal Beverly. After Death: The Disembodiment of Man. 4th ed. Toledo, Ohio: Randolph Publishing, 1886.

———. The Davenport Brothers. Boston, 1869.

———. Dealings with the Dead. 1861. Reprinted as Soul! The Soul World: The Homes of the Dead. Quakertown, Pa.: Confederation of Initiates, 1932.

———. Eulis! The History of Love. Toledo, Ohio: Randolph Publishing, 1874.

———. Magia Sexualis. Paris: R. Telin, 1931. Published in English as Sexual Magic. Translated by Robert North. New York: Magickal Childe Publishing, 1988.

———. Pre-Adamic Man. Reprint, Toledo, Ohio: Randolph Publishing, 1888.

———. Ravalette, Rosicrucian's Story. 1863. Reprint, Quakertown, Pa.: Philosophical Publishing, 1939.

———. The Unveiling; or, What I Think of Spiritualism. Newburyport, Mass.: The Author, 1860.

Ranfft, Michael. De Masticatione Mortuorum in Tumulis. Leipzig, 1728.

Ransom, Champe. "Recent Criticisms of Parapsychology: A Review." Journal of American Society for Psychical Research 65 (1971).

Ransom, Josephine. A Short History of the Theosophical Society. Adyar, Madra, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1938.

Rao, B. Suryanarain. Compendium of Astrology. Bagalore: Raman Publications, n.d.

———. Strijataka, or Female Horoscopy. Bangalore: Raman Publications, 1933.

Rao, K. Ramakrishna. The Basic Experiments in Parapsychology. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1984.

———. "A Consideration of Some Theories in Parapsychology." Journal of Parapsychology (March 1961).

———. Experimental Parapsychology: A Review and Interpretation. Springfield, Ill.: Charles C. Thomas, 1966.

———. Gandhi and Pragmatism. Calcutta & Oxford, N.p., 1968.

———. J. B. Rhine: On the Frontiers of Science. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1982.

———. Mystic Awareness. Mysore, India, 1972.

———. Psi Cognition. India: Tagore Publishing House, 1957.

———. "Vedanta and the Modus Operandi of Paranormal Cognition." Philosophical Quarterly 1955.

Rao, K. Ramakrishna, and J. Palmer. "The Anomaly Called Psi: Recent Research and Criticism," Behavioral and Brain Sciences 10 (1987): 539–551.

Rao, K. Ramakrishna, and K. S. Murty. Current Trends in Indian Thought. New Delhi, 1972.

Rao, K. Ramakrishna, and P. Sailaja. Experimental Studies of the Differential Effect in Life Setting. N.p., 1972.

Raphaell, Katrina. Crystal Enlightenment: The Transforming Properties of Crystals and Healing Stones. Sante Fe, N.Mex.: Aurora Press, 1985.

———. Crystal Healing: The Therapeutic Application of Crystals and Stones. Santa Fe, N.Mex.: Aurora Press, 1987.

Rappoport, Angelo S. Superstitions of Sailors. London: Stanley Paul, 1928. Reprint, Ann Arbor, Mich.: Gryphon Books, 1971.

Raskin, Paula B. "Kevin Ryerson." Pychic Guide 4, no. 4 (March–April 1986): 16–21.

Rasmussen, Susan J., "Spirit Possession and Personhood Among the Kel Ewey Tuareg," Cambridge Studies in Social and Cultural Anthropology vol. 94 (New York: Cambridge University Press, 1995).

Rasputina, Maria. My Father. London: McClelland/Cassell, 1934. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1970.

Ratcliff, A. J. J. A History of Dreams. London, 1913.

Rätsch, Christian, ed. Chactun. Die Götter der Maya. Quellentexte, Darstellung und Wörterbuch [Chactun. The Gods of the Maya. Original Texts, Commentaries and Word Book]. 2nd edition. München: Eugen Diederichs Verlag, 1994.

———. Gateway to Inner Space: A Festschrift in Honor of Albert Hofmann. [Sacred Plants, Mysticism, and Psychotherapy] Bridport, Dorset: Prism Press/ Garden City Park, N.Y.: Avery Publishing Group, 1989.

———. Indianische Heilkräuter. Tradition und Anwendung. Ein Pflanzenlexikon [Indian Sacred Plants. Tradition and Use. A Plant Dictionary]. München: Eugen Diederichs Verlag, 1996.

Rätsch, Christian, and K'ayum Ma'ax, eds. Ein Kosmos im Regenwald. Mythen und Visionen der Lakadonen-Indianer [A Cosmos in the Rainforest. Myths and Visions of the Lacandon Indians]. 2nd edition. München: Eugen Diederichs Verlag, 1994

Ratte, Rena J. "Three Exploratory Studies of ESP in a Game Situation." Journal of Parapsychology 25 (1961).

Ratte, Rena J., and Frances M. Greene. "An Exploratory Investigation of PK in a Game Situation." Journal of Parapsychology (1960).

Rauchlen, Johannes. On the Art of the Kabbalah. Translated by Martin Goodman and Sarah Goodman. New York: Abaris Books, 1983.

Raudive, Konstantin. Sprechfunk mit Vesterbenen. Freiburg I Br., Germany: Herman Bauer, 1967. Translated as Breakthrough: An Amazing Experiment in Electronic Communication with the Dead. Gerrards Cross, UK: Colin Smythe; New York: Japlinger, 1971. Reprint, New York: Lancer Books, 1973.

———. Unhörbares Wird Hörbar (The Inaudible Made Audible). N.p., 1968. English edition as Breakthrough: An Amazing Experiment in Electronic Communication with the Dead. Translated by Peter Bander. New York: Taplinger, 1971.

Rauscher, William V. The Spiritual Frontier. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1975.

Ravenscroft, Trevor. The Spear of Destiny. London: Spearman, 1972. Reprint, New York: Putnam, 1973.

Rawcliffe, D. N. Illusions and Delusions of the Supernatural and Occult. Rev. ed. New York: Dover Publications, 1959.

Rawson, Philip. Tantra: The Indian Cult of Ecstasy. London: Thames & Hudson, 1974.

Ray, Barbara Weber. The Reiki Factor. St. Petersburg, Fla.: Radiance Associates, 1983. Radiance Associates, 1989.

Ray, Barbara Weber, and Nonnie Green, eds. The Official Reiki Handbook. Atlanta, Ga.: The American-International Reiki Association, 1982.

"Ray Palmer Dies." Fate 30, no. 12 (December 1977): 53.

Rayleigh, Lord. "Presidential Address." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 30, 70 (1918–1919).

Read, J. Prelude to Chemistry. London, 1936. Reprint, Cambridge, Mass.: MIT Press, 1957.

Reagan, Nancy. My Turn: The Memoirs of Nancy Reagan. New York: Random House, 1989.

Reban, John. Inquest on Jesus Christ. London: Leslie Frewin, 1967.

Recinos, Adri àn, Delia Goetz, and Sylvanus G. Morley, trans. and eds. Popul Vuh: The Sacred Book of the Ancient Quiché Maya. London: William Hodge, 1951.

Redgrove, H. Stanley. Alchemy: Ancient and Modern. London: Rider, 1922. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1969.

———. Bygone Beliefs: Being a Series of Excursions in the Byways of Thought. London: Rider, 1920. Reprinted as Magic & Mysticism: Studies in Bygone Beliefs. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1971.

———. A Mathematical Theory of Spirit. London: Rider, 1912.

Redgrove, H. Stanley, and I. M. L. Redgrove. Joseph Glanvill and Psychical Research in the Seventeenth Century. London: William Rider & Son, 1921.

Reece, Richard. A Correct Statement of the Circumstances that Attended the Last Illness and Death of Mrs. Southcott. London, 1815.

Reed, Donald. The Vampire on the Screen. Inglewood, Calif.: Wagon & Star Publishers, 1965.

Reed, Graham. The Psychology of Anomalous Experience. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1974.

Reed, Henry. Edgar Cayce on Channeling Your Higher Self. New York: Warner Books, Inc., 1999.

Reed, T. J. Goethe. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1984.

Reeve, Bryant, and Helen Reeve. Flying Saucer Pilgrimage. Amherst, Wisc.: Amherst Press, 1957.

Regan, Donald. For the Record. San Diego: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1988.

Regardie, Israel. The Art and Meaning of Magic. Dallas, Tex.: Sangreal Foundation, 1964.

———. Enochian Dictionary. Dallas, Tex.: Sangreal Foundation, 1971.

———. The Eye in the Triangle. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1970.

———. A Garden of Pomegranates. London: Rider, 1936. Reprint, St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1970. 3rd ed., Revised, St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1999.

———. The Golden Dawn. 4 vols. Chicago: Aries Press, 1937–40. Revised ed., St. Paul, Minn: Llewellyn Publications, 1969. Reprint, St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1986.

———. How to Make and Use Talismans. London: Aquarian Press; New York: Samuel Weiser, 1972.

———. Middle Pillar. Chicago: Aries Press, 1938. Rev. ed. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1971.

———. My Rosicrucian Adventure. Chicago: Aries Press, 1936. Reprint, St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1971.

———. The Philosopher's Stone. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1958.

———. What You Should Know about the Golden Dawn. Glendale, Ariz.: New Falcon Publications, 1993.

Reginald, Robert. Science Fiction and Fantasy Literature, 1975–1991. Detroit: Gale Research, 1992.

Réginald-Omez, Fr. O. P. Psychical Phenomena. London: Burns & Oates, 1959.

Reich, Ilse Ollendorff. Wilhelm Reich: a Personal Biography. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1969.

Reich, Peter. A Book of Dreams. New York: Harper & Row, 1973.

Reich, Wilhelm. Character Analysis. New York: Orgone Institute Press, 1949. Reprint, New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1961.

———. The Discovery of the Orgone. 2 vols. New York: Orgone Institute Press, n.d.

———. The Discovery of the Orgone. Vol. 1. In The Function of the Orgasm; Sex-economic Problems of Biological Energy. New York: Orgone Institute Press, 1942.

———. The Discovery of the Orgone. Vol. 2. In The Cancer Biopathy. New York: Orgone Institute Press, 1948.

———. The Function of the Orgasm: Sex-Economic Problems of Biological Energy. New York: Orgone Institute Press, 1942. Reprint, New York: Farra, Straus and Giroux, 1973.

———. The Mass Psychology of Fascism. New York: Orgone Institute Press, 1946.

———. The Orgone Energy Accumulator. New York: Orgone Institute Press, n.d.

———. Selected Writings: An Introduction to Orgonomy. New York: Farrar, Straus, and Giroux, 1973.

Reichel-Dolmatoff, Gérardo. Amazonian Cosmos: The Sexual and Religious Symbolism of the Tukano Indians. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1971.

———. The Shaman and the Jaguar: A Study of Narcotic Drugs among the Indians of Colombia. Philadelphia: Temple University Press, 1975.

———. Yurupari: Studies of an Amazonian Foundation Myth. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Center for the Study of World Religions, 1995.

Reichel, Willie. Occult Experiences. N.p., 1906.

Reichenbach, Bruce R. The Law of Karma: A Philosophical Study. London: Macmillan, 1990.

Reichenbach, Karl von. Aphorismen Über Sensitivität und Od. French ed. as Le Fluide des Magnétiseurs. Edited by Albert De Rochas. N.p., 1891.

———. Der sensitive Mensch und sein Verhalten zum Ode (The sensitive man and his relation to od). 2 vols. Stuttgart and Tübingen, 1854–55.

———. L'Exteriorisation de la motricité. N.p., 1896.

———. L'Exteriorisation de la Sensibilité. N.p., 1895.

———. Les états profonds de l'hypnose. N.p., 1892.

———. Les états Superficiels de l'hypnose. N.p., 1898.

———. Les effleuves odique; L'envoutement; Les frontières de la science. N.p., 1902.

———. Letters on Od and Magnetism. Translated by F. D. O'Byrne. London: Hutchinson, 1926. Reprinted as The Odic Force; Letters on Od and Magnetism. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1968.

———. Physico-Physiological Researches on the Dynamics of Magnetism, Electricity, Heat, Light, Crystallization, and Chemism, in their Relations to Vital Force. Translated by H. John Ashburner. London: H. Baillière, 1851.

———. Researches on Magnetism, Electricity, Heat, Light, Crystallization, and Chemical Attraction in their Relations to the Vital Force. Translated by William Gregory. London, 1850. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1974.

Reid, Lori. Elements of Handreading. UK: Element Books Inc., 1997.

Reifler, Sam. I Ching: A New Interpretation for Modern Times. New York: Bantam, 1974.

Reinert, Duane F. and Kenneth R. Stifler. "Hood's Mysticism Scale Revisited: A Factor-Analytic Replication," Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion 32, no. 4 (December 1993): 383–388.

Reinhard, Aime. Justinus Kerner und das Kernerhaus zu Weinsberg. Tübingen, Germany, 1862.

Reiser, Oliver L. This Holyest Erthe: The Glastonbury Zodiac and King Arthur's Camelot. Bedford, England: Perennial Books, 1976.

Reiss, Edmund, Louise Horner Reiss, and Beverly Taylor. Arthurian Legend and Literature: An Annotated Bibliography. New York: Garland Publishing, 1984.

Reiterman, Tom. Raven. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1982.

Rejdak, Z. "Nina Kulagina's Mind Over Matter." Psychic 2, no. 4 (June 1971).

Rele, Vasant G. The Mysterious Kundalini: The Physical Basis of the "Kundalini (Hatha) Yoga" in Terms of Western Anatomy and Physiology. Rev. ed. Bombay, India: D. B. Taraporevala, 1950.

Remarkable Sermons of Rachel Baker and Pious Ejaculations Delivered During Sleep Taken Down in Shorthand. London, 1815.

Remy, Nicolas. Demonolatry. 1595. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1974.

Renfrew, Sita Paulickpulle. A Buddhist Guide for Laymen. Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge Buddhist Association, 1963.

"Report of the Census of Hallucinations." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 10 (1894): 25.

Report on Spiritualism of the Committee of the London Dialectical Society. London: Longmans, Green, Reader, & Dyer, 1871. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1976.

Research in Parapsychology. N.p., 1993. Reprint, Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, Inc., 1998.

Reuter, Florizel von. A Musician's Talks with Unseen Friends. London: Rider, 1931.

Rex Nemorensis [Charles Cardell]. Witch. London: Privately published, 1964.

Reynolds, Aidan, and William Charlton. Arthur Machen: A Short Account of His Life and Work. London, 1963.

Rhine, J. B. Extra-sensory Perception. Boston: Boston Society for Psychical Research, 1934. Rev. ed. Boston: Branden, 1964.

———. "History of Experimental Studies." In Handbook of Parapsychology, edited by B. Wolman. New York: Van Nostrand Rhinhold, 1977.

———. "An Investigation of a 'Mind-Reading' Horse." Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology 23 (1929).

———. New Frontiers of the Mind. New York: Farrar and Rinehart, 1939.

———. New World of the Mind. New York: William Sloane Associates, 1953.

———. The Reach of the Mind. New York: William Sloane Associates, 1947.

Rhine, J. B. and Associates. Parapsychology from Duke to FRNM. Durham, N.C.: Parapsychology Press, 1965.

Rhine, J. B., and J. G. Pratt. Parapsychology, Frontier Science of the Mind. N.p., 1957.

Rhine, J. B., and R. Brier. Parapsychology Today. New York: Citadel Press, 1968.

Rhine, J. B., J. G. Pratt, Charles E. Stuart, Burke M. Smith, and Joseph A. Greenwood. Extrasensory Perception After Sixty Years; a Critical Evaluation. New York: Henry Holt, 1940. Reprint, Boston: Bruce Humphries, 1960. Reprint, Boston: Branden, 1966.

Rhine, J. B., ed. Progress in Parapsychology. Durham, N.C.: Parapsychology Press, 1971.

Rhine, Louisa E. ESP in Life and Lab: Tracing Hidden Channels. New York: Macmillan, 1967.

———. Hidden Channels of the Mind. New York: William Sloane, 1961. London, 1962. Reprint, New York: Apollo, 1966. Reprint, Alexandria, Va.: Time-Life, Inc., 1990.

———. The Invisible Picture. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1981.

———. Mind Over Matter: Psychokinesis. New York: Macmillan, 1970. Reprint, New York: Collier, 1972.

———. Psi: What Is It? New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

———. Something Hidden. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1983.

Rhinehart, Keith Milton. Soul Mates and Twin Rays. Seattle, Wash.: Aquarian Foundation, 1972.

Rhodes, H. T. F. The Satanic Mass. London, 1954. Reprint, London: Arrow, 1964.

———. The Satanic Mass. New York: Citadel, 1955. Reprint, London, 1973.

Rhys, John. Celtic Britain. London, 1882.

Rhys, Sir John. Studies in the Arthurian Legend. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1891.

Riccardo, Martin V. The Lure of the Vampire. Chicago Adams Press, 1983.

———. Vampires Unearthed. New York: Garland, 1983.

Rice, Edward. John Frum He Come. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1974.

Richards, John Thomas. SORRAT: A History of the Neihardt Psychokinesis Experiments, 1961–1981. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1982.

Richards, M. C. Toward Wholeness: Rudolf Steiner Education in America. Middletown, Conn.: Wesleyan University Press, 1980.

"Richard's Garden Revisited." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 41, 712 (June 1962).

Richardson, Alan. Priestess: The Life and Magic of Dion Fortune. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1987.

Richardson, J. E. Great Known (1928). Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1999.

———. The Great Message. Great School of Natural Science, 1950.

———. The Great Work. Chicago: Indo-American, 1907.

———. Who Answers Prayer? Great School of Natural Science, 1954.

Richardson, James T., Joel Best, and David G. Bromley. The Satanism Scare. New York: Aldine de Gruyter, 1991.

Richardson, Katherine W. Salem Witchcraft Trials. Salem, Mass.: Peabody Essex Museum, 1997.

Richeport, Madeleine M. "The Interface Between Multiple Personality, Spirit Mediumship, and Hypnosis." American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis 34, no. 3 (January 1992): 168–177.

Richet, Charles. Thirty Years of Psychical Research. New York: Macmillan, 1923. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

———. Notre Sixième Sens. N.p., 1927. English ed. as Our Sixth Sense. N.p., 1929.

———. Traité de Métapsychique. N.p., 1922. English edition as Thirty Years of Psychical Research: Being a Treatise on Metaphysics. New York: Macmillan; London: W. Collins Sons, 1923. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

Richmond, A. B. What I Saw at Cassadaga Lake; A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report. N.p., 1888.

Richmond, Cora L. V. Discourses Through the Mediumship of Mrs. Cora L. V. Tappan. Boston: Colby & Rich, 1876. Reprint, London, N.p., 1878.

———. My Experiments While out of the Body and My Return after Many Days. Boston: Christopher Press, 1915.

———. Psychosophy. Chicago: The Author, 1888. Reprint, Chicago: Regan Printing House, 1915.

———. The Soul in Human Embodiment. Chicago: Spiritualist Publishing, 1887.

Richmond, Kenneth F. Evidence of Identity. London: G. Bell, 1939.

———. "Preliminary Studies of the Recorded Leonard Material." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1936).

Richmond, Zoe. Evidence of Purpose. N.p., 1938.

Rickard, Robert J. M., and Richard Kelly. Photographs of the Unknown. London: Book Club Associates, 1980.

Ridge, Martin. Ignatius Donnelly: The Portrait of a Politician. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1962.

Rinaldi, Peter M. The Man in the Shroud. New York: Vantage Press, 1972. Reprint, London: Futura, 1974. Reprinted as It Is The Lord: A Study of the Shroud of Christ. New York: Warner, 1973.

Ring, Kenneth. Heading Toward Omega: In Search of the Meaning of the Near-Death Experience. New York: William Morrow, 1984.

———. Life at Death: A Scientific Investigation of the Near-Death Experience. New York: William Morrow, 1980.

———. The Omega Project: Near-Death Experiences, UFO Encounters, and Mind at Large. New York: William Morrow, 1992.

Ringger, Peter. Das Problem der Besessenheit (The Problem of Possession). N.p., 1953.

———. Das Weltbild der Parapsychologie (The World View of Parapsychology). N.p., 1959.

———. Parapsychologie: Die Wissenschaft des Okkulten (Parapsychology: The Science of the Occult). N.p., 1957. Reprint, Zürich; Stuttgart: Werner Classen, 1972.

Ripinsky-Naxon, Michael. "Hallucinogens, Shamanism, and the Cultural Process: Symbolic Archaeology and Dialectics," Anthropos 84 (1989): 219–224.

———. "Psychoactivity and Shamanic States of Consciousness," Yearbook for Ethnomedicine and the Study of Consciousness (Jahrbuch für Ethnomedizin und Bewusstseinsforschung) vol. 4 (1995): 35–43.

———. "Cognition, Symbolization, and the Beginnings of Shamanism," Journal of Prehistoric Religion vol. 9 (1995): 43–54.

———. "Evolution, Cognition, and the Origins of Shamanism." In Welten des Bewusstseins [Worlds of Consciousness]. Edited by Christian Scharfetter and Christian Rätsch. vol. 9, Berlin: VWB-Verlag für Wissenschaft und Bildung, 1998.

———. "Maya Cosmovision and Shamanistic Symbolism," Journal of Prehistoric Religion vol. 7 (1993): 49–61.

———. "Psychoactivity and Shamanic States of Consciousness," Yearbook for Ethnomedicine and the Study of Consciousness (Jahrbuch für Ethnomedizin und Bewusstseinsforschung) vol. 4 (1995): 35–43.

———. Shamanism in Siberia and Central Asia, review of Shamanism: Soviet Studies of Traditional Religion in Siberia and Central Asia, by Marjorie M. Balzer, ed., Anthropology of Consciousness 4 (1993): 15–16.

———. "Shamanism: Religion or Rite?" Journal of Prehistoric Religion vol. 6 (1992): 37–44.

———. "Shamanistic Knowledge and Cosmology." In Tribal Epistemologies. Edited by Helmut Wautischer. Aldershot: Avebury/Ashgate Publishing, 1998.

———. The Nature of Shamanism: Substance and Function of a Religious Metaphor. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1993.

Ripley Revived, or an Exposition upon George Ripley's Hermetico-Poetical Works. London, 1978.

Ripley, George. The Compound of Alchemie. N.p., 1591.

———. Medulla Alchimioe. N.p., n.d.

———. The Treatise of Mercury. N.p., n.d.

Rist, J. M. Plotinus: The Road to Reality. Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge University Press, 1967.

Ritley, Mary. Invitation to a Hungry Feast. Santa Monica, Calif.: The Prosperos Inner Space Center, 1970.

Ritson, Joseph. Fairy Tales, Now First Collected: To Which Are Prefixed Two Dissertations: 1. On Pygmies; 2. On Fairies. London, 1831.

Rittelmeyer, Friedrich. Rudolf Steiner Enters My Life. London: George Roberts, 1929.

Roach, William, ed. The Didot Perceval. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1941.

Roach, Marilynne K. In the Days of the Salem Witchcraft Trials. New York: Ticknor & Fields, 1996.

Robinson, Lyle W. Edgar Cayce's Story of the Origin & Destiny of Man. New York: Berkley Publishing Group, 1985.

Robbins, Anne Manning. Both Sides of the Veil: A Personal Experience. Boston: Sherman & French, 1909.

Robbins, Rossell Hope. The Encyclopedia of Witchcraft and Demonology. New York: Crown Publilshers, 1959.

Roberts, C. E. Bechhofer, ed. The Trial of Mrs. Duncan. London, 1945.

Roberts, Estelle. Fifty Years a Medium. London, 1959. Reprint, New York: Avon, 1972. Reprint, London: Corgi, 1975.

———. Forty Years a Medium. London: Herbert Jenkins, 1959. Revised as Fifty Years a Medium. London: Corgi Books, 1969.

Roberts, Henry C. The Complete Prophecies of Nostradamus. New York, 1947.

Roberts, Jane. Adventures in Consciousness: An Introduction to Aspect Psychology. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1975.

———. Dreams, "Evolution," and Value Fulfillment; A Seth Book. 2 vols. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1986.

———. The God of Jane: A Psychic Manifesto. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1981.

———. How to Develop Your ESP Power. New York: Frederick Fell, 1966. Reprinted as The Coming of Seth. New York: Pocket Books, 1976.

———. Seth Speaks:The Eternal Validity of the Soul. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice Hall, 1972.

———. Seth, Dreams and Projection of Consciousness. Walpole: N. H., Stillpoint Publishing, 1986.

———. The Nature of Personal Reality: A Seth Book. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1974.

———. The Seth Material. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1970.

Roberts, Kenneth. Henry Gross and His Dowsing Rod. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1952.

Roberts, Marie. British Poets and Secret Societies. Totowa, N.J.: Barnes & Noble, 1986.

Roberts, Oral. My Story. Tulsa, Okla.: Oral Roberts Evangelistic Association, 1961.

Roberts, Thomas B. and Robert N. Jesse. "Recollections of the Good Friday Experiment: An Interview with Huston Smith," Journal of Transpersonal Psychology 29, no. 2 (1997): 99–104.

Roberts, Ursula. The Mystery of the Human Aura. London: Spiritualist Association of Great Britain, 1972.

Robertson, Olivia. The Call of Isis. Enniscorthy, Eire: Cesara Publications, 1975.

———. The College of Isis Manual. Enniscorthy, Eire: Cesara Publications, n.d.

———. Dea: Rites and Mysteries of the Goddess. Enniscorthy, Eire: Cesara Publications, 1975.

———. Handbook of the Fellowship of Isis. Enniscorthy, Eire: Cesara Publications, n.d.

———. The Isis Wedding Rite. Enniscorthy, Eire: Cesara Publications, 1975.

———. Ordination of a Priestess. Enniscorthy, Eire: Cesara Publications, n.d.

———. Rite of Rebirth. Enniscorthy, Eire: Cesara Publications, 1977.

Robertson, Olivia, and Lord Strathloch. The Fellowship of Isis Directory for 1980. Enniscorthy, Eire: Cesara Publications, 1979.

Robertson, R. Macdonald. Selected Highland Folktales. North Pomfret, Vt.: David and Charles, 1977.

Robertson, Sandy. The Aleister Crowley Scrapbook. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1988.

Robinson, Douglas. American Apocalypses: The Image of the End of the World in American Literature. Baltimore, Md.: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1985.

Rochas, Albert de. L'Extériorisation de la Motricité. Paris, 1906.

Rochas, Eugene. Les Vies Successives. N.p., 1911.

Rochas, Eugene A. A. L'Exteriorisation de la Motricité. 1896. Reprint, N.p., 1899.

Rochas, Eugene Albert de. La Science des Philosophes et l'Art des Thaumaturges dans l'Antiquité. N.p., 1882.

———. Suspension de la Vie. N.p., 1913.

———. Les Forces non définies. Paris: Masson, 1887.

———. Les Sentiments, la Musique et le Geste; Les Vies Successives. N.p., 1911.

———. Receuil de documents relatifs à la levitation du corps humain. N.p., 1897.

Rochester Knockings! Discovery and Explanation of the Source of the Phenomena Generally Known as the Rochester Knockings. Buffalo, N.Y., 1851.

Rockwell, Theodore, Robert Rockwell, and W. Teed Rockwell. "Irrational Rationalists: A Critique of the Humanists' Crusade Against Parapsychology." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 72 (January 1971): 23–34.

Rodegast, Pat, and Judith Stanton. Emmanuel's Book: A Manual for Living Comfortably in the Cosmos. New York: Some Friends of Emmanuel, 1985.

Rodway, Howard. The Psychic Directory: A Comprehensive Guide to Practicing Psychics in the UK London: Futura/Macdonald, 1984.

Roerich, Helena. Fiery World. 2 vols. New York: Agni Yoga Press, 1943.

———. Hierarchy. 3d ed. New York: Agni Yoga Press, 1947.

———. Infinity. 2 vols. New York: Agni Yoga Press, 1956, 1957.

———. Leaves of Morya's Garden. 2 vols. New York: Agni Yoga Press, 1952, 1953.

———. Letters of Helena Roerich. New York: Agni Yoga Press, 1954, 1967.

Roerich, Nicholas. Adamant. New York: Corona Mundi, 1922.

———. Flame in Chalice. New York: Nicholas Roerich Museum, 1929.

———. Heart of Asia. New York: Atlas Publishing, 1929.

———. Realm of Light. New York: Nicholas Roerich Museum, 1931.

Rofé, Husein. Path of Subud. London: Rider & Co., 1959.

Rogers, E. C. Philosophy of Mysterious Agents, Human and Mundane. Boston, 1853.

Rogers, Spencer L., "Shaman and Medicine-man," Ciba Symposia 4, no. 1 (1942): 1202–1224.

———. The Shaman: His Symbol and His Healing Power. Springfield, Ill: Charles C. Thomas, 1982.

Rogo, D. Scott.. "ESP in the Ganzfeld: An Exploration of Parameters." In Research in Parapsychology 1975, edited by J. D. Morris, W. G. Roll, and R. L. Morris. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1976.

———. An Experience of Phantoms. New York: Taplinger, 1974.

———. ' "Free Response Ganzfeld Experiments With a Selected Subject." In Research in Parapsychology 1975, edited by J. D. Morris, W. G. Roll, and R. L. Morris. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1976.

———.The Haunted Universe. New York: New American Library, 1977.

———. "In-depth Analysis of the Vampire Legend." Fate 21, no. 9 (September 1968): 77.

———. Leaving the Body: A Complete Guide to Astral Projection. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1983.

———. Methods and Models for Education in Parapsychology. N.p., 1973.

———. Minds and Motion. New York: Taplinger, 1978.

———. Mind Beyond the Body: The Mystery of ESP Projection. New York: Penguin, 1978.

———. Miracles: A Parascientific Inquiry Into Wondrous Phenomena. New York: Dell Press, 1982. Reprinted as Miracles: A Parascientific Exploration Into Wondrous Phenomena. Dallas, Tex.: Aquarian Press, 1991.

———. Nad: A Study of Some Unusual "Other World" Experiences. 2 vols. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1970, 1972.

———. Parapsychology: A Century of Inquiry. New York: Dell, 1975.

———. The Poltergeist Experience. New York: Penguin, 1979.

———. Welcoming Silence. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1973.

Rogo, D. Scott, and Raymond Bayless. Phone Calls From the Dead. Englewood Cliff, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1979.

Rohmer, Sax. The Romance of Sorcery. London, 1914. Reprint, New York: E. P. Dutton, 1915. Reprint, New York: Causeway, 1973.

Rohr, Philip. De Masticatione Mortuorum. N.p., 1679.

Rojcewicz, Peter M. "The Boundaries of Orthodoxy: A Folkloric Look at the UFO Phenomenon." 2 vols. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania. Ph.D. dissertation, 1984.

———. "The 'Men in Black' Experience and Tradition: Analogues with the Traditional Devil Hypothesis." Journal of American Folklore 100 (April/June 1987): 148–60.

Roll, W. G., R. L. Morris, and J. D. Morris, eds. Research in Parapsychology 1975. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1976.

———. Research in Parapsychology 1974. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1975.

———. Research in Parapsychology 1973. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1974.

———. Research in Parapsychology 1972. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1973.

Roll, William G. "ESP and Memory." In Philosophical Dimensions of Parapsychology, edited by J. M. O. Wheatley and H. L. Edge. Springfield, Ill.: Charles C. Thomas, 1976.

———. The Poltergeist. New York: New American Library; Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday 1972. Reprint: Methuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1976.

Rollins, Hyder E., ed. The Pack of Autolycus or Strange and Terrible News of Ghosts, Apparitions, Monstrous Births, Showers of Wheat, Judgments of God, and other Prodigious and Fearful Happenings as told in Broadside Ballads of the Years 1624–1693. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1927.

Romains, Jules [Louis Farigoule]. Vision Extra-Rétinienne. 1920. Translated by C. K. Ogden as Eyeless Sight: A Study of Extra-Retinal Vision and the Paroptic Sense. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1924. Reprint, New York: Citadel Press; Secaucus, N. J.: Carol Publishing Group, 1978.

Romanucci-Ross, Lola, Daniel Moerman, and Laurence Tancredi, eds. The Anthropology of Medicine: From Culture to Method. South Hadley, Mass.: Bergin & Garvey Publishers, 1983.

Romer, C. Ausführliche historische Darstellung einer höchst merkwürdigen Somnambule. Stuttgart, 1821.

Rommel, Kenneth M. Operation Animal Mutilation. Report of the District Attorney, First Judicial District, State of New Mexico. Sante Fe, N.Mex.: District Attorney, 1980.

Ronay, Gabriel. The Dracula Myth. London: W. H. Auden, 1972; London: Pan 1975.

Roney-Dougal, S. M. and Guenther Vogl. "Some Speculations on the Effect of Geomagnetism on the Pineal Gland," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 59, no. 830 (January 1993): 1–15.

Rosaldo, Renato. The Ilongot Headhunting 1883–1974: A Study in History and Society. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1980.

Rose, Donna. Love Spells. Hialeah, Fla.: Mi-World Publishing Co., n.d.

Rose, Elliot. A Razor for a Goat: A Discussion of Certain Problems in the History of Witchcraft and Diabolism. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1989.

Rose, Louis. Faith Healing. London: Victor Gollancz, 1968.

Rose, Ronald. "Australia's Medicine Men." Tomorrow (spring 1954).

———. "Crisis Telepathy in Australia." Tomorrow (winter 1957).

———. "Experiments in ESP and PK with Aboriginal Subjects." Journal of Parapsychology (September 1952).

———. Living Magic: The Realities Underlying the Psychical Practices and Beliefs of Australian Aborigines. New York: Rand McNally, 1956. Reprint as Primitive Psychic Power; the Realities Underlying the Psychical Practices and Beliefs of Australian Aborigines. New York: New American Library, 1968.

———. South Seas Magic. London: R. Hale, 1959.

Roseman, Bernard. The Peyote Story. North Hollywood, Calif.: Wilshire Book, 1963.

Rosenbohm, Alexandra, "Halluzinogene Drogen im Schamanismus: Mythos und Ritual im Kulturellen Vergleich," Marburger Studien zur Völkerkunde vol. 8, Berlin: Dietrich Reimer Verlag, 1991.

Rosenkruz, Sergius. Rosikrucinism. Los Angeles: The Author, 1915.

Rosenthal, Franz. The Herb: Hashish Versus Medieval Muslim Society. Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1971.

Rosenthal, Robert. Experimenter Effects in Behavioral Research. New York: Appleton-Century-Crofts, 1966.

Rosher, Grace. Beyond the Horizon. London, 1961.

The Rosicrucian Manual. San Jose, Calif.: Rosicrucian Press, 1952.

Ross, Anne. Pagan Celtic Britain. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1967.

Rossbach, Sarah. Feng Shui: The Chinese Art of Placement. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1983.

Roth, Phyllis A. Bram Stoker. Boston: Twayne, 1982.

Rothschild, Friedrich S. "Biosemiotische Analyse der Verwandschaft zwischen Parapsychologie und Physik" (Biosemiotic Analysis of the Relation Between Parapsychology and Physics), Dynamische Psychiatrie 21, no. 1-2 (1988): 96–109.

Row, M. C. Nanjunda. Cosmic Consciousness, or the Vedantic Idea of Realisation of Muktu in the Light of Modern Psychology. Madras, India, 1910.

Rowdon, Maurice. The Talking Dogs. New York: Macmillan, 1978.

Rowley, Harold H. Prophecy and Religion in Ancient China and Israel. New York: Harper, 1956.

Royce, Josiah. "Report of the Committee on Phantasm and Presentiments." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 1, 3 (December 1877); 1, 4 (March 1889).

———. William James and Other Essays on the Philosophy of Life. N.p., 1911. Reprint, Freeport, N.Y.: Books for Libraries Press, 1969.

Rubens, Donna, Darina Gyurkovics and Karol Hornacek. "The Cultural Production of Bioterapia: Psychic Healing and the Natural Medicine Movement in Slovakia," Social Science & Medicine 41, no. 9 November 1995: 1261–1271.

Rucker, Rudy von Bitter. The Fourth Dimension: Toward a Geometry of Higher Reality. Boston: Houghton-Mifflin, 1984.

Rudhyar, Dane. The Astrological Houses: The Spectrum of Individual Experience. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1972.

———. The Astrology of Personality: A Reformulation of Astrological Concepts and Ideals, in Terms of Contemporary Psychology and Philosophy. New York: Lucis Publishing, 1936.

———. The Astrology of Transformation: A Multilevel Approach. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1980.

———. From Humanistic to Transpersonal Astrology. Palo Alto, Calif.: Seed Center, 1975.

———. Occult Preparations for the New Age. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1975.

———. Person-centered Astrology. Lakemont, Ga.: CSA Press, 1972.

———. The Planetarization of Consciousness. New York: Harper, 1972.

———. Rhythm of Wholeness: A Total Affirmation of Being. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1983.

Rudolph, Erwin Paul. William Law. Boston: Twayne, 1980.

Rudwin, Maximilian J. The Devil in Legend and Literature. LaSalle, Ill.: Open Court Publishing, 1973.

Runyon, Carroll. The Original Cypher Manuscript of the Golden Dawn. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1996.

Rush, J. H. "Parapsychology: Some Personal Observations." In Men and Women of Parapsychology. Edited by R. Pilkington. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1987.

———. "Some Considerations as to a Physical Basis of Extrasensory Perception." Journal of Parapsychology (1943).

———. "A Reciprocal Distance GESP Test with Drawings." Journal of Parapsychology (1949).

Russ, Charles. "An Instrument Which is Set in Motion by Vision." The Lancet (July 3, 1931).

Russell, Charles Taze. Unseen Spirits—Do They Help Us? or, Do They Harm Us? Brooklyn, N.Y.: Watchtower Bible and Tract Society, 1978.

———. What Do the Scriptures Say about "Survival of Death?" Brooklyn, N.Y.: Watchtower Bible and Tract Society, 1955.

———. What Say the Scriptures about Spiritism? Brooklyn, N.Y.: Watchtower Bible and Tract Society, 1897.

Russell, Edmund. " 'Mr. Isaacs' of Simla." Occult Review (March 1917).

Russell, Eric Frank. Great World Mysteries. London, 1957.

Russell, Jeffrey Burton. The Devil: Perceptions of Evil from Antiquity to Primitive Christianity. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1977.

———. Lucifer: The Devil in the Middle Ages. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1984.

———. Satan: The Early Christian Tradition. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1981.

———. Witchcraft in the Middle Ages. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1972.

Russell, Rick Frank. The Best of Eric Frank Russell. Edited by Alan Dean Foster. New York: Del Rey, 1978.

———. Sinister Barrier. Reading, Pa.: Fantasy Press, 1948.

Rutherford, Ward. Shamanism: The Foundations of Magic. Wellingborough: Aquarian Press, 1986.

Rutter, J. O. N. Human Electricity: The Means of Its Development. London: Parker, 1854.

Rutter, Owen. The Pagans of North Borneo. London: Hutchinson, 1929.

Ryan, Charles J. H. P. Blavatsky and the Theosophical Movement. Pasadena, Calif.: Theosophical University Press, 1975.

Rymer, J. Snaith. "Spirit Manifestations." A lecture presented in London, 1857.

Rynne, Catherine. Knock 1879–1979. Dublin: Veritas Publications, 1979.

Ryzl, Milan. "Training the Psi Faculty by Hypnosis." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 41 (1962).

Ryzl, Milan, and J. Bekoff. "Loss of Stability of ESP Performance in a High-Scoring Subject." Journal of Parapsychology 29 (1965).

Ryzl, Milan, and J. G. Pratt. "The Focusing of ESP Upon Particular Targets." Journal of Parapsychology 27 (1963).

———."A Further Confirmation of Stabilized ESP Performance in a Selected Subject." Journal of Parapsychology 27 (1963).

———. "A Repeated-Calling ESP Test with Sealed Cards." Journal of Parapsychology 27 (1963).

Ryzl, Milan, and J. T. Barendregt, P. R. Barkema, and Jan Kappers. "An ESP Experiment in Prague." Journal of Parapsychology 29 (1965).

Sabin, Katharine C. ESP and Dream Analysis. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1974.

Sabine, William Henry Waldo. A Prophecy Concerning the Swedish Monarchy. N.p., 1968.

———. "Is There a Case for Retrocognition?" Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 44 (April 1950): 43–64. Reprint as Surveys in Parapsychology. Edited by Rhea A. White. 1976.

Sachse, Julius F. The German Pietists of Provencial Pennsylvania. Philadelphia, 1895. Reprint, New York: AMS Press, 1970.

Sadoul, Jacques. Alchemists and Gold. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1972. Reprint, London: Neville Spearman, 1972.

Sage, M. Mrs. Piper and the Society for Psychical Research. London, 1903; New York, Scott-Thaw, 1904.

Sahagun, Bernardino de. Historia de la Conquista de Mexico. Mexico, 1829.

Saint Germain. Violet Fire: The Torch of Freedom's Holy Light. Portland, Ore.: Universariun Foundation, 1983.

Saint-Germain, Comte C. de. The Practice of Palmistry for Professional Purposes. 2 vols. 1897–98. Reprint, Hollywood, Calif.: Newcastle, 1973.

Saller, K. F. "Die Parapsychologie vom Standpunkt des Anthropologen" (Parapsychology from the anthropologist's point of view). Die Heilkunst 68, no. 7 (1955).

Salter, Helen. "Evidence for Telepathy." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (1951).

———. "The History of George Valiantine." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1931).

———. "Some Experiments with a New Automatist." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1918).

———. "Some Observations on Scripts of the SPR Group of Automatists." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (1951).

Salter, W. H. "F. W. H. Myers' Posthumous Message." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 52 (1958).

———. Ghosts & Apparitions. London: G. Bell & Sons, 1938.

———. "J. G. Piddington and His Work on the Cross-Correspondence 'Scripts.' " Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 36 (1952).

———. Trance Mediumship: An Introductory Study of Mrs. Piper and Mrs. Leonard. London: Society for Psychical Research, 1950. Rev. ed. London: Society for Psychical Research, 1962.

———. Zoar; or, The Evidence of Psychical Research Concerning Survival. London: Sidgwick & Jackson, 1961. Reprint, Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

Salter, W. H., G. W. Fisk, and Harry H. Price. "G. N. M. Tyrrell and His Contributions to Psychical Research." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 37 (1953).

Salter, William H. "An Experiment in Pseudo-Scripts." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 36, no. 103 (1927).

———. The Society for Psychical Research; An Outline of Its History. London: Society for Psychical Research, 1948.

———. "Some Automatic Scripts Purported to be Inspired by Margaret Veley." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 38, no. 110 (1928–29).

———. Trance Mediumship: An Introductory Study of Mrs. Piper and Mrs. Leonard. London: Society for Psychical Research, 1950.

Saltmarsh, H. F., and S. G. Soal. "A Method of Estimating the Supernormal Content of Mediumistic Communications." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 39, no. 114 (1930).

Saltmarsh, Herbert Francis. "Ambiguity in the Question of Survival." Proceedings on the Society for Psychical Research 46, no. 165 (1941).

———. Evidence of Personal Survival from Cross Correspondences. London: G. Bell & Son, 1938. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

———. Foreknowledge. London: G. Bell & Sons, 1938. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

———. "Is Proof of Survival Possible?" Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 40, no. 122 (1931–32).

———. "Report on the Investigation of Some Sittings with Mrs. Warren Elliott." Proceedings on the Society for Psychical Research 39, no. 112 (1930).

Salverte, Eusèbe. Des sciences occultes. Paris, 1834.

Samarin, William J. Tongues of Men and of Angels: The Religious Language of Pentecostalism. New York: Macmillan, 1972.

Samorini, Giorgio. "La Religión Buiti y la Planta Psicoactiva Tabernanthe Iboga. África Ecuatorial," In Plantas, Chamanismo y Estados de Consciencia Barcelona: Los Libros de la Liebre de Marzo (1994): 177–195.

———. "The Oldest Representations of Hallucinogenic Mushrooms in the World (Sahara Desert, 9000-7000 B.P.)," Integration: Journal for Mind-Moving Plants and Culture nos. 2 & 4 (1992): 69–78.

———. "Sciamanismo, funghi psicotropi e stati alterati di coscienza: un rapporto da chiarire," Bollettino del Centro Camuno di Studi Preistorici vol. 25–26 (1990): 147–150.

———. "Sulla presenza di piante e funghi allucinogenu in Valcamonica," Bollettino del Centro Camuno di Studi Preistorici vol. 24 (1988): 132–136.

Sampath, Ursula. Kaspar Hauser: A Modern Metaphor. Columbia, S.C.: Camden House, 1991.

Samuel, Geoffrey. Civilized Shamans: Buddhism in Tibetan Societies Washington D.C.: Smithsonian Institution Press, 1993.

Samuel, Herbert L. Man of the Spirit: Sir Francis Younghusband. London, 1953.

Samuels, Mike. Seeing With the Mind's Eye: The History, Techniques, and Uses of Visualization. New York: Bookworks; Random House, 1975.

Sananda, as recorded by Sister Thedra. I, the Lord God Says Unto Them. Mt. Shasta, Calif.: Association of Sananda and Sanat Kumara, [1954].

Sanchez, Regina. "Empathy, Diversity, and Telepathy in Mother/Daughter Dyads: An Empirical Investigation Utilizing Rogers' Conceptual Framework," Scholarly Inquiry for Nursing Practice 3, no. 1 (Spring 1989): 29–44.

[Sanders, Alexander]. The Alex Sanders Lectures. New York: Magickal Childe Publishing, 1980. Rev. ed. 1982.

Sanders, Ed. The Family. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1971. Reprint, New York: Avon, 1972.

Sanderson, Ivan T. Abominable Snowmen: Legend Comes to Life. New York: Chilton, 1961. Abridged ed., New York: Pyramid Publications, 1968.

———. Investigating the Unexplained. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1972.

———. Invisible Residents: A Disquisition Upon Certain Matters Maritime, and the Possibility of Intelligent Life Under the Waters of This Earth. New York: World Publishing, 1970.

———. More "Things." New York: Pyramid Books, 1969.

———. "Things." New York: Pyramid Books, 1967.

———. Uninvited Visitors; A Biologist Looks at UFO's. New York: Cowles, 1967.

Sandwich, The Earl of [Edward George Henry Montague]. My Experiences in Spiritual Healing. London, N.p., 1915.

Sandwith, George, and Helen Sandwith. Research in Fiji, Tonga & Samoa. Surrey, England: Omega Press, 1954.

Sanger, C. P. "Analysis of Mrs. Verrall's Card Experiments." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 2, no. 28 (1895).

Santucci, James. "H. N. Stokes and the O. E. Library Critic." Theosophical History 1, 6 (April 1986): 129–39.

———. "H. N. Stokes' Early Contact with the Theosophical Society." Theosophical History 2, 1 (January 1987): 4–22.

Sanyal, J. M., trans. The Srimad Bhagavatam. 2 Vols., New Delhi, India: Munshiram Manocharlal, 1973.

Sargant, William. The Mind Possessed: A Physiology of Possession, Mysticism & Faith Healing. London: Heinemann, 1973. Reprint, Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott, 1974.

Sargent, Epes. Planchette; or, The Despair of Science. Boston: Roberts Brothers, 1869.

———. The Proof Palpable of Immortality. Boston: n.p., 1876. Boston: Colby & Rich, 1881. Reprint, Boston: Banner of Light Publishing, 1901.

———. The Scientific Basis of Spiritualism. Boston: Colby & Rich, 1880. Rev. ed. Boston: Banner of Light Publishing, 1891.

Sarkar, P. R. Ideas and Ideology. Calcutta, India: Ananda Marga Pracaraka Research, 1967. Calcutta, India: Acarya Pranavananda Avadhuta, 1978.

Sasche, Julius F. The German Pietists of Provincial Pennsylvania. Philadelphia, 1895.

Satchakrananda, Yogi. Coming and Going: The Mother's Drama. Deming, N.Mex.: Raj-Yoga Math & Retreat, 1975.

———. Thomas Merton's Dharma. Deming, N.Mex.: Raj-Yoga Math & Retreat, 1986.

Satchidananda, Sri Swami. A Decade of Service. Pomfret Center, Conn.: Satchidananda Ashram-Yogaville, 1976.

———. Integral Hatha Yoga. New York: Holt, Rinehart & Winston, 1970. New York: Henry Holt and Co. Inc.; Buckingham, Va.: Integral Yoga Publications, 1995.

Satchidananda, Swami. Beyond Words. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1977.

———. The Glory of Sannyasa. Pomfret Center, Conn.: Integral Yoga Institute, 1975.

Satchidananda, Swami, et al. Living Yoga: The Value of Yoga in Today's Life. New York: Gordon and Beach Science Publishers, 1977.

———. Sri Satchtheidananda: A Decade of Service. Pomfret Center, Conn.: Satchidananda Ashram–Yogaville, 1976.

Saunders, David R., and R. Roger Hawkins. UFOs? Yes! Where the Condon Committee Went Wrong. New York: World, 1968. Reprint, New York: New American Library, 1968.

Savage, Minot J. Can Telepathy Explain? New York; London: G. P. Putnam's & Sons, 1902; 1903.

———. Immortality. N.p., 1906.

———. Life Beyond Death. New York; London: G. P. Putnam's & Sons, 1899; 1902; 1903.

Savile, Bourchier W. Apparitions; A Book of Facts. London, 1874.

Savizar and Silarra. Conscious Channeling. Sedona, Ariz.: Earth Mission, 1989.

———. Extraterrestrial Earth Mission. Book I: The Awakening. Sedona, Ariz.: Earth Mission, 1989.

———. The Superconscious Technique. Sedona, Ariz.: Earth Mission, 1989.

Scarabaeus [Thorstein Wereide]. Mysteriesamfund (Mystery Societies). N.p., 1948.

Scarborough, Dorothy. The Supernatural in Modern English Fiction. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1917.

Scarre, Geoffrey F. Witchcraft Magic-16th & 17th C. London: Macmillan Publishers, Limited, 1996.

Schadewald, Robert. "Biorhythms: A Critical Look at Critical Days." Fate (February 1979): 75–80.

Schaefer, Hans. "Ist die Existenz Parapsychologischer Phènomene Bewiesen?" (Have Parapsychological Phenomena Been Proved?) Münchner Medizinische Wochenschrift 99 (1957).

———. "Parapsychologie." Arztliche Praxis 3, no. 48 (1951).

———. "Telepathie und Hellshehen" (Telepathy and Clairvoyance). Die Umschau 52 (1952).

Schang, F. C. Visiting Cards of Celebrities. Paris: Gale Research, 1973.

Schärer, Hans. Ngaju Religion: The Conception of God among a South Borneo People. Translated by Rodney Needham from the 1946 German edition. The Hague: Martinus Nijhoff, 1963.

Schatzman, Morton. The Story of Ruth. London: Duckworth; New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1980.

Schaut, George B. and Michael A. Persinger. "Subjective Telepathic Experiences, Geomagnetic Activity and the ELF Hypothesis: I. Data Analyses," PSI Research 4, no. 1 (March 1985): 4–20.

Schaya, Leo. The Universal Meaning of the Kabbalah. Baltimore, Md.: Penguin Books, 1973.

Schepis, Giovanni. "I 'Poteri magici' e l'Uomo Normale" ("Magical powers" and the normal man). Ulisse (October 1948).

———. "La Esplorazione delle Percezioni Extra-Sensoriali col Metodo Statistico" (Exploring extrasensory perception by statistical methods). Notiziario di Metapsichica (March 1949).

———. "La Parapsicologia in Italia e la scienza ufficiale: Anno Zero" (Parapsychology in Italy and official science: The year zero). Studies and Problems of Parapsychology (1961).

———. "Questioni di Metodo in Parapsicologia" (Questions of method in parapsychology). Revista de Parapsicologia (April–June 1955).

———. "Un Nuovo Campo di Applicazione del Metodo Statistico: Lo Studio dell' effetto detto di ESP" (A new field for the application of statistical methods: The study of so-called extrasensory perception). Proceedings, Societ à Italiana di Demografia e Statistica (1947).

Scherer, Wallace B. "Spontaneity as a Factor in ESP." Journal of Parapsychology (June 1948).

Schiller, F. C. S. "On Some Philosophical Assumptions in the Investigation of the Problem of a Future Life." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 15 (1900).

———. "Philosophy, Science, and Psychical Research. A Presidential Address." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 27 (1914).

———. Problems of Belief. London: Hodder & Stoughton; New York: George H. Doran, 1924. Reprint, New York: AMS Press, 1980.

———. "The Progress of Psychical Research." Fortnightly Review 77 (1905).

———. Psychology and Logic in Psychology and the Sciences. N.p., 1924.

———. The Riddle of the Sphinx. N.p., 1891. Reprint, New York: Greenwood Press, 1968. Reprint, Freeport, N.Y.: Books for Libraries Press, 1970.

———. Studies in Humanism. N.p., 1907. Reprint, Freeport, N.Y.: Books for Libraries Press, 1969. Reprint;, Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1970.

———. Tantalus, or the Future of Man. N.p., 1924. London: K. Paul, Trnch, Trubner & Co.; New York: E. P. Dutton, 1924.

Schilliro, Cristina. "Reimmaginando Jung: Un percorso interiore tra i sogni e le visioni descritti nell'autobiografia" (Reinventing Jung: A Spiritual Journey among the Dreams and Visions Described in His Autobiography), Giornale Storico di Psicologia Dinamica 18, no. 36 (June 1994): 67–83.

Schmeidler, Gertrude. ESP in Relation to Rorschach Test Evaluation. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1960.

———. Extrasensory Perception. New York: Atherton Press, 1969.

———. Parapsychology and Psychology; Matches and Mismatches. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1988.

———. Parapsychology; Its Relation to Physics, Biology, Psychology, and Psychiatry. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1976.

———. "Separating the Sheep from the Goats." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (1945).

———. "Some Lines About Gardner Murphy, the Psychologist's Parapsychologist." Parapsychology Review (July–August, 1976).

Schmeidler, Gertrude, and R. A. McConnell. ESP and Personality Patterns. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1958.

Schmeidler, Gertrude R. "PK Effects Upon Continuously Recorded Temperature." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 4 (October 1973).

———. Extrasensory Perception. New York: Atherton, 1969.

Schmidt, Helmut. "Clairvoyance Tests with a Machine." Journal of Parapsychology 33 (1969).

———. "PK Effects on Pre-Recorded Targets." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 70 (1976).

———. "PK Experiments with Animals as Subjects." Journal of Parapsychology 34 (1970).

———. "A PK Test with Electronic Equipment." Journal of Parapsychology 34 (1970).

———. "PK Tests with a High Speed Random Number Generator." Journal of Parapsychology 37 (1973).

———. "Precognition of a Quantum Process." Journal of Parapsychology 33 (1969).

Schmöger, Carl E. The Life of Anna Catherine Emmerick. 2 vols. Los Angeles: Maria Regina Guild, 1968.

Schneider, Herbert Wallace. A Prophet and a Pilgrim, Being the Incredible History of Thomas Lake Harris and Laurence Oliphant: Their Sexual Mysticisms and Utopian Communities. New York: Columbia University Press, 1942.

Schoenholtz, Larry. New Directions in the I Ching: The Yellow River Legacy. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1975.

Scholem, Gershom. Kabbalah. New York: Quadrangle, 1974.

———. On the Kabbalah and Its Symbolism. New York: Schocken, 1960. New York: Schocken Books, 1965. New York: Schocken Books, Inc., 1969. Reprint, New York: Schocken Books, Inc., 1996.

Scholem, Gershom., ed. Zohar—The Book of Splendor: Basic Readings from the Kabbalah. New York: Schocken, 1963.

Schouten, Sybo A. "An Overview of Quantitatively Evaluated Studies with Mediums and Psychics." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 88, no. 3 (July 1994): 221–254.

Schrenck-Notzing, Albert von. Die Traumtanzerin Magdeleine C. Stuttgart, 1904.

———. Materialisationspaenomene. Munich: Ernst Reinhart, 1914. Translated as Phenomena of Materialisation: A Contribution to the Investigation of Mediumistic Teleplastics. London, 1923. Reprint, North Stratford, N. H.: Ayer Publishing Co., 1975.

Schrenck-Notzing, Baron A. von. Phenomena of Materialisation: A Contribution to the Investigation of Mediumistic Teleplastics. London and New York, 1920. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

Schrodter, Willy. History of Energy Transference. New York: Samuel Weiser Inc., 1999.

Schueler, Betty, and Gerald J. Schueler. Enochian Magick. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1999.

Schueler, Gerald J. An Advanced Guide to Enochian Magic: A Complete Manual for Angelic Magic. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1987.

———. Enochian Magic: A Practical Manual. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1985.

———. Enochian Physics: The Structure of the Magical Universe. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1988.

Schul, Bill. The Psychic Power of Animals. Greenwich, Conn.: Fawcett, 1977.

Schul, Bill, and Ed Pettit. The Secret Power of Pyramids. Greenwich, Conn.: Fawcett, 1975.

Schulman, Arnold. Baba. New York: Viking Press, 1971.

Schultes, Richard E., and Albert Hofmann. Plants of the Gods: Origins of Hallucinogenic Use. London: Hutchinson, 1979/New York: McGraw-Hill, 1980. [Reprinted: Rochester, Vt.: Healing Arts Press, 1992]

Schultes, Richard Evans. "An Overview of Hallucinogens in the Western Hemisphere." In Flesh of the Gods: The Ritual Use of Hallucinogens. P. T. Furst, ed., (New York: Praeger, 1972).

Schultz, Ted. The Fringes of Reason: A Whole Earth Catalog. New York: Harmony Books, 1989.

Schulz-Weider, Willy. "Shamanism." Encyclopedia of World Art vol. 13. (New York: McGraw-Hill, 1967).

Schwab, Gustav. Gods and Heroes: Myths and Epics of Ancient Greece. New York: Pantheon Books, 1946.

Schwartz, Emanual K. "The Psychodynamics of Spontaneous Psi Experiences." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 46 (1952).

———. "The Study of Spontaneous Psi Experiences." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 43 (1949).

Schwarz, Berthold Eric. Parent-Child Telepathy: Five Hundred and Five Possible Episodes in a Family; A Study of the Telepathy of Everyday Life. New York: Garrett Publications, 1971.

Schweitzer, Darrell. The Dream Quest of H. P. Lovecraft. San Bernardino, Calif.: Borgo Press, 1978.

Scoresby, William. Journal of a Voyage to Australia for Magnetical Research. London: Longman, Green, Longman, & Roberts, 1859.

———. Magnetical Investigations. 2 vols. London: Longman, Brown, Green, and Longmans, 1844–52.

———. Zoistic Magnetism. London: Longman, Brown, Green, and Longmans, 1849.

Scot, Reginald. The Discoverie of Witchcraft. 1584. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1972.

Scott, Christopher S. O. "Experimental Object-Reading: A Critical Review of the Work of Dr. J. Hettinger." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (November 1959).

———. "Fresh Light on the Shackleton Experiments." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 56 (1974).

———. "G. Spencer Brown and Probability: A Critique." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (June 1958).

———. "Models for Psi." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (October 1961).

Scott, Cyril. The Adept of Galilee. N.p., 1920.

———. Bone of Contention N.p., 1969.

———. The Christian Paradox. N.p., 1942.

———. The Initiate in the Dark Cycle. N.p., 1932; 1977. Reprint, York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1991.

———. Memoirs, Entitled My Years of Indiscretion. N.p., 1924.

———. Music: Its Secret Influence Throughout the Ages. 6th ed. London: Rider, 1956.

———. An Outline of Modern Occultism. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1935. Reprint, New York: Dutton, 1950.

———. The Vision of the Nazarene. N.p., 1933.

Scott, G. Laughton. "The Abrams Treatment" in Practice: An Investigation. London: Bless, 1925.

Scott, Gini Graham. The Magicians. New York: Irvington Publishers, 1983.

Scott, Peter. "Naming the Loch Ness Monster." Nature (December 11, 1975).

Scott, R. D. Transcendental Misconceptions. San Diego, Calif.: Beta Books, 1978.

Scott, Sir Walter. Letters on Demonology and Witchcraft. London J. Murray, 1830. Reprint, New York, 1831. Reprint, New York: Citadel Press, 1970.

Scott-Elliott, W. The Story of Atlantis. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1896.

Scriven, Michael John. "Modern Experiments in Telepathy." Philosophical Review (April 1956).

———. "New Experimental Designs for Psi Research." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (June 1956).

———. "Randomness and the Causal Order." Analysis (October 1956).

———. "Some Theoretical Possibilities in Psi Research." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (June 1957).

Seabrook, William Buehler. Adventures in Arabia. New York, 1927. New York, Blue Ribbon Books, 1930. Reprint, New York: Marlowe and Co., 1994. Reprinted as Adventures in Arabia Among the Bedouins Druses Whirling Dervishes & Yezidee Devil-Worshipers. St. Paul, Minn.: Paragon House Publishers, 1991.

———. Jungle Ways. N.p., 1931.

———. No Hiding Place. Philadelphia; New York: J. B. Lippencott, 1942.

———. These Foreigners. New York: Harcourt, Brace & Co., 1938.

———. The White Monk of Timbuctoo. New York: Harcourt, Brace & Co., 1934.

———. Witchcraft: Its Power in the World Today. New York: Harcourt, Brace & Co., 1940.

Seafield, Frank. The Literature & Curiosities of Dreams. 2nd ed. London, 1877.

"A Searcher After Truth." The Rappers; or, the Mysteries, Fallacies, and Absurdities of Spirit Rapping, Table-Tipping and Entrancement. Long, N.Y., 1854.

Seaver, George F. Francis Younghusband: Explorer and Mystic. London, 1952.

Sebald, Hans. Witch-Children: From Salem Witch-Hunts to Modern Courtrooms. Amherst, N.Y.: Prometheus Books, 1995.

The Secrets of the Invisible World Laid Open, or an Universal History of Apparitions, Sacred & Profane. London, 1770.

Sédir, Paul. Initiations. London: Regency Press, 1967.

Seeing Casteneda: Reaction to the "Don Juan" Writings of Carlos Castaneda. New York: G. P. Putnam & Sons, 1976.

Seiss, Joseph. The Great Pyramid: A Miracle in Stone. Blauvelt, N.Y.: Multimedia (Steiner Books), 1972.

Selden, Rodman. Spirits of the Night. Dallas, Tex.: Spring, 1992.

Selections from the Writings of the Bab. Comp. Habib Taherzadeh. Haifa, Israel: Bahai World Center, 1976.

Self, Jane. 60 Minutes and the Assassination of Werner Erhard: How America's Top Rated Television Show Was Used in an Attempt to Destroy a Man Who Was Making a Difference. Houston, Tex.: Breakthru Publishing, 1992.

Self-Realization Fellowship Highlights. Los Angeles: Self-Realization Fellowship, 1980.

Self-Realization Fellowship Manual of Services. Los Angeles: Self-Realization Fellowship, 1965.

Seligman, Kurt. The History of Magic. New York: Pantheon Books, 1948. Reprined as: Magic, Supernaturalism and Religion. New York: Pantheon Books, 1971.

Selous, Edmund. Thought-Transference (or What?) in Birds. London: Constable & Co. Ltd., 1931.

A Sender of Words: Essays in Honor of John G. Neihardt. Salt Lake City, Utah: Howe Brothers, 1984.

Sepharial [W. G. Old]. The Book of Charms and Talismans. London: W. Foulsham, 1923. Reprint, New York: Arco Books, 1969. Reprint, New York: Arco, 1971. Reprinted as Sepharial's Book of Charms and Talismans. Garden City Park, N.Y.: Avery Publishing Group, 1991. Santa Fe, N.Mex.: Sun Publishing Co., 1992.

———. How to Read the Crystal. London, 1922.

———. The Kabala of Numbers. 2 vols. London, 1913. New York: MacKay, 1928. Reprint, San Bernadino, Calif.: Borgo Press, 1980.

Series A: Professional Notabilities. 6 vols. Paris: Laboratoire d'Etude des Relations entre Rythmes Cosmiques et Psychophysiologiques, 1970–71.

Series B: Heredity Experiments. 6 vols. Paris: Laboratoire d'Etude des Relations entre Rythmes Cosmiques et Psychophysiologiques, 1970–71.

Series C: Psychological Monographs. 5 vols. Paris: Laboratoire d'Etude des Relations entre Rythmes Cosmiques et Psychophysiologiques, 1972–77.

Series D: Scientific Documents. 10 vols. Paris: Laboratoire d'Etude des Relations entre Rythmes Cosmiques et Psychophysiologiques, 1976–82.

Serio, Harry L. "Mysticism and Ministry: A Descriptive Inquiry into the Varieties of Mystical Experiences among United Church of Christ People in Berks County, Pennsylvania," Dissertation Abstracts International 53, no. 7-A (January 1993): 2410.

Serling, Rod. More Stories From the Twilight Zone. New York: Bantam Books, 1961.

———. Night Gallery. New York: Dember Books, 1987. Distributed by W. W. Norton.

———. Night Gallery Two. Toronto; New York: Bantam Books, 1972.

———. Patterns. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1957.

———. Stories from the Twilight Zone. N.p., 1960. Reprint, New York; Toronto: Bantam Books, 1986.

Servadio, Emilio. "Freud et la Parapsychologie." Revue Francaise de Psychoanalyse 3 (1956).

———. "Le conditionnement transferentiel et contre-transférentiel des événements 'psi' au cours de l'analyse" (Transference and counter-transference conditioning of 'psi' events during analysis). Acta Psychotherapeutica (1955).

———. "Mysticism and Parapsychology," Parapsychology Review 17, no. 3 (May-June 1986): 1–5.

———. "The 'Normal' and the 'Paranormal' Dream." International Journal of Parapsychology (1962).

———. "A Presumptively Telepathic-Precognitive Dream During Analysis." International Journal of Psycho-Analysis 1 (1955).

———. "Psychoanalyse and Telepathie" (Psychoanalysis and telepathy). Imago 4 (1935). Reprinted in Psychoanalysis and the Occult, edited by 1953 George Devereux.

———. "Transference and Thought-Transference." International Journal of Psycho-Analysis 4, no. 5 (1956).

Servier, Jean H. "Geomancy, Clairvoyance and Initiation." La Tour Saint-Jacques (September–December 1956). Reprinted in the Proceedings of Four Conferences of Parapsychology (1957).

———. L'Homme et l'Invisible. Paris: R. Laffonto, 1964.

———. Les Partes de l'Année. Paris: R. Laffonto, 1962.

Settanni, Harry. The Philosophical Foundations of Paranormal Phenomena. Lanham, Md.: University Press of America, 1992.

Sevric, Ivo. The Hidden Side of Medjugorje. Saint Francois du Lac, Canada: Psilog, 1989.

Seward, A. F. The Art of Crystal Gazing or Secrets of the Crystal Revealed. Chicago: A. F. Seward, 1873.

Sewell, Dan. "Snake Handlers Put Bite into Religion." Santa Barbara News-Press (May 1,1995).

Sewell, May W. Neither Dead nor Sleeping. London, 1921.

Seymour, Richard B., and David E. Smith. Guide to Psychoactive Drugs: An Up-to-the-Minute Reference to Mind-Altering Substances. New York: Harrington Park Press, 1987.

Sexton, George. Spirit Mediums and Conjurers. London, 1873.

Seymour, Percy. The Scientific Basis of Astrology. New York: St. Martin's, 1992.

Seymour, St. John. Irish Witchcraft and Demonology. 1913. Reprint, New York: Causeway Books, 1973.

Seymour, St. John D. and Harry L. Neligan. True Irish Ghost Stories. London: Oxford University Press, 1915. Reprint, New York: Causeway Books, 1974.

Shackley, Myra. Wildmen: Yeti, Sasquatch and the Neanderthal Enigma. London: Thames & Hudson, 1983.

Shah, Idries. The Exploits of the Incomparable Mulla Nasrudin. London: Cape, 1966. Reprint, New York: Simon & Schuster, 1967.

———. Learning How to Learn; Psychology and Spirituality in the Sufi Way. London: Octagon Press, 1978. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1981.

———. Oriental Magic. London; New York: Rider, 1956. Reprint, New York: Penguin Arkana, 1993.

———. Reflections. London: Zenith Books; Octagon Press, 1968. Reprint, Baltimore, Md.: Penguin Books, 1972.

———. The Secret Lore of Magic. London: Frederick Muller, 1957. Reprint, New York: Citadel Press, 1957. Reprint, Atlantic Highlands, N. J.: Humanities Press International, 1965. Secaucus, N. J.: Carol Publishing Group, 1970. Reprint, London: Abacus, 1972.

———. Special Problems in the Study of Sufi Ideas. London: London Society for Understanding Fundamental Ideas, 1966. Reprint, London: Octagon Press, 1974.

———. The Sufis. New York: Anchor Books, 1940. Reprint, London: W. H. Allen, 1964. Reprint, London: Cape, 1969.

———. Tales of the Dervishes. London: Cape, 1967. Reprint, New York, Dutton, 1969.

———. Way of the Sufi. London: Cape, 1968. Reprint, New York: Dutton, 1969. Reprint, New York: E. P. Dutton, 1970.

Shah, Idries, trans. The Subtleties of the Inimitable Mulla Nasrudin. New York: Dutton; London: Cape, 1973.

Shah, Sayed Idries. The Secret Lore of Magic: Books of the Sorcerers. London: Frederick Muller, 1957.

Shapiro, Dolores J. "Symbolic Fluids: The World of Spirit Mediums in Brazilian Possession Groups," Dissertation Abstracts International 53, no. 3-A (September 1992): 867–868.

Sharaf, Myron. Fury on Earth: A Biography of Wilhelm Reich. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1983.

Sharma, I. C. Cayce, Karma and Reincarnation. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1975.

Sharon, Douglas. Wizard of the Four Winds. A Shaman's Story. New York: The Free Press, 1978.

Sharp, Arthur F. The Spirit Saith. London: H. H. Greaves, n.d.

Sharp, William. Earth's Voices. N.p., 1884.

Sharp, Lesley A. "Exorcists, Psychiatrists, and the Problems of Possession in Northwest Madagascar," Social Science & Medicine 38, no. 4 (February 1994): 525–54.

Sharp, William. Flower o' the Vine. N.p., 1894.

———. Human Inheritance. N.p., 1882.

———. Life of D. G. Rossetts. N.p., 1882.

Sharpe, Charles Kirkpatrick. Historical Account of the Belief in Witchcraft in Scotland. N.p., 1819.

Shaver, Richard. "I Remember Lemuria." Amazing Stories March 1945. Reprinted in The Hidden World A–1 (Spring 1961): 52–134.

Sheargold, Richard K. "The Ghost of Twenty-Nine Megacycles." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 53 (1986).

———. Hints on Receiving the Voice Phenomenon. N.p., 1973.

———. "The Occultism of Occultism." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 45 (1970).

Sheba, Lady. The Book of Shadows. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1973.

Sheldrake, Rupert. A New Science of Life: the Hypotehsis of Formative Causation. London: Blond & Briggs; Los Angeles: J. P. Tarcher, 1981.

———. The Presence of the Past. New York: New York Times Books, 1988.

———. The Presence of the Past: Morphic Resonance and the Habits of Nature. New York: Vintage Books, 1989.

Shelton, Harriet M. Abraham Lincoln Returns. New York: Evans Publishing, 1957.

Shepard, Jess F. G. "How I Became a Musical Medium." Medium (May 6, 1970).

Shepard, Les. The Dracula Book of Great Vampire Stories. New York: Citadel Press, 1981.

———. How to Protect Yourself Against Black Magic and Witchcraft. New York: Citadel Press, 1978.

———. The History of Street Literature. Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1973.

———. "People and Weather." Orgonomic Functionalism 2, no. 4 (July 1955).

Sherfan, Andrew Dib. Kahlil Gibran: The Nature of Love. New York: Philosophical Library, 1971.

Sheridan, Jo. Teacup Fortune-telling. London: Mayflower, 1978.

Sherman, Harold. Adventures in Thinking. Master Publications, 1956.

———. How to Foresee and Control Your Future. Greenwich, Conn.: Fawcett; New York: Information, Inc., 1970. New York: Fawcett Book Group, 1986.

———. How to Know What to Believe. Greenwich, Conn.: Fawcett, 1976.

———. How to Make ESP Work for You. Los Angeles: DeVorss; Greenwich, Conn.: Fawcett, 1964. New York: Fawcett Book Group, 1997.

———. How to Picture What You Want. New York: Fawcett, 1978.

———. How to Turn Failure into Success. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1958.

———. How to Use the Power of Prayer. New York: C. & R. Anthony, 1959. Reprint, Unity Village, Mo.: Unity Books, 1985.

———. Know Your Own Mind. New York: G. & R. Anthony, 1953.

———. TNT—The Power Within You. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1959.

———. Wonder Healers of the Philippines. Los Angeles: DeVorss, 1966. Reprint, London: Psychic Press, 1967.

———. You Can Communicate with the Unseen World. New York: Fawcett, 1974.

———. You Live After Death. New York: C. R. Anthony, 1949. New York: Fawcett Book Group, 1987.

———. Your Key to Happiness. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1935. Reprint, Greenwich, Conn.: Fawcett, 1964. Reprint, New Canaan, Conn.: Mulvey Books, 1990.

———. Your Power to Heal. New York: Harper & Row, 1972.

———. "Wonder" Healers of the Philippines. London: Psychic Press, 1967.

Sherman, Harold, and Sir Hubert Wilkins. Thought through Space. Greenwich, Conn.: Fawcett, 1972.

Sherwin, Byron L. The Golem Legend: Origins and Implications. Lanham, Md.: University Press of America, 1985.

Shi Kun. "Shamanic Practices in Southwest China: Comparative Perspectives of the Minorities," Temenos vol. 24 (1988): 121–135.

Shields, Tony. Entertaining With "ESP." UK: David & Charles, 1974.

Shimano, Eido. Golden Wind. Tokyo: Japan Publications, 1979.

———. "Notable Psychometrist." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 14 (1920).

———. "Past Events Seership." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 16 (January 1922).

Shimano, Eido, ed. Like a Dream, Like a Fantasy. Tokyo: Japan Publications, 1978.

Shin, Gosung. Zen Teachings of Emptiness. Washington, D.C.: American Zen College Press, 1982.

Shindler, M. D. A Southerner Among the Spirits. Memphis, Tenn., 1877.

Shirley, Ralph. The Mystery of the Human Double. London, 1938. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1965.

———. The New God, and Other Essays. N.p., 1911.

———. Occultists and Mystics of All Ages. London: W. Rider & Son, 1920.

———. The Problem of Rebirth. N.p., 1936.

———. A Short Life of Abraham Lincoln. New York: Funk & Wagnalls; London: W. Rider & Son, 1919.

Shirokogoroff, Sergei M. "General Theory of Shamanism among the Tungus," Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, North-China Branch vol. 62 (1923):.123–183.

———. Psychomental Complex of the Tungus. London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, 1935. [Reprinted: New York: AMS, 1980].

Shorter, Alan W. The Egyptian Gods. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1937. Reprint. 1981.

Shuffey, Sandi L. Reiki. UK: Hodder & Stoughton, Limited, 1998.

Sidgwick, Eleanor. "Discussion of the Trance Phenomena of Mrs. Piper." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1899).

———. "An Examination of Book-Tests Obtained in Sittings with Mrs. Osborne Leonard." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1921).

———. "Hindrances and Complications in Telepathic Communication." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1923).

———. "History of the SPR." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1932–33)

———. "Phantasms of the Dead." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1885).

———. "The Physical Phenomena of Spiritualism." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1886).

———. "Report on Further Experiments in Thought-Transference Carried Out by Professor Gilbert Murray, LL.D, Litt.D." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 34 (1924).

Sidgwick, Henry. "Canons of Evidence in Psychical Research." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1888–90).

———. "Disinterested Deception." Journal 6 (1894).

Sidgwick, Henry, A. Johnson, F. W. H. Myers, Frank Podmore, and Eleanor Sidgwick. "Report on the Census of Hallucinations." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 10 (1894).

Sidgwick, Mrs. Henry [Eleanor]. "On Spirit Photographs, a reply to Mr. R. A. Wallace." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 8 (1891): 268–89.

Siegal, Taggart, and D. Conquer Good. Between Two Worlds: The Hmong Shaman in America. N.p., n.d., video.

Siemon, Fred. Ghost Story Index: An Author-Title Index to More than 2,200 Stories of Ghosts, Horrors, and the Macabre Appearing in 190 Books and Anthologies. San Jose, Calif.: Library Research Associates, 1967. Reprint, Denver: Opar Press, 1973.

Sieroszewski, Waclaw, "The Yakuts: Abrigded from the Russian of Sieroshevski by W. G. Summer," Journal of the Royal Anthropological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland vol. 31, London (1901): 65–110.

Sighart, J. Albert the Great. London: Washbourne, 1876.

Sigstedt, C. O. The Swedenborg Epic: The Life and Works of Emanuel Swedenborg. New York: Bookman Associates, 1952. Reprint, London: Swedenborg Society, 1981.

Sikes, Wirt. British Goblins. London, 1880. Reprint, Wakefield, England: EP Publishing, 1973.

Silananda, U. An Introduction to the Law of Karma. Berkeley, Calif.: Dharmachakka Meditation Center, 1990.

Silberer, Herbert. The Hidden Symbolism of Alchemy and the Occult Arts. New York: Dover Books, 1971. Reprint, Magnolia, Mass.: Peter Smith, 1972.

Silver Birch. More Philosophy of Silver Birch. Compiled by Tony Ortzen. London: Spiritualist Press, 1979.

Silver, Ednah C. Sketches of the New Church in America. Boston: Massachusetts New Church Union, 1920.

Silverman, David. Reading Castaneda: A Prologue to the Social Sciences. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1975.

Simmonite, W. J. The Celestial Philosopher. 2d ed. London: Simpkin, Marshall, 1847.

———. Medical Botany, or Herbal Guide to Health. London: Simpkin, Marshall, [1848].

———. The Prognostic Astronomer, or Horary Astrology. London: Simpkin, Marshall, 1851.

———. Prognostications on Revolutions or Solar Figures. London: Simpkin, Marshall, 1845.

Simon, ed. The Necronomicon. New York: Schlangekraft/Barnes Graphics, 1877. Reprint, New York: Avon Books, 1977.

———. Necronomicon Spellbook. New York: Magickal Childe, 1986.

Simon, Marcel. Jewish Sects at the Time of Jesus. Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1967.

Simpson, Eve. The Faith Healer: Deliverance Evangelism in North America. St. Louis, Mo.: Concordia, 1977. Reprint, New York: Pyramid, 1977.

Simpson, M. A. Death and Grief: A Critically Annotated Bibliography & Source Book of Thanatology and Terminal Care. New York: Plenum, 1979.

Simpson, Patti. Paulji: A Memoir. Menlo Park, Calif.: ECKANKAR, 1985.

Simson, Eve. The Faith Healer: Deliverance Evangelism in North America. Concordia/Pyramid, 1977.

Sinclair, George. Satan's Invisible World Discovered. Edinburgh, 1685. Reprint, Edinburgh: Thomas G. Stevenson, 1865.

Sinclair, John R. The Alice Bailey Inheritance. Wellingsborough, England: Turnstone Press, 1984.

Sinclair, Upton. The Autobiography of Upton Sinclair. N.p., 1962.

———. Mental Radio: Does it Work, and How? Pasadena, Calif.: The Author, 1930. Rev. ed., Springfield, Ill.: C. C. Thomas, 1962.

Sinel, Joseph. The Sixth Sense. London: T. W. Laurie, 1927.

Singh, Charan. Light on San Mat. Beas, India: Radha Soami Satsang, Beas, 1958.

Singh, Joseph Amrito Lal. Wolf-children and Feral Man. Hamden, Conn.: Archon Books, 1965.

Sinnett, A. P. The Autobiography of Alfred Percy Sinnett. London: Theosophical History Centre, 1986.

———. Early Days of Theosophy in Europe. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1922.

———. Esoteric Buddhism. London: Trubner, 1883.

———. The Growth of the Soul: A Sequel to "Esoteric Buddhism." London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1896.

———. Incidents in the Life of Madame Blavatsky: Compiled from Information Supplied by Her Relatives and Friends. London: George Redway, 1886. Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1996.

———. The Mahatma Letters to A. P. Sinnett. Edited by A. T. Barker. London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1924.

———. The Occult World. London: Trubner, 1881.

———. The "Occult World Phenomena," and the Society for Psychical Research. London: George Redway, 1886.

———. The Rationale of Mesmerism. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin, 1892.

Sioborg, N. H. Tympanum Schamanico-lapponicum. N.p., 1808.

Sitchin, Zecharia. The Stairway to Heaven. New York: Avon, 1980.

———. The Twelfth Planet. New York: Avon, 1978. Reprint, Santa Fe, N.Mex.: Bear and Co., 1991.

———. The Wars of Gods and Men. New York: Avon, 1985.

Sitamma, M. and P. V. Krishna Rao. "Three gunas and cognitive characteristics: A Study of Memory and Extrasensory Perception," Journal of the Indian Academy of Applied Psychology 21, no. 2 (July 1995): 185–191.

Sitwell, Sacheverell. Poltergeist. London: Faber & Faber, 1940.

Sivananda, Swami. Autobiography of Swami Sivananda. Shivanandanagar, India: Divine Life Society, 1983.

———. Music as Yoga. Sivananda Nagar, India: Yoga-Vedanta Forest University, 1956.

———. Practical Lessons in Yoga. Sivanandanagar, India: Divine Life Society, 1978.

———. Practice of Karma Yoga. Sivanandanagar: Divine Life Society, 1980.

———. Sadhana. Sivanandanagar: Divine Life Society, 1967.

———. Science of Yoga. 18 vols. Durban, South Africa: Sivananda Press, 1977.

The Sivananda Yoga Center. The Sivananda Companion to Yoga. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1983.

Sivin, Nathan. Chinese Alchemy. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1968.

Siwek, Paul. The Riddle of Konnersreuth. Milwaukee, Wisc.: Bruce Publishing, 1953; Dublin: Browne & Nolan, 1956.

Skeat, Walter William. Malay Magic: An Introduction to the Folklore and Popular Religion of the Malay Peninsula. London, 1900. [Reprinted: New York: Benjamin Blom, 1972].

Skia, Persona. O.A.I. Manifesto: Origin, History, Organization. Kenilworth, Ill.: Ordo Adeptorum Invisiblum, 1982.

Skinner, Joseph. State of Peru. London, 1805.

Skinner, Stephen. The Living Earth Manual of Feng-shui: Chinese Geomancy. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1982.

———. The Oracle of Geomancy. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1977.

———. Terrestrial Astrology: Divination by Geomancy. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1980.

Sklar, Dusty. Gods and Beasts: The Nazis and the Occult. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1977.

Slack, Charles W. Timothy Leary, the Madness of the Sixties, and Me. New York: Peter H. Wyden, 1974.

Sladek, John. The New Apocrypha: A Guide to Strange Sciences & Occult Beliefs. New York: Stein and Day, 1974.

Slater, John. "Memories." National Spiritualist (September 1926).

Slattery, Charles L. Gift of Immortality. N.p., 1916. Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

Small, John. Select Remains of the Ancient Popular and Romance Poetry of Scotland. London: W. Blackwood & Sons, 1885.

Smedley, Alfred, and T. P. Barkas. Some Reminiscences of Alfred Smedley . . . also an Account of Miss Wood's Mediumship. London: "Light," 1900.

Smedley, Edward, W. C. Taylor, Henry Thompson, and Elihu Rich. The Occult Sciences. London and Glasgow: Richard Griffin, 1855.

Smith, A. Robert. Hugh Lynn Cayce: About My Father's Business. Norfolk, Va.: Donning, 1988.

Smith, Alson Jesse. Faith to Live By. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1949.

———. Immortality: The Scientific Evidence. N.p., 1954.

———. Psychic Source Book. New York: Creative Age Press, 1951.

———. Religion and the New Psychology. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1951.

Smith, Anson J. "Walter Franklin Prince." Tomorrow (Summer 1955).

Smith, Charles A. "Dowsing in the Desert: A Critical Essay and Manual on the Dynamics of Sexism for Men," Dissertation Abstracts International 51, no. 4-B (October 1990): 2118.

Smith, Eleanor Touhey. Psychic People. New York: William Morrow, 1968.

Smith, Hester Travers. Voices from the Void. London: William Rider, 1919.

Smith, Jody Brant. The Image of Guadalupe: Myth or Miracle? Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1983. Reprinted as The Guadalupe Enigma: Myth or Miracle? London: Souvenir Press, 1983.

Smith, Robert A. Hugh Lynn Cayce: About My Father's Business. Norfolk, Va.: Donning, 1988.

Smith, Robert W. Chinese Boxing. New York: Kodansha, 1981.

Smith, Roy O. Incarnation and Reincarnation. Los Angeles: Religious Research Press, 1975.

Smith, Susan M. "Psychics and Mediums: The Role of Religion and Belief in Rationalizing Paranormal Phenomena," Dissertation Abstracts International 50, no. 5-B (November 1989): 2141–2142.

Smith, Susy. The Book of James. New York: Putnam, 1974.

———. The Conversion of a Psychic. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1978.

———. Confessions of a Psychic. New York: Macmillan; London: Collier-Macmillan, 1971.

———. The Enigma of Out-of-body-Travel. Garrell Publications, 1965. Reprint, New York: Helix, 1968. Reprint, New York: New American Library, 1968.

———. ESP. New York: Pyramid Books, 1962.

———. ESP and Hypnosis. New York: Macmillan, 1973.

———. ESP for the Millions. Los Angeles: Sherbourne Press, 1965.

———. Ghosts Around the House. New York: World Publishing, 1970. Reprint, Pocket Books, 1971.

———. Haunted Houses for the Million. New York: Bell Publishing; Los Angeles: Sherbourne Press, 1967.

———. Life is Forever: Evidence for Survival After Death. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1974.

———. The Mediumship of Mrs. Leonard. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1964.

———. More ESP for the Millions. Los Angeles: Sherbourne Press, 1969.

———. Out-of-Body Experiences for the Millions. New York: Dell, 1968.

———. Prominent American Ghosts. New York: World Publishing, 1967.

———. Reincarnation. N.p., 1969.

———. She Spoke to the Dead. New York: Award Books, 1972.

———. A Supernatural Primer for the Millions. Los Angeles: Sherbourne Press, 1966.

———. Today's Witches. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1970.

Smith, Timothy d'Arch. A Bibliography of the Works of Montague Summers. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1964.

S.M.R.D., Frater, et al. The Secret Workings of the Golden Dawn: Book "T" the Tarot. Cheltenham, England: Helios Book Service, 1967.

Smyth, Charles Piazzi. Our Inheritance in the Great Pyramid. London, 1864.

Smythies, J. R., ed. Science and ESP. London: Routledge & K. Paul: 1922. New York: Humanities Press, 1967.

Smythies, John Raymond, and Arthur Koestler, ed. Beyond Reductionism: New Perspectives in the Science of Life. London: Hitchinson, 1969. Reprint, New York: Macmillian, 1970; London: Hutchinson, 1972.

Snel, F. W. J. J., ed. In Honour of G. A. M. Zorab. Amsterdam: Verenining voor Parapsychologie, 1986.

Snell, Joy. The Ministry of Angels. London, 1918.

Snowdon, Ruth J., R. A. MacConnell, and K. F. Powell. "Wishing with Dice." Journal of Experimental Psychology 50 (October 1955).

Soal, S. G. "Experiments in Supernormal Perception at a Distance." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 123 (1932).

———. "Fresh Light on Card Guessing." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 46 (1940).

———. "Note on the 'Oscar Wilde' Script." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (July 1926).

———. "A Report on Some Communications Received Through Mrs. Blanche Cooper." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 35 (December 1925).

Soal, S. G., and F. Bateman. Modern Experiments in Telepathy. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1954.

Soal, S. G., and H. T. Bowden. The Mind Readers. London: Faber and Faber, 1959.

Soal, S. G., and J. G. Pratt. "ESP Performance and Target Sequence." Journal of Parapsychology (September 1951).

———. "Some Relations Between Call Sequence and ESP Performance." Journal of Parapsychology (September 1952).

Soal, S. G., and K. M. Goldney. "Experiments in Precognitive Telepathy." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 47 (1943).

Sochevanov, Nikolai. "The Influence of Certain Factors on the Intensity of the Biophysical Effect," PSI Research 3, no. 1 (March 1984): 16–20.

Solfvin, J., W. G. Roll, and E. F. Kelly. "A Psychophysical Study of Mediumistic Communications." In Research in Parapsychology, 1976, edited by J. D. Morris, W. G. Roll, and R. L. Morris. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1977.

Solomon, P., and others eds. Sensory Deprivation. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University, 1961.

Solomon, Shirl. How to Really Know Yourself Through Your Handwriting. New York: Taplinger, 1974. Reprint, London: Coronet, 1975.

Solovyoff, V. S. A Modern Priestess of Isis. London: Longmans, Green, 1895.

Soo, Chee. The Chinese Art of K'ai Men. London: Gordon & Cremonesi, 1977.

Sourcebook 1994. Watertown, Mass.: New Age Journal, 1994.

The Sounds of Yoga-Vedanta; Documentary of Life in an Indian Ashram. New York: Folkways Records, Long-playing record album FR 8970.

"The South African Society for Psychical Research.' " Journal of the Psychical Research Society 40 (1959): 43.

Southcott, J. The Book of Wonders, Marvelous and True. 5 parts. London, 1813–14.

———. The Divine Writings of Joanna Southcott. 2 vols. Bolton, England, 1931.

———. Prophecies: A Warning to the Whole World from the Sealed Prophecies of Joanna Southcott. 2 parts. London, 1803.

———. The Strange Effects of Faith; with Remarkable Prophecies. 2 parts. Exeter, England, 1801–2. With three "Continuations." 1802–3.

Sox, H. David. The Image on the Shroud: Is the Turin Shroud a Forgery? London: Unwin, 1981.

———. The Shroud Unmasked; Uncovering the Greatest Forgery of All Time. Basingstoke, England: Lamp Press, 1988.

Spangler, David. Channeling and the New Age. Issaquah, Wash.: Morningtown Press, 1988.

———. Conversations with John. Elgin, Ill.: Lorian Press, 1980.

———. Emergence: The Rebirth of the Sacred. New York: Delta, 1980.

———. Explorations: Emerging Aspects of the New Culture. Forres, Scotland: Findhorn Publications, 1980.

———. Revelation: The Birth of a New Age. San Francisco: Rainbow Bridge, 1976.

———. Towards a Planetary Vision. Forres, Scotland: Findhorn Publications, 1977.

Spanos, Nicholas. "Hypnosis, Demonic Possession, and Multiple Personality: Strategic Enactments and Disavowals of Responsibility for Actions." In Altered States of Consciousness and Mental Health: A Cross-Cultural Perspective. Newbury Park, Calif.: Sage Publications, Inc., 1989.

Spanos, Nicholas, Wendy P. Cross, Mark Lepage, and Marjorie Coristine. "Glossolalia as Learned behavior: An Experimental Demonstration." Journal of Abnormal Psychology 95 (February 1986): 21–23.

Spare, Austin Osman. A Book of Automatic Drawing. London: Catalpa Press, 1972.

———. The Book of Pleasure (Self-Love): The Psychology of Ecstasy. London: Cooperative Printing Society Limited, 1913. Reprint, Montreal: 93 Publishing, 1975.

———. The Focus of Life. London: The Author, 1921.

Sparkes, Barry H. "Playing with the Devil: Adolescent Involvement with the Occult, Black Magic, Witchcraft, and the Satanic to Manage Feelings of Despair," Dissertation Abstracts International 50, no. 12-B, Pt.1 (June 1990): 5904–5905.

"Special Ralph M. Lewis Memorial Issue." Rosicrucian Digest (1987).

Special Report to the Readers of THE URANTIA BOOK: URANTIA Foundation Ends Its Relationship with the Former URANTIA Brotherhood. Chicago: URANTIA Foundation, 1990.

Speeth, Katherine Riodan. The Gurdjieff Work. Berkeley, Calif: And/Or Press, 1976. Rev. ed., Los Angeles: Jeremy P. Tarcher, 1989.

Spence, Lewis. Atlantis in America. London: Ernest Benn, 1925. Reprint, Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1972.

———. British Fairy Origins. London: Watts, 1946.

———. The Civilization of Ancient Mexico. London, 1911.

———. The Fairy Tradition in Britain. London; New York: Rider, 1948.

———. The Gods of Mexico. London: Fisher, Unwin, 1913.

———. The History of Atlantis. 1926. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1968.

———. The Magic and Mysteries of Mexico. London: Rider; Philadelphia: David McKay, 1930.

———. Magical Arts in Celtic Britain. London: Rider, n.d.

———. Mysteries of Egypt. London, 1929. Reprint, Baluvelt, N.Y.: Multimedia (Steiner Books), 1972.

———. Myths and Legends of Babylonia & Assyria. London, 1916. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1975.

———. The Myths of Mexico and Peru. London: Harrap, 1913.

———. The Occult Causes of the Present War. N.p., 1940.

———. The Occult Sciences in Atlantis. London: Rider, 1943. Reprint, New York: S. Weiser, 1970.

———. The Popul Vuh: The Mythic & Heroic Sagas of the Kichés of Central America. London: David Nutt, 1908.

———. The Problem of Atlantis. London: Rider, 1924. Reprinted as Atlantis Discovered. New York: Causeway Books, 1974.

———. The Problem of Lemuria. London: Rider, 1932.

———. Scottish Ghosts and Goblins. N.p., 1952.

———. Second Sight: Its History and Origins. London; New York: Rider, 1951.

———. Will Europe Follow Atlantis? N.p., 1942.

Sperling, Harry, and Maurice Simon, trans. The Zohar. 5 vols. New York: Rebecca Bennet Publishing, n.d.

Spicer, Henry. Facts and Fantasies: A Sequel to "Sights and Sounds." London, 1853.

———. Sights and Sounds: The Mystery of the Day; Comprising an Entire History of the American "Spirit" Manifestations. London: Thomas Bosworth, 1853.

Spiegel, H., and D. Spiegal. Trance and Treatment: Clinical Users of Hypnosis. New York: Basis Books, 1978.

Spirit Evolution. London: Atlanteans, 1976.

Spirit Teachings. 1898. Reprint, London: Spiritualist Press, 1949.

Spirito, Ugo. Il Problematicismo (Problematicism). Firenze: G. C. Sansoni, 1948.

———. La vita come amore (Life as Love). N.p., 1953. Reprint, Firenze: G. C. Sansoni, 1970.

———. La Vita come arte (Life as Art). N.p., 1941.

———. La Vita come ricerca (Life as a Search). 2d ed. Firenze: G. C. Sansoni, 1943.

———. Scienza e Filosofia (Science and Philosophy). Firenze: G. C. Sansoni, 1950.

Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship. Christianity and the Paranormal. Independence, Mo. The Author, 1986.

The Spiritual Philosophy of Shrii Shrii Anandamurti. Denver: Ananda Marga Publications, 1981.

Spiritual Unfoldment and Psychic Development through Inner Light Consciousness. Atlanta, Ga.: Fellowship of the Inner Light, n.d.

Spiro, Melford E. Burmese Supernaturalism. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1967.

Spraggett, Allen. Kathryn Kuhlman: The Woman Who Believes in Miracles. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1970. Reprint, New York: New American Library, 1971.

Spraggett, Allen, with William V. Rauscher. Arthur Ford: The Man Who Talked with the Dead. New York: New American Library, 1973.

Sprenger, Jakob, and Heinrich Kramer. Malleus Maleficarum. Edited by Montague Summers. London, 1928.

Squire, Charles. Mythology of the Ancient Britons. London, 1905.

St. Aubyn, Lorna, ed. Healing. London: Heineman, 1983.

St. Clair, David. David St. Clair's Lessons in Instant ESP. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice Hall, 1978.

———. Drum and Candle. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday; London: Macdonald, 1971.

———. Psychic Healers. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1974. Rev. ed. New York: Bantam, 1979.

———. The Psychic World of California. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1972.

———. Watseka: America's Most Extraordinary Case of Possession & Exorcism. Chicago: Playboy Press; 1977. Distributed by Simon & Schuster.

St. Thomas Aquinas and His Legacy. Washington, D.C.: Catholic University of America, 1994.

Staff, V. S. Remembered on Waking; Concerning Psychic & Spiritual Dreams & Theories of Dreaming. Crowborough, UK: V. S. Staff, 1975.

Stamp, Tom, and Cordelia Stamp. William Scoresby, Arctic Scientist. Whitby, UK: Whitby Press, 1975.

Stanford, Rex G. "Case Studies, Folklore and Personal Experiences of Investigators: Their Role in Experimental Research." In Spontaneous Psi, Depth Psychology and Parapsychology, edited by Betty Shapin and Lisette Coly. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1992.

———. "Scientific, Ethical and Clinical Problems in the 'Training' of Psi Ability." In Research in Parapsychology 1976, edited by William G. Roll and R. L. Morris. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1977.

———. "A Study of the Cause of Low Run-Score Variance." Journal of Parapsychology 30 (1966).

Stanford, Rex G., and Gary Thompson. "Unconscious Psi-mediated Instrumental Response and its Relation to Conscious ESP Performance." In W. G. Roll, R. L. Morris, and J. D. Morris, eds. Research in Parapsychology 1973 Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1974.

Stanford, Rex G., and Peter Rust. "Psi-mediated Helping Behavior: Experimental Paradigm and Initial Results." In J. D. Morris, W. G. Roll, and R. L. Morris, eds. Research in Parapsychology 1976 Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1977.

Stanford, Rex G., R. Zennhausern, A. Taylor, and M. Dwyer. "Psychokinesis as a Psi-mediated Instrumental Response." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 69 (1975).

Stanhope, Earl. Tracts Relative to Caspar Hauser. London: James S. Hodson, 1836.

Stanton, Horace. Telepathy of the Celestial World. New York, 1913.

Stanway, Andrew. Alternative Medicine. New York: Penguin, 1982.

Stapleton, Ruth Carter. The Experience of Inner Healing. Waco, Tex.: Word Books, 1977.

———. The Gift of Inner Healing. Waco, Tex.: Word Books, 1976.

———. In His Footsteps. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1979.

Starhawk. Dreaming in the Dark. Boston: Beacon Press, 1982.

———. The Spiral Dance. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1979.

Starhawk. Truth or Dare: Encounters of Power, Authority, Mystery. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1987.

Stark, Erwin E. A History of Dowsing and Energy Relationships. North Hollywood, Calif.: BAC, 1978.

Starkey, Marion L. The Devil in Massachusetts. New York: Time, 1949. Reprint, Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1952.

Starkie, Walter. Raggle Taggle; Adventures With a Fiddle in Hungary and Roumania. London, 1933.

Stavert, Geoffrey. A Study in Southsea. Portsmouth, England: Milestone Publications, 1987.

Stead, Christiane. The Power of Holistic Aromatherapy. Poole, England: Javalin Books, 1986.

Stead, Estelle W. Faces of the Living Dead. London, 1925.

Stead, William T. After Death. New York: John Lane, 1907. Reprint, London: Review of Reviews, 1914.

———. Letters from Julia; or Light from the Borderland: A Series of Messages as to the Life Beyond the Grave Received by Automatic Writing. London, 1897.

———. Real Ghost Stories. London, 1891. Reprinted as Borderland: A Casebook of True Supernatural Stories. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1970.

———. Real Ghost Stories. London, 1892. Rev. ed. 1897. Reprinted as Borderland: A Casebook of True Supernatural Stories. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1970.

Stearn, Jess. The Power of Alpha-Thinking: Miracle of the Mind. New York: William Morrow, 1976. Reprint, New York: New American Library, 1977.

Steckling, Fred. We Discovered Alien Bases on the Moon. Vista, Calif.: GAF International Publishers, 1981.

———. Why Are We Here? New York: Vantage Press, 1969.

Steen, Douglas. "Success with Complex Targets in a PK Baseball Game." Journal of Parapsychology (June 1957).

Stegall, C., and C. C. Harwood. The Modern Tongues and Healing Movement. Western Bible Institute, n.d.

Steiger, Brad. Aquarian Revelations. New York: Dell, 1971.

———. Astral Projection. Rockport, Mass.: Para Research, 1982.

———. Gods of Aquarius: UFOs and the Transformation of Man. New York: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1976.

———. Guardian Angels & Spirit Guides. New York: NAL/Dutton, 1999.

———. In My Soul I Am Free. New York: Lancer Books, 1968.

———. Irene Hughes on Psychic Safari. New York: Warner Paperback Library, 1972.

———. Kahuna Magic. Rockport, Mass.: Para Research, 1971.

———. The Psychic Feats of Olof Jonsson. New York: Popular Library, 1971.

———. Revelation: The Divine Fire. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1973.

———. The Seed. New York: Berkley Books, 1983.

———. Strange Disappearances. New York: Magnum Books, 1972.

Steiger, Brad, and Joan Whritenour. New UFO Breakthrough: The Allende Letters. New York: Award Books, 1968.

Stein, Diane. The Women's Spirituality Book. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1987.

Stein, Gordon. "The Amazing Medium Mirabelli." Fate 44, 3 (March 1991): 86–95.

———. Encyclopedia of Hoaxes. Detroit: Gale Research, 1993.

Stein, Sandra Kovacs. Instant Numerology: Charting Your Road Map to the Future. New York: Harper & Row, 1979.

Steinbach, Marten. Medical Palmistry: Health & Character in the Hand. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1975. Reprint, New York: New American Library, 1976.

Steiner, Johannes. Thérèse Neumann: A Portrait Based on Authentic Accounts, Journals, and Documents. Staten Island, N.Y.: Alba House, 1967.

Steiner, Robert A. "Exposing the Faith-Healers." The Skeptical Inquirer 11, 1 (fall 1986).

Steiner, Rudolf. Christianity as Mystical Fact. West Nyack, N.Y.: Rudolf Steiner Publications, 1961.

———. Clairvoyance. N.p., 1861, 1925. Reprint, New York: Krishna Press, 1973.

———. Cosmic Memory: Prehistory of Earth and Man. West Nyack, N.Y.: Rudolf Steiner Publications, 1959. Reprint, West Nyack, N.Y.: Paperback Library, 1968.

———. The Course of My Life. New York: Anthroposophical Press, 1951.

———. Goethe's Conception of the World. Reprint, Brooklyn: Haskell, 1972.

———. Knowledge of the Higher Worlds: How Is It Achieved?. 1923. Rev. ed., London: R. Steiner Press, 1969.

———. The Lord's Prayer. London: Anthroposophic Press, n.d.

———. Reincarnation and Immortality. New York: Harper & Row, 1980.

———. The Story of My Life. London: Anthroposophical Publishing, 1928; New York: Anthroposophic Press, 1928.

———. The Theory of Knowledge Implicit in Goethe's World Conception. Hudson, N.Y.: Anthroposophic Press, 1978.

Steinkamp, Fiona, Julie Milton, and Robert L. Morris. "A Meta-Analysis of Forced-Choice Experiments Comparing Clairvoyance and Precognition." Journal of Parapsychology 62, no. 3 (September 1998): 193–218.

Stekert, Ellen. "The Snake Handling Sect of Harlan County, Kentucky: Its Influences on Folk Tradition." Southern Folklore Quarterly 27 (December 1963).

Stelle, Robert D. The Sun Rises. Ramona, Calif.: Lemurian Fellowship, 1952.

Stemman, Roy. Medium Rare: The Psychic Life of Ena Twigg. London: Spiritualist Association of Great Britain, 1971.

———. One Hundred Years of Spiritualism: The Story of the Spiritualist Association of Great Britain, 1872–1912. London: SAGB, 1972.

———. Spirits and Spirit Worlds. London: Aldus Books, 1975. Reprint, Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1976.

Stephens, George. Prof. S. Bugge's "Studies on Northern Mythology" Shortly Examined. London: Williams & Norgate, 1883.

———. The Old-Northern Runic Monuments of Scandinavia and England. 2 vols. London, 1866–68.

Stern, Jess. The Power of Alpha Thinking: Miracle of the Mind. New York: William Morrow, 1976.

Stern, Madeleine B. Heads and Headlines: The Phrenological Fowlers. Norman: University of Oklahoma Press, 1971.

Stevens, E. W. The Watseka Wonder. Chicago: Religion-Philosophical Journal, 1879.

Stevens, Jose, and Simon Warwick-Smith. Essence and Personality: The Michael Handbook. Orinda, Calif.: Warwick Press, 1987.

Stevens, Paul. "Remote Psychokinesis," European Journal of Parapsychology 14 (1998–1999): 68–79.

Stevens, William O. Beyond the Sunset. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1944.

———. Mystery of Dreams. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1949. Reprint, London: Allen & Unwin, 1950.

———. Psychics and Common Sense. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1945.

———. Unbidden Guests. N.p., 1945.

Stevenson, Ian. "An Antagonist's View of Parapsychology. A Review of Professor Hansel's 'ESP: A Scientific Evaluation.' " Journal of American Society for Psychical Research 61 (July 1967).

———. Cases of the Reincarnation Type. 4 vols. Charlottesville: University of Virginia Press, 1975, 1977, 1980, 1983.

———. "A Communicator Unknown to Medium and Sitter." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 64 (1970).

———. "A Review & Analysis of Paranormal Experiences Connected with the Sinking of the Titanic." Journal of American Society for Psychical Research 54 (1961).

———. Telepathic Impressions: A Review and Report of Thirty-five New Cases. Charlottesville: University Press of Virginia, 1970.

———. Twelve Cases in Lebanon & Turkey. N.p., 1980.

———. Twenty Cases Suggestive of Reincarnation. 2d ed. Charlottesville: University Press of Virginia, 1974.

———. Unlearned Language: New Studies in Xenoglossy. Charlottesville: University of Virginia Press, 1984.

———. Xenoglossy: A Review and Report of a Case. Charlottesville: University of Virginia Press, 1974.

Stewart, Basil. The Mystery of the Great Pyramid: Traditions Concerning It and Its Connection with the Egyptian Book of the Dead. London, 1929.

Stewart, James R. "Cattle Mutilations: An Episode of Collective Delusion." The Zetetic 1, 2 (Spring–Summer 1977): 55–66.

Stewart, Kenneth M. "Spirit Possession." Tomorrow (spring 1956).

———. "Spirit Possession in Native America." Southwestern Journal of Anthropology 2, no. 3 (1946).

Stewart, R. J. UnderWorld Initiation: A Journey Towards Psychic Transformation. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1985.

Stewart, W. C. "Three New ESP Test Machines and Some Preliminary Results." Journal of Parapsychology (March 1959).

Stifler, Kenneth R., Joanne Greer, William Sneck, and Robert Dovenmuehle. "An Empirical Investigation of the Discriminability of Reported Mystical Experiences among Religious Contemplatives, Psychotic Inpatients, and Normal Adults," Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion 32, no. 4 (December 1993): 366–372.

Stillings, Dennis, ed. Cyberbiological Studies of the Imaginal Component in the UFO Contact Experience. St. Paul, Minn.: Archaeus Project, 1989.

Stillman, John M. Theophrastus Bombast von Hohenheim called Paracelsus; his Personality and Influence as Physician, Chemist and Reformer. LaSalle, Ill.: Open Court Publishing, 1920.

Stobart, St. Clair. Ancient Lights. N.p., 1923.

———. The Either Or of Spiritualism. N.p., 1928.

———. Torchbearers of Spiritualism. N.p., 1925.

Stockhammer, Thomas. Thomas Aquinas Dictionary. New York: Philosophical Library, 1965.

Stockman, Robert H. The Baha'i Faith in America: Origins, 1892–1900. Wilmette, Ill.: Baha'i Publishing Trust, 1985.

Stockwell, Shelley L. Automatic Writing & Hieroscripting. Rancho Palos Verdes, Calif.: Creativity Unlimited Press, 1996.

Stockton, Bayard. Catapult: The Biography of Robert A. Monroe. Norfolk, Va.: Donning, 1989.

Stoker, Bram. Dracula. London: Constable, 1897.

———. Dracula's Guest and Other Weird Stories. London: George Routledge & Sons, 1914.

Stokes, Doris. Voices in My Ear: The Autobiography of a Medium. London: Futura, 1981. Thorndike, Maine: G. K. Hall and Co., 1989.

Stones, Bones and Skin. Ritual and Shamanistic Art. Toronto: The Society for Art Publications, 1977.

Storr, Anthony. The School of Genius. London: A. Deutsch, 1988.

The Story of Aetherius Society. Hollywood, Calif.: Aetherius Society, n.d.

The Story of the Lotus Ashram. Miami, Fla.: Lotus Ashram, n.d.

The Story of the White Eagle Lodge. Liss, England: White Eagle Publishing Trust, 1986.

Story, Francis, and Nyanaponika Thera. Rebirth as Doctrine and Experience. Kandy, Sri Lanka: Buddhist Publication Society, 1975.

Story, Ronald D. The Space-Gods Revealed. New York: Harper & Row, 1976; Barnes & Noble, 1978.

———. "Von Däniken's Golden Gods." The Zetetic 2, no. 1 (1977).

———. The Space Gods Revealed: A Close Look at Erich von Däniken. New York: Harper and Row, 1976.

Stoudt, J. J. Sunrise to Eternity. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania, 1957.

Stowes, K. D. The Land of Shalam: Children's Land. Evansville, Ind.: Frank Molinet Print Shop, n.d.

Strachan, Françoise. Casting Out the Devils. London: Aquarian Press, 1972.

Stratton, F. J. M. "Four Modern Ghosts." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 39 (1938).

———. "Psychical Research—A Lifelong Interest." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (1953).

Strauch, Inge H. "Dreams and Psi in the Laboratory." In Psi Favorable States of Consciousness, edited by R. Cavenna. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1970.

Strauch, Inge H. "Medical Aspects of 'Mental' Healing." International Journal of Parapsychology 5 (1963).

Street, Noel. Karma: Your Whispering Wisdom. Fabens, Tex.: Lotus Ashram, 1978.

———. Reincarnation: One Life—Many Births. Fabens, Tex.: Lotus Ashram, 1978.

Strelley, Kate. The Ultimate Gate. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1987.

Strieber, Whitley. Communion: A True Story. New York: William Morrow, 1987.

———. Majestic. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1989.

———. Transformation: The Breakthrough. New York: William Morrow, 1988.

Stromberg, Gustaf. Det Eviga Sökandet (The Eternal Quest). N.p., 1948.

———. God's Place in Modern Science. N.p., 1958.

———. Psychic Phenomena and Modern Science. N.p., 1957.

———. The Searchers. N.p., 1948.

———. The Soul of the Universe. N.p., 1940.

Strommenburg, Aaders Gabriel. A Prophecy Concerning the Swedish Monarchy As It was Related in 1809. New York: Colburn & Tegg, 1968.

———. Second Sight in Daily Life. New York: Coward-McCann, 1949.

Strutt, John William. "Presidential Address." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 30, no. 77 (1918–19).

Strutt, Robert John. "A Method of Silhouette Photography by Infra-Red Rays for Use in Mediumistic Investigation." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 41, 128 (1932).

———. "The Problem of Physical Phenomena in Connection with Psychical Research." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 44, 152 (1938).

———. "The Question of Lights Supposed to Have Been Observed near the Poles of a Magnet." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 44, 153 (1938–39).

———. "Some Recollections of Henry Sidgwick." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 44, 156 (1936–39).

Stuart, C. E. "A Classroom ESP Experiment with the Free Response Method." Journal of Parapsychology 9 (1945).

———. "The Effect of Rate of Movement in Card Matching Tests of Extrasensory Perception." Journal of Parapsychology 2 (1938).

———. "GESP Experiment with the Free Response Method." Journal of Parapsychology 10 (1946).

———. "An Interest Inventory Relation to ESP Scores." Journal of Parapsychology 10 (1945).

———. "A Review of Recent Criticisms of ESP Research." Journal of Parapsychology 2, no. 3 (1939).

Stuart, C. E., and J. G. Pratt. A Handbook for Testing Extrasensory Perception. New York: Farrar and Rinehart, 1937.

Stuart, C. E., J. G. Pratt, J. B. Rhine, B. M. Smith, and J. A. Greenwood. Extrasensory Perception After Sixty Years. New York: Henry Holt, 1940. Rev. ed. Boston: Bruce Humphries, 1966.

Stuart, Charles. "An Analysis to Determine a Test Predictive of Extra-chance Scoring in Card-calling Tests." Journal of Parapsychology vol. 5 (1941).

———."An Interest Inventory Relation to ESP Scores." Journal of Parapsychology vol. 10 (1946).

Stuart, David. Alan Watts. Radnor, Pa.: Chilton Book, 1976.

Stupple, David W. "Historical Links Between the Occult and Flying Saucers." Journal of UFO Studies, 5 (1994): 93–108.

Sturdevant, William D. Extrasensory Color Perception. N.p., 1958.

———. Fluorescent Color Perception and Graphic Response in the Perceptually Impaired Child. N.p., 1957.

Sturge-Whiting, J. R. The Mystery of Versailles: A Complete Solution. London: Rider, 1938.

Subhan, John. Sufism: Its Saints and Shrines. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1973.

Sudre, R. "The Ideas of Hans Driesch." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 20 (1926).

Sudre, René. "The Case of Victor Hugo and the Collective Psychism." Psychic Research 23 (1971).

———. Introduction à la métapsychique humaine (Introduction to Human Metapsychics). N.p., 1929.

———. "Is the Soul Material?" Psychic Research 24 (1930).

———. La Lutte pour la métapsychique (The Fight for Parapsychology). N.p., 1928.

———. Le Huitième art—Mission de la radio (The Eighth Art—Mission of Radio). N.p., 1946.

———. Les Nouvelles énigmes de l'univers (New Enigmas of the Universe). N.p., 1943.

———. Personnages d'au-delà (People from the Beyond). N.p., 1945.

———. Traité de parapsychologie. 1956. Translated as Treatise on Parapsychology: Essay on the Scientific Interpretation of the Human Phenomenon Known as the Supernatural. New York: Citadel Press, 1960.

Sudre, Rene. "The Life and Works of Schrenck-Notzing." Psychic Research 23 (1929).

Sugden, E. H. "Note on Muscle Reading." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 1, 4 (1882–83).

Sullivan, Jack, ed. The Penguin Encyclopedia of Horror and the Supernatural. New York: Viking Press, 1986.

Summers, Montague. Geography of Witchcraft. London, 1927.

———. A Gothic Bibliography. London: Fortune Press, 1940.

———. The Gothic Quest: A History of the Gothic Novel. 1938. Reprint, London: Fortune Press, 1950.

———. The Gallantry Show. London: Cecil Woolf, 1980.

———. The Geography of Witchcraft. London, 1927. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1958.

———. A History of Demonology and Witchcraft. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1926.

———. The Physical Phenomena of Mysticism. London: Rider, 1950.

———. A Popular History of Witchcraft. New York: Causeway Books, 1973.

———. The Vampire: His Kith and Kin. London: Routledge, Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, 1928. Reprint, New York: University Books, 1960.

———. The Vampire in Europe. London:Routledge, Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, 1929; New York: University Books, 1962.

———. Witchcraft and Black Magic. London: Rider, 1946. Reprint, New York: Causeway Books, 1974.

———. The Werewolf. London, Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, 1933. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1966.

Sun Bear. Path of Power. Spokane, Wash.: Bear Tribe Publishing, 1983.

Sunderland, La Roy. "An Appeal on the Subject of Slavery." Zion's Watchman (December 5, 1834).

———. The Book of Human Nature. New York: Stearns, 1853.

———. "Confessions of a Magnitizer" Exposed. Boston: Redding, 1845.

———. Ideology. Boston: J. P. Mendum, 1885–87.

———. Pathetism; With Practical Instructions: Demonstrating the Falsity of the Hitherto Prevalent Assumptions in Regard to What Has Been Called "Mesmerism" and "Neurology," and Illustrating Those Laws Which Induce Somnambulism, Second Sight, Sleep, Dreaming, Trance, and Clairvoyance, with Numerous Facts Tending to Show the Pathology of Monomania, Insanity, Witchcraft, and Various Other Mental or Nervous Phenomena. Boston: White and Potter, 1847.

———. Testimony of God Against Slavery. Boston: D. K. Hitchcock, 1836.

———. The Trance. Chicago: J. Walker, 1868.

———. Trance and Correlative Phenomena. Chicago: J. Walker, 1868.

———. The Trance, and How Introduced. Boston, 1860.

Superet Light Doctrine Ministry. Los Angeles: Superet Press, 1947.

Suster, Gerald. The Legacy of the Beast. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1989.

Sutherland, Elizabeth. Ravens and Black Rain: The Story of Highland Second Sight. London: Constable, 1986.

Sutherland, Gail Hinich. The Disguises of the Demon: The Development of the Yaksa in Hinduism and Buddhism. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1991.

Sutphen, Dick. Sedona: Psychic Energy Vortexes. Malibu, Calif.: Valley of the Sun Publishing, 1986.

Suzuki, D. T. Manual of Zen Buddhism. New York: Grove Press, 1960.

———. Zen Buddhism: Selected Writings of D. T. Suzuki. Edited by William Barrett. New York: Doubleday/Anchor, 1956.

Suzuki, D. T., and Paul Carus, trans. The Canon of Reason and Virtue. La Salle, Ill.: Open Court, 1913.

Swaffer, Hannen. Adventures with Inspiration. London: Kennerly, Morely and Mitchell, 1929.

———. Behind the Scenes. N.p., 1928.

———. Hannen Swaffer's Who's Who. London: Hutchinson, 1929.

———. Norcliffe's Return. London: Hutchinson, 1925.

———. Studies in Psychology. N.p., 1933.

Swainson, William P. Thomas Lake Harris and His Occult Teaching. London: William Rider & Son, 1922.

Swami Ramacharaka [William Walker Atkinson]. Fourteen Lessons in Yogi Philosophy and Oriental Occultism. Chicago: Yogi Publication Society, 1903.

———. Reincarnation and the Law of Karma. Yogi Publication Society, 1908.

Swann, Ingo. Cosmic Art. New York: Hawthorn Books, 1975.

———. Natural ESP: A Layman's Guide to Unlocking the Extra Sensory Power of Your Mind. New York: Bantam, 1987.

———. Star Fire. New York: Dell, 1978.

———. To Kiss Earth Goody-bye. New York: Hawthorn Books, 1974. Reprint, New York: Laurel/Dell, 1975.

———. Your Nostradamus Factor: Accessing Your Innate Ability to See into the Future. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1993.

Swann, William F. G. "Is the Universe Planned?" Journal of the Franklin Institute (May 1953).

———. "The Known and the Unknown." Journal of the Franklin Institute (May 1955).

———. "Nature and the Mind of Man." Journal of the Franklin Institute (June 1956).

———. "Reality, Imagery and Fantasy." Journal of the Franklin Institute (May 1957).

———. "The Science of Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow." Journal of the Franklin Institute (March 1960).

Swedenborg, Emanuel. Arcana Coelestia. 12 vols. New York: Swedenborg Foundation, 1905–1910.

———. Divine Love and Wisdom. New York: Swedenborg Foundation, n.d.

———. Earths in Our Solar System Which Are Called Planets, and Earths in the Starry Heaven, Their Inhabitants, and the Spirits and Angels There. London: Swedenborg Society, 1860. Frequently reprinted.

———. Earths in Planets & in Starry Heavens: Inhabitants, Spirits & Angels. London, 1758.

———. Heaven and Hell. 1758. Reprint, New York: E. P. Dutton, 1931. Reprint: Swedenborg Foundation, 1979.

———. On the Divine Love and on the Divine Wisdom. London: Swedenborg Society, 1963.

———. The New Jerusalem and Its Heavenly Doctrine. London: Swedenborg Society, 1938.

———. The True Christian Religion. London: Swedenborg Society, 1950.

Swettenham, Sir Frank A. Malay Sketches. London: John Lane, 1895.

Swihart, Altman K. Since Mrs. Eddy. New York: Henry Holt, 1931.

Swindoll, Charles R. Tongues. Insight for Living, 1935, 1998. Reprint, Grand Rapids, Mich.: Zondervan Publishing House, 1995.

The Sword Book of Honourius the Magician. Translated and edited by Daniel J. Driscoll. Gilette, N.J.: Heptangle Books, 1977.

Sykes, Pat. You Don't Know John Cain? London: Van Duren, 1980.

Sylvestre, Ralph E. Gambols with the Ghosts: Mind Reading, Spiritualistic Effects, Mental and Psychical Phenomena, and Horoscopy. Chicago: privately printed, 1901.

Symmes, Americus, ed. The Symmes' Theory of Concentric Spheres: Demonstrating that the Earth is Hollow, Habitable Within, and Widely Open about the Poles. Louisville, Ky.: Bradley and Gilbert, 1878.

Symonds, J. A. The Life of Benvenuto Cellini. 2 vols. London, 1888.

Symonds, John. The Great Beast. London: MacDonald, 1971. Reprint, St. Albans, England: Mayflower, 1973.

———. The King of the Shadow Realm. London: Duckworth, 1989.

———. Light Over Water. London: J. Baker for the Unicorn Press, 1963.

———. Madame Blavatsky, Medium and Magician. London: Odhams Press, 1958.

———. The Magic of Aleister Crowley. London: Frederick Muller, 1958.

———. Thomas Brown and the Angels. London: Hutchinson, 1961.

Symonds, John, and Kenneth Grant. The Confessions of Aleister Crowley. New York: Hill & Wang, 1969.

Synan, Vincent, ed. Aspects of Pentecostal-Charismatic Origins. Plainfield, N.J.: Losgos International, 1975.

Table Turning and Table Talking Considered in Connection with the Dictates of Reason and Common Sense. Bath, UK: S. Gibbs, 1853.

Table Turning by Animal Magnetism Demonstrated. London, 1853.

Tabori, Paul. Beyond the Senses: A Report on Psychical Research in the Sixties. N.p., 1971.

———. Companions of the Unseen. London: H. A. Humphrey, 1968. Reprint, London: Souvenir Press, 1972.

———. Crime and the Occult. N.p., 1974.

———. Harry Price: The Biography of a Ghost-Hunter. London: Athenaenum Press, 1930.

———. Pioneers of the Unseen. London: Souvenir Press, 1972.

Tabori, Paul, and Cornelius Tabori. My Occult Diary. London, 1951. Reprint, New York: Living Books, 1966.

Tabori, Paul, and P. Raphael. Crime and the Occult. N.p., 1974.

Tabori, Paul, and Peter Underwood. The Borley Ghosts. N.p., 1973.

———. The Ghosts of Borley: Annals of the Haunted Rectory. Newton Abbot, UK: David and Charles, 1973.

Tadblavananda, Avadhuta Archrya. Glimpses of Prout Philosophy. Copenhagen, Denmark: Central Proutish Publications, 1981.

Tanagras, A. Psychophysical Elements in Parapsychological Transactions. New York: Parapsychology Institute, 1967.

Tanagras, Angelos. Destiny and Chance. N.p., 1934.

Tapley, Charles Sutherland. Rebecca Nurse. Boston: Marshall Jones, 1930.

Targ, Russell. The Mind Race: Understanding and Using Psychic Abilities. New York: Villard Books, 1984.

Targ, Russel, and Harold E. Puthoff. "ESP Experiments with Uri Geller." In Research in Parapsychology 1973. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1974.

———. "Information Transmission under Conditions of Sensory Shielding." Nature (October 1974).

———. Mind Reach: Scientists Look at Psychical Research. New York: Delacorte Press, 1977.

———. "PK Experiments with Uri Geller and Ingo Swann." In Research in Parapsychology 1973. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1974.

Targ, Russel, Harold E. Puttoff, and Charles T. Tart. Mind at Large. New York: Praeger, 1979.

Targ, Russell, and Keith Harary. The Mind Race: Understanding and Using Psychic Abilities. New York: Villard Books, 1984.

Tarne, Ingham. "A Little Lower Than the Angels. . . and Crowned with Glory." Meditation 3, no. 4 (Fall 1988): 24–28.

Tarostar. A Book of Shadows. New Brunswick, N.J.: Inner Light Publications,1987.

Tart, Charles T. Altered States of Consciousness. Garden City, N.Y.: Anchor/Doubleday, 1972.

———. "Firewalk." Parapsychology Review 18, no. 3 (May–June 1987).

———. States of Consciousness. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1975.

Tart, Charles T., and Harold E. Puttoff. Mind at Large. New York: Praeger, 1979.

Tart, Charles T., ed. Altered States of Consciousness: A Book of Readings. New York: John Wiley & Sons, 1969.

———. The Application of Learning Theory to Extrasensory Perception. 1975.

———. Learning to Use Extrasensory Perception. 1976.

———. On Being Stoned: A Psychological Study of Marijuana Intoxication. Palo Alto, Calif.: Science & Behavior Books, 1971.

———. Psi, Scientific Studies of the Psychic Realm. N.p., 1977.

———. States of Consciousness. N.p., 1975.

———. Transpersonal Psychologies. New York: Harper & Row, 1975.

———. Waking Up: Overcoming the Obstacles to Human Potential. N.p., 1986.

Tasso, Torquato. Jerusalem Delivered. Rutherford, N.J.: Fairleigh Dickinson University Press, 1970.

Taussig, Michael. Shamanism, Colonialism, and the Wild Man: A Study in Terror and Healing. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1987.

Tautriadelta [Roslyn D'Onston]. "A Modern Magician: An Autobiography. By a Pupil of Lord Lytton." Borderland 3, no. 2 (April 1896).

Taves, Ernest H. "Communion with the Imagination." The Skeptical Inquirer 12, 1 (Fall 1987).

Taylor, John The Horizons of Knowledge. N.p., 1982.

———. "A New Theory for ESP," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 62, no. 851 (April 1998): 289–310.

———. Science and the Supernatural. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1980.

———. The Shape of Minds to Come. N.p., 1971.

———. Superminds: A Scientist Looks at the Paranormal. London: Macmillan, 1975; New York: Viking Press, 1975; New York: Warner Books, 1975.

Taylor, Michael Brooks. " 'Try the Spirits': Shaker Responses to Supernaturalism." Journal of Religious Studies 7 (fall 1979): 30–38.

Taylor, Peggy. "Life at the Leading Edge: A New Age Interview with Marilyn Ferguson." New Age 8, no. 1 (August 1982): 30–35, 52–53.

Taylor, Sascha. Glanvill: The Uses and Abuses of Skepticism. New York: Pergamon Press, 1981.

Taylor, W. G. Langworthy. Katie Fox, Epoch-making Medium and the Making of the Fox-Taylor Record. Boston: Bruce, 1933.

Taylor, W. S. Morton Prince and Abnormal Psychology. New York; London: D. Appleton & Co., 1928.

Taylor, Wayne. Pillars of Light. Columbus, N.Mex.: The Author, 1965.

Teachings of the Temple. 3 vols. Halcyon, Calif.: Temple of the People, 1947–85.

Teahan, John F. "Warren Felt Evans and Mental Healing: Romantic Idealism and Practical Metaphysics in Nineteenth-Century America." Church History 48, no. 1 (March 1979): 63–80.

Techter, David. A Bibliography and Index of Psychic Research and Related Topics for the Year 1962. Illinois Society for Psychic Research, 1963.

Tedlock, Dennis. The Mayan Book of the Dawn of Life. trans. & comm. Popol Vuh. Rev. ed. New York: Touchstone/Simon & Schuster, 1996.

Teed, Cyrus Reed. The Cellular Cosmogony; or, the Earth, a Concave Sphere. Chicago: Guiding Star, 1899.

Teesing, H. P. H. "Mystiek en Literatuur" (Mysticism and Literature). Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie (1959).

Teitze, Thomas. Margery. New York: Harper & Row, 1973.

Temple Messages. Halcyon, Calif.: Temple of the People, 1983.

Temple, Robert K. G. The Sirius Mystery. Folkstone, Kent, England: Bailey Brothers and Swinfen, 1972.

Temple, Sir Richard C. The Thirtyseven Nats (Burmese Animism). London: n.p., 1906.

Tenhaeff, W. H. C. Beknopte Handleiding der "Psychical Research" (Short Textbook of Parapsychology). 3 vols. N.p., 1926.

———. Beschouwingen over Het Gebruik van Paranognosten (The Use of Sensitives for Police and Other Purposes). Utrecht: Erven J. Bijleveld, 1957.

———. Paranormal Healing Powers. Olten, 1957.

———. "Psychoscopic Experiments on Behalf of the Police." Conference Report No. 41. Paper presented at the First International Conference of Parapsychological Studies, Utrecht, Holland, 1953.

———. Telepathie en Helderziendheid. English edition as Telepathy and Clairvoyance. C. Bertelsmann, 1962. Springfield, Ill.: C. C. Thomas, 1973.

Tenyi, Tamas and Matyas Trixler. "A magikus befolyasoltsag es a demonikus megszallottsag pszichopatologiai vonatkozasairol ciganyok szkizofren pszichozisaiban" (Delusions of Magical Influence and Demoniacal Possession in Gypsy Patients with the Diagnosis of Schizophrenia), Psychiatria Hungarica 7, no. 2 (April 1992): 167–173.

Teresa of Avila, St. The Interior Castle. Translated by Kieran Kavanaugh and Oyilio Rodriguez. New York: Paulist Press, 1979.

Tesla, Nikola. "Making Your Imagination Work For You." American Magazine (April 1921).

Thalbourne, Michael A. "Belief in the Validity of Horoscopes as Related to the Sheep-Goat Effect," Journal of Parapsychology 56, no. 2 (June 1992): 163–168.

———. "Personality Characteristics of Students Who Believe Themselves to be Psychic," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 63, no. 856 (July 1999): 203–212.

———. "The Sheep-Goat Variable and Mystical Experience: Their Relationship and Their Levels in a Special Population," European Journal of Parapsychology 14 (1998–1999): 80–88.

Thedra. Excerts of Prophecies from Other Planets Concerning Our Earth. Mt. Shasta, Calif.: Association of Sananda and Sanat Kumara, [1956].

———. Mine Intercome Messages from the Realms of Light. Sedona, Ariz.: Association of Sananda and Sanat Kumara, [1990].

Theobald, Morell. Spirit Workers in the Home Circle. Boston: Colby & Rich, 1887.

Theodorowicz, Jose. Mystical Phenomena in the Life of Therese Neumann. St. Louis, Mo.: B. Herder, 1940.

Theogenesis. Halcyon, Calif.: Temple of the People, 1981.

Theories of Hypnosis: Current Models and Perspectives. New York: Guilford Press, 1991.

The Theosophical Movement, 1875–1950. Los Angeles: Cunningham Press, 1951.

Theresa, St. The Interior Castle. London: Baker, 1921.

Thierens, A. E. Astrology in Mesopotamian Culture. Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1935.

———. The General Book of the Tarot. London: Rider; Philadelphia: David McKay, 1928. Reprint, Hollywood, Calif.: Newcastle Publishing, 1975.

Thigpen, C. H., and H. Cleckley. The Three Faces of Eve. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1957.

Thirty Years Work: The Books of Alice Bailey and the Tibetan Master Djwhal Khul. New York: Lucis Publishing, n.d.

This House is Haunted: The True Story of a Poltergeist. London: Souvenir Press, 1980.

Thom, Alexander. Megalithic Lunar Observatories. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1971.

———. Megalithic Sites in Britain. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1967.

Thomas, C. Drayton. Life beyond Death with Evidence. N.p., 1928.

———. "A New Hypothesis Concerning Trance-Communications." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 48 (May 1947).

Thomas, C. Drayton. Some Recent Evidence for Human Survival. London: William Collins, 1922.

———. "The Volume of Byron: A Significant Book Test." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 48, 175 (1946–49).

———. "The Word Association Test with Mrs. Osborne Leonard." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 43, 141 (1935).

Thomas, John F. Beyond Normal Cognition: An Evaluative and Methodological Study of the Mental Content of Certain Trance Phenomena. Boston: Boston Society for Psychical Research, 1973. Reprint, Ann Arbor, Mich.: University Microfilms, n.d. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

———. Case Studies Bearing on Survival. Boston: Boston Society for Psychical Research, 1929.

Thomas, Keith. Religion and the Decline of Magic. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1971.

Thomas, L. "Late-Life Effect of Early Mystical Experiences: A Cross-Cultural Comparison," Journal of Aging Studies 11, no. 2 (Summer 1997): 155–169.

Thomas, N. W. Thought Transference: A Critical and Historical Review of the Evidence for Telepathy. London: De La More Press, 1905.

Thomas, Nicholas, and Caroline Humphrey, eds. Shamanism, History, and the State. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1994.

Thomas, Northcote W. Crystal Gazing: Its History and Practice, with a Discussion of the Evidence for Telepathic Scrying. London: Alexander Moring (The De La More Press), 1905.

Thommen, George. Is This Your Day? New York: Award, 1964.

Thompson, C. J. S. The Hand of Destiny. London, 1932. Reprint, Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1970.

———. Magic and Healing. London: Rider, 1947. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1973.

———. The Mysteries and Secrets of Magic. London: Allen Lane, 1927. Reprint, Causeway, 1973.

———. The Mystery and Lore of Apparitions. London: Shaylor, 1930. Reprint, Detroit: Gale Research, 1975.

———. The Mystery and Lore of Monsters. London, 1930. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1968. New York: Citadel Press, 1970.

———. The Mystery and Lure of Perfume. London: J. Lane; Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1969.

———. The Mystery and Romance of Astrology. London, 1929. Reprint, Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1969. Reprint, New York: Causeway, 1973.

———. The Mystic Mandrake. 1934. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1968.

Thompson, Charles J. Alchemy: Source of Chemistry & Medicine. London, 1897. Reprint, Sentry Press, 1974.

Thompson, Francis. The Supernatural Highland. London: Robert Hale, 1976.

Thompson, Richard Campbell. Devils & Evil Spirits of Babylonia 2 vols. London: Luzac, 1903–04.

———. Semitic Magic. London: Luzac, 1908.

Thompson, Richard Lowe. The History of the Devil. New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1929.

Thompson, William Irwin. The American Replacement of Nature: The Everyday Acts and Outrageous Evolution of Economic Life. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1991.

———. Evil and World Order. New York: Harper & Row, 1976.

———. Islands Out of Times. Garden City, N.Y.: Dial Press, 1985.

———. Passages About Earth: An Exploration of the New Planetary Culture. New York: Harper & Row, 1975. N.p.: HarperTrade; Toronto: Harper Collins Publishing, Inc., 1980.

———. Reimagination of the World: A Critique of the New Age, Science, and Popular Culture. Santa Fe, N.Mex.: Bear, 1991.

Thomsen, Harry. The New Religions of Japan. Rutland, Vt.: Charles E. Tuttle, 1963.

Thorndike, Lynn. History of Magic and Experimental Science. Vol. 3. New York: Columbia University Press, 1923–58.

Thorogood, Brackett K. "The Margery Mediumship." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 22 (1933).

Thorsson, Edred. Futjhark: A Handbook of Rune Magic. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Weiser, 1984.

———. Teutonic Magick. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1999.

Thouless, Robert Henry. Authority and Freedom. London: Hodder and Stroughton, 1954.

———. Experimental Psychical Research. Baltimore, Md.: Penguin, 1963.

———. "Crookes and Cook." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 42 (1963).

———. "Dr. Rhine's Recent Experiments in Telepathy and Clairvoyance and a Reconsideration of J. E. Coover's Conclusions on Telepathy." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 43 (1935): 24.

———. From Anecdote to Experiment in Psychical Research. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1972.

———. "The Present Position of Experimental Research into Telepathy and Related Phenomena." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 47 (1943).

———. "Problems of Design in Parapsychological Experiments." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (1955).

———. "Psychical Research Past and Present." [Myers Memorial Lecture] Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (1952).

———. Straight and Crooked Thinking. N.p., 1930. Reprinted as How to Think Straight. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1939.

Thurston, Herbert. Surprising Mystics. London: Burns & Oates, 1955.

———. Ghosts and Poltergeists. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1954.

———. "The Phenomena of Stigmatization." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 32, no. 83 (1922).

———. The Physical Phenomena of Mysticism. London: Burns & Oates, 1952. Reprint, Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1953.

Thury, Marc. Les Tables tournantes. Geneva, 1855.

Tibet and Freedom. The Tibet Society of the United Kingdom, 1961.

The Tibetan Book of the Dead. Translated and with a commentary by Francesca Fremantle and Chogyam Trungpa. Berkeley, Calif.: Shambhala, 1973.

"The Tibetan Lama Hoax.' " Tomorrow 9, 2 (spring 1958).

Tiertze, Thomas R. Margery. New York: Harper & Row, 1973.

Tiffany, Joel. Spiritualism Explained. New York: Graham & Ellinwood, 1856.

Tiller, William A. "Radionics, Radiesthesia and Physics." In The Varieties of Healing Experience. Palo Alto, Calif.: Academy of Paraspsychology & Medicine, 1971.

Tillett, Gregory. The Elder Brother: A Biography of Charles Webster Leadbeater. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1982.

Tillyard, R. J. "Evidence of Survival of a Human Personality." Nature 122 (August 28, 1928).

———. "Science and Psychical Research." Nature 118 (1926).

Timmons, Beverly, and Joe Kamiya. "The Psychology and Physiology of Meditation and Related Phenomena." Journal of Transpersonal Psychology 1 (1970).

Timms, Moira. Prophecies and Predictions: Everyone's Guide to the Coming Changes. Santa Cruz, Calif.: Unity Press, 1981.

Tingley, Katherine. Theosophy and Some of the Vital Problems of the Day. N.p., 1915.

———. Theosophy, The Path of the Mystic. Point Loma, Calif., 1922. Reprint, Pasadena, Calif.: Theosophical University Press, 1977.

———. The Gods Await. Point Loma, Calif., 1929.

———. The Voice of the Soul. Point Loma, Calif., 1928.

———. The Wine of Life. Point Loma, Calif.: Woman's International Theosophical League, 1925.

———. The Wisdom of the Heart: Katherine Tingley Speaks. Compiled by W. Emmett Small. San Diego, Calif., 1978.

Tinterow, Maurice M. Foundations of Hypnosis: From Mesmer to Freud. Springfield, Ill.: Chas. C. Thomas, 1970.

Tischner, Rudolf. Franz Anton Mesmer: Leben, Werk und Wirkungen. Munchen: Verlag der Müncher Drucke, 1928.

———. Geschichte der okkultistischen Forschung. Pfülling: Johannes Baum Verlag, 1924.

———. Geschichte der Parapsychologie. Titmoning (Pustet), 1960.

———. Telepathy and Clairvoyance. New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1925.

Tisserand, Robert. Aromatherapy. 1977. Reprint, London: Mayflower, 1979.

Tobacyk, Jerome, Mark J. Miller, Patsy Murphy, and Thomas Mitchell. "Comparisons of Paranormal Beliefs of Black and White University Students from the Southern United States," Psychological Reports 63, no. 2 (October 1988): 492–494.

Tohei, Koichi. The Book of Ki: Coordinating Mind and Body in Daily Life. San Francisco: Japan Publications, 1978.

———. This is Aikido. Tokyo: Japan Publications, 1975.

Tóibín, Colm, ed. Seeing is Believing. Ireland: Pilgrim Press, 1985.

Toksvig, Signe. Emmanuel Swedenborg, Scientist and Mystic. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1948.

Tolaas, Jon. "The Puzzle of Psychic Dreams." In Dreamtime and Dreamwork: Decoding the Language of the Night. Los Angeles: Jeremy P. Tarcher, Inc., 1990.

Tompkins, Peter. Mysteries of the Mexican Pyramids. New York: Harper & Row, 1976.

———. Secrets of the Great Pyramid. New York: Harper & Row, 1971.

Tompkins, Peter, and Christopher Bird. The Secret Life of Plants. New York: Harper & Row, 1973. Reprint, New York: Avon, 1974.

Tonner, W. "The Genius of Francis Grierson." Trend (March 1914).

Torné-Chiavigny, H. L'Histoire prédite et jugée par Nostradamus. 3 vols. Bordeaux, 1860–62.

Torrens, Robert George. The Inner Teachings of the Golden Dawn. London: Neville Spearman, 1969.

———. Secret Rituals of the Golden Dawn. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1973.

Torrenti, Raymond E. "Analyzing the Transcendent: Psychotherapists and Their Mystical Experiences," Dissertation Abstracts International: Section B: The Sciences & Engineering 56, no. 9-B (March 1996): 5187.

Torres, Penny [Mafu]. Reflections on Yeshua Ben Joseph. Vacaville, Calif.: Mafu Seminars, 1989.

———. And What Be God? Vacaville, Calif.: Mafu Seminars, 1989.

Toth, Max, and Greg Nielsen. Pyramid Power. London: Freeway, 1974. Reprint, New York: Warner Books, 1976.

Toulmin [Crosland], Camilla. Light in the Valley: My Experiences in Spiritualism. London; New York: G. Routledge & Co., 1957.

Towers, Eric. Dashwood: The Man and the Myth. UK: Crucible, 1986.

Townsend, C. H. Mesmerism Proved True. London, 1854.

Townshend, Chauncy Hare. Facts in Mesmerism, with Reasons for a Dispassionate Inquiry into It. London, 1844.

Transcendental Physics: An Account of Experimental Investigations from the Scientific Treatises of Johann Carl Friedrich Zöllner. Translated by Charles C. Massey. London: W. H. Harrison, 1882. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1976.

Tregortha, John. News from the Invisible World. UK: Burslem, 1808.

Treharne, R. F. The Glastonbury Legends. London, 1967.

Trench, Brinsley Le Poer. The Eternal Subject. London: Souvenir, 1973.

———. The Flying Saucer Story. London: Neville Spearman, 1966.

———. Forgotten Heritage. London: Neville Spearman, 1964.

———. Men Among Mankind. London: Neville Spearman, 1962.

———. Operation Earth. London: Neville Spearman, 1969.

———. Secret of the Ages: UFOs From Inside the Earth. London: Souvenir Press, 1974.

———. The Sky People. London: Neville Spearman, 1960.

Trethewy, A. W. The "Controls" of Stainton Moses. London, 1923.

Trevelyan, George. The Active Eye in Architecture. N.p., 1977.

———. Operation Redemption. Wellingborough, Northamptionshire, England: Turnstone Press, 1981.

———. A Vision of the Aquarian Age. London: Stillpoint, 1984.

Trevelyan, George, and Edward Marchett. Twelve Seats at the Round Table. Jersey: Neville Spearman, 1976.

Trevino, Rick. Revelations & Spiritual Enlightenment of Yahwism. Palm Springs, Calif.: International Guild of Advanced Sciences Research Society, 1993.

Trigg, E. B. Gypsy Demons and Divinities: The Magical and Supernatural Practices of the Gypsies. Secaucus, N.J.: Citadel Press, 1973. Reprint, London: Sheldon Press, 1975.

Trine, Ralph Waldo. In Tune With the Infinite. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1897.

Trochu, Francis. Saint Bernadette Soubirous, 1844–1879. London: Longmans, 1957.

———. The Curé D'Ars. London: Burns & Oates, 1936. Reprint, Westminster, Md.: Newman Press, 1950.

———. The Insight of the Cure D'Ars. London: Burns Oates & Washburn, 1934.

Tromp, S. W. Dowsing and Science. N.p., 1950.

———. "First Report on Experiments Concerning the Influence of Variations in the Strength of the Magnetic Field on Muscular Contraction." Dutch Journal of Parapsychology (January 1947).

———. Fundamental Principles of Psychical Physics. N.p., 1952.

———. Physical Physics; A Scientific Analysis of Dowsing, Radiesthesia, and Kindred Divining Phenomena. New York: Elsevier, 1949.

———. "The Problem of the Possible Influence of Dowsing Zones on the Health of Men." Dutch Journal of Parapsychology (November 1948).

Troop, Martin. Mary Shelley's Monster. Houghton Mifflin, 1977.

Trouncer, Margaret. Miser of Souls. London: Hutchinson, 1959.

Troward, Thomas. The Edinburgh Lectures on Mental Science. London, 1904.

———. The Hidden Power and Other Papers on Mental Science. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1917.

Trowbridge, W. R. H. Cagliostro: The Splendour and Misery of a Master of Magic. London, 1910. Reprinted as Cagliostro: Savant or Scoundrel? New York: Gordon Press, 1975. Reprinted as Cagliostro: Maligned Freemason and Rosicrucian. Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing, 1992.

True & Faithful Relation of What Passed for Many Years Between Dr. John Dee & Some Spirits. N.p., 1659. Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1999. Truesdell, J. W. The Bottom Facts Concerning the Science of Spiritualism. New York: G. W. Carleton, 1883.

Truesdell, J. W. Bottom Facts of Spiritualism. New York, 1883.

Trust, Josephine C. Bible Mystery by Superet Light Science. Los Angeles: Superet Press, 1950.

———. Superet Light. Los Angeles: Superet Light Center, 1953.

———. Superet Light Doctrine. Los Angeles: Superet Press, 1949.

Truthseeker, A. The Planchette Mystery: Being a Candid Inquiry Into the Nature, Origin, Import, and Tendencies of Modern Signs and Wonders. New York: Samuel R. Wells, 1870.

Truzzi, Marcelo. "A Bibliography on Fire-Walking." Zetetic Scholar 11 (1983): 105–07.

———. Cauldron Cookery: An Authentic Guide for Coven Connoisseurs. New York: Meredith, 1969.

———. "The Occult Revival as Popular Culture: Some Random Observations on the Old and Nouveau Witch." Sociological Quarterly 13 (Winter 1972): 16–34.

———. Where Witchcraft Lives. London: Aquarian Press, 1962.

Tubby, Gertrude Ogden. James Hysop X—His Book. York, Pa.: York Printing, 1929.

———. Psychics and Mediums. Boston: Marshall Jones, 1935.

Tucci, Giuseppe. The Theory and Practice of the Mandala. London: n.p., 1961.

Tucker, Rob. Recovery From Cults: Help For Victims of Psychological and Spiritual Abuse. New York: W. W. Norton & Co. Inc., 1993.

Tuckett, Ivor L. The Evidence for the Supernatural. London, 1911.

Tugwell, Simon. Human Immortality and Redemption. London: Darton, Longman, & Todd, 1990.

Tuke, W. H. Sleep-walking and Hypnotism. Philadelphia: Blakiston; London: Churchill, 1884.

Turnbull, Grace, ed. The Essence of Plotinus. New York: Greenwood Press, 1934.

Turner, Edith. "The Reality of Spirits," ReVision, 15, no. 1 (Summer 1992): 28–32.

Turner, James, ed. Stella C. An Account of Some Original Experiments in Psychical Research. London: Souvenir Press, 1973.

Turner, Robert. Elizabethan Magic. Londmead, Dorset, England: Element Books, 1989.

Turner, Robert, and David Edwards. The Outer Court. Woverhampton, UK: Order of the Cubic Stone, 1968.

Turnbull, Coulson. The Solar Logos or Studies in Arcane Mysticism. Santa Fe, N.Mex.: Sun Publishing Co., 1997.

Turvey, Vincent N. The Beginnings of Seership. London, 1911. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1969.

Tuttle, Hudson. Arcana of Spiritualism. N.p., 1871. Reprint, Manchester: The Two Worlds Publishing, 1900; Chicago: J. R. Francis, 1904.

———. Career of the Christ—Idea in History. Boston: Adams, 1870.

———. Career of the God—Idea in History. Boston: Adams, 1869.

———. Career of Religious Ideas. New York: D. M. Bennett, 1878.

———. Ethics of Spiritualism. Chicago: Religio-Philosophical Publishing, 1878.

———. Mediumship and Its Laws. Chicago: Progressive Thinker Publishing, 1900.

———. Philosophy of Spirit and the Spirit World. London: H. A. Copley; Berlin Heights, Ohio: H. Tuttle, 1896.

———. Religion of Man and Ethics of Science. New York: M. L. Holbrook, 1890.

———. Studies in Outlying Fields of Psychic Science. New York: M. L. Holbrook, 1889.

Tuttle, Hudson, and Emma Rood Tuttle. Stories from Beyond the Borderland. Berlin Heights, Ohio: Tuttle Publsihing, 1910.

Tweedale, Charles L. Man's Survival After Death. London: Psychic Book Club, 1909. Reprint, New York: E. P. Dutton, 1918.

———. News From the Next World. N.p., 1940.

Tweedale, Violet. The Cosmic Christ. N.p., 1930.

———. Ghosts I Have Seen and Other Psychic Experiences. New York: Frederick A. Stokes, 1919. London, 1920. Reprint, Las Vegas, Nev.: Health Research Inc., 1996.

———. Mellow Sheaves. N.p., 1927.

———. Phantoms of the Dawn. N.p., 1924.

Twigg, Ena, with Ruth Hagy Brod. Ena Twigg: Medium. New York: Hawthorn Books, 1972. Reprint, London: W. H. Allen, 1973.

Twitchell, Paul. All about ECK. Las Vegas, Nev.: Illuminated Way Press, 1969.

———. ECKANKAR, the Key to Secret Worlds. New York: Lancer Books, 1969.

———. The Tiger's Fang. New York: Lancer Books, 1969.

Tyl, Noel. Holistic Astrology: The Analysis of Inner and Outer Environments. McLean, Va.: TAI Books, 1980.

———. The Horoscope as Identity. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1974.

———. The Missing Moon. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1979.

Tylor, E. B. Primitive Culture. 2 vols. London: John Murray, 1871.

Tyndall, John. Fragments of Science for Unscientific People. New York: Appleton, 1872.

Tyrrell, George N. M. Apparitions. London, 1953. Reissued in one volume with Tyrrell's Science & Psychical Phenomena. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1961. Reprint, London: Society for Psychical Research, 1973.

———. "Further Research in Extrasensory Perception." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 44, no. 147 (1936–37).

———. Grades of Significance. N.p., 1930.

———. Homo Faber. N.p., 1951.

———. The Nature of Human Personality. London: Allen & Unwin, 1954.

———. The Personality of Man: New Facts and Their Significance. Harmondsworth, UK: Penguin Books, 1947.

Tyrrell, George N. M. "Presidential Address." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 47, no. 171 (1945).

———, George N. M. Science and Psychical Phenomena. London, 1938. Reprinted in Science and Psychical Phenomena and Apparitions. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1961.

Tyson, Donald. Rune Magic. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1989.

Uban, Sujan Singh. The Gurus of India. London: Fine Books (Oriental)/New Delhi, India: Sterling Publishers, 1977.

Ulansey, David. The Origins of the Mithraic Mysteries: Cosmology and Salvation in the Ancient World. New York: Oxford University Press, 1989.

Ullman, Montague. "On the Occurrence of Telepathic Dreams." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (April 1959).

———. The Varieties of Dream Experience: Expanding Our Ways of Working with Dreams. New York: Continuum, 1987.

Ullman, Montague, and Nan Zimmerman. Working with Dreams. London: Hutchinson, 1983.

Ullman, Montague, and Roberto Cavanna, eds. Proceedings of an International Conference on Hypnosis, Drugs, Dreams and Psi: Psi and Altered States of Consciousness. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1968.

Ullman, Montague, and Stanley Krippner. Dream Studies and Telepathy: An Experimental Approach. New York: Parapsychology Foundation, 1970.

Ullman, Montague, Stanley Krippner, and Alan Vaughan. Dream Telepathy. New York: Macmillan; London: Turnstone Books, 1973. Reprint, London: Penguin, 1974. Reprint, Los Angeles: J. P. Tarcher, 1985. Rev. ed. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1989.

Underhill, A. Leah. The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism. New York: Thomas R. Knox, 1885. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1976.

Underhill, Evelyn. The Mystic Way: A Psychological Study in Christian Origins. London and New York, 1913.

———. Mysticism: A Study in the Nature and Development of Man's Spiritual Consciousness. London: Metheun, 1911.

Underwood, Guy. Patterns of the Past. London: Museum Press, 1969.

Underwood, Peter. The Complete Book of Dowsing and Divining. London: Rider, 1980.

———. Dictionary of the Supernatural. 1978. Reprinted as Dictionary of the Occult of Supernatural. London: Harrap, 1978.

———. Gazetteer of British Ghosts.

———. Gazetteer of Scottish and Irish Ghosts. London: Souvenir Press; New York: Walker, 1975. New York: Bell, 1985.

———. Haunted London. N.p., 1973.

———. Hauntings; New Light on the Greatest True Ghost Stories of the World. London: Dent, 1977.

———. No Common Task: The Autobiography of a Ghost Hunter. N.p., 1983.

———. The Vampire's Bedside Companion: The Amazing World of Vampires in Fact and Fiction. London: Leslie Frewin, 1972.

Underwood, Peter, and Leonard Wilder. Lives to Remember: A Case Book on Reincarnation. London: Robert Hale, 1975.

United Lodge of Theosophists: Its Mission and Its Future. Los Angeles: Theosophy, n.d.

United States Army. Index-Catalogue of the Library of the Surgeon-General's Office. Washington, D.C., 1882.

Universal Spiritualist Manual. Manor Grove, Ind.: Universal Spiritualist Church, n.d.

Upham, Charles W. Salem Witchcraft with an Account of Salem Village and a History of Opinion on Witchcraft and Kindred Subjects. 2 Vols. Boston, 1867. Reprint, New York: Ungar, 1959.

Uphoff, Walter, and Mary Jo Uphoff. Mind Over Matter: Implications of Masuaki Kiyota's PK Feats with Metal and Film. Oregon, Wisc.: New Frontiers Center, 1980. Reprint, UK: Colin Smythe, 1980.

———. New Psychic Frontiers: Your Key to New Worlds. Gerrard's Cross, UK: Colin Smyth, 1975.

The URANTIA Book. Chicago: URANTIA Foundation, 1955.

Usha, S.I. and Satwant Pasricha. "Claims of Paranormal Experiences: A Survey of Psi and Psi-Related Experiences," NIMHANS Journal 7, no. 2 (July 1989): 143–150.

Utts, Jessica., "Replication and Meta-Analysis in Parapsychology," Statistical Science 6 (1991): 363–378.

———. "Response to Ray Hyman's Report Evaluation of the Program on Anomalous Mental Phenomena'," Journal of Parapsychology 59, no. 4 (December 1995): 353–356.

Valentine, Basil. Triumphal Chariot of Antimony. London, 1656.

Valentine, Tom. Psychic Surgery. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1974.

Valiente, Doreen. An ABC of Witchcraft Past and Present. New York: St. Martin's Press; London: Macmillan, 1973.

———. The Rebirth of Witchcraft. London: Robert Hale, 1989.

Vallee, Jacques. Anatomy of a Phenomenon: Unidentified Objects in Space, A Scientific Appraisal. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1965.

———. The Invisible College. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1975.

———. Messengers of Deception: UFO Contacts and Cults. Berkeley, Calif.: And/Or Press, 1979.

———. Passport to Magonia: On UFOs, Folklore, and Parallel Worlds. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1969. Reprint, Chicago: Contemporary Books, 1993.

———. Revelations: Alien Contact and Human Deception. New York: Ballantine Books, 1991.

Vallee, Jacques, and Janine Vallee. Challenge to Science; The UFO Enigma. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1966.

Vambéry, Arminius. The Story of My Struggles: The Memoirs of Arminius Vambéry. 2 vols. New York, 1904; London: T. F. Unwin, 1905.

Van Busschbach, J. G. "A Further Report on an Investigation of ESP in School Children." Journal of Parapsychology 19 (1955).

———. "An Investigation of ESP Between Teacher and Pupils in American Schools." Journal of Parapsychology 20 (June 1956).

———. "An Investigation of Extrasensory Perception in School Children." Journal of Parapsychology 17 (1953).

Van de Castle, Robert L. "Development and Validation of a Perceptual Maturity Scale Using Figure Preferences." Journal of Consultative Psychology 29 (1965).

———. "An Exploratory Study of Some Personality Correlates Associated with PK Performance." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 52 (1958).

———. "The Facilitation of ESP Through Hypnosis." American Journal of Clinical & Experimental Hypnosis 12 (1969).

———. "An Investigation of Psi Abilities Among the Cuna Indians of Panama." Journal of Parapsychology 38 (June 1974).

———. "Psi Abilities in Primitive Groups." Proceedings of the Parapsychological Association 7 (1970).

Van Deusen, Glyndon G. Horace Greeley: Nineteenth-Century Crusader. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1953.

Van Eeden, Frederik. "Account of Sittings with Mrs. Thompson." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 17 (1904).

———. "A Study of Dreams." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 26 (1913).

Van Gelder, Dora. The Real World of Fairies. Wheaton, Ill.: Theosophical Publishing House, 1999.

Van Hien, Gordon. What is Subud? London: Rider, 1963. Revised, 1968.

Van Lysebeth, Andre. Pranayama. London: Mandala Books, 1979.

Van Over, Raymond. ESP & the Clairvoyants. New York: Award Books, Happauge, 1970.

———. Total Meditation. New York: Collier Books, 1978.

Van Peursen, C. A. "Parapsychologie en Wijsgerige Bezinning" (Parapsychology and philosophical reflection). Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie 1–3 (1959).

Van Rijckenborgh, Jan. The Coming New Man. Haarlem, The Netherlands: Rozekruis-Pers, 1957.

———. Elementary Philosophy of the Modern Rosecross. Haarlem, The Netherlands: Rozekruis-Pers, 1961.

Van Tassell, George. The Council of Seven Lights. Los Angeles: DeVorss & Co., 1958.

———. I Rode in a Flying Saucer. Los Angeles: New Age Publishing, 1952.

Van Valer, Nola. My Meeting with the Masters of Mount Shasta. Mount Shasta, Calif.: Radiant School, 1982.

Van Vuurde, Wilhelm. "ESP During Sleep." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 38 (1956): 282.

Vandenberg, Philipp. Der Fluch der Pharaonen. Scherz Verlag, 1973. English edition as The Curse of the Pharaohs. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott, 1975.

Vandenberg, Philipp. Der Vergessene Pharao. C. Bertelsmann Verlag, 1978. English edition as The Golden Pharaoh. New York: Macmillan; London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1980.

Vanscyoc, Linda Jane. "Knowing the Mystical: The Melchizedek Mystery School, Transpersonal Psychology, and Therapy," Dissertation Abstracts International: Section B: The Sciences & Engineering 57, no. 11-B (May 1997): 7240.

The Varieties of the Healing Experience. Los Altos, Calif.: Academy of Parapsychology and Medicine, 1971.

Varma, Devendra. "The Genesis of Dracula: a Re-Visit." In Peter Underwood, ed. The Vampire's Bedside Companion. London: Leslie Frewin, 1975.

———. The Gothic Flame. London: Arthur Barker, 1957.

———. The History of the Gothic Novel in England. N.p., 1957.

———. "The Vampire in Legend, Lore, and Literature." Introduction to Varney the Vampyre; or, the Feast of Blood. New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1970.

Varma, Devendra., ed. Voices from the Vaults: Authentic Tales of Vampires and Ghosts. Toronto: Key Porter Books, 1987.

Varvoglis, Mario. " 'Anglo-Saxon' vs. 'Latin' Parapsychology: Behind the Communication Barrier," European Journal of Parapsychologists 8 (1990–1991): 41–50.

Varro, Marcus Terrentius. De Lingua Latina. Translated as On the Latin Language. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1958.

Vasiliev, Leonid. L. Experiments in Mental Suggestion. London: Institute for the Study of Mental Images, 1963.

———. Experiments in Distant Influence. London: Wildwood House, 1976; New York: Dutton, 1976.

———. Mysterious Manifestations of the Human Psyche. 1959. Reprinted as: Mysterious Phenomena of the Human Psyche. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1965.

———. Studies in Mental Telepathy. CCM Information Corporation, 1971.

Vasilescu, Eugen and Elena Vasilescu. "The Mechanism of Telepathy," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 61, no. 845 (October 1996): 211-220.

Vasse, Paul M. and Christine M. Vasse. "Comparison of Two Subjects in PK." Journal of Parapsychology (December 1951).

———. "ESP Test with French First-Grade School Children." Journal of Parapsychology (September 1958).

———. "Plant Growing Experiments." Revue Métapsychique (April–June 1948).

Vaughn, Alan. "Channeling." New Realities 3, no. 3 (January/February 1987).

———. The Edge of Tomorrow. New York: Coward, McGann, 1982.

———. Incredible Coincidence: The Baffling World of Synchronicity. New York: Lippencott, 1979.

———. Patterns of Prophecy. New York: Hawthorn Books, 1973. Reprint, London: Turnstone, 1974.

Vaughan, Alan, and James Bolem. Psychics. New York: Harper & Row, 1972.

Vaughan, Diana [Gabriel Jogand-Paqés]. Mémoires d'une Ex-Palladiste, parfaite Initié, Indépendante. Paris, 1895–97.

Velikovsky, Immanuel. Ages in Chaos. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1952.

———. Earth in Upheaval. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1955.

———. Oedipus and Akhnaton: Myth and History. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1960.

———. Peoples of the Sea. N.p., 1977.

———. Worlds in Collision. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1950.

Ventimiglia, Mark. Wiccan Prayer Book. Secaucus, N.J.: Carol Publishing Group, 1999.

Verax [J. J. Garth Wilkinson]. Evenings with Mr. Hume and the Spirits. Keighley, England, 1855.

Verity. The Going and the Glory. Auckland, New Zealand: Heralds of the New Age, 1966.

Vermaseren, M. J. Mithras, The Secret God. London: Chatto & Windus, 1963.

Verner, A. Practical Psychometry (pamphlet). Blackpool, England, 1903.

Vett, Carl Christian. "Memoirs of Psychic Research." Tomorrow, 3, 4 (Summer 1955).

Victoria, Queen. Leaves from the Journal of Our Life in the Highlands. Smith, Elder, 1868.

Viereborne, A. Life of James Riley. Akron, Ohio: Werner, 1911.

Vignon, Paul. The Shroud of Christ. London: Constable, 1902. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1970.

Vinchon, Jean. L'Art et la Folie (Art and Insanity). Paris: Stock, Delamain et Boutelleau, 1950.

———. La Magie du dessin: Du griffonage automatique au dessin thérapeutique (The Magic Drawing: From Automatic Scribbling to Therapeutic Drawing). N.p., 1959.

———. Mesmer et son secret (Mesmer and His Secret). Toulouse Privat, 1936.

Vinchon, Jean, and Maurice Garçon. Le Diable. 1928. English ed. as The Devil. London, 1929. Reprint, New York: E. P. Dutton, 1930.

Vishnu-Devananda, Swami. The Complete Illustrated Book of Yoga. New York: Julian Press, 1960. Reprint, New York: Pocket Books, 1971.

———. Meditation and Mantras. New York: OM Lotus Publishing, 1978.

———. The Sivananda Upanishad. New York: OM Lotus Publishing, 1987.

Vitebsky, Piers. The Shaman. Boston: Little, Brown, 1995.

Vogel-Jorgensen, T. Rasputin: Prophet, Libertine, Plotter. London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1917. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1970.

Vogt, Evon Z., and Ray Hyman. Water Witching, U.S.A. 2nd ed. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1979.

Voldben, A. After Nostradamus. London: Neville Spearman, 1973. Reprint, New York: Citadel, 1974.

Volguine, Alexandre. Lunar Astrology. New York: ASI Publishers, 1974.

———. The Ruler of the Nativity. New York: ASI Publishers, 1973.

———. The Technique of Solar Returns. New York: ASI Publishers, 1976.

Volin, Michael, and Nancy Phelan. Yoga Breathing. N.p.: Information Inc., 1966.

Von Däniken, Erich. According to the Evidence: My Proof of Man's Extraterrestrial Origin. London: Souvenir, 1977.

———. Chariots of the Gods?: Unsolved Mysteries of the Past. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1960. Reprint, New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1970.

———. The Gods and Their Grand Design: the Eighth Wonder of the World. London: Souvenir, 1984.

———. The Gold of the Gods. London: Souvenir Press, 1973.

———. In Search of Ancient Gods; My Pictorial Evidence for the Impossible. London: Souvenir Press, 1974.

Von Franz, Marie-Louise. Alchemical Active Imagination. Boston: Shambhala Publications, Inc., 1997.

Von Görres, J. J. Die Christliche Mystik. 5 vols. Regensburg & Landshut, 1836–42.

Von Lama, Frederick. Thérèsa Neumann, une stigmatisée de nos jours. N.p., 1928.

Voohris, Harold V. B. Masonic Rosicrucian Societies. New York: Press of Henry Emmerson, 1958.

———. Masonic Organizations and Allied Orders and Degrees. N.p.: Press of Henry Emmerson, 1952.

Vyasdev, Brahmachari Swami. Science of Soul (Atma Vijnana). Gangotri, India: Yoga Niketan Trust, 1964.

Vyner, J. "The Mystery of Springheel Jack." Flying Saucer Review (May–June, 1961).

Wachmeister, Countess Constance. Reminiscences of H. P. Blavatsky and the Secret Doctrine. London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1893.

Wachmuth, Guenther. The Life and Work of Rudolf Steiner. New York: Whittier Books, 1955.

Waddell, L. Austine. Tibetan Buddhism: With Its Mystic Cults, Symbolism and Mythology, and in Its Relation to Indian Buddhism. London: W. H. Allen, 1895. Reprint, New York: Dover Publications, 1972.

Wade, Alsa Madison. At the Shrine of the Master. Philadelphia, Pa.: Dorrance, 1953.

Wagner, Henry O., comp. A Treasure Chest of Wisdom. Denver: H. O. Wagner, 1967.

Wagner, Melinda Boiler. Metaphysics in Midwestern America. Columbus: Ohio State University Press, 1983.

Waida, Manabu, "Problems of Central Asian and Siberian Shamanism," Numen 30 (1983): 215–239.

Waite, Arthur Edward. The Alchemical Writings of Edward Kelly. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1973.

———. Azoth, or the Star in the East. London, 1893. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1973.

———. The Book of Black Magic and of Pacts. London: George Redway, 1898. Reprinted as The Book of Ceremonial Magic. London: William Rider & Sons, 1911. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1961. Reprint, New York: Bell Publishing, 1969. Reprinted as The Book of Black Magic and Ceremonial Magic. New York: Causeway Books, 1973.

———. Book of Mystery & Vision. N.p., 1902. Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1999.

———. The Brotherhood of the Rosy Cross. London: Rider, 1924.

———. Devil Worship in France. London, 1896.

———. Fludd & Freemasonry. Edmonds, Wash.: Holmes Publishing Group, 1994.

———. Hermetic Papers of A. E. Waite. Edited by R. A. Gilbert. Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1987.

———. The Hidden Church of the Holy Grail. London: Rebman, 1909.

———. The Holy Grail: The Galahad Quest in the Arthurian Literature. London: J. M. Watkins, 1921. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1961.

———. The Holy Kabbalah. New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1960. New York: Citadel, 1976.

———. The Key to the Tarot. London: William Rider, 1910.

———. Lamps of Western Mysticism. London: Kegan Paul; New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1923. Reprint, Blauvelt, N.Y.: Multimedia, 1973.

———. The Life of Louis Claude de Saint-Martin, The Unknown Philosopher. London: Philip Welby, 1901.

———. Lives of the Alchemical Philosophers. London: George Redway, 1888. Reprinted as Alchemists through the Ages. Blauvelt, N.Y.: Rudolf Steiner Publications, 1970.

———. A New Encyclopedia of Freemasonry. 2 vols. London: William Rider; New York: David McKay, 1921. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1970. Reprint, New York: Weatherwane, 1971.

———. The Occult Science. London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., 1891. Reprint, Secaucus, N.J.: University Books, 1974.

———. "Papus: A Biographical Note." Occult Review 25 (January 1917): 34–36.

———. Pictorial Key to the Tarot. London: William Rider, 1911. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1959. Reprint, Blauvelt, N.Y.: Rudolf Steiner, 1971. Reprint, New York: Causeway Books, 1973.

———. Raymond Lully, Illuminated Doctor, Alchemist, and Christian Mystic. London, 1922. Reprint, London, 1939. Reprint, New York: David McKay, 1940.

———. The Real History of the Rosicrucians. London: George Redway, 1887. Reprint, Blauvelt, N.Y.: Steiner Books, 1977. Revised as The Brotherhood of the Rosy Cross. London: William Rider & Son, 1924. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1961.

———. Saint-Martin, The French Mystic, and the Story of Modern Martinism. London: William Rider & Son, 1922.

———. The Secret Tradition in Alchemy. Kegan Paul, London, Alfred A. Knopf, 1926. Reprint, New York: S. Weiser, 1969.

———. The Secret Tradition in Freemasonry. London, Rider, 1937. Reprint, New York: S. Weiser, 1969.

———. Shadows of Life and Thought. London: Selwyn and Blount, 1938.

———. Studies in Mysticism and Certain Aspects of the Secret Tradition. London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1906.

———. The Unknown Philosopher: Louis Claude de St. Martin. Blauvelt, N.Y.: Rudolf Steiner Publications, 1970.

Waite, Arthur Edward, ed. The Hermetical & Alchemical Writings of Paracelsus. 2 vols., London, 1894. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1967.

———. The Works of Thomas Vaughan, Mystic and Alchemist. London, 1919. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1968.

Wajda, Laszlo, "Zur Phaseologischen Stellung des Schamanismus," Ural-Altaische Jahrbücher (Gedenkband Julius V. Farkas) 31 (1959): 456–485.

Wakefield, Walter, and Austin P. Evans. Heresies of the High Middle Ages. New York, 1969.

Walker, Barbara. The Woman's Encyclopedia of Myths and Secrets. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1983.

Walker, D. P. Spiritual and Demonic Magic: From Ficino to Camperella. South Bend, Ind.: University of Notre Dame Press, 1975.

Walker, Daniel E. Witchcraft and Sorcery of the American Native Peoples. Moscow, Idaho: University of Idaho Press, 1989.

Walker, Daniel P. Decline of Hell: Seventeenth Century Discussions of Eternal Torment. London: Routledge, 1964.

Walker, George B. Beyond the Body: The Human Double and the Astral Planes. London/Boston: George Benjamin Walker, 1974.

Walker, Kenneth. Diagnosis of Man. Harmondsworth, UK: Penguin Books, 1942.

———. I Talk of Dreams. London: Jonathan Cape, 1946.

———. The Making of Man. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1963.

———. Meaning and Purpose. London: Jonathan Cape, 1944.

———. A Study of Gurdjieff's Teachings. London: Jonathan Cape, 1957.

———. The Unconscious Mind. London: Rider, 1961. Reprinted as The Extrasensory Mind. New York: Emerson, 1961.

———. Venture with Ideas. London: Jonathan Cape, 1951.

Walker, Roland. "Parapsychology and Dualism." Scientific Monthly (July 1954).

Walker, Sheila S. Ceremonial Spirit Possession in Africa and Afro-Americana. Leiden, Netherlands: E. J. Brill; New York: Humanities Press, 1972.

Wall, J. Charles. Devils. London, 1904. Reprint, Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1968.

Wallace, Alfred Russell. "Correspondence." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 16 (1898).

———. My Life: A Record of Events and Opinions. London: Chapman & Hall, 1902.

———. My Life: An Autobiography. 2 vols. London: Chapman & Hall, 1905; New York: Harper & Brothers, 1906.

———. On Miracles and Modern Spiritualism. London, 1875. Rev. ed. North Stratford, N.H.: Ayer Co. Publishing Inc., 1975.

Wallace, Austin D. Thistle Presents Prince Nikeritis. Eaton Rapids, Mich.: Transcendental Science Publications, 1905.

Wallis, E. W. and M. H. Wallis. Guide to Mediumship & Psychical Unfoldment. 3 vols. London, 1903. Life Science Institute, 1991.

Wallis, Roy. The Road to Total Freedom. New York: Columbia University Press, 1976.

Walraven, Boudewijn C. A. "Korean Shamanism," Numen 30 (1983): 240–264.

———. Songs of the Shaman: The Ritual Chants of the Korean Mudang. London: Kegan Paul International, 1994.

Walsh, John. The Mysterious Shroud. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1986.

———. The Shroud. London: W. H. Allen, 1964.

Walsh, Michael. The Apparition at Knock. Tuam: St Jarlath's College, 1959.

Walsh, Roger N. The Spirit of Shamanism. Los Angeles: Jeremy P. Tarcher, 1990.

Warman, Edward B. Clairvoyance & Clairaudience: Premonitions & Impressions. Santa Fe, N.Mex.: Sun Publishing Co., 1995.

Wasson, R. Gordon. Soma: Divine Mushroom of Immortality. New York: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1969.

———. "What Was the Soma of the Aryans?" In Flesh of the Gods: the Ritual Use of Hallucinogens. P. T. Furst, ed. (New York: Praeger, 1972): 201–213.

Wasson, R. Gordon, Albert Hofmann, and Carl A. P. Ruck. The Road to Eleusis: Unveiling the Secret of the Mysteries. New York: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1978.

Wasson, R. Gordon and Valentina P. Wasson. Mushrooms, Russia and History. New York: Pantheon Books, 1957.

Wasson, R. Gordon, Stella Kramrisch, Jonathan Ott, and Carl A. P. Ruck. Persephone's Quest: Entheogens and the Origins of Religion. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1988.

Walter Franklin Prince: A Tribute to His Memory. Boston: Boston Society for Psychical Research, 1935.

Walter, J. Donald [Kriyananda]. Cities of Light. Nevada City, Calif.: Crystal Clarity Publishers, 1987.

———. Cooperative Communities: How to Start Them and Why. Nevada City, Calif.: Ananda Publications, 1968.

———. Crises in Modern Thought. Nevada City, Calif.: Ananda Publications, 1972.

———. The Path. Nevada City, Calif.: Ananda Publications, 1977.

Walter, W. Grey. The Living Brain. New York: Norton, 1953.

———. The Neurophysiological Aspects of Hallucinations and Illusory Experience. London: Society for Psychical Research, 1963.

———. "The Neurophysiological Aspects of Hallucination and Illusory Experience." Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research.

Walther, Gerda. Zum anderen Ufer. Remagen: Otto Reichl, 1960.

Walton, Bruce, ed. Mount Shasta: Home of the Ancients. Mokelume Hill, Calif.: Health Research, 1985.

Walton, Bruce A. A Guide to the Inner Earth. W.Va.: New Age Books, 1983.

Wambach, Helen. Reliving Past Lives: The Evidence Under Hypnosis. New York: Harper & Row, 1978.

Wang, Chung Yu. "China's Unwanted Heritage." Tomorrow (autumn 1955).

Wang, Robert. An Introduction of the Golden Dawn Tarot. New York: Samuel Weiser, 1978.

Wang, Robert, and Chris Zalewski. Z-Five: Secret Teachings of the Golden Dawn. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1991.

Warcollier, René. "Fifty Years of Telepathy." Tomorrow (summer 1961).

———. Experimental Telepathy. Boston: Boston Society for Psychical Research, 1938. Reprint, London: George Allen & Unwin, 1939. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1975.

———. Mind to Mind. Creative Age Press, 1948. Reprint, New York: Macmillan, 1963.

———. Mind to Mind. New York: Collier Books, 1963.

Warcollier, René, and Edmond Duchatel. Les Miracles de la Volonté (Miracles of the Will). N.p., 1912.

Ward, Charles A. Oracles of Nostradamus. London, 1891. Reprint, N.Y.: Modern Library, 1942.

Ward, Gary L. Independent Bishops: An Independent Directory. Detroit: Apogee Books, 1990.

Warner, H. J. The Albigensian Heresy. 2 vols. London: SPCK, 1922–28.

Wassen, Ralph, ed. Yada Speaks. San Diego, Calif.: Kethra E'Da Foundation, 1985.

Wassilko-Serecki, The Countess. Der Spuk von Talpa. München, 1926.

———. "Observations on Eleonore Zügun." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (September/October 1925).

Wasson, R. Gordon. Mushrooms, Russia, and History. New York: Pantheon, 1957.

———. Persephone's Quest: Entheogens and the Origins of Religion. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1986.

———. Soma: Divine Mushroom of Immortality. The Hague: Mouton, 1968. Reprint, New York: Harcourt Brace, 1972.

Waterman, Adlai E. [Walter A. Carrithers] Obituary: The "Hodgson Report" on Madame Blavatsky, 1885–1960. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1963.

———. [Walter A. Carrithers]. Obituary: The "Hodgson Report" on Madame Blavatsky, 1895–1960; Re-examination Discredits the Major Charges Against H. P. Blavatsky. Adyar, Madras, India: Theosophical Publishing House, 1963.

Wates, L.G., "Indian Medicine Men," Overland Monthly 2nd Ser., 28 (1896): 171–182.

Water Witching U. S. A. Westerville, Ohio: National Ground Water Association, 1986.

Waters, W. G. Jerome Cardan. London, 1898.

Watkins, Alfred. The Old Straight Track. 1925. Reprint, London: Garnstone Press, 1970.

Watkins, Allen. Alfred Watkins of Hereford: His Life and Pioneer Work in the Three Worlds of Archaeology, Photography, and Flour Milling, 1855–1935. England: Privately printed, 1961.

———. The Ley Hunter's Manual: A Guide to Early Tracks. 1927. Reprint, Wellingborough, England: Aquarian Press, 1983.

———. The Old Straight Track. London: Methuen, 1925. Reprint, London: Sphere Books, 1974.

Watkins, Susan. Conversations with Seth. The Story of Jane Roberts's ESP Class. 2 vols. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1980–81.

Watson, Burton, trans. Chuang Tzu, Basic Writings. New York: Columbia University Press, 1964.

Watson, Lyall. Gifts of Unknown Things. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1976.

———. Lifetide: The Biology of The Unconscious. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1979.

———. The Romeo Error: A Matter of Life and Death. Garden City, N.Y.: Anchor Press, 1975.

———. Supernature. Garden City, N.Y.: Anchor Press, 1973.

Watson, Peter. Twins: An Investigation Into the Strange Coincidences in the Lives of Separated Twins. London: Hutchinson, 1981.

Watson, Simone. The Cult of Our Lady of Guadalupe: A Historical Study. Collegeville, Minn.: Liturgical Press, 1964.

Watt, Caroline A. "What Makes a Good Psi Target? Three Studies of Forced-Choice ESP Varying Target Emotionality and Complexity." Journal of Parapsychology 60, no. 1 (March 1996): 25–42.

Watt, Caroline A. and Robert L. Morris. "The Relationships among Performance on a Prototype Indicator of Perceptual Defence/Vigilance, Personality, and Extrasensory Perception," Personality & Individual Differences 19, no. 5 (November 1995): 635–648.

Watt, William W. Shilling Shockers of the Gothic School: A Study of Chapbook Gothic Romances. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1932.

Watts, Alan. The Book on the Taboo Against Knowing Who You Are. New York: Vintage Books, 1966.

———. The Early Writings of Alan Watts. Edited by John Snelling. Berkeley, Calif.: Celestial Arts, 1987.

———. The Essential Alan Watts. Berkeley, Calif.: Celestial Arts, 1977.

———. In My Own Way: An Autobiography, 1915–1945. New York: Pantheon Books, 1972.

———. Psychotherapy, East and West. New York: Ballantine Books, 1961.

———. The Spirit of Zen. New York: Grove Press, 1958.

———. The Way of Zen. New York: Pantheon Books, 1968.

Wavell, Stewart, Audrey Butt, and Nina Epton. Trances. London: Allen & Unwin, 1966.

The Way of the Rosecross in Our Times. Haarlem, The Netherlands: Rozekruis-Pers, 1978.

Wayland, Bruce, and Shirley Wayland. Steps to Dowsing Power. Howell, Mich.: Life Force Press, 1976.

Weatherhead, Leslie. After Death. London: J. Clarke, 1923.

———. Psychology, Religion, and Healing. Rev. ed. London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1952.

———. The Resurrection of Christ in the Light of Modern Science and Psychical Research. London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1959.

Weaver, Herbert. Divining, the Primary Sense: Unfamiliar Radiation in Nature, Art, and Science. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1978.

Webb, James. The Flight from Reason. London: Macdonald, 1971. Reprinted as The Occult Underground. LaSalle, Ill.: Open Court, 1974.

———. The Harmonious Circle: The Lives and Work of G. I. Gurdjieff, P. D. Ouspensky, and Their Followers. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1980.

———. The Occult Establishment. LaSalle, Ill.: Open Court Publishing, 1976.

Webberly, Rob, ed. Astride the Two Cultures: Arthur Koestler at 70. London: Hutchingson, 1975.

Webster, Charles. From Paracelsus to Newton: Magic and the Making of Modern Science. Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge University Press, 1982.

Webster, Hutton. Taboo: A Sociological Study. Palo Alto, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1942. Reprint, London: Octagon, 1981.

Wedgwood, James Ingall. The Beginning of the Liberal Catholic Church. Lakewood, N.J.: Ubique, 1967.

Wedgwood, J. I. Varieties of Psychism. N.p., 1914. Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

Weeks, N. The Medical Discoveries of Edward Bach. London: C. W. Daniel, 1940.

Weems, Lela Louise. "Religiosity and Religious Attitudes as They Relate to Mysticism and Sexual Permissiveness," Dissertation Abstracts International: Section B: The Sciences & Engineering 59, no. 8-B (February 1999): 4524.

Weiant, C. W. "Parapsychology and Anthropology." Manas 13 (1960).

Weigle, Marta. Brothers of Light, Brothers of Blood: The Penitentes of the Southwest. Albuquerque: University of New Mexico Press, 1976.

Weinberger, Julius. "On Apparatus Communication with Discarnate Persons." International Journal of Parapsychology 3, no. 1 (winter 1961).

———. "A Physicist Looks at Spiritual Healing." Laymen's Movement Review 1, no. 5 (1958); 2, no. 1 (1959).

———. "A Physicist Looks at Survival." Tomorrow (autumn 1956).

———. "Some Findings of Experimental Psychical Research." Proceedings of the Seminar on Decline of Material (November 1956).

Weiner, Sita. Swami Satchidananda. New York: Bantam Books, 1972.

Weingarten, Henry. A Modern Introduction to Astrology. New York: ASI Publishers, 1974.

———. Principles of Synastry. New York: ASI Publishers, 1978.

———. The Study of Astrology. 3 vols. New York: ASI Publishers, 1977.

Weingarten, Henry, comp. The NASO International Astrological Directory. New York: National Astrological Society, 1977–78. Rev. ed. 1980–81.

Weinhold, Arnold. Seven Lectures on Somnambulism. Edinburgh, Scotland, 1845.

Weisberg, Irving. "The Converging Influences of Sigmund Freud, Melanie Klein and the Bhagavad-Gita: W. R. Bion," International Journal of Communicative Psychoanalysis & Psychotherapy 9, no. 1 (1994): 19–23.

Weisbrot, Robert. Father Divine and the Struggle for Racial Equality. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 1983.

Weiss, Jane. Reflections by Anoah. Austin, Tex.: Planetary Light Association, 1986.

Wellard, James. Lost Worlds of Africa. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1967.

Wells, Samuel R. How to Read Character: A New Illustrated Handbook of Phrenology and Physiognomy. New York: Samuel R. Wells, 1871. Reprint, Rutland, Conn.: C. E. Tuttle, 1971.

Weltmer, S. A. Telepathy & Thought Transference (1902). Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1998.

Wendell, Leilah. The Book of Azrael. New York: Westgate Press, 1988.

Wenzl, Aloys. Philosophische Grenzfragen der Naturwissenchaften (Philosophical Border Problems of the Natural Sciences). N.p., 1956.

Wenzl, Aloys. Unsterblichkeit (Immorality). Bern: A. Francke, 1951.

Weor, Samuel Aun Weor. Manual of Practical Magic. Los Angeles: Gnostic Association, 1988.

———. Manual of Revolutionary Psychology. Los Angeles: Gnostic Association, 1987.

———. The Perfect Matrimony. New York: Adonai Editorial, 1980.

Wereide, Thorstein. Byggesamfund (Building Societies). N.p., 1956.

———. "Medium or Murderess." Tomorrow (winter 1957).

———. Menneskets Metafysikk (The Metaphysics of Man). N.p., 1953.

———. "Norway's Human Doubles." Tomorrow 3, no. 2 (winter 1955).

Werner, Elizabeth, ed. Directory of Psychic Sciences Periodicals. Burbank, Calif.: Inner-Space Interpreters Services, 1973.

Wernli, Hans J. Biorhythm: A Scientific Exploration into the Life Cycles of the Individual. New York: Crown, 1961.

Weschcke, Carl Llewellyn. The Science of Feeling Fine. St. Paul, Minn.: Chester-Kent, 1954.

Weschcke, Carl Llewellyn, and Stan Baker. The Truth About Astrology. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1989.

West, Donald J. Eleven Lourdes Miracles. London: Duckworth, 1957; New York: Helix Press, 1957.

———. "The Identity of 'Jack the Ripper.' " Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 35 (1949).

———. Psychical Research Today. London: Duckworth, 1956.

———. "Psychokinetic Experiments with a Single Subject." Parapsychology Newsletter (November–December 1957).

West, Donald J., and G. W. Fisk. "ESP and Mood: Report of a 'Mass' Experiment with Clock Cards." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 38 (1956).

West, Sylvester A. TK and the Great Work in America. Chicago: The Author, 1918.

Westbrook, A. and O. Ratti. Aikido and the Dynamic Sphere. Rutland, Vt.: Charles Tuttle, 1970.

Westcott, G. H. Kabir and the Kabir Panth. Calcutta: Varanasi Bhartiya Publishing House, 1974.

Westcott, W. W. Numbers: Their Occult Power and Mystic Virtue. London: Theosophical Publishing House, 1890. Reprint, 1974. Reprint, London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1911. Reprint, Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1993. 2nd ed., Reprint, Las Vegas, Nev.: Health Research, 1996.

Westcott, William W. An Introduction to the Study of the Kabalah. New York: Allied Publications, n.d.

Westcott, Wynn. Aesch Mezareph, or Purifying Fire. N.p., 1894.

———. The Chaldean Oracles of Zoroaster. London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1895.

———. Egyptian Magic. London: Theosophical Publishing Society, 1896.

———. The Pymander of Hermes. N.p., 1894.

———. Rosicrucians, Their History and Aims. N.p., 1894.

———. The Science of Alchymy. N.p., 1893.

———. Sepher Yetzirah, the Book of Formation. London, Theosophical Publishing Society, 1893. Rev. ed. Gillette, N.J.: Heptangle Books, 1987.

———. Somnium Scipionis. N.p., 1894.

Westen, Robin. Channelers: A New Age Directory. New York: Perigee Books (Putnam), 1988.

Westin, Gunnar. The Free Church through the Ages. Nashville, Tenn.: Broadman, 1958.

Weston, Jessie L. From Ritual to Romance. Cambridge, Mass.: Cambridge University Press, 1920. Reprint, Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday Anchor, 1957.

———. The Quest of the Holy Grail. London: G. Bell & Sons, 1913; London: Frank Cass, London, 1964.

Westwood, Horace. Apostle of Darkness and Prophet of Light. N.p., 1939.

———. This Do and Live. N.p., 1938.

Wethered, V. D. A Radiesthetic Approach to Health and Homeopathy, or Health and the Pendulum. London: British Society of Dowsers, 1950.

Weyer, Johannes. Witches, Devils and Doctors in the Renaissance: Johann Weyer, De Praestigiis. Edited by George Mora. Binghamton, N.Y.: Medieval & Renaissance Texts & Studies, 1991.

What Is Scientology? Los Angeles: Bridge Publications, 1992.

Wheatley, J. M. O. "Implications for Philosophy." In Philosophical Dimensions of Parapsychology. Edited by H. L. Edge. Springfield, Ill.: Charles Thomas, 1976.

Wheeler, Francis J. The Bach Remedies Repertory. London: C. W. Daniel, 1952.

Wheeler, L. Richmond. Vitalism: Its History and Validity. London: Witherby, 1939.

Whitaker, Thomas D. A History of The Original Parish of Whalley. London, 1818.

White Eagle. The Path of the Soul: The Great Initiations of Every Man. Liss, UK: White Eagle Publishing Trust, 1959.

White, Carolyn. A History of Irish Fairies. Cork, Ireland: Mercier Press, 1976.

White, Elijah. Exorcism as a Christian Ministry. New York: Morehouse-Barlow, 1975.

White, John. Everything You Want to Know about TM, Including How to Do It. New York: Pocket Books, 1976.

White, John, ed. The Highest State of Consciousness. Garden City, N.Y.: Anchor/ Doubleday, 1972.

White, K. D. and M. R. Grimmer. "Psychics and ESP: Across the Enchanted Boundary?" Australian Psychologist 25, no. 2 (July 1990): 210–214.

White, Rhea. "Comparison of Old and New Methods of Response to Targets in ESP Experiments." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 58 (1964): 21–56.

———. "Depth Perspectives and Experimental Parapsychology." International Journal of Parapsychology 2, no. 2 (1960).

———. "ESP Score Level in Relation to Students' Attitudes Toward Teacher-Agents Acting Simultaneously." Journal of Parapsychology 22, no. 1 (1958).

———. "The Relationship Between Changes in Student Attitude and ESP Scoring."Journal of Parapsychology 22, no. 3 1958.

———. "A Survey of Work on ESP and Teacher-Pupil Attitudes." Journal of Parapsychology 22, no. 4 (1958).

———. "A Select Bibliography of Books on Parapsychology, 1985–1988." In Advances in Parapsychological Research. Vol. 6. Jefferson, N.C.: Mcfarland & Co. Inc., 1990.

———. "Suggestions for Exploring and Recording the Inscape of Psi Researchers," European Journal of Parapsychology 13 (1997): 96–109.

White, Rhea A., and Laura A. Dale. Parapsychology: Sources of Information. Metheun, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1973.

White, Ruth, and Mary Swainson. Gildas Communicates; The Story and the Scripts. London: Spearman, 1971.

White, Stewart Edward. Across the Unknown. N.p., n.d.

———. Anchors to Windward. N.p., 1943.

———. The Betty Book. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1930. Reprint, New York: E. P. Dutton, 1937. Reprint, New York: E. P. Dutton, 1939.

———. The Road I Know. N.p., 1942.

———. The Stars Are Still There. N.p., 1946.

———. The Unobstructed Universe. N.p., 1940.

———. With Folded Wings. N.p., 1947.

White, Terence H. The Once and Future King. London: Collins, 1958.

Whiteman, J. H. M. "Dream and Dreamlike States seen as kinds of Possession: Implications for Mediumship, ESP and Survival," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 62, no. 852 (July 1998): 407–416.

———. The Mystical Life: An Outline of Its Nature and Teachings from the Evidence of Direct Experience. London: Faber & Faber, 1961.

———. "The Mystical Way, and Habitualizing of Mystical States." In Handbook of States of Consciousness. Edited by B. Wolman and Montague Ullman. New York: Van Nostrand Reinhold, 1986.

———. "Parapsychology and Physics." In Handbook of Parapsychology. Edited by B. Wolman. New York: Van Nostrand Reinhold, 1977.

———. "The Process of Separation and Return in Experiences Fully 'Out of the Body.' " Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 50 (1956).

Whiteman, Michael. Philosophy of Space and Time and the Inner Constitution of Nature: A Phenomenological Study. London: Allen & Unwin; New York: Humanities Pub., 1967.

Whiting, Beatrice Blyth, "Paiute Sorcery," Viking Fund Publications in Anthropology no. 15. New York: Viking Fund, 1950.

Whiting, Lilian. "The Spiritualistic Camp-Meetings in the United States." Annals of Psychical Science (January 1907).

Whitman, John. The Psychic Power of Plants. New York: New American Library, 1974. Reprint, London: W. H. Allen, 1974.

Whitten, Ivah Bergh. What Color Means to You. Ashington, England: C. W. Daniel, 1932.

Whittlesey, John R. B. "Further Comments on Causality." Journal of Parapsychology 17 (September 1953).

———. "Some Comments Apropos of Pooling." Journal of Parapsychology 23 (June 1959).

———. "Some Curious ESP Results in Terms of Variance." Journal of Parapsychology 24 (September 1960).

Whymant, Neville. Psychic Adventures in New York. London: Morley & Mitchell, 1931.

Wickland, Carl. Thirty Years Among the Dead. Los Angeles, 1924.

Wickwar, J. W. The Ghost World. London, n.d.

Wiedemann, A. Popular Literature of Ancient Egypt. London: David Nutt, 1902.

Wiertz, Antoine Joseph. Antoine Wiertz, 1806–1865. Paris: J. Damase, 1974.

Wiesel, Elie. The Golem: The Story of a Legend. New York: Summit Books, 1983.

Wiesinger, Alois. "Wie Stellt Sich der Katholik zu den okkulten Erscheinungen?" (The Attitude of the Catholic Toward Occult Phenomena). Neue Wissenschaft (1953).

Wilber, Ken. Eye to Eye: The Quest for the New Paradigm. Garden City, N.Y.: Anchor/ Doubleday, 1983.

———. No Boundary: Eastern and Western Approaches to Personal Growth. Los Angeles: Center Publications, 1979.

———. A Sociable God: A Brief Introduction to a Transcendental Sociology. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1982.

———. Up From Eden: A Transpersonal View of Human Evolution. Garden City, New York: Anchor Press/Doubleday, 1981.

Wilber, Ken, Jack Engler, and Daniel P. Brown. Transformation of Consciousness: Conventional and Contemplative Perspectives on Development. Boston: New Science Library, 1986.

Wilbert, Johannes. Tobacco and Shamanism in South America. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1987.

Wilcock, John. A Guide to Occult Britain: The Quest for Magic in Pagan Britain. London: Sidgwick & Jackson, 1976.

Wilczewski, Janusz, Zbigniew Szczerba, and Barbara Szbicka, eds. Materialy z Konferencji Parapsychologow '94. Warsaw: Polskie Towarzystwo Psychotroniczne, 1994.

Wilder, Franklin. Good News for Martha Wesley. Hicksville, N.Y.: Exposition Press, 1976.

Wilgus, Neal. The Illuminoids. New York: New American Library, 1989.

Wilhelm, Hans. Your Chinese Horoscope. New York: Avon, 1980.

Wilhelm, James J., and Laila Zamuelis Gross, eds. The Romance of Arthur. New York: Garland Publishing, 1984.

Wilhelm, Richard, and C. G. Jung. The Secret of the Golden Flower: A Chinese Book of Life. Rev. ed. New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1962. Reprint, New York: Causeway Books, 1975.

Wilke, Joanne. William Blake's Epic: Imagination Unbound. London: Croom Helm, 1986.

Wilken, Ernst. Die Prosaische Edda. Paderhorn, Germany, 1878.

Wilkins, Eithne. The Rose-Garden Game. London: Victor Gallancz, 1969.

Wilkins, Sir Hubert, and Harold M. Sherman. Thoughts through Space: A Remarkable Adventure in the Realm of the Mind. Hollywood, Calif.: House-Warren, 1951. Reprint, London: Frederick Muller, 1971. Reprint, Greenwich, Conn.: Fawcett, 1973.

Wilks, Washington. Edward Irving: An Ecclesiastical and Literary Biography. London, 1854.

Willey, Raymond C. Modern Dowsing. Cottonwood, Ariz.: Esoteric Publications, 1976.

Williams, George H. The Radical Reformation. Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1962.

Williams, Gertrude Marvin. Priestess of the Occult: Madame Blavatsky. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1946.

Williams, Henry L. Life of John Brown. . . . for 30 Years Personal Attendant of . . . The Queen. London: E. Smith, 1883.

Williams, Joseph J. Voodoos and Obeahs; Phases of West Indian Witchcraft. New York: Dial Press, 1933.

Williams, L. F. R., ed. Sufi Studies: East and West. London: Octagon Press, 1974.

Williams, Mary. Glastonbury: A Study in Patterns. Hammersmith, England: Research into Lost Knowledge Organization, 1969.

Williams, Richard N., Carl B. Taylor, and Wayne J. Hintze. "The Influence of Religious Orientation on Belief in Science, Religion, and the Paranormal," Journal of Psychology & Theology 17, no. 4 (Winter 1989): 352–359.

Williams, Thomas A. Eliphas Levi: Master of Occultism. University, Ala.: University of Alabama Press, 1975.

Williams, Thomas Rhys. The Dusun, A North Borneo Society: Case Studies in Cultural Anthropology New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1965.

Williams, William F. Encyclopedia of Pseudoscience. New York: Facts on File, 1999.

Williamson, Roger Andrew. "Houston Stewart Chamberlain: A Study of the Man and His Ideas, 1855–1927." Ph.D diss., University of California-Santa Barbara, 1973.

Williamson, Tom, and Liz Bellamy. Ley Lines in Question. Kingwood, England: World's Work, 1983.

Willis, Tony. The Runic Workbook. New York: Sterling Publishers, 1986.

Wilmot, T. S. Twenty Photographs of the Risen Dead. Birmingham, England: Midland Educational, 1894.

Wilson, Clifford. Crash Go the Chariots: An Alternative to "Chariots of the God." New York: Lancer Books, 1972.

Wilson, Colin. Beyond the Outsider. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin, 1965.

———. Enigmas and Mysteries. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1976.

———. The Essential Colin Wilson. London: Harrap, 1985.

———. The Geller Phenomena. London: Aldus Books, 1976.

———. Guidance from Beyond. N.p., 1923.

———. "James Webb and the Occult." Light (summer 1982).

———. More Guidance from Beyond. N.p., 1925.

———. Mysteries: An Investigation into the Occult, the Paranormal, and the Supernatural. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1978.

———. Mysterious Powers. Reprinted in the United States as They Had Strange Powers. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1975.

———. The Occult: A History. London: Hodder & Stoughton; New York: Random House, 1971. Reprint, New York: Vintage Books, 1973. Reprint, London: Mayflower, 1973.

———. Poltergeist: A Study in Destructive Haunting. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1981. New York: Putnam Publishing Group, 1982.

———. Rasputin and the Fall of the Romanovs. London: Arthur Barker, 1964.

———. Strange Powers. New York: Random House, 1973.

———. The Unexplained. Lake Oswego, Ore.: Lost Pleiade Press, 1975.

Wilson, Colin, ed. Men of Mystery. London: W. H. Allen, 1977.

Wilson, Colin, and John Grant, eds. Directory of Possibilities. Exeter, England: Webb & Bower, 1981.

Wilson, Ian. The After Death Experience. London: Sidgwick & Jackson, 1987.

———. The Bleeding Mind. London: Weidenfeld & Nicolson, 1988.

———. Mind out of Time? Reincarnation Claims Investigated. London: Gollancz, 1981. Revised as Reincarnation? Baltimore, Md.: Penguin Books, 1982.

———. The Turin Shroud. London: Gollancz, 1978.

Wilson, Joyce. The Complete Book of Palmistry. New York: Bantam Books, 1971.

Wilson, Mona. The Life of William Blake. London: Oxford University Press, 1971.

Wilson, Richard. "A Random Number Selector." Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 48 (1946–49).

Wilson, Robert Anton. Cosmic Trigger: Final Secret of the Illuminati. Berkeley, Calif.: And/Or Press, 1977.

———. The Illuminati Papers. Berkeley, Calif.: And/Or Press, 1980.

———. Illuminatus! 3 vols. New York: Dell, 1975.

———. Masks of the Illuminati. New York: Timescape, 1981.

———. The New Inquisition: Irrational Rationalism and the Citadel of Science. Las Vegas, Nev.: Falcon Press, 1986.

Wilson, Thomas. Blue-Beard: A Contribution to History & Folk-Lore. London, 1899. Reprint, New York: B. Blom, 1971. Reprint, New York: Ayer Publishing Co. Inc., 1981.

Wincup, Gregory. Rediscovering the I Ching. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1986.

Winer, Richard. From the Devil's Triangle to the Devil's Jaw. New York: Bantam Books, 1977.

———. The Devil's Triangle. New York: Bantam Books, 1974.

———. The Devil's Triangle 2. New York: Bantam Books, 1975.

Wingo, E. Ortha. The Story of the Huna Work. Cape Girardeau, Mo.: Huna Research, 1981.

Winkelman, Michael. "A Cross-Cultural Study of Shamanistic Healers," Journal of Psychoactive Drugs 21, no. 1 (January–March 1989): 17–24.

Winkelman, Michael James, "Shamans, Priests and Witches: A Cross-Cultural Study of Magico-Religious Practitioners." Arizona State University Anthropological Research Papers no. 44. Tempe: Anthropology Department, Arizona State University, 1993.

Winkler, Gershon. The Golem of Prague. New York: Judaica Press, 1980.

Winsbro, Bonnie C. "Supernatural Forces: Belief, Difference, and Power in Contemporary Works by Ethnic Women," Dissertation Abstracts International 53, no. 8-A (February 1993): 2819.

Winstedt, R. The Malays: A Cultural History. London: Routledge, 1950.

Winzeler, Robert L., ed. "The Seen and the Unseen: Shamanism, Mediumship and Possession in Borneo," Borneo Research Council Monograph Series vol. 2. Williamsburg, Va.: Borneo Research Council, Inc., 1993.

Wirth, Oswald. Stanislas de Guaita, souvenirs de son secrétare. Paris: Editions du Symbolisme, 1935.

The Wisdom of Silver Birch. London: Psychic Book Club, 1944.

The Wisdom of White Eagle. Liss, Hampshire, England: White Eagle Publishing Trust, 1967.

Wisdom Workshop Lessons. 12 vols. Los Angeles: Fellowship of Universal Guidance, n.d.

Wiseman, Richard, John Beloff, and Robert L. Morris. "Testing the ESP Claims of SORRAT," Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 58, no. 829 (October 1992): 363–377.

Witchell, Nicholas. The Loch Ness Story. London, 1974. Rev. ed. London: Penguin Books, 1975.

Witherspoon, Thomas E. Myrtle Fillmore, Mother of Unity. Unity Village, Mo.: Unity Books, 1977.

Witte, Alfred. Regelwerk für Planetbilder. 3d ed. Hamburg: Witte Verlag, 1935. Translated by Richard Svehla as Rules for Planetary Pictures. Hamburg: Witte Verlag, 1939.

Witte, Alfred, and Herman Lefeldt. Rules for Planetary Pictures. Translated by Kurt Knupfer. Hamburg: L. Rudolph (Witte Verlag), 1974.

Witte, Karl Heinz. "Das 'Unbewusste': Die 'mystische' Seite des Rationalen?" (The 'unconscious': The Mystic Aspect of Rationality?), Zeitschrift fuer Individualpsychologie 23, no. 4 (1998): 356–374.

Wittemans, Frank. The Golden Rosicrucians. Edmonds, Wash.: Holmes Publishing Group, 1994.

Wittkower, E. D., "Trance and Possession States," International Journal of Social Psychiatry 16, no. 2 (1970): 153–160.

Wohlberg, J., "Haoma-Soma in the World of Ancient Greece," Journal of Psychoactive Drugs 22, no. 3 (1990): 333–342.

Wolf, Laibl. Practical Kabbala. New York: Crown Publishing Group, Inc., 1999.

Wolf, Leonard. The Annotated Dracula. New York: Clarkson N. Potter, 1975.

———. Bluebeard: The Life & Crimes of Gilles de Rais. New York: Crown, 1980.

Wolf-Gumpold, Kaethe. William Blake: Painter, Poet, Visionary: An Attempt at and Introduction to his Life and Work. London: Rudolf Steiner Press, 1969.

Wolfe, Burton H. The Devil's Avenger. New York: Avon Books, 1974.

Wolfe, N. B. Startling Facts in Modern Spiritualism. Cincinnati, Ohio: The Author, 1874. Reprint, Chicago: Religio-Philosophical Publishing House, 1875.

Wolff, Charlotte. The Human Hand. London: Methuen, 1942.

Wollgast, Siegfried. Der deutsche Pantheismus im 16. Jahrhundert. Berlin: Deutscher Verlag der Wissenschaften, 1972.

Wolman, Benjamin B., ed. Handbook of Parapsychology. New York: Van Nostrand Reinhold, 1977. Reprint, Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1986.

The Wonderful History of Virgilius The Sorcerer of Rome. London: Daure Nutt, 1893.

Wood, Ernest. Yoga. London, 1959. Reprint, Baltimore, Md.: Penguin, 1962.

Wood, F. H. After Thirty Centuries. London: Rider, 1935.

———. This Egyptian Miracle. London: Rider, 1940. Rev. ed. London: J. M. Watkins, 1955.

Wood, Thomas E. The Mandukya Upanishad and the Agama Shastra: An Investigation into the Meaning of the Vedanta. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press, 1990.

Woodhouse, Barbara. Talking to Animals. Croxley Green, England: Campions, 1970.

Woodhull, Victoria. Garden of Eden: Allegorical Meaning Revealed. London: The Author, 1889.

———. Humanitarian Government. London: The author, 1892.

———. Stirpiculture; or, the Scientific Propagation of the Human Race. London: The Author, 1888.

Woodhull, Victoria, and Tennessee Claflin. The Human Body the Temple of God. London, 1890.

Woodroffe, Sir John. The Garland of Letters (Varnamala): Studies in the Mantra-Shastra. Madras, India: Ganesh, 1951.

———. Sakti and Sakta. Madras, India: Ganesh, 1918.

Woodruff, J. L. "Some Basic Problems for Parapsychological Research." Journal of Parapsychology 12 (1948).

Woodruff, J. L., and J. G. Pratt. "Size of Stimulus Symbols in Extrasensory Perception." Journal of Parapsychology 3 (1939).

Woodruff, J. L., and Laura A. Dale. "ESP Function and the Psychogalvanic Response." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 46 (1952).

———. "The Psychokinetic Effect: Further ASPR Experiments." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 41 (1947).

———. "Subject and Experimenter Attitudes in Relation to ESP Scoring." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 44 (1950).

Woods, William H. History of the Devil. London, 1973, New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1974.

Woodward, Ian. The Werewolf Delusion. London & New York: Paddington Press, 1979.

Woodward, Mary Ann. Edgar Cayce's Story of Karma. New York: Coward-McCann, 1971.

Woofenden, William Ross. Swedenborg Researcher's Manual. Bryn Athyn, Pa.: Swedenborg Scientific Association, 1988.

Worcester, Elwood. Allies of Religion. Boston: Marshall Jones, 1929.

———. The Christian Religion as a Healing Power. New York: Moffat, Yard, 1909.

———. Life's Adventure. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1932.

Worcester, Elwood, and Samuel McComb. Body, Mind and Spirit. Boston: Marshall Jones, 1931.

Worcester, Elwood, Samuel McComb, and Isador Ciriat. Religion and Medicine. New York: Moffat, Yard, 1908.

Worcester, William L. Lessons in Correspondence. 1892. Reprinted as The Language of Parable: A Key to the Bible. New York: Swedenborg Foundation, 1984.

Worrall, Ambrose A. The Gift of Healing. Baltimore, Md.: The Author, 1961.

———. The Philosophy and Methodology of Healing. Baltimore, Md.: The Author, 1961.

Worrall, Ambrose A. and Olga Worrall. Basic Principles of Spiritual Healing. Evanston, Ill.: Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship, 1969.

———. Explore Your Psychic World. New York: Harper & Row, 1970.

———. The Gift of Healing: A Personal Story of Spiritual Therapy. New York: Harper & Row, 1965.

Worrall, Olga. How to Start a Healing Service. Chicago: Inner Creations, 1947.

Worsley, Peter. The Trumpet Shall Sound. New York: Schocken Books, 1962.

Worth, Patience." Hope Trueblood. New York: Henry Holt, 1918.

———. Light from Beyond: Poems of Patience Worth. Compiled by Herman Behr. New York: Patience Worth Publishing, 1923.

Worth, Patience." The Pot upon the Wheel. New York: Patience Worth Publishing, 1916. Reprint, St. Louis, Mo.: Dorset Press, 1921.

———." The Sorry Tale. New York: Henry Holt, 1917.

Wraxall, Lascelles. Remarkable Adventurers and Unrevealed Mysteries. 2 vols. London, 1863.

Wright, Dudley. The Epworth Phenomena. London: William Rider & Son, 1917.

———. Vampires & Vampirism. London, 1914. Reprinted as The Book of Vampires. New York: Causeway, 1973.

Wright, Machaelle S. Behaving As If the God in All Life Mattered. N.p., 1983.

———. The Perelandra Garden Workbook. N.p., 1987.

Wright, Peggy A. "The Nature of the Shamanic State of Consciousness: A Review," Journal of Psychoactive Drugs 21, no. 1 (January-March 1989): 25–33.

Wright, Thomas. Narratives of Sorcery and Magic. 2 vols. London: R. Bentley, 1851. Reprinted as Narratives of Sorcery and Magic from the Most Authentic Sources. Detroit: Omnigraphics, Inc., 2000.

Wright, Thomas, ed. A Contemporary Narrative of the Proceedings Against Dame Alice Kyteler. 1843. Reprint, New York: AMS Press, 1968.

Wuenschel, Edward. Self-Portrait of Christ. New York: Esopus, 1954.

Wyckoff, James. Franz Anton Mesmer. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1975.

Wydenbruck, Nora. Doctor Mesmer. London: John Westhouse, 1947.

Wyman, Walker D. Witching for Water, Oil, Pipes, and Precious Minerals. River Falls: University of Wisconsin Press, 1977.

Wyndham, Horace. Mr. Sludge: The Medium. London: G. Bles, 1937.

Wynn [Sidney K. Bennett]. Astrology, Science of Prediction. Los Angeles: Wynn Publishing, 1945.

———Astrology, Your Path to Success. Philadelphia: David McKay, 1938.

———. The Key Cycle. 1931. Reprint, Tempe, Ariz.: American Federation of Astrologers, 1970.

Wynne, Barry. Behind the Mask of Tutankhamen. New York: Taplinger, 1973.

Wynne-Tyson, Esmé. Mithras, the Fellow in the Cap. London: Rider, 1968.

X, Miss [Ada Goodrich-Freer]. Essays in Psychical Research. London: George Redway, 1899.

X, Miss [Ada Goodrich-Freer], and John, Marquess of Bute. The Alleged Haunting of B. House. London, 1899. Rev. ed. 1900.

Xavier, Francisco Candido. Christian Agenda. London: Regency Press, 1970.

———. The World of the Spirit. New York: Philosophical Library, n.d.

"Xenes." Joanna Southcott and Her Box. London: W. Foulsham, 1927.

Yang, C. K. Religion in Chinese Society. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1961.

Yarbro, Chelsea Quinn. Messages from Michael. Chicago: Playboy Press, 1979.

———. Michael's People. New York: Berkeley Books, 1988.

———. More Messages from Michael. New York: Berkeley Books, 1986.

———. The Vampire Stories of Chelsea Quinn Yarbro. White Rock, B.C.: Transylvania Press, 1994.

Yarker, John. The Arcane Schools: A Review of Their Origin and Antiquity; With a General History of Freemasonry. Belfast: William Tait, 1909.

Yaryan, Homer T. "An Investigator's Experience of Materialization Phenomena." Psychic Science (October 1926).

Yates, Frances A. The Rosicrucian Enlightenment. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1972.

Yatiswarananda, Swami. Universal Prayers. 6th ed. Hollywood, Calif.: Vedanta Press, 1963.

Yearbook of the American Academy of Astrologians. 2 vols. New York: Hermetic Publishing, 1917, 1918.

Yearsley, Macleod. The Folklore of Fairy-Tale. London: Watts, 1924. Reprint, Detroit: Singing Tree Press, 1968.

Yeats, W. B., ed. Fairy and Folk Tales of the Irish Peasantry. London: Walter Scott Publishing, 1888. Reprint, New York: Grosset & Dunlap, 1957.

Yeats, William Butler. Autobiography. New York: Macmillan, 1938.

———. Is the R. R. et A. C. to Remain a Magical Order? Privately printed, 1901.

———. Memoirs. New York: Macmillan, 1973.

———. Mythologies. New York: Macmillan, 1959.

Yeats-Brown, F. Bengal Lancer. London: V. Gollancz Ltd., 1930. Reprinted as The Life of a Bengal Lancer. New York: Viking Press: 1931.

Yellowtail, Thomas. Yellowtail: Crow Medicine Man and Sun Dance Chief. An Autobiography, as told to Michael Oren Fitzgerald. Norman: University of Oklahoma Press, 1991.

Yogananda, Swami Paramahansa. Autobiography of a Yogi. New York: Philosophical Library, 1946. Reprint, Los Angeles: Self-Realization Fellowship, 1971.

———. Descriptive Outlines of Yogoda. Los Angeles: Yogoda Satsang Society, 1928.

———. The Divine Romance. Los Angeles: Self-Realization Fellowship, 1986.

———. Metaphysical Meditation. Los Angeles: Self-Realization Fellowship, 1960.

———. The Science of Religion. Los Angeles: Yogoda Sat-Sanga Society of America, 1928.

———. Whispers of Eternity. Los Angeles: Self-Realization Publishing House, 1944.

Yogashakti Saraswati, Ma. Prayers and Poems from Mother's Heart. Melbourne, Fla.: Yogashakti Mission, 1976.

———. Shree Shree Narayana Vrata Katha. Melbourne, Fla.: Yogashakti Mission, n.d.

———. Yoog Vashishtha. Gondia, India: Yogashakti Mission, [1970].

Yost, Casper S. Patience Worth; A Psychic Mystery. New York: Henry Holt, 1916. Reprint, London: Skeffington, 1919.

Yost, G. W. N. Blavatsky's Posthumous Memoirs. Boston: Joseph M. Wade, 1896.

Young, Barbara. This Man from Lebanon: A Study of Kahlil Gibran. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, n.d.

Young, Frank W. Initiation Ceremonies: A Cross-Cultural Study of Status Dramatization. Bobbs-Merrill, 1965.

Young, James Harvey. The Medical Messiahs. Princeton N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1967.

Younghusband, Sir Francis. The Living Universe. London: John Murray, 1933.

———. Modern Mystic. London: John Murray, 1935. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: University Books, 1970.

Youngson, Jeanne, and Shelley Leigh Hunt, ed. Do Vampires Exist? A Special Report from Dracula World Enterprises. New York: Dracula World Enterprises, 1993.

Youngson, Jeanne, ed. A Child's Garden of Vampires. Chicago: Adams Press, 1980.

———. The Count Dracula Book of Classic Vampire Tales. Chicago: Adams Press, 1981.

Yram [Marcel L. Forham]. Le Medecin de l'Ame'. Translated as Practical Astral Projection. London, 1935. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1966.

———. Le Medecine de l'Ame. English edition as Practical Astral Projection. London, 1935. Reprint, New York: Samuel Weiser, 1966.

Zacharias, Paul. Insights into the Beyond. New York: Swedenborg Publishing Association, n.d.

Zaehner, R. C. Hindu and Muslim Mysticism. London: Athlone Press, 1960.

———. Mysticism; Sacred & Profane. London: Clarendon Press, 1957. Reprint, London: Galaxy Book; Oxford University Press, 1961.

Zain, C. C. Ancient Masonry. Los Angeles: Church of Light Press, 1998.

———. Cosmic Alchemy. Los Angeles: Church of Light Press, 1997.

———. Natural Alchemy. Los Angeles: Church of Light Press, 1997.

Zain, C. C. [Elbert Benjamine]. Brotherhood of Light Lessons. 21 vols. Los Angeles: Church of Light, 1922–1932.

Zalewski, Pat and Christine Zalewski. The Equinox & Solstice Ceremonies of the Golden Dawn. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1992.

Zalewski, Patrick J. Golden Dawn Enochian Magic. St. Paul, Minn.: Llewellyn Publications, 1990.

———. Secret Inner Order Rituals of the Golden Dawn. Phoenix, Ariz.: Falcon Press, 1988.

Zenor, Richard. Maggie Answers You. San Diego: Philip J. Hastings, 1965.

Zetznerus, L., ed. Theatrum Chimicum. 6 vols. Strasbourg, France, 1659–61.

Zha, Leping and Tron McConnell. "Parapsychology in the People's Republic of China: 1979–1989," Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 85, no. 2 (April 1991): 119–143.

Zingaropoli, F. Case Infestate degli Spiriti. Naples, 1907.

Zinsstag & Timothy Good. George Adamski: The Untold Story. Beckenham, UK: Ceit Publications, 1983.

Zitko, Howard John. The Lemurian Theochristic Conception. N.p., n.d.

Zolar [Bruce King]. Black Magic. New York: Arco Publishing, 1972.

———. Dreams and Your Horoscope. New York: Zolar Publishing, 1970.

———. The Encyclopedia of Ancient and Forbidden Knowledge. Los Angeles: Nash, 1970.

———. Fortune Telling with Cards, Palmistry. New York: Arco Publishing, 1973.

———. History of Astrology. New York: Arco Publishing, 1972.

———. It's All in the Stars. New York: Zolar Publishing, 1962.

———. Nature's Mysteries. New York: Arco Publishing, 1972.

———. Sex and the Zodiac. New York: Zolar Publishing, 1971.

Zolar Staff. Encyclopedia of Signs, Omens & Superstitions. Secaucus, N.J.: Carol Publishing Group, 1995.

Zöllner, J. C. F. Transcendental Physics. London, 1880. Reprint, Boston: Colby and Rich, 1881. Reprint, North Stratford, N.H.: Ayer Co. Publishers, Inc., 1976. Reprint, Las Vegas, Nev.: Health Research; Kila, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing Co., 1996.

Zopfius, Johan Heinrich. Dissertatio de Vampiris Seruiensibus. Halle, 1733.

Zorab, George A. M. Bibliography of Parapsychology. Parapsychology Foundation, 1957.

———. "A Case for Survival." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 31 (1946).

———. D. D. Home, il Medium. Milan, 1976.

———. De Jacht op het Spiritistisch Bewijs (In Quest of Proof for Survival). The Hague: Boucher, 1940.

———. De Opstandingsverhalen in het Licht de Parapsychologie (The Resurrection Narratives in the Light of Parapsychology). N.p., 1949.

———. "ESP Experiments with Psychotics." Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 39 (1957).

———. "A Further Comparative Analysis of Some Poltergeist Phenomena Cases from Continental Europe." Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 58 (1964).

———. Katie King: Donna o Fantasma. Milan: Armenia Editore, 1980.

———. Magnetiseurs en Wondergenezers (Magnetism and Miracle Healers). N.p., 1952.

———. Parapsychologie (Parapsychology). N.p., 1958.

———. Proscopie, Het Raadsel der Toekomst (Precognition, the Riddle of the Future). N.p., 1953.

———. Wichelroede en Aardstralen (The Divining Rod and Earthrays). N.p., 1950.

———. Wonderen der Parapsychologie (Wonders of Parapsychology). N.p., 1954.

Zorab, George A. M., P. A. Dietz, and K. H. E. de Jong. Parapsychologische Woordentolk (A parapsychological dictionary). N.p., 1956.

Zubeck, John P., ed. Sensory Deprivation: Fifteen Years of Research. Appleton-Century-Crofts, 1969.

Zugibe, Frederick T. The Cross and the Shroud: a Medical Inquiry into the Crucifixion. New York: Paragon House Publishers, 1988.

Zuromski, Paul. "A Conversation with Charles Thomas Cayce." Psychic Guide (September–November 1984): 14–19.

———. "Dick Sutphen." Body, Mind, Spirit (September/October 1987): 14–18.

Zymonidas, A. The Problems of Mediumship. London: Kegan Paul, 1920.

General Index

C

General Index

D

General Index

E

F

G

H

I

J

K

L

M

General Index

N

O

P

S

T

U

W

X

Y

Z